GRANITE MEN OFF FOR BASS POINT

Annual Summer Outing Includes Sail, Dinner and List of Sports

Acting Mayor Emery L. Crane One of the Guests

The annual mid-summer outing of the Granite Manufacturers association is being held today at Bass Point, Nahant. The early morning weather did not give a very promising outlook but the sun soon made its appearance and things brightened up so that at 8.30 when the main party left South Quincy the weather gave promise of being an ideal day.

Quite a party boarded the train at South Quincy being joined at Quincy by many others, who included Acting Mayor Emery L. Crane who will represent the city at the outing.

Quite a number of the business men were unable to get away as early as 8.30 and these took the train from Quincy which would enable them to take the 11 o'clock boat from Boston. The party found quite a heavy sea running outside, from the northeast wind and while it is not recorded that any of the party fed the fishes on the downward trip, many were glad when the wharf at Bass Point was reached.

The headquarters for the day were established at the Bass Point house and one of the first things after arrival was to adjourn to the ball field in the rear of the hotel where two nines were quickly made up for the annual game of ball between the married and single men for a box of smokers.

Tom Dunphy, secretary of the association took his position near the catcher's box to umpire the game, and as Tom's reputation as an umpire has been established from previous years it is more than probable that the game as usual will result in a tie, and that everybody will get a dip into the cigar box.

The base ball game occupied the greater part of the morning, and a little after noon the party were arranged in a semi-circle on the green in front of the hotel and "mugged."

The call for dinner was due to come at 12.50 and as the Daily Ledger went to press, a wireless announced that they were lined up in front of the dining room of the hotel waiting for the doors to open. The menu provided included a regular shore dinner, of clams, chowder, fish lobster, vegetables, rolls, coffee and ice cream.

If the usual program is carried out there will be no speaking, for this is one of the occasions when the granite men are out for a holiday and do not care for speaking.

By the time dinner is over the several amusement booths will probably be found in full running order and many will doubtless visit the booths especially that where the swimming maidens exhibit.

There is a list of sports scheduled for the afternoon which will include running races, etc., for which suitable prizes will be offered.

The annual open race of the Nahant Yacht club takes place this afternoon, and as this includes all of the Y. R. M. A. and Interclub boats, the granite men will have an exceptionally fine opportunity to witness the racing as the course is directly of Bass Point.

Among those noticed on the 8.30 o'clock train, were President Alfred O. Diack, Acting Mayor Emery L. Crane, Frederick Barnicoat, Councilman Charles F. Barnicoat, Stanley H. Barnicoat, Thomas Collins, James F. Desmond, James H. Elcock, James Joss, Murdock A. Campbell, Edward D Marnock, James Hector, Andrew Milne, Jr., Peter Cahill, Arrand Vendrett, Henry C. Smalley, Patrick J. Tangney, Peter Coia, John Pierce, Stanley Collins, Byron Miller Tomasas J. Dunphy, Edward H. Geddes, David McIntosh, Robert Mavers, Councilman Charles A. Ericson Calvin Fletcher, William G. Spargo, Frank F. Prescott, Jonathan S. Swingle, Albert L. Hayden, Andrew Johnson, Andrew Isaacson, Rollin Hughes, Michael Cook, Joseph Walker, James Walker, John P. Smoots, Robert Clark, Charles Leander, Harry Nicol, William T. Spargo.

Others to join the party later in the day were Rupert F. Claflin, of the Granite Trust Co. Wellington W. Mitchell, Herbert Curtis of the Mt. Wollaston bank. Senator Louis F. R. Langelier, Representatives Michael T. Sullivan and Edward J. Sandberg, Peter T. Fallon.

WOLLASTON CHURCH NOTE.

The union services of the Wollaston Baptist Congregational, and Methodist churches are a pronounced success in every way. Large and enthusiastic congregations wait upon all services.

Sunday worship will be conducted in the Methodist church, the pastor, Rev. George Mervyn Bailey, preaching theme:—God's Instruments of War. Solos will be rendered by Miss Marguerite Louise Holbrook and Mr. Estes.

The union Young Peoples meeting at six o'clock sharp, will be led by Miss Hardy.

Strangers cordially welcomed to both services.

LIFE SAVERS ON DUTY.

The crew consists of Capt. William C. Sparrow, William Gray, Martin Benson, Louis Cole, Sigval Tonnesen, George Goldthwaite and Chester Priest. The last named takes the place of Hulver Villeusen who died this week. James Murphy will go on duty Oct. 1.

George Bennett has opened his new hardware store on Sagamore street which is a credit to the community as well as a sign of the success of the owner.

AUTO TRIP TO NOVA SCOTIA

Four Quincy Young Men Travel Over 1500 Miles

Wendell and Everett Clark of South Quincy, accompanied by Harold Bishop and Alexander Mundie, returned Friday from an automobile trip of 1521 miles. The young men left Quincy three weeks ago in Mr. Clark's Ford car, taking with them blankets and cooking utensils so that they would not have to depend upon hotels at night, but could camp out wherever they might be when night overtook them.

Their objective point was Halifax, N. S., which they reached without any trouble with their car. In fact they did not have the least trouble with the car from the start to the finish. When night came they sought out some good place to pitch their camp, after which they built a fire and cooked their meals. Food for their meals was purchased along the route as needed. It was an ideal way to pass a vacation.

DISCUSSION OF TRAFFIC RULES

Why Not an Island Shelter In City Square?

A full fledged discussion of traffic rules may grow out of the sentiments expressed the past three weeks by prominent merchants of the city who strenuously object to future unregulated congestion in City Square, and it is expected that the matter will be brought up at the next meeting of the Board of Trade.

The discussion grew out of the experiences of trolley passengers during the recent warm wave who were obliged to duck under horses heads and auto tops to get from the sidewalk to the cars.

Several merchants who viewed the spectacle commented upon it first and a few days after an active discussion ensued. The merchants claim that traffic regulations of some kind should be adopted to prevent autos, wagons and vehicles of all descriptions being left in City Square so as to form a fence between the sidewalk and the street.

Several violations of the ordinances that require drivers to weight horses were noticed, and it would not have been surprising if a horse had bolted at the time and not only caused a gigantic upset but also injuries to people attempting to reach cars.

Then again the sidewalk between Granite street and Saville street should be about twice as wide as at present. An island shelter between the tracks at some point in City Square should be considered.

SPECIAL OF CITY COUNCIL

A special meeting of the City Council will be held in the near future to act upon several important matters. Among these is the drawing of jurors for the September term of the grand jury, the fixing the date, and calling the primaries, and to act upon a petition of the street railway for a change of its location on Hancock street between Granite and School streets.

Commissioner Brown is about ready to advertise for bids for the paving of Hancock street, but before the work can be done it will be necessary to make some changes in the location of the street car tracks. As a change in a location will require a public hearing it is the desire of the Commissioner that the hearing be held and the new location granted as soon as possible that work on the street may be commenced.

CONTRACT FOR SUBMARINE

Work on It Will Be Rushed by Fore River Co.

A contract for a submarine, costing $500,000 was received Friday by the Fore River Shipbuilding Corp. from the Electric Boat Co. and work will be immediately commenced.

The Electric Boat Co. has a contract for five submarines, four of which are already under construction, and the sub-contract given the Fore River shipyard calls for a complete ship with the exception of the engine. The boat will be known as L-11 and it is expected that but few months will intervene between now and the launching.

The prospects for an immediate boom at the shipyard are not of the brightest and with the Rivadavia leaving the last of the month the only actual finishing work left will be that on the Nevada.

On Tuesday the S. S. Pacific, a coastwise steamer to ply between Atlantic and Pacific ports via the Panama canal, will be launched. The vessel was built for the Emery Steamship Co. and is a sister ship of the Atlantic which is being fitted out at East Boston for her maiden voyage.

Friends of Senator L. F. R. Langelier in Atlantic have already taken steps to help him in his election next fall, the feeling being that Mr. Langelier has worked well for his constituency and deserves re-election.

QUINCY EXPENSES IN COMPARISON

A Larger Grand Total Than Taunton and Everett Which Are Larger Cities

Figures From Report of Bureau of Statistics

Probably the expenditures of Quincy interest the people more than the items of revenue. A few days ago the Daily Ledger presented the revenue items of Quincy, Taunton, Everett and Chelsea, and today presents the annual payments by these cities.

It should be remembered that Taunton and Everett are a little larger in population and Chelsea a little smaller than Quincy.

The grand totals of Taunton, Everett and Quincy are about the same, but because of the conflagration in Chelsea certain large payments were necessary for indebtedness transfers, and sinking funds.

Maintenance.—Included in this term are only those costs which are ordinarily termed "running expenses," or annually recurring expenses.

Outlays.—This term is used in referring to the costs of permanent properties and improvements, and not in referring to the costs of operation and maintenance. The classification is similar to payments for maintenance. Payments for outlays include, for each department of service, expenditures for any work of construction or public improvement which increases the visible assets of the municipality. The line of demarcation is admittedly often exceedingly difficult to draw, especially with relation to the purchase of supplies and materials; generally, however, any supply which is subjected to such usage that it has to be renewed annually, or as often as once in two or three years, may be regarded as a charge against maintenance; but if it may be reasonable to suppose that an article bought will last for several years, the cost of the same may properly be regarded as an outlay.

The cost of maintenance of Chelsea was the largest, with Quincy second, Taunton third, and Everett fourth.

For interest, Chelsea lead again, with Quincy second, Everett third and Taunton fourth.

For "outlays" Quincy expended considerable more than the other

Most people on securing an unexpected windfall of $500, proceed to buy a $2000 automobile with it.

So far, no organization of chorus girls has protested against the shocking costumes seen at the bathing beaches, but no doubt this oversight will soon be attended to.

THE INITIATIVE IN MARRIAGE.

The question "Shall women propose?" has long been a favorite battle-ground in the lighter class of publications appealing to women. It is often discussed in a trifling way, but there is a real problem in it.

Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman, a leader in the feminist movement, in a recent lecture in New York, took the position that "it is eternally unnecessary for women to propose marriage," holding that women have a passive attraction sufficient to win men. But the woman movement is so rapidly unsettling old foundations, that almost any reversal of custom seems possible.

The position of many unmarried women is anomalous. A girl may always have wished to have a husband and children to care for. She may believe that she is best fitted to that work. All her efforts in education may have been shaped toward that end. "Seek and ye shall find" is a universal principle. Yet the woman who seeks this one calling, considered most appropriate to women, is almost a social outcast.

The way the sexes pair off can be seen in dance halls. Sparkling girls, fleet of foot and swift of tongue, are overburdened with invitations, while others, perhaps sweeter and more capable, sit around unasked.

In thousands of communities there is a surplus of charming women. The men with whom they should naturally mate are living in metropolitan boarding houses or in engineering camps or ranches. The present system of marriage does not bring them together.

The number of girls who have probably never been invited to enter the married state is no doubt much larger than is generally realized. If it is just as well that many women should not marry, there may be no great loss. But if marriage is to be considered a universal ideal for nearly all women, the present engagement customs are working poorly.

EQUALIZE WATAR RATES.

Water meters are supposed to equalize water rates, but when some consumers pay 6 cents per 100 cubic feet and others pay 10 cents, 15 cents, 21 cents and 23 cents per 100 cubic feet, and still others a different rate for dwellings where does the equality come in?

If every water taker paid at the same rate as the house owner, there would undoubtedly be a surplus to the credit of the Water department instead of a deficit. But now the big manufacturers are favored at the expense of the house owners, and because of the water deficit it is necessary to pay a water tax. This water tax comes on all property owners, whether they own a lot of land, an automobile, a house, a store or an industry.

As stated yesterday, there are eleven different rates by which water is sold by meter in Quincy, ranging from 23 cents per 100 cubic feet to those who use less than 20 cubic feet per day, to 6 cents per 100 cubic feet to those who use over 40,cubic feet per day.

The contention of the Daily Ledger is that they should be but one rate "by quantity." That the small granite manufacturer should obtain his water at the same rate as the large manufacturer.

But the most important question for the Mayor and Commissioner of Public Works to solve just now is—"How low can Quincy sell water without loss?" Many city officials and councilmen have claimed in the past that the cost is less than eight cents per 1,000 gallons, but if they were correct there should be a big surplus in the Water department. Many items enter into the cost of the water, aside from the Metropolitan assessment, and the figures of the State Bureau of Statistics show that the annual cost is $160,000 not $55,000.

City Auditor Fairbanks figures the cost differently than does the State Board but reaches about the same total. The water outlays in 1913, as printed on page 23 of the City Book, amounted to $160,713 as follows:

Bonds matured	$57,500
Interest (local)	28,892
Maintenance (local)	17,450
Clerical (local)	1,352
State assessment	55,519
Total cost,	$160,713

The State Board combined the assessment with the first three items, but the fact remains that the water cost $160,713. The supply was 1,056,543,500 gallons during the year, making the cost 15 cents per 1,000 gallons or 12 cents per 100 cubic feet. Allowing comething for leakage from mains, the actual cost of water to the city is 20 cents per 1,000 gallons, or 15 cents per 100 cubic feet. As the leakage is enormous, the cost may actually figure still higher. The city should not sell water below cost.

TAX RATES FOR YEAR 1914

Highest Figures in History of Several Cities

The tax rate of Somerville as announced by the Assessors Friday morning will be $21.10 per $1,000 valuation an increase of $1.30 over the rate of 1913.

The real estate valuation totals $66,392,100, an increase of $2,314,500 over 1913. Every one of the 21 precincts of the city showed an increase in valuation the largest being $468,300. The personal estate showed an increase of $727,400, the total personal estate valuation being $8,495,700. The tax levy amounts to $1,629,763 of which sum $15,248.42 is for grade crossings.

The Attleboro valuation is $21,231,293, an increase of $502,165 in real estate and $19,060 in personal: The tax rate is $19,20 an increase of $1.

STOCK MARKETS CLOSE DOORS

London's Example Quickly Followed In United States

GREAT STRAIN ON NEW YORK

Exchange In That City Had For Week Borne Burden of World's Trading—Other Large Cities Also Refuse to Become Dumping Ground of European Securities

Boston, Aug. 1.—The Boston stock exchange, together with practically all of the stock exchanges of the world, are closed as a result of the situation in Europe.

London announced that the stock market would not open because of the breakdown of the credit system. Thereupon the governors of the New York exchange met and decided to close the exchange there until another notice. Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Pittsburg, Washington and other American exchanges followed suit.

The Bank of England raised the rate of exchange to 8 percent and is charging 10 percent for weekly advances, an unprecedented condition. In closing the the Boston and New York exchanges the attitude was taken that we refused to become the dumping-ground of European securities.

The New York exchange for a week had borne the burden of the world's markets, bearing up well under tremendous sales. The action of the governors in closing was taken after a meeting of leading financiers was held at the office of J. P. Morgan. The decision of this meeting that the European situation was too dangerous to permit of trading was immediately transmitted to the board of governors, who acted promptly.

In the Boston exchange seventy-five men were on the floor when Vice President Jackson announced:

The governing committee of the Boston stock exchange appointed a committee of five with full power. Attention was called to the rule forbidding outside dealing in listed stocks. A similar rule is being enforced by the New York stock exchange.

The New York stock exchange has been closed just twice before. On Sept. 24, 1869, was the celebrated "Black Friday," when Jay Gould and his associates tried to corner the gold supply of the United States.

The other occasion on which the New York stock exchange was closed was in the tremendous panic of 1873. On Sept. 20 the governing committee of the New York stock exchange voted to close its doors, and the stock exchange remained closed until Sept. 30.

So far as can be learned from a careful examination of the local financial district, all the Boston banks and brokerage houses are in an extremely strong position. Most brokers have been in a thoroughly liquidated position for some months.

READY WITH $500,000,000

United States to the Rescue of Any Part of Our Country

Washington, Aug. 1.—Following a conference between President Wilson and Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, an official statement was issued stating that the United States government was prepared to prevent a financial panic. The treasury will stand ready to come to the rescue of any section of the country whose banks need funds.

HELD AS A "FENCE"

Rockville Centre, N. Y., Aug. 1.—On a charge of receiving stolen goods, which grew out of the arrest of three of the local policemen for burglary, Mrs. Hilda Veritzan, wife of Amos Veritzan, one of the officers in custody, was araigned before Justice Wright and held in $1000 bail to await the action of the grand jury.

The village offices where the hearing was conducted were crowded. Mrs. Veritzan was represented by two lawyers.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES

The number of illiterates in the French army is given as 33,140.

London underground railway men threaten to strike because they have been referred to as "microbes" by an official of the railway.

The first death in the typhoid epidemic at Watertown, Mass., was that of Mrs. Margaret Laue, 28. There are now twenty-seven victims of typhoid in the town.

ALL EUROPE IS LIKE AN ARMED CAMP

Indications That General War Cannot Be Avoided

GERMANY IS PLACED UNDER MARTIAL LAW

Said to Be About to Demand Immediate Cessation of Mobilization by Russia and France—Smaller Countries Mobilizing Armies as Precaution—No Accurate Knowledge of What Is Going on In Servia—England the Calmest Nation of Europe, but Expect to Go to War

London, Aug. 1.—In the desperate situation there are only two factors giving the faitest hope of averting a general European war:

First, Russia and Austria are engaged again in direct negotiations; second, both Great Britain and France are using their utmost endeavors in favor of peace.

On the other hand, Russia has ordered a general mobilization and Germany has declared a state of siege, which is undoubtedly a prelude to, if it does not cover, mobilization.

France has not yet mobilized, but cabinet councils, which sat until late at night, issued decrees establishing a moratorium and taking other action whoch could only be determined upon on the eve of war. Unofficially, the French army is being virtually mobilized.

A very circumstantial, though as yet unconfirmed report published in Rome, says Germany is about to demand from both Russia and France the immediate cessation of mobilization. Yet another rumor has it that the German ambassador has notified the French government of his early departure.

General Mobilization

Great Britain is practically, though not officially, mobilized, and the smaller European states, as a precaution, have ordered the mobilization of their armies—Belgium, Holland and Switzerland—to protect their tertory from being used as a highway for the belligerents; Norway, Sweden and Denmark to guard themselves on general principles.

Italy makes no announcement and, although a rumor credits her with the decision not to participate in the struggle, there is little doubt that she is making ready by mobilization.

Communication across Europe has been cut off and there is a universal application of the censorship, with the result that it is impossible to obtain any accurate knowledge of what military operations are going on in Servia. All code telegrams are refused. In short, all the European nations are becoming isolated from each other by railway and telegraph.

The withdrawal of three famous German yachts from the Cowes regatta is significiant. They include the emperor's Meteor and Krupp's Germania. All the countries involved in the war have prohibited the export of many products.

No Picnic For Austria

Austria, in spite of her size and great number of men in the field, is not having everything her own way in the theatre of war.

Dispatches from Nish, in Servia, and from Vienna tell of encounters between Austrian and Servian troops on the frontiers, but authentic details of the fighting are lacking. It may again be pointed out that stories of fighting with heavy losses such as that said to have occurred at Fotcha are absurd, as it would be impossible for the Servians in the time at their disposal to have crossed the Drina and have advanced twenty miles within Austrian territory.

It is argued also that the announcement that 500,000 Austrian soldiers are on the march into Servia is practically impossible. Austria cannot have that many on the move in less than weeks not to say days. Also Russia has not replied to the alleged German ultimatums demanding Russia's intentions in regard to mobilization.

England Reconciled to War

Facing the most perilous epoch in their history since they shivered before the spectre of a Napoleonic invasion, the English people are the calmest nation of Europe. Yesterday they felt that the decision whether Great Britain was to be drawn into a general European war was hanging in the balance; today they believe it is a probability rather than a possibility.

There is no mistaking the fact that, with the exception of a minority of peace advocates whose voice is hardly heard and seems to carry little weight, the nation's mind is reconciled to war.

There have been no "demonstrations," no flag waving, no music hall patriotism; but there is apparent among all classes a sober and grim determination, if the government declares that the nation's interests and obligations require her to take up arms side by side with Russia and France, to see the business through to the bitter end.

The belief of the average man is that the existence of the whole of Europe as an armed camp, nervous and jealous, could have but one culmination, and if the hour for a general settlement has struck, there will be no flinching.

How About German Navy?

The change that has swept over the temper of the country within a week is marvellous. A week ago the people were wrapped up in prize fights, the Goodwood races, the Cowes regatta, vacations on the continent. Now they are asking only: Can the British fleet play its part in protecting the island from isolation, which means, in the first instance, can it destroy the German emperor's navy?

They are concerned also as to whether the food supplies can be maintained and to what extent private fortunes will be impaired by the financial upheaval of the war.

The mobilization of the naval forces has been completed, and the army is on a war footing, except for the calling out of the territorials. The machinery for their mobilization requires only a word to be set in motion.

The request from the war office that the English newspapers refrain from publishing army and navy movements has met with a patriotic response. The London papers publish news concerning almost all the armies of Europe except that of Great Britain, and regarding the whereabouts of the British fleet and the preparations of the British army they say nothing. There is a popular belief that the fleet is in the neighborhood of Flushing in the North sea, but the truth is known only to the members of the government.

Dover and Sheerness are virtually on a war basis, and protective booms are ready to be drawn around at a moment's notice. These and other harbors have been mined. The Calais and Ostend steamers are likely to be transferred to Folkestone, from Dover.

TOURISTS ARE HELD UP

Many May Be Delayed For Months In Returning to America

Boston, Aug. 1.—Thousands of men and women from Boston and New England are among the 150,000 American tourists now in Europe. While there is no immediate peril for them, there is danger that they may be delayed for months in returning.

Three difficulties have arisen to hamper them in returning. For one thing, transatlantic sailings will be heavily curtailed. Out of twenty-eight lines sailing from Boston, all but three will be stopped by any general European war. Then on the European mainland railroad travel is at a standstill. The governments have seized the roads everywhere. And finally, owing to the financial situation, it is almost impossible to cash letters of credits and checks.

"In view of the uncertainty of the present European situation, we have decided to postpone sailings of the Vaterland from New York, the Amerika from Boston Aug. 1, and Imperator from Hamburg July 31. Due notice will be given of the eventual sailing dates."

GREAT EXODUS LIKELY

Two Million Men May Quit United States to Fight In Europe

Washington, Aug. 1.—With war imminent in Europe the census bureau expects the return of foreigners to their native countries to break all records, officials say, providing vessels are available.

Statistics prepared by the bureau show that at least 2,000,000 men in the United States might be subject to military service in their native countries if a general war in Europe broke out and a call was issued for reserves.

It is estimated that there are 400,900 unnaturalized male Germans over 21 years of age in the United States, 600,000 Russians, 650,000 Italians, 675,000 Austrians, 30,000 French and about 700,000 English. It is believed a large percentage of these men would be bound to respond to a reserve call.

THREE INJURED AT BALL GAME

The abse ball game between the Pond street and the Square teams in the Sunset league of Braintree Friday evening marred by three accidents, all of them of serious nature.

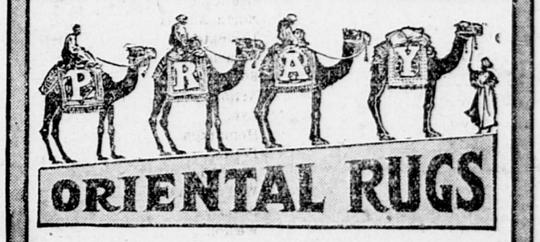

Herbert Burrill, while making first on an infield hit was struck on the face by a thrown ball and fell, partially unconscious. The ball struck him in the cheek, caused his eye to close and opened up a gash on the nose which required two stitches.

His team mate, Louise Jardin, a catcher was struck on the elbow by a foul tip and forced to retire from the game.

Clifton Thayer the catcher for the Squares while attempting to get a foul was struck on the bare hand. The ball struck between the fingers and split the flesh. Two stitches were taken.

WARD THREE BOYS WIN

Defeat Quincy Point Pl yground Team 3 to 0

The South Quincy Playground ball team played in grand form Friday morning against the Quincy Point boys, and hitting the ball at the right time they were able to get three runs while shutting out their opponents. Harry O'Brien was in the box for the Ward Three boys and he pitched very good ball, striking out six men and letting down the losers with only six hits. Gamble also put up a good game in the box, but the South Quincy lads hit the ball when it counted. He had five strike-outs to his credit and was hit safely seven times. The batteries were as follows. South Quincy, O'Brien and Cahill. For Quincy Point, Gamble and Gallagher.

Sick-Room Light.

If there are electric lights in the sick room they will generally be found too brilliant, hurting the eyes of the patient, and not every sick room has the electric lights that can be turned up or down. NORTH WEYMOUTH.

Mrs. John I. Heibeck was a guest this week of Mrs. Robert B. Pierpont at her Auburndale home.

Tuesday afternoon at the parochial residence, Miss Mary C. Mitchell of Hill street and Merle L. Gilman of North Weymouth were united in marriage, Rev. James Allison officiating. After a honeymoon trip through Maine, Mr and Mrs. Gilman will make their home in Quincy.

Fred Cochran a member of the Local Barbers' Union has been elected delegate to the National Convention of that order, to be held in Indianapolis the week of October 6.

The Methodist parsonage has been purchased by Carmine Garafalo and Rev. George Newton and family will occupy the Samuel Healy house on Madison street.

Mrs. Mary Jackson of Auburn N. Y., is the guest of her parents Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Higgins of Broad street.

His many friends will be glad to see Motorman Burt T. Loud back on his regular route and to hear of his discharge from the Hingham court, where he was held in $1000 bonds on the charge of manslaughter for the death of John Rooney of Roxbury, July 4th at Hingham.

William Doyle is having a two weeks' vacation from his post office duties.

Miss Alice Stewart of Cedar street leaves soon for Littleton, N. H., where she will study to become a trained nurse. Wednesday evening relatives and friends tendered her a farewell party and as a token of esteem presented her with a gold watch.

The army worm is getting into this town, grass land on High and Hawthorne streets being ravaged, also the Town Farm and Coyle's farm on Commercial street. A large tract of meadow land in Hingham has been destroyed.

Mr. and Mrs. Schneitzer of Hyde Park, Mrs. A. T. Bangs of Hyde Park and Robert Gwillin of Fort Worth, Texas, were guests this week of the John I. Heibecks at their King Cove cottage.

An auto pumping engine built by William Boyd & Son of Philadelphia was given a try out in Washington Square this week, and then proceeded to East Weymouth and made two tests at the Town Hall ruins, first using two streams under hydrant pressure and then going up Pleasant street was able to throw a stream beyond the buildings of the Art & Leather Co. using its own pumping engine pressure with two and four lines of hose.

About twenty members of Tent 32 D of V. and guests went to the home of Mrs. Orianna J. Botting Wednesday leaving East Weymouth on the ten o'clock car. Dinner was served by the hostess, consisting of clam chowder, baked beans, olives, pickles, and the guests contributed pies and cakes of all kinds. In the afternoon various games were indulged in, to the amusement of the entire party. Those present were Mrs. I. U. Morgan, Alice Morgan, Harold Morgan, Clara Maynard, Mary Brassil, N. G. Loud, Alice Ferris, Lou Miller, Alice Miller, Josie Culley, Marion Austin, Augusta Bell, Mrs. Gould, Charlotte Stoddard, Mrs. Jacob Loud, Ethel Kelley, Mrs. Powers, Mrs. Botting, Clara Gardner, Clara Wilder.

SOCIALIST LEADER JAURES IS SLAIN

Shot Down While Chatting With Friends In Restaurant

Paris, Aug. 1.—Jean L. Jaures, the noted Socialist leader, was assassinated last night while dining in a restaurant near the boruse. The assassin was arrested and identified as Raoul Villain, 29.

Jaures was seated at a dinner table near an open window, facing the Rue Montmatre, chatting with several Socialist deputies and the editors of L'Humanite. As though by prearrangement, the curtain covering the window was lightly brushed aside and a hand holding a revolver was thrust through.

Before Jaures could make a move he received two bullets in the back of the head. Without uttering even an exclamation he fell forward and expired, with his head on the table.

HOW LUCK ONCE WON A PENNANT

It Was With the Tigers In 1908, Says Jennings.

JUST BEAT CLEVELAND OUT.

Detroit Leader Can't Understand Why Naps Didn't Take Advantage of Rossman's Weakness and Win Flag. Athletics Tried to Pull Stunt, but Schaefer Outguessed Them.

Hughie Jennings says he still cannot understand why Cleveland did not beat Detroit for the American league championship in 1908.

"Detroit was lucky to win that year if any club ever was," says Jennings, "and I have never been able to understand why Cleveland did not beat us."

Cleveland finished second to Detroit in 1908. The difference between the two clubs at the end of the season was slight. Nap Lajoie managed the Naps.

"Two victories by Cleveland over Detroit would have beaten us easily," says Hughie. "They had information which should have given them at least two games.

"You know we got Claud Rossman from Cleveland. Rossman came to us a great hitter, an awkward and unreliable fielder, and an impossible thrower. How Rossman's inability to throw drove him out of the league in 1909 is well known, but in 1908 he had just as little ability, and the same goes for 1907.

"The first year we won a pennant, 1907, Rossman could not throw to second, and he had trouble tossing the ball back to the pitcher on a throw to first base. Of course everybody on the Detroit team well knew about Rossman's weakness and also well guarded the fact and succeeded in keeping it from the other clubs.

"But Cleveland also certainly knew. They could not help knowing. There was no chance for them to win a championship on their knowledge of it in 1907, but in 1908 they certainly had it in them. Why they ever failed to take advantage of it is something I have never been able to understand. They could have played it to suit themselves and kept it to themselves.

"There was only one time that I saw Cleveland use their information. In a game with us they had Birmingham on first base and somebody else, I forget who, on third. Birmingham led away off and started to walk toward second. I knew what was up then. Of course the ball was thrown to Rossman, and the second the pitcher let it go the man on third dashed home and Birmingham sprinted for second. Rossman made some kind of a wild toss and the run scored easily, while Birmingham hugged second.

"That play made no difference in the result of the game, but I said to myself that night, 'the gag's up; they've finally got it.' But they never tried it again.

"That same year, 1908, Philadelphia was making a spurt. I think Philadelphia had a suspicion. With Collins on first and Murphy on third, I saw Collins take a big lead. Schaefer guessed what was coming off and ran into the pitcher. He told him that if Collins started for second to throw the ball to Schaefer instead of Rossman and Schaefer would get at least one of the men. Sure enough, Collins went down toward second, but instead of throwing to Rossman the pitcher threw to Schaefer, and Herman nailed Murphy at home.

"They did not try to pull it again until 1909. Ira Thomas went from Detroit to Philadelphia, and Ira carried the secret along with him. Philadelphia came along, and you know what happened—everybody that reached first walked to second. They forced us to get rid of Rossman. But why Cleveland, with the same information in 1908, did not work it is something that is beyond me. They could have won a pennant with the knowledge, that's all."

RESOLUTE BEATS VANITIE

Cup Defense Candidate a Fine Light-Weather Boat

Port Jefferson, N. Y., Aug. 1.—The Resolute enhanced her light-weather reputation by leading the Vanitie in another of the America's cup defense trials, over the greater part of a thirty-five-mile zig-zag course by 12 minutes 5 seconds elapsed time, and 14 minutes 6 seconds corrected time.

The Vanitie made a poor start, but a shift of wind in the first hour lifted her to almost even terms with the Herreshoff yacht. Then the Resolute gradually drew away and gained continually.

A five-knot easterly breeze at the start faded to a mere breath half way on the course and then, shifting to the southwest, had just enough force to waft the yachts to a sunset finish. It was the initial run of the cruise of the New York Yacht club.

AMALGAMATION IN CONGRESS FIGHTS

Roosevelt In Favor of It If Bosses Are Repudiated

Oyster Bay, N. Y., Aug. 1.—Theodore Roosevelt went on record as favoring fusion with Republicans in the senatorial and congressional contests in states where the Republicans are willing to repudiate their recognized leaders, whom the colonel characterizes as bosses, bourbons and reactionaries.

Halbert P. Gardner, Progressive nominee for governor of Maine, and his campaign manager, E. B. Cochems, came to Oyster Bay to protest against nation-wide fusion with the Republicans. Gardner is a simon pure Progressive and objects to alliance with the old line Republicans.

"Colonel Roosevelt assures me," said Gardner, "that his indorsement of Hinman in New York does not mean a 'get-together' movement in other states."

Mexican Rebels See No Need of Our Occupation of Vera Cruz

Monterey, Mex., Aug. 1.—Withdrawal of American troops at Vera Cruz will be one constitutionalist demand considered at the Carbajal-Carranza conference at Saltillo.

Although no official action has been taken regarding the evacuation of Vera Cruz by the Americans, it is said the matter has been discussed recently by constitutionalist leaders, who assert that General Huerta's elimination has removed all grounds for the holding of Mexico's principal seaport by the United States.

TRAINMEN QUIT NEXT FRIDAY

Unless Railroads Accept Federal Mediation Plan

COMPLETE TIEUP THREATENED

Burden of Responsibility For Failure to Come to Terms Placed Upon Railroad Managers' Committee In Scorching Statement Issued by Leaders of 55,000 Employes

Chicago, Aug. 1.—A strike of 55,000 firemen and engineers of ninety-eight railroads operating west of Chicago has been set for Friday, Aug. 7, it is officially announced. The alternative is that the general managers' committee of the railroads accept the plan of settlement proposed by the federal board of mediation.

In a signed statement, Presidents Stone and Carter of the brotherhoods asserted that after the managers' committee had invoked the services of the federal board of mediation and conciliation the managers' committee had refused to accept the plan of settlement proposed by the federal mediators and "thus the burden of responsibility of the strike must rest upon the railroads."

The three principal causes of the proposed strike, according to the statement of Stone and Carter, are:

"The manner in which railroads have repudiated arbitration agreements.

"The manner in which the managers' committee has excited the anger of the enginemen in the service by their arbitrary attitude.

"Because the railroads seem determined to force the employes to abandon the mileage basis of pay without being willing to adopt the hourly basis of pay; the managers attempting to force upon the employes an entirely new basis of pay which they are pleased to term 'the service period.'"

The plan of settlement as proposed by the federal mediators and which was rejected by the general managers' committee, according to Stone and Carter, follows:

"The schedules in effect prior to Oct. 10, 1913, with the amendments thereto and accepted rulings thereon to be restored and continued until changed by arbitration.

"The demands of the two organizations as set forth in their communication of that date to the conference committee of managers, and other question or questions to be submitted to arbitration under and in accordance with the act of congress of July 15, 1913, commonly known as the Newlands law.

"All subsequent demands of the organizations and all the coundter demands of the managers to be withdrawn without prejudice."

After the federal mediators had declared their mission a failure, President Wilson appealed to the general managers and the union officials to come to Washington and discuss the situation. Regarding this the statement continues:

"The enginemen's committee feels that, having adopted the plan proposed by the official representatives of the federal government, they have done all that could be expected of them. Yet the enginemen's committee has instructed Messrs. Stone and Carter to go to Washington and assure the president that if the railroads will accept the plan proposed by the federal board of mediation no strike will occur."

RESIGNS AS DIRECTOR

Billard Has Severed Connection With New Haven Road

New Haven, Aug. 1.—The resignation of John L. Billard of Meriden from the directorates of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad company and the New England Navigation company was announced here.

Homer S. Cummings, Billard's counsel, made the announcement. He said Billard desired to resign several months ago in order to be relieved from business cares, but refrained because "it did not seem desirable to take any step which might change the status of affairs while the interstate commerce commisssion was investigating the financial transactions of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad company."

The statement further says that as the investigation has been completed and a formal report filed, Billard now feels free to submit his resignation.

DARLING MADE WARDEN

Will Follow Policies of Bridges In Massachusetts State Prison

Boston, Aug. 1.—Edward A. Darling, for twenty-six years clerk at the state prison, was appointed warden of the institution, succeeding Benjamin F. Bridges, who concluded his twenty-one years as warden last night. The new warden took up the duties of his office this morning.

The selection of Darling means that the policies instituted by Bridges and followed out at the prison will be carried out by the new official. He is 45 years old.

An Adventure With Bandits In Mexico

By EVERETT P. CLARKE

Dudley Cameron, connected with producers of oil in Mexico, was sent some forty miles northward from Tampico into the state of Tamaulipas to pay a man from whom his employers had bought some oil property $3,000 and get a deed for the land. There was no railroad to the place of his destination, and he proceeded on horseback. He carried the money in his hip pocket underneath his revolver.

This was when the Constitutionalists were about to march upon Tampico. Mexico has never been free from brigands, and it was not to be expected that in such troublous times the road would be safe. But the property was known to the purchasers to be very valuable, and they were anxious to get it into their possession. They were willing to risk their funds and Cameron was willing to risk carrying them. He would be largely the gainer if he succeeded in paying for the property and securing a deed, because the company that employed him was a very large concern, and it was worth his while to find favor with it.

He carried no provisions with him, calculating to get what he needed along the way. He had made half the distance when at evening he came to an adobe house, at which he concluded to stop for supper. Riding up to the door he called to those within, and the door was opened by a half breed girl about eighteen years old. She was quite good looking for a Mexican, though dark complexioned and with coarse hair.

Cameron had been in Mexico long enough to speak the language tolerably well and asked her if he could get some supper. She went back into the house and presently returned with a man, to whom the traveler repeated his request, adding that he would like to stay the night. The man after looking him over scrutinizingly assented. Cameron dismounted, put his horse under a shed and entered the house. He found there another man besides the one who had received him.

Cameron did not quite like the looks of the men. As for the girl, she seemed to be in a condition of captivity. At any rate, they gave her orders harshly, and she did their bidding apparently because she could not help herself. She cooked the supper, consisting of tamales and tortillas, the latter thin, light, wafer-like cakes, being very delicious.

After supper both the men left the house, and Cameron sat on the veranda smoking his pipe. The girl was within clearing the table and washing the dishes. Presently she came out wiping a plate and said to him:

"Senor, I would advise you not to lodge in this house tonight."

"Why so?" asked the American, starting.

"These men are bandits. They killed my father, with whom I lived, and have since forced me to do their housework. I am awaiting an opportunity to return to the Rio Grande. I lived on this side of the river, but if I can reach it I will cross into United States territory. Then I shall fear nothing."

Dudley Cameron was a chivalrous fellow and withal at an age wherein the greater the risk the greater its attractiveness. He was on his way northward. The girl also wished to go northward, and he felt under obligations to her for the warning she had given him. To ride away into safety, leaving her to be tyrannized over by a couple of bandits, did not accord with his sense of honor. As soon as she had spoken the last words she went back into the house to finish her chores. While she was doing so Cameron thought over the situation. When she had finished she came out and said:

"For the love of heaven, senor, do not let them suspect that I have hinted to you what they are. Do not say, 'I have changed my mind and will continue my journey tonight.' At bedtime go to your room and pretend to sleep, but instead of doing so let yourself down from the window to the ground—the distance is not great—mount your horse and ride away."

"Why should these men trouble me?"

"The one who admitted you has seen you at Tampico and knows you are an employee of the oil people. They do not believe that you are traveling without money, at least for your expenses."

Cameron made no reply to this. He was thinking. How fortunate that this girl was on hand to warn him! He felt very grateful to her. Had she not done so he would probably have been murdered and robbed during the night. Now, if he could not honorably ride away before the return of the men he could at least stand on the defensive in his room and beat a retreat through the window. Then it occurred to him that by taking the girl with him he would be freed from the obligation to await their return. Had he not so much money with him he would risk it. As it was, he did not like putting in jeopardy funds which had been intrusted to his care. He wondered if the girl would go with him.

"Have you a horse"—

"Pepita. My name is Pepita Gonzales. There are horses in the stables belonging to the bandits."

"At what time do they usually return?"

"They go to a house a short distance down the road, where they gamble and drink pulque and usually return late. What they will do if they have designs on you I do not know. Quite likely they will give you plenty of time to get to sleep, come in late stealthily and endeavor to take you unawares."

"Suppose you and I should leave together. Is there not a point of safety we could reach before they would overtake us?"

After some thought the girl said that if they could reach a city like Victoria in time to secure protection all would be well, but if they were captured before entering the town the bandits would surely kill the girl.

"I am armed," said Cameron. "If you were armed also it would be an equal fight."

Cameron did not like waiting for the bandits to return and was equally averse to leaving the girl under the suspicion of having warned him. There seemed no way but to take her with him.

"If you are willing to take the risk of going with me," he said at last, "we will leave at once."

It was some time before Pepita replied. When she did she said: "I would rather die than remain here in captivity. Were it not for the times I might invoke the aid of the law. At present there is no law in Mexico. But I will not place you in jeopardy on my account. I have suspected that there are arms concealed somewhere in the house. If I can find anything with which to defend myself I will go with you. If not I will remain. But I will not ask you to remain also."

She went into the house, where Cameron heard her hunting. She had been gone some time when he heard something give way, and in a few minutes Pepita came out with a brace of revolvers. Cameron examined them and found that they had been freshly loaded. This he knew from the fact that the cartridge cases were not dingy. Pepita had pried open a closet door and found a lot of arms and ammunition.

Within ten minutes the two were riding away in the darkness. It was about 9 o'clock, and the bandits were not expected to return till midnight at least. But Pepita did not believe that they would remain long in ignorance of the flight. She suspected that they might have set a watch on the house. Besides, there were others of the gang occupying here and there one of the adobe houses along the road, any one of whom might have been commissioned to report any one hurrying by.

Their route lay midway between the gulf and the railroad leading northward through Victoria and Monterey. The roads were mostly unpaved, so that their horses' hoofs sounded only with a dull thud. Hoping to avoid attention, they rode for awhile at a walk, then assumed a brisk trot and finally broke into a gallop.

Pepita was right in assuming that their flight would be reported to the bandits. They had not been on the way half an hour when suddenly Pepita's horse threw back an ear. In another moment the girl heard the tread of horses coming swiftly, and lastly it broke on the less sensitive ears of the American.

"Now we must run for it," he said. "We must direct our course to the nearest town. How far is the house we left from Victoria?"

"I've heard it said that it is about twelve miles."

"We've come about five; that leaves seven. We must turn into the first road we come upon leading westward."

The road forked a short distance farther on, the left hand road leading, so Cameron believed, to Victoria. They turned into it, but seven miles was a long distance for a run for life with men following on fleet horses. The only comfort for the fugitives was that their pursuers were doubtless full of pulque.

Pepita's horse, as were all the horses of the bandits, was fleet. Cameron found it difficult to urge his mount on to keep up with her. He spurred him and belabored him all to no purpose. Meanwhile the hoofbeats in rear grew more distinct. At last Cameron thrust his hand into his hip pocket, pulled out his roll of bills and handed them to Pepita, saying:

"Take these and go on. If the bandits spare my life I will join you in Victoria."

"Is it money?"

"Three thousand dollars."

His horse was now staggering. He dismounted and, slapping the animal's haunch, sent him on, then took to a thicket near the road. In a few minutes the pursuers clattered by, to find the horse, which they recognized as the American's, standing exhausted in the road a mile farther on.

Then began a search of the surrounding country, which was fruitless and enabled Pepita to reach Victoria. There the two met in the street the next day. Pepita handed Cameron the bills, and he, after she had agreed to remain where she was till his return, completed his journey and the transaction upon which he had been sent.

The oil company paid Pepita a sum equal to the one she had saved them, and she went to live with relatives on the other side of the Rio Grande.

Cameron gained a good deal of eclat with his company by his feat, which was added to since the property purchased turned out to be very valuable. He was advanced to a prominent position and has the prospect of making a fortune.

Points for Mothers

The Boy's Model.

In the Woman's Home Companion Mary Heaton Vorse, writing a story entitled "His Manly Dignity," comments as follows on the practice of urging small boys "to be a man like father:"

"From earliest infancy they implore their boy children to 'be a man.' That glorious goal is pointed out to a boy baby from the moment he can understand anything. He is not only told to 'be a man,' but to 'be a man like father.' I often wonder how the fathers bear it. I often wonder how they can stand there apparently so smug and contented when this ideal of conduct is suggested to their innocent babies. Don't they really see themselves, I wonder? Aren't there some of them at this who have a sudden, beneficent impulse to exterminate their own sons if the feat of growing up to be a man like father is all that awaits the innocent before them? How can they bear the adoring gaze that their little sons fasten upon them?

"Some little boys have a trick of looking so much more like real men with all the qualities that we love to think of as belonging to the most manly of men than grownup men do. I have seen them stamping down the street, still in skirts, and a man in the fullness of his powers couldn't have better exemplified finer masculine traits.

"No one tells little girls to hurry up and 'be a woman like mother.'"

Training the Ears.

A child should never be permitted to insert anything in its ear. Often if there is an itching sensation a child will poke in the head of a pin. This is altogether wrong and may bring about deafness.

In training the ears to lie straight in babyhood it is wrong to let the little one lie with its ears crumpled. Straighten them and see that they stay so.

In putting on a child's cap see that both ears are properly placed, as the cartilage, being so soft, the weight of a ribbon string may keep it out of place.

So much is done in the line of surgery these days that parents who can afford the prices should have any deformity of the ears attended to at as early an age as possible. It is not right to permit anything of the kind to be endured through life if it can be avoided.

Often after such diseases as measles, scarlet fever, etc., the hearing is defective. This comes from the inflammation of the ear drum and seems almost impossible to avoid. If there is a constant running from the ears of a child an aurist should be consulted immediately. There is a cause that should be treated without delay.

Canopies For Cribs.

A better protection for the baby's crib than is the length of quilting that goes around the four sides of the little one's daytime sleeping place is the tent canopy. It hangs from a hook in the ceiling, falls straight to the floor and may be drawn about the crib in a manner to protect the occupant thoroughly from whatever direction a draft is likely to come.

Yet at the same time the baby gets plenty of air, as no matter in what portion of the room the crib is placed the curtaining need go only part way around it.

Some mothers have these tent canopies in printed cretonne, but they are daintier and quite as serviceable in a lingerie or a muslin curtaining material, which may be finished with lace ruffings. Along the lower edges they are lead weighted so that they shall not blow about.

Hot Weather Tempers.

The first signs of trouble are seen in restlessness at night and fidgetiness by day, a tendency to crossness and often to disobedience and fretfulness. Sometimes a tiny rash under the skin will be seen after a fairly warm bath, and a child suffers from capriciousness of appetite (which is not the same thing as loss of appetite, though this, too, may be present) and generally shows a tendency to either constipation or diarrhea.

Now, all these, temper and troubles of physical conditions alike, are due to the overheated condition of the blood, and a little simple dosing and careful dieting will soon mend matters.

Medicine Cakes.

Some children who refuse to take castor oil make no fuss if it is given in this way: Take one cupful of milk, one of molasses, half a cupful of sugar, half a cupful of castor oil, a teaspoonful of soda, two of ginger, a little salt and enough flour to make a stiff paste. Roll out, cut into shapes and bake in a quick oven. One or two are as good as a dose of oil.

Use For Gay Rugs.

Very cheap and gaudy little bath rugs that would look too garishly bright on the quiet inside of a house are delightful when bought for the garden. The tots are not so likely to take cold when they sit on a rug and play quiet games as when they roll on the ground which is likely to be damp.

IT IS SAID ABOUT QUINCY

That locally, State politics are a little quiet.

That there have been many rumors as to who would be a candidate for this office or that office.

That there is still some question of doubt about all of them.

That as far as publicly known Representative Sullivan has not announced his position.

That some say he will try for another term in the legislature.

That some say his attitude on the grade crossing question will help him.

That there are others who say it will hurt him.

That the chances are that one will about offset the other.

That there are quite a few who say that Mr. Sullivan has heard a Mayoralty bee buzzing.

That it is not among the improbabilities that he may enter the municipal caucuses.

That there is considerable difference between running for Representative and running for Mayor.

That no one questions but what he has done his best as a representative to serve this city.

That in the Sixth district Representative Sandberg will have the nomination handed to him again on a silver plater.

That from the present outlook there will be no other Republican candidate for the nomination.

That there is some question even if the Democrats place a candidate in nomination.

That the announcement that ex-Representative Piper was out for the nomination in the Fifth district was a little previous.

That it was probably made to draw him out.

That Councilman Ericson would like to go to Beacon Hill next winter and help make laws for the state.

That "Whit" is letting others do all the talking and he keeps on sawing wood.

That the time when nomination papers must be filed is drawing near the end.

That Aug. 15, is the last date for filing nomination papers for the primaries.

That a year ago Representative Sandberg did not take out papers until after 3 o'clock on the last day for filing.

That this year he took plenty of time with his papers.

That they had not been filed with the City Clerk however.

That Senator Langelier will be renominated.

That something will be said in this column shortly about city politics.

BUSY WEEK FOR YACHTSMEN

Will Take Part in Weeks Racing at Marblehead

The coming week will be a busy one for the yachts of the Quincy yacht club. Today the racing boats of the club will take part in the open race of the Lynn club and tomorrow morning will take part in the big run from Lynn to Marblehead for a weeks racing. The other boats of the club will have a run from the Yacht club house to Marblehead starting at 9 o'clock. On this run prizes will be awarded by Commodore Crane to the winner in each class and pennants to the first, second and third boats to arrive first. There will be something doing all next week off Marblehead for the Eastern, Corinthian and Boston clubs holds open races.

Next week Sunday there will be the big run of all the yachts at Marblehead to Hull to take part in the weeks racing of the Boston club off Hull the following week.

On Wednesday evening Aug. 12, the annual ladies night of the Quincy club will be held at the club house for which an interesting program is being arranged.

BEING CALLED HOME TO FIGHT

The number of Austrians and Servians in this city are few compared to other nationalities but if the entire continent becomes embroiled in war Quincy may lose a portion of its foreign population as many will go across to take up arms in the interests of the homeland.

The strenuous efforts of Austria and Servia to recall from the United States for military service thousands that are employed in the factories has attracted attention, and the question has been raised as to whether this would be beyond the limits of the neutrality laws.

These laws specifically probihit the departure of armed enlistments from this country and does not permit of his being given money to cover transportation.

NEWSY BRIEFS

Mr. and Mrs. John N. Beach have moved from Spear street to Euclid avenue, Cranch hill.

Dr. James F. Costello of Wollaston avenue has been appointed resident physician at the Cambridge hospital.

Master Clinton Noble of Beach street who has been suffering from a severe cold is convalescing.

Rev. Edward Norton of Greenleaf street is to conduct the services at the First Presbyterian church during Rev. James A. Matheson's vacation.

The Registrars of Voters will meet tonight to certify any nomination papers that may have been filed.

Ex-Commodore Eben W. Sheppard of the Quincy yacht club and Joel F. Sheppard will be guests on board the Iris Sunday on the run from Lynn to Marblehead.

Miss Louise Costello of Wollaston avenue has resigned as organist at the Sacred Heart church, Atlantic, a position she has held for the past five years.

During the month of August Rev. J. A. Thompson of Walpole will have charge of the services in Christ church. Mr. Thompson will be in residence at the rectory and will gladly respond to any calls for ministrations.

Commencing Sunday Rev. P. S. Neldon of the Hall Place M. E. church will preach a series of four sermons based on the story of "The Prodigal Son. Aug. 2 on "Self-Discovery"; Aug. 9, "The Other Son"; Aug. 16, "The Prodigal Father"; Aug. 23, "The Prodigal Son"; Aug. 30 "The Prodigal Daughter."

The older residents of Atlantic will be glad to know that Mr .and Mrs. Ernest Moore are building a home on Billings street; Mr. and Mrs. George W. Hight on Atlantic street and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Jordan on the corner of Squantum and Billings street extension.

☞Subscribers who are going out of town for a vacation can have the Daily Ledger sent to them by mail without extra charge. In notifying the office give both the old and the new address.

BIG CONTRACT FOR ARMY SHOES

Brockton to Make 500,000 Pair for Servian Army

The shoe manufacturing firm of George E. Keith & Co. of Brockton has been awarded the contract to "shoe" the Servian army and they will immediately commence the manufacture of 500,000 pairs of boots.

The contract was secured in the open market against a large field of manufacturers who submitted bids. Deliveries have been guaranteed in twenty days.

The boots will be of the high top variety and will be made of heavy leather. The news of the contract going to Brockton will be read by many interested shoeworkers of this city who are at present unemployed.

PAPERS OUT FOR COL. WHITMAN

Col. Albert T. Whitman returned from a three weeks vacation trip this morning and one of the first places he visited was the City Clerk's office where he took out papers for the Republican nomination as Representative from the Fifth district. "Whit" said he was feeling fine after his vacation and was now ready to get down to business and make a vigorous campaign for the nomination.

HARDLY A MODEL PARTY.

(Waltham Free Press)

It has been quite evident to newspaper publishers for a long time that the Progressive party in this State either was financially bankrupt or that someone was tampering with its funds. Many publishers have not been able to collect their bills for advertising contracted nearly a year ago. It is doubtful if the much heralded popular subscription fund of $50,000 realized ten per cent of the amount set as a limit and a part of that contributed was given with the express understanding that was not to be used to pay bills already incurred. Publishers will be fortunate if they get 25 per cent of their bills.

Isn't it wise for those who have honestly pinned their faith to this party, as the one of purity, of the poor man, and of no bosses, to stop and consider whether their principles have been advanced under such acts as have been charged against their leaders, whether a party that expends nearly or quite $100,000 in a single campaign is the party of a poor man, and to figure out, if they can, how much the rank and file has had to say about the nominations the party has made, from President to the smallest office?

MRS. MARY SPEAR KITTREDGE.

Mary Spear Kittredge, wife of Preston B. Kittredge and mother of H. P. Kittredge, proprietor of a City Square store died Friday afternoon at the family home on Washington street.

Mrs. Kittredge was in her 85th year and has been a resident of Quincy Point for many years. Funeral services will be at the Frist Unitarian church chapel on Monday afternoon. She leaves a husband, two sons, Henry P. and Edwin Kittredge and a daughter Mrs. Davis.

BAR HARBOR TO BANGOR.

The Bangor Railway & Power Co., of which John R. Graham, formerly of Quincy is the president, has given permission to the Bar Harbor & Bangor street railway to operate cars over its tracks and the line will be built immediately between Bar Harbor and Bangor.

SPONSOR SELECTED.

Anne Lindsey Blake, wife of J. A. Lowell Blake, a prominent Boston banker, has been chosen as the sponsor for the Pacific to be launched at the shipyard Tuesday.

Mrs. Blake was invited to serve in that capacity a few days ago and this morning her acceptance was received.

DISTRICT COURT.

Henry A. Churchill was fined $5 for exceeding the automobile speed limit at Milton.

☞An auction that may interest contractors, builders, masons quarry miners and shipbuilders is advertised today by Newell D. Atwood, auctioner, to be held Monday at 17 Nay street, East Boston, when the entire stock of the James Robertson plan will be sold at public auction.

BUILDING BOOM.

It is reported upon fairly good authority, that there is to be considerable building in the immediate future on the old Robertson estate, which recently passed into the hands of a real estate firm and was laid out into house lots and put upon the market. The report is that one gentleman has purchased one hundred house lots and that he contemplates the immediate erection of one hundred houses on the property. Application for a permit for one dwelling has already been taken out and it is reported that others will follow in the very near future.

CARD OF THANKS.

We, the family of the late Luther L. Harrington, of Wollaston, wish in this way to thank our many friends for their kind expressions, and beautiful floral offerings, in the recent bereavement of our beloved husband and father.

HOME RUN GIVES FORE RIVERS GAME

Now Tie for First Place with Norwood Press in Manufacturers League

Bird & Son Shut Out at Merrymount Park

With nearly 1000 red hot fans calling for victory, the Fore Rivers jumped into a tie with Norwood Press for first place in the Manufacturers league by beating C. S. Bird & Sons in the fastest game of base ball ever played here on Saturday afternoon. The game went but nine innings, the only run scored in that time being the homer of "Pappy" Wall, whose smash down the first base line reached the hollow in right field and was lost. Showers were intermittent early in the game.

The Fore Rivers and Norwoods, although tied for first place will not meet each other unless they remain so during the remainder of the schedule. In that event every effort to have the game played here on Labor day will be made, and if so it will be the premier sporting event of the season.

Fore River started the game intent on victory but found Bird & Sons a hard nut to crack. Harry Donovan, under contract with the Connecticut league, and the man who was protested by every team but is still a pitcher, was in the box for the visitors. Time and again his cool headed pitching netted three out and aside from Wall's homer, Stevens was the only man to meet his delivery a lively welt, and Galvin got a single.

Nichols, the Syracuse University pitcher who is performing for Fore River was in his glory. His fine judgment phazed the Bird batters and in four innings he fanned the third man.

In the nine innings only 29 men stepped to the plate, and only two of them hit. Hawkins, Bird's best player, laid on a triple in the second innings, but it netted nothing, and Donovan got a single in the ninth only to see the chance of tieing the score fade with two putouts and a strikeout.

Nichols got ten strikeouts and

GERMAN FLEET RETIRES

A dispatch from Stockholm states that the Russian fleet engaged the German fleet in a naval battle this morning in the Baltic sea. The engagement took place in the Gulf of Bothnia. No details are given of the battle. It is reported however that the Germans were forced to retire to the Gulf of Finland.

Inasmuch as St. Petersburg is on the Gulf of Finland the report seems improbable.

An unequaled state of war exists in Europe, and aerial ships have been given their baptism of fire. Hostile air machines are hovering over the French frontier and already one aviator met death when he dashed his biplane into a German Zepplin balloon and caused the death of a military corporal.

Today is the day of invasion. Different countries are throwing armies into the territory of the enemy. Tourists are fleeing Europe but are handicapped by the lack of gold, the only acceptable coin. Travelers checks and money orders are not negotiable.

Rumors abound on all sides and one says that the Great Britain fleet met and sunk seven German ships off the French coast at daybreak.

As far as is known however Great Britain has not made known her position and the House of Commons will not meet till night. The cabinet is said to be divided. The Home Rule question has been sidetracked and civil war no longer confronts England.

Today bankers are meeting in this country to avert a money crisis. Sec. McAdoo states there will be no stringency in the United States. Arrangements are being made for the immediate issuance of clearing house certificates.

The foreign powers have unsuccessfully tried to purchase the Rivadavia at the Fore River shipyard. The only stipulation is immediate delivery. The ship will be turned over to Argentina on Aug. 23 in Boston harbor. Future plans are held in abeyance.

ODD FELLOWS HAVE PICNIC

Sports For Brothers and Sisters and Big Ball Game

Upwards of two hundred were present at Merrymount park, Saturday afternoon at the annual picnic of Manet Encampment, I. O. O. F., the party including the families, and prospective families of the members. Refreshments were served in a large tent during the afternoon. There was also a series of sports which resulted as follows:

Ladies' 50 yard dash, won by Mrs. Sadie Wood, Mrs. Andrew Johnson second; prizes, berry dish and bon bon dish.

Peanut race for ladies, won by Mrs. Peter Stone, Mrs. George C. Ela second; prizes, salad dish and spoon dish.

Girls 50 yard dash, won by Miss Annie Gustafson, Miss Evelyn Luke second; prizes, sewing set and pin tray.

Girls peanut race, won by Miss Helen Lord, Miss Marion Hayden second; prizes, writing set and pin tray.

Fifty yards dash for boys under 10 years, won by D. Irwin, C. Parsons second; prizes, base balls.

Ladies walking contest won by Miss Bertha Davenport, Mrs. Albert Ackbergh second; prizes, stick pins.

The great event of the afternoon was the game of ball between the married and single men. The game was replete with remarkable plays that would have made the eyes of some of the professionals look green with envy had they seen them. Edward L. Goodridge was the umpire and what he did not know about the game would fill a big book. Eddie was very fair in his rulings however and there was no attempt to mob him.

After standing in the hot sun for several innings with the perspiration running down his cheeks as big as snow balls, Ed called the game, and said the score was 4 to 4. Some disputed the score but as the score card had been destroyed the finding of the umpire had to stand.

George C. Ela and William Shirley were in the box for the married men and Albert Wood and Percy Ela for the single men. While the contestants were working hard for honors on the diamond the rooters gathered on the side lines and shouted for their favorites.

The afternoon proved to be one of the most enjoyable the Encampment has had for some time and great credit for its success is due to the efficient committees who were: Sam Wood Jr. Andrew Johnson, William A. Richards, George C. Ela, George Erwin, William Moffitt, Charles H. Wood, Frank E. Badger, and Howard Thayer.

CAMP RAIDED.

Acting on complaints of neighbors the Milton police raided a camp at East Milton Sunday afternoon and scooped in a gang of ten young men hailing from Boston who had come out for a day's outing. The gang brought a keg of beer with them and as the beer began to get in its work the crowd became noisy, so much so that the neighborhood was disturbed and the police notified. In court three of the gang proved to be juveniles and their cases were continued until Aug. 13. The other seven were fined $10 each.

RUNAWAY.

The horse of Edward Devine of Randolph became frightened while its owner was lunching in City Square at noon Sunday, and breaking its fastenings started across Depot street at frightful speed. The carriage struck against the storage house of E. V. Fitts & Co. and was demolished. Two men held the horse. It was later taken to the Hall Livery stable where it was claimed by Devine.

LAUNCHING AT 10 A. M.

Steamship Pacific is 405 Feet Over All

The launching of the steamship Pacific, a sister ship of the Atlantic which will be one of the first steamships to pass through the Panama canal, will be launched at the Fore River yards Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock. The launch will be a private one but will be attended by a number of guests of the Emery Steamship Co. for whom the steamship is being built. Her sponsor will be Mrs. Ann Lindsay Blake, wife of J. A. Lowell Blake of Boston.

The dimensions of the steamship are practically the same as the Atlantic. That is her length over all as 405 feet, 6 inches; length between perpendiculars, 388 feet; moulded breadth, 54 feet 4 inches; moulded depth 31 feet 6 inches.

She has a straight stem, and semi-eliptical stern and single steel upper deck, full poop, bridge house amidships and topgallant forecastle. She is built of steel, constructed with machinery aft according to designs of George Simpson of New York. She is designed to carry lumber and a general cargo between Atlantic and Pacific ports by way of the Panama canal.

Her hull is of the single deck type with a double bottom for water ballast. The cargo space is a sub-divided by traverse water-tight bulkheads into three cargo holds.

She will have a vertical, inverted, triple expansion engine supplied with steam at 190 pounds pressure, from three single-ended, coal-burning Scotch boilers. She will also carry a fully equipped electrical installation.

New Downer Landing will be an excellent place for the public to see the launching.

RUNAWAY BOYS WITH CIRCUS

Two sleeping boys, partially covered by a piece of burlap, were found on the circus grounds by Patrolman Henry Corbett Sunday evening and both admitted when questioned they had run away from home. They were taken to police headquarters where they gave their names as Henry Adams of Clark street, New Bedford, 15 years, and James Waters of 59 Howard street, New Bedford, 18 years.

The boys told Patrolman Corbett they reached Quincy by walking most of the distance. Both were fatigued and their shirts, once white, were black with dust. When placed in the detention room they fell to sleep and the quietness of the night was regularly punctured by their snores.

A spirit of wanderlust seems to have taken hold of the New Bedford boys, the two taken Sunday evening bringing the total of wanderers from that city up to four.

The name of the armored cruiser formally known as the California will be changed to San Diego, Sept. 1.

QUINCY PEOPLE TRAVELING ABROAD

Alarm for Mr. and Mrs. Brooks Adams James H. Penniman and Others

Some Fortunate to Get Back and Others on Sea

A large number of Quincy people have been in Europe this summer, and some may have difficulty in reaching home.

Mr. and Mrs. Brooks Adams were last heard from at Paris. They were en route for Berlin. On July 24 friends learned they were starting for what has since turned out to be the war zone. Brooks Adams is president of the Quincy Historical Society and lives on Adams street. His father Charles Francis Adams his grandfather President John Quincy Adams, and his great grandfather President John Adams were ambassador to Great Britain during critical periods.

James H. Penniman of Hancock street, is probably in Paris at the present time. He left Quincy in June for Europe and intended to be abroad about two months. His destination was Paris.

Miss Mary E. Parker of Upland road who spent several months in Europe reached New York Saturday, and through a difference of a few days avoided the difficulties of traveling under present conditions.

Miss Mary Elcock of Marsh street who has been in Switzerland is aboard the Canopic which will reach here Thursday.

Definite news has not been received from Mrs. Joseph L. Whiton, her daughter-in-law Mrs. Harry L. Whiton, and her grand-daughter-in-law, Ruth Whiton who are thought to be on their way to Paris. The last news received told of their preparations to leave Rome. If they encountered no delays they are probably now in Paris which is in a turmoil.

Miss Louise Hernan, a Quincy nurse is accompanying an elderly person to Europe and is now at sea. Their destination is Fiume, Austria. Miss Hernan is making the trip in a professional capacity, her patient deciding to die in her birthplace. Fiume is in the war country and because the Whitehead Torpedo Co. has a large establishment there the city may become the centre of a pitched battle.

Mrs. George M. Harman (Helen Rhines) daughter of Mrs. Effie Rhines of Miller Stile road, is in Germany but no letters have been received since July 14. Mrs. Harman is thought to be in Munich at the present time. The strict censorship conducted by the German authorities may explain the absence of mail.

Dr. Harold Curtis of Alexandria, Egypt, is en route home for a visit. His last letter was written on the Bay of Biscay) and was postmarked at Plymouth, England, July 23. He expected to sail from Liverpool on the Arabic and is due in Boston on Thursday. His parents Mr. and Mrs. Jesse F. Curtis, of Upland road, are anxiously awaiting him.

While it was expected that Mrs. W. G. A. Pattee would return this week

Many people are willing to go on picnics to enjoy the beauties of nature, if they can spend all their time playing bridge.

Most men get cross if their wives delay dinner a half hour, but they go off for two weeks without arranging to have any one feed the dog and cat.

Some men bolt a course dinner down in eight minutes at a railroad restaurant, and blame the madame's cooking if they have dyspepsia.

The current events classes in the Woman's Club will not be truly educative until they give more attention to baseball.

Owing to the fact that they have just had a vacation, many people are now having to take a week off for rest.

The people who growl about hot weather are usually the same ones who kick because it is too cool to ripen the corn crop.

Any summer hotel that wishes to qualify as a health resort must have plenty of young men present who can dance the tango.

The astronomers are hoping that Mexico is pacified so that the wonderful eclipse of the sun visible there in 1991, can be observed in peace and quiet.

The first step after joining the "back to the farm" movement is to hire a good strong farm hand to get the blisters.

Rain on Sunday causes sorrow to father, because he can't go motoring, and if it comes Monday, it brings sorrow to mother because she can't hang out the washing.

Some one has computed that the average farmer's wife handles 1200 pounds of water daily. The farmer will argue that this proves she is in first class athletic trim and should therefore milk the cows.

The political conventions will soon be passing resolutions, in which they declare fervently for armed intervention to straighten out Mexico, and also come out flatfooted for peace.

TRAVELLER'S COMFORT.

The summer months fill the railroad trains with a jam of people who take but one vacation a year, and that in July or August. Travelling is often hot and dusty in this period. It will be good policy for railroad corporations to do all they can to make it pleasant. Great as have been the improvements in railroad travel of recent years, the best is none too good. For most people a long railroad journey is the cause of a good deal of weariness.

To many simple minded people, a seat in a so-called "Palace car" used to be thought the limit of soft luxury. But even the man who pays his extra dollars for this additional comfort, finds that it is no sure preventive of weariness. The very best constructed car chair contains an angle that does not fit the curves of the human frame.

In summer, ventilation is often unsatisfactory, because of the smudge of coal smoke, which makes necessary the closing of windows. Every car ought to be liberally provided with wide roof ventilators. These should be well screened, but capable of admitting air freely. Frequently the screen is built of such a close mesh that it practically excludes air as well as cinders.

Car builders can add much to the public comfort by giving all seats high backs. On a low back seat, the endless jerking of the head by the rocking of the train is perhaps the one greatest cause of fatigue. Many people consider European trains more comfortable in this respect. Their compartment system places every passenger against a padded back reaching well above his head.

The more comfortable the ordinary day coaches are made, the more people will travel. There is little inducement to take long journeys on short vacations, if the railroad travel leaves you more tired than you were at the start.

BEFORE WAR HAS BEEN DECLARED

German Armies Invade French Territory at Two Points

ENGLAND IS STRIVING TO KEEP OUT OF IT

Persistent Rumors That British Cruiser Captured Great German Liner In Retaliation For Seizure of Two British Ships—Feeling That France Has Been Tricked by Words of Peace—Neutrality of Luxemburg, Established In 1867, Broken by Kaiser—Asquith Prepares to Announce Decision of British Cabinet

London, Aug. 3.—Germany and France hold the world stage today. Servia and Austria are wholly forgotten, and Germany's declaration of war against Russia has as yet led to no decisive fighting.

But on the French-German frontier the opening scenes of the drama of 1870 are being re-enacted, with two German armies treading boldly into French territory, marching against Paris as did their fathers and grandfathers forty-four years ago.

The war clouds grow steadily darker and the rays of hope for peace less bright.

France is struggling desperately to avert war, but the most optimistic observers cannot see how she can ignore Germany's insolent invasion for fore than a few hours longer.

Great Britain is striving as desperately to keep out of a general European war, an apparently authoritative statement having been published in the London Chronicle that no British forces would be landed on the continent.

But more than overbalancing this slender hope for peace were the disquieting rumors that Germany had seized two English ships.

And persistently came the messages that a British cruiser in retaliation had captured the great German liner, the Kronprinzessen Cecilie, bound for Bremen with hundreds of American tourists aboard.

Invasion of France

The tremendous happenings of Sunday was the advance of two German armies into French territory, one through the grand duchy of Luxemburg and the other westward from Strassburg to Cirey.

France, listening to German protests against her mobilization, had apparently not believed that all the time the Germans were massing their men at the boundary, but the actual advance of the Germans has shown that France and not Russia was the real objective of the war lords of Berlin.

And this impression, not a rumor, but a fact, has taken place before war has been declared by either nation.

Unless the German troops are recalled today and an apology is made—an impossible event in the eyes of those familiar with the situation—the French forces already mobilized will be hurled against the German invaders today.

France is aflame with anger, the old enmity against Germany heightened by a feeling that Paris has been tricked by Berlin's words of peace while the invasion was being planned.

Great Britain's Position

How Great Britain can remain isolated no one outside of the British cabinet pretends to understand. France will call upon her ally for soldiers to repel the German advance. Lord Charles Beresford urged his countrymen to rally to the defense of France. The Labor leaders, the Socialists and the Oxford and Cambridge professors are pleading for peace, but the great mass of the people are eager to fight.

Outside of the invasion of French territory, the most importat event of the day was the message that the liner Kronprinzessin Cecilie had been seized by a British cruiser.

No actual confirmation of the story could be obtained but the great steamer was so close to the English harbor of Plymouth that the passing of the hours without a wireless message from the ship made it seem probable that Great Britain had been less pacific than the attitude of the cabinet appeared.

If the story proves true, Germany will hardly allow Great Britain to remain neutral.

Treaty of 1867 Broken

"German troops have invaded Luxemburg. Germany has violated the neutrality of Luxemburg. This neutrality was established by a treaty negotiated and signed in London in April of 1867. Ratifications of this treaty were exchanged in London May 30, 1867. Article II. of it reads as follows:

"'The grand duchy of Luxemburg will be a state perpetually neutral. The powers which sign the present treaty declare themselves as bound to respect the neutrality and to make it respected by others. This neutrality is placed under the guarantee of the powers which have signed this treaty.'"

THE KAISER

Holding Reins of Peace, His Troops Invade France

Continuing, the statement of the embassy says:

"The British ambassador at Berlin asked the German secretary of state for foreign affairs whether Germany was prepared to respect the neutrality of Belgium. The German secretary of state for foreign affairs declared that he was not able to answer. The neutrality of Belgium has been established by a treaty signed in London.

"The German ambassador at St. Petersburg notified Russia of the declaration of war by his government when negotiations were pending between Austria-Hungary and Russia, and at the very moment when Austria-Hungary had declared that she was prepared to consider the matter of the Austro-Serb conflict with Servia, or with a neutral power on behalf of Servia."

The Feeling In London

London maintained her calm to the last moment. A great crowd assembled around the government offices at Whitehall awaiting the decision of the cabinet as to whether Great Britain would take part in the war, but when it was found that no statement was to be made the crowd melted away.

No statement of the decision taken by the cabinet was made. Premier Asquith will announce Great Britain's position in the house of commons today. Prior to this announcement another cabinet meeting will be held.

The general impression is that the war party in the cabinet is in the ascendency, but not a word was allowed to leak out of the cabinet chamber concerning Sunday's proceedings.

It is said Viscount Morley, lord president of the council, and Viscount Haldane, lord high chancellor, led the peace party, and that Winston S. Churchill, first lord of the admiralty, threatened to resign if the government did not stand by its unwritten agreement to support France against German attack.

It is thought that the Lancashire Liberals are putting strong pressure on the government to keep out of the conflict at all costs, and it is said Asquith is somewhat influenced by this. But the average Englishman is saying that the government has no alternative, after the neutrality of Luxemburg has been disregarded by Germany, and after Germany's refusal to say what her attitude would be with regard to Belgium.

RUSSIANS CROSS BORDER

Reported to Have Invaded Kaiser's Territory at Several Points

Russia has begun the invasion of German territory, according to a dispatch from Berlin, Russian forces having crossed the German frontier at Schwinden, southeast of Bialla, while a Russian patrol entered Germany near Eichenreld, in Posen.

Two squadrons of Russian Cossacks are riding in the direction of Johannesburg, in east Prussia, fifteen miles from the frontier.

The Russian patrol which entered near Eichenreld attacked the German guard at the railroad bridge over the Warthe. The attack was repulsed. Two Germans were slightly wounded.

The above information was given out by the German imperial staff. The staff at the same time said that the invasion near Schwinden showed that war had actually begun.

A telegram received at Berlin from Koenigsburg says a Russian patrol has entered Eydtkuhnen, on the Russian border. It advanced to Bilderweithschen, where it destroyed the local postoffice.

The enemy, according to this intelligence, crossed the border at several points.

ULTIMATUM SPURNED

Intensely Dramatic Scene When Russia Breaks With Germany

The rupture of diplomatic relations between Russia and Germany took place at St. Petersburg under dramatic circumstances.

It was midnight, Friday, when Count Von Pourtales, the German ambassador to Russia, visited Foreign Minister Sasanoff and asked for an urgent interview. As soon as he was received he formally called upon Russia to cease her mobilizing in twelve hour. The allotted period of time passed without an answer.

At 7 o'clock Saturday evening Von Pourtales again called upon Sasanoff and again asked if Russia would cease mobilizing her forces.

To this the Rusisan statesman replied: "Inasmuch as the Russian government has not answered within the time you specified, it follows that Russia has declined to agree with your demand."

Three times Von Pourtales repeated the German ultimatum and each time the Russian foreign minister met his statement with the same firm negative. Finally Von Pourtales rose from his chair, bowed to the foreign minister, and left the room without another word. He and the members of his staff at once departed from St. Petersburg.

The protection of Russians in countries at war with Russia has been entrusted to Spain.

CALLED TO SERVICE

British Navy Reservists In New England Are Summoned

Boston, Aug. 3.—Orders were received at the British consulate at Boston calling out all British navy reservists in New England, according to a statement by the acting British consul general, F. C. O'Meara. The English consul general of New York has received orders calling for both navy and army reservists.

The British consulate quarters, usually closed on Sunday, were occupied by busy consuls and clerks waiting for further orders and getting in communication with as many reservists as possible. O'Meara received orders to send out the call from his government to his countrymen as quickly as possible. A feeling of expectancy was evident.

Reservists are men who have served a certain length of time, and then by oath make themselves liable to call for a further period. English navy reservists are those who have served in the navy for seven years and are subject to call at any time for a period of five years thereafter. The 1500 reservists that will sail from Boston include only those that reside in all the states of New England except Connecticut.

AMERICA LEADS THEM ALL

Triple Entente Is Far Wealthier Than the Triple Alliance

Revenue for war makes the resources of the great nations now under the war cloud as important an element as the strength of the armies.

The resources of the countries forming the triple entente—Great Britain, France and Russia—are by millions greater than those of the nations comprising the triple alliance—Austria, Italy and Germany. But the debt of the first three far exceeds the latter.

While the revenues of the United Kingdom, Russia and France are greater than those of Austria, Germany and Italy, it is interesting to note that the wealth of the United States is much greater than that of all the nations in the triple alliance combined, besides exceeding the resources of the Franco-Russian alliance. Likewise, it is greater than that of the aggregate wealth of Russia and the United Kingdom.

ROADS OF MIDDLE WEST TO BENEFIT

Five Percent Rate Increase Is Granted to Some

Washington, Aug. 3.—In a divided opinion the interstate commerce commission granted some of the 5 percent freight rate increases asked by the eastern railroads and denied others.

Increases will apply in the territory north of the Ohio and Potomac rivers and from a vertical line drawn through Buffalo and Pittsburg west as far as the Mississippi river. All class rates and many commodity rates are increased 5 percent in that section.

No advances whatever were permitted east from Buffalo and Pittsburg to the Atlantic seaboard, but hope is extended for increased revenues from financial readjustments and increases later on certain articles if close classification warrants it.

Oil Shipments Halted

New York, Aug. 3.—All exports of petroleum and other oil products destined for Europe have been stopped by the Standard Oil company, such commodities being considered contraband of war.

More Money For Milk

Plainfield, Conn., Aug. 3.—Farmers in Rhode Island, Connecticut and Massachusetts shipping milk to Providence and Boston received an advance of 5 cents per ten-quart can from Aug. 1.

"Why do you speak of him as a finished artist?"

"Because he told me he was utterly discouraged and was going to quit the profession. If that doesn't show that he's finished I don't know what does."—Chicago Post.

Economy Hints

How to Exterminate the Troublesome Cockroaches.

WITH the approach of warm spring weather cockroaches multiply rapidly and leave their winter hiding places. The following simple remedy recommended by one of the department of agriculture's scientists, will unquestionably destroy great quantities of the pest and keep them in check as effectively as troublesome insect powders and dangerous poisons:

Mix one part of plaster of paris and three or four parts of flour. Place this dry mixture in a saucer or on a flat piece of wood or tin where roaches are numerous. Nearby place another flat plate containing pure water. Supply a few inclines of wood or cardboard from the floor to the edge of the plate or saucer to give easy access. Float one or two thin pieces of wood on the water so that they will touch the edge of the dish. The insects readily eat the plaster mixture, become thirsty and drink. The water makes the plaster set in the intestines and kills the roach.

Another simple trap which has been successfully used is the following: A deep vessel or jar is partially filled with stale beer, for which roaches seem to have a special fondness. A number of flat strips of rough wood are placed at an incline against the vessel and bent over so that they project into the interior a few inches. The roaches climb up the inclined sticks to get the beer and slip off into the vessel.

There are various poisons which, it is asserted, are fairly effective as remedies against roaches. The only one of these that seems to give satisfactory results is a phosphorus paste, sold in the form of pills. It consists of sweetened flour paste containing 1 to 2 per cent of phosphorus, and is spread on bits of paper or cardboard and placed in the runways of the roaches. This mixture has been used very successfully in the department of agriculture to free desks from Croton bugs, numbers of the dead insects being found in the drawers every day during the time the poison was kept about. As phosphorus is poisonous to human beings and domestic animals, besides being highly inflammable, it should be used very carefully.

Considerable relief may be gained by a liberal use of pyrethrum powder. It is not a perfect remedy, however, and is at best but a temporary expedient. It may also be burned in an infested apartment. The smoke and vapors generated by the burning of this insecticide are often more effective in destroying roaches than the application of the substance in the ordinary way as a powder. There is no attendant danger of explosion, and the only precaution necessary is to see that the room is kept tightly closed for from six to twelve hours.

A UNIQUE ENTERTAINMENT.

At a recent linen shower given for a charming young bride elect the gifts were tied in red papers with fancy ribbons in all colors and gold cords.

The presents were placed in a galvanized tub which was prettily converted into a huge pie. The sides of the tub were covered with light brown crape paper, and the cover, marked like a pie, was made of wrapping paper. The usual crimped edge was outlined with chocolate mints, and through the central opening a ribbon from each package protruded.

The mysterious looking pie proved more interesting than did Jack Horner's, and certainly nothing could be daintier than this homemade pie of many surprises.

Aside from this feature was something new and decidedly novel. An ingenious girl, deeply interested in the forthcoming nuptials, held the ribbons and strings while the bride elect opened each package and, as we all know, exhausted a supply of adjectives in rendering thanks.

These ribbons and cords disappeared. When again seen the girl who had taken them had tied them together in the hit and miss fashion and crocheted them into a solid little mat of red, blue, pink, white, green and orange. The extreme edge was a beautiful shell effect made with the gold cord. This was attached to a large green silk sachet bag, filled with rose perfume. Needless to say the unique sachet will outlast the tokens.

How to Make a Useful Washing Fluid.

There is an excellent washing fluid to be made at home which will take out all red laundry marks and rust, ink or mildew stains without leaving a trace.

Boil five pounds of washing soda and a gallon of cold water. While it is boiling add a pound of chloride of lime, stir well and set aside to settle. Strain through a cloth and then cork up the fluid in a jug. Put the stained clothes in ten quarts of water or enough to cover them, with two handfuls of shaved soap and two cupfuls of the fluid.

If the stains do not disappear when the clothes have boiled awhile add a little more of the fluid, but not too much, because it will eat into the goods if the mixture is too strong.

BLUE HILLS RESERVATION

New Bath Houses and Other Improvements

Several improvements have been made this summer in the Blue Hills reservation by the Metropolitan Park Commission, says the Milton Record. Probably the most noticeable are two new cement bath-houses at Houghton's pond. Two years ago a bath house for boys and men was completed, and this year the houses for girls and women were started. These are practically completed. They are on the site of the old wooden house but contain many features not included in the old building. Individual locker rooms have been provided for which a nominal charge of ten cents will be made.

On Great Blue hill a drinking fountain, a memorial to Professor A. Lawrence Rotch, founder of the Blue Hill Observatory, has been installed by Mrs. A. L. Rotch. With the new memorial fountain there are now two supplies of good drinking water at the summit of the hill, and the cause of complaint formerly heard, that there was no water at the summit, has been eliminated.

A great deal of moth work was done on the reservation last season, as usual. The chestnut blight, which caused the cutting of so many trees last winter, still prevails in many sections, but little will be done until cold weather again allows heavy cutting. Of the pests which infest the reservation, the forest tent caterpillar has proved most destructive. Superintendent Costello says that the tent caterpillar this season, has been the worst in ten years. Gypsy and brown-tail moths, however, have been far less prevalent than in former seasons.

Little new road building has been accomplished since last summer. More attention is being paid to keeping that which has been built in good condition than starting new construction work. The path between Bouncing brook and section 2 Border road has been made into a carriage road to make possible the passage of spraying apparatus to that section of the reservation.

HIT BY AUTO.

Charles Austin, starter for the Bay State Street Railway, was hit by an automobile in City Square about 2 o'clock, Sunday afternoon and was obliged to suspend work for the balance of the day.

The machine was owned by Thomas Downey of this city and was operated by a girl. Mr. Austin was near the fountain when hit. The mudguard struck him on the right side, over the heart, and he received two serious bruises.

The auto was brought to a stop and Mr. Downey offered Mr. Austin assistance. The latter reported for duty this morning but is very lame as a result of his experience.

WELL SUPPLIED WITH DATA

Warburg Makes Good Impression on Senate Banking Committee

Washington, Aug. 3.—Paul M. Warburg, recently appointed to the federal reserve board, appeared before the senate committee on banking and currency, and was examined for more than three hours in regard to his fitness for the place.

Before the examination began the committee resolved to keep all the proceedings secret. After the adjournment Chairman Owen said that while he could not discuss what happened, he hoped that the hearing would be brought to an end today and that Warburg's nomination would be reported to the senate.

Warburg came well supplied with data concerning the transactions of his firm about which questions were expected, and it was said he made a good impression on the committee.

TWO WOMEN KILLED IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Chauffeur Becomes Despondent and Takes Own Life

North Adams, Mass., Aug. 3.—Mrs. Sybil C. Hutton of New York was instantly killed, Miss Mary Houghton, daughter of ex-Mayor Houghton of this city, died later, and three men were injured when Houghton's touring car turned turtle three times down a seventy-foot embankment at Pownal, Vt.

Houghton, who was on the front seat with John Widders, his chauffeur, was thrown with Widders clear of the machine. Widders was only bruised, but Houghton sustained severe injuries. His seventy years make his condition critical.

Dr. Hutton was in the tonneau with his wife and Miss Houghton. He escaped serious injury.

Widders later committed suicide by shooting. He had been despondent since the accident, although not under arrest. He had been for thirty-five years an employe of Houghton.

HOPE FOR A SETTLEMENT

Western Railroads and Employes Listen to President's Advice

Washington, Aug. 3.—In an attempt to avert the threatening strike of 55,000 firemen and engineers on ninety-eight railroads, President Wilson appealed to representatives of the employers and employes to accept the settlement plan proposed by the federal board of mediation and conciliataion. He was promised consideration for his proposal by both sides.

Hope for a peaceful settlement is held by administration officials because the railroad managers' committee promised to think again over the federal mediators' plan which they had rejected once.

COMBINATION GOWN.

Separate Blouse With Dressy Gabardine Gown.

ATTRACTIVE COSTUME.

A creamy net blouse, a blue gray girdle embroidered in dull gold and a tailored skirt of light blue gabardine are happily combined in the one piece costume illustrated here. The skirt, in spite of its suggestion of being tailored, is dressy in the extreme, having a closely gathered double frill around the hem and an abundance of draping at the back. The final touch of smartness is given this costume by the high buttoned boots.

CRETONNE COVERS.

Have Replaced Plain Linen as Slips For Upholstered Chairs.

Slip covers for upholstered furniture are made of pretty cretonnes. The slip cover of today is far removed from the striped and prim linen cover we used to see. Instead of seams stiffly bound with tape we more often find just ordinary seams or a neat French seam and, as a finishing touch, the plaited valance, usually with a deep heading, that adds such a quaint and charming touch. A few dollars spent for cretonne, printed linen or some old fashioned chintz to "make over" one or more rooms for the summer months is a wise investment. Often one or more slip covers may be used with propriety in any room the year round and solve the problem of what to do with the chairs that are "too good to give away" and too shabby to live with in peace. Cotton prints and white enamel paint have proved the salvation of many a room.

frilled at the elbows and falling scarf like over the shoulders. A draped girdle of pink satin ribbon is knotted in front, ends hanging below the knee. To effect the invisible closing of the bodice the ever useful snap fastener has been called into use.

FLINGING THE CHAKRI.

One of the Dexterous Feats of the Clever Hindus of Gwalior.

There is a curious custom in Gwalior, India, the seat of Jain and early Hindu antiquities. In front of the mausoleum of a holy saint—Mohammed Ghous—a fair is held annually on the outskirts of Gwalior town about the middle of the rainy season. The most noticeable feature of the fair is the chakri throw.

A chakri is a piece of iron something like a spindle, over which a long piece of string or thread is rolled. The player throws high into the air the iron chakri (literally a roll), holding one end of the string in his hand, and gives it a swing and jerk in such a clever manner that the chakri on coming down rolls up the thread again on itself and is caught in the hands of the thrower.

The art has been dexterously practiced by a class of people for ages past, and some members are so renowned that they cut a good figure at the scene. It is most interesting to watch the thrower fling the chakri up high, catch it in his hands on return and continue sending it up again and again till the rope becomes as high as seventy feet above the ground. There is absolutely no spring or lever attachment in the chakri. Nabbo is the champion thrower. — London Strand Magazine.

TORTURE OF THE "PICKET."

A Form of Military Punishment In England In Bygone Days.

The "picket," an ingenious form of punishment in use in England in the days of old, was generally inflicted on cavalry and artillery men and was a singularly brutal bit of torture.

A long post, near which stood a stool, was driven into the ground. The delinquent was ordered to mount the stool, and his right hand was fastened to a hook in the post by a noose, drawn up as high as it could be stretched, round his wrist. A stump the height of the stool, with its end cut to a round and blunt point, was also driven into the earth close to the post.

Then the stool was taken away, and the sufferer had nothing to rest his bare feet upon but the stump, "which, though it did not usually break the skin," says Captain Grose, "put him in great torture, his only means of relief being by resting his weight on his wrist, the pain of which soon became intolerable."

One can very well believe him, especially when he makes the addition that a man was not infrequently left to stand in this position for half an hour, although the orthodox period of endurance was fifteen minutes.—London Graphic.

Sleeplessness.

A favorite dictum of the physiologists, emphasized in their latest works, relates to the dangers of sleeplessness. "Sleep is more important to life than nutrition, and insomnia kills sooner than starvation," to quote the exact words of one. This has been a kind of tradition in medicine and is reiterated again and again in these books without any real evidence, so far as I know, to support it. Taught to every medical man of older generations and to every medical fledgling of today, it finds its way to general public acceptance, begetting in the lay mind terrors of insanity and death which haunt every unfortunate victim of insomnia. The fear of not sleeping is one of the commonest causes of insomnia. Yet I do not know of any medical evidence anywhere of disastrous results from insomnia and have myself never seen any harm arise from sleeplessness apart from the harm done by the fears and worries associated with the condition.—Atlantic Monthly.

Making a New Nose.

In a German medical journal Professor Max Joseph of Berlin describes a method of making a new nose where the original member has been destroyed by disease or accident. An arm is fixed above the head and encased in plaster of paris so that it cannot be moved. A piece of the skin oval in outline is then cut partially free from the arm and sewn to one side of the nose. After it has taken root in this new position the flap is cut free from the arm, which is now removed from the plaster of paris encasement, and sewn to the other side of the nose by its remaining edge. This gives sufficient skin covering. The nose is now built up by strips of bone taken from the shin and a straight profile is obtained.

Took Her Breath Away.

A very talkative little girl, who had been chattering away like a magpie all morning, suddenly became silent when a lady, dressed in the extreme of the fashion, called on her mother. Wishing to be amiable, the visitor said to the chatterbox:

"Have you lost your tongue, my dear?"

"Oh, no, ma'am," was the reply; "only my breath."—New York Tribune.

Goods In Bond.

A bonded warehouse is one in which imported goods liable to customs duty or manufactured products liable to internal revenue duty are stored until the duty or tax is paid. Goods so stored pending the payment of duty are said to be in bond.

Decidedly Small.

MESSAGE FROM S. S. PORTLAND

Found in Bottle on Shore of Quincy Bay

Gladys Keefe, 11 years, of Watterson avenue, Wollaston Park, found a bottle on the shores of Quincy bay Friday, which may be a farewell message from one of the many that perished when the Portland went down in the storm of 1908. The message was not quit decipherable and the little girl took it to Park Officer James White, who made out the message as follows: "S. S. Portland, Nov. 27, 1908. Goodby, Mabel. John. Keep this bottle in remembrance of me."

Officer White said the paper had aged and had evidently been torn either from a bag or wrapping paper. The message was written with pencil.

The place where the bottle was found overlooks the creek which marks the spot where the lake steamer was driven ashore in that storm. While a few believe the message to be a fake, others feel that it may be authentic, and that it was not released until the wreckage of the fated ship broke up.

The message and the remains of the bottle are now in the possession of the girl and during the past few days many have called to view what is said to be the most unusual find ever made on Quincy shore.

ANIMAL CIRCUS.

The Bangor Daily Commercial of July 10 says La Tena's wild animal circus which is to visit Quincy Aug 3, pleases Bangor people.

"Few circuses, large or small, have visited Bangor in the past few years, that have given more general satisfaction than La Tena's Wild Animal circus, which played two performances in this city.

The acts are clean and interesting, the horses well-fed and the performers all that could be asked for. It is doubtful if there is a better circus than La Tena's on the road today.

The capacity of the "big-top" under which the performance was given was taxed to capacity, and there was hardly a vacant seat left when the show began. It was the same in the afternoon, and the management of the attraction seemed to be well pleased with the reception given them by Bangor people.

A three-ringed animal show is an unusual thing, and often it is hard to watch all that is going on, but with La Tena's all the rings are so arranged and the acts so timed this difficulty is obviated.

Among the many special acts of merit at this show may be mentioned Margarette's Nubian Lions. This den of trained beasts is only one of the many big features with the circus and among others may be mentioned Balchman's remarkably clever bears, Captain Wesley's educated seals, Paul Allen's highly-trained elephants, and Sylvester's dancing ponies. Among the many performances on horseback is the splendid novelty presented by Blanche Reed and Herman Griggs. Another act or real merit was presented by the Albert Powell troupe of distinguished wire artists, five in number, who gave a very high grade act upon the tight wire.

The ponies are particularly worthy of a special mention, and they are highly trained, wonderfully intelligent and carefully handled little animals. The elephants were also delightful and ponderously clever.

AUTO AND BICYCLE.

Ollie Kasonen of 27 Morton street, an employee at the Fore River shipyard, was knocked from his bicycle at Water and Phipps street Sunday afternoon by an automobile owned and operated by Henry Yaeger of Water street. He received cuts on the right elbow and face and was bruised about the body. The front wheel of the bicycle was smashed beyond repair.

The accident occurred as Yaeger turned from Phipps to Water street. According to the story that reached the police, Yaeger did not stop to offer assistance. He heard that such a story had reached the police, and on his return he went to headquarters. Yaeger said he remained and helped Kasonen and the handkerchief with which he wiped the blood from the workman's face was in the auto. The police are making an investigation.

LYNN OPEN RACE.

Many Quincy yachts were numbered among the fleet of 81 starters in the annual open race of the Lynn yacht club off Bass Point on Saturday. In the Sonder class the Harpoon, formerly owned and sailed by Charles F. Adams, 2d., was the first to finish having a lead of a minute over the second boat.

In class 1 the Dorchen II of A. W. Findlay was second.

In class A the Marie L of A. W. Findlay was first the other boats finishing in the following order; Areyto, Chewink, Virginia, Colema, and Eleanor.

The order of finish for the remainder of the class being: Grayling, Mudjekeewis, Dolly III, Iris and Dartwell. The Dartwell met with a mishap as her halliards parted.

PLAYGROUND NOTES.

A day and a half lost last week on account of rainy weather put quite a crimp in the Playground attendance as the following figures will show.

Ward Three led as usual with a total of 1875, of whom 850 were boys and 1025 were girls.

Ward Two had 1019 for a total, 603 boys and 416 girls.

Wollaston or Ward Five had 600 with the boys slightly in the lead.

The grand total for the week in the city was 3494.

The sports for tomorrow afternoon at Ward Three will be the 75 yard dash, potato race and an extra event for the girls, the sack race.

TENNIS FINALS.

The finals in the tournament of Fourth of July [illegible] Quincy Tennis club for the Quincy Challenge cup were to have been played Saturday but Collister and Steinway defaulted to Barker and Broderick. They will play Niles and Davenport Aug. 28. Niles and Davenport and Hillman and Barker both hold two legs in the cup, and they will play off the match.

TRIPLE PLAY AT WEST QUINCY

Gives Copelands Victory Over Division 22

The Copelands beat Div. 22, A. O. H., in a West Quincy league game at the Ward Four playgrounds Saturday afternoon and won the purse of $25 contributed by the players. The feature of the game was a triple play by the winners, the only one ever made in this city.

The play came in the second innings with the bases full of Hibernians. McDonald, the "Copes" pitcher, caught a foul fly tagged a man trying to cross home and then drove to Egan at third for the third out.

Patriarca, the money pitcher, was wild and passed nine men, but he allowed only four hits. Egan and Shea contributed to the spectacular features of the game by nailing fouls on beautiful catches. The former with Bonifini furnished two timely hits apiece. DeCoste and Desmond of the infield played well, turning two fast double plays.

For the Hibernians, the main feature was the hitting of Duane who whaled out a homer and a double. Stedman of the High school team caught fine ball and McPherson pitched a good game, allowing but two men their base on a pass.

The game was witnessed by the largest gallery of the season and all were enthusiastic and cheered like furies. Several turns on inside ball sent them frantic, when it appeared that the Hibernians would score and tie the game up. The summary:

Eternal Feminine.

Margaret, aged seven years, was playing housekeeper. As she pretended to wipe the perspiration from her face she turned from the toy washboard upon which was rinsing out a handkerchief, and, addressing her brother, a year younger, said: "There you are sitting at your ease and me breaking my bones doing your washing."

HOME RUN

Donovan secured nine. The game was a pitcher's battle from the first, and both men were backed up by the superb fielding of their team mates, Bates being the man on whom victory depended several times. No errors were recorded against either side.

This week Saturday, Fore River will try to maintain its lead at Chelsea when they will clash with the Forbes Lithograph Co., and on the 22nd they will play the last game of the season at Lynn with the General Electrics and Tom Bannon as their opponents. The standing of the three leading teams to date is:

Q. Y. C. RUN TO MARBLEHEAD

A large fleet of the Quincy yacht club power boats left the club house at Houghs Neck Sunday morning on the annual run to Marblehead for the mid-summer racing season at that port. Most of the sailing fleet were at Lynn on Saturday and they remained there all night participating in a run to Marblehead on Sunday morning.

The fleet got away from the clubhouse shortly after 9 o'clock led by Commodore Harry S. Crane. There were ten sailing boats in the fleet and 15 power boats, the most of which are enrolled in the Power Boat squadron.

The sail and power boats to start were the Iris, Commodore Crane; Thordis, Dr. Frank E. Dawes; Meemer, John T. Cavanagh; Hush, John Kitson; Wanderer, Albert Acorn; Moondyne, A. J. Shaw; Beatrice, James Hector; Velella, Albert Pierson; Tyro, Hollis Burgess; Lemura, Ralph E. Winslow.

Prizes for the best time on the run will be given by Commodore Crane and penants will also be awarded to the first, second and third boats to finish.

Nearly 200 yachts took part Sunday in the interclub run from Bass Point to Marblehead and in this run the Eleanor of W. L. Jefferson was first in class A, the Maritza II, of C. H. Porter in class S, the Clara of ex-Commodore H. W. Robbins in class D, the Wanderer IV of ex-Commodore F. E. Dawes in class H.

WEYMOUTH TROT.

Real Heroism.

To live well in the quiet routine of life; to fill a little space because God wills it; to go on cheerfully with a petty round of of little duties, little avocations; to smile for the joys of others when the heart is aching—who does this, his works will follow him. He may not be a hero to the world, but he is one of God's heroes.—Dean Farrar.

FOR NEUTRAL ZONE DEFENSE

Aliens In Mexico City Want Strong Guards of Troops

ENTRY OF REBELS IS FEARED

Feeling, However, That Boisterousness Which May Arise on First Occupation of Capital Will Subside In One or Two Days—Optimism Prevails In Official Circles

Mexico City, Aug. 3.—As the arrival of the revolutionists at the city's gates seems only a question of days, some nervousness exists, and foreign colonies are taking active measures for self-protection.

The German minister, Admiral Von Hintzee, conferred with War Minister Velasco in regard to a detail of troops for the defense of the neutral zone which in case of necessity the foreign colonies to occupy.

It is said that the diplomatists consider 5000 soldiers necessary to guard the perimeter in which foreigners propose to seek refuge. The foreign representatives desire to have these troops for the protection of the neutral zone until the entrance of the constitutionalists, when, according to the plans being discussed and if General Carranza is willing, the federal guard will be replaced by constitutionalists.

To this end the diplomatists have already taken steps to get into touch with Carranza. It is thought that in one or two days after the entrance of the constitutionalists any boisterousness that might arise on their first occupation will have subsided and that concentration will then be no longer necessary.

Official circles still seem optimistic on the result of the peace pour parlers between the government's delegates and Carranza. It was rumored here that Carranza would refuse to receive the delegates, but it was stated at the presidential offices that before sending the delegates President Carbajal had the formal promise of Carranza that they would be received.

Declaring that his wife had attempted suicide seven different times and on several occasions chased him with a carving knife, John J. Wilson of New York seeks a separation.

William Blanchette committed suicide at Marlboro, Mass., by hanging. His wife and children left him a few days ago and it is thought he was despondent.

KID LEWIS MAKES GOOD.

Kid Lewis, who was featherweight champion of England less than a year ago and who went to Australia under the contract of Snowy Baker, has developed into a high class lightweight in Australia. Lewis proved himself to be a very good boy in the featherweight class and won the title, but it was hardly thought that he could jump right into the lightweight division and defeat the stars.

It was not a case of taking on weight in Australia, as many of the boys have done in the past, but simply a case of natural development. Lewis was sent against one of the hardest propositions in Australia when he landed there—Herbert McCoy, who is considered the equal of any lightweight in the antipodes.

In this battle Lewis proved himself the better fighter by outpointing the clever McCoy all the way. He followed this by defeating Hughie Mehegan, the Australian champion, over the twenty round route. And now there is talk of matching him with either Young Shugrue, the sensational New York lightweight, or Milburn Saylor, the Indianapolis boy, who has made good during his stay there. From all accounts Lewis must be of the highest class, and the chances are that he will be heard from in his division when he gets back to England.

STALLINGS DISCOVERS GERM.

No Microbe Half as Contagious, Says Braves' Manager.

"There isn't any microbe that's half as contagious," says George Stallings, manager of the Boston Braves, "as a batting or nonbatting germ. Best proof of that—the weekly batting averages. Notice how many players from any club that's either on a batting streak or a hitting slump will be closely bunched instead of scattered all along the column like the men of other teams. Often five or six men on a single team will have practically identical records, all in a knot around .290 or .300 or all lumped round .210 or .220. Then when the streak of good or bad hitting is over they'll begin to separate, and in two weeks their averages will be distributed all up and down the list. When one man begins to sting the ball his associates seem to catch the same pace, and when one man falls the rest fall harmoniously with him. One principal trouble with my club seems to be a beautiful, harmonious and united batting action—headed the wrong way!"

Chief Meyers' Wing Is Good.

One of the best things about the Giants' playing these days is Chief Meyers' throwing. He never pegged better. The chief throws and hits better than he runs, but that means more employment because of the need of carrying a pinch runner.

INFLUENCE OF UNITED STATES

Directed Toward Peaceful Settlement of Conflict

PROTECTION OF OUR PEOPLE

Administration Is Leaving Nothing Undone to Secure It at Home and Abroad—Army and Navy Transports May Be Sent to Bring Home Americans Stranded In Europe

Steps to prevent a financial stringency in this country as a result of Europe's sudden need for gold were followed by a series of precautionary measures designed to protect Americans and their interests abroad, as well as at home.

President Wilson and Secretary Bryan studied a mass of dispatches from American embassies, legations and consulates in Europe. While no formal tender of good offices has been made to any power, American diplomats abroad are keeping the state department closely advised, so that if an opportunity presents itself the influence of the United States for a settlement of the war problems by pacific means will be actively exerted.

Ambassadors Page at London, Penfield at Vienna, Herrick at Paris and Gerard at Berlin are particularly active conferring with officials of the various foreign offices. They are at work in the interests of peace and thus far have been acting on their own initiative. In their dispatches to the state department they made various suggestions but until the situation develops further no decisive step in diplomacy will be taken by the Washington government.

The Washington governement, however, instructed all its diplomatic representatives abroad to do everything in their power with propriety to avert the conflict.

Germany, France, Great Britain and virtually all the other great countries of Europe which may become involved in the struggle have asked the United States to care for their diplomatic interests in those countries with which they may be compelled to sever relations. The United States has accepted every request of this kind.

In this way, the United States government, by acting as the sole channel of communication between the powers, may find an opportunity to assist in the settlement of the conflict by means of diplomacy.

President Wilson has not lost hope that a general conflict can be averted. Some of the official dispatches suggested that the military measures being taken by some of the powers were precautionary.

Postmaster General Burleson announced that thus far there had been no interruption or delay to mail service from the United States. Although German steamer sailings have been cancelled, American mail for Europe has been sent by other lines. Postmasters have been notified not to sell international postal money orders for unusually large sums, because of the fear that the money order system might be used for speculative purposes in foreign exchange.

The administration has under consideration sending army and navy transports to carry American refugees and a special request to congress for an appropriation is expected to be made.

If necessary the Washington government is prepared to send American vessels abroad with gold for the relief of the Americans. Immediately after a conference with the president, Bryan cabled all consulates, legations and embassies to spare no pains in caring for Americans who remained in the war zone and giving every facility to those who wished to leave.

State department officials admitted that the most serious problem confronting them was the plight of Americans abroad. They estimated that at least 100,000 and perhaps 300,000 are scattered throughout Europe.

With the cancellation by several steamship lines of their sailings, many Americans find themselves unable to get passage on the overcrowded boats of American register. American warships would be of little use, as they have hardly any capacity for passengers. Naval officers have suggested that the government could charter immediately some of the big ocean liners of the foreign register to bring Americans home. By special arrangement, officials believe the American government could obtain the use of foreign ships, securing exemption from seizure, if used only for transportation of Americans.

The only American warships in European waters are the little gunboat Scorpion, station ship at Constantinople, and the battleship Maine, at Villafranche with Annapolis midshipment and the officers and crew of the battleship Idaho, taken over at that port by the Greek government. The Maine will leave Villafranche Tuesday for Annapolis.

A special appropriation would be required to charter steamships to bring home Americans. Congress always has acted promptly in such emergencies.

WHEN BOB UNGLAUB PULLED "INSIDE BALL."

Unexpected Happened All Right, but He Was the Surprised Party.

"Doing the unexpected is what wins ball games," say the champions of inside baseball, and immediately they set about to prove that the big games in the history of the game have been those organizations that knew the value of dazzling the other fellows, throwing them into consternation by doing what was least expected of them.

There have been some loyal exponents of the unexpected. One of them was Bob Unglaub. Bob read somewhere that the Tigers were constantly doing the unexpected things and getting away with them because their opponents played in certain grooves.

"Now the way to beat Detroit is to do the unexpected against them, because they think no one but themselves has got nerve enough to pull it off," said Bob.

Washington was playing in Detroit, and that very afternoon Unglaub set about to show how Detroit could be beaten. Along came the ninth inning, Detroit leading by a single run and Washington at bat. The Nationals had two men retired and bases packed when Unglaub came to bat. Killian was pitching. It was a close situation, and Unglaub smiled as he faced "Stoneyard Ed."

Killian shot the ball toward the plate, Unglaub did the unexpected. Did he hit it out? Not much. He bunted, not toward first or third, but exactly toward the box. Killian stepped forward, picked up the ball and tossed it to the catcher for the third out.

WHY STEVE SWITCHED.

The success of Dave Robertson, who reported to McGraw as a pitcher and was turned into an outfielder, recalls the experience of Steve Evans, as told by himself.

"New York bought me as a first baseman," says Steve. "I reported to the team and was coming up the field carrying my big mitt when I saw a fellow practicing at first. It was Fred Tenney. He was scooping them out of the dirt back handed, upside down and backward and working so rapidly it made me dizzy to watch him. I sneaked across the field, threw my mitt under the grand stand and swiped a fielder's glove off the bench. Pretty soon McGraw said, 'Here, you first baseman, get out there and show me something.' 'Who—me?' I said. 'I'm an outfielder.'"

CREE GIVES YANKS A BOOST.

Midget Outfielder's Big Bat Starts Chancemen on Upward Climb.

Birdie Cree's great homecoming seems to have inspired the whole Yankee team, and they have been playing the best ball of the year. It was thought that Cree's batting and fielding streak was just a flash in the pan and would soon peter out, but, contrary to expectations, the diminutive outfielder is still "whacking 'em to where they ain't," and his teammates seem to have caught the idea from him.

Another Oriole who is going well in the comeback role is Bert Daniels, who was a Yankee with Cree. He was purchased by the Reds and has added a great deal of strength to their outfield.

COLLEGE CRICKETERS ABROAD

Thirteen Members of Team to Invade English Soil.

Haverford college will make an American invasion of English sports in cricket. Haverford is famous for its cricket teams and has sent playing combinations to the home of cricket four times in the last eighteen years and has made a fair showing against English school and club players, despite the fact that the American collegian is far more at home on the baseball diamond than the cricket crease. The initial invasion was made in 1896 and was repeated in 1900, 1904 and 1910. As in past years the squad will consist of thirteen members, and seventeen games will be played.

The Rivals

They Were an Old Bachelor and a Young Sailor

By F. A. MITCHEL

When John Gorman died he left his daughter Helen an orphan with no income. Richard Hunter, a bachelor friend of Gorman's, had lent him $3,000, taking a mortgage on his farm for security. Hunter did not ask for the security; Gorman insisted on giving it.

Helen Gorman was but seventeen years old when her father died and knew nothing about his affairs, but Gorman had talked with his friend about her.

"Dick," he said, "Helen at my death will have nothing but the farm, and you hold a mortgage on that for pretty near all it is worth. There's only one thing that would give me any comfort at leaving her, and that's out of the question."

"What is it?" asked Hunter.

"If I could see you and Helen married before I die I wouldn't feel worried about her."

A faint flush came over Hunter's face and a light of pleasure in his eye, but it was transient.

"That can't be," he replied sadly, "on account of the difference in our ages. Helen is but sixteen, and I'm thirty-eight."

"That's not an impassable barrier. But there is another reason why I can't see my little girl provided for as I would like. She's given her heart to a young sailor."

Hunter looked grave at this and asked if the lover would not be able to take care of Helen. Whereupon Gorman told him that the youngster was wild, without ambition and would not be likely even to take care of any one, not even himself.

Gorman died without again referring to the matter. Helen had the good sense to send for Hunter and ask him to take charge of her affairs. There being no funds, he provided for her immediate wants out of his own pocket, concealing the fact from her. After her father's funeral she consulted Hunter as to what she should do. He told her that there was no income for her, but said nothing about the mortgage he held. That was at a time when the fields for self support for women were not open to them as they are now. Helen looked very much troubled.

"It seems to me," said Hunter, "that you had better be married. Isn't there some one you would like to marry?"

"Yes," was the reply, "there is. But he couldn't support a wife just yet. Besides, he is at sea all the while, and I should be left alone."

"It is a pity that I am so much older than you. I would be only too glad to provide for you as my wife."

Helen made no reply to this, and Hunter left her. At the end of every month he gave her $50. She asked him if the property had produced the amount, and he told her that it might produce the total during the year, but the income was not regular. This was saved from being a falsehood only by the word "might."

Since Brackett, the sailor, did not return—and there was nothing to be expected from him when he did—Helen made up her mind to marry Richard Hunter. He was kind to her—she did not know how kind—and she took comfort in having him for a protector. She also felt companionable with him. But she had built up an imaginary idol out of the sailor boy, and it would not crumble. Her decision to give herself to Hunter was therefore made reluctantly and after a copious flow of tears.

Hunter flushed with pleasure when she told him that she would marry him. She had made a resolution to banish young Brackett from her mind and acted a loverlike part toward Hunter so well that he was deceived into thinking that she was quite content, if not possibly happy, in her decision. But he did not hurry her, preferring that she should have plenty of time to be off with the old love before taking on a new one.

As time wore on Helen seemed to grow more and more satisfied with her decision, and at times Hunter thought he could perceive a glimmer of true love in her treatment of him. Indeed, so encouraged was he that he asked her to name the day. She did so quite willingly.

Hunter, though not sheering off so far from the truth as to leave it entirely, convinced her that she was living on her own income and when the wedding day was fixed contrived to make her believe that a windfall had come to her property, which would pay for a trousseau. This was especially pleasing to her, for nature has not yet produced a woman who would be indifferent to this accessory to her marriage. Helen made her purchases and went to work with a will in the construction of a wardrobe.

Suddenly there came a thunderclap from a clear sky. Bob Brackett returned from his voyage with a fine sum of prize money, his share of the salvage of a disabled ship that his vessel had towed into port. He burst in upon Helen, not knowing of the change that had come over her, with the news, finishing with the words, "Now, sweetheart, let us be married at once."

When Hunter heard of his rival's return he went to Helen and said to her:

"I wish you to consider yourself released and to feel perfectly free to marry the man who has returned to you."

"I have given you my promise," was the reply, "and I will keep it."

But Hunter saw that her heart was not in her words. He asked her to tell him truthfully whether he or the sailor possessed it. She tried to evade the question, but Hunter would not be put off. At last he forced her to tell the truth. Her heart had been given to Brackett, and she was unable, if she would, to take it back again.

Hunter at once withdrew in favor of his rival. With an effort he succeeded in concealing from Helen what a crushing blow had fallen upon him in his loss. One matter puzzled him. Now that another was to be her husband the fact that Hunter had been supplying her with the wherewithall to live, that he had deceived her in the matter of the windfall for the trousseau, that he held a mortgage on her farm for all it was worth, must come out. How should he break the fact to her?

Hunter was a very sensitive man. He was much broken by his disappointment, and, though he had been resolute in giving up his bride expectant, he was vacillating in the matter of how to let her know that instead of possessing property she was a pauper. Worry made him ill, and he was confined to his bed.

Helen, who, importuned by the sailor, had accepted her release and agreed to marry Brackett before he sailed again, went on with the preparations for a wedding in which there was to be a change of grooms. She seemed to regret the disappointment she had occasioned Hunter, and Brackett in order that her break with his rival should be complete proposed that a transfer of the care of her property should be made to him. Helen reluctantly consented.

Brackett went to see Hunter, whom he found in bed, and asked for an accounting of Helen's estate. Hunter was too ill to invent any more subterfuges and was obliged to make a clean breast of the matter. Brackett returned to Helen with the information that she had nothing and that all she had received had been given her by Hunter.

"I believe," added Brackett, "that the fellow has contrived to get your property into his own possession."

Helen looked at him like one dazed. Then suddenly, without a word, she went out and strode rapidly in the direction of Hunter's house. Brackett, who did not know what action she would take, watched her till she had passed out of sight, then went into the house to await developments.

Hunter was lying alone in his misery when suddenly the girl he loved hurried into his room, sank on her knees by his bed, put her arms around him and moaned:

"Forgive me."

Renewed vigor ran through the sick man's weakened body. He sat up, took the girl in his arms, and there were caresses such as had never passed between them before.

"Send some one," she said presently, "to tell him to go away."

An hour later Richard Hunter, walking with a tread that had received a powerful stimulus, appeared at Helen Gorman's home. Brackett, who was awaiting Helen's return, saw him coming. Having left Hunter a short time before ill in bed, he wondered. A dread took possession of him. Hunter came up to him and said:

"I am commissioned by Miss Gorman to tell you that she has come to a final decision between you and me and in my favor."

Brackett was thunderstruck. He made no reply for some time, then said:

"If Miss Gorman will say that to me or write it I will accept it as the truth."

Hunter drew a bit of paper from his pocket and handed it to the sailor. He read it, tore it into bits, turned on his heel and left the house.

On the evening that Hunter married Helen the returned sailor spent the prize money he had brought home in an orgy and the next day went on another voyage.

Milady's Mirror

Knowing How to Stand Correctly.

In the correct standing position the chest is held high and thrown out strongly, the abdomen drawn in, the chin in toward the chest, with the body held erect and leaning slightly forward, says a writer in the Woman's Home Companion. The weight of the body is equally distributed upon both feet, either with one foot in advance of the other, as in the military "at rest," or with heels together, as in figure. In the military carriage the body is bent farther forward than in the ordinary walking posture. The cadet gets his erect posture not so much by the physical exercise he takes as by constantly being reminded by his officers that he must hold his body erect.

There are three ways to tell whether you are carrying yourself properly. Stand with the back to a wall which has a smooth surface with the head, shoulders, hips and heels touching the wall. Try to maintain this position at all times. Another way is to lie on the back, note the posture of the head, shoulders, chest and hips, arise and assume the same posture. Still another is to practice balancing a moderately heavy book on the head. Place a soft cushion on the head and the book on top, as this gives the book more surface upon which to rest and is more easily balanced.

Keeping the chest high and the body erect is an excellent exercise and should be cultivated.

The Vinegar Bath.

For the tourist or vacationist who has no bathroom privileges a huge bowl, or, better still, an old fashioned foot bathtub, is essential. With the aid of either of these she can sponge in cool water in the morning and in warm at night.

If her skin is sluggish and she has a generally rundown feeling in hot weather let her try the vinegar bath. For this allow a pint of pure cider or wine vinegar to two gallons of water, which is about what is needed for the average sponge bath. Put this into the basin and stand in the tub. Use a large sponge and saturate it with the water and vinegar. This should be pressed over the spine.

Repeat this several times and then proceed the same way, pressing the sponge to the base of the brain and on the shoulders until the body has been literally showered with vinegar and water.

The body is then patted, not rubbed, dry, and the patient should lie down at once and rest. Two vinegar baths a week are sufficient.

Summer Care of the Eyes.

It behooves the summer girl to rest her eyes as well as her body. She should make a point of sleeping so that the light shines over her head. It pays to invest in a dark green shade through which the light cannot penetrate and force the eyes into harness before she is ready to get up.

Many women have an idea that it helps the eyes to open them the first thing in the morning into an eye cup filled with some mild antiseptic. The best oculists disapprove of this. It washes out the natural secretions of the orb, and if a stimulant is needed for the lids it is much better to insert it with a glass dropper.

One of the most sensible fashions of summer is the fancy for lining hats and parasols with green. This throws a wonderfully restful light on the eyes and relieves them from the merciless glare of midsummer sun. Both pongee and white parasols can be had that show the lining or an edging of green.

Fighting Dust.

The first of summer evils for the skin is dust. In the hot, dry weather dust is blowing about everywhere and soon settles into the pores of the skin. If we allow it to remain there it can well be imagined what havoc it will work.

In the summer we should massage the skin frequently with good skin food. There is nothing so effective for thoroughly cleansing the pores. Do the massage at bedtime, rubbing and tapping the cream into the skin of the face and neck, then bathe face and neck in some rapid water to which about from eight to ten drops of tincture of benzoin have been added. This prevents the skin getting flabby.

Air in Sleeping Car.

No matter how carefully screened the windows of a sleeping car may be, dust and dirt will sift through the netting. So when you travel in a train at night you are forced to breathe in some unwelcome particles of soot and soil.

To keep out these particles carry a roll of cheesecloth or gauze with you and at night wet a square of it and tack it with thumb tacks or pins over the window screen. In the morning this square will be covered with soot and dust and your lungs will be free of just that much less. So will your clothes, which is another important consideration.

For Dull Eyes.

When the eyes are tired and dull, as after motoring, use either an eye lotion bath or one made of water to which a little boracic powder or witch hazel has been added. Keep the eyes open in the water. This both strengthens and brightens them.

FLY FROM WOODS HOLE.

The carrier pigeons of John Minihan of Furnace Brook parkway made a new record Sunday afternoon when they flew from Woods Hole to West Quincy, a distance of 7 miles in two hours. The birds were released by Arthur Roberts, a conductor on the N. Y., N. H., & H. R. R. promptly at 12 o'clock.

About 1.55 the birds were seen coming from the direction of Braintree and a few minutes later all three alighted in the yard of their owner in good condition.

Two of the pigeons are babies and are piloted on their flights by an older bird that made all kinds of records in distance events last summer.

WALNUTS WIN.

The Walnut A. C. took its sixth straight game Saturday by defeating the Sycamore A. C. of South Boston, 4 to 0. Both pitchers twirled fine ball until a batting rally by the Walnuts put Sullivan out of the running in the eighth innings. O'Neil fanned 15 and allowed three hits. The score by innings:

LA TENA'S CIRCUS HERE

Hundreds Out to See the Parade in City Square

The large crowd of women and children who gathered in and about City Square this morning to see the circus parade were fortunate enough to see two different parades. The first was an Italian society from Boston which is holding its annual picnic at New Downer Landing. The society arrived from Boston on a train about 10 o'clock and accompanied by a band of music marched through the Square and down Washington street to Quincy Point. This procession was headed by a representative of Uncle Sam carrying the American flag. Several other men in costume were in the front line of the parade. Following the band was a hundred or more men, women and children.

La Tena's circus parade passed through City Square shortly before 11 o'clock and while not as long as some circus parades what there was of it was exceptionally good. There were two bands in line in addition to the steam calliope. The procession was headed by a lady rider who announced the approach of the parade by bugle calls. There were a large number of wild animal cages most of which had their sides up so that the animals might be seen.

The horses were well groomed and well fed good looking animals. Announcements on the wagons and elephants told that the admission was but 25 cents.

POLICE VACATIONS.

Five members of the Quincy police started their two weeks vacation today. The list includes Sergt. John T. Larkin and patrolmen Dineen, Black, Curtin and Doran. Officer Halloran will be in charge of the desk from midnight and Special Officer Fallon will take his place as wagonman. Most of the men will enjoy their annual outing in easy stages. Sergt. Larkin is headed for western Massachusetts.

Tear a piece slightly larger than the portion to be covered, to match, but torn with rough edges and without any definite shape. Then paste over and the patch will not be noticeable.

Doubt.

Barker—"Congratulate me, old man! My best girl has just accepted me over the telephone!" Candidus—"Are you sure she understood what you were saying?"—Judge.

Advertisers Ask Only A Fair Trial

By HOLLAND.

ADVERTISERS do not attempt to make you agree to buy their goods for the rest of your life. They only want you to give their wares a trial, to subject them to actual test by actual use, and then be guided by experience.

Could anything prove more clearly that the advertiser has supreme confidence in his product, that he is absolutely certain that it will please you, that it will be all he says it is?

It would indeed be foolish to spend money to induce you to buy an article that would prove unsatisfactory and would result in your telling friends and neighbors of your experience. Advertisers spend millions making their trademarks known, and in order to make their trademarks valuable they must stand for a certain standard of worth. Having made their trademarks known, manufacturers exert every effort to keep the goods up to the expected high grade.

An open amateur golf meeting will be held this week under the auspices of the Wollaston Golf club, Wednesday being the first day. There should be 150 starters.

The prediction of exceptionally hot weather during the month of August seems likely to materialize . The thermometer on all three days at noon ran up into the eighties, this noon it registering 82 degrees.

Richard E. DeNormandie of Wollaston represents the Quincy High school at the military encampment at Burlington, Vt., where college men are being trained to the duties of volunteer officers in time of war. In all 135 institutions are represented, a total of 450 men.

"Self-discovery" was the subject of the Sunday evening sermon at the Hall Place M. E. church, the text being taken from St. Luke 15-17, "And when he came to himself." One of the crying needs of today the pastor said, is that the young men and women of today may find themselves and come to their senses. The average young person today doesn't consider life hardly worth thinking about.

TAX RECEIPTS ARE LOWER

Water Receipts More Than in 1913 But Less Than 1912

Tax receipts

The August 1 report of City Auditor Fairbanks shows that the tax receipts of 1914 are $47,570.01 less than during the same months of 1913, but show a gain of $49,705.35 over 1912.

The water receipts are $5,846.57 in excess of the same months in 1913, but $2,969.44 less than in 1912.

The receipts from sewer extension are less, but from house connections with sewer they are larger. The August 1 figures are:

WATER
1914 to Aug. 1	$73,568.83
1913 to Aug. 1	67,722.26
1912 to Aug 1	76,538.27
TAXES
1914 to Aug. 1	$261,920.01
1913 to Aug. 1	309,490.02
1912 to Aug. 1	212,214.66
SEWER EXTENSIONS.
1914 to Aug. 1	$11,579.12
1913 to Aug. 1	11,846.94
1912 to Aug. 1	10,287.44
SEWER CONNECTIONS.
1914 to Aug. 1	$4,723.42
1913 to Aug. 1	3,784.13
1912 to Aug. 1	3,868.17

All the loans authorized this year have not been floated, so that there is an apparent reduction of $115,395.00 in the debt of the city this year.

On account of city debt, bonds to the amount of $104,095.00 have been paid, and new bonds to the amount of $23,500.00 issued, leaving the city debt at $521,850.00.

On account of water debt, $51,500.00 has been paid, and $26,000 issued; balance $696,500.00.

On account of sewer debt, $27,000. has been paid, and $25,000.00 issued; balance $632,500.00.

The street improvement debt has been reduced $7,300.00 to $63,800.00, while other debts are unchanged. The net debt is given as $2,069,650.00.

Houghs Neck school	$23,000
Paving Penn street	7,700
New streets accepted	40,700
Hancock street	35,500
	$106,900

When added to $2,069,650.00 the bonded debt will be $2,176,550.00, a reduction of only $8,495 this year.

THE SEAT OF TROUBLE.

(Salem News.)

The News has directed attention to certain phases of tax rates, as they are announced by various assessors. Another matter is pardonably to be considered in connection with the subject. This centers in the monotonous explanation that increase after increase in the tax rate has been caused by the growth of appropriations—not alone those of the municipality, but of the county and the state. This explantation, reduced to plain terms, is this: The government—local, county and state—are spending altogether too much money.

For one thing, government is costing too much. Sinecures are increasing at too rapid a rate. Here and there, attempts are made to save at the spigot, while waste results at the bunghole. Taxes are growing because public extravagance is growing.

One or two things is very plain: Either the brakes must be applied, in the application of economy in the concrete, where it is too generally considered in the abstract, or the "high cost of living" burdens will weigh more heavily upon the wage-earning population. At the rate at which we are going in Massachusetts, with civil pension, top-heavy departments, superfluous employes, and the like, the outlook is anything but reassuring.

NEW ALLEYS OPEN.

The new Wardwell bowling alleys in the Kincaide block in Kincaide square were thrown open for inspection at one o'clock today, and many fans were on hand to extend their congratulations to Capt. George A. Wardwell, lessee.

The official opening will take place at eight o'clock tonight when Paul Poehler, champion candle pin bowler and Archie Walsh, greater Boston champion, toe the mark for a special ten string exhibition match.

Walsh is speeding from the West to meet his former partner and is in prime condition. A new record may be made during the contest.

The latest fan perfected has been installed to ventilate the alleys. It is four feet in diameter and has an extensive draught capacity, and steel lockers for bowlers have been installed.

LASLEY HERE WITH BI CART

M. E. A. Lasley, and his bi-cart, a two wheel rubber tired gig, attached to a bicycle, walked into City Square today with nearly one hundred people trailing behind him. Mr. Lasley has traveled from San Francisco to Boston and is on his way to Portland, via Lynn. He made an official call on Acting Mayor Emery L. Crane and then left to finish his journey to Boston.

Mr. Lasley is making the trip to earn a wager posted by western people. He has pushed his bi-cart nearly 8000 miles and has been run over several times. In Irvington, N. Y. he was knocked down by an auto, and today is his 40th out of a hospital since then.

Lasley has had a varied experience. He sells booklets and does carpenter work for money, and to top the list he was captured by a woman but escaped marriage.

He sleeps in the open, in an oil-skin bag, and last night he camped somewhere in Braintree, he didn't know exactly, but he said the people were "darn curious" and kept him up until 10.30 with their darn fool questions.

Lasley got to City square a short time before the circus parade went through and many thought from his queer costume that he was an advanced guard. He dispelled their illusions however and related a few experiences. He is about 60 years of age and was born in Buckeye, Ohio.

FLAG PRESENTED DR. MARSTIN

Dr. C. M. Marstin, Commander of Paul Revere Post 88, G. A. R., was pleasant surprised Saturday evening when a party of nearly one hundred comprising comrades of Paul Revere Post, Col. Abner B. Packard Camp, S. of V., Paul Revere Woman's Relief Corps, Rebecca Wiswell tent, Daughters of Veterans, and the Ladies Auxiliary, tendered him a surprise party. It was a genuine surprise and for a few minutes the genial doctor was non-plussed. The quickly recovered himself however and extended to them a most royal welcome.

During the evening there was vocal and instrumental music, and refreshments were served, and a general good time enjoyed by all. One of the features of the evening came when Commander Marstin was presented with a handsome old glory.

Commander Pierson of the Norfolk County G. A. R. association made the presentation speech for the Grand Army, Frank Chubbuck for the Sons of Veterans, Mrs. Savage for the Woman's Relief Corps and Ladies Auxiliary, and Mrs. Ela for the Daughters of Veterans. These briefly recited how highly the commander was respected by the patriotic organizations of the city and how much they appreciated all he had done for them.

In accepting the gift Dr. Marstin told how highly he appreciated the gift, and that he would always have his colors where they could be seen.

DISTRICT COURT.

There was the usual Monday rush of business at the district court this morning, with Judge Avery presiding The cases disposed of were as follows:

John C. Grant, Leo Conti, Louis Santanato, Joseph Briantilino, Edward D. Moore were fined $15 each for drunkenness at Quincy.

Henry Porter was sentenced to two months in the house of correction for neglecting to support his family at Quincy.

Edward P. Breen of Weymouth was fined $15 for drunkenness and Patrick Donahue of Braintree was fined $15 for the same offence.

SLANG IS HARDY.

Some Supposedly Modern Phrases Are Really Centuries Old.

Much of the current slang supposed to be modern is not new. For instance, "kid" (child) goes back as far at least as Massinger's "Old Law" (1599).

"I am old, you say. Yes; parlous old, kids, and you mark me well." Kidnap (to nab a kid) was certainly not a new word to De Foe or Bunyan.

"To skip out" is accounted slang, but in Wycliff's translation of the Bible we read, "Whanne barnabas and poul herden this, thei skipten out."

In "Ralph Roister Doister," the first English comedy, about the middle of the sixteenth century, an actor says, "Nay dame, I will tire thee out of my house," which certainly has a modern ring.

Goldsmith in "The Good Natured Man" (1768) says, "If the man comes from the Cornish borough you must do him," and this will require no gloss for the modern reader.

"Not in it" is found in Shakespeare's "Winter's Tale." "They have a dance which the wenches say is a gallimaufry of gambols because they are not in it."

"Cut it out" goes back as far at least as Sheridan's "Critic" (1779), "The performers have cut it out."

The optimistic brakeman who had both legs cut off by a train and who, when a bystander tried to console him by saying he ought to be thankful he wasn't killed outright, replied, "I'm not kicking," was only using a Biblical expression. "Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice?"—Edward A. Allen in Forum.

SAWING GRANITE ROCKS.

Steel Wires and Sand and Water Are the Apparatus Used.

Stone is still sawed by hand, even in great cities, where the latest appliances of the mechanical art are to be found. Yet the mechanical sawing of rock is at least sixteen centuries old and in recent years has reached a stage of perfection.

The idea of using a metal cord and a mixture of sand and water for sawing stone was patented by Eugene Chevallier in France in 1854. His apparatus, with scarcely any change, was used not long ago in cutting a trench through the Pont Neuf, in Paris.

The principle upon which the mechanical stone saw works is described by Victor Raynouard in La Science et la Vie as follows:

An endless rope composed of three steel wires twisted together is set in movement and draws with it a grinding granular substance, pressing this hard upon the stone that is to be sawed. The mordant substance is grit mixed with water. The stream of water renders the movement easy and prevents the heating of the cable. The ends of the cable are joined by splicing.

The hardest rocks, such as porphyry, are now sawed more easily than the softer, such as marble, but not so rapidly. Marble is sawed at the rate of nearly nine inches an hour, granite at from six to seven inches an hour.

Can't Be Cut Off With a Shilling.

French parents (or, at all events, those with more than 2 shillings to dispose of by will) are precluded from the gratification of cutting a mutinous child off with a shilling. A reserve is established by law which no testator can bequeath away from his offspring. A Frenchman with one child can dispose of half his property according to his pleasure; the other half must inevitably pass to the child. Those with two children can dispose of only one-third of their property, those with three children of one-fourth, and so on according to the size of the family. Stern parents occasionally seek to evade the law by subterfuge, but the disposal of property in France is hedged round with so many restrictions that family black sheep are rarely mulcted of their legal inheritances.—London Mail.

Victor Hugo.

Victor Hugo was born in Besancon, France, in 1802. He was the son of a colonel in the French army and received a classical education. After the revolution of 1830 his plays "Marion de Lorme" and "The King Amuses Himself" were performed at the Theatre Francais. He was created by Louis Philippe a peer of France, with the title of viscount, but he arose above this honor in being the author of "Les Miserables." He opposed Napoleon III. and was banished from France, but returned on the fall of the empire. He died in Paris in 1885 and was buried in the Pantheon.

She Liked Whist.

The modern whist fiend seems colorless beside that enthusiastic exponent of the game, Sarah Battle, whom Charles Lamb describes in his "Essays of Elia." He says she was "none of your lukewarm gamesters, your half and half players." To use her own language, all she desired was "a clear fire, a clean hearth and the rigor of the game."

A Slow Sleeper.

The servant girl in a suburban family was taken to task for oversleeping herself.

"Well, ma'am," she said, "I sleep very slow, and so it takes me a long while to get a good night's rest."—Boston Transcript.

A Slight Mistake.

"The patient who was so badly cut on the head is mending."

"I thought it was the doctor who was mending. I saw him sewing the patient up."—Baltimore American.

LARGE PARTY ON GRANITE OUTING

Big Dinner and Sports at Bass Point

Over 150 participated on Saturday in the Summer outing of the Quincy Granite Manufacturers to Bass Point, representing nearly every granite firm of the city. Weather conditions were favorable, the sail a delightful one, the attractions of Bass Point numerous, and the fish dinner came up to all expectations, so that it was one of the most successful outings ever held by the association.

City Clerk Crane, the acting Mayor of Quincy, was the guest of honor, and carried off the same with dignity. Efforts to get him to umpire the ball game or participate in a three-legged race were politely declined, but he was on deck for the grand feed, sitting at the left of President Diack. Other guests were Seward W. Jones, the president of the National Association, and Robert D. Smith the secretary, also representatives of the local press.

The leading sport of the day was the ball game between South and West Quincy, the line-up being as follows:

SO. QUINCY.	W. QUINCY.
Spargo (Prout) p,	p, E. Collins
Ballou, c	c, R. Craig
B. Miller, 1	1, Mavers
Bizzozero, 2	2, Barnicoat
Smoots, 3	3, Marshall
Le Clair, ss	ss, Emery
J. Walker, lf	lf, McIntosh
Adrian, cf	cf, Cole
D. Prout (Spargo,) rf	rf, F. Craig

President Diack officiated as umpire and no one dared to dispute his prompt decisions. The official scorer was Secretary Dunphy who decided the game a tie at the end of the fifth inning, score 6 to 6. Two double plays were features of the game.

While the excursionists did justice to the fish dinner at the Bass Point house, four cabaret artists enlivened the occasion, and made several members the butt of their songs. The menu included: clam chowder, steamed clams, fried cod with potato chips, tomato and cucumber salad, fried perch and lyonaisse potatoes, lobster in shell, broilers on toast, ice cream and cake, coffee. Speechmaking was strictly tabooed.

A list of sports followed the dinner on the lawn in front of the hotel. The hundred yard dash for fat men was won by David McIntosh, and again in the three-legged race Mr. McIntosh and W. Marshall won. The peanut races were run in heats and the result is in doubt. Souvenirs of fakirs row were awarded as prizes.

After the sports the members witnessed the open race of the Lynn Yacht club, and enjoyed the other attractions of the resort. There were several bowling matches, some put on the roller skates, but none could be induced to take a swim, although it was Saturday.

The return home was at the pleasure of the individual, but the larger number came on the 6 o'clock steamer reaching Boston at 7 o'clock. It is safe to say Bass Point will be selected for the outing next year.

AUTO IN COLLISION.

Although he has run an automobile for over 200,000 miles, Dr. F. E. Jones had his first accident this noon in City Square, and he was hardly to blame for that. Dr. Jones was going down Hancock street toward his home when a car of John Brown of 4 Adelaide terrace, Jamaica Plain, containing two passengers, beside the driver, came up Hancock street. The accident happened near the fountain and it is reported that the Brown automobile crowded Dr. Jones somewhat in trying to pass with the result that the machines side-swiped.

Dr. Jones had an axle sprung and his mud guards bent somewhat. The car of Mr. Brown also had its mud guards bent. None of the occupants were injured.

CABLE FROM MRS. J. L. WHITON

Glad to Leave Paris for England and Is Now Safe at London

News from Other Quincy People in European Countries

President Joseph L. Whiton of the City Council received a cablegram from his mother Monday night announcing the safe arrival of her party in London. Mrs. Whiton's party arrived in Paris Saturday night and found everything in a turmoil, so much so that they immediately crossed the channel into England where they now are. As soon as possible they will sail for home, but as all steamship lines are delayed and booked to their full capacity for months it is hard telling just when they can sail.

Much relief is felt by President Whiton at the receipt of the telegram. It was his intention if word was not received from his mother today to telegraph Congressman Gilmore and request him to interest the State department, to make inquiries through foreign consuls for the party.

It was announced Monday night that Miss Corine LaBrecque of Adams Shore was due to arrive in Paris today.

Nothing has been heard from any of the Quincy people who are in Europe since war was declared and their relatives are anxious.

Another party which is due to arrive, if they have not already arrived in Europe is Mrs. Musgrave, wife of Thomas A. L. Musgrave of the Board of Health. Mrs. Musgrave sailed from Boston a week ago and nothing has been heard from her since sailing.

More

Miss Bessie Roberts, a teacher at the Adams school, is in Wales, and is booked to sail for home Aug. 25. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John G. Roberts.

Miss Jane Fortier of Wollaston Park was last reported in Italy, and expected to sail for home Aug. 10.

Herbert P. Arnold, son of Mrs. Annie Curtis Arnold of Elm street, is a professor in the school for boys at Munich, Germany, and his mother is anxious for him.

Mrs. Bianchi, the wife of Lieut. Commander Manuel Bianchi of the Argentine commission, who was booked to sail for Scotland, has cancelled her passage.

Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Duggan of Atlantic, who are abroad, were to confine their travels mostly to Ireland.

Deputy Sheriff Field received a postal card this morning from his daughter, Mrs. Dewson, who is travelling in Switzerland. The card made no mention of war trouble. Mrs. Frank Floyd a former Quincy lady is also travelling with her.

Mrs. V. Ryswood of Glencoe place and Miss Mabel Phillips of West Quincy are among the Quincy people in Europe at the present time. The last heard from them was last week when they were in London. It is supposed that they are still there unless they were fortunate enough to get accommodations on one of the homeward bound steamships.

SENATOR WEEKS.

Some of the Quincy built warships are to be used to bring home American tourists now marooned abroad by the war, if Senator Weeks' bill for using United States warships as mail carriers between American and South American ports passed by the Senate on Tuesday goes quickly through the House.

The vessels to be placed in the European service will carry freight and passengers as well as mails, and it is expected that they will transport American cotton and tobacco to foreign markets.

Secretary Daniels reported the following vessels available for the service:

St. Louis, Charlestown, Milwaukee, Columbia, Minneapolis, Salem, Chester, Buffalo, Rainbow, Ancon, Cristobal, Hector, Mars, Vulcan, Cyclops and Neptune (or two equally good) and the Nanshan. Five of these are fast Cruisers, two are fast scout cruisers, two are transports and two are employed by the Panama Railroad Company.

The Buffalo, Rainbow, Ancon and Cristobal are suitable for carrying a limited number of passengers and any kind of freight; Buffalo, 20 first class passengers and 4000 tons of freight; Rainbow, 25 passengers and 2500 to 3000 tons of freight; Ancon an Cristobal, each 74 first-class and 32 steerage passengers and between 10,000 and 11,000 tons of freight.

The Naval colliers are not suitable for carrying any passengers, but are well adapted to a freight service; the first three carrying 6500 to 10,000 tons each; the two of the Cyclops ciass 10,000 to 12,500 tons of freight and 2960 tons of fuel oil in bulk each, and the Nanshan about 3000 tons.

Senator Weeks declined to accept an amendment from Senator John Sharp Williams of Mississippi, to provide that the proposed use of such vessels should cease at the close of the European war, but agreed to a stipulation that the vessels might make trips to other than South American ports, as provided in his original measure.

Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia said the Government owned the duty to its citizens to see that the transportation of agricultural and manufacturing products was not interrupted by the demoralization of foreign shipping owing to the war.

PROGESSIVE CANDIDATE.

In case Col. Henry L. Kincaide still refuses to become the Progressive candidate for Congressman in the 14th district, it is more than probable that Senator Charles E. Burbank of East Bridgewater, who represents the First Plymouth district, may be the candidate. Senator Burbank feels certain that he would be re-elected to the Senate, and does not like to give up what seems to be an assured election to take what at best is only a chance.

FASTEST IN NEW ENGLAND

New Wardwell Alleys Opened--- Poehler Wins

The new Wardwell alleys in Kincaide square were officially opened Monday at 1.30 P M. and the first ball was sent down the ways by Harry Houghton. M. Perry made the first strike and Joseph A. Keating the first spare. Alfred J. LaCroix was the first man to get a string over the century mark, his single being 103.

The feature of the evening was the special 10-string match between Paul Poehler, champion candle pin bowler, and Dick Taylor, a member of the Chauncey team of the Boston City league. Archie Walsh was to have rolled but did not reach Boston from the west where he has been on a bowling tour.

Poehler was the victor by a margin of 104 pins, the totals being 1073 to 969. His high single during the exhibition was 136 and if his breaks had been better he would have reached 150. During the string he made two 19, one 17, and one 15 spare and he bought up with a spare on a strike. He got nine in the other five boxes.

Only two strings were less than 100, his first and fourth. In several strings the breaks favored him, but when he had the opportunity of piling up a splendid total they shook his alley and he was obliged to work for every pin while making his high single.

Taylor is one of Boston's best bowlers, but was somewhat off color. He passed 100 in three strings and two went below 90. His average was shy 97, but he had hard luck in most of the strings.

Poehler pronounced the alleys the fastest in New England, and he said that even with the newness not worked out they are better than most of the regulation lengths. He stated that beyond any question Quincy's fame as a bowling centre would attain heights that up to the opening of the alleys had not even been dreamed of.

Capt. George E. Wardwell, lessee of the alleys, was present most of the evening, and was the recipient of all kinds of best wishes. Shortly before 8 o'clock a huge standing piece was received from J. Magann & Co of Boston, manufacturers of the alleys.

With the closing of the best match the city ever had, the fans who numbered upwards of 250 claimed the alleys, and when midnight tolled a record number of strings had been rolled in that time. The score by strings:

Poehler	90, 100, 119, 88, 106
	108, 100, 104, 136, 122	1073
Taylor	95, 91, 88, 114, 86
	103, 96, 91, 108, 97	969

NO RESTRICTION ON BATHING

The report that the Board of Health has issued a notice prohibiting bathing on Wollaston beach, on account of sickness which it is alleged was due to sewage matter brought in by the tide, is denied at the office of the Board of Health. It was said at the office this morning that no such notice had been issued.

BREAKS AT GRANITE YARDS

Two Arrested at Braintree As Suspicious Parties

Three breaks in granite yards were reported to the police this morning as having taken place during the night. The places entered were the office of the Forbes Craig Granite Co., the office of Andrew McIntosh, and that of John C. Murray. As far as known but little if anything was taken, other than at the office of Forbes Craig although some pencils might have been taken from the office of Andrew McIntosh.

At the office of Forbes Craig the parties secured $16 in bills and about sixteen cents in coppers. They also took a peculiar shaped pencil.

The two men who are thought to have made the breaks were arrested in Braintree about 2 o'clock this morning by Officer Gallivan. Officer Gallivan had just returned to his beat from locking up a young man whom he had found in a store on Railroad street, when he saw these two fellows acting suspiciously, and as they could not give any good account of themselves he locked them up on general principles thinking that in the morning some one would be making inquiries about them. And sure enough they did.

Of the money taken from Forbes Craig, part of it included a ten, five and one dollar bill, and money of this denomination was found on one of the young men. There was also found sixteen cents in coppers and a pencil of a peculiar make which Mr. Craig this morning recognized as his. They also had some pencils which may have been taken from the office of Mr. McIntosh.

Chief Burrell immediately swore out warrants against them for breaking and entering and larceny, and they were arraigned in court. One of the young men proved to be Frederick Nutting who was well known to the Quincy police, and against whom there is a court record. The second man gave his name as Fred Lane who said that he arrived from New York at 4 o'clock Monday afternoon.

REUNION OF THE OLD FOURTH

Half Dozen or More Survivors of Quincy Company

The annual reunion of the 4th Massachusetts Veterans association will be held at the Hotel Nantasket, Thursday. Co. H of the 4th was recruited in Quincy and went to the front with Franklin Curtis as captain. Many of the old Co. H have been mustered out and are now with the great army above.

Among those now living, aside from its Captain, Franklin Curtis are Robert Josselyn, Joseph A. Lapham, Wyman B. Nightingale, Edward W. H. Nutting, Charles E. Pierce, Albert Keating, who was musician, and possibly others who have removed from Quincy and reside elsewhere.

Quincy did not get much of the rain which fell Monday night. There was a fine rain during the early evening which cut the fog which was developing. This morning the ground gave no evidence of a rain fall.

LAUNCHING OF S. S. PACIFIC

Presentation By President Powell to Mrs. Anne Lindsey Blake, the Sponsor

Guests Were Representatives of Emery Steamship Co.

The steel steamship Pacific, a sister ship of the Atlantic, built at the Fore river shipyard for the Panama canal trade of the Emery Steamship Co., of Boston, was given her maiden dip this morning. It was 9.53 seven minutes ahead of scheduled time, when Anne Lindsey Blake, wife of J. A. Lowell Blake, a Boston banker, smashed a bottle of champagne against her bow and formally christened the second contribution of Boston in two months time to the canal trade.

The ceremonies were private and were witnessed by about 100 guests of the owners. They came to Quincy in an extra car on the 8.40 train and were taken to the shipyard in special cars. Most of these people did not stand on the launching platform but were on the waters edge when the steel hull glided into her element.

The ship was bedecked from bow to stern with flags of the International signal code and flying from the bridge was the blue and white banner of the Fore River corporation.

The day was lowery and threatened rain but for all that hundreds lined the bank on the other side of the river and joined their cheers with the tooting whistles as the Pacific struck the waters of Fore river. Nothing occured to mar the program and the usual clouds of smoke caused by the friction burning off the tallow on the ways was visible only at the bow as she settled.

All preparations for the launching had been made when the guests arrived and 15 minutes after the last of the shoring was knocked from under the hull the sole piece was severed and Mrs. Blake shattered the pint bottle of Mums champagne against the bow.

The bottle was encased in a golden mesh and decorated with red, white and blue ribbon, and after the launching the fragments were placed in a teakwood box and presented to the sponsor.

There were no festivities following the launching at the shipyard, but at noon today the owners entertained several hundred guests at a dinner at the Copley Plaza hotel in Boston.

Part of the post prandial exercises was the presentation to Mrs. Blake by President Powell of a gold bracelet, set with diamonds, engraved "Presented by Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation to Anne Lindsey Blake, sponsor, S. S. Pacific, Aug. 4, 1914, Quincy." While the guests were participating in the celebration, the ship was being taken to the fitting out dock at the shipyard, where she will be made ready for her trials that take place within six weeks.

Captain "Joe" Kemp of the Boston Towboat Co., was in command of the ship when she was launched. When invited to take charge he was in New Hampshire recovering from a partial sunstroke which resulted from the excessive heat on July 11 when the U. S. S. Nevada was launched. He expects to return tomorrow.

AT JAMESTOWN ANNIVERSARY.

Rev. A. P. Hanson wife and son Alfred have just returned from Jamestown, N. Y., where they attended the 30th anniversary of the Swedish Baptist church. It was during Mr. Hanson's pastorate that the handsome church was built, and they were very welcome guests. Both took part in the anniversary exercises. Alfred made the trip both ways on a motor cycle a three days' trip each way, covering a total of 1200 miles without mishap.

It used to be said of many men that they hide behind their wives' petticoats. By external evidence, this place of concealment seems no longer to exist.

Do you suppose that the policewomen employed by Chicago and other cities ever stop on their beats to look in at the millinery windows?

As the cotton mills have been rather quiet of late, the output of all wool goods has fallen off.

The man with a family of children may have ordered a case of sneakers when vacation began, but the chances are that he is out of sizes before this.

To many people, the most enjoyable thing about returning from a vacation is that you don't have to go again until next year.

The consumer cannot expect to get an article for a reasonable price, until the trust controlling it is split up by the court, half in some one's left hand pocket, and half in the right.

The girls are glad to camp out nowadays if the boys will do the cooking.

Many towns are giving historical pageants this summer. These are about the same as old fashioned tableaux, except that the admission is a dollar instead of 25 cents.

The President goes up to the Capitol every month or two to see what Congress is up to, but he finds it pays to meet the newspaper reporters twice a week.

SAFETY IN THE STREETS.

In spite of all that is said about careful driving of automobiles, every few days one reads of children, and sometimes older people, who are run over in the streets. In large cities, heavy truck wagons are also a cause of much fatal injury.

Various agencies are at work to compel drivers to maintain due vigilance. But laws and regulations are difficult to enforce. There are all kinds of human types at the steering wheel. Officers of the law do not always want to see too much.

The street is not the safe place it used to be. Before motors became numerous, the public highway was a kind of common playground. Drivers of horses waited tolerantly while the kidlets reluctantly suspended their ball game.

The hoofs of an approaching horse gave warning long before a carriage was hear. Now the motor slips up from behind with swift and deadly speed. While you are looking to the right, the machine has dodged out from some side street on the left.

Every child ought to be carefully warned of the dangers of the street. On streets where there is any considerable traffic, he should never cross without looking both ways.

Many accidents could be saved if people were not in such a hurry. Some persons seem to dislike to show reasonable caution. It takes but a few seconds for a motor to pass, while a broken leg would mean a month on your back.

The manner in which some motorists expect every one to make way for them is irritating. Still human nature is as it is. One must adapt oneself to modern conditions.

If the pedestrian gets too wrathy over the arrogance of his automobiling friends, he may very reasonably reflect that it is much easier for him to stop than it is to bring a heavy machine to a standstill. That, however, does not excuse the motorist, who should never run at a speed which he can not check in time to prevent injury.

ALL HINGES ON POSITION OF ENGLAND

She Holds Key to the Entire European Situation

THE VIOLATION OF BELGIAN NEUTRALITY

Grey Announces That Action of Germany Is a Serious Matter—Army and Navy Prepared to Fight If Germans Attempt to Bombard French Ports—Kaiser Striving to Win International Public Indorsement—Reported to Feel He May Have Acted Too Hastily After Falling Into Austrian Trap—Unconfirmed Rumors From Various Sources

London, Aug. 4.—Germany stamping her legions forward through the duchy of Luxemburg toward the French frontier, France hurling thousands of her troops to resist the invaders, Belgium's neutrality becoming the firebrand which may set all Europe a-war, and unconfirmed rumors of engagements in air, on land and sea between the warring powers of Europe, is the gist of the war news which filters through the closely guarded cable and telegraph wires from Europe.

All hinges on the position England will assume. Although Italy, one member of the triple entente, has proclaimed her neutrality, England seems to be on the brink of proclaiming war. She has mobilized her army and navy and awaits events.

All day the British cabinet was in frequent sessions. Sir Edward Grey, the foreign minister, was the central and most important figure in the house of commons.

Significant Utterances

In diplomatic language he announced that the violation of Belgium neutrality by Germany was a serious matter. He intimated that should Germany persist in advancing toward Paris or threaten the north coast of France, England would rush to the assistance of her ally in the triple entente.

Among the unconfirmed rumors characteristic of such a time of war and rumors of war was one that Edmund Garros, the French aviator, had rammed with his aeroplane a German dirigible. The death of Garros and the destruction of the dirigible with the loss of twenty-five German lives was a part of the story.

Another rumor was that a lone German warship with nothing heavier than four-inch guns had bombarded and set fire to the Russian port of Libau on the Baltic sea.

Stockholm sent out a dispatch that the German and Russian fleets had met off the Aland islands and that the Russians had been defeated. The Russian vessels, according to this dispatch, had taken refuge in the Gulf of Finland.

Russian Towns Taken

According to a Berlin dispatch the German border troops from Lublinitz, Silesia, after a skirmish with Russian troops, had taken possession of Czenstochowa, Russian Poland. Other towns, Bendzig and Kalisch, Russian Poland, are also reported as occupied by German troops.

Paris announced officially that a German force had invaded France near Cissey.

The Soir, a newspaper published in Brussels, says that a second note has been received from Germany in reply to Belgium's note that she would not consider the passage of German troops through the duchy of Luxemburg, contiguous territory, the act of a friendly power. Negotiations between Germany and Belgium are still in progress.

But England, with her immense naval power, her alliance with Russia and France, and the almost limitless resources which her active alliance with these two powers would assemble, holds the key to the entire situation.

Kaiser Weakening?

The kaiser, said in some circles to hae been imposed upon by Austria during his absence with the German fleet and arriving in Potsdam with all the traps set by Austria for a war which would necessarily embroil Germany, is now reported to feel that he may have acted a little too hastily, and is striving through diplomatic channels to win the weight of international public opinion to Germany's position.

Great Britain is, according to the latest news, still the lion in the European zoo. She is not belligerent power. She is by no means neutral.

Locally, it is considered that her call to reservists, her keeping her transatlantic liners in American ports, her sending steamers to rescue her fishing fleet in the North sea, is but the crouching of the lion before the spring.

Assurance Given France

The British government has given France assurance that the British fleet will not permit the German fleet to attack the French coast. It has not yet pledged itself to contribute an army to the continental war.

COUNT VON MOLTKE

He Is Chief of Staff of the German Army

The British government regards with the deepest distrust Germany's violation of Belgium's neutrality, but makes no declaration as to whether it considers that measure provocation for war.

This pronouncement of government policy, the result of two days' almost continuous deliberation, was made to the house of commons by Sir Edward Grey, secretary of state for foreign affairs. Therefore, the trying hour of suspense for the British to hold aloof from the conflict and to bring public opinion to Germany's side.

The counsellor of the German embassy issued a strong appeal for the neutrality of Great Britain, asserting that Germany would agree to keep her fleet from attacking the northern and western coasts of France if England would pledge neutrality, and argued that England would gain more in the end by standing outside the European war and using her influence as mediator when the moment was ripe.

"Engagement Too Narrow"

Referring to this suggestion, the British foreign secretary said: "I have only heard that shortly before I came to the house." He raised his voice and rapped the table before him sharply, declaring: "But this is far too narrow an engagement."

Grey dispelled the shadows of doubt, which flickered over the triple entente in the minds of many Liberals, by exposing some milestones in the history of the rapproachement, revealing it as essentially a national one with France, without definite obligations.

Finally, on one tremendously vital question—a question upon the answer of which the British empire and the whole world are hanging—whether the government considers that Germany's policy compels Great Britain to war, the foreign secretary left an impression of doubt. That doubt may reflect the mind of a cabinet not wholly unanimous, and the interpretation drawn by many is that Grey's speech to Germany was a hint that if she will keep her soldiers off Belgian soil and her battleships away from the coast of France, that will be the price of Great Britain's armed neutrality.

INVASION OF RUSSIA

Town Occupied by German Battalion With Machine Gun Company

A Berlin dispatch says the invasion of Russia by the German troops began when the First battalion of infantry, with a machine gun company, occupied Kalisch in Russian Poland.

Germans made their first capture of war prisoners near Hohenzala. Fifty Cossacks were surprised and overwhelmed by a detachment of German frontier guards. The force of which they were the outpost were driven back near Allenstein, a town of East Prussia, situated on the river Alle.

A strong Russian column of infantry and artillery crossed the German frontier at Schwidden. The commander threw out skirmishers, established outposts and was apparently relying on strong support from across the Russian line.

Russian patrols encroaching on German territory were forced back into the czar's territory at Eichranniel and Tiloslav by German frontier guards. The Germans attacked the Russian detachment and there was a brief skirmish.

GERMAN DIRIGIBLE RAMMED

French Are Victors n First Aeroplane Battle In History

A dispatch to the London Standard says the first air battle in the history of the world was fought at Longwy. In this fight a German and a French aviator met in mid-air. The Frenchman flew high over his German adversary, fired down upon him and sent his machine crashing to the earth from a height of 300 feet. The Germans fell twenty-five men.

Roland Garrios, famous French aviator, met a German Zeppelin on the frontier. Darting about the huge airship, Garrios piloted his aeroplane into position as the dirigible steadily bore down on him. Then he drove full speed toward the German craft, rammed it and sent it plunging to earth. The Frenchman was killed. His own machine was wrecked and fell with the Zeppelin.

French aviators are engaged in scout duty all along the border. Near Wesel one French airman is reported to have been picked off by German troops and killed. French aeroplanes have been sighted from many points in the Rhine provinces. A great fleet of the air-fighting machines is already at Nancy, near the German border.

At Nuremburg, a French aviator flew over the city dropping bombs.

CUSTOM HOUSES RAIDED

Russian Force Invades Germany at Several Points on Border

A St. Petersburg dispatch says the Russian troops have crossed into Germany at several points on the border and Cossacks have raided German custom houses.

The Russians drove the Germans back from Eydtkuhnen, and a column of artillery, with infantry supports, now holds that port. There has been much skirmishing but no serious clash between the forces.

Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholavitch has been named as chief general commanding the army, disposing of the report that the czar planned assuming personal command.

ITALY IS AT PEACE

Is Observing Neutrality, but Is Ready to Call Out Troops

Italy formally proclaimed her neutrality in the European controversy. In a semi-official statement published at Rome. It said:

"The Italian cabinet has decided that, while some of the European powers are at war, Italy is at peace with all belligerents. Consequently the citizens and subjects of the kingdom of Italy are obliged to observe the duty of neutrality."

The summoning to the colors was announced of the first category of the 1889 and 1890 classes of the Italian army, who have to present themselves on Aug. 8.

The naval reserves of the same classes also are called out, while all artisans, stokers and electricians were warned to be ready for mobilization.

DUTCH ARE NEUTRAL

Netherlands Determined to Maintain Position at All Costs

A dispatch from The Hague says the German minister has given the government positive assurances that Germany will respect the neutrality of The Netherlands, provided it is strictly observed.

At a meeting of the Dutch lower house of parliament the leaders of all parties, including the Socialists, promised the government full support in whatever exceptional steps it desires to take.

The president of the council of ministers in a speech announced that the queen and the ministers were in perfect accord and that the country was ready and determined to maintain neutrality at all costs.

CZAR'S WARLIKE SPEECH

Will Not Make Peace While Single Enemy Is on Russian Soil

Emperor Nicholas issued a manifesto in which he outlines the events leading up to the declaration of war by Germany, and then says that "Russians will rise like one man and will repulse the insolent attack of the enemy."

When it became known that a special service of prayer was to be celebrated at the winter palace, where the emperor was to speak to the people, an extraordinary wave of exultation passed over St. Petersburg, testifying to a desire of the public to show their loyalty and patriotism.

Hours before the appointed time for the services, a crowd of 100,000 gathered at the scene bearing flags, banners, portraits of the emperor and placards with patriotic inscriptions.

The emperor, in a brief speech from the balcony, expressed the calm dignity with which Russia had received the declaration of war and the confidence of the nation that the war would be carried to the desired end.

"I here declare solemnly," he said, "that I will not make peace while a single soldier of the enemy remains on Russian soil."

The emperor concluded with words of encouragement to the army and invoked a blessing on their efforts. While the emperor was speaking all in attendance fell to their knees and many were seen to be sobbing.

MAHAN'S PROPHESY

England Must Fight Germany to Maintain Her Own Position

New York, Aug. 4.—Read Admiral Alfred T. Mahan, U. S. N., retired, authority on naval affairs, expressed the opinion at Quogue, L. I., that England must at once throw her fleet against Germany for the chief purpose of maintaining her own position as a world power.

For England, he said, it was a question, if she remained out of the war, of sacrificing her empire in the next generation to the interests of this generation.

Mahan also says that Italy must join the war within a wek's time, not as a partner of the triple alliance, but as an ally of France and Russia. Italy must take this step, he said, and hold the Austrians in check for the salvation of the Balkans, which are already threatened by Turkey and sure to be the prey of the Turks unless the Austrian navy can be kept from the shores of Greece.

ASKS RECEIVER FOR NEW HAVEN

Equity Suit Brought In Federal Court by Stockholder

SUSTAINED PERSONAL LOSSES

Seeks to Recover From Defendants Large Sums Alleged to Have Been Misappropriated—Man Wanted to Handle Any Cash Which May Be Recovered From Directors

New York, Aug. 4.—A receiver is asked for in a equity suit against the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad company, brought in the federal district court against the company, its officers and directors and the estate of J. P. Morgan, by Tisla D. Clark, a resident of New Jersey, and holder of twenty shares of stock.

The suit introduces no personal damages and is chiefly confined to a complaint on the personal losses alleged to have been incurred by the stockholders through the actions of the road's directorate which have been investigated by the interstate commerce commission.

Clark states in the complaint that the twenty shares he owns came to him by inheritance, and that the suit is not a collusive one, brought to confer only the federal court jurisdiction in a case of which it would not otherwise have cognizance.

It is sought to recover by this suit, from the individual defendants as present and former directors, large sums which, it s alleged, were withdrawn and misappropriated after Charles S. Mellen's election as president in 1903, by a "triumvirate" composed of J. P. Morgan, William Rockefeller and Mellen.

Thomas C. Spelling, attorney for the plaintiff, in a statement explaining the object of the suit, which, he declares, is different in important respects from any other thus far filed, said:

"An injunction is sought not to displace or interfere with the management of the present board of directors, but to forestall and prevent the directors voting at corporate elections the shares issued to themselves and to various corporations in consummating the various illegal transactions complained of, and to prevent the board making good out of the funds of the defendant company any deficit either in fixed charges or on operating account of the corporations control of which they have illegally acquired.

"A receiver is asked for, not of the corporation, but in the event that a decree shall be obtained against the directors for an accounting, to receive any moneys that may be recovered and paid, as a special fund to be distributed to the stockholders, or disposed of as the court shall direct."

TWO GIRLS KILLED

Victims of Explosion When Safety Valve on Boiler Fails to Work

Webster, Mass., Aug. 4.—Miss Flora Gaboury, 17 years old, and Miss Eva Taterault, 15 years old, were instantly killed here when a hot water tank in the room in which they were working exploded.

The accident took place in the workroom of the Gaboury girl's parents' bakery, and was due to the failure of the safety valve on the copper boiler to work.

AGREE TO MEDIATION

Western Railroad Managers' Decision Will Avert Great Strike

Washington, Aug. 4.—Managers of ninety-eight western railroads agreed to accept the mediation of the federal board to avert this week's threatened strike of 55,000 employes.

The plan of the board is to arbitrate solely on the question of the men's demand for increased wages, leaving all working rules, which the men demanded should be reinstated, in effect.

HELD ON MURDER CHARGE

Lawrence Man Said to Have Stabbed Another at Wedding

Lawrence, Mass., Aug. 4.—Philip Blieda, 18, was arraigned here on the charge of murder, it being alleged that he fatally stabbed his roommate, James Kokouchy, aged 27. He pleaded not guilty and was held without bail.

THE KEEPING OF GASOLINE.

Under the law existing before the new fire hazzard bill went into effect, it was necessary to obtain from local City Councils a permit to keep gasoline, the method of procedure being a public hearing after which the permit was granted subject to the approval of the Chief of the Fire department.

Under the new law, however, this seems to be unnecessary, for the City Council has no say in the matter whatever. Now however it will be necessary to get a permit from the Commissioner or his deputy. As the law is now understood, no public hearing is necessary in any case, either for the keeping of gasoline for sale or of keeping it for private use in private garages.

The law relative to the keeping of gasoline has been changed several times and many are therefore in doubt as to just what the method of procedure is.

The last law previous to the Fire Hazzard bill, provided that persons who desired to keep gasoline, either in their own garages for private use, or gasoline for sale, must apply to the local governing board for a license. It was then necessary to have a public hearing of which fourteen days notice must be given by the City Clerk, serving a notice on every abutter within fifty feet of the place where it was desired to keep or sell gasoline. Then the order was passed by the City Council, subject to the approval of the Chief of the Fire department, whose ruling was final in the matter. Before that law the final say in the matter was with the Chief of the District Police.

Now under the Fire Hazzard law the only one who has anything to say about the matter is the Commissioner or his local deputy, and it is not understood that a public hearing is necessary.

JAMES C. BRADY.

James C. Brady, who died at his home at 138 Grand View avenue, Wollaston, on Sunday night was a well-known man throughout the state. He was in his 65th year and his death followed an illness of a week.

Mr. Brady was a native of Fall River and from early manhood took a prominent part in the affairs of that community. He held several offices and for eight years was city treasurer of that place.

He became a resident of Quincy 15 years ago and since then has been the cashier for Wilkes & Larrabee Co., Boston.

Mr. Brady was affiliated with several fraternal organizations and was a prominent member of Godfrey de Bouillon commandery, Knights Templar. He is survived by his wife, Caroline P. Brady and one son, Walter C. Brady.

His funeral will take place Wednesday afternoon from his home, Rev. George M. Bailey will officiate and burial will be in Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

MOVES ON WAR CHESSBOARD AS MAPPED OUT BY OUR EXPERTS

Eyes of France on Lost Provinces—Italy to Fight the Balkans.

MILITARY experts in Washington are figuring on the probable scope of a war in Europe. The following summary of the experts' opinion is given:

There will be a dozen points of contact between the opposing forces instead of one or two should all the powers become involved. From the Balkans to the Baltic sea, from Poland to Alsace-Lorraine, all Europe will be ablaze.

Each of the powers that may be drawn into such a general conflict will seek to strike its nearest neighbor in the opposing alignment of the nations the hardest blow in the most vulnerable and most accessible spot. There will be not the slightest indication that the little Balkan state of Servia and its relations with Austria are the causes of the conflict.

In view of the great secrecy of plans and even actual movements maintained by the military systems of the European nations, military observers in this country can only make guesses as to what will happen if the forces are let loose.

But military men in Washington say that with the aid of an ordinary map of Europe one may venture a prediction as to the general outlines of the movements and attempted movements likely to follow the dragging of the principal powers into the war.

Russia's Objective.

The opening clash was that between Austro-Hungarian and Servian forces in northern and western Servia. Russia is next nearest to the scene of actual hostilities, and her mobilization is already under way. Any day may bring one or more blows from Russia upon Austria-Hungary, but they will have no reference geographically to the situation in Servia, American experts said.

Russia would make directly for what she regards as the most vulnerable point in the Austro-Hungarian border, a movement which, if successful, would compel Austria to relax her attention upon Servia and put her on the defensive within her own boundaries.

Kiev in the southwest, Warsaw in the west center and Vilna in the northwest are the great concentration centers of the Russian forces disposed with reference to the European situation. From Kiev Russia can easily strike at the Austro-Hungarian border. It is supposed that Russia has already moved large forces to this border, the exact points being concealed.

With Germany rushing to the assistance of Austria-Hungary, Russia would undoubtedly be found to be prepared to strike at Germany simultaneously with the movement upon Austria-Hungary.

Warsaw a Strategic Point.

Warsaw is Russia's westernmost military headquarters, with Germany on the north and west and Austria-Hungary on the south. From this point Russia could strike at both countries, while from Vilna another army could be put forth a short distance to the west and menace on the German border at another point.

The northern strip of German territory lately enclosing Poland is expected to be the path of a German movement upon Russia. Through it lies the road to St. Petersburg, the Russian capital, which would be the natural objective point of Germany in a war with Russia.

With Germany in the contest it is not seen here how France could refrain from assisting her ally, Russia, and hitting her ancient enemy, Germany. There is little doubt that the seizure of her lost territory of Alsace-Lorrain would be the first movement attempted by France should she enter the extended conflict.

Germany's Border Defense.

The French forces will find the present German border one of the world's wonders in the massiveness of its defense. It is believed probable that the northern army corps of France and Germany would meet in Belgium.

There is little belief that either Holland or Belgium will be able to preserve neutrality in the event of war between France and Germany. It is expected that one or the other or both will become once more a stamping ground for European armies.

It was presumed that if Italy were drawn in she would strike simultaneously at the Balkan states in league with Servia and also attack France.

Great Britain, if drawn in at all, would not send any soldiers to fight. It is predicted, but would lend only her mighty fleet to Russia and France.

Canal as an Aid to War.

The Panama canal, which is about to be opened to commerce, is destined at the outset to become a strategic highway of the world if the present hostilities between Austria-Hungary and Servia develop into a general conflict involving the other European powers. There is much speculation in diplomatic circles in Washington over the part the canal may play in the impending events.

Women are ready to fight for Austria-Hungary and Servia, as they have in the past.

Treaty stipulation provides that the Panama waterway, like the Suez canal, shall be absolutely neutral. It "shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations," and "shall never be blocked nor shall any right of war be exercised nor any act of hostility be committed within it."

It is suggested that a large part of the commerce passing through Suez might be diverted to Panama if a general European conflict filled the Mediterranean with fighting craft.

Hazard to Commerce.

The liability of search would be a hazard to Suez and Mediterranean commerce in the event of a general war, and commercial activities might be more and more curtailed as the parties to the conflict defined more and more sharply the commodities to be included in contraband of war. While the vessels of war as well as of commerce may use the canal freely, exact rules have been devised to maintain the strictest neutrality of the waterway. The transit of war vessels must be made with the least possible delay and with only such intermissions as may result from the necessities of the service. No belligerent may "embark or disembark troops, munitions of war or warlike materials in the canal, except in case of accidental hindrance of the transit, and in such cases the transit shall be resumed with all possible dispatch."

The treaty provisions prohibiting any act of hostility in the canal bars any war vessel from exercising the right of search on a commercial vessel in transit through the waterway, and this provision likewise protects all ships within three marine miles of either terminal.

What may happen to vessels carrying contraband on the high seas is their own affair. War vessels may not remain in the three mile terminal limit longer than twenty-four hours, and the treaty stipulates that "a vessel of one belligerent shall not depart within twenty-four hours from the departure of a vessel of war of the other belligerent."

Hands Off, Our Policy.

In the view of administration officials in Washington no necessity exists at present for any action by the United States government with regard to the war in Europe. According to statements in the highest quarters the policy of the government is that as Servia is not a naval or maritime nation, American shipping is not likely to become involved and that the occasion for a proclamation of neutrality would not exist unless one of the European powers with a seacoast line took up arms against Austria.

If at any time it is necessary to issue a proclamation of neutrality it will follow the lines of that issued in 1911, when Italy and Turkey fought over Tripoli. Announcing the purpose of maintaining absolute neutrality, the proclamation will enjoin all American citizens and residents within the United States to obey the laws and rules governing the conduct of neutrals in time of international conflict, and warning will be given that persons who misconduct themselves will be subject to strict enforcement of penalties prescribed by American law.

All American citizens who undertake to violate neutrality outside of the jurisdiction of the United States will be warned that they can in no wise obtain any protection from the United States government against the appropriate legal consequences of their misconduct.

American citizens will be informed that they are forbidden while within the United States to accept a commission from either of the combatants.

All American citizens and residents, if a proclamation is issued, will be warned that, while they may sell munitions of war within the United States, they cannot carry them to the belligerents, transport soldiers or break a blockade without incurring the risk of hostile capture.

What Mobilization Means.

The European term of "mobilization" means something very different from the comparatively leisurely process for which the word is known to Americans—the gathering of militia regiments at their armories and the transfer of regulars and militia to the mobilization camps for training and movement to the field.

When a mobilization is ordered in a thoroughly militarized country, as former German soldiers now in this country describe the movement, the country goes under martial law. All transportation lines, even though privately owned, are immediately transferred to military control. The communication lines, telephone and telegraph, are put under the same management.

Word of the mobilization is flashed to every telegraph office and every exchange and to every telephone instrument. Couriers in automobiles and on motorcycles rush through every street, road and lane, shouting the notice and pasting bulletins in every conspicuous place commanding reservists to join their regiments before a certain hour, perhaps eight or ten hours after the mobilization order has been flashed.

Instant Response.

Every man drops his work as soon as he hears the order; the plough is left in the furrow; customers are left at the counter; balances are left unchecked in the bank. Every man liable for military duty rushes to the nearest transportation line which will take him to his regiment, whether its headquarters be a mile away or a hundred, or five hundred. The reservists do not wait to pack luggage or food. There are clothing, equipment and food for all at the mobilization centres in storage warehouses, always filled, ready for the call. Men go to the trains often hatless and coatless.

There is no formality of getting tickets and passes. Only soldiers may ride and they ride free in the direction which duty takes them. All freight traffic is suspended; all passenger schedules are abandoned. The government wants men, in masses, quickly. Parlor cars and sleeping cars are no more privileged against the reservists than workmen's gondolas.

Benefits to Us From War.

The London Statist says:

"A great war in Europe will enable the United States to sell its great crops in places which will give a much greater income than if there was no war. Almost every industry will derive more or less advantage. American investors and bankers should get in much profit from the ability to buy back from Europe great quantities of securities at attractive prices in payment for the foodstuffs and raw material exported from the United States.

"A great war in Europe will give the United States an opportunity of assuming the post of world banker by supplying capital freely to countries and individuals in all parts of the globe who need it and can provide the required security. Should the American people take advantage of the golden opportunity afforded them by the outbreak of war, it will mean not diminished but increased prosperity for the United States."

MOTOR BOAT STRANDED

Brockton People in Distress Off Squantum

The balking of the engine in the motor boat belonging to L. B. Faunce of Brockton caused him a good deal of anxiety Sunday afternoon. Mr. Faunce with his wife, child and father were returning from a day's outing when nearing Squantum on the Quincy bay side the engine suddenly stopped. Mr. Faunce worked over it for an hour but it refused absolutely to start.

It was getting dusk and a strong wind blowing which kicked up a heavy sea and no one in sight to help them out of dilemma. People sitting on the beach saw the boat apparently anchored and they thought it must be a fishing party, but they eventually saw something white waving in the air which proved to be a signal of distress. Elmer Harper had a motor boat moored near the shore and with John Jepson and Peter Curley they immediately went to the assistance of Mr. Faunce and family and landed them safely ashore. Mrs. Louise Holt and Mrs. Helen McGowan took them into the latter's home and made them comfortable until they could proceed to Brockton by train.

The Boston postal clerks, who have had a cottage at Squantum the past two years, held an open house for Squantumites Saturday evening and about 100 guests were entertained. The cottage and grounds were prettily decorated with Japanese lanterns The entertainment consisted of solos sung by Mr. Kenney and William Gardner. Refreshments were served and dancing was enjoyed until a late hour.

BIRTHDAY PARTY.

Miss Marion R. Hewson, of 24 Newcomb place, only daughter of L. C. and Alberta Hewson, entertained several of her little friends Monday in honor of her twelfth birthday. Mrs. L. C. Hewson chaperoned the little ones with an outing at Squantum after which the party was entertained in the evening at the home of little Marion. In behalf of those present Marion received a signet ring. The party was arranged by Philip H. Wolfe, and Miss Annie McLay. A happy and jolly time was had all day and evening.

Refreshments were served. Late in the evening the guests made their departure, each and every one wishing Miss Marion many happy returns of the day.

MRS. PRESTON P. KITTREDGE.

The funeral of Mrs. Mary Spear Kittredge, wife of Preston P. Kittredge, was held Monday afternoon from the First church. The services which were well attended were conducted by Rev. Edward Norton, pastor emeritus of the Bethany Congregational church. The burial was at Mt Wollaston cemetery.

Mrs. Kittredge was one of the best known residents of the Quincy Point district. She was a daughter of the late Elijah Baxter, who at one time owned nearly all of the land on South street. Mrs. Kittredge was born in Quincy and has always made this city her home. She has seen the Point district grow from a farming country to a thriving settlement with numerous business houses, etc.

CALIXTE AYLIES.

The funeral of Calixte Aylies who died Saturday night was held from his home at 105 Hollis avenue, this morning and was well attended. A high mass of requiem was celebrated at the Church of the Sacred Heart by Rev. Fr. James F. McNiff. The regular choir sung the Gregorian chant. Burial was in Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

DIVORCE LIBEL.

Mrs. Branche Leavitt of Weymouth has filed a divorce libel at Dedham against Herbert Leavitt, charging him with cruel and abusive treatment and non support. They were married June 22, 1913, at Weymouth, and lived at Quincy.

A VACATION AT OUR HOSTITAL

Constant Pleasure to Witness Skill and Care of Nurses

Editor of Daily Ledger:—

Of course it would be foolish to advise any one to go to the hospital as a patient for the mere pleasure of it. Everybody knows that the average person hates the very sound of ether and surgery as a black cat hates a cold bath.

And yet we must have hospitals, and sometimes we must go to them. If you have something bad about you, of course the hospital is your only haven of refuge, and you are thankful that you live in this present age, when ills that used to be mysterious and fatal are understood and cured.

But perhaps, while not having any serious trouble, you may have some annoying malady that has bothered you a good while; something that will never cure itself, but is likely to grow worse as you grow older.

It is not a fatal thing, and still it "bothers the life out of you," as we say, and the doctor tells you that you can get rid of it for good and all by a short residence at the hospital. Perhaps some fine morning you will conclude that you have bothered about long enough and make a break up Whitwell street.

In my own case I started off briskly with my grip on a Monday morning in the merry month of May. I could have walked up the hill all right, but since I was going as a patient, it seemed the proper thing to ride in the doctor's auto.

For me there were no preliminaries necessary, and I had not been in my room half an hour before a polite young lady invited me to take a ride in a wheel chair down to the "Chamber of Perfumes." Arrived there, I was allowed to recline upon a couch. The doctor man who was master of ceremonies made one or two pleasant remarks—inquiring how I liked the couch, etc. I had to tell him that the couch was rather lacking in resiliency, which seemed to grieve him a little.

Then without delay the ether man began coquetting delicately with the ether cone a few inches above my face. I am told that in the earlier use of ether the cone was jammed down tight over the patient's face the first thing, and he was smothered and distressed so that attendants had to hold him down until he became unconscious! But there is nothing of that kind now. I was allowed to get a little used to the ether—it has a sort of sicky-sweety smell, not especially disagreeable, and not at all suffocating.

The ether man advised me to keep my eyes closed, as the ether would irritate them. I tried it and found he was right! In a few seconds my toes began to feel rather funny, and the operator, as though having some secret understanding with my toes, presently brought the cone down close over my face, and asked me to breathe slowly and deeply. I think I counted some four or five breaths, still without any sense of suffocation, and then came nothingness and blank oblivion.

And that ends my story of the "Chamber of Perfumes!"

The next think I knew I was lying in my bed in my room, viewing the ceiling dimly, as through a rainy window pane, though my vision rapidly cleared to its normal state.

Then came the process of healing, and that, of course, is no hour's job. Nature seems to get herself into a lot of awful messes in the human anatomy, which she cannot mend unaided, and she gladly welcomes help when it is offered by skilled hands trained to work in sympathy with her; but when everything else has been done but the actual healing, then Nature alone must take charge, and she will brook no interference, and will not be hurried.

Of course in the meantime the patient must be nursed and fed, and here is where the professional skill and experience of the hospital attendants come in. The first day or two I got nothing but pleasant cooling drinks. Then came liquid foods in agreeable variety, most delicately prepared. I rather dreaded to taste things at first, for fear they might be over-sweetened or over-salted or over flavored; but I soon found there was nothing to fear on that score, for everything had been prepared by a master hand.

In a few days I was sitting up to the table to eat, and was walking rather unsteadily about the corridor. Soon I had my clothes on and made little excursions out of doors on the flat roof; and in nine days I walked down stairs and stepped into the auto and was off!

During my stay at the hospital it was a constant pleasure to witness the skill, care and patient thoroughness of the nurses. There was no duty neglected and no task slighted. And there was a delightful spirit of co-operation and mutual helpfulnes among the nurses. From the Superintendent, who ruled her realm with a firm but gentle hand, down through the head nurses and the undergraduate nurses there was a pervading air of cheerfulness and good feeling which made greatly for the comfort and progress of the patient, and for the efficiency of the hospital.

Now of course my personal experience is of no public interest, and the only reason for writing this little story is the hope that it may possibly hearten up somebody who ought to go to the hospital, but who is hesitating through unnecessary timidity. If you have some annoying thing that everlastingly bothers you, and that will never cure itself, but which you may be rid of for good and all by a short residence at the hospital, you would by all means better take a little vacation such as I have described.

ADVERTISERS do not attempt to make you agree to buy their goods for the rest of your life. They only want you to give their wares a trial, to subject them to actual test by actual use, and then be guided by experience.

Could anything prove more clearly that the advertiser has supreme confidence in his product, that he is absolutely certain that it will please you, that it will be all he says it is?

It would indeed be foolish to spend money to induce you to buy an article that would prove unsatisfactory and would result in your telling friends and neighbors of your experience. Advertisers spend millions making their trademarks known, and in order to make their trademarks valuable they must stand for a certain standard of worth. Having made their trademarks known, manufacturers exert every effort to keep the goods up to the expected high grade.

SPRIG WINS IN SONDER CLASS

Mudjekeewis Takes First Place in Class D

The Mudjekeewis of Vice Commodore Emery came into her own Monday in the first of the mid-summer series of races off Marblehead. The race was held under the auspices of the Eastern yacht club and a fleet of 86 yachts crossed the line at the start. In class D which includes the scrapping boats of the Quincy club, the Mudjekeewis was an east winner defeating the Clara of ex-Commodore Robbins by nearly two minutes corrected time. The Dartwell of ex-Commodore Whittemore was third, the Grayling fourth, Dolly III fifth, and Iris sixth. In the special class the Meemer of John T. Cavanagh won by a good margin.

Special interest was centered in the sonder class boats, for nearly all of the starters in this class will compete this month in the series of races for the Quincy Yacht Club challenge cup. In Monday's race the Sprig won out, while in the interclub sonder class the Harpoon, a former challenger and defender of the cup, won out with a lead of nearly three minutes. In the regular sonder class it was a close race between the Sprig and Cima, the former winning by 26 seconds.

In class A of the interclub boats the Areyto of Commodore Drew of the Squantum club was a winner by nearly two minutes corrected time. Another race is scheduled for today.

SOUND FINANCE IS GUARANTEED

Emergency Currency Authorized to Aid American Banks

WILSON APPEALS TO PEOPLE

Urges That Nothing Be Done In United States to Add to World's Excitement—Will Do Our Part Toward Helping Mankind During Crisis—Aid For Americans Abroad

Washington, Aug. 4.—More than a billion dollars in currency is to be added to the circulating medium in the United States by the action of congress in passing the bill removing technical restrictions on the issuance of $500,000,000 of reserve currency to meet the situation resulting from the European crisis.

This new money, backed by the prime assets of the banks, may be issued under a modification of the bank law, passed in both house and senate, then compromised in conference and approved by the administration for final action in both houses.

All national banks and state banks and trust companies, members of the new federal reserve system, and those which have agreed to join, may issue notes under the Aldrich-Vreeland section of the bank law up to 125 percent of their combined capital and surplus.

Hundreds of millions of the new notes are ready for the call of the banks; shipments to financial centres have begun and the bureau of engraving is making more night and day.

While trading in Wall street had been nervous for some time prior to the suspension of trading, the indefinite closing has a tendency to steady the situation and conditions are considered satisfactory. The clearing house has been placed on a certificate basis for the first time since 1907.

Fifty million dollars of emergency currency issued by the government has been received in New York; savings banks are enforcing the sixty-day clause relating to the withdrawal of deposits, and all possible plans to meet any crisis that may arise are being adopted.

The Chicago wheat market continues suspended, as conditions are too uncertain to allow intelligent trading.

More conferences are being held in Washington. Secretary McAdoo is watching the crop moving procedure in the west and the use of his $34,000,000 deposted for the purpose.

Administration officials are hopeful that it will not be necessary to provide additional sources of revenue to offset the loss of duty on imports, which would follow a long war.

President Wilson appealed to the people of the United States to remain calm during the war in Europe. He declared the United States owes it to mankind to help the rest of the world during the present crisis.

The president declared the United States could gain great and permanent glory during the present trouble provided no one lost his head. The president urged that nothing be done in America to add to the excitement of the world.

There is sure to be inconvenience to financial institutions of the country, he told the callers, but added that the administration is fully prepared to help out all difficulties. He urged that no credence be given unconfirmed reports of a sensational nature.

The president declared there was no cause for any serious alarm in the United States. The administration is bending every effort, he said, toward getting ships to carry the foodstuffs and other products of the United States to all the world and to bring home Americans stranded in Europe.

A proclamation of neutrality, the president said, will be issued as soon as it can be completed by the state department. He does not believe there will be any necessity for congress to remain in session because of the situation in Europe.

New York bankers arranged with the state and treasury departments to send $3,500,000 in gold coin to Europe to relieve American tourists stranded there and unable to get cash for their checks and letters of credit.

Plans were virtually completed for the care of Americans in war-torn Europe. Congress, at the request of President Wilson, appropriated $250,000 as an initial step and will grant more funds if desired. The appropriation will be used in caring for the immediate needs of Americans, especially those without means of obtaining any funds.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES.

Walter Marsden of Milford, Mass., 24, died from a fractured skull, received when his motorcycle skidded and dashed him against a tree.

Five-cent stamps are necessary on first-class foreign mail which does not go by steamers sailing directly for the countries to which the mail is addressed.

Beverly, Mass., is to have a city planning commission, the aldermen having adopted the act which provides for such a commission.

COAST IS AFTER TENNIS THRONE

California Turning Out Majority of Cracks.

WANT THE NEXT ALL COMERS

Grass Courts Being Grown Near Frisco to Stage Great Newport Classic. Doubtful if Any Change Will Be Made For Several Years, However. Has Done Much For Tennis.

To say that a tennis player is from California is in these days regarded as equivalent to stating that he is a world beater. It's a regular thing for the "kids" to come off the park courts on the Pacific coast, visit the east and trim up several of the title winning veterans.

Maurice E. McLoughlin and Thomas C. Bundy accomplished that memorable feat on their first visit. That was in 1909, when the famous "Mac" was only nineteen years old. William M. Johnston accomplished the trick last year, and he was only seventeen. Now the eastern courts are all excited over R. Lindley Murray, another of the McLoughlin type.

Of course mentioning these names is only hitting some of the highest spots and even at that overlooking one of the topmost peaks, for no thought of California tennis would be complete without Miss May Sutton, who is now Mrs. Thomas C. Bundy. The redoubtable May not only cleaned up on all of the American championships worth thinking about, but she accomplished what no other American has ever been successful in doing, and that was to cause the Britons bitter anguish by winning one of their pet titles.

Having picked off nearly all of the plums, the ambitious men from California are looking around for more important fields to conquer. They appear to have found something to their liking in the thought of a great national championship tournament. This idea has been slowly smoldering for some time in the brains of those who direct the destinies of tennis on the Pacific coast.

It looks as if it was to be another case of Mohammed going to the mountain. In this instance the immovable will be the Californians, who for several years have put all the sparkle and snap into the tournaments in the east. It was the fiery Californians who saved the national tournament at Newport from becoming a dreary affair. It was also the all powerful McLoughlin who stemmed the tide of defeat and won the Davis cup for this country at the time when the Britons were within a stroke of victory.

What the Californians are after is the "national all comers" if they can get it. They are cultivating grass courts right now near San Francisco with that hope in mind.

NO KICK ON UMPIRES.

Players and Managers' Stand Seems to Be Unjustified.

The players and managers are complaining that the umpires are worse than usual this year, but it appears the players are making extra efforts to show up the arbitrators.

Charley Dooin's Phillies have a lately and cleverly developed trick by which they kept umpires in hot water with opposing pitchers. When they realize that a third strike is getting by they make a half swipe at it, suddenly drawing back the bat and thus giving the umpire the impression that it must have been a wide ball or the wallop would have been completed. Time and again after being fairly struck out they got away with this trick, thus starting wild howling by the pitchers and the populace. A good thing, however, can be overdone. After several of these tricks Mr. Byron, who umpired behind the plate in the Philly series in Cincinnati, grew savagely sore at the foxes and proceeded to call a strike on the next pitch if he could find the slightest pretext to do so.

A Story For Labor Day

By SARAH BAXTER

"Talk about the dignity of labor," said Helen Forsythe to her friend, Lois Gregory. "I don't see any dignity in it. No one can do manual labor without getting dirty hands, chapped hands, misshapen hands."

"There are worse things than dirty hands," replied Miss Gregory.

"What, for instance?"

"A dirty soul. How many rich men's sons who have not the incentive to labor have become worthless and contemptible?"

"I dare say, my dear, there is truth in what you say, but for me I would rather marry a poet than a mechanic."

"Even a poet has his uses, but for me he is altogether too ethereal. I would prefer an engineer whose profession deals directly with labor. What is there more splendid than the spanning of a river by an enormous bridge, the building of a cathedral, the tunneling of a mountain?"

"These are planned by one brain."

"Granted, but of what use would that brain be without the workmen to carry out its plan?"

"Well, Lois, marry in the field of labor if you like. I prefer the fine arts. Give me an artist."

These young ladies were both of the well to do class, but they were very different. Helen Forsythe was disposed to begin where her father left off. When he had been experimenting in overalls she was too young to know much about what he was doing; now that he was living on the royalties he received from a machine he had contrived, with all the refinements a fine income brought, she had little sympathy with what had produced his good fortune.

Lois Gregory, on the contrary, had never known either wealth or poverty. A laborer herself, she sympathized with the cause of labor. She made her living by teaching, and being accustomed to using her brain constantly it became stronger with exercise, and she was enabled to distinguish between what was of intrinsic and what was of fictitious value. She had come to the conclusion that the attaining was in itself the attainment fictitious. In other words, there is no stimulus in an accomplished work except to produce something better.

The country seat of the Forsythes was situated in a beautiful valley through which ran a stream that afforded a fine water power. A mile below the place was a large factory. One day Helen Forsythe's automobile broke down, and a request was sent to the factory to send a man to fix it. He appeared in overalls with a bag of tools, and Helen took him to the car to show him the break.

There was something about this man that arrested Miss Forsythe's attention. He was some twenty two or three years old and strongly built, and character was plainly written in his face. Helen pointed out the break, though this was unnecessary, for the young man was a skilled mechanic and took it in himself at once. Helen watched him while he worked, asking him questions about the trouble, how serious it was and how long a time would be required to make the repairs. She noticed a British intonation to his speech, but not the misuse of the letter "h" common with the English lower classes.

"Do you like mechanical work?" she asked.

"I certainly do. I was born with a taste for it," was the reply.

"But don't you think it very dirty?"

"You mean shoveling earth, I suppose?"

"Oh, no. I love to dig in the dirt."

"You mean handling ashes?"

"There's dirtier work than that. My brother does it every day."

"Your brother!"

"Yes. He's in politics."

This quite took Miss Forsythe's breath away. Surely this young man was very odd. She presumed the brother he referred to was a political heeler in a district where the people were of the lowest class.

"Tell me," she said presently, "what it is that interests you in mechanics."

"I like to fashion things. The mechanic, if he is a good one, may always find a field in his labor for more or less use of the inventive faculty, and the mechanic is free to exercise it. Besides, there is an opportunity in mechanics for a man to climb the ladder that leads up to fortune without using dishonorable means. No man need be happier than the laborer who has all the work he can do. His mind is on what he is doing, and he has no time to worry about imaginary griefs. When he has finished his day's work he enjoys his leisure. How much better off he is than the man whose time is all leisure, who never experiences the comfort there is in rest because he is always at rest."

Miss Forsythe was surprised to hear this from one whom she considered doomed to a life of toil. She was about to inquire of him where he, a laborer, had picked up such ideas when he finished his job, gathered up his tools and, putting them in his bag, bade her adieu and went away.

And yet for Miss Forsythe he did not go away. He was with her the rest of the day as if he were still working on her auto and she listening to his words. "I can understand," she said to herself, "Lois marrying a man like that. There is a healthfulness of body and mind about him that positively rests me. He doesn't seem to be striving for anything. I do believe that he wouldn't give up his present work in exchange for a fine social position, while I—why, if I'm not invited to every swell function I'm miserable."

It was not long before some of the water pipes in the Forsythe house got out of order, and Miss Helen, being, on account of her father's absence and her mother's bad health, the director of the establishment, telephoned to the factory asking for a man to repair them and requesting it to send, if possible, the workman who had repaired her car. He came with his bag of tools, and Miss Forsythe, as before, showed him the break. She left him, but now and again returned to see how he was getting on. When noon came he had not finished, and she invited him to partake of a luncheon she ordered to be prepared for him. While he was eating it she asked him:

"How is it that you, who have never known what is called high life and have no experience as to the cares and disappointments it brings, are so well satisfied with your humble lot?"

He had finished eating when this question was propounded and, rising, stood facing Miss Forsythe, looking at her intently.

"You seem to be interested in this matter," he said, "and I am going to give you a confidence I have given no one else in America. I am the son of an English gentleman. My father designed me for the army or the church. My brother is in parliament. I have watched that silent revolution which is bringing labor to the front. We see it everywhere. People of refinement are sensible of it. Whereas a hundred years ago to make money in manufacture or trade was not considered respectable, now titled persons are going into both.

"My preference is for a life in manufacture. I have no confidence in attaining success in manufacture without ever having been a manufacturer myself. I have preferred to begin as any other laborer begins. If any of them beat me in the race it will not trouble me. If I become a leader I prefer to know the feelings, the necessities, of the men I manage. As to wealth bringing me happiness if I attain it, I have no confidence that it will. My happiness is in my daily labor. I believe that I get the same pleasure in repairing the pipes in this house that the manager of a large factory derives from his more extended duties."

Miss Forsythe was astonished. She had been surprised to meet a laborer who realized that he was happier in his work than if he were a globe trotter, but this man, who was born with a silver spoon in his mouth and had voluntarily stepped on the lowest rung of the labor ladder to climb or remain a fixture, as the case might be, was something more than she could at once understand. Nevertheless she was deeply impressed.

It occurred to her to invite him to dinner to see how he would appear. He accepted the invitation and with clean hands. He was invited again and again, and a year after Miss Forsythe had first met him she wrote Miss Gregory that she had been converted to her friend's ideas as to the dignity of labor and had been induced to marry a laborer.

The bride endeavored to persuade her husband to accept capital from her father with which to start a factory of his own, but he declined. He said that the happiness he derived from labor was in labor and not in management. Nevertheless he was rapidly promoted in the factory where he worked and made a manager in spite of himself.

Each of the girls who conversed upon the subject of marriage failed to do in the matter what they said they would do. Miss Forsythe, who said she would marry an artist, married a laborer. Miss Gregory, who declared that she would prefer one who builds material structures, married a literary man.

Woman's World

Tacoma, Wash., Has the First Woman Police Judge.

JUDGE NELDA JAEGER.

While women have presided in children's courts, a woman on the bench of a general police court is a novelty. Washington, one of the states where women vote, has one. She is Miss Nelda Jaeger, an able member of the Washington bar, who was recently appointed as police judge in Tacoma, Wash. When Miss Jaeger first took her position on the bench the court attendants were temporarily embarrassed, for they did not know exactly how to address her. The dignity and lack of self consciousness on the part of the new official carried off the situation gracefully, and in a short time they were addressing her as "Judge Jaeger" and "your honor" as though women magistrates were quite an ordinary and everyday matter. Miss Jaeger's knowledge of the law and her womanly tact combine to make her a successful and popular official.

THE SEASHORE WARDROBE.

For the Little Folks It Should Be Dainty and Appropriate.

Children at the seaside resorts must be provided with an entirely different kind of a wardrobe from that needed for the country. One that ascends at a bound from the bathing suit or sand frock to the glories of an elaborate creation is required. For the former the little ones wear their rompers or jumper suits, overalls or bathing suits, both in the water and on the sands, the rompers being made of strong wash material and the bathing suits of flannel, serge or mohair.

Evening finds them dressed in the daintiest of frocks, slippers, stockings and ribbons, though even here economy may be practiced without detection. Instead of purchasing a great number of frocks it will be better to get a few and have numerous little accessories, such as dainty aprons, correct footwear, ribbons and bows, all of which help so much toward making a child's outfit attractive.

Shoes, whether high or low, should be substantial for day wear, slippers to be donned in the evening only. Sunbonnets of white lawn or dimity in delicate shades are dainty and picturesque and more practical than hats.

Gay Waistcoats.

Roman striped and plaided waistcoats are exceedingly smart with tailleurs of dark serge or mohair, but with a suit of lighter colored fabric the flowered silk waistcoat is prettiest. Pussy willow taffeta in moire effect makes a charming waistcoat for a golden brown tailleur. Another suit with a short cutaway Eton jacket has a waistcoat of Egyptian crape in post-impressionist design.

Jet Buttons.

Small jet buttons are much used on vests and neckwear. Large crocheted buttons in round and square designs of one or two colors are used on coats of heavy corded cottons and on linen and ratine dresses and suits. There are many fancy stitches introduced in these buttons.

WASHING LACES.

To launder a linen, cluny or any other lace centerpiece successfully wash carefully, boil, rinse and blue, but do not starch.

Spread a sheet on rug, lay the centerpiece right side down and begin to pin, being sure to stretch while pinning and catch every scallop.

When finished there should not be a wrinkle in it.

While still damp press with an iron not too hot and leave on floor until perfectly dry.

It will come out beautifully, much nicer than if you had sent it to a dry cleaner.

To wash white silk gloves put gloves on hands, use white soap, turn on the faucet and wash the same as if you were washing your hands. If finger tips are very much soiled use soft brush.

Rinse thoroughly; then with a clean towel rub gently toward elbow until most of the moisture is absorbed; then slip off and hang out to dry. They will not need pressing.

DIET AND GOOD HEALTH.

Food Should Be Carefully Selected and Properly Varied.

The eminent American physiologist Rusk says that nature, through the device of appetite, usually provides against the use of improper food, but that reason must play a part in food selections. A glass of milk and a piece of pie are poor materials for the brain of an active business man whose sedentary life requires 2,500 heat units or calories to maintain his body machinery.

We need also water, salts, proteins and certain newly discovered substances called vitamines. All these materials are to be found in milk, beans, bread and other great fundamentals of nutrition. Solutions of cane sugar or of glucose are not the exclusive mainstays of life, and yet glucose taken alone yields 2,500 calories at a cost of 4 1-6 cents, and 2,500 calories in the form of cane sugar cost 8 1-3 cents.

Glucose is the cheapest food fuel known, but, like cane sugar or butter fat, is not a complete food in that it does not contain everything necessary for life. Commercial glucose is absolutely harmless. A man must have sufficient calories in his diet if he is to live properly and perform labor satisfactorily.—New York World.

COROT, THE ARTIST.

Those painters who also have the feeling and some of the proficiency of a musician reveal it in their work. They are usually colorists, with more eye for the colors and tones of nature than her shapes and forms.

Such a one was Corot. He had a good tenor voice and played on the violin. He sang at his work and sang, too, when he was not painting, but wandering through the forest of Fontainebleau or around the village of Ville d'Avray, absorbing the beauty of the scene and storing up impressions for future pictures. In fact, his whole long life of seventy-nine years was to Le Pere Corot, as his friends loved to call him, a song.

And one feels it in his pictures, at least in his later ones, by which he is best known. Their coloring is subdued, like a lullaby or waking song, for it was the dawn or twilight that he preferred to paint. His works vibrate with the hum of melody, and here and there is an accent of effect that trembles like the string of his violin.

Corot's long life was a remarkable instance of a man being able to continue to the end the springtime of his youth.

Power of Falling Water.

Still water gives no power, no energy. Falling water has only as much power as is represented by its weight. A gallon of falling water will develop as much power as a falling block of iron weighing 62.5 pounds. Of course, the greater the fall the greater the power developed. Water falling one foot will develop a pressure of .43 pounds per square inch of pipe. The same amount of water falling 100 feet will develop a pressure of 43.31 pounds per square inch of pipe. Falling 1,000 feet it would produce a pressure of 433.00 pounds per square inch of pipe. To compute the power of falling water it is necessary to multiply the volume of flowing water in cubic feet per minute by its weight, 62.5 pounds, and this product by the vertical height of the fall in feet, and divide by 33,000, the number of foot pounds representing one horsepower for one minute.—New York World.

Military Files.

"Files on parade" means a body of soldiers, a troop or company marching in a file or line, not abreast, but one after another. We speak of the "rank and file," meaning soldiers who are formed so that they march abreast and also in ranks following each other. The term in general means the common soldiers below the rank of noncommissioned officers. There are other file terms in military tactics, such as "file right" and "file left." As Kipling uses the term it means the common soldiers who have been called out for the purpose described in the poem of "Danny Deever."—Philadelphia Press.

Pa's Explanation.

"Pa, what do people mean when they talk of laying up something for a rainy day?"

"A rainy day means hard times, my son."

"Why so, pa?"

"Because, I suppose, on a rainy day there is no dust in sight!"—Spokane Spokesman-Review.

British Coronation.

No other coronation rite in Europe reaches back to so early a period as that of Great Britain. From the Anglo-Saxon order of the coronation of Egbert was derived the ancient form of the coronations of the kings of France.—London Express.

Difference of Opinion.

"It takes two to start a quarrel," said Mrs. Gabb.

"Oh, no, it doesn't," replied Mr. Gabb. "A man and his wife are one."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Two Ideas.

The optimist rejoiced in the glorious change in temperature. The pessimist said, "Ain't it a little too sudden?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Such as thy thoughts and ordinary cogitations are, such will thy mind be in time.—Marcus Aurelius.

CAUGHT IN BRAINTREE STORE

A young man who gave the name of William C. Morse was captured red handed about 1.30 this morning in the store of Clarence Smith at Braintree by Officer Gallivan. The officer heard the crash of glass and on investigation found the glass in the door of Smith store smashed. Throwing his flash light into the store he commanded the party to come out or to dodge a revolver bullet. The fellow came out and was placed under arrest.

In court he said that he had come from Quincy on a late car and as he went to bed early Sunday night he thought he would walk about for awhile. Seeing the glass in the store broken he thought that he would go in and get a smoke, intending to come around later in the morning and pay for the smoke.

When Officer Gallivan appeared however he realized that he was in wrong. The court held him in $500 for the grand jury.

TREASURE SHIP AT BAR HARBOR

Cecile Was Chased Back by a Warship

The Kronprizessin Cecile, with over $10,000,000 specie aboard, put in at Bar Harbor this morning after being missing three days. Its 1200 passengers and 3500 bags of mail will be landed.

The arrival was unannounced and after the ship anchored the world learned the story of how she had turned about in mid ocean and headed for neutral shores with a strange ship in pursuit.

The ship was 900 miles from Plymouth, Eng., when a wireless message advised her return. Smoke stacks were painted and no lights were left on the ship during the passage back.

Saturday night, fog fell and passengers pleaded with the captain to reduce speed but at dawn again he signaled for full speed ahead and safely negotiated the trip under the cover of fog.

The ship had the biggest amount of treasure aboard of any ship that ever left a port of the United States. It was all consigned to the war centre.

BRIEFS

A wireless from Dr. Harold Curtis says, don't expect me until Thursday night because of fog.

The engagement of Miss Frances M. Colgan, daughter of Mrs. Carrie Colgan of Quincy, to William A. Ritch of Melrose is announced.

PLAYING GOLF.

The Game Demands Concentration, Yet Invites Sociability.

"One thing at a time, and that done well," is a very good rule in golf, as in many other lines of either work or play. I speak of this because golf is a game in which the relationship between players is a bit different from what it is in any other game that comes to my mind. It is a game which to reap the best results demands great concentration and yet a game which at times is played wonderfully well by those who seem to be paying scant attention to the task in hand.

The game one moment brings men together and next sends them apart, according to the direction in which they happen to hit the ball. Two men can start from the same tee, be two hundred or more yards apart after their drives and both be on the same green after playing their second shots.

It is a game which invites sociability and yet does not either demand or require it. One man can go out and play all by himself and thoroughly enjoy his game, or two men can go out, play a round together, neither speak a word between the first tee and the last green, yet both go into the clubhouse and declare they had seldom or never spent a more enjoyable time.—Francis Ouimet in St. Nicholas.

ATLANTIC OCEAN RECORDS.

Vessels That Won Fame by Reducing the Time of the Trips.

In the early days of Atlantic steam navigation anywhere from ten days to a fortnight was used up between New York and England, and on the eastward voyage it was by no means unusual for some of the sailing packets of Grinnell and Minturn, red, white and blue swallowtail burgee, and of Tommy Tapscott, black ball on burgee and foretopsail, to beat the lumbering sidewheelers.

The first steamer to cut under the ten day voyage was the Persia in 1856, with 9 days, 1 hour and 45 minutes. This remained a record for ten years, until the Scotia in 1866, 8 days, 2 hours and 48 minutes, lopped off a whole day. Three years later the City of Brussels in 1869 established the seven day class, with 7 days, 22 hours and 3 minutes.

It was not until 1882 that the six day boat claimed the record, the Alaska, with 6 days, 18 hours and 37 minutes. The five day class was opened in 1889 by the City of Paris, with 5 days 19 hours 18 minutes. The first of the four day class was the Lusitania in 1908, with 4 days 15 hours. The record is now held by the Mauretania, with a passage in 1910 of 4 days, 10 hours and 21 minutes.—New York Sun.

Care of Pearls.

One of the representatives of a famous jewelry firm gives a word of advice upon the preservation and treatment of pearls. Upon no account, he said, should they be locked up in a safe or other dark place for lengthy periods, since such treatment soon causes them to lose their "life" and become dull. If their fair owners find that for some reason or other they cannot wear them outside their garments they should make a point of wearing them underneath the dress next to the skin. Constant contact with the human skin gives to the stones light, luster, gloss and sheen. The best possible way to keep the pearls in a perfect state of preservation, as well as to prolong their life, is to wear them always, both by night and by day.—London Tit-Bits.

The Cruel Lie.

When Disraeli was nearing his end a young disciple said to him: "Master, what is the unpardonable sin? Is it not a lie?" The astute and subtle statesman, in the shadow of the grave, where he saw with the clearer vision, looked at the young man with deep, unfathomable eyes and answered:

"No, a lie is not the unpardonable sin. The unpardonable sin is the cruel lie."

On the borders of that shadowy land where great things grow small and little things loom large on the horizon he had come to know that the crime that is not forgiven is the brutal instinct that impels us to wound, to embitter, to mortify.

Emerson's Style.

Emerson's style was tersely summed up in the words of his dear friend Thomas Carlyle. Wrote the "Sage of Chelsea" of his friend's way of writing: "It is pure, genuine Saxon; strong and simple; of a clearness, of a beauty, but does not sometimes rightly stick together. The paragraphs are not beaten ingots, but beautiful square bags of buckshot held together by canvas."

"He'll get bunkoed sure."

An Innocent Victim.

"Still harping on the high cost of living?"

"No; my wife has decided to reduce her weight. I wouldn't care what food cost if she would only consent to buy it."—Washington Star.

THREE FINED $75 EACH

For Sales of Liquor at the Circus Grounds

Capt. McKay and Inspector Goodhue were on duty at the circus grounds all day Monday and as a result of their vigilance two colored men, and a white woman who claimed to be the wife of one of the colored men, were arrested for violation of the liquor law. Their names are Frank Johnson a blind man, Esther Johnson, his white wife, and Charles Dunlap.

Johnson sat near the entrance to the grounds wearing a sign "I am blind," selling pencils and souvenirs. Near him was a dress suit case, which later proved to contain half a dozen pint bottles of whiskey. Dunlap posed as an African dodger, but on the sly was picking out prospective customers for the whiskey. Mrs. Johnson was the one who delivered the goods. She carried a small wicker dress suit case in which she would transport the ardent from place to place.

Monday was pay day with the circus employees and a good business was anticipated. After their arrest however the woman told Inspector Goodhue that knowing Quincy to be a no-license town she had cautioned her husband and Dunlap not to come here, but they decided to take a chance.

The officers watched the three all the afternoon, and about 8.30 concluded that it was about time to make an arrest. All thre were hen arrested, the arrest collecting a large crowd. Nine pints of whiskey were found in the two suit cases. All three were arraigned in court this morning and were found guilty and fined $75 each.

CIRCUS DREW CROWDED TENT

LaTena's circus which exhibited on the Water street grounds Monday afternoon and evening will be sure of a large audience should they again visit Quincy. There was a large attendance at both performances the tent being packed in the evening, and the show as a whole was the best travelling tent show that has appeared in Quincy this year. The performance by the trained animals was one of the pleasing features, especially that of the trained seals, which were wonderful. The work of the trained horses and other animals was well worth seeing.

WILD TURKEY.

"Turkey taken" was the latest news flashed from what is known as the Dublin district Monday night, and all because of David Dewey of Winthrop Park found a wild one in his hen yard when he investigated the cause of a commotion. On first trip he failed to discover the cause of the disturbance and was about to leave when the frightened hens commenced cackling for the second time. He made another circuit of the wire and in a far off corner came across a fine specimen of a wild turkey.

CHANCE TO RESTORE THE AMERICAN FLAG

Wonderful Opportunity Is Offered by the Present European War

President Powell Endorses Plan of Mayor Curley

The plan to aid American ships through tariff concessions in the present crisis as advocated by Mayor Curley of Boston at the dinner at the Copley Plaza hotel Tuesday, following the launching of the Pacific, is according to people well informed on the subject the most feasible plan ever offered to rebuild the merchant marine.

His particular method would be to issue certificates on goods shipped abroad on American vessels good in payment of customs duties on imports on American ships. In outlining the plan he said:

"Let the Government immediately give notice to the 20 odd treaty Powers that the United States proposes to abrogate so much of our commercial treaties as relate to the carriage of our foreign trade; let a law be placed on the statutes providing for the issuance of export custom certificates to every shipper who sends any goods to a foreign country; let these certificates be issued in the amount of 2 percent of the American selling value of the exported goods for each 1000 miles these goods are to be carried.

"Let these certificates be issued after the lading of the vessel and require the total amount of such certificates to be limited to 10 percent of the value of the goods on any single cargo and also that the rate to the ship per ton-mile will not exceed one mill.

"These customs certificates when issued will be good for only one purpose, namely, for the payment of duties on goods imported from abroad The Government, therefore, pays out no money whatever from the Treasury. There is no payment to shipbuilders or to ship owners, but there is issued a trading medium usable for only one purpose, for the payment of custom duties.

"It is believed this will result in immediately placing under the American flag a sufficient fleet to relieve the present serious situation.

"If necessary it may be provided that for a period of two years ships for the foreign trade may be purchased for American registry and benefit by these provisions, but that after this time all ships must be built by American labor, of American material, in American yards.

"If experience should show that the figures quoted above are too high or too low it is an easy matter to vary them to achieve the requirements desired."

PRESIDENT POWELL.

President Joseph W. Powell of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation when interviewed Tuesday afternoon on the proposal of Mayor Curley heartily endorsed the idea, favoring particularly the abrogation of the treaties. Mr. Powell issued the following statement:

"The proposition to take advantage of the present wonderful opportunity to restore the American flag to the seas as advanced by Mayor Curley seems so sound to me that little argument is needed to reinforce it. It is everywhere admitted as a result of

STREET WORK IS HELD UP

City Treasurer Unable to Raise Money Because of War

The war in Europe will probably have the effect of delaying for an indefinite period a large amount of contemplated street work in Quincy. During the last month the City Council was in session orders authorizing the borrowing of large sums for street work were passed.

These included $40,700 for the acceptance of new streets, $30,500 for the widening and rebuilding of Hancock street, and $7,000 for paving Penn street. None of these loans have been issued as yet and owing to the stringency of the money market at the present time, due to the war in Europe, the chances are that it will be some time before the City Treasurer will be able to place them.

It is well known that at the present time the money market is in a peculiar position, and money is hard to get, other than at a higher rate of interest than that named in the several orders, namely four per cent.

It was planned by the Commissioner to advertise immediately for bids for the Hancock and Penn street jobs, but for the reasons stated above the advertising will be delayed for some time.

Of the loans mentioned above that for Hancock street and the new streets extend over a period of ten years.

Another large loan which the Treasurer may have difficulty in placing at the rate named in the order is that for $23,000 for the addition to the Houghs Neck school, work on which has already commenced. The report of the City Auditor to Aug. 1 shows that this loan has not been issued at that time.

It would not be surprising if but little actual work was done on the streets this year unless the war cloud now hovering over Europe should disappear which seems unlikely.

TO VISIT LOCAL INDUSTRIES

Board of Trade to Repeat Trip of Last Year

The annual outing of the Quincy Board of Trade is announced for Wednesday, Aug. 19, on which day the board will visit some of the industries of the city. Just what the route will be has not been definitely determined. The notices call for the members to meet at the rooms in the Adams building at 11.30 when a lunch will be served, and half an hour later the party will leave on its tour of inspection.

On the return from the trip about 6 o'clock a dinner will be served eithat Norteman's at Houghs Neck or at Lee's Inn at Squantum.

All members of the Board who own autos are requested to loan them to the board for that day.

CITY CHARTER HEARINGS OPEN

The recess committee of the Legislature on City Charters opened its hearings on Tuesday, when citizens of Cambridge were heard.

On Thursday the committee will hear representatives of Waltham, Woburn and Lynn. Next Tuesday will be given over to Somerville and Medford and the following Thursday to Everett, Malden and Melrose.

A uniformity of city charters is proposed which will permit more home rule.

HIGHWAY EXPENSES

Quincy Expending More for Permanent Improvements

One expects that the highway expenses of Quincy will be large because of the area which the city covers and the amount of automobile traffic between Boston and the South Shore, together with heavy granite teaming.

According to the latest report of the Statistics of Municipal Finances, Quincy expenses for highways in 1910 amounted to $186,613 as follows:

Maintenance	$76,988
Outlays	109,625

As explained in previous articles "outlays" is supposed to mean permanent improvements.

For maintenance, the smaller cities of Gloucester and Beverly expended more, while the larger cities of Taunton and Everett expended less.

For outlays Quincy was among the highest of the 22 cities in the list, Haverhill being the only city that expended more. Somerville and Brockton expended about the same as Quincy.

The permanent street improvements of Quincy exceeded Malden, Salem, and Newton combined, all larger cities than Quincy.

The list below includes all cities of less than 80,000 and more than 15,000 population in 1910:

	Maintenance	Outlays
Somerville	$128,852	$109,293
Holyoke	77,637	80,944
Brockton	101,889	108,115
Malden	90,299	20,406
Haverhill	84,960	161,436
Salem	92,761	29,039
Newton	150,297	28,518
Fitchburg	94,050	71,698
Taunton	46,375	38,732
Everett	47,713	62,872
QUINCY	76,988	109,625

GINGER ALE AT LAUNCHING

U ed to Christen Two Coal Barges at Navy Yard

At the Boston navy yard on Tuesday two steel sea-going coal barges, valued at $20,000, were launched. The launching was witnessed by Capt DeWitt Coffman, commandant of the yard, as well as all the officers stationed at the yard and on the ships. A number of women, wives of the officers, were also present.

Ginger ale was used to christen the barges with, the bottles being smashed by Martha Perrill, the 5-year-old daughter of Commander Perrill, and Dorinda Backenhus, the 10-year-old daughter of Civil Engineer Backenhus. The keels were laid in May.

ALL ARE ANXIOUS TO REACH HOME

Little News Today From Quincy Tourists Abroad

When readers of the Daily Ledger hear from Quincy friends in Europe they are requested to telephone to the Daily Ledger,—Quincy 425, as their friends are anxious to hear from them.

Mrs. Effie Rhines of Miller Stile road today received a postal from her daughter, Mrs. George M. Harman, dated Munich July 24, which said the party were leaving that day for Inlsbruck, being headed toward Italy. She is with the Marsters tourists.

The name of Dr. Harold Curtis is in the list of cabin passengers on the White Star liner Arabic from Liverpool which is expected at Boston on Thursday.

Friends of Miss Mary Elcock of Marsh street are getting anxious for her safety. She has been in Switzerland and was supposed to have sailed from the Mediterranean on the steamship Canopic last Saturday and was due to reach home tomorrow Thursday. Late cable dispatches however state that the Canopic has not sailed from the Mediterranean, and there is no knowing when she will sail. For this reason considerable anxiety is felt for the safety of Miss Elcock.

Boston papers report that Americans will not be allowed to leave Germany. This applies to men, women and children. All Americans are anxious to reach the United States.

GROCERS' EXCURSION.

The annual outing of the Old Colony Grocers association was scheduled for today and as usual on Grocers' day it rained. The outing planned was a trip to Provincetown by steamer. Few if any from Quincy planned to take the trip, and it is safe to say that the Northeast storm of the last two days kicked up such a nasty sea that all would be more or less seasick.

EMERGENCY CALL.

Dr. Theodore W. Ely was arraigned before the district court this morning for speeding on the parkway. The officer testified that the doctor was making from 55 to 60 miles an hour. The physician however said that he was on an emergency call and that his speed was not as great as testified to. In view of it being an emergency call the case was placed on file.

OVERSEER OF POOR ALLOWED TO TESTIFY

At Civil Service Hearing on Vaughn Case Before Judge Avery

Supt. Vaughn Asks to be Reinstated at Almshouse

Judge Avery gave an important interpretation of the Civil Service statutes this morning when he allowed Perry Green, the overseer of the poor, to take the stand during a review of the reasons given for the removal of William Vaughn as keeper of the Quincy almshouse.

The charges which brought about the removal were preferred by Mr.

JUDGE AVERY.

Green. He later presided at public hearing on them, and his finding, after sessions extending over a period of several weeks, confirmed the removal.

Mr. Vaughn then petitioned Judge Avery to review the evidence as provided for under the law and it was commenced at 10.20 o'clock.

Up to the noon adjournment Mr. Green had testified only briefly as to why he was so influenced with conditions that he felt compelled to remove Mr. Vaughn but in that time he related a conversation that took place between Mayor Miller and Mrs. Vaughn which so affected her that she burst into tears.

Council J. J. McAnarney in opening for the defense asked for a ruling on the failure of Overseer Green to furnish a bill of particulars, and during his argument he said we may be establishing law for this Commonwealth by these acts taking place today.

Judge Avery answered that he was passing upon the acts of the officer, and not the legality of the public hearing, and Mr. McAnarney then said that his refusal to give specifications were part of his actions.

Judge Avery ruled the first hearing was a preliminary one and he was not to review how it was conducted. He said he did not think he was necessarily bound to cast reflections on the method pursued, if any there be, and he further said he did not think it proper for the court to pay any attention to the testimony given them.

City Solicitor Pinkham, representing the administration and the city, said he considered the delay between the closing of the city's case and the opening of the defense sufficient time to prepare a case and shortly after Mr. Green, one of the 18 witnesses sworn, was placed on the stand.

Counsel for both sides, in their arguments which took up the greater part of the morning, intimated that the case was an important one under Civil service laws.

Counsel McAnarney contended that Mr. Green being placed on the stand made the case an appeal and not a review, and Judge Avery in permitting Mr. Green to testify said he would be glad to go over any exceptions with the attorneys if they cared to take the case to the Supreme Judicial court for a ruling on points.

Mr. Green in direct examination said Mr. Vaughn, although ordered to clean up the place, failed to do so, and that about a quart of dead flies were found in old scales, and that it took a long time to get manure removed from a stable.

He said he found the clothing of the inmates fair in some cases and that men wore shoes without soles. He admitted he refused to honor a requisition for cloth on the advice of a person experienced in almshouse work.

He said a regulation was in effect that did not allow inmates to speak during certain hours, and that some were scared. He characterized their condition as browbeaten but the answer was not allowed.

He spoke of the visit of Mayor Miller and repeated conversation he heard take place between His Honor, and Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn. Both he said had used profane language. Vaughn said he would get me, that he was a poll tax payer, a lodge member and would get me. Mrs. Vaughn used rough language and when Mr. Green repeated it in an undertone, audible only in the front of the court room, Mrs. Vaughn burst into tears.

Mr. Green spoke of different occasions when he investigated conditions, and said that one time inmates had been called guttersnipes and paupers. He said from an agricultural condition the farm was in a neglected condition and that one cow milked herself until she was given the proper care.

Nature study walks give the girls a good quiet chance to talk over the fashions.

There are some automobile owners so grossly discourteous as to invite their friends to go to ride, and then not take them to some hotel and give them a square meal.

Fifteen of the 33 Massachusetts cities have now reported their 1914 tax rates. Twelve show increases and only three are less.

It is claimed the Indians will soon be extinct if they are not allowed to roam over the plains as formerly. At least they should be given the satisfaction of sleeping on the ground in rainy weather.

The University of Minnesota extension course teaches short story writing. After reading the summer fiction numbers of several magazines, it would seem as if any correspondence school could teach the art in three weeks.

SUMMER ADVERTISING.

A careful study of the advertising in the big metropolitan papers shows that a great deal of costly publicity work is done in the summer. The big department stores do not quit in July and August. Their sales may not be quite up to the level of spring or fall. All the more reason, according to their philosophy, why they should push for trade.

They argue that the profitable store is the one that is busy all the year around at the same level. The advertising that helps keep their trade normal in summer is really more profitable than the advertising that brings in more trade at a time when people are naturally buying freely.

The advertising men who handle this big store work are good guides for the smaller merchants to follow. They have carefully analyzed the various theories of advertising. If they believe it pays to advertise largely in summer, it will pay for their competitors throughout retail trade.

In smaller cities, there is some little tendency for advertising to drop in summer. It is done on the theory that trade tends to drop at that time. It is about as sensible as if a farmer should refuse to feed his horse because the beast was a little more tired than usual. It is when the animal flags that the farmer sees that he is in need of the best grain.

If trade flags in summer, put the tonic of advertising into it!

Merchants may fear a drop in trade in summer, but one surmises that it is apt to be less than they anticipate. Of course forehanded people with plenty of money stocked up largely with summer goods some time ago. But many cautious people have waited until now for bargains. Many people are away, but many strangers are in this vicinity and disposed to buy if their trade is solicited.

ALL A DELUSION.

Spending fifty thousand dollars of the American people's money to hold a congress for the promotion of thrift might prove the paying investment its enthusiastic promoters are predicting it would be, if the people of this country or any considerable number of them were truly longing to know the secret of prosperity and had pledged themselves to put into operation all the points available from foreign countries. But with conditions as they are, with the Americans the most prodigal people on earth, and revelling in their prodigality under the delusion that anything else is petty and narrow, and death to a good time, the French and Swiss and English gentlemen whom Mr. Simon W. Straus has found willing to come over here and tell wherein thrift is the foundation of their countries' prosperity, might just as well save themselves the bother, so far as any hope of reform lies in such a movement. Mr. Strauss and the few other people who see the need of the promotion of thrift would enjoy such a congress as is proposed in connection with the Panama exposition, but who believes for a moment that the people who need the rebuke and the advice would drop in to get it? Some stimulus it would prove to the leaders of the movement to preach thrift to their fellow men. The American Society of thrift would doubtless receive some considerable accessions to its membership for a while—but how many fewer cigarettes would be smoked, how much less gum chewed, how much less money spent in candy and summer drinks? How much more rationality in living generally, how much more conserving of household supplies, how much more economy practiced in industrial processes? Certainly the value of reform movements can not be measured by the immediate results; but thrift will never be successfully taught by forming clubs or holding conventions. Thoughtful people can resolve in favor of it, but only the mass of the people can make it a reality. What Mr. Strauss has learned in his five months of investigation in France and Switzerland and England that would profit the people to know, we wish he could find some way of making the American people hear and understand; but an international congress at San Francisco would leave them practically untouched, so that the expenditure of fifty thousand dollars from the national treasury for the purpose would be an example of lavishness quite at variance with the object of the society that seeks the appropriation.—New Bedford Standard.

MEXICO AN ISSUE.

If we have an warrants to govern in the Philippines we have yet greater warrant to govern in Mexico. We need Mexico and we do not need the Philippines. But no party would dare go to the country upon a proposal to get out of the Philippines. Sooner or later we shall have to go to Mexico, or perpetrate a ridiculous and humiliating back-down. That, in spite of his uplift theories, ought to be clear to Mr. Wilson.

The President mistakes the people and the time if he thinks there is any strong or general trend of popular thought responsive to his idea of universal brotherhood. His sentiments are as sentiments noble. His words, though trite, are still resounding. Yet are they but figures-of-speech? We love no country except our own. We owe duty to none other. Assuredly we do not love the Mexicans.

It were a dangerous policy, to say nothing about what kind of politics it would be to adopt into plan of campaign, or any party platform, the variegated and spectacular conception of uplift provided by the space-writers in the cheap periodicals and apparently adopted into his creed by the President. It were also an unwise and unpractical policy attempt to follow American capital into other lands either to restrain or promote its investments. Everywhere Scandal walks hand in hand with big business.

Whichever way we take it, from whatever side we view it, Mexico is exceptional and baffling. For three thousand miles it lies along side of us. Once we were in military possession of the whole of it. We retained possession of a goodly part of it. Had we retained the rest it had been better for Mexico and the Mexicans.

There will never be law and order until we exercise sovereignty such as England exercises in Egypt if not such actual control as we have set up in the Philippines, the Cuban episode being an enlightening example. Nobody wants war. But even war were preferable to prolonging the conditions that now prevail, and, having gone the lengths we have, if additional be forced upon us, we should make their conclusions thorough and durable. When an army at Vera Cruz and a fleet at Tampico, but three courses are open to us; to settle things our own way, to settle them to suit some Chief, or group ever hanging on the edge of chronic revolution, or to tuck tail and come away, leaving the rival brigands to fight it out among themselves. We can afford no more equivocation. We must go farther, or backward. We are in for ugly work and may as well be killed for a sheep as a lamb. In no event shall we conciliate the warring factions. Nor can we get results this side the City of Mexico.

The people of the United States are willing to allow their President both latitude and discretion—they have indeed done this abundantly throughout these proceedings—but they will not follow him on a wild goose chase after soap bubbles nor a quixotic crusade of miscellaneous uplift such as he indicates, nor rest content to pay considerable sums and get no indemnity for what he calls liberty, equality and justice in Mexico.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

ALL EUROPE IS NOW IN CONFLICT

English Ultimatum Is Rejected by the Germans

WAR IS PROMPTLY DECLARED BY BOTH

"The Day" to Which Officers on German Warships Have Drunk a Silent Toast Each Nightfall Has Come—Greatest Naval Battle In History Must Occur Very Soon—Supreme Confidence In Genius of Heads of British Army and Navy—Germany Now Against All Rest of Europe—Kaiser Shows Hatred of France In Speech at Opening of Parliament, In Which He Blames Russia For Wide Range of Hostilities

London, Aug. 5.—Great Britain declared war on Germany last night.

The momentous decision of the British government, for which the whole world had been waiting, came before the expiration of the time limit set by Great Britain in her ultimatum to Germany demanding a satisfactory reply on the question of Belgian neutrality.

Germany's reply was the summary rejection of the request that Belgian neutrality should be respected.

The British ambassador at Berlin thereupon received his passports and the British government notified Germany that a state of war existed between the two countries.

All Europe Involved

All Europe is now in arms. On the one hand Austria-Hungary and Germany are opposed by Russia, France and Great Britain, Servia and Montenegro.

Italy has declared her neutrality, but is mobilizing. Belgium, Holland and Switzerland have mobilized. The German demand that the Belgian government should permit the free passage of German troops through Belgium was answered by hasty preparations to resist such an advance across Belgian territory.

Sweden has made no answer to inquiries from Russia and Germany regarding her attitude, but is preparing a proclamation of neutrality.

Austria-Hungary for the moment has retired from her campaign against Servia for the purpose of holding back Russia. Servia has mobilized with the reported intention of invading Bosnia.

Great Naval Battle Near

Within a few hours there will probably be fought the greatest naval battle in history, a battle that will decide for weal or woe the future of Europe.

The ultimatum delivered by Great Britain to Germany would have expired at midnight. At 11 o'clock a peremptory refusal to Great Britain's demands was received in London. Almost simultaneously Great Britain and Germany declared war.

Out into the North sea, from the south and from the east, flashed the wireless messages. No one knows what has happened on the waters since that moment. But the gray ships are now unleashed. For years the British have listened to the tale of German officers on board of every German warship drinking a silent toast at nightfall of each day to "The Day."

And now "The Day" has come, the most fateful day in Europe's history since Napoleon ranged himself against the united powers just as William II. is doing today.

Kitchener Commands Troops

The British army will not long remain upon English soil. With Lord Kitchener in supreme command, it will be sent across the channel, either into France or Belgium.

Only one unbelievable event can hold it back upon these shores. That is the annihilation of the British fleet in the battle now impending in the North sea.

Great Britain is aflame with anger against Germany. An old score is at last to be settled and London is already prophesying the passing of Germany from dominant powers of the world.

Supreme confidence is felt in the genius of Kitchener and Callaghan. England believes that they will take their place beside Wellington and Nelson. Upon their shoulders rests the future of millions.

On the eve of the most stupendous world conflict ever waged, London is still almost stupefied over the mad speed of events. When Germany challenged Russia and France in quick succession, making no attempt to postpone one conflict until the first could be settled, statesmen wondered if the nation had suddenly gone insane.

Action Not Understood

Now that Great Britain has been involved upon a point of neutrality that might easily have been put off for days by the kaiser and his advisers, the great question that is agitating every mind is: What hidden reliance has Germany?

Everyone knows the strength of the German army and the astounding development of the navy. But everyone believes that were the army and navy multiplied ten-fold it could not cope against practically all the rest of Europe, especially in an offensive war such as Germany has determined upon.

Alarmists, dazed by Germany's apparent desire to have no allies except distracted Austria, are prophesying that Germany has some unknown explosive or some undreamed of new instrument of war.

But the general impression in London is that the desire for war, which has been seething in German breasts for a quarter of a century, has stultified the thinking ability of the nation.

To London observers it seems evident that Britain's ancient enemy has determined upon an arrogant suicide.

MAKES THRUST AT FRANCE

Kaiser Says Ill Will Against His Empire Has Existed For Years

Emperor William opened the imperial parliament with an important speech from the throne, of which the text was partly as follows:

"The world has been a witness of the indefatigable manner in which we stood in the front rank during the worries and trouble of the recent years in the endeavor to spare the nations of Europe from a war between the great powers.

"The greatest perils which had arisen, owing to the events in the Balkans, appeared to have been overcome, but then the assassination of my friend, the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, opened up a great abyss.

"My ally, the Emperor Francis Joseph, was compelled to take up arms for the protection of his empire against the dangerous agitation existing in a neighboring state. In pursuing its interests the Russian empire stepped in the way of Austria-Hungary.

"The imperial Russian government, giving way to an insatiable nationalism, has stepped to the side of a state which through a criminal act has brought about the calamity of this war.

"That France also placed herself on the side of our opponent was not surprising to us. Only too often had our efforts to bring about more friendly relations with the French republic come into contact with the exepression of old hopes and with long-standing malice.

"The present situation arose not from temporary conflicts of interest or diplomatic combinations, but is the result of ill-will existing for years against the strength and prosperity of the German empire.

"We are not pushed on by a desire of conquest. We are moved by the unbending desire to secure for ourselves and those coming after us the place on which God has put us."

"UNJUSTLY PROVOKED"

France Declared Prepared to Defend Herself Against Germany

Premier Viviani made the French government's statement on the war in the chamber of deputies and his remarks created the deepest enthusiasm.

He detailed at great length the history of the events of the past fortnight, presenting strong arguments in the case against Germany, which, he declared, "irrefutably and logically justified the acts of the French government."

During the course of his remarks the premier said: "France has been unjustly provoked; she did not seek the war; she has done all in her power to avoid it. Since war was forced upon her, she will defend herself against Germany and any other power who, not yet having made known its sentiments, takes part by the side of Germany in the conflict between the two countries.

"Against an attack which violates all the laws of equity and all the rights of nations, we have now taken all necessary dispositions. They will be carried out rigorously, methodically and calmly. The mobilization of the French army is proceeding with remarkable energy and boundless enthusiasm."

OPERATIONS AT SEA

French Naval Station Reported Bombarded by German Cruiser

A dispatch from the French naval station of Bona, Algeria, says the German cruiser Breslau bombarded the town, afterward steaming off at full speed in a westerly direction. The cruiser fired eight broadsides—some sixty shots—into the town. One man was killed and some buildings were damaged.

A dispatch from Amsterdam says the Germans have captured Vise, Belgium, a town with a population of 3000, situated eight miles northeast of Liege.

A late dispatch from Algiers says it is reported that French warships have sunk the German cruiser Panther.

According to an unofficial report from Algiers the French fleet has captured two German cruisers, the Goeben and Breslau.

The British admiralty announces that that the government has taken over the two battleships—one completed and the other nearly completed—ordered in England by Turkey and two destroyers ordered by Chile.

FEARFUL OF REVOLUTION

Italy Mobilizes Her Army, but Hesitates to Join Austria

The Italian army is mobilized. Details are suppressed by the censor, but it is certain that both the army and navy are now on a complete war footing.

Germany continues her efforts to get the government to reconsider its declaration of neutrality, but so far these appeals have been in vain.

It is admitted that for the government to go to war now to help Germany and Austria, with the country aflame with most bitter anti-Austrian feeling, would mean an immediate revolution in which the loyalty of the Italian army would be submitted to an almost impossible test.

SWISS ARMY MOBILIZED

All Railway Bridges and Mountain Passes Are Fully Occupied

The military mobilization of Switzerland has been completed. Every able-bodied man has responded to the colors, and every railway bridge and mountain pass is occupied.

The precautions have extended to the commandering of all available provisions, and all means of locomotion. Even bicycles have been requisitioned.

TOURISTS ARE HELD !

No Americans Allowed to Leave Germany During Mobilization

No Americans can leave Germany for the present. Through the German embassy at Newport, the state department has been informed that during the progress of mobilization no foreigners will be permitted to depart.

The German order applies alike to men, women and children, although its purpose is to prevent the flight from Germany of men eligible for military service under pretext of citizenship.

The inclusion of women and children in the decree is explained by the apprehension that valuable military information regarding the process of mobilization and especially the points of concentration of the German army forces, might be conveyed to the enemy by women.

AGREEMENT IS SIGNED

No Railroad Strike In West For At Least Eighteen Months

Washington, Aug. 5.—Peace in the railway world west of the Mississippi river for the next eighteen months at least, was assured when representatives of ninety-eight railroads and 60,000 enginemen and firemen signed an agreement to submit their differences to arbitration.

It was the culminating act in efforts of the federal board of mediation to avert what President Wilson characterized as a "national disaster," and followed the president's appeal to the railroads to place patriotism above party interests.

Woman Horsethief Confesses

Attleboro, Mass., Aug. 5.—Mrs. Mabel A. L. Ribinson, a 22-year-old vaudeville actress, charged with being a horse thief, pleaded guilty in court here. The court suspended sentence pending investigation of her story.

Villa Breaks With Carranza

El Paso, Tex., Aug. 5.—General Villa virtually has proclaimed his independence from the Carranza government. According to reports from all parts of northern Mexico, Villa has begun reorganizing his army.

Woman Killed With Flatiron

Colebrook, N. H., Aug. 5.—Mrs. Fred Brown, wife of a farm hand, received a blow on the head from a flatiron during a quarrel with her husband and died a few hours later. Search is being made for Brown.

RUSSIA HAS ALL TO GAIN BY WAR WHICH IMPERILS ENGLAND'S POWER

Slav or Teuton Will Rule Destinies of Europe if Nations Fight to Finish.

[From the New York World.]

GERMANY and Austria of the triple alliance, perhaps also with Italy, their third partner in this pact of nations, stand on one side of the European battlefield grimly ready to meet their foes.

Russia, with England and France, bound together in the more elastic union of the triple entente, have unsheathed their swords in the face of the triple alliance.

It is now a war of giants. They will fight to the death unless all signs fail. It will be the most stupendous war mankind has ever known. The mind is staggered in contemplating its stupendous possibilities in carnage, in devastation, in ruin of commerce and international profit making, in the final wounds of war which a century may not heal.

Little Servia is lost sight of. She is but a cipher in the game, a pawn upon the checkerboard. Her wrongs of the past, her crimes of the present, are of small importance in this herculean struggle of titanic forces.

We shall hear much of encounters on land and sea if the conflagration of a great war sweeps over Europe, lighting its torch in the nations of the triple alliance and the triple entente. But two vital questions will be ever uppermost in the minds of the statesmen who sit at the helm of government in the capitals of St. Petersburg, London, Vienna, Berlin, Paris and Rome directing the affairs of their different states. They have the heritage of the past to guide them, the wise counsels left by statesmen long since dead and gone, but who knew how to govern and how to guide, who learned it by success and by defeat. They have the future in their minds and policies that are worked out slowly, little by little, now a gain, now a loss. The objective points remain ever the same.

Two Vital Questions.

The two vital questions of this war will be:

The possibility of Russia becoming so powerful that she can go to Constantinople and stay there.

The possibility of England becoming so weakened that she can no longer adequately guard her passage to and fro through the Mediterranean sea.

These are questions, both of them older than either the triple alliance or the triple entente. They are responsible, as primary motives, for the formation of both of these divisions of national powers. They will inevitably become ultimately affected one way or the other by the consequences of this war.

The arraying of Germany and Austria against Russia, with whatever assistance Russia may get from her allies, is spoken of as a conflict for the supremacy of the Teuton or the Slav in Europe. But the supremacy of the Slav means nothing more or less than that the mighty Slav nation of the north, ever winged like a huge bird ready for flight to the sea, shall have freedom to make its way to Constantinople and from thence, through the Bosphorus and the Aegean sea, to Asia.

The Mediterranean.

And the supremacy of the Teuton—in other words, the victory of Austria and Germany—means nothing more or less than that England shall lose her liberty of passage through the Mediterranean.

Russia must needs go through the Black sea and the Bosphorus to get close to her Asiatic possessions. England must needs have free passage through the Mediterranean in order to be able to obtain food for sustenance.

Austria and Germany may fight together against Russia on one pretext or another, but what they want finally as their reward is control of the Mediterranean sea. Germany has no place upon it to call her own. With an enormous fleet, second only to that of mighty England, Germany has no Mediterranean port. Austria has the port of Trieste and that of Fiume upon the Adriatic, an arm of the Mediterranean sea. Could the two Teuton powers prevail in this war they could bottle up England's food supplies coming to her from all parts of the world through the Suez canal and from there into the Mediterranean, from Egypt, over which England has a protectorate; from Australia, New Zealand and from India.

England raises in her own land of Great Britain such a small part of the food she needs daily to put upon her tables that if could be called nothing. With Ireland with nothing more her people would soon starve to death. She is practically the only country on earth so dependent. She gets most of her food through the Mediterranean sea. Austria and Germany are fighting to control this, her base of supplies. It is England's vulnerable point, the Achilles heel of her power. Her foes can, by striking her there, give her the wound of death.

One must take a swift glance to the Berlin congress of 1878 to find the foundation stone upon which is built the structure of diplomatic relations in Europe today. That congress was called because Russia had been victorious over the Turks for more than a year and was preparing to enter Constantinople and stay there. England was at that time the power which forbade Russia take this step. It would so augment Russia's power as to disturb the balance in Europe as well as virtually annihilating the Turkish empire in Europe. England was determined that it should not be.

A British fleet entered the Dardanelles and anchored in view of Constantinople and in view of the Russians. Negotiations were then begun between England and Russia and the congress of Berlin was the result. Its terms were signed July 13, 1878, and included:

First.—The payment of a war indemnity to Russia in return for which Russia was to leave Constantinople to the Turks.

Second.—The occupation of Bosnia and Herzegovina by Austrian troops, put there only to maintain order for Turkey, to whom these states belonged.

Third.—The recognition of Servia and Montenegro as independent states.

The treaty of Berlin was broken by Austria when in 1909 she seized Bosnia and Herzegovina from the feeble hands of Turkey and made them her own. It was broken by Germany when the kaiser rattled his sword in St. Petersburg and told the czar that Germany would stand by Austria in this stealing of states.

Will it now be broken by Russia by the seizure of the long coveted Constantinople? Will England be driven by the desperation engendered by her own perils at the Mediterranean to the point of allowing Russia to go now to Constantinople? This war will answer both questions, in part, certainly, perhaps in full.

The Triple Alliance.

The triple alliance was formed in 1883 between Austro-Hungary, Germany and Italy for the purpose of checking the encroachments of Russia and France. By its provisions the three powers were bound to support one another in certain contingencies. Its terms were made more definite in 1887, although its exact terms have never been divulged. The alliance was renewed in 1902 and in 1907. The period of its last renewal extended to June 14, 1914. The world has been led to believe that it has again been renewed for another twelve years. There are indications that Italy feels at liberty to contemplate withdrawing from the triple alliance. Secret negotiations seem to be going on to enroll her with the triple entente. She has never been a contented partner with Austria and Germany.

Metternich, Austria's most famous prime minister, who died in 1858, called Italy "merely a geographical expression." At that time Metternich was correct, as far as Italy's international importance was concerned. Italy was torn by internal dissensions, and Austria was in possession of its beloved city of Venice as well as its whole province of Lombardy. They lay close to Austria and to Triest, Austria's Adriatic port of today. Then came Italian unity under Victor Emmanuel II. and Garibaldi. The French, in fighting the Austrians in Italy, won victories for Italy's new king and kingdom. At the battle of Solferino Napoleon III. routed the Austrians and then took Italy under French protection. Soon after that came the troublous times of Prussia and Austria in which Italy took a part, and, strangely enough, received her reward from Bismarck's hands. The iron chancellor was not accustomed to fulfil his promises so well.

A Bismarck Prophecy.

Bismarck, soon after he entered the Prussian service of state, made an extraordinary speech in parliament that Prussia could never be great until she had had three wars, one with Denmark, one with Austria and one with France. Older heads told him he was talking nonsense. But as soon as he came into power the wars began.

Denmark had no king; the succession was disputed. Prussia offered her candidate for the throne. Denmark refused to accept him. Prussia went to war under the pretext. Austria was told by Bismarck that if she helped Prussia at this time she should receive a part of the Danish province of Schleswig-Holstein, which had belonged to Prussia 200 years before. Austria helped to fight Prussia's battles on land and sea, but when the war was finished and Denmark, humbled and conquered, had to give up Schleswig-Holstein, it all went to Prussia, no part of it to Austria. The present empress of Germany, William II's consort, sits beside her husband upon his throne because she was a princess of Schleswig-Holstein and could help to make the people of that province contented to remain under Prussian rule.

In 1866 Francis Joseph of Austria declared war against Prussia to force from it the territory Austria had been promised. Bismarck had tricked Francis Joseph before; now he tricked him again. It was Bismarck's business to provoke Austria into this war against Prussia. Bavaria, Wurtemberg, Baden, Hesse, Saxony and Hanover, all states now of the German empire, fought for Austria and against Prussia in this war. Italy was Prussia's only ally. The war lasted seven weeks. Prussia ended it at the battle of Sadowa in Bohemia and ended at the same time and forever Austria's dominance among the Germanic states, assuming that place herself. And after the third war of Bismarck's prophecy, the war with France in 1870, Prussia became the head of the German empire.

Every child in the schoolroom knows of that Franco-Prussian war in 1870, when the victorious troops of the Germans entered Paris and proclaimed William I. German emperor at Versailles, exacting as a war indemnity from France such an enormous sum that Bismarck expected the paying of it would cripple France for generations, exacting also the possession of France's fairest provinces of Alsace and Lorraine. That is a wound which still remains raw and bleeding on France's breast. It will never be healed until France has taken vengeance upon Germany and has Alsace and Lorraine back again.

The Triple Entente.

The triple entente, that friendly bond between Russia, England and France, is the legacy which Edward VII. of England has left to posterity. He was the moving spirit in its formation. It began with an agreement entered into between Great Britain and France in 1904, and was completed by an agreement between Russia and the two others in 1907.

Its formation was actuated by several things, but chiefly by the growth of Germany's naval power. That could be interpreted only as a menace to England, for England is the supreme lord of the seas. Edward VII., the uncle of Emperor William II., used his powers of diplomacy to good advantage to protect England against William's designs. Russia and France had long been friends.

England's admittance into the bond with them has made the triple entente a formidable force to reckon with.

Will Italy remain in the triple alliance or will she deliver her friendship over to the triple entente? England has long been making overtures to Italy. England wants her friendly services to help guard the Mediterranean sea. Great Britain cannot spare ships to guard it herself. She has to have them massed in the North sea to meet any sudden attack the German newborn but mighty fleet might make. Otherwise Emperor William would be landing with his army upon the English coast. The English firmly believe that he seeks to be crowned in Westminster abbey as the lord of the British Isles.

Italy's Position.

France is now guarding the Mediterranean for England. Italy could help and the work would still be better done, so England thinks.

Bismarck declared that Prussia gave Italy her independence by forcing Austria to give up to her Venice and Lombardy. But it was by a Bismarckian trick which prevented Napoleon III. from doing this for Italy himself. The Italians are grateful to France and Napoleon III. They feel no debt of gratitude to Prussia. They detest the very name of Austrian.

An Austrian army officer could not hope to spend a day in Rome without being openly insulted on the streets. An Italian army officer in Vienna would meet the same fate. Today in Rome the queen of Italy is sadly mourning the humiliation which Austria is meting out to Servia, the land of her own race and people. Servia's queen if alive today would be the sister to Italy's queen. The old king of Montenegro was the father of both. Italy will not help Austria and Germany to spread ruin and devastation in Servia if Italy's queen can make it otherwise. Italy will forsake the triple alliance and join the triple entente if she can bring it to pass.

Hungarian Women Are the Bosses.

From the highest class to the poorest peasant the position held by the Hungarian woman is one of respect and equality. She is the head of the household, and all the money which the man earns is turned over to his wife, who has full financial control. In the upper classes no man makes a business move or a political move without discussing the matter with his wife.

EUROPEAN WAR CHESTS; AMERICAN RESOURCES.

The following figures show the resources of the United States and the war funds available in foreign countries which are involved in the Austro-Servian imbroglio:

The United States treasury's gold supply at the close of business on July 27 represented $1,288,216,783, divided as follows: General fund, $84,303,914; currency trust funds, $1,061,812,869; greenback reserve fund, $150,000,000.

At the end of the same business day the gold coin and billion stored were as follows: Philadelphia, $293,324,193.28; San Francisco, $129,405,248.52; Denver, $470,574,482.68; total, $893,304,824.48. The remainder of the supply, representing $394,851,959, is on deposit in subtreasuries of the United States, subject to quick disposition.

The latest report from Germany shows that the Berlin government has a war fund of $60,000,000 in addition to a gold supply of $327,770,000. Russia has the largest gold reserve of any of the European nations, amounting to $882,500,000. France comes next with $808,500,000. England's gold reserve amounts to $197,-999,535. Austria-Hungary is prepared for war with a reserve of $261,500,000. Italy has a reserve of $228,500,000. These are the latest figures available at the office of the director of the mint. The available gold of Germany and England will be increased by the heavy exportations from the United States.

Highest Figures in History of Several Cities

The city of Everett announces a tax rate of $23.00, which is an increase of $2.30. The amount to be raised is $626,376, as compared with $531,000 last year. The valuation is $21,800,300, an increase of more than $1,000,000. Of this valuation the personal property is estimated at $5,098,000.

The tax rate of Watertown is $21.20, this being the second highest tax rate in the history of the town and is an increase of $2 over last year's rate. The assessors report a decrease in valuation of $190,650 in personal property and an increase in real estate valuation of $558,500. The total personal property valuation is $2,788,550, and the total real estate $15,140,200.

The tax rates reported to date are as follows, over one half being larger than in 1913:

SUIT BY ADMINISTRATOR.

Among the civil suits filed at Dedham on Tuesday was that of William P. Thompson of Quincy against Teresa B. Hunt of Brookline to recover money the latter is alleged to have secured through fraud from her mother Winifred Hunt, of whose estate Mr. Thompson is the administrator. It is alleged that $5,500 was procured by the daughter, with whom Mrs. Hunt was living at the time of her death last March.

countless investigations, that the cost of building ships in the United States, and the cost of operating ships under the American flag, is very much higher than the cost of building ships abroad and the cost of operating them under the laws of foreign nations.

"It is, therefore, perfectly evident that before American capital will go into shipping for our over-sea trade that a reasonable opportunity for employing this capital profitably must be offered.

"Moreover, any proposition that meets with approval must be simple in its form and must not offend the sensibility of those of our politicians who are scared at the name of subsidy when applied, however remotely to shipping or shipbuilding, however little the term may hurt them when a River and Harbor bill of Good Roads bill is under consideration.

"Is seems to me that by properly apportioning the percentage of proposed custom certificates to be issued and by properly apportioning the total percentage and the maximum payment per ton mile, a law along the proposed lines could be made that would be simple to enforce, and that would surely result in bringing a great volume of capital into this, for the present generation of Americans, new field.

"It does not seem to me that our treaty relations are in any way a bar to this action. A number of foreign nations, particularly South American nations, have abrogated their commerce treaties, while if I understand correctly, this government has operated without a commerce treaty with Russia for something over a year and with little inconvenience to trade in general, so far as I am informed.

"The treaties themselves give us the right to abrogate them, or any part of them, and the manly thing for this country to do is to face the situation squarely, to serve notice of our intention to change these treaties; to lay out our proposed law to cover the difference in first cost and in cost of operation of ships under our flag, and then put the law into effect as soon as possible. Pending the abrogation of these treaties we must give the benefit of law to any foreign vessels that may be upon the seas.

"But if, as I believe the present war is not to be of short duration, and if, as is more than possible, German privateers are successful in driving a considerable part of the British commerce from the sea, should Great Britain be drawn in to this titantic struggle, the amount of business that could be carried by countries having treaties with us, will not be sufficient proportion to be a matter of any consequence.

"It is most essential that the present opportunity should not be lost and that an effective and lasting method of restoring the United States to her proper position as a world carrier will be achieved without delay."

Advertisers Ask Only A Fair Trial

By HOLLAND.

ADVERTISERS do not attempt to make you agree to buy their goods for the rest of your life. They only want you to give their wares a trial, to subject them to actual test by actual use, and then be guided by experience.

Could anything prove more clearly that the advertiser has supreme confidence in his product, that he is absolutely certain that it will please you, that it will be all he says it is?

It would indeed be foolish to spend money to induce you to buy an article that would prove unsatisfactory and would result in your telling friends and neighbors of your experience. Advertisers spend millions making their trademarks known, and in order to make their trademarks valuable they must stand for a certain standard of worth. Having made their trademarks known, manufacturers exert every effort to keep the goods up to the expected high grade.

OVERLOOKING LITTLE THINGS.

(Dedham Transcript.)

When death claims them they are still grasping, but not possessing.

It was the result of starting wrong.

And so it is with many men, with some women, in the matter of newspaper advertising, although the ranks of the overlookers are becoming thinner every year.

No line in the local paper ever escapes them, lest it be something which might be turned to their advantage.

No advertisement is ever overlocked, lest is contain an article of which they are in need and which may be purchased to a better advantage now than later.

All people read the advertisements. Some make it a business, have reduced it to a science, and extract the greatest benefit from even the most insignificant things.

It is a big stone in the foundation of their success.

No merchant spends money on printer's ink unless he has something worth offering, something you need, and sooner or later must have.

No one can afford to overlook these advestisements, lest he miss an opportunity to secure an article of need at a minimum price.

No man or woman who starts right with a firm grasp on the little things will fail later in life to attain the big ones.

SMOKERS BE CAREFUL.

(Brockton Enterprise.)

Why wouldn't it be worth while for superintendents and foreman in Brockton and in all other places to give a little special attention to the smoking in their places? Why wouldn't it be worth while to note, in places where smoking is allowed, what disposition is made of the burning cigar and cigarette butts? One favorite way of some smokers is to throw the butt on the floor, scrape a shoe over it and pass on. It is often noticeable in such cases that the fire remains and smoulders till somebody else extinguishes it, or until in due time it burns itself out. On floors that may be saturated with oils or covered with bits of waste the fire may not die out, but may keep going till it sarts serious trouble. Also, in old buildings where the floors are not tight hot ashes may drop down between cracks in the floor and suddenly, when no one is expecting it, there may issue forth a burst of flame that may start a panic and do immense damage. There is sometimes much carelessness shown also in dumping of the hot contents of pipes. Carelessness by smokers has caused so much disaster of late that the whole subject of smoking in places where many people congregate daily is worth taking up and investigating closely by employers and their head men.

HOW FRENCH PEOPLE CURE STOMACH TROUBLE

A household remedy of the French peasantry, consisting of pure vegetable oil, and said to possess wonderful merit in the treatment of stomach, liver and intestinal troubles, has been introduced in this country by George H. Mayr, who for twenty years has been one of the leading down town druggists of Chicago and who himself was cured by its use. So quick and effective is its action that a single dose is usually enough to bring pronounced relief in the most stubborn cases, and many people who have tried it declare they never heard of anything to produce such remarkable results in so short a time. It is known as Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy and can now be had at almost any drug store. It is now sold here by Clyde T. Cox and druggists everywhere.

DARTWELL FIRST TUESDAY

The Maria L. Also Leads Her Class at Marblehead

Tuesday's race under the auspices of the Boston Yacht club off Marblehead was the largest attended of any held by this club. There were 116 starters in the several classes, a strong breeze from the northeast kicking up a nasty sea in the bay, giving the yachts a fine opportunity to show what they could do in rough weather.

In the sonder class there were fourteen starters, which included all of the yachts that will take part in the races for the Quincy challenge cup later in the month. As in Monday's race the Sprig was a winner, the old Harpoon finishing well down the list.

The Lomaru of Ralph Winslow started in class I but had to withdraw probably on account of the rough seas. The Dorchen of A. W. Finlay didn't show up well and finished at the bottom of the list.

The Dartwell of ex-Commodore Whittemore was a winner in class D composed almost wholly of Quincy boats, the Iris finishing in second position and the Clara third. The order of finish of the remaining of this class was Grayling, Mudjekeewis and Dolly III.

In class A the Maria L of A. W. Finlay was the first to cross the line at the finish having a lead of nearly three minutes corrected time over the Virginia.

In class H the Winona finished with a lead of two minutes corrected time over the Rambler.

The St. Mary's and Knights of Columbus baseball team of the West Quincy league have disbanded, leaving the Copeland and D. of C. 22, A. O. H., in the field to battle it out for the championship. A series of five games has been arranged, the first played last Saturday going 10 innings. This week Saturday the Hibernians will try to make up for the loss of Saturday and Manager McTiernan will strengthen his braves in the weaker positions.

Although today is stormy over 100 entered the open golf meeting under the auspices of the Wollaston Golf club.

GOOD SPORTS IN WARD THREE

Boys and Girls Events on the Playground

In only one class Tuesday at Ward Three was there any dearth of entries and that was in the younger girls grade. Mabel Beaton so far outclasses the balance of the other little girls that they will not run or compete against her. As a result she was awarded 15 points.

In the boys, Class B potato race there were over 25 entries, and it was necessary to run seven heats to determine the four point winners; Carl Westberg finally beating out Joe Cahill for first place.

The summary of events:

75 YARD DASH, BOYS.

Class C,—won by H. O'Brien, 2nd, E. Barry; 3rd, L. Curtin; 4th, C. Carson.

STOP THE SHINGLING.

It may be said that the abolition of shingles in cities is a hopeless undertaking. It is not. The life of the shingles now sold is short—perhaps not more than eight years. A law forbidding the repairing of wooden roofs rigorously enforced will relieve the city of the menace of shingles, and the use of fireproof materials imposes no hardship because the difference between the cost of wood and non-combustible roofing is not large—in fact, the reduction of maintenance expenses makes slate or something as good more economical than any product of the sawmill.

Thus when the question of more complete protection against fire is presented to the City Council the cost of roofing that will not burn need not be taken seriously, for instead of being injured, the man of limited means will be benefited by the rejection of shingles. A roof which costs 25 per cent more probably will wear twenty-five years instead of eight or ten years. The saving is well worth while, even if the elimination of the fire peril is not considered.—Providence Bulletin.

WILSON GIVES FAIR WARNING

People In Our Jurisdiction Must Not Interfere In War

A NEUTRALITY PROCLAMATION

Explains Rules to Be Observed During European Conflict by Those Subject to United States Laws, the Breaking of Which Will Be Punished With Severe Penalties

Washington, Aug. 5.—The United States proclaimed its neutrality in the European war. The proclamation was signed and issued by President Wilson.

After a preamble in which the president states that the United States is on terms of friendship and amity with the contending powers and with the persons inhabiting their several dominions, he declares and proclaims that by certain provisions of the act approved on March 4, 1909, commonly known as the "penal code of the United States," the following acts are forbidden to be done, under severe penalties, within the territory and jurisdiction of the United States, to wit:

What s Forbidden

1—Accepting and exercising a commission to serve either of the said belligerents by land or by sea against the other belligerents.

2—Enlisting or entering into the service of either of the said belligerents as a soldier, or as a marine, or seaman on board of any vessel of war, letter of marque or privateer.

3—Hiring or retaining another person to enlist or enter himself in the service of either of the said belligerents as a soldier, or as a marine, or seaman on board of any vessel of war, letter of marque or privatier.

4—Hiring another person to go beyond the limits of jurisdiction of the United States with intent to be entered into service as aforesaid.

5—Hiring another person to go beyond the limits of the United States with intent to be entered into service as aforesaid.

6—Retaining another person to bo beyond the limits of the United States with intent to be enlisted as aforesaid.

7—Retaining another person to go beyond the limits of the United States with intent to be entered into service as aforesaid. (But the said act is not to be construed to extend to a citizen or a subject of either belligerent who, being transiently within the United States, shall, on board of any vessel of war which at the time of its arrival within the United States, was fitted and equipped as such vessl of war, enlist or enter himself, or hire or retain another subject or citizen of the same belligerent who is transiently within the United States, to enlist or enter himself to serve such belligerent on board such vessel of war if the United States shall then be at peace with such belligerent practically).

8—Fitting out and arming or attempting to fit out and arm or procuring to be fitted out and armed or knowingly being concerned in the furnishing, fitting out or arming of any ship or vessel, with intent that such ship or vessel shall be employed in the service of either of said belligerents.

9—Issuing or delivering a commission within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States for any ship or vessel to the intent that she may be employed as aforesaid.

FINANCES ARE FIRM

No Uncertainty as to Conditions In the United States

The American financial world has calmly settled down ready to meet any crisis that may arise. Possibly never in the history of the United States have so many and such varied measures been put into force in so short a time.

As a result the financial situation is regarded as easy and sound. Banks of all large cities through the country are issuing clearing house certificates, to furnish an additional medium of circulation in settlement of transactions among banks.

Many millions of dollars of emergency currency, provided for by the Aldrich-Vreeland law, have been shipped to New York and other financial centres. Savings banks and private banking institutions in many cities have in effect the sixty days clause.

The enormous outflow of gold to Europe is believed to have been stopped effectually. All stock exchanges continue closed and the date for resuming business still is uncertain.

England is said to have ordered all Australian meat sent for use in case of war and prices are likely to advance in this country. American firms having London branches are swamped with orders for canned meat, and prices have gone up 10 to 30 percent within a few days.

RICH SEA PRIZE SAFE IN PORT

The Cecilie Very Narrowly Escapes French Warships

CAPTAIN MAKES BAR HARBOR

Rushes Back to American Side to Avoid Meeting Hostile Ships—Dense Fog and Covering of Lights Aid Her In Exciting Journey—War Announced to Passengers

Bar Harbor, Me., Aug. 5.—Shrouded in canvas so that not a gleam of light came from her portholes, the treasure ship Kronprinzessin Cecilie put in at this port after a dash back toward America following receipt of word that Germany was at war and that she might be captured by hostile warships. She narrowly escaped capture Sunday.

Carrying over $10,000,000 in gold consigned to French and English bankers, the Kronprinzessin would have been a rich prize, and Captain Pollock believes that only a heavy fog made it possible for him to escape from two French warships he knew were searching for his ship.

The Kronprinzessin left New York July 28. She was within 800 miles of England when a wireless was received by Pollock ordering him to put back toward America with all speed.

Sunday night the wireless operator of the North German Lloyd liner intercepted a message from one of the French ships to another. The first vessel informed the second of the Kronprinzessin in their vicinity and gave orders that a sharp watch should be kept for her. The warship sending the message was not far from the Kronprinzesssin, the wireless operator declared. Then came a fog and Pollock's vessel eluded her would-be captors.

There were 350 first class, 130 second class and 736 steerage passengers aboard the vessel. It was Friday night when Pollock put back and few knew the vessel had changed her course until they noticed that the moon had apparently shifted from one side of the ship to the other. Pollock later called the men into the smoking room and told them he was heading back to America with every hope of avoiding hostile ships.

Pollock then ordered all lights extinguished. Canvas was stretched from stem to stern to prevennt the stateroom lights from shining through cracks in the windows. A dance was in progress and the music was immediately stilled, all passengers retiring to their staterooms, some terror-stricken, fearing that the vessel might be attacked.

"Gentlemen," he said, "war has been declared between England, France, Germany and Austria; we are going back to America. We have enough coal for our return home, and it is my earnest hope that we shall not be intercepted by hostile war vessels."

There was nervous laughter, applause, oaths, congratulations, protests, which gave way to a grave state of apprehension as the seriousness of the situation became apparent. Electric lights were turned off and the ship was covered from prow to stern in a shroud of canvas. This smothered whatever beams of light escaped through chinks in the stateroom windows. According to the ship's log, she was then 46 deg. 46 min. N. lat., 30 deg. 21 min. W. long. In two days she would have docked at Plymouth, Eng.

A group of financiers on board offered to buy the ship and sail her under American colors, but to all proposals the captain replied that his duty was spelled by his orders from Bremen, which instructed him to turn back and save his ship. There was a stampede for the wireless, but the captain announced that no messages would be sent for fear of betraying the ship's location.

The American port which the captain would try to make was a matter for countless speculations. It was not until the pasengers awoke in sight of the green Maine hills that the liner's destination became certain.

For two nights, with her head and side lights extinguished and every other illumination blotted out with canvas, the Kronprinzessin Cecilie plunged through the fog with unreduced speed and without sounding her fog horn.

The Cecilie's arrival was a complete surprise. She had been variously reported as having safely reached a German port and having been interrupted by the British cruisers on the other side. An hour after his arrival Pollock came ashore and immediately got in touch with the officials of the line in New York.

Big Liner Amerika Ordered to Unload Her Boston Cargo

Boston, Aug. 5.—Orders were received by the captain of the Amerika of the Hamburg-American line from Hamburg to unload the cargo of the steamship. The Amerika is tied up atthe Commonwealth pier. She was due to sail last Saturday with about 400 passengers.

Steamship men regard the order from Germany to the Amerika as conclusive evidence that the liner will not leave port for a long time.

How an Auto Was Sold

By GEORGE FREDERICK WILSON

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

When the price of automobiles became such that their purchase became common among men of means Harvey Williams bought a single seat runabout.

During the first year of possession he made almost constant use of the machine. Then the novelty of the thing wore off, and in the five following years he seldom rode in it. After that the modern and speedy touring car became the vogue. Harvey once more came under the spell of the automobile craze and quickly decided that he must have a touring car.

Rich as he was, he concluded that his was not the wealth to foster two motors. He was determined to sell the runabout.

So Harvey advertised it for sale and awaited a purchaser. He waited two weeks, and yet none came. The end of the third week brought a probable buyer.

"Now, what I want in a machine is speed," this individual began. "I can't afford the price of a new machine, but none the less I want speed in the second-hand affair I buy. What speed do you claim this runabout is capable of making?"

Harvey wavered between truth and a possible sale. If he gave its speed as fifteen miles an hour truth would triumph, but the opportunity of a sale would be lost.

"Well—er—you know our city ordinance is very strict as to speed, and I have never given the auto a trial on the country roads. But, say, it makes the city limit speed of ten miles very easily. Oh, yes, very easily!"

"Um! Then you don't know its exact speed?"

"It—it was guaranteed to make thirty miles easily in an hour," Harvey replied in a very weak tone of voice.

"Prove it and I'll take the auto off your hands," said the man. "You've got to show me."

"How can I prove it to you? Do you want to take a trial spin?"

"No. I haven't the time. Bring me absolute proof of its speed and I'll take the machine without further ado."

The three days following this conversation Harvey spent in vain attempts to hatch some scheme that would successfully deceive the probable purchaser. As mentioned before, the attempts were in vain, and on the night of the third day he gave up in despair.

On the morning of the fourth day he met a friend in the street, and the friend inquired about his success in disposing of the runabout. Harvey told him all.

"Why," exclaimed the friend, "I know the very man that can put this sale through to a successful finish. Robert Howardson is his name, and he is a specialist extraordinary in advertising. His office is in the Bearinger building."

Harvey found the office and the man. Into Howardson's sympathetic ears he poured his story.

"What price do you ask for the automobile, Mr. Williams?" Howardson inquired after hearing Harvey through.

"One thousand dollars."

"He is willing to pay this price for a secondhand automobile?"

"Perfectly willing. Says the old machines have the material in them; they wear better."

"I am not qualified to pass judgment upon his assertion. Now, Mr. Williams, how much are you willing to pay me if I succeed in selling your runabout?"

"Mr. Howardson, my fighting blood is up. When I first decided to sell I was anxious to sell. Now I am determined to be rid of the thing. I will give you 50 per cent, or, to put it plainly, $500."

"I would consider myself a robber were I to accept this amount. If I succeed I will ask for $150. Is this satisfactory?"

"Indeed, yes."

"Very well. Now, can you spare a couple of hours tomorrow forenoon?"

"I think I can arrange it."

Promptly at the hour designated Harvey drew up before the Bearinger building, and Howardson clambered into the seat beside him.

"What is the thing's absolute limit of speed, Mr. Williams?" Howardson inquired.

"It will make eighteen miles in an hour, but it is an awful strain on the engine."

"Take a given speed of eighteen miles per hour and a policeman to determine the speed, and his imagination will make it thirty miles. Now, when I say the word give it the limit."

They rode throughout the business district for a half hour, and then, when the streets were thickest with traffic, Howardson gave the order, and Harvey pushed the lever to the last notch.

Up and down the main thoroughfares the machine sped, creating turmoil in its wake. Policemen shouted their warning, but the men heeded them not.

Harvey would have liked very much to comply with the city speed ordinance, but Howardson urged against it. Finally one policeman, with the city's interest more at heart than any they had yet met with, ran out to intercept them, dodged in time to save himself, then ran on behind, secured the license number and jotted it down in his notebook.

It was then that Howardson advised less speed.

"Take your runabout home now, Mr. Williams, and keep both it and yourself under cover. When a policeman calls to place you under arrest your wife must tell him that you are not at home. You will get a letter. Bring it to me before you take further action."

The afternoon mail brought Williams a letter from the chief of police. With trembling fingers he tore open the envelope, read the letter through and then dressed for the street. A half hour later he stood before Howardson.

Howardson smiled.

"Mr. Howardson," Harvey began, "how did you know that I would get a letter from the chief of police?"

"It is evident that you were never arrested before for speeding. They always follow this course when a prominent person is not found at home when the policeman calls. Let's read what it says."

It opened with the usual salutation and proceeded:

"You are under arrest for breaking the city ordinance relative to the speed of automobiles. I have in hand all necessary evidence to prove that you were in the automobile at the time and acting as chauffeur. You were going at a speed of not less than thirty miles per hour, and this, too, in the heart of the city's business district. You can avoid further trouble by remitting at once the amount of your fine, $25."

"Excellent, excellent," Howardson exclaimed in a tone of delight. "If he had not been so particular as to estimating the speed we would have been put to the necessity of demanding it of him. Call the estimable gentleman over the telephone and tell him that you will send the check by the next mail."

Williams did so.

"I have already notified the probable purchaser to call here, and if I mistake not this is he at the door."

The door opened, and the probable purchaser walked into the room. After a few moments of desultory conversation the chief's letter was handed to him, and he read it through.

"The noon edition of the News contains an account of this escapade," he remarked. "I'll take the runabout."

Williams had come to the office in the motor, and the purchaser, having written out a check to Harvey's order, took immediate possession of the machine.

"Mr. Howardson, you are indeed a specialist extraordinary in advertising!" Williams cried, holding out his hand when they were once more in Howardson's office.

"Thank you, Mr. Williams. Let me assure you that you need have no uneasiness regarding our little stratagem. Our friend will not dare speed above ten miles within the city and twelve in the country. I doubt if he has much relish for the paying of fines. However, should he ever have occasion to test the auto's speed and find it not above eighteen miles per hour you can truthfully say that you had always thought this speed was its limit until the chief of police informed you differently. Write a check for $25, payable to the order of the city, and I will type a letter to the chief to go with it."

This is the letter that fairly dumfounded the chief of police:

"Your communication received. I am unable to state at which I am the more surprised—your charge that I was speeding over the limit or the fact that the old auto would go over eighteen miles per hour, a fact of which I was heretofore doubtful. I have disposed of the auto, and as speed was the first and most essential requisite I was able to produce unimpeachable evidence that the machine possessed this quality. Thanking you for the unsolicited favor, I take great pleasure in handing you the inclosed check in full payment of my fine."

Harvey Williams put $2,500 with the money paid him for his runabout and purchased a machine that would do fifty miles an hour when pushed to its utmost. The first time he went out in it he was so delighted with its performance that he gave every other auto on the road his dust. Coming to a curve, he failed to slow up sufficiently, skidded down a bank, ruined his machine and was thrown into a muddy stream, thus getting his deserts for his dishonesty.

FRENCH MODEL IN TAFFETA.

Buttons on the back of gowns is an idiosyncrasy of certain French modistes who strive for startling effects. A gown of this sort recently worn in Paris is pictured here. It is of taffeta and has two rows of black buttons down the back of the bodice. This same gown illustrates another fancy of the hour—that of using ruchings of the material as trimming for a dress.

CLEANING COUNSEL.

Soak ink stains in sour milk, and should the stain remain rinse in a weak solution of chloride of lime.

Vinegar and wood ashes, mixed into a paste, are said to be excellent to polish the sheet of zinc under stoves. After polishing rub the zinc briskly with a woolen cloth.

To clean pans that have scorched food sticking to them sprinkle dry baking soda in them and let stand for awhile. They then can be quickly and readily cleaned.

When sponges are very dirty wash them in diluted tartaric acid, rinsing them afterward in water. It will make them very soft and white.

The New Figure.

Is the reign of the slender woman over? is the question forced upon Paris as the result of various fetes and race meets of the season.

On all sides in Paris are seen long tunic dresses with wide hip sashes and plain bodies, but toned down the front—a style that calls for a figure.

The demand has created the supply, nearly every one seeming to be a statuesque Juno.

How the transition was managed in many cases remains a secret known only to the feminine mind.

EXPERT LAUNDERING.

The expert laundress regards her irons with due respect. She has clean, hot irons, with paraffin at hand to keep them smooth, a steady fire and an ironing board covered with several thicknesses of cloth (the top cover is stretched smooth and creaseless), a small brush for sprinkling the clothes and a clean rack ready to hang the freshly ironed pieces upon.

Plain ironing is easily accomplished. It is the ironing of fancy and trimmed pieces wherein the experienced laundress shows her skill. Every bit of embroidery shows out in wonderful relief, every bit of needlework is made to show to best advantage, every bit of lace looks as fresh and dainty as when it first came from the shop.

She irons the embroidery wet and over several thicknesses of flannel, ironing it on the wrong side, so that the pattern stands out and the background is perfectly dry and smooth. Ironing them until they are perfectly dry is one of the secrets of successful work. Damask and linens are polished until they shine. They must be evenly sprinkled and damp before ironing.

Hems are ironed straight, and pieces are perfectly folded, so that initials and monograms appear.

Lace is not ironed at all, but manipulated between the fingers as daintily as if one were working with cobwebs, until it is dry.

The folding of every piece is an art that must be practiced to be perfected.

MONTENEGRO AN ODD LAND.

Scratch a Native There and You Will Find a "Superintendent."

Montenegro is one of the oddest countries in the world. There the women are the producers, clothes make the man, the king is greater than the ministry, the chamber or the constitution, and a man may be imprisoned for eating hedgehog. A man who is struck may kill the striker provided it be done at once. If he delays he is punished as a murderer.

A Montenegrin's habit is as costly as his purse can buy, and there the apparel proclaims the man. The baggy blue trousers are the same for the king or the peasant, as is the bright sash which holds the invariable revolver. But from the red jacket and the red-lingote one connotes whether the wearer be a man of substance and consequence or not. Among the women there are slighter distinctions.

The women engage in the productive pursuits, and yet the man has capacity and when taken from his bellicose environment of his mountain home becomes one of the best of workers. His 500 years of freedom have given the Montenegrin a fine sense of order, and it is a current saying along the Dalmatian coast that when a Montenegrin applying for a job is asked what he can do he invariably answers, "Superintend."

Respect for age is enjoined by law, and in the articles regulating public conveyances it is provided that the traveler may have the seat indicated by his ticket, but it is added, "The deference due by youth to age requires that the former yield the better place to their seniors." Another article declares the equality of all before the law and lays down the democratic principle of the universal ownership of land and the equal right of all to hold office.

HOLDING THE BREATH.

Simple Heart Test Used In Administering Anaesthetics.

Dr. W. A. Schtange describes in the Roussky Vratch an easy test which he has devised to determine whether a patient who has been told that he must undergo surgical treatment is in condition to survive the administration of an anaesthetic. If the patient is unable to hold his breath for twenty seconds the indications are that his heart is so weak that he could not be subjected to the strain likely to be imposed by the anaesthetic.

General anaesthesia is particularly dangerous to persons suffering from myocardial changes, a condition which does not permit of ready recognition. For this reason the simple test suggested by Dr. W. A. Schtange will be welcome by the anaesthetist if extended experience should verify the doctor's assertions.

The test is based on the fact that a healthy person can suspend breathing from thirty to forty seconds. This, the author states, depends not on the lung capacity, but on the vigor of the heart muscle. In persons with weak hearts the time is shortened to twenty or even ten seconds. The patient, seated in a chair, is told to take a moderately deep inspiration and with the mouth closed to hold his breath as long as he can. The shorter the time the patient can suspend breathing the greater the danger of an anaesthetic, the latter being contraindicated if the time is less than twenty seconds.—New York Medical Journal.

Vast Forests of Alaska.

We hear much concerning the rapid disappearance of our forests. The vast timbered area of the eastern and central portions of the United States is fast being transformed into a woodless country, becoming very thickly populated, and doubtless will never grow much timber again. In Alaska, which is one of our territories, the timber area is estimated to be somewhere near 30 per cent of the entire land, and there is considerably more than 100,000,000 acres of good woodland, with timber that is of such a value its real worth cannot be estimated. It will require years to even make any marked impression on such a vast forest.—Philadelphia North American.

Mamma's Kiss.

A mother tells her little girl that because she has been naughty she will not kiss her for a week. Before two days have gone by the child's lips hunger so for her mother's kiss that she begs her not to punish her any more.

The mother says: "No, my dear. I told you that I should not kiss you, and I must keep my word."

"But, mamma, mamma," says the little girl, "would it be breaking your word if you should kiss me just once tonight when I'm asleep?"

Wedding Presents.

Wedding presents originated in a feudal tribute from the vassals to their lord. When feudalism ceased the presents became voluntary. In the days of Queen Elizabeth a pair of knives or scissors was a common gift and symbolized the cutting of unfaithful love.

With a String.

"Mamma, can't we have anything we want?"

"Yes, my dear, but be careful and don't want anything you can't have."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Tie That Binds.

Wife — I am a bundle of nerves. Sympathetic Husband—Well, so long as the string doesn't break you will be all right, my dear.—Judge.

CITY AUTO IN SMASH-UP

Inspector of Plumbing Keniley Slightly Injured

The automobile of the Board of Health was in a smash-up Tuesday afternoon, as a result of which the car is now at a garage undergoing repairs. The accident occurred on Adams street near the corner of Rogers street. Foreman Taylor and Inspector of Plumbing Keniley were in the car at the time. Just how the accident happened is not known, but the car went smash into a tree. The tree proved the hardest of the two, with the result that the auto was quite badly smashed.. Inspector Keniley also had some of the skin taken off his leg.

WAR CLOUDS.

By John E. Foss, Wollaston.

If all the Nations o'er the sea
Cross swords with one another,
God help the children born to weep
Beside their widowed mother.

Then far and wide, o'er hill and vale,
The crimson streams will flow,
When the life blood of a mighty host
Shall mingle with its foe.

All day the struggling masses surge,
Amid storms of leaden rain,
Till the dews of evening gather
On the wounded and the slain.

Though generations come and go,
Men fight for land or gold,
Down through the long decades of time,
As the Romans did of old.

While the soldiers heart is beating fast,
With a courage all admire,
Let us pray for Peace in this wide world,
Till the last faint hope expires.

MRS. EMERY THE SPONSOR

Two Bracelets Presented at Launching of Pacific

The actual sponsor of the steel steamship Pacific launched at the Fore River shipyard Tuesday was Mrs. Ralph C. Emery, who was suddenly appointed to fill the position when Mrs. Anne Lindsey Blake, the honorary sponsor proved to be late in arriving.

The boat in reality launched itself and when it became apparent that she was going to pull her ways President Powell asked Mrs. Emery to act in an official capacity.

Mrs. Emery is the wife of Ralph C. Emery, the vice president and general manager of the Emery Steamship Co., for whom the ship was built. At the banquet following the launching Mrs. Emery was presented with a bracelet as well as Mrs. Blake, for when it became apparent that two women had figured in the ceremonies an official of the company was sent post haste for another bracelet and a record engraving was put on for the actual sponsor.

HELD FOR THE GRAND JURY

Early Morning Arrest for Milton Burglary

A young man who gave the name of John G. Clarkson, aged 24 years of Chicago, was arrested at Milton about 4.30 this morning by Officer Frank McDermitt.

The officer saw the fellow coming along the street with a basket in his hand, and as he looked suspicious he was sent to the police station. Here the basket was examined and found to contain 160 bunches of cigarettes, cigars, tobacco and other articles all to the value of $20. In another package he had a number of tools valued at $5.

The officers when they saw the contents of the basket had an idea that the fruit store of Jennie Robinson might have been entered and an investigation showed this to have been the case. The fellow had gained entrance through a back door and had eaten a quantity of food and then filled a basket fro mthe goods in a show case. In the Quincy court he was held in $500 for the grand jury.

UP TO HIM

Mr. Shyboy—Have you—have you ever been kissed?

Miss Wise—Gracious! Do I look as homely as that?

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

Woman's World

Grace W. Key, Whose Ancestor Wrote "Star Spangled Banner."

GRACE WILLIAM KEY.

If America can be said to have a national song, surely "The Star Spangled Banner" is that song. "The Star Spangled Banner" was written in 1814 when Fort McHenry, the defense of Baltimore, was bombarded by the British. As every one has heard, Francis Scott Key, who was at the time district attorney of the District of Columbia, went to the commander of the British fleet under a flag of truce just prior to the bombardment. His generous mission was to secure the release of a friend who had been made prisoner by the British. He was detained until the bombardment was over and watched the attack with the greatest anxiety. It was the sight of his country's flag still proudly floating over the battlement of the fort as the gray light of dawn stole up in the east that inspired him to write this great heroic poem.

Key's native state, Maryland, is celebrating the centenary of the composition of the song in happy fashion. In April a memorial water front highway named in his honor was opened with appropriate ceremonies in Baltimore. This great highway cost $3,000,000. Over this highway in September the original flag of Fort McHenry will be escorted to the old stronghold by President Wilson, members of his cabinet, governors of states and a guard of 100 men picked from the eighteen states that were in the Union in 1814.

One of the most interesting participants in these ceremonies will probably be little Miss Grace William Key of Mount Vernon, N. Y., who sprang the barrier, permitting traffic for the first time to pass along Key highway. She is the ten-year-old great-granddaughter of Francis Scott Key and very proud of her distinguished ancestor.

PRESERVING TOMATOES.

An Easy Way to Prepare Them For Winter Use.

The best way to can tomatoes whole, says a noted housewife, is simply to pack them, without peeling, into wide mouthed jars. Half fill the jars with cold water, put the jars into a large saucepan or washboiler with water to reach halfway up the jars. Bring the water to boiling point, boil half an hour, take out the jars, fill them to overflowing with boiling water and seal.

In this way you will get all the value from the tomatoes. You can do this after dinner, and you can do it while washing your dishes. This is a particularly nice way for those who pick the fruit from their own vines as it ripens.

In a short time you will have a goodly stock on hand for a rainy day, and a can opened in winter will give you the full, fresh flavor of tomatoes from the vines.

When You Feel Drowsy.

Drowsiness during the day, if a person has slept well the night before, may be caused by indigestion. Often this is remedied by drinking something hot like cocoa or coffee. The brain needs a mild stimulant. Lassitude of the body is not always an indication of illness or laziness. A weak stomach is the primary cause for that draggy feeling in the morning.

Ironing Pongee.

To iron a natural colored pongee so as to preserve its beauty iron it only when it is perfectly dry and with an iron only moderately hot, as nothing scorches quite so easily as silk. Do not sprinkle pongee, as the water spots never iron out.

MILADY'S DRESS.

Dancing caps of gold net over a wire frame with flower trimming are very coquettish and flattering.

A charming sleeve is simply a square of tulle fastened into the armhole and falling like a wing as far as the belt.

Shoes become more fanciful even for ordinary day wear. Certainly the part they play in the perfect toilet is very important.

THE Q. Y. C. OPEN RACE

Prizes Aggregating $184 Have Been Offered

The annual open race of the Quincy Yacht club will take place off the clubhouse next Monday afternoon, starting at 1.45. For this race the club has offered cash prizes aggregating $184.

Prizes of $8, $5, and $3 will be given in classes P, A, C, Sonderclass, H, B, D, I, and S, and prizes of $5, $3 and $2 will be given in class X, the Hull one-design, Hingham, Winthrop and Scituate one-design, cabin power and open power boats.

The preparatory gun will be fired at 1.45 and the warning gun for class P at 1.50. Five minutes later this class will get away and will be followed at five minute intervals by the other classes.

The time limit for all classes will be three hours. The judges are John O. Hall, chairman George S. Morse, W. H. Huy, Edward M. Wight and the regular Y. R. A. M. and Inter-club judges

Visiting yachtsmen are invited to partake of the hospitalities of the house committee after the races.

NEWSY BRIEFS

The clerks of the Board of Assessors are burning midnight oil.

Herbert J. Polk and family of Beach street are at home again after a month spent at Silver Lake, Chesham, New Hampshire.

Mrs. Warren B. Stetson of Middleboro, has been visiting Mrs. H. O. Studley of Washington street, for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. Isaac McNeil of 642 Washington street, Quincy Point, left Saturday for a three weeks' vacation at Melville Village, N. H.

Mrs. Loella G. Tuttle of Edwards street has gone to Bethel, Maine, for three months' vacation and will stop at the Bethel Inn.

Mrs. Samuel Nelson mourns the loss of her father, James J. Wilcox, who died suddenly on Monday at Dorchester aged 64 years.

Charles J. Hart of 94 Butler road left Monday via St. Johns boat for a two weeks trip to New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. He will stop at Cape Spear, N. B., Moncton, N. B., Londonderry, East Mines, Truro, and Halifax, N. S.

If women could vote E. P. Powers would have gained at least one in his Mayoralty campaign. Last evening he found a pocket book containing $31.25 in front of Thompson's cafe. He notified an officer and also the station agent, and the owner was soon found and the purse returned.

John F. Scott of Braintree is the new commercial representative of the New England Telephone and Telegraph Co, for Quincy, Braintree and Randolph, with headquarters at Quincy. He was transferred from the Boston office Aug. 1. Being acquainted locally he should know Quincy needs.

The Daily Ledger would appreciate it very much if friends of Quincy people in Europe would keep the Ledger posted. We desire a list of all Quincy people abroad.

GRANDEUR IN GLACIERS.

The Alpine-like Scenery In Mount Rainier National Park.

Mount Rainier National park is situated in western Washington, about fifty-six miles southeast of the city of Tacoma. It has an area of 207.36 acres and comprises Mount Rainie and all its approaches, including one of the largest glacier systems in the world radiating from any single peak.

Surrounding the mountain are beautiful forests of fir and cedar, and in the natural parks below the snow line are luxuriant fields of wild flowers of all colors and descriptions. The lower altitudes of the park are densely timbered with fir, cedar, hemlock, maple alder, cottonwood and spruce. The forested areas, extending to an altitude of about 6,500 feet, gradually decrease in density of growth after an altitude of 4,000 feet is reached, and the high, broad plateaus between the glacial canyons present incomparable scenes of diversified beauties, seemingly arranged to suit every taste.

These "parks," as they are called, are studded here and there with lakes and streams bordered with clumps of picturesque Alpine firs and gorgeous beds of wild flowers, and in numerous instances apparently tender blossoms will be found pushing their heads out from under the snow.

The general elevation of the glacial valleys at the boundary lines of the park is about 2,000 feet above sea level. These valleys afford a comparatively easy grade to the lower ends, or "snouts," of the various glaciers, approximately an average additional elevation of 2,000 feet. At these glacier snouts the real Alpine nature of Mount Rainier National park territory is thrust upon the traveler, and from, over, around and alongside the glaciers trails have been constructed with a view to making the wonders of nature within the park easily accessible as well as to provide patrol routes for the protection of the forests and game.

OUR FIRST POLICEWOMAN.

"About as Terrible as a Kitten," Yet Praised by English Observers.

It was in a school at Salt Lake City, Utah, early in 1913, that I chanced upon Mrs. Wells, the first American to conceive the idea of adding women to the police force and the first woman to be so appointed. When I was told of her profession my imagination flew to the typical figure of a policeman in London, and I pictured her a strapping Amazon in uniform, baton at waist, helmet on head and on her feet the boots so familiar to us in the stage farce.

When I encountered my first policewoman I was disillusioned. I found her not an amazon, but a slightly built active woman a little over five feet in height. Her age was between thirty-five and forty. She had a pleasant, firm voice and bright blue eyes, which seemed to me to be more than usually observant. As one newspaper described her, she was "about as formidable as a kitten."

She had come to Salt Lake City at the request of the city authorities to tell them of her duties, as they were considering the question of appointing women to the police force there. Her work at Los Angeles, Cal., had been so widely appreciated and her superiors in office had received so many letters of inquiry regarding it from the authorities of other towns that they decided to allow her six months' leave of absence in order that she might travel and tell other municipal authorities about her work.—Lady Darwin in Nineteenth Century.

Clearing Themselves.

Among the many means adopted for expressing grief upon the death of a relative perhaps as interesting a one as any is that met with in the neighborhood of the Tully river, in Queensland. Here two, three or four of the deceased friends or relatives will squat close together, with hands on each other's shoulders, bewailing for hours at a time the loss of the dear departed. It is not the virtues of the latter that are in any way extolled, however. What these mourners are really taking care to do is to show that they and the deceased were always good friends. Their object in all this is to prove to the outside public that they have had nothing to do with the encompassing of the death.—Wide World Magazine.

An Excellent Reason.

One of the stories about the late Sir Douglas Straight, the veteran journalist, relates to one of the early papers he was connected with.

He was crossing Waterloo bridge one day with a friend when he suddenly marched up to a couple of newsboys and soundly boxed their ears.

His friend, amazed at this proceeding, naturally asked him what he meant by it. "They were selling your paper," he pointed out.

"Yes, I know they were," was the reply, "but they weren't shouting it loud enough!"—London Globe.

A Case In Point.

"Johnnie," said a teacher in a physiology class, "can you give a familiar example of the human body as it adapts itself to changed conditions?"

"Yes-sum," said Johnnie: "my aunt gained fifty pounds in a year and her skin never cracked."

Then Another Started.

She (after the quarrel)—I'll promise always to keep my temper in the future, dear. I can't do more than that. He—Oh, yes, you can! You can keep your word.—Boston Transcript.

Absence of occupation is not rest. A mind quite vacant is a mind distressed.—Cowper.

CONTRACT AWARDED FOR CLUBHOUSE

Commodious and Well Appointed Building for Sachem Club of Wollaston

Contains a Large Hall for Use of the Public

It was announced this morning that the contract for the building of the club house for the Sachem club of Wollaston had been signed, and that work on the foundation of the building would be commenced in a few days.

The bids for the clubhouse were opened several weeks ago, but some changes were necessary, and it was not until this week that the contract was in readiness to sign. The contract has been awarded to M. J. Fish & Son of Boston whose bid was $31,-210.

The building will be built according to plans and specifications of William Chapman, the well known Wollaston architect, who was also the architect for the Court House in Quincy and for the addition to the State House at Boston.

It will be located off Hancock street, near the corner of Beale street. This is in Fire district No. 1, and ordinarily the building laws would call for its being of brick, stone, or cement. Relief from these building restrictions however was asked of the City Council and granted.

It is the intention of the club to lay out a large tennis court in the rear of the building and the grounds will also be laid out in an attractive manner and will be quite an addition to the city.

The design is old colonial constructed in wood with the centre of pilasters and the main part clapboarded. The general color scheme will be yellow, with white trimmings and a roof of green slate.

FIRST FLOOR.

On the first floor the main entrance will lead through a vestibule to the reception hall. To the right is a roomy ladies parlor, coat room, toilet and kitchenette. Connected with the parlor is a large lounging room and a library.

To the left of the hall is the men's coat room, stairway to bowling alleys in the basement, clerk's office, billiard rooms with four tables and two card rooms with entrance to the rear staircase.

The lounging room will contain a large old fashioned fireplace and traversing the entire rear of the building and about 14 feet wide is a covered piazzo which will be used as a promenade overlooking the proposed tennis courts.

The side entrance discloses the ticket office and two main stairways to the assembly hall with another leading down to the ladies' bowling alleys in the basement.

LADIES' APARTMENTS.

A feature of the design is the provision for complete isolation of the ladies' rooms from the rest of the clubhouse by folding doors whenever occasion requires.

HEALTH AND SANITATION

Costing Quincy More Than Some Larger Cities

In the Health and Sanitation departments of a city, the annual report on Statistics of Municipal Finances includes: general expenses, quarantine and contagious disease hospitals, tuberculosis, vital statistics, inspection of school children, inspection of animals and meats and provisions, and inspection of milk and vinegar.

For "maintenance" of this department, Quincy in 1911 expended $67,080, and for "outlays" or permanent improvements $41,722.

For maintenance Quincy expended more than any smaller city, and more than the larger cities of Everett, Taunton, Fitchburg, Salem or Haverhill.

For "outlays" Quincy did not expend so much as the smaller cities of Pittsfield and Beverly, but more than the larger cities of Somerville, Holyoke, Haverhill, Salem, Taunton and Everett.

The list below includes all cities of less that 80,000 and more than 15,000 population by census of 1910:

	Maintenance	Outlay
Somerville	$171,234	$18,702
Holyoke	71,900	33,205

RETRENCHMENT AT BETHLEHEM

A dispatch from South Bethlehem announces that on account of the inability to get ready money due to the unsettled financial conditions, has caused the Bethlehem Steel Co., to adopt a retrenchment policy. For this reason a number of men, mostly laborers have been laid off. The retrenchment is not likely to affect the Fore River Shipbuilding corporation, a subsidiary concern of the Steel Co. The Fore River has plenty of work on hand at the present time with prospects of considerably more in the near future so that no men will be laid off here in Quincy, as long as present conditions continue.

TAFT WINS GOLF PRIZE.

The best score in the open golf tournament of the Wollaston club on Wednesday was 78 by E. M. Taft, Jr., of the Hatherly club, which was one better than V. S. Lawrence of Woodland, R. H. Goodspeed of Wollaston and A. H. Goodale of Wollaston. For net prize Mr. Taft was tied with J. B. Brennan of Wollaston at 67. The former took the gross prize and the latter the net. Over 50 scores were turned in.

MAYOR MILLER NOT CANDIDATE

Would Not Accept Renomination for Mayor

Mayor John L. Miller will not be a candidate for re-election, was the surprising declaration of a prominent man of this city in conversation with a Daily Ledger reporter Wednesday evening. He said he based his statement on information received from what he considered to be a reliable source.

The gentleman who informed him, he said, was high in the councils of Mayor Miller. This is the first definite announcement in an indirect way that has come from the camp of His Honor since he took office. It was expected that he would again enter the race.

Mayor Miller is summering at Hingham and reports say he is convalescent. He has appeared at City Hall twice since he went to his summer home and both times awarded a contract.

The announcement, although not official, is credited in many sources by supporters of Mayor Miller who believe that yoor health has influenced more than any other reason, the decision he is reported to have reached.

NO CANDIDATES IN SIGHT

Progressives Have No Men Seeking Offices

Members of the Progressive party of this city met in Union hall Wednesday evening to discuss candidates and apparently there is a dearth of them in the party ranks.

Several felt that men could be prevailed upon to stand if properly approached, and with this in view committees for each representative district were appointed to interview men and report at a meeting next Monday.

The question of giving Representative Michael T. Sullivan the party nomination met with the objection of one man, who said he believed in a straight Progressive or Republican candidate since in his opinion the party would be the gainer, because no Democrat favored progressive legislation. It was agreed, however, that if no candidate was unearthed that Mr. Sullivan be offered the endorsement of the party.

Col. Henry L. Kincaide declined to serve because he expected to be away for several days but he counselled immediate action. He remarked that he believed Mr. Sullivan was to be the mayoralty candidate.

Chester I. Campbell of Wollaston was prominently mentioned as the candidate in the Sixth district, but it was also said that he was a candidate for mayor.

The committee on nominations for the Fifth district is William Prime, Edgar G. Cleaves, Sam C. Melville.

The Sixth district committee is W. G. Young, Thomas L. Musgrave, H. O. Cassidy and Fred H. Bishop.

Roland D. Gallagher of Wollaston was chairman of the meeting and H. O. Cassidy was secretary. There were less than 20 present.

NO NEWS FROM MISS DOBLE

Thought to be in Paris With Seminary Girls

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Doble of South street are anxious for the safety of their daughter, Miss Clarice B. Doble, who is thought to be in Paris. In a letter written July 24 she was in Berlin, and expected to be in Paris from July 31 to August 9. She is a member of Mme. Kafpar's party of pupils from the National Park Seminary at Washington, D. C., who are in charge of two chaperons. Mr. and Mrs. Doble came up from their summer residence on the Cape a few days ago, and all efforts to reach their daughter by cable have been unsuccessful.

Another postal from Mrs. George N. Harman, daughter of Mrs. Effie Rhines of Miller Stile road says. Reached Innsbruck, Germany, Saturday, July 24. Great excitement over the Austrian—Servia war. Bands, parades, etc. The soldiers are all ready and yelling to go. Expect to go into Italy tomorrow."

It was a joyful meeting at the White Star dock in Boston this morning, when Jesse F. Curtis of Upland road welcomed his son Harold, after an absence of about three years in Alexandria, Egypt. All the passengers seemed glad that they had escaped from the turbulent war scenes in Europe. The S. S. Arabic from Liverpool docked at 9 A. M. but it was after 10 before the passengers landed, and still later when they obtained their baggage. Mrs. Curtis was notified promptly by telephone and there was another joyful scene when Harold reached his home this afternoon. He is the same Harold, and probably anxious for a good game of ball.

STILL ALARM.

Chief Billings, the Central station and Atlantic station auto chemical responded on a still alarm shortly before 9 o'clock this morning to what was thought to be a brisk fire in the varnish factory on the corner of Newport avenue and Squantum street, near the Norfolk Downs depot. The fire started in some unknown manner and the flames began to shoot up through a cast iron flue, giving the appearance of being of much larger proportions than it really was. The fire apparatus quickly extinguished the flames by the aid of chemical streams. The loss was slight.

ADVERTISE IN THE LEDGER

MAYOR MILLER CALLED AS WITNESS

At Court House Today to Testify at Hearing of William J. Vaughn

Overseer of Poor Green Tells of Removal

Mayor Miller came up from camp at Hingham this morning to testify in the Vaughn case which is being reviewed by Judge Avery at the district court, to whom an appeal was made of the finding of the Overseer of the Poor Perry Green.

The Mayor arrived shortly before 10 o'clock and went to the court house immediately. It was announced at City Hall that he intended to return to Hingham as soon as he had testified.

Perry Green Overseer of the Poor, continued his testimony at the afternoon session of the Vaughn case on Wednesday. He said complaints made had some effect on his decision to remove Mr. Vaughn. He spoke of Robert Deady returning from the almshouse to his home with tears in his eyes because Vaughn swore at him. He said this was denied by Vaughn. He said he had received complaints from the inmates about food and that they included talk of tough meat and sour bread.

Counsel McAnarney then commenced a cross examination that proved to be one of the liveliest ever directed at a witness in the court room. Mr. Green alternately stood and occupied the chair placed on the stand, and several times he was indirect and was instructed to give fuller and more complete answers.

He told Counsel McAnarney that he was satisfied that good food was furnished for inmates and remembered that Dr. Bartlett had examined bread and pronounced it good.

The difference between you and Mr. Vaughn was, that you wanted canned goods set from the back of the shelves of the storeroom and not from the front, asked counsel, and he answered yes.

In reply to questions he told of groceries being out in the weather and said that while he, Mrs. Vaughn and inmates were trying to get them inside Vaughn was running around looking for a hammer. He admitted that the hammer was out of sight and that Mr. Vaughn's effort to locate it may have been an honest one.

The cow, purchased by Mr. Green was the next item considered and he was asked if he and Vaughn disagreed as to the trade. He denied it and said Vaughn complained however that the cow was no good and later that it was a hard one for a man to milk with crippled hands.

VISIT OF MAYOR.

The visit of Mayor Miller was next brought up and Counsel McAnarney asked if he didn't think it would have been fairer to have taken down the Mayor and shown him the place before Vaughn was dismissed. Mr. Green said there was no investigation, and that the purpose of the Mayor was simply to see the property.

Mayor Miller did not talk to the inmates according to Mr. Green. The first day the overseer and warden met. Vaughn told the former he was under civil service. He did not remember the conversation that led up to it. Vaughn said lots of people were after him.

The use of profanity was then taken up, and Mr. Green said he may have used profane language in the course of his speech regarding certain inmates, but that it was a man. He denied that he told Mrs. Vaughn to take inmates into a room and swear at them, but he said that was what I was trying to stop.

He said he talked about taking them aside, and that Mrs. Vaughn could have inferred he meant a room. He said he told her to fix their grievances, and if she couldn't to send them to him.

QUALITY OF FOOD.

Mr. Green said he took charge of the shoes for inmates. Meats were purchased at Johnson Bros., when he came into office. He was rigorously examined on the quality of food coming from that store, and gave them a good endorsement. Mr. Green said he objected to the price. When asked if the bills showed the meat was used for the warden and not for the inmates he answered his honest judgment was that most of it was used by the warden and his family.

Q—Have you any evidence that it went any place other than the almshouse?

A—No, sir.

Q—Then the meat not used went to the inmates?

A—Not all of it. Lots of it went to the pigs and a lot was thrown away.

He said Dwelle, Hobart and Phelan, all inmates, told him it went to the pigs, and that one Maddigan carried it to them. He said he did not speak

No matter how much the rains may help the growing crops, it will be a severe blow to agriculture if they stop the races at county fair.

The boys need not feel that they will be too safe if they learn to swim. They still retain the chance to get drowned by going far out in deep water.

Hotel guests usually swipe towels, napkins, or silver as souvenirs, and then imagine that it comes out of the landlord's pocket.

Sympathy of the people of the nation goes out to President Wilson be cause of the critical illness of Mrs. Wilson. In these warlike days, when European affairs are demanding so much of his time and earnest thought, it is indeed a trying period for the President. We hope for more cheering news from the White House.

Mayor Curley of Boston has been informed that his suggestions, endorsed by President Powell of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation, relative to the merchant marine, have been incorporated in the Administration measure which is in charge of Congressman Underwood of Alabama. It may speedily become a law.

At the outing of the Somerville Board of Trade this week John J. Morgan told the members that "newspaper advertising properly handled was the best means of increasing business." Only another endorsement of a truth that every merchant should know. But still they hesitate.

In the comparison of highways expenses of cities as printed in the Daily Ledger of Wednesday the Bureau of Statistics includes general administration, general highway expenditures, sidewalks and curbings, snow and ice removal, sprinkling, lighting, and some other expenses. These comparisons of different cities are valuable because of the uniform system adopted. In all comparisons thus far made, Quincy is expending more for its municipal departments than some of the larger cities; a situation which calls for the careful scrutiny of all annual and special appropriations.

THE POST-CARD FAD.

Every once in a while one sees a newspaper note to the effect that the post-card fad is going by. Yet where ever there are tourists this summer, there seems to be the same old throng like flies around the picture card counter.

Probably the use of silly motto cards will prove to be but a passing craze. Even people of superficial intelligence get tired of reminding their friends by mail to "Do it now," and other equally sensible exhortations. Some other equally ephemeral form of exchanging persiflage will be found. Also many of the cards verge on the coarse and indecent. The exchange of this kind of pleasantry will in time seem tiresome even to dull minds.

But the picture card illustrating scenery or points of interest is never likely to die out. It has made quite a little saving to the traveller looking for souvenirs. Formerly you had to buy photographs to illustrate a vacation outing, for about 25 cents each. The next step was a book of photographic reproductions, that might sell for 25 to 50 cents apiece. The post-card craze has enabled people to carry home a pretty set of souvenirs of their travels for a few nickels.

Also the picture cards appeal to the modern inability to write letters. No matter how much the social philosopher may deplore it, the epistolary habit is dying out. A friendship can not be very vital if the only thing to keep it alive is a half dozen words of greeting and the exchange of glimpses of summer resort scenery. But the picture card habit gives a ready relief from the labors of the pen and the writing desk, and as such it is and will be popular.

The post card message seems like a pretty shabby substitute for the intimate story of life, covering six or eight closely written pages, which your friends used to send you. Times have changed, people are more on the move. The post-card messages seem to fit into the crevices of time left in our hurried days.

IMPORTANCE OF MAN.

The American man ought to feel chesty and important. He has received a handsome vindication from the General Federation of Women's clubs in recent convention at Chicago.

For years and years the American man has been submerged and disregarded. He has taken a secondary place in all social and civic movements in which the women cared to interest themselves. It has been the rule that as soon as the women took a hand the men let go. They felt their impotency in dealing with questions of feminine concern. The American man has been ever ready to resign his responsibilities and obligations, if not his pocketbook, to the fair protagonists of purpose. So far as the American man and men were concerned, they were willing individually and collectively to surrender without protest to the demands of women, individually or collectively that the blessings of peace might be conserved and glorious womanhood vindicated.

That this self-abnegation has not gone unappreciated is shown by the reports from Chicago. The convention, 1,716 strong, took up the American man the other day and held him aloft for inspection. His appearance seemed to be pleasing. For Mrs. Percy V. Pennypacker, president of the federation, said "My friends, think what a splendid thing it is for us that we have the club husband. Think of the sympathy they have given us in our work. What a wonderful blessing to us is the American man."

Of course, the "club husband" is not always of the sympathetic kind. Sometimes he does not get home often enough to know whether his wife is doing club work or not. But the average American husband is a pretty good sort and he deserves all the kind things that can be said about him. Often he is inspired by the one single and noble ambition to support his family and give his wife all the pleasures and luxuries possible. Often, too, he is in entire accord with his wife's club work and aids her in every way he can. But the main point is that the American man is coming into his own. He has gained semi-official recognition as a useful member of society.

Taking it by and large, the American man is superior. This is not especially to his credit, for in ninety-nine times out of a hundred it was his mother or sister or wife that made him so. But being superior, he ought to be encouraged occasionally, for this official pat on the shoulder from the federated clubs will have a wonderful effect. For, after all, the American man is mighty susceptible to the flattery of feminine attention and his jaded nature will respond at this news from Chicago as the drooping roses are revived by a summer shower.—Haverhill Gazette.

HOW UNCLE SAMS SPENDS IT.

The American Magazine sent Ray Stannard Baker to Washington to trace your income tax dollar and report penny for penny exactly how Uncle Sam spends it. The result of his investigation appears in the August number. Under the indirect method of taxation, by which we still continue to raise most of our revenues, few people felt any concern as to what the government spent, but with a direct tax like the income tax several hundred thousand Americans will feel this year, for the first time, just what it means to help buy warships and pay for unnecessary post-offices. Following is part of Mr. Barker's report:

"The very first thing that struck me, and struck hard, was the fact that, although we have had no great war in fifty years (and only a little one sixteen years ago,) over sixty cents of every dollar that Uncle Sam collects from you and me (directly or indirectly) goes for military purposes,' including continuing expenses of past wars—pensions.

"I think that few people realize what this means—in a nation which considers itself peculiarly devoted to peace.

"Sixty-three per cent to the Army, Navy and pensions, and only thirty-seven per cent to pay all the other vast and useful purposes of the Government, excluding postal service and the preposterous sinking fund—required by law, but never provided in fact. This thirty-seven per cent only is available for building the Panama Canal, improving our rivers and harbors, supporting the Indians, encouraging agriculture, public health and education, to say nothing of taking care of the entire machinery of civil government — Congress, Executive, Courts, and the diplomatic and consular service.

"In the estimates for the new year the expenditure of the Government for all purposes (with the exceptions above stated) reaches the vast sum of $740,000,000. Of this, $466,000,000 go for war purposes and forty-five per cent of this goes for pensions, retirements, and interest on war debts."

FIRST BIG ENGAGEMENT OF THE WAR

German Force Makes a Vain Effort to Capture Liege

INVADERS REPULSED WITH HEAVY LOSS

One of Kaiser's Strongest Armies Bangs at Strong Walls of Belgian City For Hours—Strategists Think Battle a Mask to Cover Southward Movement of Main Force—Attacking Soldiers Leave Little of Two Towns Which Offer Resistance—Brussels Story of Unqualified Victories Received With Some Doubt

London, Aug. 6.—The first great battle of the war has been fought with Belgium, a sudden and unwilling ally of the triple entente, victorious over Germany. Thousands of invaders have been killed and wounded, and 800 of the wounded are prisoners of the Belgians.

The battle was waged about the strong walls of Liege, assaulted in force for hour after hour by the German army of the Meuse, one of the strongest of the huge forces that are being thrown in the direction of the French frontier. Nothing new in warfare was developed, except the ceaseless action of aeroplanes, both German and Belgian, which circled all day and above the city where history was being made.

Such, in brief, is the story that has come from Brussels, the Belgian capital. Despite Great Britain's bitterness against Germany few are disposed to believe that the attack was so completely and so easily repulsed as the dispatches indicate. Germany is cut offi from the outside world and no German version of the engagement has yet been received.

Despite the activity of the Belgian air scouts, doubt is being expressed about the real location of the army of the Meuse. Strategists believe that only a relatively small force was engaged before Liege and that the engagement was a mask to cover the southward movement of the main force.

Actual Facts Unknown

The astounding story of Belgian prowess and German defeat is too complete to lift the suspense felt over the land campaign. Liege has undoubtedly been attacked and the Germans have been unable to take the city, but not for hours will it be possible to know whether the army of the Meuse has been halted or whether it is now drawing close to the French frontier. Brussels knows. But no news of operations that may lead to a battle today is passing the censor, either in Brussels or Paris.

The report from Brussels was seemingly authentic, but some of the late details were so flattering to the Belgian arms that they cast a doubt over the earlier dispatches. The attacking German army consisted of two full army corps, the Seventh and Tenth, according to the cable messages. The advance upon Liege was made in four great divisions. From the north one division followed the course of the river Meuse, meeting resistance at Vise and Agenteau. Few Belgian troops were encountered here, but the townsfolk, behind hastily raised trenches, opened fire upon the invaders.

German soldiers fell at the first fire, but strength in numbers prevailed and the great column swept over the defenders. The attacking army left little of Vise behind them, the houses being set on fire. A few miles on, Argenteau offered a slight resistance and it too was left a blackened ruin.

Two other columns of the German forces came from the east. They avoided Verviers, the principal city between the boundary and Liege, one passing through Herve, to the north of Verviers, the other through Pepinster, to the south. The fourth section advanced from Remouchamps, marching northwest.

Attacked by Four Columns

According to the Belgian messages, the four columns converged upon Liege, reaching the city about the same moment. A heavy artillery fire was directed against the forts, but little damage was done, although some of the buildings in the city were badly damaged. The shelling was directed from across the Meuse, an attempt of the invaders to construct a pontoon bridge being thwarted. Later, however, a considerable number of soldiers crossed the river on a bridge built up to the north of Liege, between the besieged city and Maestricht.

Before any attempt was made to carry the city by assault, General Von Emmich, in command of the army of the Meuse, issued a proclamation to the Belgians, in which he demanded an unimpeded road for his forces over Belgian soil. He threatened, if resistance was made, all the unavoidable horrors of war.

A peremptory refusal having been made to his challenge, an advance was ordered by the German general. Attack after attack was made, covered by ceaseless pouring of shells upon the defenders, but not once did a German flag penetrate into the beleaguered city.

Nightfall came with thousands of the invaders dead and dying and with only slight losses to the defenders. It is believed the Germans are still drawn up in front of the city, although there are rumors that the army is passing down the river toward Namur, where the Belgian defenses are not believed to be so strong as at Liege.

A Feeling of Doubt

Some of the dispatches told of such unqualified victories for the Belgians that little credence is placed in them. At Vise, for instance, it is said that a platoon of Prussian cavalry was practically annihilated by a withering fire from Belgian soldiers hidden in a building beside the river, a successful attack later prompting the invaders to raze the town. Near Argenteau, a Belgian force claims to have killed seventy men out of a body of ten officers and eighty men. The Belgian loss was said to have been but two officers killed and ten men wounded.

In the sharper fighting at Liege, one Belgian squadron is said to have shattered a force of six German squadrons. Another dispatch states that of all the Germans who passed by the forts at Liege, not one survives.

Allowing for exaggerations, it is felt in London that a German force of considerable size, probably much less than the 100,000 men claimed by the Belgians, tried in vain to capture Liege. It was the first engagement of any size in the war and the allies are victorious unless the German movement was a mere screen to hide a forced march toward France and to prevent an attack upon the rear.

More bitter fighting is expected at once, for French forces have been pouring into Belgium. If enough have been drawn off to suit the German plan of attack, it is probable that the battling may take place on French territory, as a great German army is believed to be waiting there for a chance to advance.

FRANCE WINS A BATTLE

German Squadron Reported Defeated In the Mediterranean

A Toulon dispatch says France has won the first important sea battle. Trapped by French and British squadrons in the Mediterranean, the German squadron, comprising the scout cruiser Panther, the dreadnought Goeben and the cruiser Breslau, fought vainly to escape. The Panther was sunk and the other two war craft were captured.

After bombarding the French towns along the Algerian coast the Germans steamed toward Gibraltar. A British fleet which had put out from Malta headed them off before they doubled back toward Algeria. The French battle squadron which had been sent to protect Algeria intercepted them and the battle followed.

The Panther was riddled by the French fire and a shell exploded in her magazine, practically blowing her to pieces, with the loss of most of her crew.

The Goeben fought for some time, but her machinery was finally disabled and she struck her colors. The Breslau attempted to escape, but was overhauled by two French cruisers and after a short engagement also surrendered. The German casualties are reported heavy, but details of the French losses are withheld.

ON THE FRENCH FRONTIER

Germans Reported to Have Been Repulsed at Two Points.

The French minister of war issued a communication at Paris stating that German cavalry and infantry were crossing the French frontier everywhere in reconnoitering parties. He adds:

"A squadron of German dragoons bore down on Villers-la-Montagne but were repulsed by French riflemen.

"A regiment of German cavalry advanced as far as Morfontaine but fell back before a body of French infantry.

"The French mobilization is proceeding with the greatest order. Most of the reservists already have joined.

"An excellent spirit prevails in Alsace."

The one-armed French general, Paul Pau, who fought in the war of 1870, has been placed in command of one of the French armies.

BOTH SIDES LOSE HEAVILY

Invasion of Holland by Germany Is Resisted by Dutch Troops

Germany has invaded Holland, according to an Amsterdam dispatch, in an attempt to rush troops across to aid in the invasion of Belgium and France.

Fierce fighting is in progress, the Dutch troops falling back slowly before a steady German advance. The losses on both sides are heavy.

TURKEY MOBILIZES

Dardanelles and Bosphorus Are Closed to Preserve Neutrality

The Dardanelles and the Bosphorus were closed in order to preserve the neutrality of Turkey.

Turkey has informed Great Britain that the forces of the Ottoman empire are being mobilized. The mobilization is a precautionary measure and Turkey, it is stated, will remain absolutely neutral.

In some quarters, however, it is believed this step is being taken by Turkey in the fear that the Russian Black sea fleet will attempt to force the Bosphorus and that Russia may even land troops on the Turkish shores of the Black sea and seize Constantinople.

ENRAGED AT INDIGNITY

Russians Wreck German Embassy and Burn the Furniture

The German embassy at St. Petersburg was wrecked and a bonfire made of the furniture and pictures by an angry crowd. The people were angered by the report of what they deemed to be an indignity shown to Dowager Empress Maria Feodorowa by being stopped in Berlin on her arrival from London on her way to St. Petersburg and compelled by the German authorities to go to Copenhagen.

An entrance was forced by the crowd through the windows. Most of the rooms were wrecked and the furniture pitched into the streets.

A bonfire then was made of the contents of the embassy and an attempt was made to put a torch to the building, but mounted police routed the rioters.

TO AID AMERICANS

Gold-Laden United States Cruisers Sail For European Ports

The armored cruiser Tennessee sailed for Europe with gold for the relief of Americans. The armored cruiser North Carolina accompanied the Tennessee.

The cruisers carry millions of dollars in gold, supplied by bankers and express companies, to be distributed at the principal ports in Europe for the use of banks and United States diplomatic agencies in replenishing the purses of Americans who suddenly have found their letters of credit useless or their funds exhausted.

In the wake of the cruisers will sail a fleet of coastwise steamers and vessels of neutral nations as soon as they can be mobilized to bring the American tourists home.

It is estimated that there are at least 100,000 American citizens abroad, one-fifth of whom urgently want to return.

Congress has already appropriated $250,000 for the relief of Americans abroad, and the senate and house authorized an additional appropriation of $2,500,000.

WAR ON LONDON MARKET

General Financial Condition In the United States Continues Secure

A financial sensation was caused by the London Pall Mall Gazette's charge that just prior to the beginning of war the German government supported a movement to depress British securities to such an extent that Great Britain would be unable to participate in the war. The story sets forth that $10,000,000 was expended in the effort.

The general financial situation in the United States continues secure. The treasury is believed to be in condition to meet any crisis or any business demand. Wall street has settled down to waiting and the stock exchange will do no more business while the London market is closed.

President Wilson signed the bill which would make available for additional circulation more than a billion dollars.

Austrians Kill Russian Aviators

Austrian sharpshooters winged a Russian aeroplane scouting over Lemberg. The pilot of the machine was struck. He lost control of the aeroplane, fell nearly 500 feet and was killed, as was an officer who was a passenger.

Real Ability.

"What is the secret of success?" asked the fool.

"The ability to conceal your lack of ability," replied the sage.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

GREAT MASS OF PROOF

Reports of 30,000 Cases of Kidney Trouble, Some of them Quincy Cases.

Each of some 6,000 newspapers of the United States is publishing from week to week, names of people in its particular neighborhood, who have used and recommended Doan's Kidney Pills for kidney backache, weak kidneys, bladder troubles and urinary disorders. This mass of proof includes over 30,000 recommendations. Quincy is no exception. Here is one of the Quincy cases.

Charles J. Somers, barber, 17 Newcomb street, Quincy, says: "I had a lame back and weak kidneys for ten years. Nothing ever relieved me until I used Doan's Kidney Pills. They soon restored my kidneys to their proper working order and corrected the other ailments. I publicly recommended Doan's Kidney Pills after they helped me so much and I have watched their effect in other cases since. I use Doan's Kidney Pills off and on and I wouldn't be without a supply."

Atlantic Can Be Crossed by Airship In Less Than a Day

By Dr. ALEXANDER GRAHAM BELL, Inventor of the Telephone and Experimenter In Aviation

THE distance from Newfoundland to Ireland is less than two thousand miles. This means that if you go at one hundred miles an hour you will cross the Atlantic in twenty hours—less than a day. We have flying machines that go at a greater speed than that. We already have machines that could cross the ocean if their engines can keep going for twenty hours. Of course these are exceptional machines, but even the ordinary machines of today make fifty miles an hour.

NOW, A FLYING MACHINE FLIES FASTER AS YOU GO HIGHER UP, BECAUSE THE RARER AIR OFFERS LESS RESISTANCE TO THE MOTION, WHILE THE PROPELLER GIVES THE SAME PUSH WITH THE SAME POWER WHATEVER THE ELEVATION. AS YOU GET INTO THE RARER AIR THE PROPELLER SPINS AROUND FASTER. A FIFTY MILE AN HOUR MACHINE FLYING TWO MILES HIGH IN THE AIR—AND WE HAVE MACHINES THAT HAVE GONE TWICE AS HIGH AS THAT—WILL FLY MUCH FASTER THAN FIFTY MILES AN HOUR. THEN AT AN ELEVATION OF TWO MILES IN THE AIR THERE IS A CONSTANT WIND BLOWING IN THE GENERAL DIRECTION OF EUROPE, HAVING A VELOCITY ANYWHERE FROM TWENTY-FIVE TO FIFTY MILES AN HOUR.

SOME FACTS ABOUT CITY OF QUINCY

A Leader in Industries, Value of Products and Persons Employed

Per Capita Valuation Is Increasing Rapidly

The facts relative to the City of Quincy presented below are from the census of 1910 and other official figures, and there is much of which people of the "City of Presidents" may be proud:

AS AN INDUSTRIAL CITY

The last census showed Quincy to have more industries per capita than Boston. Quincy has 151—one for every 202 people, while Boston has 2,747, one for every 244 people. The industries of Quincy are large industries and employ 5,371—one out of every six of population—while the industries of Boston employ one out of eleven. The value of Quincy products is unusually high,—$8,082,446 annually, or $273.92 per capita; while the Boston value is $274.89 per capita.

SHIPYARD OF WORLD-WIDE FAME

Builders of battleships New Jersey, Rhode Island, Vermont, North Dakota and Nevada for the United States government; battleship Rivadavia for the Argentine Republic; submarines for the United States and Japanese navies; also other warships, passenger steamers and freight steamers. Employs about 4000. Has entertained many notables of the United States and foreign countries.

QUARRIES OF QUINCY GRANITE

The standard for excellence among Granites—Increased demand—Quality improving—Inexhaustible rock ribbed mountains—Takes the best polish. Extensively used for memorials both large and small, to be found in all the large cemeteries of the country, the battlefield at Gettysburg, and other battlefields of the Civil War. Bunker Hill Monument is built of Quincy granite; also the First Parish church, Quincy City Hall, and other public buildings.

A POPULAR SEASIDE RESORT

Quincy with its 23 miles of sea-coast has several attractive summer resorts, many now occupied by all-the-year residents. Houghs Neck and Squantum are both parts of Quincy, and all along the shore of Quincy bay between these two peninsulars are resorts of different names—Atlantic beach, Wollaston beach, Quincy Shore reservation, Merrymount, Adams Shore, Post Island, Manet Beach and Great Hill,—also Rock Island, Bethel Beach, Germantown and Quincy Point, all popular for yachting, bathing and cool breezes. The fact that Quincy has four large yacht clubs shows the interest taken in yachting; all these clubs have clubhouses and many yachts enrolled.

AS A RESIDENTIAL CITY

Rev. A. L. Hudson says—"Of all the cities of the country, Boston stands easily the FIRST in the beauty and variety of its many suburbs; and among them all NONE has so many attractions to offer to the home seeker as OUR OWN QUINCY. Its diversified area, sloping from wooded hill tops with their ocean view over rolling parks and level downs to sweeping shore line of the bay, gives ample scope for each man, according to his taste, to possess the one most desirable building site in ALL THE WORLD."

A WEALTHY CITY

In 1870 Quincy had an assessed valuation of $4,449,500, representing a per capita valuation of $597.89. In 1880 the per capita had increased to $712.21; in 1890 to $817.73; in 1900 to $844.54; in 1910 to $994.33. In 1913 the assessed valuation was $36,716,260, a per capita valuation of OVER $1,000.00. Note the BIG increase in valuation, and the fact that the per capita valuation is nearly TWICE as large. Quincy is 20th in valuation in Massachusetts as well as 20th in population.

RESERVATIONS AND PLAYGROUNDS

Quincy has within its borders MORE in Reservations, Parks and Playgrounds than any other city of Massachusetts. Over 2,600 acres in Metropolitan reservations are in this city, also Merrymount park of 91 acres with a shore front, Faxon park of 27 acres and several ward playgrounds. Dr. Eliot says, "Cities with the most exempt property are the best to live in."

AN EDUCATIONAL CITY

Quincy one of the first to employ a Superintendent of Schools. Under Col. Francis W. Parker our schools obtained a National renown. In 1900 celebrated the 25th anniversary of Col. Parker's election. In 1914 all public school buildings are of brick. Quincy is 8th among the 33 cities in number of grammar school gradnates, and 14th in High school graduates when Woodward Institute is included. May honestly be compared with other cities in the Metropolitan district.

QUINCY AN HONORED NAME

It was Rev. Daniel Munro Wilson, a former pastor of the First Parish church, who said:—"Quincy seems the one name congenial to the spirit and history of this locality. Deeprooted in chivalrous Norman life, transplanted here with the first settlers, associated with so much that is fine and high in many who here bore it, and in utterance full and dignified, it tastes of the soil, it seems almost the natural product of environment, and not a title fixed by formal vote. Honored at home, abroad revered, it is a distinction to be called OF QUINCY."

NAMED FOR COL. JOHN QUINCY

The more the name of Col. John Quincy is scrutinized the more is exalted. For 21 successive years, that is from 1719 to 1740, he was returned to the House of Representatives with unfailing regularity. His personality, his character and judgment, and his sturdy provincial patriotism so impressed his fellow representatives that they elected him Speaker of the House from 1727 to 1741, a period of 14 years. A tribute from town and Province that stamps him as no common man."

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

MODERN CONVENIENCES

Reference might also be made to our public conveniences:—abundance of Metropolitan water, Metropolitan sewer system, auto fire department, permanent police department, electric lights and gas in all parts of the city, nine electric car routes, good train service, excellent banking facilities, daily and weekly newspapers, city hospital, public library, etc. etc.

A PATRIOTIC CITY

With Adams and Hancock as Revolutionary statesmen Quincy early became distinguished. She sent to the Civil war one of the FIRST companies of MINUTE MEN. The first call of Lincoln was issued unexpectedly April 15, and the next day Co. H, Fourth Massachusetts Volunteers, reported in Boston and left for Fortress Munroe, and was mustered into service April 22. FIRST soldier killed in engagement was from Quincy. Sent 954 men to Civil war although population of town was then only 6,800. Erected a Soldiers Monument as early as 1868. In the war with Spain, a majority of the members of Co. K, Fifth regiment M. V. M., were from Quincy. Flag today honored and revered.

BECAUSE OF ITS REMARKABLE GROWTH

In 1875 Quincy was a small town with a population of less than 10,000. We have not only made rapid gains but we have PASSED SEVERAL OTHER TOWNS AND CITIES in the race. A good index of progress. In 1880 Quincy was 29th in population in Massachusetts; in 1885 we had moved up to 27th place; in 1890 we had jumped to 23d; in 1895 to 22d; in 1905 to 21st; and the last census in 1910 showed us No. 20, with a population of 32,642, which has since been increased to nearly 40,000. A rapidly growing city is always a good place for business.

WOMEN'S CLUBS FLOURISH

Prominent in the civic work and social life of Quincy are its Women's Clubs—capable, self-sacrificing women, who esteem it a pleasure to work for the uplift of the city and its people. These include the Quincy Women's Club, Wollaston Women's Club, Squantum Women's Club, Riverside Women's Club, Lady Associates of Houghs Neck, Young Women's Club, King's Daughters, Women's Relief Corp, Quincy Catholic Club, Hospital Aid Association, Day Nursery Association, and many others.

A CITY OF CHURCHES

The number of churches in the city is a surprise to everyone, but with two or three exceptions all are flourishing and doing the work of the Master. There are seven Congregational, including one Swedish and one Finnish; four Catholic; four Methodist, including one Swedish; three Baptists including one Swedish; three Episcopal, including a Swedish Lutheran; two Unitarian, two Presbyterian, two Hebrew, one Universalist, one Christian Science, and other mission churches. Many of these churches are free from debt and constantly making improvements.

MANY GENEROUS BENEFACTORS

Few cities have been so favored as Quincy in endowments which are almost without limit, and meet many requirements: an institute for the education of girls, a City Hospital, including the Rice pavilion and a Nurses' home, two large public parks, a beautiful Public Library building, and funds for schools, charity, etc.

JUST A FEW WORDS HISTORICALLY

While Quincy has so much to talk up without delving in history, she has much in history to make her proud, being the birthplace, home and burial place of two Presidents of the United States; the birthplace of the FIRST Vice President; the birthplace of John Hancock, the bold signer of the Declaration of Independence, who was the FIRST Governor of Massachusetts under the Constitution; the site of the FIRST incorporated Railroad in the United States. The birthplaces of the Presidents are preserved today as show houses, also the Quincy mansion owned by the Colonial Dames, and the Church of the Presidents now known as the First Parish church.

ITS MEN AND WOMEN

NEW LAWN MOWERS.

Are the days of the lawn mower numbered? They may be, for according to expert estimony sheep do the job much better and far more cheaply than it can be accomplished by machinery. The first public announcement of the substitution of sheep for the hand pushed machine came a year or two ago when it was stated that John D. Rockefeller was having his grass cut in this way. One can understand how the cheaper and better proposition might appeal to John D. but there are others. According to the Washington Star the polo grounds in that city are to be clipped in the same way. The Star says "The flock, which is the property of a wholesale butcher of this city, is composed of 108 units. In the morning and early afternoon they wander unmolested over the broad field, performing the task that is theirs in the most willing manner possible, and in the evening they are confined in a small corral in the northern section of the park.—Taunton Herald.

DARTWELL WINS AGAIN

Nasty Sea for First of Corinthian Races

A nasty sea and a stiff northeast breeze greeted the fleet of yachts that took part in the first of the mid-summer races of the Corrinthian Yacht club off Marblehaed on Wednesday. The wind and sea however did not prevent 91 yachts from starting in the race. The only accident during the race was to the Areyto of Commodore raw of the Squantum club which carried away her mast, which was broken short off at the deck, letting the sails down in a mass upon the crew. The Eleanor of the same class went to the rescue and towed the dismantled yacht home. Owing to the bad weather none of the smaller boats started.

The Meemer of John .T. Cavanagh was the only starter in class M, and she had things her own way. In the sonder class the Cima was the winner, with the Sprig the winner of the first two days races finishing in second place.

In class I, the Aurora finished first with the Dorchen II, in second place.

In the interclub sonder class, the Harpoon was disqualified for not returning to the starting line at the signal having crossed the line when the starting gun was fired.

In class A the Maria L of A. W. Finlay was an easy winner, having a lead of nearly seven minutes corrected time while the Chewink was second.

In class D, the Dartwell of ex-Commodore Whittemore again showed her heels to the rest of the class, finishing with a lead of nearly five minutes corrected time over the Iris, the second boat. The order of finish of the remainder of this class was the Dolly III, Clara, Mudjekeewis and Grayling.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

WILSON MAKES A PEACE MOVE

President Seeks to End War by Offer of Mediation

WARRING NATIONS NOTIFIED

Present Military Status of Those Engaged In Hostilities Need Not Be Changed, Thus Giving Rise to Hope That Tender of Good Offices Will Be Accepted Before Long

Washington, Aug. 6.—The United States stands ready to act in the interests of European peace. The president sent the following cablegram to Willim II., Emperor of Germany; Nicholas II., Czar of Russia; Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria-Hungary; M. Poincare, president of France, and George V., King of England:

"As official head of one of the powers signatory to The Hague convention, I feel it to be my privilege and my duty under article three of that convention to say to you in a spirit of most earnest friendship that I should welcome an opportunity to act in the interest of European peace, either now or any other time that might be thought more suitable as an occasion to serve you and all concerned in a way that would afford me lasting cause for gratitude and happiness."

The proffer of good offices was forwarded by Secretary Bryan to the American embassies in the nations involved and through them transmitted to the governments. President Wilson took the position that the European war was so stupendous and its effect on the entire world was liable to be so lasting, that the United States, as one of the few large neutral powers, could not do otherwise than at least offer to be the means of bringing about peace. The proffer of good offices was not sent to the governments of Servia and Montenegro because those countries are not parties to The Hague convention.

A hope that the president's offer may be accepted is prevalent in official circles, because it is not necessary for any of the warring powers to change the present military status if they accept it. Article 7 of The Hague convention provides:

"The acceptance of mediation cannot, unless there be an agreement to the contrary, have the effect of interrupting, delaying or hindering mobilization or other measures of preparing for war.

"If it takes place after the commencement of hostilities, the military operations in progress are not interrupted in the absence of an agreement to the contrary."

The object of the president in sending the message to the five rulers was to afford them individually and collectively an open door looking toward peace, which will at all times be open to them. The American ambassadors to Germany, Russia, Austria-Hungary, France and England were requested to take up the president's offer in person with the rulers. Cablegrams received from the ambassadors said the president's instructions would be carried out immediately.

It is the purpose of President Wilson to renew the offer of the United States to act in the interest of peace at intervals as the war progresses. Not all the president's official family favored the proffer at this time, believing it should be reserved for a more propitious moment.

The veiw prevails at the state department that in course of time the civilized countries of the world not involved in the war will join with the United States in the effort to bring about peace. The South American countries, particularly Argentine, Brazil and Chile, have already indicated to the state department that they are thoroughly in sympathy with the desire of the United States to help restore peace if it can be done.

The administration officials express the view privately that the state of mind of Europe at this time is such as to make it impossible, probably, for the men to whom President Wilson has appealed to give any real consideration to his proffer of the good offices of the United States.

The prevailing view is that no suggestions looking to peace will be or can be entertained until a few great battles on land and sea have been fought. Some of the best informed members of the diplomatic service express the view that the time will come when one, if not more, of the governments concerned will seek the assistance of the United States in an effort to restore peace with honor.

It is expected that a general amnesty will be declared soon. Hostilities were suspended.

DEATH IS BUT MATTER OF DAYS

IS REPORTED SINKING RAPIDLY

Calls Constantly For Husband, Who Spends Every Spare Moment With Her—Oxygen and Other Restoratives Applied When Pulse Stops Beating For Few Moments

Washington, Aug. 6.—President Wilson has been at the bedside of Mrs. Wilson almost constantly for several days and her illness of several months' duration is causing worry in official circles.

Mrs. Wilson now lies at the point of death. Four months of almost unbroken illness, a complication of nervous ailments and Bright's disease, have sapped the vitality of the first lady of the land and the end is regarded as a matter of days, perhaps hours.

Her three daughters are at her bedside and relatives have been summoned. Physicians have been in consultation for days, but it is admitted at the White House that hope for her recovery has almost vanished.

Conscious only at intervals, Mrs. Wilson has been cheerful and has called constantly for her husband. Every moment that could be spared from urgent official duties have been devoted by the president to his wife.

At the side of his constant helpmate and adviser he wrote the tender of good offices appealing to the European monarchs to stay their conflict. From the sick-room he has been giving directions to the various department heads for the relief of thousands of Americans stranded abroad.

For several days it has been known to those in closest touch with the White House that Mrs. Wilson was gravely ill and that hope for her recovery was slight. The president himself has clung desperately to the hope that she might yet survive the crisis, but her frail constitution, drained by months of never-ending illness, has been unable to withstand the battle.

She was well enough to attend the wedding of her second daughter, now Mrs. William G. McAdoo, but her recuperative powers were not lasting. Stomach trouble added to her nervous ailment and Bright's disease developed.

Three weeks ago she seemed to rally and was well enough to walk, supported by a nurse, in the White House grounds. With her apparent recovery the president urged that his wife go to a cooler climate, but she steadfastly declined to leave her husband.

A relapse came last week and since then she has been sinking rapidly. Only members of the family were admitted to the sick-room. She has lost in weight until her thin form seemed but a shadow of her former self.

Day and night the family has watched anxiously over her for the past few days. Yesterday her pulse stopped beating for a few moments. Oxygen and other restoratives were applied.

Only those in closest touch with the president have known of the severe strain under which he has been during the last fortnight. Not only the press of domestic legislation and appointments, but the burden of direction for preservation of stable financial conditions at home have fallen upon him.

CUP RACE IS OFF

Lipton Withdraws His Challenge on Account of the War

New York, Aug. 6.—Sir Thomas Lipton, on account of the declaration of war by Great Britain, has withdrawn his yacht Shamrock IV. from the races scheduled to be held off New York for the America's cup.

Lipton's formal withdrawal from the international cup yacht race was received with no surprise in New York yachting circles. Lipton had said before that he would not race in event of England's going to war. In a short time the American cup defense candidates, Vanitie and Resolute, will go out of commission.

Nearly All Serbs to Fight

London, Aug. 6.—Servian mobilization has been completed, according to a Nish dispatch. Ninety-five percent of those liable for active service have responded to the call. The Servian government has prohibited the sending of press dispatches, which is understood as a prelude to the Servian invasion of Bosnia.

Train Kills Two Boys

Lynn, Mass., Aug. 6.—Frederick Jordan, 8, and Peter Lorago, 10, were killed by a train on the elevated structure of the Boston and Maine railroad while lying across the tracks with their heads on the rails to ascertain if there was a train approaching.

Autoist Instantly Killed

Hingham, Mass., Aug. 6.—Louis Amoroso was instantly killed here when the automobile he was driving turned turtle. Guy C. Willis, his companion, escaped with slight injuries.

Advertisers Ask Only A Fair Trial

By HOLLAND.

ADVERTISERS do not attempt to make you agree to buy their goods the rest of your life. They only want you to give their wares a trial, to subject them to actual test by actual use, and then be guided by experience.

Could anything prove more clearly that the advertiser has supreme confidence in his product, that he is absolutely certain that it will please you, that it will be all he says it is?

It would indeed be foolish to spend money to induce you to buy an article that would prove unsatisfactory and would result in your telling friends and neighbors of your experience. Advertisers spend millions making their trademarks known, and in order to make their trademarks valuable they must stand for a certain standard of worth. Having made their trademarks known, manufacturers exert every effort to keep the goods up to the expected high grade.

How She Saved the Bank

A Financial Story of the 1907 Panic

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN

There are different ways of furthering one's getting on in the world. Shortsighted persons can see only one way, which is acting on the adage, "Every fellow for himself and the devil take the hindmost." Nevertheless men have made fortunes by helping others. The difference between this class and the other is that one acts with a view to bettering his condition, while the other acts through kindness of heart.

When I was a young man I obtained a position in a bank and by attending faithfully to business rose to be cashier. I was economical, so far as my own personal expenses were concerned, but I don't think I was mean. I would never lend small sums to my young men companions, but when any one really needed assistance would give it outright.

That I had good judgment in making investments is proved by the fact that my savings grew rapidly. When I was twenty-seven years I married Molly Erskine, aged twenty. A year after our marriage word came in from a western town that there was only one bank in the place and room for more. After talking the matter over with my wife I decided to start a bank there. I got some of the stockholders of the institution with which I was connected interested in the project and with my own capital in due time opened my doors for deposits.

I found that the man already established, John Redfield, had antagonized certain persons by declining to give them all the discounts they desired, and, there being no other banker in the town, they had taken steps to have one establish himself there. These persons welcomed me, opened accounts with me and averred that if I would do a liberal business and not be scared at trifles I would soon do all the business of the town.

I saw at once that Redfield was not pleased at the appearance of a rival and took secret means to discredit me. He kept the best and safest accounts, while the weakest came to me. But by adhering rigidly to fixed principles of banking and acting on the supposition that there was business enough for both of us I got my share of the new deposits, which were increasing, and occasionally one of Redfield's customers would fall to me. But, as I had maintained, there was business enough for both, and at the end of five years Redfield had more than held his own, while I had obtained a solid footing.

Bankers, like sea captains, must expect storms. I managed my affairs with this in view; but, as in the case of a sailor, much depends upon the facility with which he can get in sail, so the banker's safety depends upon his ability to get in his loans. If the captain keeps his sails furled he will make no headway, and if the banker keeps his money in his vaults he will make no money. When the panic of 1907 came on I was in as good, if not better, condition than the average banker to meet the storm.

It looked at one time during that panic as if the financial structure of the United States was about to collapse. I confess I was in great fear that it would carry me down with it and bury me under its ruins. Every day more money was withdrawn from circulation and locked up. I got in all the loans I could and sold at a great sacrifice all my private property. This fund I turned into gold, took it to my home and concealed it under a board in the floor. I proposed to keep it to enable me to pass a crisis.

The financial barometer—the New York stock market—continued to fall, and money grew proportionately scarce. One morning I heard that a run had been started on Redfield's bank, and as the day wore on the line before the paying teller's window increased. There was nothing like a run on my bank, but during the day the amount drawn was three times the usual average.

The next day the line leading to the paying teller's window of Redfield's bank was increased, and at noon Redfield came to my bank and told me that he must either have help or close his doors. He asked for it on the ground that if he went under the panic would extend to me and I would be carried down with him.

I told him that I did not think so. That there would be a run on my bank I was willing to admit, but my intelligent depositors would not draw their money, and I could pay all the rest.

"Then," he said, "I am ruined. I am too old to begin again, especially with a debt hanging over my head. If I had $20,000 or $30,000 to tide me over the rest of the day I could pull through, for tomorrow I am promised payment on a sale of bonds I have made."

It was then 12 o'clock. I told Redfield that I would consider the matter of helping him and let him know by 2, if not earlier. He went back to the hungry crowd before his bank, and I, calling an auto cab, went home. There I found my wife and told her that I was called upon to save Redfield, with the strong probability of going under myself later. If I gave him the gold I had in reserve he would pull through. But my trouble was still to come, and, without the funds I had sacrificed my property to provide I knew I could not meet a run.

My wife thought a long while before replying. When she did she said:

"Give it to him. He is an old man and to break down would kill him. I have little doubt that in saving him you will go under. But we are comparatively young and can begin again."

"Remember," I said, "beginning again is a hard thing to do."

"So it is, but when I or another must perish I prefer to give way to the other."

Without replying, I took up the board concealing my treasure and was about to put the gold in a satchel when my wife stopped me.

"Go back to the bank," she said, "and let me attend to this. You are needed there, and I can convey this gold to Mr. Redfield."

There were the shining gold pieces that I had accumulated slowly and by constant work and that I was going to send to another on the eve of needing them myself to save me from ruin.

"'Charity begins at home,'" I said to Molly. "I fear we are going to do something we will regret."

"That adage has a good deal of truth in it," she replied, "but I have never come across any adage that will cover every case. I prefer the one 'Cast your bread upon the waters.'"

"Very well, sweetheart; if we go under through saving another you will not chide me with having done so and I shall have a stout helpmeet with whom to begin anew."

I left my wife to attend to the matter in her own way and returned to my own immediate duties.

A few minutes before 2 o'clock Molly came to my bank.

"Well," she said, "I've taken the gold to Mr. Redfield. I chose a coarse bag that had held potatoes to carry it in, and the bulk looked very small. It occurred to me that I would be seen delivering it at the bank and if I could make the crowd believe there was more of the gold it would induce confidence. I emptied the coal scuttle standing beside the range into the bottom of the bag and put the gold on top."

"All of it?"

"Every dollar."

"Go on."

"When I got the coal and the gold in the bag and had tied a string around the top I cut a slit in the bag near the gold, over which I held my hand. Then I called a cab, got in with the treasure and drove to the Henderson bank. When I reached it I sent in for some one to come out and carry it inside. The crowd watched the clerk take the bag from me, and as I handed it to him I took my hand away from the slit I had cut in it, and out rolled half a dozen gold pieces.

"The crowd set up a shout, and, hurrying the clerk into the bank, I picked up the pieces on the pavement—that is, all I could find. I think I must have lost something like five half eagles, or $25."

"An investment worth $25,000!" I exclaimed.

"As I went into the bank to take a receipt for the funds there was another shout, and I noticed a number of persons leave the line."

I threw my arms about Molly's neck and kissed her.

There was a call at the telephone. It was Redfield.

"That wife of yours," he said, "far more than the gold she brought has saved me. We have counted a dozen depositors whose accounts would aggregate $30,000 leave the line. The gold wouldn't have been enough. It was the coal that did it!"

I told Molly that I had had some very large amounts drawn during the day and if there was as much cash called for on the morrow I would surely go under.

The next morning I was horrified at seeing a line of unintelligent depositors before my bank waiting for the doors to open. I thought I could stand the run for that day, and I did, but the next as early as 11 o'clock our funds had been so reduced that I knew we could not keep paying till the closing hour.

The morning journals had given an account of my wife's arrival at Redfield's bank with a bag of gold and of the effect it had produced. This helped me a good deal, but it seemed that every depositor I had in the lower walks of life was in line. It was half past 2, and our pile had been reduced to $200. Despite the delays practiced by the receiving teller to gain time I knew it would not hold out for the remaining half hour.

At twenty-nine minutes to 3 Molly drove up to the bank with a sack and called for some one to carry it into the bank. I rushed out, seized it and ran with it into the bank amid the plaudits of the crowd. When I got it into my private office and opened it, hoping that Molly had effected a loan, I was shocked to see nothing but nut coal.

But her ruse was effective. Some of those in the line, having deposits which for their class were quite large, on seeing her carry in a bag, supposing that she was repeating her act of the day before, left the line, leaving those near the window whose accounts were very small. When the clock struck 3 and the window was closed there was but $12 in the bank.

But meanwhile Redfield had got in his loan and the next morning returned sufficient of what I had sent him to carry me through. As soon as all danger had passed he had the gratitude to tell the story of how he had been saved, and, while Molly became a heroine, I profited in emoluments.

Of all the acts of my life this pleases me most.

Culinary Notes

Dessert Recipes For Hot Weather.

These tested desserts, delicious and cooling, with the added virtue of coolness, are suggested for the hot days by Miss Cora E. Binzel, instructor in home economics, University of Wisconsin, extension division:

Watermelon Cups.—Remove the rind and cut the melon into cubes; sprinkle with powdered sugar and lemon juice; chill before serving.

Apple Marshmallow.—Take one cupful pared apples, one-half cupful blanched almonds, one cupful marshmallows, cut in quarters; two cupfuls whipped cream. Combine and chill.

Mousse.—Take one cupful heavy cream, one saltspoonful salt, one-third cupful powdered sugar, one teaspoonful vanilla. Beat the cream, add the sugar, salt and vanilla. Turn the mixture in a tin mold, adjust cover and seal with strips of cheesecloth dipped in melted lard or butter or seal with melted paraffin. This is to prevent salt water from entering the can. Pack the mold in salt and ice, using two parts ice to one part salt. Allow two hours or more for the freezing. This is a delicious, wholesome dessert, very easily prepared and does not require an ice cream freezer. For variety flavor the cream with an ounce of melted chocolate or one-third cupful maple sirup. During the winter the mold may be packed in a mixture of snow and salt. Baking powder or cocoa cans may be used for molds. Fill with water and test to see that they do not leak.

Freshening Vegetables.

Lettuce, parsley and all other green things may be kept deliciously fresh if first washed in cold water, shaken and then packed in a tin pail that has a very tight cover, so that the air may not penetrate to them. This should be set in a cool place.

In the case of lettuce, when the cover is removed the leaves will pop up, and you will find them almost as crisp and fresh as if they had just come from the garden.

Even lettuce that has wilted will revive wonderfully if subjected to a few hours of such treatment. To purify greens that are to be eaten raw use a pinch of boric acid powder in the water in which they are washed.

Preserving Eggs.

To know how to preserve eggs from the time when they are cheap to the time when they are dear is most important. As they cannot spoil without oxygen, they may be kept for a long time in powdered charcoal, which must be renewed at least once a month.

Glycerin is also an excellent preservative for eggs. A mixture of glycerin with half its volume of water should be prepared, the eggs placed in this solution and kept below the surface by a floating piece of wood.

The same solution will serve for constant use for a long time, other eggs being put in when some are removed. Be sure that the eggs are clean when put in.

Timing the Baking.

A clever woman whose hands and mind were filled with small duties all seemingly to be performed at one and the same time, found her bread and rolls often left just the few minutes too long in the oven so they were not appetizing, as she wanted them to be. With her small alarm clock she arranged all this perfectly. She simply set the alarm for the hour that the bread should be looked at, went about her other duties, and at its ring found she had conquered once more by exercising her wits.

Spreading Butter.

There is poor economy in wasting hard butter trying to spread bread, but a knife dipped into boiling water and then used in the butter does away with all trouble and spreads evenly. Especially in preparing sandwiches is it important to have each slice nicely spread with enough, but not too much butter, and this should be done before cutting; then the slices laid ready to have any preferred filling.

Keeping Rhubarb.

To preserve rhubarb so that it may be ready for use at any time wash and cut into small pieces, as for stewing, being careful to remove all strings. Fill the jar to the top with the rhubarb and then stand the jar under a cold water faucet, where the water can slowly run in and out for half an hour. Screw on the cover under water so that no air can get in and keep in a cool, dark place.

The Ice Supply.

It is much more injurious to food to keep it in a refrigerator with a scant supply of ice than to leave it covered on a pantry shelf where there is a good supply of fresh air. If one must be economical with ice wrap each cake in a piece of old woolen blanket, which must be removed and boiled in water and baking soda once a week.

Useful Hint.

If you will take freshly gathered green corn on the cob or carefully shelled peas or beans and dip them in boiling water, then dry them in a room in which there is a free circulation of air they will keep for a long time and retain much of their freshness and flavor.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

In the children's department of the Thomas Crane Public library a comprehensive and carefully selected list of books for vacation reading has been made. These books are arranged according to subject under attractive headings as follows:

"Stories from many lands."
"Stories of adventure."
"People we read about."
"Stories from history."
"Indian stories."
"What to do in vacation."
"Boy scouts."
"Camp fire girls."
"Nature stories."
"Famous old stories."
"Stories on poetry."
"Little books for little folks."

In order to make it a pleasurable contest, each boy and girl registering for these books is expected to read at least five, and as many more as possible during the vacation season. A careful record will be kept, and at the close of the vacation a list will be posted showing the number of books read by each borrower who has entered the contest.

Many have already become interested in this little vacation game but there is still time for others to enter it, and read the required number before the beginning of school.

The vacation spirit is also being carried out by the addition of picture books for the little folks, whose happy faces show how fully they appreciate their vacation privileges.

OPEN TO ALL NATIONS.

When the Panama canal is opened for traffic Aug. 15, it will be thrown open to any warship of any nation, who will have a right to peaceable and uninterrupted passage through it. It is also announced should the war continue until next February the naval parade at the formal opening of the canal will be eliminated.

ALDEN KINDRED.

Quincy members of the Alden Kindred of America were present Wednesday at the fourteenth annual reunion which was held on the grounds of the John Alden House at Duxbury. At the election of officers held during the day, Mrs. Flora S. Materson of South Braintree was re-elected secretary.

NEW TRACTOR TRUCK.

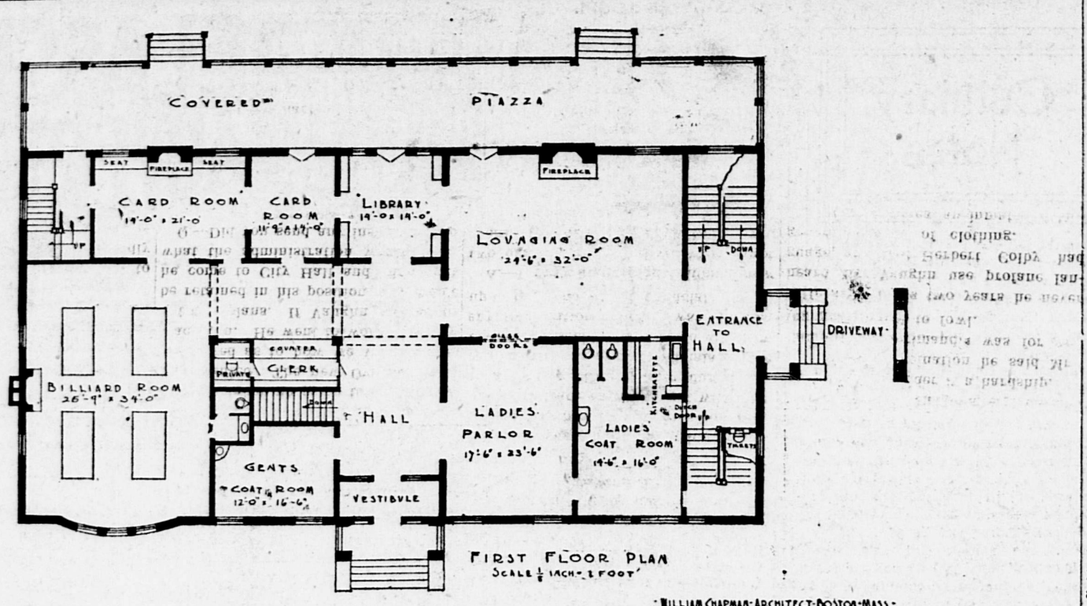

It is expected that the steamer located at the Central fire station will be shipped to Providence on Friday, to be equipped with a tractor truck. During its absence a relief steamer will be in use at the central station. Chief Billings said this morning that the steamer would probably be returned in three to four weeks.

floor has a seating capacity of 500 with a gallery seating 80 more. It is well lighted from both sides and has a stage 15 by 25 with dressing rooms on either side. Behind the stage is a passageway leading to a large kitchen and pantry with a rear staircase for deliveries.

From the hall, French windows lead out onto the balcony extending the length of the building.

Conveniently located at the entrance to the assembly hall are the ladies and gentlemen's dressing rooms, equipped with toilets.

Back of the second floor mezzanine are three spacious committee rooms and at the rear of the stage on the same level are the janitors' apartments and a storage room.

BOWLING ALLEYS.

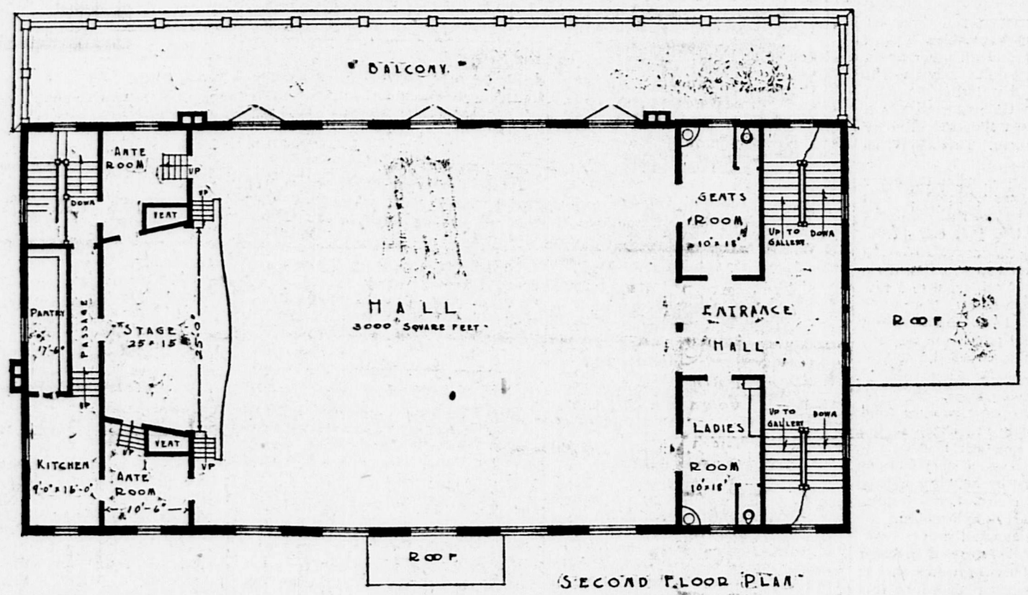

The basement contains six bowling alleys with ample seating accommodations for spectators. Two of the alleys can be isolated for the use of the ladies when desired, access being gained from the ladies' quarters.

There are large locker rooms and toilets for both men and women in their respective quarters. The entire building will be heated with indirect and direct radiation.

The interior will be finished in hard wood throughout, the present intention being to keep the men's quarters in natural wood and the ladies portion painted in light colors.

PUBLIC HALL.

The assembly hall is so separated from the rest of the club quarters that, it can be used for public entertainments, lectures, dances and banquets without in any way disturbing the members.

MAYOR MILLER

to Vaughn about that report and did not make a searching investigation.

POLITICS ENTER.

Then the examination took a new turn in which politics figured. Mr. Vaughn, according to Mr. Green, was the first one to mention Mike Shea when he told about telephone calls, postals and cartoons received. He said it was then that Mr. Vaughn first mentioned Mike Shea and accused him of getting Pat Maddigan drunk. He said Vaughn remarked Shea was under civil service, but said he did not know what led up to the remark.

City Solicitor Pinkham told the court he wanted to introduce the the statement of Michael Curtis, who died a few days after signing it, and Judge Avery recommended it be held over for further consideration.

The afternoon closed with Mrs. Ellen Deady repeating her story of how Vaughn didn't fill an order for her son, and how he returned home in tears. Robert, the boy took the stand and corroborated his mother.

MAYOR TESTIFIES.

Mayor Miller proved to be the sensational witness of the day. He said in his first month in office, officials of the Poor department refused to give confidential agents in his employ any information, and that all efforts to learn the workings of the department were fruitless because "it was all bottled up."

Council McAnarney pressed him to name the official and he repeatedly said he didn't know who executed the manoeuvre that balked his investigators efforts, nor did he know whether they were connected now with the office. When asked whether he had a man of a woman in mind, Mayor Miller answered "I think it had on dresses."

This testimony resulted from the attempts of the defense counsel to show that Mayor Miller had not personally made an investigation and it later developed that he sent orders through Overseer Green to Supt. Vaughn, but did not know if they ever had been delivered. He said he had full faith in Mr. Green and that Mr. Green knew he was at his back.

Mayor Miller spoke of his first visit and said when he asked Mrs. Vaughn why she had not tried to do as he wanted her to, she answered "because I won't take orders from that pot bellied S————B————."

He said he had never been there before that day, and when asked to give an opinion of the kind of meat furnished by Johnson Bros. he said he was not in court to advertise any merchants.

He admitted to Counsel McAnarney that he had not tasted the food bought there, and that now supplies were purchased in a Boston house.

He said he had no information that Mr. Vaughn supplied anything but the best in food.

Judge Avery said he understood that the quality of food was not questioned but that the city was trying to prove extravagance.

Mayor Miller related in detail his first visit. In cross examination, he said it was two or three days after Mr. Vaughn had been dismissed. He said these people had been there under the new administration two months and had taken no pains to learn what was wanted. The new Overseer was instructed as to how we wanted that place run. He went to work to carry out the plans. If Vaughn wanted to be retained in his position why didn't he come to City Hall and find out what the administration wanted?

Q.—Did you send any instruction to him he refused to obey?

A.—No; I would say yes.

Q.—What was the instruction?

A. I didn't say that. You are getting muddled.

Counsel McAnarney said, I beg your pardon. So long as you don't get muddled I don't care.

Q.—Did you send any instruction he failed to obey?

A.—Yes, that inmates were to receive good humane treatment.

Q.—By whom did you send that word?

A.—Mr. Green.

Q.—When?

A.—Around the first of March.

Q.—Did you receive any reply?

A.—None, that I remember.

Q.—Did you make any inquiries as to whether or not it was carried out?

A.—I did!

Q.—Did you learn through Mr. Green?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Did he say he had conveyed his instructions to Mr. Vaughn?

A.—Yes.

Q.—And so far as he did or not you don't know?

A.—No.

Q.—Then in only one instance you issued orders that were disregarded and you didn't know whether they reached Mr. Vaughn or not, and then two days after dismissal you went down to look over things.

Mayor Miller did not answer.

Mayor Miller during his testimony answered evasively several times. He was again put on the stand and spoke of two letters received that contained complaints. One was from a reputable business man who informed him that an inmate attended Sunday school and arrived back late and was given no dinner.

Then, asked Counsel McAnarney, during your first two months you were unable to learn anything but what was told. Mayor Miller said during his first month in office officials in the Poor department refused to give him any information and it was bottled up. Q.—Who was the official.

A.—I don't know and I didn't know two officials in City Hall when I got there. Q.—After you got there you learned their names. A.—Some of them.

Q.—Who was the official.

A.—I don't know.

Q—You don't know who you were talking to when taking information.

MISS PURCHASE.

Miss Jennie M. Purchase, secretary of the Associated Charities appeared for the city. She said inmates did not act naturally and appeared to be under too strict discipline. She spoke of the shrinking of the shoulders of inmates as the matron passed through the corridor, and of the hesitation of all of them.

In cross examination she said she did not know whether it was the result of physical conditions or otherwise.

THE FIRST WITNESS.

Charles T. Reed, a blind inmate, was the first witness this morning. He had been at the almshouse two years.

In speaking of conditions there, he said fire was needed several times and he frequently felt cold. He said Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn were arbitrary in their treatment of inmates. Food, he said was all right, but often was improperly cooked.

He thought loud talk of Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn, a usual occurrance, was rough on the inmates. He heard Mrs. Vaughn say to an inmate, Mrs. Campbell, "she would knock her block off." He testified he wore one paid of stockings seven weeks. Conversation was not allowed while inmates were eating, and all meals were eaten in silence.

In answer to Judge Avery, he said he did not consider it a hardship.

In cross examination he said Mrs. Campbell's reprimand was for giving good bread to fowl.

He said in his two years he never heard Mr. Vaughn use profane language, and that Herbert Colby had general charge of clothing.

Mrs. Helen Shea, an inmate for two years, said she did general house work and had charge of a sick inmate. Mrs. Vaughn used no bad language but spoke rashly and showed her no respect, and shook her fist in her face although capable of work.

When sick she was treated as other inmates, and received the same food. Food was poor with no nourishment in it. She made no complaint because she would have received the same thing over and over.

She said now conditions are very good as compared to the time of Mr. Vaughn.

In cross examination Mrs. Shea said Mrs. Vaughn shook her fist but once.

DROPPED FROM VOTING LISTS

Wards Five and One Lose Largest Number

City Clerk Crane has just completed the work of notifying parties who were on the voting lists last year, whose names were dropped from this year's lists. This notice is in compliance with the state law.

NEWSY BRIEFS

The rebuilding of Elm street is nearly completed and is a great improvement.

Mr. and Mrs. John Silva of River street have returned from Newport, R. I.

Mrs. George Sprague of Washington street is enjoying a sojourn at Gardner, Maine.

Mrs. Margaret Walsh and family of Quincy avenue have taken a cottage at Nantasket for the remainder of the season.

Miss Jennie Taylor of Quincy Point has returned from Connecticut, where she has been the guest of relatives the past three weeks.

Nomination papers for candidates for the Legislature must be filed with the Quincy Board of Registrars on or before Saturday, Aug. 15.

Mrs. Charles E. French and Miss Annie French of Bigelo wstreet have returned from Houghs Neck, both much improved in health.

Mrs. Annie Gray of Granite street and two children Alice and Albert, have gone to New York for a two weeks vacation.

Russell Sanborn and Miss Ruth Sanborn of Wollaston are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Arthur T. Russell in New Haven, who were formerly of Quincy.

Mr. and Mrs. John Morrison of 31A Granite street have announced the engagement of their daughter, Margery Gladys, to John Grant of Chelsea, formerly of this city.

The Loyalty Circle of the Central Methodist church at Brockton were guests on Tuesday of Mrs. J. C. Gray at Houghs Neck. The trip was made by electrics.

Mr. and Mrs. James Richardson and Mr. and Mrs. Walter H. Walker of this city are at Southport, Me., for two weeks. They made the journey in an auto.

The Fourth Annual Fair of Col. A. B. Packard Camp 95, Sons of Veterans will be held early in November this year and the committee are hard at work making arrangements for several new features.

Birch bark messages have been received by friends from T. Atkinson McLay and J. Raymond Copeland, two popular young men of this city, who are doing a modified "Joe Knowles stunt" in the New Hampshire woods.

The Bigelow base ball team of Quincy Point will play the Riversides of North Weymouth at the field day in aid of St. Jerome's church on Saturday. The Bigelows defeated the Riversides in a spirited contest at a similar event one year ago, the score being 11 to 7 and the former team is quite sure of carrying off the honors this year. A large number of rooters will accompany the Bigelow team and cheer them on to victory.

JAMES H. PENNIMAN LANDED AT HALIFAX

Quincy Mansion School Teacher Passenger on S. S. Koenigin Luise Reported Sunk

Interview With Dr. Harold Curtis Who Was On Arabic

Herbert Arnold, son of Mrs. Annie B. Arnold of Elm street, a teacher in the Croy school in Munich, Germany, in a letter dated July 22, informed his mother of the trend of events. He has been there nearly two years and in that time has been a student of happenings in the empire.

His letter in part said:

"Things are looking pretty bad here as martial law has been proclaimed in Austria, and it seems inevitable that she will wage war against Servia. There were great demonstrations throughout all Germany last night in favor of Austria. If Russia doesn't back up Servia all may be well, but if she does then in goes Germany, and the much-dreaded European war will be on. However I think and hope calmer counsels will prevail, but if not I may have to get away from here at any moment.

As far as is known Mr. Arnold is still in the war zone.

Among the passengers arriving on Wednesday in New York on the Kaiser Wilhelm, the last German boat to leave England, was Miss Annie M. Morse of Highland avenue, who was returning from a three months' trip which included the "Land of the Midnight Sun." The steamship was 24 hours overdue, and some anxiety was felt on account of the war situation.

It is reported that James H. Penniman, who has been abroad for business and pleasure combined, was among the passengers on the Mauretania which reached Halifax on Thursday after a record breaking trip, the actual time to Halifax being four days and ten hours. The average speed maintained was 26.06 knots and during the early morning runs she made 27 1-2 knots. The Mauretania had on board more than 1600 passengers. It is possible that there may be other Quincy people aboard this steamship or the Cedric which also arrived at Halifax on Thursday.

The Daily Ledger interviewed Dr. Harold Curtis of Alexandria, Egypt, soon after his arrival at the home of his parents on Upland road, Thursday afternoon. That he is successful at his profession as a dentist was evident to the newspaper man. This is his third year with Dr. Bonney in Egypt and each year their receipts have doubled, so that they are now on easy street. He said there were less than fifty Americans in Alexandria, chiefly representatives of Tobacco companies and the Standard Oil Company. At Cairo he had become well acquainted, and found there many of the best people on earth. On the steamboat trip to England he made many friendships with English people returning from India, including officers in the army and navy, and some Americans. Dr. Curtis was in London three days and chaperoned a party of three young ladies to Westminster Abbey and other points of interest, and saw considerable of English life.

When Dr. Curtis sailed from England he knew Austria-Hungary had declared war on Servia. Passengers on the Arabic learned soon after sailing that the war had spread to other nations, but the wireless operators were forbidden to divulge any news received, and all were kept in suspense. The steamship Olympic passed them like a race horse in mid ocean, looming up as big as an island. For days there was anxiety because of the air of secrecy, and it was a great relief when Boston was reached. Dr. Curtis expected to return in two months, but already realizes that his vacation may be extended because of the European war. He is glad to be among Quincy friends He was graduated from Quincy High in 1907, and later from Tufts dental college.

Among those who arrived on the steamship Arabic from London on Thursday was Mrs. Warrener, wife of the chief engineer of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation, and their son Peveril. The first that the passengers knew of any trouble was on Monday when the captain informed them that they were being chased by a German cruiser. The British cruiser soon picked them up however and from then on convoyed the steamship. Some of the timid ones became somewhat frightened when informed that they were being chased by a German warship.

Miss Louise E. Lummis the teacher of German and French at the Quincy Mansion school sailed June 8 from Baltimore on the "Koenigan Luise" which has been sent to the bottom this week. Post cards before the war began said she was leaving Berlin for Rugen.

J. J. Johnston of 10 Pearl street is a passenger aboard the Pretorian, bound for England. Mr. Johnston left on a two months' visit to Scotland. Definite news has not been received from the Pretorian since she sailed Tuesday. She flies the English flag and may have escaped the German ships that are patroling the ocean lines.

Walter Grant Thomas a son of Mr. and Mrs. George E. Thomas of Newton street is thought to be in France He sailed July 15 for Genoa in the interests of an architectural magazine. He was bound for Paris, and gave his parents a Paris address. No word has been received from him.

Another Quincy lady abroad, whose whereabouts is not known, is Miss Everett of Elm avenue, a daughter of Willard Everett. Miss Everett accompanied one of the tourists parties and was supposed to have left Rome for Switzerland at which place she was due last Sunday. Whether or not she arrived is not known as no word has been received from her.

Judge Louis A. Cook, clerk of the Norfolk County court and one of the associate justices of the Quincy District Court, arrived in Weymouth on Thursday from Weymouth, England, where he represented his town at the unveiling of the statue to John Endicott.

Judge Cook was a passenger on the Arabic which docked in Boston midst scenes of great excitement. He said the voyage was uneventful and that the passengers were calm. Nothing was seen of hostile ships.

Judge Cook said war was the main topic discussed in England when he left and that the navy yard at Bridgeport was unusually busy, all preparations being made apparently for the opening of the threatened crisis.

Miss Corinne LaBrecque was a passenger aboard the missing French liner Savoy and her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Achilles LaBrecque, are much concerned over her safety. The ship was due at the Havre on Tuesday but she has dissappeared. Even the company officials are unaware of her position, and it is thought that she may have been captured by German ships said to be hovering off the French coast. Miss LaBrecque, in the event of being put ashore, will suffer only the inconvenience of a change of plans, since she talks French fluently and has a good knowledge of German.

Among the requests received by Congressmen at Washington asking assistance in locating friends who are in Europe, was one from John W. McAnarney of Quincy to Congressman Gilmore, for help for Clarice B. Doble of Quincy who is supposed to be with Mme. Kaspari's party in Berlin or Paris. Congressman Gilmore states that his district has been fortunate for more than twenty have recently returned from abroad, having sailed a day before hostilities broke out.

The Quincy list of European travellers includes:

Miss Louise E. Lummis
Walter Grant Thomas
Miss Everett of Elm avenue.
J. J. Johnston of Pearl street.
Miss Jane Fortier.
Walter B. Holden.
Mr. and Mrs. Brooks Adams.
Miss Clarice B. Doble.
Mrs. W.G. A. Pattee.
Miss Elizabeth G. Pattee.
Richard Pattee.
Mrs. Joseph L. Whiton.
Mrs. Harry L. Whiton,
Miss Ruth Whiton.
Miss Corrine LaBrecque.
Mrs. T. A. L. Musgrave.
Mrs. George N. Harman.
Miss Bessie Roberts.
Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Duggan.
Miss Mary E. Parker.
Miss Mary Elcock.
Mrs. Louise Hernan.
Herbert P. Arnold.
Mrs. Charles A. Howland.
Mrs. Alice Hultman Eckhert.
Mrs. E. H. Dewson.
Mrs. Frank Floyd.
Mrs. V. Ruswood
Mrs. Mabel Phillips.

When readers of the Daily Ledger hear from Quincy friends in Europe they are requested to telephone to the Daily Ledger,—Quincy 425, as their friends are anxious to hear from them.

AUTO ACCIDENT AT MIDNIGHT

Brockton Man at Hospital and Another Arrested

A peculiar automobile accident happened on Brook road, Milton, early this morning, as a result of which one Brockton man is in the Massachusetts General hospital in an unconscious condition, and probably with a fracture of the skull while a second man is in the custody of the police on a complaint of operating an automobile while under the influence of liquor.

It was about 1 o'clock when Officer Farrington of the Milton police was notified of an auto accident on Brook road, and on investigation found an automobile on the side of the street. Laying across the mud guard was a man so drunk that he did not know where he was or what had happened, while in the street ten feet away lay another man in an unconscious state. A physician summoned ordered the unconscious man taken to the hospital while the driver of the car was taken to the police station.

The injured man is Everett Penny of Brockton while the man under arrest gave his name as Bernard B. Cook, aged 30 years of, 1059 Montello street, Brockton.

While the police were at the accident a third young man came along. He gave his name as Gardner Moore, also of Brockton, and he told the police that he had been with the party. He said that they had gone to Boston where the other two had drank more or less liquor and had then started for home. He said that he never drank and had refused. Seeing the condition the other men were getting into he asked that he might drive the car home but was refused. When the party got to Mattapan Square, he found that they were very much intoxicated and refused to ride further with them, and getting out of the car started to walk home.

No one seems to know just how the accident happened. The driver, Cook, when he sobered up, was unable to tell anything about it, and did not remember anything after leaving Boston on the homeward trip.

Some of the neighbors in the vicinity claim to have heard a crash, as that of two automobiles coming together, and if there was a smash the occupants of the other car made haste to escape. The car when found was on the side of the street and was somewhat smashed.

DISTRICT COURT.

Henry W. Paimes was fined $10, George W. Beeman $10, Archibald D. Morrison $10, John H. Moody, $20, Robert R. Rich $15, and Charles G. Pike $10, for violation of the auto law at Milton.

Dennis Mahoney was sent to the state farm for being a vagrant at Braintree.

Bernard B. Cook was arraigned for operating an automobile while under the influence of liquor at Milton and was held in $1,000 bonds until Aug. 14, to await the outcome of the injuries to Everett Penny, who was with him at the time of the accident and who is now in a Boston hospital.

IMPROVEMENTS AT ATLANTIC

Apparatus Wanted for Children at Playground

At the last meeting of the directors of the Atlantic Improvement Association at the home of Henry F. Mosses, Mr. Mosses suggested some aggressive work for the association. One suggestion carried out was to authorize the buying of an automatic sprayer by the association and to take some steps toward spraying all the mosquito breeding places in and around Atlantic. The association is going to ask several of the young people of Atlantic to aid in soliciting the necessary funds to carry on the work of spraying during the summer.

Another suggestion was to see what could be done to get the necessary apparatus to make the playgrounds suitable for the younger children. Also so to see if a tennis court could be built on the playgrounds. Now the playground is only a ball field, and has not been used by the smaller children.

The association also hopes to have the Board of Health take some action in regard to the swamp opposite the Atlantic depot.

This is the first time the association has kept up its meetings during the summer, but it has been felt necessary in order to get some things accomplished which ought to be done.

RESCUED BY MILTON MAN.

Prof. Arthur W. Roberts, principal of Milton Academy, and a minister of Saco, Me., swam to the assistance of an exhausted man and woman at Old Orchard Beach, Me., Thursday and saved them from drowning. Prof. Roberts heard the cries of help from the waters near Googins rock and saw a man and woman struggling. He plunged overboard and swam to them. With the assistance of the minister both were kept above water until men in boats arrived. The rescuing boat was overturned in the surf and they had to be transferred to another. The pulmotor was needed to restore consciousness to the rescued.

HEARINGS CONTINUED UNTIL THURSDAY

Dr. Burke Tesified He Was Anxious for Removal of Supt. Vaughn

James Flanagan Tells of a Scrap He Had

Judge Avery heard three witnesses —James P. Flanagan, Dr. F. Ramon Burke and John P. Devaney at the Thursday afternoon session of the civil service hearing on the removal of William Vaughn as keeper of the almshouse. All three had testified at the public hearing in the Council chamber and their testimony was the same as given there. It was agreed at adjournment that the remaining witnesses for te city would be heard Thursday morning at 10 o'clock and that the defense would be opened at the Friday session. Several discussions on points of law arose during the trial.

James P. Flanagan was on the stand the greater part of the session. He said his relations with Mr. Vaughn were friendly until he took charge of the stables, and that since then there had been four scraps.

He charged that Mr. Vaughn continually used profanity and repeated the phrases. He also included a description of how Mr. Vaughn pushed Thomas Butler, an inmate.

Mr. Flanagan told a very detailed story of his experiences with Mr. Vaughn and was subjected to a grueling cross examination. In speaking of a sleigh used by the Board of Health, he told how Mr. Vaughn attempted to take it away from him, and said the attitude of Mr. Vaughn was so menacing that he didn't deny there might have been a real fight.

He spoke of his differences with Mr. Vaughn, of the frequency with which he used profanity and curses, and loud talk, and one the whole gave an entertaining resume of the time directly connected with the testimony.

Dr. F. Ramon Burke, former secretary of the Board of Health, and a frequent visitor to the department stable, near the almshouse, said he was called to quell three disturbances and on one occasion saw Vaughn and Flanagan sparring.

He said Vaughn tackled him and indulged in profanity. Employees of his department he said were ordered to relieve inmates of their duties, who in his opinion should not have worked. He went over the testimony he gave at the public hearing.

He said that through an arrangement the Board of Health occupied the stable, and that although Mr. Vaughn had no occasion to go there, he did so and was very disagreeable.

Judge Avery inquired of Dr. Burke if he thought the conditions mentioned resulted from Mr. Vaughn's temperament, and Dr. Burke answered he believed so.

Dr. Burke said he remarked he would do everything in his power to get Vaughn removed.

Mr. McAnarney asked if he was still wearing the jewel of consistency, and witness answered he was.

John P. Devaney's testimony related to the habits of Mr. Vaughn. He told of loud talk directed at inmates, etc., and his testimony as in the cases of the two previous witnesses proved to be a review of the evidence given at the public hearing.

Continued to next Thursday.

MAYOR IN NON-COMMITTAL

Has Authorized no One to Speak on His Candidacy

Although the Daily Ledger had it from reliable authority, that Mayor Miller was not to be a candidate for re-election this fall, His Honor is emphatic in denying the story, saying that the story was absolutely without foundation. Before the Mayor left City Hall on Thursday for his camp at Hingham he gave out the following statement:

"The story in one of the local papers that I have said I would not be a candidate for re-election is absolutely without foundation. I have told no one what I would do or what I would not do in the matter."

The scientific management method of turning the ice cream freezer is to get your wife to do it.

Politics will warm up as soon as the weather cools down.

The women all promise to cleave to their husbands "until death do us part," but that of course does not include the summer resort season.

To the true lover of picnics, the greater the inconveniences of eating luncheon ten miles from a cook-stove, the better the grub tastes.

The world's biggest gun is to be placed at Panama, but it won't look so big as the one the burglar points at you as he stands by your bed at 3 A. M.

Some men with fine vioces are merely using them for solo, concert, or choir work, when they might be down on third base line coaching the runners.

The oratory reported from Congress does not sound very wise or eloquent, but then one is not able to see what impressive gestures the statesmen make.

Cold water bathing is considered very healthful in summer, though many people consider it dangerous to take any of it internally.

What is the world coming to when the women are feeling that washing dishes does not give them all the room for mental enlargement of which they are capable?

It seems strange that city people can't make a farm pay, no matter how much time they spend following the help around in an automobile.

A guest at the summer hotels can retain his popularity even if he breaks several of the moral laws, but not so if it becomes known that he shines his own shoes.

A man with any sentiment will certainly take the kids to the circus, so that they can hear the good old jokes that used to be sprung when he was a boy.

Considering the way the Mexicans act, it is with a shock of surprise that one notes by the pictures that many of their statesmen wear biled shirts.

You can get along very well on your vacation trip with a good sized suit-case, except that it does not make much impression on the hotel people.

The people of this country spend hundreds of millions for cooling drinks in hot weather, but it is too much trouble to stop the horse and give him a drink at the watering trough.

EVOLUTION OF A SUMMER RESORT

At a certain period in their development, many popular summer resorts have changed character. At first they were places of simple hotels and boarding houses. Visitors came informally, lived plainly, and were free to wander where they would.

As the place becomes better known for its natural beauties, house lots are bought by wealthy people and handsome homes erected. The public fenced off from places where it once wandered freely. Hotel guests are looked upon by the cottage element as barbarians, with an innate propensity to wander over private land, and scatter remnants of picnic lunches.

In the early days, it was permissible for people to wear their old clothes. If they wished to economize, they could do their own domestic work.

But as the cottage element comes in, these primitive manners are no longer permissible. People must be prepared to put on otheir fine feathers. Servants must be taken along and all the machinery of elaborate city life provided. But many of the pleasures of the more primitive era are lost.

TEUTONS REPORTED TO BE DRIVEN BACK

Vessels Which Escaped Making For Dutch Coast, With Britain's Navy Harrying Them—German Forces Storm and Hold Two Forts at Liege—Belief That Others Cannot Withstand Bombardment Longer Than Another Day—Far Bloodier Conflicts Expected on French Soil—But One of Three German Armies Has Met Resistance—Half a Billion Dollars For War Voted by British Parliament

London, Aug. 7.—Somewhere out in the North sea the fleets of Great Britain and Germany have met in the death grapple for which both nations have been preparing for decades.

No details of the greatest naval battle of the ages have been revealed. The British admiralty refuses either to affirm or to deny the fact that the fleets are embattled upon the high seas, but an apparent authorization of the engagement is contained in the message sent out by the Press association, in which it is stated that the admiralty gave them the information that the fleets had joined in combat. The channel and the North sea are reported clear, which tends to give official confirmation to the news of the battle.

Everything tends to bear out the wild rumors that are flying through the London streets. Word was flashed to the Hull hospital to prepare to receive 250 British and German seamen, wounded in battle.

Another message received by wireless on the British destroyer Virago at Harwich ordered the officers to be ready to receive 200 prisoners and wounded, who are being brought in by a torpedo boat.

These early messages were at first believed to concern a minor engagement, in which perhaps merely the torpedo boats were battling. Then came the sudden announcement, apparently from an authoritative source, that the two great fleets were actually engaged.

This was followed by an announcement that the superior strength of the British ships had told, after a long and terrible conflict, and that the German vessels which had escaped were making for the Dutch coast with the whole sternth of Britain's navy harrying them from the rear.

The Battle at Liege

The German army of the Meuse slowly but surely is battering its way into the strong walls of Liege. But it is paying a price that may cripple its effectiveness in the greater battles that are to come. The delay of the Germans in reducing this city that was expected to fall so supinely is giving precious time to France, where each hour means more men, more guns.

The flag of Belgium still flies over the battlements of Liege, but two of the encircling forts have been shattered by German artillery and through the breaches hammered in the walls there has poured a steady flow of German soldiers.

The repulse sustained by the invaders throughout the bitter fighting of Wednesday evidently taught them that they had made a serious mistake in despising Belgian prowess. Thursday the assault was carried on more conservatively. There was more bombarding, fewer sensational and futile charges into the face of withering volleys.

The desperate fighting about Liege Wednesday caused great confusion in the minds of many British people. It is difficult to convince them, unused as western Europe is to the shock of arms, that the whole engagement about Liege is merely a preliminary battle. Military experts in London believe that a decisive battle will not be fought for at least ten days, although the daily conflicts now raging in Belgian territory would be regarded as decisive were not the combatants more numerous than in any previous war.

Fighting at Long Range

The German forces have surprised observers by not attempting to level Liege with the great guns for which Germany is famous. Apparently they did not believe that the Belgian forts, over thirty years old, could resist light siege guns. Wednesday they relied too little upon these guns; Thursday the battle was carried on at long range for hours and the deadly effect of the missiles soon was evidenced by breaches in the walls.

For thirty-six hours Liege stood invulnerable. Forts Barchon, Boucelles and Chaudfontaine, where the firing was heaviest, seemed practically unharmed as dawn broke Thursday. But the damage had been greater than any messages from Brussels had disclosed and Thursday two of the forts were captured. The resistance was desperate; hundreds of Germans and Belgians fell dead and dying. But when nightfall came the Germans still held the forts they had stormed and were mounting guns to train upon the other defenses.

Larger guns were being used Thursday and the noise of cannonading was terrific. But except for occasional dashes across open spaces and for counter attacks by the defender, the fighting was far less spectacular than on Wednesday.

Aeroplanes Kept Busy

Aeroplanes were in constant use, monoplanes and biplanes hovered over the combatants and making wide sweeps into the surrounding territory to observe the movements of other columns of the German army or of the Belgian forces that were being rushed toward the scene of fighting.

The forts at Liege have suffered so severely by the fighting that it is generally believed they will be unable to hold out another twenty-four hours. But the defenders will have done their duty, for while their countrymen have been battling at Liege, a strong force of Belgian soldiers has been at work at Namur, strengthening the forts and mounting new guns. But it is doubtful if Namur can hold out for any great length of time, for if the Germans capture Liege they will have unimpeded roads on both sides of the Meuse and will not be delayed by having to construct bridges under fire.

Two Armies Yet Unopposed

Of the three great armies which are moving toward France, only the army of the Meuse has met with stubborn resistance. The army of the Moselle, advancing through Luxemburg, is already on the French boundary. The army of the Rhine, which may after all be the real reliance of the invaders, is still hovering about the boundary near Nancy, but less is known of their movements, as the troops are operating from a friendly base. The real battles of the war will not open until the three armies commence their concerted advance.

The German generals, in their plans for an invasion of France, which have been studied for many years, have never dreamed that the Belgians would try to impede their progress. Consequently the struggle about Liege has sadly confused the German operations. A week ago they probably expected to have all three of their armies within French territory in a week. Another week may pass before that happens.

Then will begin the real horror of the war, beside which the bloody struggles of Wednesday and Thursday will seem but skirmishes.

A Dearth of News

Practically no news has reached London from the German-Russian and the Austrian-Russian frontiers. A band of Russian patrols, driving back some German cavalry, made a dash across the boundary at Lyk and Biala in East Prussia and marched ten miles into German territory.

Every report that comes from this remote border indicates that the warfare being waged there is barbarous. Just as the Germans devastated and burned, so the Russians set fire to the villages that they swarmed into. Out of the silence that broods over that frontier, London is expecting soon to hear tales of horror that will be as incredible as the massacres of non-combatants that made the Balkan wars so shameless.

The bombardment of Belgrade is still reported. Only three people were killed, but the royal palace, the national theatre, the British legation and scores of private houses were either damaged or destroyed.

An action is reported at Sveaborg, the "Gibraltar of the Baltic," where German vessels have begun a bombardment. Sveaborg, in Finland, is one of the strongest places held by Russia on the sea, and it is not believed that any German squadron that could be spared from the North sea is large enough to damage the town to any extent.

Fights 2000 Miles Apart

The magnificent distances between the combatants is again emphasized by reports that the German cruisers reported sunk in the Mediterranean were not captured and that they had been seen near Messina, Sicily. Other reports state that the war was still being carried into another continent by the two vessels which are said to be active off the coast of Algeria, where they bombarded Bona and Philippeville. The distance in a straight line from Sveaborg to Bona, both places bombarded by German ships, is nearly 2000 miles.

With British and German cruisers momentarily expected to clash off the coast of the United States and with Japan ready to attack Tsingtau, the German colony in China, not much of the world except the far stretches of the Pacific are free from possible battles.

Londoners who were prophesying a speedy end to the war were astounded when they learned that $500,000,000 had been appropriated by parliament. The vote was unanimous, and further proof that Great Britain expects a long and bitter struggle was seen in the grant of an increase of 500,000 men in the army, an increase made at the suggestion of Lord Kitchener.

Italy Officially Announces Her Position as Strictly Neutral

The Italian foreign office has sent a cable to the British foreign office in which Italy's position is announced to be one of strict neutrality. Great Britain has been informed that her declaration of war does not alter Italy's resolution not to participate in the war.

This announcement means the breaking of the triple alliance. It is expected Germany will declare war on Italy, and if this is done Italy will immediately declare war on Austria and will proceed to attack with both her army and navy, as the anti-Austrian feeling is growing throughout Italy.

A REAL UNCLE SAM

All Warring Nations Are Now Represented by United States

American diplomats are doing double work in Europe. They are in the unprecedented position of being in possession of the archives and the diplomatic secrets of the embassies of the European nations now at war.

The American ambassador at Berlin, James W. Gerard, has been asked to act there for all the nations with whom Germany is at war and the same situation prevails at the other capitals.

Never has American diplomacy assumed so delicate a task, a task which will test its resources to the utmost when the time for peace negotiations arrives.

The choice of the United States diplomats as representatives of the strongest power remaining neutral is viewed in Washington administration circles as a compliment to the United States and is expected to greatly increase her diplomatic prestige in the world.

"TOO MANY IN ENGLAND"

London Newspaper Wants Close Watch Kept on Germans

While most of the London papers counsel the courteous treatment of Germans who are compelled to remain in England, the Daily Mail, in an editorial, urges a vigorous application of the law controlling aliens, saying:

"There are too many Germans in England, and unless they are kept under close observation their presence may be a source of great danger. Now that Europe is in arms we must not shrink from any measure necessary to preserve our national existence. These uninvited guests will consume food needed for the British poor and their maintenance will absorb funds that cannot be spared."

The aliens' restriction order, the legislation for which was hastily passed through all stages in the house of commons, forbids alien enemies in the kingdom to have firearms, explosives, automobiles and motorcycles without permission from the police.

CONVOYED BY BRITISHER

German Cruiser In Wake of the Arabic on Her Trip to Boston

With a German cruiser chasing her across the Atlantic and a British convoy following close by to take a hand in case of attack, the White Star line Arabic ended a dash for safety when she crossed the three-mile limit off the port of Boston and soon after made her way up the harbor with a throng of passengers that had had their fill of war thrills.

The British cruiser Essex convoyed the Arabic for four days, beginning Aug. 1. She left her on the 4th, when danger had apparently passed, to return and meet the Cedric, also en route to Boston. She will similarly guard the Cedric.

When a German cruiser hove in sight she discovered the convoy and refrained from attacking. Whenever the Essex would turn toward her, the German would flee to a safe distance. This game of hide and seek was kept up for two days. At one time, for several hours, the Arabic was in between the two war vessels. The British cruiser was abreast of her on one side and the German on the other.

Kitchener In Full Control of the British War Office

IRISH ARMS EMBARGO LIFTED

Assistance to Germany by British Subjects Will Be Considered High Treason—German Ambassador to London Turns Office Over to Page—No Holdups by Shopkeepers

London, Aug. 7.—Lord Kitchener, the hero of England, has taken charge of the war office by virtue of his appointment as secretary for war and assumed full control of the military operations. The chief matter taken under consideration were the plans that had been worked out for sending 150,000 British troops to Belgium to assist the army of King Albert in repelling the German invasion.

The new war secretary issued two decrees that had been signed by King George. One revoked the measure prohibiting the importation of arms into Ireland. This measure was passed when the home rule crisis developed threats of revolution in Ulster.

The new war secretary issued two British subjects contributing to any loan raised in behalf of Germany or contracting with the German government would be guilty of high treason.

Kitchener then called into conference heads of various departments of the military establishment. With many of these, who had served under Colonel Seely, who retired as a result of the home rule crisis, and Premier Asquith, who took over Seely's duties, Kitchener is on terms of close friendship and the first war counsel of the new secretary was in the nature of a reception.

On the door was placed a card bearing the words "American Embassy" written in blue pencil. This was a notification to callers that the affairs of the embassy had been taken over by Mr. Page, the American ambassador.

Lichnowsky boarded a special train and left for Harwich, where a special dispatch boat had been placed at his disposal by the government to carry him to Germany.

Representatives of the principal provision dealers of Great Britain met in the office of the home secretary and fixed prices upon foodstuffs to prevent a holdup by shopkeepers throughout England in consequence of the war.

As a result of the adoption of the scale of prices submitted by Secretary McKenna, the country is insured against any appreciable advance in the cost of food, no matter how long the war may continue.

The government guaranteed the provision men all the vessels they can obtain wherein to bring foodstuffs into England. In return the government demanded that the merchants agree among themselves and set a maximum price for every necessity.

THIRTY-EIGHT DEAD

Bodies of Victims of Missouri Railroad Wreck Badly Burned

Joplin, Mo., Aug. 7.—About half of the charred bodies out of the thirty-eight recovered from wreckage of the head-on collision of a Kansas City Southern car and a south-bound motor traction car of the Missouri and North Arkansas railway near Neosho have been identified.

Twenty-five were injured, several of whom may die. The wreckage of the motor car caught fire from the exploding gasolene tank and the victims pinioned in the debris were burned.

BRIDE IS SLAIN

Police Suspect Husband of Having Committed the Crime

Boston, Aug. 7.—The police were notified that screams had been heard in the upper floor of a three-apartment house at 306 Saratoga street, East Boston. They went to the house and in a rear room the battered body of a woman was found.

She was Marguerito Zalisprino, aged 22, who a month ago became the bride of Basalo Zalisprino, aged 40. Her husband is missing. He is a concrete worker. The police are seeking him.

Boy Beheaded by Car

Central Falls, R. I., Aug. 7.—Theodore Daigle, aged 10, was run over and beheaded by an electric car here. He alighted from a wagon and walked directly in front of the car.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES

Rev. Alexander McKenzie, 84, pastor emeritus of the Shepard Memorial church, Cambridge, Mass., died from the effects of a shock.

The Dominion of Canada Rifle association voted to abandon the prize meeting for 1914.

SOME FACTS ABOUT CITY OF QUINCY

A Leader in Industries, Value of Products and Persons Employed

Per Capita Valuation Is Increasing Rapidly

The facts relative to the City of Quincy presented below are from the census of 1910 and other official figures, and there is much of which people of the "City of Presidents" may be proud:

AS AN INDUSTRIAL CITY

The last census showed Quincy to have more industries per capita than Boston. Quincy has 151—one for every 202 people, while Boston has 2,747, one for every 244 people. The industries of Quincy are large industries and employ 5,371—one out of every six of population—while the industries of Boston employ one out of eleven. The value of Quincy products is unusually high,—$8,082,446 annually, or $273.92 per capita; while the Boston value is $274.89 per capita.

SHIPYARD OF WORLD-WIDE FAME

Builders of battleships New Jersey, Rhode Island, Vermont, North Dakota and Nevada for the United States government; battleship Rivadavia for the Argentine Republic; submarines for the United States and Japanese navies; also other warships, passenger steamers and freight steamers. Employs about 4000. Has entertained many notables of the United States and foreign countries.

QUARRIES OF QUINCY GRANITE

The standard for excellence among Granites—Increased demand—Quality improving—Inexhaustible rock ribbed mountains—Takes the best polish. Extensively used for memorials both large and small, to be found in all the large cemeteries of the country, the battlefield at Gettysburg, and other battlefields of the Civil War. Bunker Hill Monument is built of Quincy granite; also the First Parish church, Quincy City Hall, and other public buildings.

A POPULAR SEASIDE RESORT

Quincy with its 23 miles of sea-coast has several attractive summer resorts, many now occupied by all-the-year residents. Houghs Neck and Squantum are both parts of Quincy, and all along the shore of Quincy bay between these two peninsulars are resorts of different names—Atlantic beach, Wollaston beach, Quincy Shore reservation, Merrymount, Adams Shore, Post Island, Manet Beach and Great Hill,—also Rock Island, Bethel Beach, Germantown and Quincy Point, all popular for yachting, bathing and cool breezes. The fact that Quincy has four large yacht clubs shows the interest taken in yachting; all these clubs have clubhouses and many yachts enrolled.

AS A RESIDENTIAL CITY

Rev. A. L. Hudson says—"Of all the cities of the country, Boston stands easily the FIRST in the beauty and variety of its many suburbs; and among them all NONE has so many attractions to offer to the home seeker as OUR OWN QUINCY. Its diversified area, sloping from wooded hill tops with their ocean view over rolling parks and level downs to sweeping shore line of the bay, gives ample scope for each man, according to his taste, to possess the one most desirable building site in ALL THE WORLD."

A WEALTHY CITY

In 1870 Quincy had an assessed valuation of $4,449,500, representing a per capita valuation of $597.89. In 1880 the per capita had increased to $712.21; in 1890 to $817.73; in 1900 to $844.54; in 1910 to $994.33. In 1913 the assessed valuation was $36,716,260, a per capita valuation of OVER $1,000.00. Note the BIG increase in valuation, and the fact that the per capita valuation is nearly TWICE as large. Quincy is 20th in valuation in Massachusetts as well as 20th in population.

RESERVATIONS AND PLAYGROUNDS

Quincy has within its borders MORE in Reservations, Parks and Playgrounds than any other city of Massachusetts. Over 2,600 acres in Metropolitan reservations are in this city, also Merrymount park of 91 acres with a shore front, Faxon park of 27 acres and several ward playgrounds. Dr. Eliot says, "Cities with the most exempt property are the best to live in."

AN EDUCATIONAL CITY

Quincy one of the first to employ a Superintendent of Schools. Under Col. Francis W. Parker our schools obtained a National renown. In 1900 celebrated the 25th anniversary of Col. Parker's election. In 1914 all public school buildings are of brick. Quincy is 8th among the 33 cities in number of grammar school graduates, and 14th in High school graduates when Woodward Institute is included. May honestly be compared with other cities in the Metropolitan district.

QUINCY AN HONORED NAME

It was Rev. Daniel Munro Wilson, a former pastor of the First Parish church, who said:—"Quincy seems the one name congenial to the spirit and history of this locality. Deeprooted in chivalrous Norman life, transplanted here with the first settlers, associated with so much that is fine and high in many who here bore it, and in utterance full and dignified, it tastes of the soil, it seems almost the natural product of environment, and not a title fixed by formal vote. Honored at home, abroad revered, it is a distinction to be called OF QUINCY."

NAMED FOR COL. JOHN QUINCY

"The more the name of Col. John Quincy is scrutinized the more he is exalted. For 21 successive years, that is from 1719 to 1740, he was returned to the House of Representatives with unfailing regularity. His personality, his character and judgment, and his sturdy provincial patriotism so impressed his fellow representatives that they elected him Speaker of the House from 1727 to 1741, a period of 14 years. A tribute from town and Province that stamps him as no common man."

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

MODERN CONVENIENCES

Reference might also be made to our public conveniences:—abundance of Metropolitan water, Metropolitan sewer system, auto fire department, permanent police department, electric lights and gas in all parts of the city, nine electric car routes, good train service, excellent banking facilities, daily and weekly newspapers, city hospital, public library, etc. etc.

A PATRIOTIC CITY

With Adams and Hancock as Revolutionary statesmen Quincy early became distinguished. She sent to the Civil war one of the FIRST companies of MINUTE MEN. The first call of Lincoln was issued unexpectedly April 15, and the next day Co. H, Fourth Massachusetts Volunteers, reported in Boston and left for Fortress Munroe, and was mustered into service April 22. FIRST soldier killed in engagement was from Quincy. Sent 954 men to Civil war although population of town was then only 6,800. Erected a Soldiers Monument as early as 1868. In the war with Spain, a majority of the members of Co. K, Fifth regiment M. V. M., were from Quincy. Flag today honored and revered.

BECAUSE OF ITS REMARKABLE GROWTH

In 1875 Quincy was a small town with a population of less than 10,000. We have not only made rapid gains but we have PASSED SEVERAL OTHER TOWNS AND CITIES in the race. A good index of progress. In 1880 Quincy was 29th in population in Massachusetts; in 1885 we had moved up to 27th place; in 1890 we had jumped to 23d; in 1895 to 22d; in 1905 to 21st; and the last census in 1910 showed us No. 20, with a population of 32,642, which has since been increased to nearly 40,000. A rapidly growing city is always a good place for business.

WOMEN'S CLUBS FLOURISH

Prominent in the civic work and social life of Quincy are its Women's Clubs of earnest, able, self sacrificing women, who esteem it a pleasure to work for the uplift of the city and its people. These include the Quincy Women's Club, Wollaston Women's Club, Squantum Women's Club, Riverside Women's Club, Lady Associates of Houghs Neck, Young Women's Club, King's Daughters, Women's Relief Corp, Quincy Catholic Club, Hospital Aid Association, Day Nursery Association, and many others.

A CITY OF CHURCHES

The number of churches in the city is a surprise to everyone, but with two or three exceptions all are flourishing and doing the work of the Master. There are seven Congregational, including one Swedish and one Finnish; four Catholic; four Methodist, including one Swedish; three Baptists including one Swedish; three Episcopal, including a Swedish Lutheran; two Unitarian, two Presbyterian, two Hebrew, one Universalist, one Christian Science, and other mission churches. Many of these churches are free from debt and constantly making improvements.

MANY GENEROUS BENEFACTORS

Few cities have been so favored as Quincy in endowments which are almost without limit, and meet many requirements: an institute for the education of girls, a City Hospital, including the Rice pavilion and a Nurses' home, two large public parks, a beautiful Public Library building, and funds for schools, charity, etc.

JUST A FEW WORDS HISTORICALLY

While Quincy has so much to talk up without delving in history, she has much in history to make her proud, being the birthplace, home and burial place of two Presidents of the United States; the birthplace of the FIRST Vice President; the birthplace of John Hancock, the bold signer of the Declaration of Independence, who was the FIRST Governor of Massachusetts under the Constitution; the site of the FIRST incorporated Railroad in the United States. The birthplaces of the Presidents are preserved today as show houses, also the Quincy mansion owned by the Colonial Dames, and the Church of the Presidents now known as the First Parish church.

ITS MEN AND WOMEN

High average in personal character of those who make up the population—industrious, ambitious, generous, loyal, patriotic and God fearing.

President Wilson's Wife Passes Away While Unconscious

HAD SUFFERED MANY MONTHS

Last Conscious Words Are Prayer to Doctor to Promise to Care For Her Husband—Had Ever Been Beloved Helpmate of President, Who Is Completely Unnerved by Shock

Washington, Aug. 7.—Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, wife of the President of the United States, died at the White House last evening after a brave struggle of months against Bright's disease with complications.

The president was completely unnerved by the shock and his grief was heartrending. He bore up well under the strain, however, and devoted himself to his daughters.

The end came when Mrs. Wilson was unconscious. Her illness took a turn for the worse shortly before 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and from then on she grew gradually weaker.

Kneeling at the bedside at the end were the president and their three daughters. Dr. Grayson and a nurse were in the room, and just outside the door were Secretary McAdoo and Francis B. Sayre, Mr. Wilson's sons-in-law, and Mr. Tumulty, his secretary.

Both houses of congress adjourned when Mrs. Wilson's death was announced, and for a brief time the wheels of the government practically stopped, while everyone paid respect to the loss of the president.

The beginning of the end came at 10 o'clock in the morning, when Dr. Davis of Philadelphia, who had been called in for consultation, realized that the time for hope had passed. He took the president into the Red Room of the White House and there, in a broken voice, told him the truth. Mr. Wilson's face blanched, but he bore the shock well. He was informed that the end was only a question of hours.

Mr. Wilson then took his daughters, Mrs. McAdoo, Mrs. Sayre and Miss Margaret Wilson, aside and told them of their mother's condition. Until then they had thought there was a chance for her recovery.

From that time on the president and his daughters remained constantly at Mrs. Wilson's bedside. The president held his wife's hand, and the three daughters were grouped nearby. Until she became unconscious Mrs. Wilson frequently nodded to one or the other and smiled cheerfully.

During the day Mrs. Wilson spoke to Dr. Grayson about the president, whose health she thought more about than she did of her own.

"Promise me," she whispered faintly, "that if I go, you will take good care of my husband——" These were her last conscious words.

It was the same touch of devotion which she had so many times repeated—her constant anxiety having been that the president might not worry about her or be disturbed in his official tasks.

Mrs. Wilson was Miss Ellen L. Axson, daughter of a Presbyterian clergyman, and was born at Savannah, Ga. She was a student at the New York Art league when she met Mr. Wilson, who was then taking a postgraduate course at Johns Hopkins university. The president and Mrs. Wilson were married June 24, 1885.

Her social obligations forced her to omit some of her accustomed artistic and literary recreations after she became mistress of the White House, but as "the first lady of the land" she was ever ready with advice and material help, including responses to demands on her time whenever a good cause might be served.

Her domestic life is described as having been attractive and typical of that of a woman of her cultured class. She had a knowledge of the domestic arts and was a good cook.

Mrs. Wilson took an active interest in the career of her husband, in his contests with congress over legislation and the numerous official duties with which he was burdened. Throughout life she has been his constant helpmate and adviser. Her clear judgment on political affairs and broad views of educational questions had been a source of gratification to him for years.

With her help he wrote his books and on her judgment he relied. Her devotion to him, according to those who have known the family intimately, was of remarkable depth. Her one thought was for him.

PEACEFUL OCCUPATION

Vanguard of Rebel Army Has Already Reached Mexico City

Washington, Aug. 7.—Jose Castellott, representing the Carbajal government here, advised Secretary of State Bryan that the peaceful occupation of Mexico City is now in progress and that the vanguard of the constitutionalist army is in the Mexican capital.

He stated that General Villa has renewed his pledges of unswerving fidelity to the Carranza government and said the question of the establishment of a republic in the north under Villa's direction was merely fiction.

A dispatch to the New York World from Sir Thomas Lipton denies that he has cancelled the race for the American cup on account of the war. He said this could not be done without his consulting the New York yacht club. He is trying to get into wireless communication with the Shamrock IV, now on the way to America.

The annual invitation golf tournament of the Boston Press Club will be held next week at the Wollaston Golf Club, and many entries are being received. Among those received by the committee on Thursday was that of David H. Goodspeed principal of the Wollaston grammar school. Others entered from Wollaston are F. G. Thayer and J. H. Churchill.

RIGHT MOTIVES.

In determining proper motives of conduct it is easy to perceive that the higher are more commendable than the lower and that even an act of justice and benevolence loses something of its charm when known to be inspired by the selfish desire of human applause. It was the gay poet of antiquity who said that concealed virtue differed little from sepulchered sluggishness. But this is a heathen sentiment, alien to reason and to truth. It is hoped that men will be honest, but from a higher motive than because honesty is the best policy. It is hoped that they will be humane, but for a nobler cause than the fame of humanity.—Charles Sumner.

ROOTERS GOING TO CHELSEA

Many Ifs in Manufacturers League Games

Ifs are a big factor in analyzing the base ball situation in the Manufacturers league.

If Fore River beats Forbes Lithograph at Chelsea on Saturday, and the Norwood Press wins their game, both teams remain tie for first place.

If both lose and Bird & Son win they take the lead with one full game ahead.

If Fore River loses and Norwood wins, the latter will be in first place.

If United Shoe wins and Fore River Norwood and Bird & Sons all lose, then they take the lead.

If Fore River can't continue playing their strong game then it may be "good night."

Manager John S. Higgins states they will be there with victory, and to give rooters the chance of going over to Chelsea to see the game he is arranging with auto men to have their trucks on hand. Already a fair sized band of loyal rooters have said they would make the trip.

Nichols, who has pitched Fore River to victory in two games, will be in the box. It has not been generally known but Nichols has not uncorked all his steam as yet. He hasn't felt obliged to. Saturday he may have to. The standing:

198 ENTRIES AT MARBLEHEAD

Dolly III and Marie Take First Prizes

Thursday was Governor's Day at the Marblehead races and His Excellency saw a fleet of 198 sailing and power boats start in the seconds day's race of the Corinthian yacht club. The Areyto of Commodore Drew of the Squantum club, which lost her mast on Wednesday, was able to obtain a new stick so that she could enter the races of Thursday.

In the sonder class the Mingo won over the Quincy challenge cup defender by 25 seconds. In the Interclub sonder class it was a close race between the Robin and Harpoon, the former winning by one second.

The Dorchen II of A. W. Findlay finished in third position in class I, the race being won by the Aurora. Mr. Findlay however was more successful in class A, for the Marie L. outsailed the Tyro by over a minute corrected time.

It was the Dolly III, day in Class D, the cat boat class/which finished with a lead of nearly two minutes corrected time over the Clara. The Iris finished third, Dartwell fourth, Mudjekeewis fifth, and Grayling in the last position. The Dartwell was second on actual time but was put in fourth position on corrected time.

In class H. the Vanken won, the Wanderer IV of ex-Commodore Dawes of the Wollaston club finishing in third position on corrected time. The Wawenock, of ex-Commodore Dawes, which was sailed Thursday in the name of Hayes & Sargent won out over the Maritza II, in class S.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

FOOD PLENTIFUL IN PARIS

Government Taking Precautions Against Famine In Capital

Food remains plentiful in Paris and prices have only slightly increased since the outbreak of war. Meat and vegetables are the principal commodities affected, as retailers find difficulty in bringing them from the central depots, owing to all delivery wagons having been requisitioned for military purposes.

Fruit and poultry sold at less than the usual prices; butter was abundant, but the price has increased, as the public, fearing a shortage, had begun buying quantities of twenty pounds each. The authorities forbade retailers to sell more than one pound of butter to each customer and fixed the maximum price at 44 cents a pound.

STRENGTH OF GERMAN NAVY

Ranks Second In List of World's Sea Powers.

POWERFUL DREADNOUGHTS.

Kaiser's Greatest Fighting Craft Comparable to Monsters of British and American Sea Forces—They Carry Fifteen Inch Guns, Like English Vessels Built About Same Time—Five Big Ships Launched In 1913, of Which Four Are Now In Commission.

The aggressive militant policy of Kaiser Wilhelm has resulted in the creation of a fleet of armed ships almost rivaling the British navy in strength and which safely secures the empire in second place as to naval strength among the world's powers. Britain ranks first, the United States third, France fourth, Japan fifth, Russia sixth, Italy seventh and Austria eighth.

Great Britain and Germany have been competing with each other in building new fighting ships of the Dreadnought type, and the latter country has been steadily drawing closer to her rival in marine armament.

Germany has now seventeen warships of 18,000 tons or over, with two more huge battleships in course of construction.

Her latest sea monster, the K. I., has a displacement of 30,000 tons and carries a main battery of ten eleven-inch guns. Her secondary battery consist of twelve guns of the 5.9 inch size.

The Naval List.

The number and displacement of German warships of 1,500 or more tons and of torpedo craft of fifty or more tons, built and building, are as follows:

Dreadnoughts (battleships having a main battery of all big guns; that is, 11 or more inches in caliber), built, 13, of a total of 285,670 tons; building, 6, of a total of 162,300 tons. Pre-Dreadnoughts (battleships of about 10,000 or more tons, whose main batteries are of more than 1 caliber), built, 20, of a total of 242,800 tons; building, none. Coasting defense vessels (including smaller battleships and monitors), built, 2, of a total of 8,168 tons; building, none.

Battle cruisers (armored cruisers having guns of largest caliber in main battery and capable of taking their place in line of battle with the battleships, built, 4, of a total of 88,974 tons; building, 3, of a total of 84,000 tons. Armored cruisers, built, 9, of a total of 94,245 tons; building, none. Cruisers (unarmored warships of 1,500 or more tons), built, 40, of a total of 145,847 tons; building, 4, of a total of 21,886 tons. Torpedo boat destroyers, built, 130, of a total of 67,094 tons; building, 12, of a total of 7,200 tons.

Torpedo boats, none built or building. Submarines, built, 24, of a total of 10,540 tons; building, 12, of a total of 9,484 tons. Total tonnage, built, 943,338; building, 284,870.

Officers and Men.

The officers and men number about 74,000, including 2 admirals of the fleet, 5 admirals, 11 vice admirals, 22 rear admirals, 356 captains and commanders and 1,881 other line officers.

Of the thirteen Dreadnoughts built two were completed in 1909, two in

PRINCE HENRY, CHIEF ADMIRAL OF THE GERMAN NAVY.

1910, three in 1911, three in 1912 and three in 1913. Those completed in 1913 are the Kaiserin, Konig Albert and Prinz Regent Luitpold. These ships, like the Kaiser, finished in 1912, carry a main battery of ten twelve-inch guns, all of which may be fired on either broadside. Of the six Dreadnoughts building three were launched in 1913, the Konig on March 1 at the imperial yard, Wilhelmshaven; the Grosser Kurfurst on May 5 at Hamburg and the Markgraf on June 4 at Bremen. Of the battle cruisers built one, the Seydlitz, was completed for service in October, 1913. Of the three building the Derfflinger was launched at Hamburg on July 1, 1913.

Germany has held that the eleven and twelve inch Krupp guns were equal to the English 13.5 inch and fourteen inch guns of the same date for all practical battle purposes. After England adopted the fifteen inch gun Germany was forced to take the same step and decided to give the two German battleships of the year 1913 the same armament as that of the five English ships of the year 1912—that is, eight fifteen-inch and sixteen six-inch. The torpedo armament of the latest ships consisted of twenty inch torpedo tubes.

New Construction.

Five big warships were launched in 1913 (Konig, Grosser Kurfurst, Markgraf, Lutzow and Derfflinger), and four were commissioned (Konig Albert, Prinzreg Luitpold, Kaiserin and Seydlitz). The protected cruiser Graudenz (5,530 tons) was launched and the protected cruisers Karlsruhe and Rostok (4,900 tons) completed.

The 1914 budget provides for twelve more torpedo boats. There are twenty-seven submarines completed and several building, one of them at the Fiat San Giorgio works, Spezia, and the 1914 budget provided 10,000,000 marks for submarine construction. All the new protected cruisers have a four inch armor belt and a designed speed of not less than twenty-seven knots. It is stated that those of the current program have a main battery of improved 5.9 inch guns and a coal capacity of about 1,500 tons.

The displacement of the latest submarines averaged about 800 tons, with a surface speed of sixteen knots.

The twelve destroyers of the 1912 program (S13, S24) were completed in 1913. Twelve more are now building. The standard contract speed seemed to be fixed at 32.5 knots. Six torpedo tubes and two 3.4 inch guns will represent the new armament of these craft.

Germany on "the Wave."

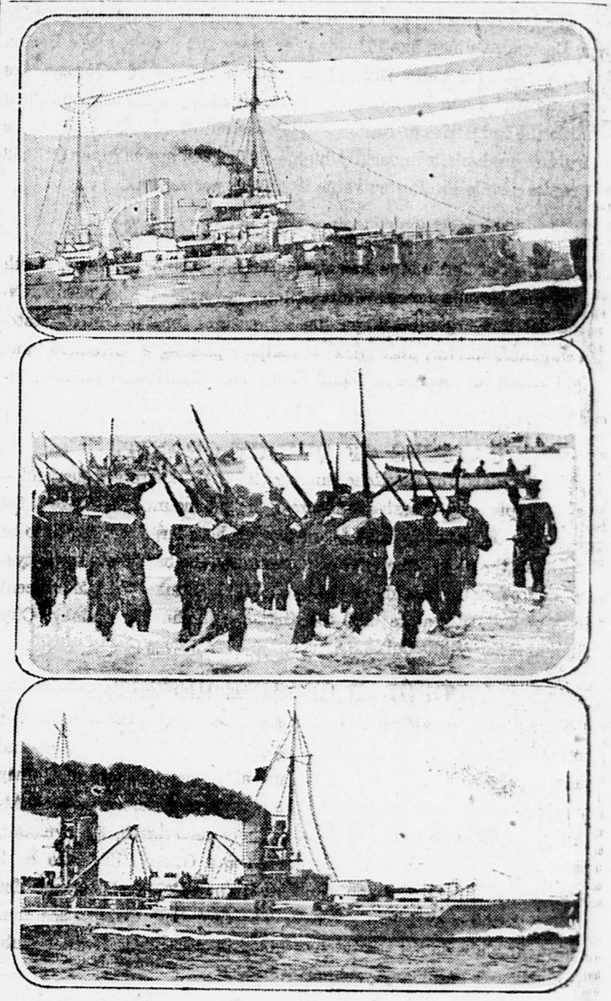

It is a curious fact that the navy which is rapidly coming to rank as the most powerful in the world, after Great Britain's, is an untried quantity. Unlike the vessels and personnel of our own navy and that of most of the European powers, the Germany navy has never tried its new found strength. Its officers and men have never faced an enemy, and the ponderous guns that bear down its cruisers and battleships have never been trained upon anything save targets.

The whole history of Germany is singularly barren of naval battles, and stories of naval heroes, especially when we compare it with the history of England and the United States. Germany has no Jones or Nelson. Despite its long coastline, it has fought its great battles and won its great victories with land forces. For centuries the army has been the backbone of Prussia and the ideal of every German schoolboy. Such few armed vessels as Prussia had were governed from the war office, under the direction of army officers. The first imperial minister of the German navy, appointed after the conclusion of the Franco-Prussian war, was an army general, and it was not until 1897 that the appointment of Admiral Tripitz placed at the head of the German navy a man who had been bred a seaman.

Thus the events of the last decade, which have placed Germany ahead of all its rivals, save one, in the matter of naval equipment, represent something of a revolution in German history and policy. It is only a little over fourteen years ago that Emperor William uttered the words which crystallized the new doctrine: "Unsere Zukunft liegt auf dem Wasser" ("Our future lies upon the water"). They were inscribed over the main entrance of Germany's handsome pavilion at the Paris fair of 1900, and served notice to the world that Germany had entered upon a new epoch in her development. Her expanding colonial ambitions and the unprecedented scale of naval expenditures with which she is backing them up indicate that she takes these new ambitions very seriously.

The Kaiser's One Ambition.

But it is not alone jingoism that has urged the present policy. There is a well justified feeling in Germany that she has carried intensive cultivation in industry, as well as in agriculture, to the point of diminishing returns and that henceforth she must look to her colonies and to her foreign trade to assure her continued commercial prosperity. This belief, which is shared by some of Germany's shrewdest statesmen and scientists, has led to the formation of the Flottenverein, which has done such remarkable work in popularizing the navy and securing public support for the naval budget. This vereln issues a magazine, publishes books, conducts a press bureau, organizes meetings, engages speakers, does everything that one of the big parties does in this country during a presidential campaign, with the sole view of helping the growth to power and efficiency of the German navy. It is headed by men of the highest standing, and its unselfish devotion has served as a mighty stimulus to German ambition and German patriotism.

BATTLESHIP POSEN, GERMAN SAILORS AND DREADNOUGHT KAISERIN.

A Great Sea Power.

From the moment he came to the throne the German navy has been the kaiser's constant preoccupation. He has as deliberately set himself to make Germany a great sea power as did his grandfather and Bismarck to the building up of the Prussian army. Captain Mahan's dictum that "no modern state has long maintained a supremacy by land and by sea" has no terrors for him. He has hastened on the growth of the navy with the deftness of the most astute electioneering agent. Hardly anything happens anywhere that he cannot convert into an argument for more ships. Now it is the striking expansion of German commerce that is made to serve as an excuse. Now it is the growth of German shipping, which has more than doubled its tonnage and quadrupled its carrying power in the last twenty years, easily outdistancing the mercantile marine of France and the United States. Whatever it may be, the kaiser fastens upon it with admirable smartness as a handle to be used in crushing the Socialists to a new navy bill.

German "Jackie" at Drill.

A spectacle full of interest even to laymen may often be witnessed in Kiel or in the vicinity of any of the naval stations of the Baltic, both during the busy preparations before landing and at the maneuvers on tegra firma. Every detail is conducted with scrupulous precision, especially the actions previous to the regimental movements—i. e., the manning of the boats, the drill on the water and the disembarkation.

The paraphernalia of a modern warship requires too intricate and technological a description for the average newspaper reader. Let it suffice here to note that all the German vessels are furnished with the most approved appliances and with all that twentieth century science has thus far adduced to increase their efficiency and strength.

HER DOWRY

It Was Discovered After the Wedding

By MARK TRAVERS

It was 11 o'clock at night. Hackstaff entered his living room and, throwing himself into his chair, sat gloomily thinking. He had just come from Mildred Thorne's. He had proposed to her and had been refused.

His refusal was a more bitter disappointment to him because he had expected an acceptance. There had been a good deal of backing and filling on Mildred's part, but that is not unusual in courtships. Hackstaff had noticed that if he met one of her balkings by a balking on his own part she had come round very quickly. But all the while Mildred was listening to the dictates of her heart. Her mother was telling her that if she married Hackstaff she would prove herself a fool.

Mrs. Thorne was an old woman. She had accumulated some funds by saving—no one knew how much. She and her daughter lived in the house on the hill where Mildred had been born and lived very plainly. They owned the place and raised on it all they ate. Consequently their expenses were confined to what they wore, and they seldom bought any new clothes.

Mildred knew a great deal about her mother and her mother's affairs that the world did not know. She knew that her mother was a miser; not only that she was a miser, but that she was in constant terror lest she should lose her savings. Her husband had been unlucky as an investor, and his wife had no confidence in ever getting back any funds that were put out at interest.

But Hackstaff knew nothing of all this. He was a young farmer much interested in putting his farm on a paying basis. His was not the haphazard way of the uneducated farmer. He had taken a course at an agricultural college and when he put seed into the ground, barring effects of weather, knew exactly what it would produce. He was aware that Mildred was obliged to live economically and supposed that this was because she had very little to live on, which, since there was no income except what the place produced, was true. Hackstaff lived alone. If he could have won Mildred Thorne the world would have looked very bright to him, for he had everything to make a home except a wife, and, having set his heart on her, he would be satisfied with no one else.

He sat on the night of his proposal brooding over his disappointment and thinking of the dull, lonely life before him. Mildred had accompanied him to the door and bidden him adieu there. She seemed to share his disappointment or, at least, to sympathize with him in it. He had not gone far from the house when he heard Hector, the watchdog she always let loose before going to bed, bark. Then all was still.

At 1 o'clock in the morning Hackstaff still sat brooding. He did not go to bed because he had no desire for sleep. Suddenly there was a ring on the telephone bell that sounded at that time of night when all else was still like an alarm. Wondering who could be calling him at such an hour, he sprang to the instrument and took down the receiver.

Shrieks and the bark of a dog.

"Great heavens! That was Hector's bark!" It had been the last sound he had heard from the Thorne place after his departure, and there was no mistaking it for Hector's. The shrieks, the barking, the sounds of a scuffle receded as though to another room. Hackstaff called, but received no answer. The only sound he heard was the ticking of a clock.

Out into the night shot the young farmer, descended the declivity into the valley between his house and the Thornes' and ran up the hill. He found the front door open, but all was dark within. Climbing the stairs three steps at a time, he stood in the upper hall and listened, for he could see nothing. He always carried a box of matches in his pocket and, striking one of them, opened a door.

Mildred was lying on the floor. The light of the match glimmering before her eyes roused her, and, seeing Hackstaff bending over her, for an instant she seemed to be trying to collect her faculties; then she grasped Hackstaff's wrist with a frantic grip, and the flame of the match went out.

"There are matches on the bureau," she said, endeavoring to regain something of her equanimity.

"Are you hurt?" asked Hackstaff, groping.

"I think not. I must have fainted."

Lighting another match, he lit a candle standing on the bureau. By this time Mildred was on her feet, but she seemed unable for a time to collect her faculties. Hackstaff begged her to tell him what had occurred, but she made no reply.

Then came the muffled moan of a dog. Hackstaff was sure it was Hector's bark. It served to recall to Mildred what had happened. She attempted to break away from Hackstaff, but he held her.

"Tell me what to do," he said, "and I will do it. You are not in a condition to act yourself.",

"Let me go," she said hysterically. He released her, and she staggered to her mother's room, Hackstaff following with the candle. Opening the door, Mildred found her mother in bed bleeding from several wounds. Hector, who had been shut up with her, was licking them.

A few words was all the explanation accorded Hackstaff at the time. A man had effected an entrance into the house. Crossing the yard, he had evidently been too quick for Hector, but the dog had followed him into the house. Mildred, hearing her mother scream, had gone to her and, taking in the situation, had grasped the telephone receiver and had only time to call Hackstaff's number when the man pulled her away. Then followed the shrieks, the barking of the dog Hackstaff had heard as the burglar dragged Mildred from the instrument, threw her into her room and shut the door. Hector had defended her, but the man had succeeded in shutting him up in the room with Mrs. Thorne.

Hector was of the hound breed and keen of scent. Hackstaff was anxious to follow the burglar, and after neighbors had been called he left in pursuit led by Hector and armed with a revolver Mildred gave him. The dog quickly took the scent, and the two pushed out into the night on an errand of vengeance.

Hector kept his nose to the ground without barking. There was no water in which the robber could lose the scent, and if there had been it is doubtful if he would have used it, for he had not much reason to suspect that he would be so quickly followed, and he had shut the dog in the room with his victim.

Hackstaff felt so deeply the outrage that he thought little of a meeting with a man who was doubtless armed and would shoot to kill. On went Hector with his nose to the ground, and on went Hackstaff some twenty yards behind him. This pursuit had continued for some time and day was breaking when Hackstaff heard in a thicket ahead a simultaneous growl of the dog and the cry of a man. Running forward, he saw by the dim light a man on the ground and the dog at his throat.

Cocking his revolver, Hackstaff pushed forward and saw that the man had evidently been taken unawares by the dog. He had lain down to rest or to sleep perhaps, and Hector had him at a disadvantage. So fierce was Hector's attack that his enemy had all he could do to resist his grip and no time to draw a weapon. He gasped to Hackstaff to call the dog off, and Hackstaff, covering him with his revolver, did so. Then, directing him to put his hands above his head, he disarmed him and, ordering him to rise, began the march homeward.

Hackstaff, after persuading Hector to let go his victim's throat, being absorbed in the man, thought little about the dog. Presently Hector came trotting along with a little cotton bag in his mouth. Hackstaff took it and put it in his pocket.

Drawing the burglar to a road, Hackstaff waited till a farmer driving a team came along, then put his prisoner on the wagon and took him to the jail at the county seat, where he was locked up. Then Hackstaff set out to the Thornes'. He found a crowd about the house and learned that Mrs. Thorne had been mortally wounded. Since Mildred was attended by friends, he did not disturb her, going at once to his own home.

Mrs. Thorne died the next day, as much from shock as from wounds. It was not till the day after the funeral that Hackstaff went to see Mildred. She told him that in her refusal of him she had been influenced by the fact that her mother needed her, and she did not believe that she would be happy or make him happy so long as her mother lived. She was ready to marry him, but he must take her with no dowry except the place in which she lived, which was of little value. She had supposed that her mother had some money hidden away, but nothing had been found.

Hackstaff gladly accepted this withdrawal of her answer to his proposition, and since Mildred was now entirely alone an early marriage was arranged. The burglar was tried, but since there was no evidence forthcoming except the scent of a dog that he was the man who had committed the murder the jury refused to convict him. But he was a hardened criminal and was wanted for another offense, for which he suffered.

A short time after the marriage of Hackstaff and Mildred Thorne the husband one day put on the coat he had worn on the night of the murder. Putting his hand into a pocket, he drew forth a little bag.

"I wonder where that came from," he said, looking at it curiously.

"What's in it?" asked his wife.

Thursting his hand in the bag, he drew forth a number of diamonds. Then he remembered Hector's trotting beside him with the bag in his mouth while he was engaged with the prisoner.

It turned out that the diamonds had been taken from Mrs. Thorne on the night of the murder, and they proved on to be worth $50,000.

The robber had thrown them away when captured. How he knew they were in the house and Mildred did not know of it is a story in itself.

After all, Mildred's dowry was satisfactory to herself and her husband.

As for Hector, he lived from that time forward the life of a prince of dogs. His mistress insisted upon having him with her night and day. Since her husband was not with her in the daytime she relied upon the dog for protection. What induced Hector to pick up the bag the robber threw away is hard to determine. It was certainly a case of rare canine intelligence.

DASHING NEW CAPE.

Graceful New Wrap In Black and White Effect.

LONG CAPE FOR FALL.

The cape is the wrap that now represents ultra chic. Every one is wearing them. The model shown here is all in black and white—of chiffon broadcloth and pussy willow taffeta.

TEA CADDIES.

No Table Is Complete Without One of These Attractive Articles.

The tea caddy is a most important adjunct of the tea table, for unless the container of the tea is tightly closed the aroma will quickly escape. China caddies to match tea sets are always liked, but they and the silver caddies usually have single covers which do not close tight.

Japanese pewter caddies beautifully hand wrought are among the very practical ones that look well with any fittings. They have double covers, the inner one sitting into the top by the pressure of the air and the outer sitting out around the rim and also closing by the pressure of the rim.

They cost from $3 to $8 and hold from a quarter to a half pound. But even with these a small quantity of tea should be bought at a time.

Tea deteriorates with time in the best of receptacles. It should always be kept in a cool, dry place.

MIDSEASON HAT.

Elegant Fall Model In Black and White Velvet.

The hat for midseason is smaller than ever. Here in velvet is expressed the size that has at present taken Parisian fancy.

FALL HAT OF VELVET.

is by storm. The black and white combination is ultra French, while the white satin bow that shoots out above the lifted brim gives the finishing touch of smartness.

Sensible Motor Hood.

An auto hood is a convenience to the woman who motors much. A comfortable and becoming sort is made with a straw brim, flexible, but wide enough to give protection to the eyes, and a full silk crown that does not disarrange the hair. There are wide chiffon tie strings that keep the hood snugly in place.

New Handkerchief Sets.

Some shops are selling colored handkerchiefs in sets. The idea, it seems, comes from Paris. There are seven handkerchiefs in a set. Sunday's handkerchief is white, Monday's shows blue embroidery, Saturday's gold, Tuesday's rose and Friday's lavender.

Pocketed Skirts.

The smart walking skirt must be short and contain pockets, although whether or not we are to bulge them with handkerchiefs, etc., is a question which the well groomed woman would possibly answer in the negative.

LADIES NIGHT AT ATLANTIC

Treasurer of Patriotic Association Reports on Holiday

The Ward Six Patriotic Association held its regular meeting and ladies' night on the lawn of its president, C. E. Cherrington, Clive street, Thursday evening.

The business consisted of the reading of the minutes by the secretary, H. G. Beeman, and the report of the treasurer, Josiah C. Fuller, who gave a complete account of all money received and receipts for all money paid out, leaving a small balance in the treasury.

A vote of thanks was tendered to the various committees connected with the Fourth of July celebration.

This was followed by speeches by ex-president Frank E. Badger, Henry Von Emden, chairman of finance committee, James Thomas, vice president, William L. Buckley and H. G. Beeman.

Refreshments were served and a social hour was enjoyed by all.

GRANITE WORK BELOW COST

Estimating Department Does Not Prevent It

It is understood upon good authority, that the office of estimator, that has been maintained by the Granite Manufacturers association, was abolished on Aug. 1. The office was one created about three years ago, and has been held by John P. Smoots. The object of the office was to maintain a standard of prizes in Quincy and prevent throat cutting.

It is a well known fact that the wholesale or middle men, send out to manufacturers all over the city, a sheet containing rough designs of monuments desired, asking the manufacturer to submit a price for cutting the job, and the result was that the lowest man who made an estimate gets the job.

The idea of the Manufacturers association was that these sheets when received should be submitted to the official estimator of the association, who would figure the job and every manufacturer was notified what price he ought to get for the work.

If the manufacturers had lived up to the plan, and refused to cut a job for a less figure than set by the estimator, all might have been well. But they would not do it, and it was found that although knowing from the estimators return what they should get for the job, there were some manufacturers who would throw the estimates in the waste basket and often times submit a bid, for a sum far less than what should be paid for the job.

Eventually the association found that it was useless trying to maintain the office, and for that reason it was abolished on Aug. 1.

GENEROUS SUM FOR EDUCATION

No Smaller City Expends More for Public Schools

Only two of the 24 Massachusetts cities with less than 80,000 population expended more in 1911 for new schoolhouses than Quincy.

None of the smaller cities expended more for maintenance of education than Quincy, and Quincy's total of $178,390 was more than was expended by Salem, or Fitchburg, or Taunton, all larger cities.

The Educational department, as classed by the Bureau of Statistics, includes all the general expenses of the School Committee, such as administrative salaries, other general salaries, other general expenses, teachers' salaries, text books and supplies, tuition, transportation, support of truants, janitors' salaries, fuel and light, maintenance of buildings and grounds, furniture and furnishings, rent and other school expenses.

	Maintenance	Outlay
Somerville	$390,485	$47,418

THREE CANDIDATES.

A merry contest is now on for the Republican nomination for Representative from the Fifth Norfolk district comprising Wards One, Two and Three. It is well known that A. L. Whitman has papers in circulation for the nomination, and this morning it was announced that both Councilman Otto Gelotte and Councilman Ericson had papers out.

SURGERY FOR SICK TREES.

Tree Surgery is a Science Every Year More Generally Appreciated. Suggestions for Improvement Through Co-operation.

A cavity in a decayed tree is something like a cavity in a decayed tooth. If an unreliable tree surgeon who has been called in to save the tree only partially removes the diseased part of the wood, uses no antiseptic coatings in the cavity and fills it up with cement the tree is no more cured than is a person whose decayed tooth has not been properly filled by a dentist. The only difference is that after the tree cavity has been covered, if the work has not been properly done, the tree has no way of making its trouble known except by further decay.

Within the last decade there has been a great increase in demand for surgeons to repair decaying shade trees, but the possibilities of practicing fraud in this profession like the instance just cited have tempted so many unreliable people to dabble in the science that tree surgery has fallen somewhat into disrepute. The U. S. Department of Agriculture realizes that commercial tree surgery should occupy a high place in the estimation of the public, and has recently issued a pamphlet entitled, "Practical Tree Surgery," wherein suggestions are made for improvement along these lines.

As in all professions, there are reliable and unreliable men and firms competing for contracts in tree surgery. In recent years so many occasions have arisen when property owners felt the necessity of calling in commercial tree surgeons to attend to their trees that there are now numerour firms, both honest and dishonest, engaged in the work. Usually tree surgery is practiced in connection with some nearly related line, but often it is taken up as a business of itself.

Many individuals who have had faith in tree surgery have lost it through following the advice of unreliable tree surgeons who claimed to be able to diagnose a case, but whose main interest was to collect a good sum of money for their work.

Besides the careless filling of decayed cavities in trees, there are other practices of certain so-called "tree surgeons" that do the trees more harm than good. Many of these "surgeons," as well as the people who employ them, do not realize the danger arising from fresh injuries to a tree. The tree owner should realize that prompt attendance to fresh injuries will largely do away with the need of tree surgery 15 or 20 years hence. The tree surgeons must realize that if they make fresh injuries in the living bark, when treating decayed portions, they are laying the tree open to more dangers of infection that will result in further decay.

Just as a person is subject to infection through cuts and scratches, trees are rendered subject to infection by having their living bark torn. Notwithstanding this, many tree surgeons use pruning hooks and climbing spurs and cut fresh gashes in the tree. To break off small dead branches a workman may use a long pruning hook as though it was a club. In doing so the hook usually causes injury to the young bark near by. Every new wound may furnish a new point of entrance for decay, even though the old dead branch may have been removed.

All properly equipped firms of commercial surgeons should have ladders that would reach 40 or more feet into a tree. Ladders, ropes, and rubber-soled shoes will allow a man to reach practically every part. Reliable estimates indicate that it takes somewhat longer (perhaps 25 per cent on an average) to do work on a tree when these are used instead of climbing spurs, and this is one reason why many firms who value remuneration more than reputation use the spurs.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., is suggesting a plan that may help put commercial tree surgery on a better basis. Owners are urged to have a definite written contract with the tree surgeons they employ, and the following is suggested as a model for such contract.

1. No climbing spurs shall be used on any part of a tree.
2. The shoes worn by the workmen shall have soft rubber bottoms.
3. Ordinary commercial orange shellac shall be applied to cover the cut edges of sapwood and cambium (which is the soft formative tissue from which the new wood and bark originate) within fifive minutes after the final trimming cut is made.
4. All cut or shellaced surfaces shall be painted with commercial creosote, followed by thick coal tar.
5. All diseased, rotten, discolored, water-soaked, or insect-eaten wood shall be removed in cavity work and the cavity inspected by the owner or his agent before it is filled.
6. Only a good grade of Portland cement and clean, sharp sand in no weaker mixture than 1 to 3 shall be used to fill cavities.
7. The contractor shall repair free of expense any defects that may appear in the work within one year.

The Department realizes that this science is comparatively new and that methods in the near future may be developed that will prove far superior to some now in common use. It therefore invites correspondence either from individuals or firms concerning new methods of treatment and is prepared to advise regarding any particular method so far as experimental results will permit. The cooperation of all who are interested is necessary for this work. All interested are urged to write for the new bulletin.

WORK STOPPED ON LOAN ORDERS

Money Is Not Available Because of War

The Daily Ledger announced a few days ago, that work on new streets would probably be interrupted on account of the war, turns out to be correct, for while at City Hall on Thursday Mayor Miller ordered that all work on streets for which loans had been authorized, and upon which the bonds had not as yet been placed, should be stopped, and no further work done until the money was borrowed.

Work had already been started on some of the streets, but this morning Commissioner Brown carrying out the orders of the chief executive stopped work.

It is understood that work however may be done on the order paving Penn street as the money is available. On the orders for Hancock street and the new streets accepted this year work will be hung up.

The situation in relation to the addition to the Houghs Neck school is a peculiar one, and it is a question just how it will come out.

The appropriation for this work was $23,000, but as stated a few days ago this loan has not been placed. However the contract for the work has been let and actual work has been commenced. There is a question where the money will come from to pay for the job.

Although work will be held up on Hancock street and the new streets, the Commissioner has some money with which to keep his men at work. The surface drainage and sidewalk loans have been placed and the money available.

In addition to this he has the money appropriated in the supplimentary budget for the rebuilding of a number of streets, and work on these is now in progress.

BRIEFS

Mrs. Emma Marnock who was reported as being seriously ill was taken to the Carney hospital today to undergo a surgical operation.

Irving, only son of Calvin and Mrs. Agnes G. Fletcher, was operated upon at the Homeopathic hospital, Boston, today for appendicitis.

Joseph Hallowell, chief engineer on the steam trawler Spray, died from heart failure while at breakfast off the Grand Banks, Wednesday morning

J. McLaughlin, Sr., of 38 Payne street, is seriously ill at his home with heart trouble and may be removed to a hospital within a few days.

Richard Simmons of the E. J. Murphy pharmacy, is on his annual vacation. Henry Brown of the same store has returned to duty.

Sven Childstedt of Revere road, who sustained serious injuries in falling from a tree several weeks ago, is rapidly recovering at the Quincy City Hospital and it is expected that he will be taken home in a short time. Sven is a well known newsboy.

Henry Bacon, a resident of South Hanson died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Helen Frazer, at 132 Billings road this morning. He was in his 62nd year. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity in Everett. He leaves his wife and several children.

KEPT MARRIAGE A SECRET

Miss Marion Morrison Bride of Arthur H. Price

Almost a year from the date of her marriage, which she kept secret during that time, Mrs. Arthur H. Price, formerly Miss Marion A. Morrison, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Morrison of Quincy Point announces her marriage.

After the ceremony was performed at Franklin, N. H. Aug. 5, 1913 the bride returned to this city and completed her course at Quincy High. Last June she responded to her maiden name when her diploma was presented.

Mr. and Mrs. Price are honeymooning now and on their return will occupy the new home, the gift of forgiving parents, at 194 Washington street.

Mr. Price courted Miss Morrison while she was on a vacation at Warren last summer. He proposed marriage and was accepted. Plans were made in secret, and Mr. Price went to Wilmot, N. H., and established a residence there. At the expiration of the time required by the marriage laws Miss Morrison met him and they were married.

This week the young lady informed her mother that she was about to start on her honeymoon. The surprise the announcement occasioned did not prevent the parents extending their forgiveness.

Mr. Price is a draftsmen at the Lawley shipyard in Neponset and has many friends in this city. His bride was a member of the class of 1914 of High school.

Country Better Off Without Wizards of Finance

By SAMUEL UNTERMYER, Counsel to "Money Trust" Probers

OUR great leaders of business and finance of the past generation have been powerful factors in the splendid development of our country, but by the very qualities that have given them their power and been responsible for their success they have seriously crippled our industrial freedom, besides leaving behind them a trail of corruption which it will take a long time to eradicate.

IF WE STOP TO CONSIDER THE MONEY COST TO THE NATION OF THE ACTIVITIES IN THE DIRECTION OF UNSOUND PYRAMIDING OF TRUST BUILDING ENTERPRISES OF THE FEW MEN WHOSE NAMES WILL OCCUR TO ANY ONE WHEN THE SUBJECT IS MENTIONED WE SHALL, I THINK, ALL AGREE THAT THEY HAVE BEEN IN THE END A HEAVY BURDEN UPON US AND THAT, ON THE WHOLE, WE SHOULD HAVE BEEN FAR BETTER OFF WITHOUT THEM. THE COURTS HAVE BEEN FOR THE PAST DECADE AND WILL BE FOR A DECADE TO COME OVERWHELMED WITH THE RESULTS OF THEIR WORK IN THE EFFORTS TO UNDO IT.

ALL FREE

Mrs. New-Wed—How much did you pay the minister when we were married?
New-Wed—Nothing.
Mrs. New-Wed—How was that?
New-Wed—He didn't dare to take my money for fear that it was tainted.

NEWSY BRIEFS

Mr. and Mrs. Nixon W. Elmer are receiving congratulations on the birth Tuesday of a little daughter, May Katherine.

Mrs. Charles Smith, mother of Sidney J. Smith of Royal street, passed away Thursday morning at her home Wappingers Falls, New York.

Quincy friends of Mr. Lewis B. and Mrs. Mollie Rodgers Doane regret to hear of the death of their infant son on Thursday.

Miss Susie Hayes, Cross street, is the guest of relatives in Brooklyn, N. Y. for the month of August and will attend the millinery openings in New York later.

The United States avenue cutter which is doing duty on Presidents Road, was plainly seen from Adams Shore Thursday afternoon. In the evening the play of its searchlights made quite an illumination.

Rev. Asher Anderson preaches at Bethany church on Sunday. It will be remembered that he was the preacher there for quite a period two or three years ago. Probably many will be glad to enjoy another privilege of hearing this able and earnest man.

Lieut. Gov. Barry and Councillor Charles W. Guy were the only members of the Governors council who opposed the confirmation of the recent appointees of Gov. Walsh. All of the appointments, however, were confirmed.

The big auto truck which has been running as an opposition line to the street railway between the Quincy depot and Houghs Neck for the past few days went out of commission about 6 o'clock when an axle broke near the Adams farm. The passengers were obliged to continue the trip by street cars or walk.

Dr. George H. Ryder, who is in New Hampshire on his vacation, probably regrets that he is not at home, so that he could sit in his wireless room and pick up some of the hundreds of messages that are flying through the air every night. Dr. Ryder has one of the tallest areals in this vicinity, and has been able to pick up messages sent from vessels 1200 miles away. His outfit is simply for receiving not being equipped with a sending apparatus.

LITTLE GIRL SENDS DOLLAR

To Add to Quincy Tag Day Fund for Salem

Sympathy for the Salem sufferers is not confined to this section of the country. On an island, off the coast of Nova Scotia, lives the keeper of East Ship Harbor light with his wife and children. One of the children, a little girl of nine, has for some time past corresponded with a little Quincy girl, Marion R. Hewson. Filled with the spirit of Salem tag day, Marion wrote her a glowing account of the efforts to raise money for the sufferers and the gratifying result, enclosing a tag as a souvenir. The Canadian girl felt she wished to show her sympathy in a tangible way and did so by inclosing one dollar in her last letter to Marion. The committee in charge of the collection for Salem feel very grateful to Miss Gwendoleen Palmer for her contribution as well as the kindly feeling which prompted the gift.

MARINE CARNIVAL.

The Town River Yacht Club will hold a marine carnival the first three days of September. There will be boat races, sports and dancing. The publicity committee, of which Elijah Barrows is chairman, are planning to have the money go toward the new building which the club hopes to erect soon on the land which they have purchased near the Ward Two playground.

DIPHTHERIA FATAL.

Jean Campbell Baird of 139 Beach street died today at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Campbell Baird, after a short illness from diphtheria. Burial will be this afternoon. Several weeks ago another child was stricken but has practically recovered.

HEAVY GUN FIRE.

The sound of heavy gun fire down the harbor was heard last evening but just what it was no one seemed to know. The search lights of the revenue cutter Gresham could be plainly seen from Adams Shore, and the cutter could be plainly seen through glasses.

CITY EXPENSES FOR PROTECTION

Annual Cost Is About $3 Per Capita

Quincy expends $90,000 annually for protection of persons and property. Under this heading the Statistics of Municipal Finances include the Police department, Fire department, militia, inspection, forestry and other items for protection.

Two smaller cities expend more—Chelsea and Gloucester—while the larger city of Everett expends less. Quincy is one of the few cities that had no expense for militia. The cities without militia are: Haverhill, Quincy Chicopee, North Adams, Beverly, Melrose and Newburyport.

A future article will give the figures for the Police departments and the Fire departments separately in each city.

For "outlays" or permanent expenses for protection, Quincy is well up in the list. The smaller cities of Melrose and Gloucester borrowed a larger sum, buth Somerville and Brockton were the only other cities in the list to borrow more than Quincy.

All cities of less than 80,000 population and over 15,000 are included in the summary; Quincys cost being nearly $3 per capita:

	Maintenance	Outlay
Somerville	$214,910	$9,332

LARGE COLONY AT HOUGHS NECK

Daily Population Now Estimated at 20,000

The ubiquitous Walter Lathrop Smith, familiarly known at Houghs Neck as Sinbad the sailor, the ancient mariner and several other titles as picturesque as fiction characters, has returned after an absence of three years, and all is now peace and happiness at the beach. Mr. Smith formerly lived there permanently and his return to Brooks villa on Lenox street was as quiet as his departure. He will stay several months. As a boat repairer Smith is said to have no equals at the shore, and when he isn't engaged in that line of work or doing odd carpenter jobs he is a clam farmer. Five minutes after he said hello to some of the real estate men he was shouldering a kit of tools and heading toward a house which needed repairs. Several other contracts are in sight. Smith was given a hearty welcome by his old friends.

James Broidrick of Jamaica Plain and John Kelly of Buffalo, N. Y., are spending several months at the summer colony. Both are mining engineers in Mexico and were obliged to leave there during the trouble. As soon as it blows over and peace is restored they will return. They are located inland, a short distance from Mexico city and passed through several trying experiences before getting out of the country. They are stopping at the Periwinkle on Parkhurst street.

Houghs Neck as a beach resort grows more popular each year and Thomas Dwyer, a real estate man there, estimates the population this season close to 20,000, contracted to 1400 permanent residents. This is the greatest number that have ever spent the summer months at the beach and includes the residents of Adams shore, Post island and Rock island. This year there have been more transient than in previous years. Cottages are scarce, only three being available at the present time. Some are for sale and several titles will change hands next week.

Jerry Gray, a Brockton patrolman, is passing his annual vacation at the beach. He is a well known officer and has been on the force of that city for many years.

J. F. Duby of Dorchester and family are at the Eliot cottage on Shore road.

John Tekmegian, who was in the Ott cotage, has gone back to Brookline, and Charles E. Peterson of North Easton is the present occupant.

William F. Macey who took an early part in the development of Houghs Neck and now conducts a real estate business in Boston, is the guest of friends at the colony.

Mrs. Paul Poehler, holder of the three string total for women, is in Yarmouth, N. S., where her mother is seriously ill.

That broken down auto passenger truck was left standing on Sea street all day Friday. Its location is one of the narrowest parts of the street and it should be removed before Sunday when the heavy automobile travel to Houghs Neck starts in. Friday afternoon the wide top was jacked up and left standing in the street while the truck was taken away for repairs. The chances are that if it remains over Sunday revelers will tip it over onto the car tracks.

A complete set of Democratic nomination papers for the state ticket were filed with the City Clerk this morning. Papers were also filed for August H. Goetting for the Republican nomination for lieutenant governor.

LADIES DAY AT MARBLEHEAD

Dartwell and Dolly III to Sail Off Today

Friday was ladies day at the midsummer races off Marblehead held by the Corrinthian yacht club, and an ideal day for racing it proved to be. There were 192 boats which took the starting gun of which 181 were sailing craft. The yachts had a nice light southerly air and a calm sea. As a result of the weeks racing a number of sail-offs were held this morning. In class D the sail-off is between the Dartwell, Dolly III, and Grayling while in the Sonder class the sail-off was between the Ellen, Cima and Mingo.

In the sonder class in Friday's racing the Ellen finished in first position with the Sprig second, and in the interclub-sonder class the Huskie was the first boat in.

In class A, the Areyto of Commodore Drew of the Squantum club won out with a lead of nearly seventeen minutes over the Chewink II.

The Eleanor of the Wollaston club was third and the Marie L down near the end of the line.

In class S, the Maritza was first, the Wawenock second, and Zoe third, the Maritza having a lead of nearly four minutes corrected time.

In class H, the Wanderer IV of ex-Commodore Dawes of the Wollaston club won first position on corrected time with the Sinbad second.

In class D the Grayling which has been near the bottom of the list all the week found the light air to her liking, and won out, defeating the Dartwell two minutes and five seconds on corrected time. The order of finish of the remainder of this class was Clara, Iris, Mudjekeewis and Dolly III.

In class M, John T. Cavanagh with the Meemer finished with a lead of 28 seconds corrected time over the Saracen.

Flags on all public buildings of the city, which include all of the school buildings, as well as at many private residences are at half-mast out of respect to Mrs. Wilson, the first lady of the country.

TUBERCULOSIS HOSPITAL

Association Will Allow the City To Support

The Board of Directors of the Quincy Anti-Tuberculosis Association, at a meeting recently held, decided that it was inadvisable to continue Camp Mt. Pleasant. At this time a few words regarding the anti-tuberculosis movement in Quincy may be of value.

In 1907 a committee of the Quincy Women's Club, with the co-operation of city officials, opened an educational campaign against tuberculosis, by an exhibition accompanied with lectures, in the Council chamber at City Hall. In 1908 the physicians of Quincy held a meeting the outgrowth of which was the Quincy Anti-Tuberculosis Association.

At that time it was difficult to induce tubercular patients to leave their homes, where they were a menace not only to their families but to the community on account of the contagious nature of the disease. The State institutions were inadequate to receive all the patients in the State, and those who were very ill felt it a hardship to go so far from home and friends. Other communities were providing for their own cases, and it was felt that Quincy should take care of those belonging to this city.

Through the efforts of many, the money was forthcoming, and in the early spring of 1910 an administration building and shacks were erected and equipped, a trained nurse was installed as Superintendent, and Camp Mt. Pleasant was opened in May 1910.

About sixty different cases have been treated there since that time. In this way the community and the families of the patients have been protected from this contagious disease, and the patients, with nurse and physician, rest, good food and fresh air, have had every chance that there was for improvement or recovery.

Of the sixty cases cared for at the camp, about one half were so far advanced when the treatment was begun that little could be done: in the other half improvement was shown, and the most incipient cases cured, showing the great need of treatment in the early stages of the disease as well as preventing the spread of contagion by proper care of such cases.

The city has paid the board of its patients, and a few have paid their own board or a part of it. The balance of the cost has come from the sale of Red Cross Seals, entertainments, subscriptions and membership dues.

Since the beginning of the anti-tuberculosis movement, state legislation has declared that cities as large as Quincy must provide and maintain suitable hospitals for tubercular patients Therefore it seems that having maintained the camp for a period of over four years and showing the need and the value of such a camp the Association is no longer warranted in asking the public to contribute to the support of a camp for tubercular patients, the care of whom is now by law distinctly a municipal duty. The association will not go out of existence, however, as there are many ways other than the actual care of patients in which the crusade against tuberculosis can be carried on Elephants at Franklin Park Zoo will go through their repertoire of tricks every Wednesday and Saturday afternoon at 3.30 beginning next week. From Sunday on the bird house at the park and the aquarium at Marine Park will be open until 6 P. M.

MISS LA BRECQUE AT LA HAVRE

Mrs. W. L. McClintock Arrives on Cincinnati

The missing steamship Cincinnati docked at East Boston this morning. Among the passengers were Cardinal O'Connell of Boston and Mrs. W. L. McClintock of Pittsburg, mother-in-law of Mrs. C. O. McClintock, who before marriage was Miss C. Falvey of West Quincy. The ship during the last four nights did not get in communication with this country because of the danger from British ships intercepting messages. For four nights the run was made without lights and with port holes covered with canvas and this morning most of the women passengers were nervous wrecks. All report the experience as a most trying one.

News has been received that Miss Clarice D. Doble of South street is safe in London.

The last heard from Mrs. George N. Harman, was a letter from Austria to Mr. Harman, dated the day war was declared. She gave a good description of the outbreak, and said "We hope to go over the Dolomites into Italy tomorrow, but as the government has seized all the trains, it looks doubtful." She was well, and apparently not alarmed, but at the same time the situation is serious.

Among the Quincy people in foreign countries is Manley Perry, representative of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation to Italy. Mr. Perry is superintending the installation of two sets of turbines in scout cruisers built in Italy. He has been there two years and it is said that he expects to become a permanent resident. It is thought that he has been offered a lucrative appointment in the Italian navy.

Mr. Perry left for Italy two years ago, shortly after he returned from Japan where he assisted in the superintending of the installation of engines in submarines. The turbines tuned up to requirements, but because of the tremendous propeller pressure, due to the designers arrangment he remained to make adjustments.

Mr. Perry is a Provincetown boy and was one of the first to finish an apprenticeship at Fore River yards. His promotion was rapid, and when it became evident that he ranked with the best of the turbine experts he was appointed a representative to foreign countries.

In his last letter to Quincy friends he made no mention of the prospects of a European struggle, but during the recent Italian war he graphically described situations that after grew to international importance.

A cablegram received from Miss Corinne LaBrecque announces that she arrived at Havre, France, Thursday. Considerable anxiety has been felt for Miss LaBreques whereabouts and her family at Adams Shore were overjoyed to hear from her.

The Quincy list of European travellers includes:

Miss Louise E. Lummis
Walter Grant Thomas
Miss Everett of Elm avenue.
J. J. Johnston of Pearl street.
Miss Jane Fortier.
Walter B. Holden.
Mr. and Mrs. Brooks Adams.
Miss Clarice B. Doble.

Helen L. Moore, dwelling, Billings street.
William Fagan, shop, Germain avenue.
L. Dufore, stable, Copeland street.
John Newcomb, shed, E. Squantum street.
Mary Cudworth, dwelling, Terne road.
Calvin Fletcher, stable, Garfield street.

SOUTH SHORE MARSHAL.

Representative Michael T. Sullivan has been appointed chief marshal of the Holy Name Society of the South Shore which appears in the annual parade in Boston in the fall.

The appointment was made by Rev. Fr. Thomas R. McCoy, pastor of St. Mary's society, who is the director of this division. Father McCoy was formerly diocesan director of the Holy Name parades.

Mr. Sullivan will lead societies from a district which includes cities and towns from Quincy to Kingston. Brockton is the largest parish in the district. Mr. Sullivan has been an active member of the Holy Name Society of St. John's parish since it was organized and his appointment will be well received by the members.

DISTRICT COURT.

Charles Hewitt and Carl Lindgren were fined $5 each for drunkenness at Quincy, and Michael Gray and Michael Redmond $5 each for drunkenness at Milton.

Charles F. Winslow was arraigned for non-support at Weymouth and was ordered to pay $3 a week for the support of his family.

So far Carranza, Huerta, and Villa have not intervened to compel the European governments to conduct their quarrels in a civilized manner.

The European powers have been paying down several billions yearly for war armament as a peace insurance, but the company seems to have busted.

The European powers will consider it contrary to international law to capture neutral goods when the same are protected by a sufficient force of warships.

South American buyers will find that Uncle Sam at least is able to show up every Monday morning and open shop.

INTERNATIONAL LAW.

The vast fabric of international law contains many libraries of dusty volumes, and the best thought of the world's foremost jurists for generations. It is a complicated and elaborate system supposed to be binding on all civilized and enlightened nations.

But at the first discharge of cannon the war lords of Europe cast this code of right and justice into the waste basket. National agreements are contemptuously torn up, and the barbaric rule of might makes right becomes the law of the land.

Here is the one great weakness in the propaganda for universal peace. It is conceivable that the great powers of the world may before long be able to unite in some kind of international police, to control savage and semi-civilized peoples, and compel them to respond to the demands of civilized society.

But what international force shall control the great powers of the earth, which armed to the teeth are ready to fly at each other's throats, and do disregard all national good faith and all honorable and righteous precedents?

THE MAYORALTY.

Mayor John L. Miller's typewritten interview, given to the press Friday, stating that he authorized no one to speak on his candidacy this fall, hardly sets at rest the many rumors circulating throughout the city. Many said at the recent outing of the Granite Manufacturers Association he would not run again.

The interview states "he has told no one what he would or would not do." Nevertheless the man responsible for the rumor claimed to know, saying Mayor Miller would not seek reelection.

While it is early to presage political events, the indications are that there is less organization in party lines this year than ever before. The voters at city elections are exercising an independence directly contrary to party affiliations. This clearly points to the truth of the saying of men in public office, "voters learn daily," and it also means that personality and accomplishments are the best material for campaign powder.

Several week ago it was announced semi-officially that former Mayor Eugene R. Stone might be a candidate again, and several of his supporters flocked to his standard. They made no secret of their choice, and it was noised around that in view of "Gene's" intention Charles H. Johnson would be out of the race. This created more or less of a sensation at the time, but the excitement quieted down when Mr. Johnson said he intended to remain a candidate and was planning a lively campaign.

Gustave B. Bates is in a receptive mood, if the call of the voters is loud and clear, but he qualifies his position by saying he prefers to run only with a slate of council nominees who will be fearless and firm in their dispatch of city business.

Dr. John H. Ash while not an announced candidate will be in the race for the Democratic nomination and will probably be opposed by Edward J. Fegan. Representative Michael T. Sullivan is thrice mentioned as a candidate but it is expected that his position will not be announced for a few days. Others may run as independents.

GERMANS ARE REPULSED BY BELGIANS

Unsuccessful Assault Upon the Fortress at Liege

25,000 ARE REPORTED KILLED AND WOUNDED

France Begins Hurling Troops Into Belgium to Aid In Checking German Advance—Kaiser Expected to Go Through Little Kingdom Without Serious Resistance and Strike Telling Blow to France Before She Was Fully Prepared For War—Invasion of France Blocked After Two Days of Desperate Fighting—Berlin Officially Admits Reverse

London, Aug. 8.—Whatever may be the truth as to the losses sustained by the Germans in their unsuccessful assault upon the Belgian fortress at Liege, one fact stands out pre-eminently—the result of the operations thus far have been much in favor of the allies.

From the mass of conflicting reports that have reached London, all of which are probably more or less colored by partisan feeling, one conclusion of real importance is to be drawn, namely, that the Belgian forces, by impeding the German advance for two entire days, have enabled France to gather her army so that she may cope with Germany on equal terms.

Reports current here, all from Belgian sources or from sympathizers of the allied powers, place the estimate of German casualties at 25,000 killed and wounded. Cool and unbiased opinion here is that these figures are too high.

Serious Reverse Undoubted

But even though the German forces may not have suffered a crushing defeat, it cannot be doubted that they have experienced a serious reverse. Military experts are agreed that the kaiser did not expect serious resistance to his troops from Belgium.

He expected the German army would advance rapidly through the little kingdom, and that it would be in a position to strike France a telling blow before France had succeeded in completing its mobilization—that is, mobilization in the larger sense, which comprehends the assembling of impediamenta, as well as men.

The determined resistance his troops have encountered at Liege cannot but be a severe shock to the Germans, who entered into the war with a confident belief in the superiority of German arms. Liege has resisted bravely; the despised Belgian army, however much it may vaunt itself in its reports of victory, has unquestionably acquitted itself well.

Now, after two days of fighting, two days which have been well utilized by France in advancing her troops into Belgium to aid in checking the German advance, and in completing her own preparations for war, the kaiser finds his vast army confronted with almost insurmountable obstacles in its plan for the invasion of France.

Bloody Frays Certain

Paris was, in the universal opinion of military experts, the objective point of the German troops. Thus far the kaiser has succeeded in penetrating Belgian territory only about twenty miles.

Two hundred and six miles, every inch of which will be bitterly contested, now confront the German army in its march to Paris. Two hundred and six miles that will run with blood before Paris falls a prey to German arms—that, in brief, sums up the herculean task that the kaiser has set his soldiery.

Dspatches say that desperate fighting still continues. While the Belgian troops, who are said to number only about 40,000, resisted a German army estimated at 80,000 men, France began hurling troops into Belgium. All the "reports" thus far received, official and unofficial alike, are from sources sympathetic to the allies, with one exception.

That exception, though like the others it has come over hostile wires, purports to be an official German account of the operations about Liege. If such it is, it is an admission of a reverse, but it denies disaster. The telegram from Berlin reads:

Report From Berlin

"On Wednesday the German advance guards penetrated along the entire Belgian frontier. A small detachment tried a coup de main with great boldness.

"Some of the cavalry entered Liege with the intention of seizing the commander of the forces, who only saved himself by flight. At attempt on the fortress itself, the fortifications of which are modern, was unsuccessful. Our troops are before the fortress, in contact with the enemy.

"A hostile foreign press will characterize the enterprise, which cannot in the slightest influence the larger operations, as a defeat. It, however, is but a unique act of heroism in the history of war and a sign of the heroic gallantry of our troops."

VON BETHMANN-HOLLWEG

Ranks Next to the Kaiser In Ruling German Empire

Theobald von Bethmann-Hollweg is chancellor of the German empire. Next to the kaiser he has more power than any other man. Great responsibility rests on his shoulders during the present war.

The tone of this message corroborates to some degree, at least, the stories from Belgian and other sources of the stubborn resistance made by the fortress at Liege, and of the heavy casualties to the German troops.

From such messages as have been received in this city, the present situation is that the German troops have been seriously checked, at the least. One story is that the attack upon Liege has been abandoned, and that the German troops have withdrawn to the opposite side of the river Meuse.

Another report is, however, that at a late hour last evening Liege was being shelled with heavy guns by the Germans.

SHELLING BELGRADE

Austrians Continue Bombardment Which Was Begun Without Notice

The bombardment of Belgrade by the Austrians, which began without notice on July 29, has continued almost steadily since. The capital was crowded with women and children when the Austrian artillery opened fire, and there was a rush for the country, but the people were obliged to return because of the concentration of food supplies at Belgrade.

In the first few days of the fighting the people were terror stricken, but gradually became calmer, and the merchants reopened their shops.

The royal palace, the British and German legations and most of the larger buildings of the city have been struck by shells.

The legations and consulates are filled with frightened nationals who had gathered at the building in the hope that the neutral flag would be respected by the Austrians.

JAPAN'S FLEET READY

Reserve Army Officers Ordered to Prepare to Answer Any Call

The Japanese reserve army officers were ordered to be in readiness for possible mobilization. A flying squadron of seven cruisers has been organized at Yokosuka. The battleship squadron has been increased to eight vessels and is ready for service.

The fortifications at Vladivostok, a section of Russia, and at the Saigon, the French possession in China, have been strengthened to meet a possible bombardment of German warships whose whereabouts are now unknown.

DENIAL BY GERMANY

Foreign Office Declares That Mother of Czar Was Not Ill-Treated

The German foreign office declared false the stories stating that discourtesy had been shown in Germany toward Dowager Empress Maria Feodorowna and Grand Duke Constantine of Russia.

Officials state that the dowager empress was received with the greatest respect on her arrival in Berlin, and that her train was diverted to Denmark because the territory east of Berlin was in a state of war.

AS COMMERCE DESTROYER

Great Cunarder Mauretania to Be Turned Into a Warship

When the Cunard liner Mauretania, which put into Halifax with more than 1600 passengers, fleeing from Europe, again sails from Liverpool she will be fitted out as H. M. S. Mauretania and fully prepared to destroy hostile shipping of Germany. The Mauretania will return to Liverpool under convoy of British warships and will immediately be turned over to the admiralty for her equipment of quick-fire rifles, a new coat of dark gray paint and white ensign.

Commerce destruction was the ultimate purpose for which the Mauretania was constructed. She was practically built for the admiralty and many features of warship construction were embodied in her hull. She and the Lusitania were the first merchant vessels built with longitudinal bulkheads. Provision for magazines was made.

Armored gun positions were built into her hull with ammunition hoists running to the magazines. Her guns are in store at Liverpool. Every officer and the greater part of her crew are naval reserve men, shipped with the special view of quicker turning her into a warship in case of an emergency such as at present.

APPEAL TO UNITED STATES

French Request That We Protest Violations of The Hague Treaties

An appeal to the United States to protest against violations of The Hague treaties is made in the Paris Figaro by Gabriel Hanotaux, former minister of foreign affairs.

He suggests that an inquiry should be begun immediately and proposes that President Wilson, Secretary of State Bryan, Theodore Roosevelt, Andrew Carnegie, Nicholas M. Butler and Robert Bacon assume the duty. He declares the fate of civilization to be in the hands of the neutral powers.

RELIEF MEASURES PUSHED

American Financial Agencies to Be Placed Through Europe

Rapid progress was made at Washington toward the relief of Americans in Europe. President Wilson issued an executive order constituting a board of relief to consist of the secretaries of state, treasury, war and navy, which will have general charge of the measure to be taken to distribute the $2,500,000 authorized by congress.

Secretary McAdoo, chairman of this board, will establish fiscal agencies in England and on the continent and will provide means for making available funds sent to Americans by their friends at home.

Thousands of dollars were deposited at the United States treasury to be sent abroad and arrangements will be made to turn these sums over to the proper parties when the government gold ships reach Europe. Further deposits will be handled through cable messages.

TIP TO CUSTOMS OFFICERS

Must Closely Watch Foreign Ships Converted For War Purposes

Foreign merchant ships converted for war purposes, or carrying foreign reservists in organized manner, will not be permitted to clear from ports of the United States.

Instructions to aid the customs authorities at New York in enforcing President Wilson's neutrality proclamation were telegraphed from the department of commerce.

"Wire the department before issuing clearance papers to foreign vessels, unless you are satisfied after careful inspection that the ship has not made any preparations while in port tending in any way to her conversion into a vessel of war," said the department.

STEAMER BOTTLED UP

Cecilie May Not Leave Bar Harbor Until War Comes to End

The treasure ship Kronprinzessin Cecilie will be forced to remain at Bar Harbor, Me., until the end of the war. The United States torpedo boat destroyer Warrington and the revenue cutter Androscoggin have the North German Lloyd liner bottled up in accordance with the neutrality orders issued by President Wilson.

Captain Polack said he had no sailing orders and, as the Cecilie is a part of the German naval reserve, expected to be held at Bar Harbor.

WAR HITS HOUSEKEEPERS

Fish Joins Meats In Upward Movement of Prices In New York

Prices of all foodstuffs are rising by leaps and bounds in New York. Meat is still going up, and even fish has joined in the general advance. Cheap cuts of beef have advanced from 13 to 15 cents a pound. Lamb, selling at 16 cents until a few days ago, is now 20.

Canned meats have advanced 5 cents per dozen wholesale, and the advanced price may soon strike the consumer. Dealers declare an advance in the price of coffee may be looked for, as steamers usually bringing this product from South America are engaged elsewhere. An advance in sugar is also predicted.

BUMPER CROP OF APPLES

Big Merchant Marine Needed to Dispose of the Fruit

Boston, Aug. 8.—The announcement that this year's apple crop will probably be larger than that of any for many seasons was made at the closing meeting of the International Apple Shippers' association, which has been holding a convention in this city.

Although the figures were held as confidential by the members, it is estimated that there will be at least 5,000,000 barrels for foreign shipment, and that unless a sufficiently large merchant marine is provided, the domestic market will be flooded.

TAX RATES FOR YEAR 1914

Highest Figures in History of Several Cities

The City of Lynn tax rate this year as announced Friday is $20 per $1,000 valuation the same as last year. The net gain in valuation amounted to $4,233,147, bringing the total valuation at $90,305,838. The number of poll taxes assessed is 28,641. During the year there was a net gain in new structures of $1,535,475.

Newton's tax rate this year is $18.80 an increase of 60 cents over that of 1913. In view of the large increase in state, county and metropolitan assessments the rate was expected to be much higher. The city however shows a steady gain in property, the increase in valuation this year being $1,131,880. But for the natural shrinkage in personal property the increase would have been considerably larger. The real estate valuation this year is given as $56,868,850 and personal estate $26,739,070, a total of $83,607,920. The gain of $1,131,880 over last year is all in real estate.

The town of Belmont's tax rate will be fifty cents higher than in 1913, this years rate being $21 as against $20.50 last year. The assessors were able to keep the rate down by a large increase in personal and real estate valuations.

The tax rates reported to date are as follows, over one half being larger than in 1913:

ALDEN KINDRED.

The fourteenth annual reunion of the Alden Kindred, of America, Inc., was held in Duxbury at the old homestead, Wednesday, August 5. Although the weather was unpropitious, the program as prepared was carried out under the direction of the president, Vernon A. Field. The most important new business of the day was the consideration of the possibility of erecting a permanent building for meetings, the project being left in the hands of the executive committee.

Mrs. Flora S. Mathewson of South Braintree, the secretary, read an interesting report and Charles R. Alden of Hyde Park gave the treasurer's report. The Adelphi quartette and Frances G. Devers orchestra of Boston furnished the music. Miss Dorothy Barry Carpenter of Lynn read many selections which were greatly enjoyed.

The report of the president on his trip to Southampton, England, where the Pilgrim Memorial and Alden tablet were dedicated last August was accompanied by his presentation to the Alden Kindred of two enlarged photographs, one of the Pilgrim Memorial in Southampton and one of the Alden tablet which is placed on the memorial.

The orator of the day was Hon. Arthur Lord of Plymouth, president of the Pilgrim society. Greetings were received from J. Eliphas Hayward who has been the oldest member at recent reunions. The secretary read letters from absent members in various parts of the country regretting their inability to be present.

Geographically the roll call gave members present from Kansas, Minnesota, Ohio, Florida and Salt Lake City. Rev. Newton W. Bates of Austinburg, Ohio, with four members of his family made the trip by auto especially to attend the reunion. The report of the nominating committee was given by the secretary and the officers named were elected unanimously. Mrs. Flora S. Mathewson of Washington street was re-elected secretary of the Alden Kindred.

One ceremony which is always very impressive is the service in honor of those who died since the last reunion.

PRESENTATION.

Last Tuesday evening at the regular meeting of Puritan Lodge No. 179, I. O. O. F., Henry A. Monk in a few well chosen words presented to Solon David in behalf of the members of the lodge a "veteran" badge, fashioned from gold and enamel and suspended from three golden links. The token was presented during the "good of the order" and was a complete surprise to its recipient who was greatly pleased and responded in a graceful and fitting maner. On the back of the badge is the following inscription:

Solon David, P. G.,
Puritan Lodge No. 179,
September 26, 1877.

Mr. David has been a member of Puritan lodge for 37 years and has been an active, working member during that entire period. He has served in most of the minor offices and has twice filled the Noble Grand's chair. He is held in high esteem by his fellow Odd Fellows as is shown by the fact that four years ago when Mr. David was 70 years of age, Puritan Lodge and Amana Rebekah Lodge combined their efforts and presented him with gifts suitable to the occasion, this affair also being in the nature of a surprise to him. Mr. David has served most acceptably as janitor of I. O. O. F. hall for the past eight years and has a host of friends in all walks of life in this town.

Popular Caprice Favored by Judicial Recall

By Judge ROME G. BROWN of Minneapolis

THOSE who attack our present system of government pretend to offer a remedy for all existing evils in their proposal to establish the judicial recall in the form of the recall of judges or of the recall of judicial decision by referendum ballot. In fact, however, their SO CALLED "REMEDY" IS NEITHER REMEDIAL NOR CONSTRUCTIVE NOR PROGRESSIVE.

IT HAS ONLY THE EFFECT OF REVERTING TO THE SUPREME, UNRESTRAINED DOMINANCE OF POPULAR CAPRICE AND PASSION. IT ELIMINATES THOSE SAFEGUARDING CHECKS WHICH UNDER OUR SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT ALLOW THE ENFORCEMENT ONLY OF THE DELIBERATE, IMPASSIONATE JUDGMENT OF THE VOTERS AND WHICH COMPEL A DISTINCTION SO FAR AS ENFORCEMENT IS CONCERNED BETWEEN THE DELIBERATE, WELL CONSIDERED JUDGMENT OF THE VOTERS AND THE EXPRESSION OF MERE TEMPORARY POPULAR WHIM.

Generally Succeeds.

A woman likes to marry a man who feels that he was born to command, just to prove to him that he wasn't.

BRAINTRE BASE BALL.

The games Tuesday and Wednesday were cancelled because of rain. Thursday's game between the Monatiquots and Squares although standing 11 to 9 in favor of the former was declared no game on account of darkness.

In Friday's game of the preceding week the Squares defeated the Pond Streets 3 to 1. The contest was marred by a series of accidents. Clifton Thayer of the Squares had part of his hand split by a foul tip and Dr. Henry L. Dearing had to take two stitches in it. Herbert Burrill, left fielder of the Pond Streets, was struck on the nose by a thrown ball. The physician used two stitches to close the wound. Louis Gardine, first sacker for the Pond Streets was struck by a ball on the elbow in the early part of the game and had to retire.

The Monatiquots by reason of the Pond Streets losing to the Squares have the flag cinched. Too bad that their former owner and manager, George Cramer, now of Dixon, Ill., who sold out his interests to Manager Felix Atkinson, could not be on hand to witness their triumph.

The Pond Hillers tried hard to land the banner for their club house but couldn't stop the fast going Indians.

The Town Pumps are the same old in and outers. Last Friday's game was won by their classy clouts. Manager Dennehy thinks he has a fine team, although it sometimes falls hard.

The Breezes, three time champs, are in the quicksands and sinking fast. They can't get out this year anyway.

Next week marks the close of an unsuccessful season and is probably the last one under the present officials.

The expenses of Burrill, injured in the game of last week Friday will be assumed by the league.

Schedule for next week—
Monday—Pond Streets, Monatiquots.
Tuesday—Heights, Squares.
Wednesday—Monatiquots, Heights.
Thursday—Pond Streets, Squares.
*Friday—Monatiquots, Squares.
* Game of July 28.

LEAGUE STANDING UP TO AUG. 7.

	Won	Lost
Monatiquots	19	7
Pond Streets	14	11
Squares	11	12
Heights	6	19

Last Saturday at East Weymouth the Braintree A. A. were beaten by Clapp Memorial 3 to 1. This afternoon the same teams will play on the Hollis field.

EXERCISE AND EATING.

A good dinner at night is necessary for those whose pleasure or work keeps them up very late. But for ordinary folk, who dine at 6 or 7 and go to bed about 10:30, only a light, wholesome repast should be taken at the end of the day, when muscles or nerves are more or less exhausted, says a physician.

A "tired stomach is a weak stomach" is a golden rule to remember. Yet how often one hears people say: "I've been rushing about all day, and am tired to death. I must have a big meal to make up for it!" You may put the big meal into the stomach, but you cannot make the stomach digest it.

A belief lives strong in the hearts and minds of the majority of mankind, including persons of weak digestion, that a quick brisk walk taken before a meal gets up an appetite and helps the stomach digest the food. Now, this is exactly what it doesn't do. Exercise spreads the blood through the body. The old fashioned midday dinner is not a bad thing.—Washington Star.

The middle section of the Panama canal, thirty-four miles long, has a water level of eighty-five feet higher than the two end sections, which are sea levels. Vessels entering the canal from the ocean on either side are lifted to the middle section, a height of eighty-five feet, by three sets of locks, each of which raises the vessel a fraction over twenty-eight feet, making a total of eighty-five feet. These locks are constructed side by side like a double track railway, so that one ship may be going up while the other is going down. Only one ship can be in a lock at the same time, but as the locks are constructed in pairs, side by side, two ships going in opposite directions, one going up the incline and the other going down, may pass each other within hailing distance. Vessels are towed through the locks by electric machinery.—Philadelphia Press.

Probably.

At a dinner one evening a discussion arose about the peculiar customs in foreign countries. One gentleman told of the Chinese customs, which are nearly all the exact reverse of our own. "They use white for mourning, black for rejoicing and mourn at a birth while they rejoice at death," he remarked. "The needle of their compass points to the south, and they draw the saw toward them to cut. These customs may easily be accounted for, but there remains one which I cannot explain. Why do they take their soup at the end of the meal instead of at the beginning?"

When Cholera Invaded New York.

There was cholera in New York in 1830 and again in 1832. The disease reached the city in June of the latter year and raged until the last of October, causing 3,515 deaths. In 1849 the cholera appeared again, beginning at the "Five Points" and spreading rapidly. The public school buildings were turned into hospitals. The total mortality for the year was about 5,000.—New York American.

SQUANTUM BY-THE-SEA

At the meeting of the Squantum Women's club held at the home of Mrs. William Donovan, Bellevue road, Wednesday afternoon much activity in the social line was planned. The bazaar scheduled to be held Aug. 15, will be postponed to Aug 22 because of other affairs to be held at that date. A play to be given under the personal direction of Mrs. Louise Osborne Holt is to be held at a near date The ladies will probably hold the bazaar on their land on Huckins avenue. President Mrs. William A. Reed did not have her list of committees complete at the meeting. After the business meeting a social hour was spent. The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Helen McGowan, Orchard street.

Mr. and Mrs. Gustave Wunderlich and daughter Katherine of Jamaica Plain are spending the week end at their bungalow on Bellevue road.

Mr. and Mrs. William Donovan left Thursday in their auto for a trip to Plymouth and Sandwich. They expect to be gone until Saturday.

Mrs. Martha Grover is visiting at the home of her daughter Mrs. Fred Lovejoy, Hampden street.

The many friends of Mrs. Herman Berghaus will be glad to know that after a weeks illness she is able to be out again.

Mrs. T. F. Callahan is visiting at the home of her mother in West Roxbury.

Mrs. Theodore Engdoll of New York city is visiting at the home of Mrs. John Jepson.

Cards have been received from Thelma Holt who is enjoying an outing of two weeks in a girls camp at Lake Whalom, Fitchburg.

Another enjoyable hop was held last evening at the Squantum Inn about twenty-five couples being present.

HOUGHS NECK BOWLING.

The Houghs Neck All Stars beat a Weymouth team in a close match at the Poehler alleys Friday evening. Tirrell of the visitors got high single with 125. The high total went to Paul Poehler whose 318 resulted from two strings over a century and one close to it. The match was for pinfall and only 23 pins separated the teams. The totals were the highest made this season on beach alleys. The score:

OPEN RACE MONDAY.

The annual open race of the Quincy yacht club for the Y. R. A. of M. and Inter-club yachts will be held off the clubhouse at Houghs Neck on Monday, and the fine list of cash prizes which the club have hung up should result in a large list of entries. The preparatory gun will be fired at 1.45, the warning gun at 1.50 and the starting gun for the first class to get away at 1.55. The other classes will be sent away at intervals of five minutes.

The Daily Ledger would appreciate it very much if friends of Quincy people in Europe would keep the Ledger posted. We desire a list of all Quincy people abroad.

PLAYGROUND BASE BALL

Ward Three Boys Win Game at Wollaston

Yesterday at Wollaston the ball team from Ward Three demonstrated that they were just a bit better at playing the national game than were the local boys. The score was 3 to 2 and the game itself was one of the best that has been played this season.

Favereau of the losers pitched a great game, letting down the South Quincy "sluggers" with only two hits. One of these was responsible for two runs however coming in the seventh inning with men on second and third bases; it was a good clean drive to right field by De Senso.

Venner, who plays first for Ward Three boys pulled off the feature play in the fourth inning, when with only one out and two men on he made a back-handed stab of a hot liner from Mullens bat. The man on second was easily doubled as it seemed sure that the hit was safe. Venner also made the second hit off Favereau.

Mullen did the best work for the losers getting eight assists and three put-outs from his position at third base.

The batteries were as follows; for Ward Three, O'Brien and Cahill; for Wollaston, Favereau and Bruce.

The return game will be played at Ward Three on Tuesday morning.

LONG SWIM TO SQUANTUM

The Lynn Item says: Gilbert Eaton, the assistant life-guard at the Saugus river bath house, swam across Quincy bay from the Wollaston Yacht club to Squantum point and return, a distance of five miles, in two hours and 43 minutes, Wednesday afternoon. Frank Presby of Wollaston piloted Young Eaton across the bay and he was accompanied in the boat by Frank Mills of Lynn.

The conditions for the swim were none too favorable. On the first leg of the swim the choppy condition of the water did not bother the swimmer, but on the return he had to battle the waves and wind. When he landed on the Wollaston Yacht club raft several of the members of the club gave him a hearty reception.

It is expected that Eaton will try to make the Boston Light swim some time this month and Lifeguard Donovan is endeavoring to secure a capable pilot to lead his charge to the Light.

The feat was not the first remarkable one by Eaton. Last summer he made the Nahant-Revere swim in good time and the Nahant beach bathhouse-Saugus river swim. He does not think anything of the Pines-Saugus river bathhouse swim. On the Fourth of July, in the municipal games held at the bathhouse, he was the winner in the 100-yard dash, quarter and half-mile swims. He is only 18 years of age and this is his first season at the bathhouse where he is a favorite with the "kids."

NORTH WEYMOUTH

Miss M. E. Hutchins is on a three weeks trip through the Adirondacks.

Mr. and Mrs. George L. Barnes and John Stetson spent the week end at the Minot, North Scituate.

Miss Anna Kennedy will talk on "Landscape gardening" before the Ladies' Auxiliary to the Pond Plain Improvement Association next Tuesday afternoon at the residence of Mrs. Jacob B. Denbroder.

Walter Reed left Monday for the civil engineering camp of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology at Machias, Maine, where about one hundred students will spend the next six weeks in practical work in the field.

Mis Ruth Wright and Miss Bertha Brennan have been spending the week at Brant Rock.

Miss Lucia Nash and Miss Marion Reed have been visiting friends in Whitman.

Charles Reed, Warren Bates and Thayer McBride have returned from Nantucket.

Herbert W. Bass and family have been in town this past week.

Mrs. Charles Marble and children are at Silver Lake for the month.

David Kidder, Chief Pratt and Engineer Hunt are a committee to draw up specifications for the fire apparatus to be bought, and submit them to the entire committee for approval. Although no official action has been taken it is the general opinion that the three pieces should be of the same make as standardization of apparatus would increase the efficiency of the men, and better terms could probably be made if the entire purchase was made at one time of one firm.

Mrs. Mark Keene of Pearl street and her niece, Mrs. Fred Miller of Standish road, are visiting friends at Topsfield.

In honor of the birthday of Miss Caroline French of North Weymouth, Mr. and Mrs. Joshua P. Holbrook gave a surprise party to Miss French at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin R. Sampson at 19 Lincoln street, Wednesday evening.

The host of friends of Mrs. Clarence Cole, nee Lillian Keene, will be interested to learn of the arrival at their home at Baldwinsville, New York, of an eight and one half pound girl named Florence Margaret. Andrew Culley of Pratt avenue is thereby great grandfather.

A record was made at South Weymouth on Wednesday when a demonstration of the Boyd auto pump was given. The pump threw 930 gallons a minute drafting from the pond, and connected to a hydrant of only thirty pounds pressure delivered 1140 gallons. The Boyd machine with full equipment carried twenty-six men up Park street hill at forty-two miles an hour.

Alfred Thomas who has been at his home here for a few weeks, has returned to Indianapolis, where he has charge of the branch house of the Stetson Shoe Co.

Mrs. Theresa A. Crowley, a Boston lawyer, addressed an open air meeting at Washington Square, Friday evening on the subject of Woman Sufferage. She is one of the most prominent suffragists engaged in the campaign in this state, and in spite of her business activities devotes practically all of her time to it. There are few women who have Mrs. Crowley's rare gift of reaching the voters through her forceful arguments and clear reasoning.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Alexander and children and Mrs. George T. Rand have returned from a visit to Dr. Charles A. White at Narragansett Pier.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Drown have returned from an outing at Litchfield, Maine and vicinity.

Edward H. Drown has gone to Danvers where he has taken a position as pianist in a moving picture theatre.

The funeral of Mrs. Minna P., wife of Charles T. Bailey was conducted at the family residence 24 Broad street on Thursday, Rev. Frank B. Cressey, a former pastor, conducted the service at the house and at the grave also. A quartette rendered appropriate selections. The bearers were William E. Pray, Elmer Houghton, Ernest McFaun and Harry A. Bailey.

NO BIG BATTLE IN NORTH SEA

Churchill Makes Official Denial In House of Commons

HE PROTESTS AGAINST MINES

Indiscriminate Scattering of Them by Germany Endangers Peaceful Merchant Vessels as Well as Warships—Says It Deserves Attention of Civilized Nations of the World

London, Aug. 8.—Winston S. Churchill, first lord of the British admiralty, announced in the house of commons:

"Apart from the loss of the small British cruiser Amphion and the German mine layer Koenigen Luise, there has been no other fighting and no other losses as far as we are aware.

"On Wednesday, a flotilla of torpedo boat destroyers, while patrolling the upper reaches of the channel, found the Koenigen Luise laying mines. The destroyers pursued and sank her. About fifty of her crew, which probably numbered 120 or 130 men, were humanely saved by the crews of the British destroyers. The Amphion continued to scout with the flotilla, and while on the return journey was blown up by a mine.

"The indiscriminate use of mines not in connection with military harbors or strategic positions, and the indiscriminate scattering of contact mines about the seas might, of course, destroy not only warships, but peaceful merchant vessels under a neutral flag and possibly carrying supplies to a neutral country.

"This use of mines is new in warfare, and deserves the attentive consideration not only of we who are engaged in war but of the nations of the civilized world. The admiralty is not at all alarmed or disconcerted by this incident."

Churchill added that arrangements had been made such as would reduce the possibility of accidents caused by mines to a minimum.

Referring to the disconcerting war rumors spread by the newspapers, Churchill said they were probably due to the very strict censorship prevailing, and this caused the papers to fill their columns with reports from irresponsible and nervous people on the coast.

Churchill announced that the British government had decided to establish a press bureau and from this bureau is to be issued a steady supply of trustworthy information from both the admiralty and war office without, however, placing in danger the naval and military interests of the country. In this way the country would be kept properly and truthfully informed of the state of affairs from day to day.

Churchill then paid a tribute to the press for its restraint during the precautionary period when the government was without any legal means of controlling it. This had enabled the authorities expeditously and discreetly to complete their preparations.

Before the adjournment of the house of commons last evening Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd George announced that reports received from points throughout the country showed that with the opening of the banks the financial position was perfectly satisfactory.

CRUISER AMPHION SINKS

British Ship Shattered by Explosion When She Strikes a Mine

The British admiralty issued the following:

"In the course of reconnoitering after the German mine layer Koenigen Luise was sunk, the cruiser Amphion struck a mine and foundered. The forepart of the British ship was shattered by the explosion and practically all of the loss to the crew ensued from this cause. All not killed by the explosion were taken off by the boats of the destroyers before the Amphion went down.

"Twenty German prisoners of war, who were confined in the forepart of the ship, were killed. The line of mines was probabbly laid by the Koenigen Luise before she was sunk."

ALLEGED SLAYER CAUGHT

Man Sought as Murderer of Bride Was Looking For Work

Boston, Aug. 8.—Biasi Valestrino, who disappeared from East Boston just before the body of his wife was found in their home, mistook Inspector Rooney for a contractor and, as a result, is locked up on a charge of murder in the first degree.

He was arrested in a gravel pit between Burlington and Billerica after an all-night search by Rooney and three other officers.

The crime charged to Valestrino resulted in the death of his bride of six weeks, whose body, with the head battered by a club, was found in the bedroom of their home. Valestrino admitted his guilt when arraigned in court.

Asking Time

A Case of Perseverance

By ELIZABETH GAINES WILCOXSON

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Valor McGehee, the boss of the light-erage business, a tenth owner in the Crown mine and owner of the little sawmill up the creek, was a stalwart person of easy manners and the scars of fair fights.

Every day at the same hour he came sauntering in and straddled the bench not far from the sandwich board where Mrs. Taylor was always busy slicing bread and butter.

Her long, oddly slanting, light gray, wise eyes gave him a look of impersonal friendliness as she nodded good morning and briskly lifted two thick sandwiches to a crockery plate and without losing a motion poured a cup of coffee. These she placed before him.

He breakfasted leisurely. As he ate he talked with the cook.

"D'you know what day this is?" he asked one morning.

She flicked an inquiring glance at him, drove her knife through the loaf and repeated:

"Do I know what day it is? Sure. It's Friday." And she smiled. She had a baffling, secretive smile.

The man smiled, too, watching her face.

"D'you know why I call you Mona Lisa?" he drawled banteringly.

"Fr'end of yours I remind you of?" she offered, another smile lurking in the corners of her mouth.

"You've guessed it. She had a smile like yours. It was a ticklish proposition, that smile of Mona's. You could never tell whether it was with you or on you. But what particular Friday is this?"

"The day of the month? The 10th."

"Correct," said the man. "Which 10th?"

She caught up a big wooden bowl and began piling up the sandwiches into it with the automatic speed of machinery.

"Two months ago today you arrived to open up this haven for the hungry. That's what happened to turn the 10th into a special red letter day," he explained.

"So I did."

"And I was your first customer," he reminded.

"So you were."

"And I've never learned what your name is," he pursued.

"No!" She favored him with a tail eye glance, her hands flying with the motion of closing two slices of bread and butter over one slice of meat. "After my saying it to you so often—'Mrs. Harry Lane Taylor'—just like that!"

She threw out her hands in a jaunty, spread eagle gesture and whisked around to the stove to replenish the fire and readjust the jars of baking beans.

The man smiled after her. He had said the same thing sixty times—once every day for sixty days.

In a minute she was back at the sandwich board, her naturally pale face fire flushed.

"And I am going to ask you something else."

"Something new?" she queried and laughed. She had a frank, clear laugh at variance with her veiled expression and secretive smile.

"Are you a widow?"

"Seems to me I remember you asked me that once."

"Thirty times," he corrected. "I've a reason for wanting to know."

Her long, slanting gray eyes rested upon him for a moment while she answered with mock seriousness:

"Have you? Well, I'll tell you how to get out of telling if anybody asks you if I'm a widow. You just say you don't know."

He grinned.

"All right for you! I'm going to keep on asking till you answer. I'm coming once an hour and ask till you answer."

"Now, I call that downright persecution," she protested, turning to hang up the sandwich board.

McGehee slipped a coin, the price of his breakfast, under his cup, swung his feet over the bench and stood up.

"I'll be back in an hour," he promised.

More than half an hour after he was gone a stranger entered, letting the door blow backward and charging the room with an icy wind.

He was ragged and dirty and gave evidence not only of poverty, but of dissipation. His hair was mixed with gray, and he wore a sandy mustache and a stubble beard. If ever there was a disreputable character it was he. And yet there was about him something that gave evidence of a better past.

He seemed rigid with cold and stopped for breath as if he needed to relax to breathe, then slipped over the bench, hugging his hands together.

Turning with her customary alertness, Mrs. Taylor mechanically picked up a cup. As her eyes fell upon the newcomer her face whitened, and she went taut from head to foot. She automatically put down the cup. A mirthless smile twisted the man's mouth.

"I've got the money to pay for it," he said.

"Did you come here on purpose?" she asked savagely, stepping toward him.

"Don't be hard on me, Joyce," he begged conciliatingly. "I own I hadn't ought to have left you when I did, but what else could I do? Under the circumstances I thought folks would do more for you if I was gone than"—

"Under the circumstances I accepted charity until I was able to work. The child was buried by charity. I afterward repaid the money, but it was none the-less taking charity."

"I'm going to turn over a new leaf, Joyce," he whined.

"Not in this shack," she retorted decisively. She was gathering composure after her shaken moment. "I wish lightning had struck you before you found out where I was. I was a fool not to get a legal separation at the time, but I learned you'd been sent to prison, and I knew you were out of the way, and I came off up here without doing it. You were given a ten year term, I heard. What you're doing out in four years I don't know."

He stared at her, and she read his cowering fear with hard eyes.

"This country's big, and I want you to move on. This is my place. It's not big enough for us both. You understand? If you'll keep in mind we're perfect strangers and get out of here on the next boat"—

The fear oozed out of his face. A sort of whimpering hope took its place.

"You are hard, Joyce," he sniveled. "God knows, I've always loved you! I never thought of anybody but you."

"Leave God out of it," ordered the woman contemptuously. "You never thought of anybody but yourself in your life."

"I knew you'd be mad at me, Joyce, as soon as I came in. I'm going right up to the mine and get a job. I'll show you I can work. I won't ever leave you again."

"Oh, yes, you will," she said grimly, "and that right away. Just look at my hands!" she cried suddenly, throwing them out before her with a fierce gesture. They were calloused and rough and stiff. "I suppose you remember what they looked like once!"

The man blinked and licked his lips.

"I remember, Joyce," he said humbly. "I thought maybe you'd teach music. You could play right well."

"I tried it for a year and starved."

"If you'll just give me one more chance"—

"You can have all the chance in the world—away from this place. I shall not molest you, though I suspect you've got no right to your freedom. But you just get this once for all: You are to move on at once. And meanwhile we are strangers. I don't now you. You are"—

McGehee entered, and she turned abruptly and poured a cup of coffee, which with food she placed before the man already seated, naming as she did so the price of the meal.

As he passed, McGehee bestowed upon the presence a glance of curiosity and dislike, then sauntered on to his accustomed place. With deliberation that savored of malice Mrs. Taylor filled a cup and plate and set them before him.

He looked at the food with mingled amusement and protest.

"Do I have to eat every hour?"

"Oh, very well," drawled McGehee and began to stir in his cup.

He stirred slowly and sipped the coffee and nibbled the sandwich, but he did not attempt conversation until the presence at the far end of the room was gone.

As the man went out Valor gave him another scrutiny and looked inquiringly at Mrs. Taylor. It struck him when he came in that she and the man were having words, and the thought came back to him.

But the morning was now growing late, and she was getting ready for the noon rush, and somehow, though he could not have told why, the atmosphere seemed subtly against any more half earnest jesting.

So he moodily formed a big interrogation point in the center of his place with breadcrumbs, put a coin, the price of the meal, under his cup, swung his legs over the bench and went out.

He did not come back the next hour, nor the next, as he had promised. The camp was suddenly in a turmoil over the disaster at the Crown mine. McGehee, with others, gave the rest of the day to caring for the five men wounded by the explosion and burying the three who were killed.

"He claimed he was an expert powder man, just what they were looking for. He lied. He hadn't been there twenty minutes before—oh, well, he got his too. But that didn't make it any easier for the rest of 'em. It was that fellow who was eating here yesterday morning when I came in for my second breakfast. You remember him?"

He had entirely forgotten his impression of the day before.

"I remember him. It's those he left wounded I pity the most. The others are dead."

Her face looked inexpressibly weary. He noted her unusual expression.

"You aren't sick, are you?" he asked, with sudden perplexity.

She shook her head.

"No. Thinking of the mine accident kept me awake. That's all," she said.

Valor McGehee took occasion to observe:

"Since I wasted so much time yesterday I guess I'll just stay right here till you tell me your name and if you are a widow."

Her eyes met his, and never had her smile been so enigmatic.

"There's a time to ask and a time to answer. My name is Joyce, and—I am a widow," she said.

Good Form

Serving Dinner a la Anglaise.

There are three recognized methods of serving a formal dinner, each of which has its advantages—the Russian, the English and the "compromise" service. Naturally this last is an adapting of the best of the most available from the other two. The English is selected where help is rather limited, because in its use all belonging to one course is placed upon the table at one time, the host and hostess serving meats and vegetables placed before them in platters.

For this service the number of plates to be served may be set in a pile before the person who is to carve, or, if preferred, on a side table, from where they are handed to him one at a time. As each plate is served by the carver a maid presents it for a helping of some vegetable and then sets it down before a guest or member of the family for whom it is intended. It is understood, of course, in serving in this way that ladies are always helped first, men next, with hostess and host last.

Each course as finished is removed by a man or maid waiter or waitress; platters with the next course are placed, plates are served as before, and so until dessert is reached. The last is the placing of finger bowls, each in its small plate, with doily beneath, directly in front of each guest. Where less formality is observed help is often dismissed when fruit and coffee are on the table, with the finger bowls already in place, and so the genial conversation of congenial people may go on until time to adjourn to plazza or lawn.

The Russian Service.

The Russian table service is different. There is nothing to be seen on the table when the guests seat themselves but relishes, nuts and olives, bonbons, etc. Food is served either from the pantry or from a side table, where the carving is done. Sometimes only a meat and one vegetable are on the plate served thus, the waitress handing other foods in their respective dishes.

Again, the guests may find empty plates set before them. Then everything is passed in rotation. Where a waitress has been properly trained she will always serve from the left hand, lifting the plate that has been used with the right, while she sets another in its place with her left, so the table is never without plates until it is to be cleared of crumbs and made ready for dessert.

A Butler's Assistant.

A rule in serving in English style that needs attention is to be careful not to overcrowd dishes. A "butler's assistant" may be used where the hostess has not enough help. It is a small piece of furniture that stands at the left of the hostess bearing many little articles that are likely to be needed, such as extra knives and forks, spoons, saucers, cream pitcher, etc.

The handsome pitcher and glasses to match for iced tea, with long handled spoons, may be placed upon this useful table as well as the after dinner coffee service, with bowl for hot water, cream jug and sugar dish, spoons and everything but the hot water and coffee pot.

Monogrammed China.

The hostess who entertains largely cannot do better than fill her china cupboard with handsome monogrammed sets. In no other way is one's individuality so marked, and, while not any more expensive, there is an air of exclusiveness about such china that goes far toward making a success of any formal affair where a table is to be filled with distinguished guests.

Perhaps of all offered, the gold and white china, with gold monogram, is the most to be desired. There is an air of refinement about such a set that no tinted ware, however delicate or expensive, carries. This refers, of course, only to the tableware. For candlesticks, pitchers and the many small pieces for decorating as well as for their usefulness Limoges, Dresden, Sevres and all the charming makes will always be in demand.

Drilling the Waitress.

One, if not the first, rule to be learned by the enzertaining hostess is that it is better to spend a few hours in drilling a waitress into the routine of proper serving than to pass the hour or more at luncheon or dinner directing with unconcealed nods and whispers what to do next and how.

A hostess whose entertaining left nothing to be desired said she took the trouble when engaging a new waitress to have a table set and the process of serving courses gone through exactly as if guests were present. Thus the girl became entirely at ease, and everything went perfectly on such occasions.

Removing Crumbs.

The once much used crumb tray and brush have been discarded for the better way of taking off crumbs by means of a soft folded napkin into a small tray or plate where the table is bare. When covered with a tablecloth a silver crumb knife is better. This latter mode is much neater than the old way of brushing. In no case now is a brush used.

PRUNING ROSES.

After the blooming season of climbing roses is over in June the department's landscape gardener advises that shoots should be pruned so as to throw the growth of the plant into the new wood that bore no flowers this year, for this is the part of the plant that will bear next year. When a trellis is low, six or eight feet high, it is a good plan to cut off the shoots that have borne flowers this year to the ground. Climbing roses are a valuable aid in making an attractive home and will repay careful treatment.

Most people in following this advice may feel that they are ruining their bushes to cut them back so severely, but the young shoots that have started about the roots will surprise them by springing up with wonderful rapidity. Each bush will probably put forth several new shoots that will grow as long as those cut or one shoot will grow much longer. In either case the trellis will soon be covered again. One shoot in a Washington garden last year grew 20 feet after the bush had been cut out in this manner.

In the case of a high trellis a different method must be followed. The renewal of wood must begin from a point higher up instead of from the root, as the growth of a bush is not enough to replace all its top on a high trellis if required to grow so far. Only so much of the old wood should be removed after the flowers have bloomed as will enable the new shoots from the end of the remaining portion of the stalk to replace the old growth. About four feet is a safe measure of the amount that may be taken off.

Those who have grown climbing roses as a screen on their porches, in order to insure a fine bloom the coming year, will do well to follow the advice given for the higher trellis. In other words about four feet of the old stalks that have bloomed should be cut off immediately after the blossoms are withered. The foliage will recover within a very short time and continue to screen the porch and next year an abundant crop of blossoms will be assured.

WOLLASTON UNION SERVICES.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

RUBBER GAME NECESSARY

Yesterday afternoon at Ward Two playgrounds at the Quincy Point slug ball team defeated the South Quincy girls in a game full of fine plays and excitement. The South Quincy team had beaten the Ward Two girls last week by a big score, and they made the trip to the Point with the idea of making it two straight victories.

The score was not large being 20 to 4, the extra length of the base being responsible for the small number of runs made. Undoubtedly the long base was quite a handicap to the visiting team but it is a question if they would have won anyway for the Ward Two team put up a great fielding and kicking game.

Violet Tucker made home especially good long drives and was responsible for several of the runs. Dorothy Cain did the best fielding of the game when she made a dandy running catch of a fly ball, and then ran over to the base and tagged out a Ward Three runner for a "double play."

Ward Three played well in the field in the fifth inning when with only one out and four on the base, they prevented any scoring.

This victory for Ward Two gives each team a game and the rubber game will be the big feature of the final day exercises on August 27.

NEWSY BRIEFS

The Registrars of Voters meet to night to certify nomination papers.

Very few deaths have been reported in Quincy this month.

Rev. A. G. Sporrong has returned from the Northfield conference.

Are not the local churches making a big mistake in their failure to announce Sunday Services?

Post 15, G. A. R. band will give another concert at Houghs Neck Sunday afternoon from 3 to 5 o'clock.

The Sunday evening service of the Swedish Congregational church will be omitted.

The Finnish society of Quincy is at Maynard today as guests at the grand field day of the Tarmo and Kanto athletic club. Other clubs are represented.

Massachusetts Horticultural Society is holding its annual exhibition at Horticultural Hall today and Sunday, from 12 to 6 and from 2 to 6 P. M. respectively.

The row of large bright lights in front of the new Kincaide block on the easterly side of Hancock street, makes that section resemble a great white way at night.

Judge Avery of the district court is away for a two weeks vacation. During his absence Judge Pratt will preside. Judge Avery however will come on the bench next week to finish up the hearing in the Vaughn case.

T. A. Winsloe of the Wollaston Centre garage has been in Kenosha, Wis., this week for the annual convention of Jeffery dealers from all parts of the country. They were royally entertained. Racine and other cities were visited.

Sergt. John T. Larkin of the Police department is the guest of friends in Holyoke, and cards received this morning state he is having a fine time. Before resuming duty Sergt. Larkin will renew acquaintances in the western part of the state. During his absence John Holloran is in charge of the desk.

The temperature at noon today crawled up to the 83 point, which marks the hottest day at noon thus far this month. Coupled with the warm temperature is a high humidity which makes the air very oppressive. The hottest August day in 1913 was on Aug. 14, when the noon temperature registered 90 degrees.

SALUTED BY A SONG.

Jenny Lind's Graceful Tribute to Our National Flag.

There is a pretty story told of the honor Jenny Lind once paid to the American flag. It was when she was in New York, more than sixty years ago. The frigate St. Lawrence had just returned from a cruise, and the midshipmen went to hear the Swedish nightingale sing at Castle Garden theater, and the next day they called on her in a body. Their enthusiasm and her graciousness soon brought about a visit to the ship and the acceptance of a luncheon tendered her. When she was about to leave the ship she looked up at the stars and stripes and said:

"I wish to salute your flag."

So, standing on the gangway, she sang "The Star Spangled Banner." Silently from all over the ship men gathered with uncovered heads until the ship's family were all assembled on deck. Nor were they her only audience, for borne upon the still air her song had been heard by many other vessels near by, and when the wondrous voice ceased steamers blew their whistles and exultant cheers rose from all sides, filling the harbor with their tribute of applause for the beloved artist and of loyal reverence for the flag she had so beautifully saluted.—Rehoboth Sunday Herald.

Cliffs of Dover.

The Dover cliffs are being steadily eaten away every year. In 1900 thousands of tons of chalk fell from Shakespeare cliff, and three years previously there was a fall during which the coastguard's watchhouse at the summit was buried into the waves.

MILTON

Chief of Police Maurice Pierce is at Brant Rock on his annual vacation. During his absence Deputy McDermitt is in charge.

As a result of a hearing given by the Selectmen to Officer James A. Walsh, against whom charges of neglect of duty were preferred by Chief Pierce, the Selectmen have requested the officer to hand in his resignation. Walsh has been a member of the police department for five years.

The Selectmen are constructing a cross town road, so as to relieve the congested automobile traffic through the town.

Ernest Choate, of East Milton, superintendent of wires, is having his annual vacation.

Miss Edith Cross of Belcher circle has returned from a visit to Belgrade, Maine.

Collective.

At a regular mass meeting of the Scandinavians in South Minneapolis a few nights since, the pastor having heard that Capt. John Johnson wanted to join the church, said, "Will John Johnson, if present, please stand up?" Nearly all the men present stood up. The bewildered preacher looked around awhile, and then said: "You may sit down, Mr. Johnson, I will call a meeting of you some time next week."

Great Tide of Sympathy Over Death of Mrs. Wilson

CROWNED HEADS AND HUMBLE

Send Messages Which Lighten Grief of President and Family—First Lady of the Land Had Made Many Friends In Slums and Alleys—Will Be Buried In Old Home

Washington, Aug. 8.—Humble hands raised the pall of grief from the White House. The American people, poor and rich, lowly and prominent, in the death of Mrs. Wilson, wife of the president, made his mourning their own.

In the flood tide of sympathy which engulfed the White House came spontaneous messages from hundreds of humble homes. With messages of condolence from crowned heads of Europe, financial and other powers here and abroad, the cabinet and officialdom, came flowers and messages of sympathy from slums and alleys of the capital, where Mrs. Wilson had made many friends in her efforts to aid the poverty stricken and friendless.

Funeral services for Mrs. Wilson will be held Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the White House in the historic East Room, where, only a few months ago, she witnessed the marriage of her daughter Jessie to Francis B. Sayre. The interment will be Tuesday afternoon at Rome, Ga., where Mrs. Wilson spent many of her girlhood days, and where her mother and father are buried.

Myrtle Hill cemetery, at Rome, a beautiful shaded spot, will be the final resting place of the wife of the president. Many telegrams were received at the White House from girlhood friends of Mrs. Wilson expressing their sympathy and hoping that she might "be brought back home."

The president and his three daughters bore up well under their bereavement. In the White House mansion, denying themselves to visitors, they were alone with their dead. The hush of death placed a seal of silence upon the former home of the "first lady of the land."

Flags at half-mast and closed gates mutely testified to the loss of the wife of the chief executive and mother of his family.

A stream of carriages with callers bringing cards of condolence filed up to the executive offices. Floral tributes were numerous. White House telegraphers were swamped under messages of sympathy.

The president was more affected yesterday than Thursday and his nervous condition was worse. His sleep was induced by a sedative ordered by Dr. Grayson, because of the shattered state of his nerves.

Professor Stockton Axson, Mrs. Wilson's brother, is expected here today or tomorrow and plans for the services will then be completed.

The White House engagement list was cancelled indefinitely.

Symbols of bereavement at the White House were a plain crepe bow fastened on the main door of the mansion, under the main portico, and policemen, wearing bits of crepe on their sleeves, silently patrolling the entrance. Silent crowds gazed with saddened faces through the fences about the mansion.

The president expressed the desire that the funeral rites be the simplest possible. He spent a few minutes in his office clearing up urgent business, but the rest of the time he remained with his daughters.

The president sent direct word to the leaders of senate and house and the heads of the government departments that it was his wish that the regular business continue and that the lowering of the flags to half-mast be the only public recognition of Mrs. Wilson's death. He was desirous that congress continue in session without interruption.

WAR USED AS PLEA

Counsel For Jack Johnson Says Pugilist Cannot Leave France

Chicago, Aug. 8.—That he was unable to leave France because of the war was the plea made in behalf of Jack Johnson, the prize fighter, when forfeiture of his $15,000 bond was asked.

Johnson, convicted of violation of the white slave act, was at liberty under bond pending appeal, when he fled to France. The court ruled that unless a new bond is furnished within twenty days the old one will be forfeited.

Historian Tells of Mishap to Locomotive "Quincy" Which Attempted to Jump Open Drawbridge

So Great Was the Speed That She Dropped Only Four Feet

W. A. Hazelboom is writing for the Hingham Journal "The romance of the railroads in the land of the Pilgrims." Part one recalls an incident which took place in Quincy in October, 1846, when a locomotive attempted to jump the opening in the railroad drawbridge over the Neponset river, and plunged into the water. The story follows:

Traversing through the heart of Norfolk County in Massachusetts and down to the memorable town of Plymouth, the lines of the famous Old Colony Railroad can be truly said to have been cast in most hallowed as well as picturesque and pleasant places, the domain of the Pilgrims and diversified shores of Boston Bay, where the wondrous beauty of the land blends delightful with the glory of the sea.

No railroad ever occupied a more attractive setting, and on the other hand no other road could claim an existence more historically applicable to its unique surroundings than the Old Colony Railroad in its fifty years association with this venerated section of the Old Bay State.

From the outset historic names were given to the company's locomotives, and the custom was faithfully adhered to until about 1884 when commercialism banished sentiment and the engines began to be designated by numbers only.

OPENING IN 1845.

The inauguration jubliee of the railroad November 8th, 1845, was also a commemoration of the landing of the Forefathers, while the celebration held on that day in Pilgrim Hall, Plymouth brought together a representative group of famous men which rendered the occasion one of the most notable in the railroad annals of New England.

A copy of the descriptive list of locomotives owned by the Old Colony Railroad, published in December, 1849 gives the weights, dimensions, mileage and also the cherished historical and local names which gave these picturesque machines an individuality and popularity recalled with pleasure to this day among old time residents and railroaders in the great Old Colony region. Aside from the names the engines were also interesting in their odd shapes and variety of design nearly every firm of locomotive builders in New England in those days being represented in the list:

Names.	Wheels.	Weight
Dorchester	12	53,300
Plymouth	12	56,400
Kingston	8	36,500
John Quincy Adams	8	41,600
Mayflower	8	44,600
Patuxet	8	34,800
Abington	8	38,500

Comet, A light English Engine

The first locomotive, the Comet, built in England, was purchased second hand, and used in constructing the road through Quincy in 1844-45. Then came the Mayflower, Miles Standish, Gov. Carver and Gov. Bradford, which were exactly alike, each having a single pair of driving wheels

CALAMITY CORNER CRASH

Autos Come Together at Washington and Canal Streets

Again early Sunday evening there was an automobile collision at the junction of Washington and Canal streets. The auto of John McLennan of Liberty square came out of Canal street and attempted to cross into Revere road, but at the same time the auto of Joseph J. Eagan of 71 Fletcher street, Roslindale, came down the hill from the Universalist church. There was a side on collision, the McLennan auto turning to the right, narrowly escaped a tree and landed in the middle of the lawn of the Hardwick estate, while the Eagan auto turned into Revere road.

In each auto were four or five persons, but the only one injured was Mrs. Eagan, who had her hand jammed. No physician was summoned. The mud guards on both cars were damaged, but they were soon able to proceed home.

Officer Taylor who is on duty at this corner had been called to Elm street, and had but just returned. He says Eagan was proceeding slowly.

It will be necessary to put signs at the top of both hills on Washington street, notifying automobilists of the cross street at the foot of the hill, and also on Canal street to "run slowly."

HEATING AND VENTILATING

Commissioner Brown has awarded the contract for the heating and ventilating of the four-room addition to the Atherton Hough school at Houghs Neck to the Stone-Underhill Co. of Boston, of which firm ex-Mayor Eugene R. Stone is a member. The bid of this firm was a little larger than one of the other bidders, but when the plans came to be examined it was found that everything considered the difference in price between the Stone-Underhill Co. and the low bidder was about $1. The bid therefore was awarded to the firm of which a resident is a member. It might be added that in submitting bids for heating and ventilating each firm submits its own plan of a lay out.

Q. Y. C. LADIES NIGHT.

The Boston Philharmonic Orchestra will return to the Quincy Yacht Club Wednesday evening after on absence of several seasons. As is well known this orchestra is made up of prominent members of the Boston Opera and a very enjoyable program has been prepared.

The program includes, besides the orchestral numbers contralto solos and arias by Helen Rumsey Smith, a very successful New York contralto who has now settled in Boston and a group of Breton songs in the vernacular by Gwenn Avec. Mlle. Avec is a very fine actress, first telling her stories and then singing them.

The whole program is a most artistic one, and one that will undoubtedly please all who hear it. After the concert there will be modern dance music provided for those who enjoy dancing. Special cars will be run.

CITY SQUARE ACCIDENT.

Mrs. Mary L. Hart of the parkway at West Quincy, a sister of Robert Teasdale, started Sunday afternoon by electrics to visit friends in Hingham. In the rush in City Square to get onto the Nantasket car she was knocked down by a man who did not stop to offer assistance. Mrs. Hart went on the car as far as Quincy Point, but was too sick to go farther and returned home. It was then found that one rib had been fractured.

IN MEMORY OF MRS. WILSON.

Acting Mayor Crane ordered that City Hall close this afternoon between 2 and 2.30 during the hour of the funeral of Mrs. Wilson, wife of the President at Washington. Burial will be at Rome, Georgia.

TELEPHONE CABLE BURNED

Sunday Morning Fire on the Neponset Bridge

The alarm from Box 61, followed immediately by an alarm from Box 62 at 10.26 Sunday morning, was for a lively fire on the Neponset bridge. The fire evidently started in a telephone cable box on the Quincy side of the draw and worked along beneath the bridge burning over a space on the east side for about 40 feet. When the Quincy department arrived at the bridge they found two steamers from Boston at work, having been called by an alarm sounded on that side of the bridge.

The fire was for the most part under the bridge and was a most difficult one to get at. It was necessary for the firemen to secure a boat and fight the fire from the water. Fortunately the tide was coming in at the time or it would have been difficult to get near the fire. It required an hour or more of hard work before the fire was out and necessitated ripping up some of the planking on the street side of the bridge closing it to public travel for a time. The street cars were also tied up and passengers had to walk across the bridge.

As soon as the fire was under control the Street department was notified and General Foreman Heaney gathered a force of men and set them at work making repairs.

All of the telephone cables containing the through wires between Quincy and Boston were burned off at the cable box. The Telephone company also sent out a large gang of men and before many hours the through lines were in working order again.

ELECTRIC CARS BUMP.

Two electric cars bumped at the church turnout at Houghs Neck Saturday afternoon and three passengers were slightly injured. The accident occurred when a car operated by Leo Sullivan got beyond his control and struck a car operated by William Gomez. The front of one car was dented. There was but litle excitement among passengers when it occurred.

ANOTHER CHECK SENT TO SALEM

Quincy's Grand Total Was Over Three Thousand Dollars

Clarence Burgin, the treasurer of the Quincy fund for Salem relief, today sent another check for $292.48, which swells Quincy's public subscriptions to $2,192.48.

In addition to this, the fraternal organizations and the Catholic churches sent about $1000, so that Quincy's contribution in cash was over $3,000. Quincy people also contributed to the Boston fund and were tagged in other towns.

LENSON—BISSON.

Robert H. Lenson of St. Louis, Mo., chief yeoman on the torpedo boat destroyer Duncan which is at the Charlestown navy yard, and Miss Margaret Bisson of Gay street, were married Saturday evening. The only ones present at the ceremony were Mr. and Mrs. Chester Roupes of Wollaston. Miss Bisson was one of the most popular young ladies of this city She is employed at the Boston office of the N. E. T. & T. Co. She became engaged to Mr. Lenson while the Duncan was undergoing repairs at the Fore River shipyard preparatory to its leaving for Mexican waters.

STOLEN AUTO RECOVERED.

A Ford auto, stolen from the Quincy Beef Co. premises on Dimmock street, was recovered in Boston Saturday night. The machine was taken early in the evening and was abandoned near Cedar Grove cemetery. A short distance away the body of a suicide was found. The coincidence made it appear that the man who had stolen the machine had committed suicide, but it was afterward learned that such was not the case. The machine was brought back to Quincy.

MERCHANT MARINE.

A table prepared showing a list of the shipyards on the Atlantic coast and their capacities where an American marine fleet could be built states that the Fore River plant at Quincy is fully equipped and could turn out from 6 to 7 vessels per year from 300 to 500 feet in length of a gross tonage of from 4,000 to 5,000. The most of the shipyards are only capable of building from 2 to 4 vessels a year.

QUINCY FIREMEN ANSWER WALPOLE CALL

Make the Distance of Twenty Miles in Less Than Fifty Minutes

$250,000 Fire at Mill of F. W. Bird & Son

A call for assistance from Walpole was received by Chief Billings shortly after 3 o'clock, Sunday, and an out-of-town call was sounded from Box 158 at 3.20. Chief Billings started in his car followed by the auto chemical from the Central station. The auto chemical at Atlantic was called to the Central station to cover in, and a relief hose wagon was sent to the Atlantic station, so that during the absence of the apparatus the districts were well covered in case of a fire.

The big auto pump at the Fore River shipyard was also notified, and they were quick to respond. Chief Billings waited at the Central station until the auto pump arrived and all three pieces of apparatus started at the same time. The distance is estimated at about 20 miles and the route taken was Adams street to Milton, Dedham and Norwood. The distance was covered in about 50 minutes

The big auto pump was immediately put to work, their lines being manned by the Quincy firemen. The auto chemical did not lay any hose the men working on the auto pump. Chief Billings returned to Quincy with the auto chemical, arriving home about 6.30, at which time a recall was sounded. The auto pump however remained on the scene at work and it was after 11 o'clock before it passed through Quincy on the way to its quarters at the shipyard.

The call sent to Quincy was in order to get a pumping machine as the pumps at the mill which had been in use all day gave out. The fire was in the paper mill of F. W. Bird & Son of which Charles Sumner Bird, the Progressive candidate for Governor for the past two years, is the president. The loss is estimated at $250,000.

It was but a few minutes after 3 o'clock when Chief Billings received a telephone message from Walpole stating that the big pumps at the Bird Mill were giving out, and asking if he could arrange to have the Fore River auto pump sent out. Chief Billings immediately got into communication with the Fore River and learned that Mr. Houghton the manager was out of town. The assistant manager was reached, however, and he immediately got a crew together and started. Secretary MacQuarrie accompanied the apparatus and took charge on its arrival until Mr. Houghton arrived, which was shortly after 5 o'clock. The auto pump did efficient service until late in the evening.

BICYCLE ACCIDENT.

A morning paper reports that Luigi Neres of 723 Independence avenue, while crossing South Braintree Square Sunday afternoon, was run into by a man on a bicycle who gave his name as Antonio Rantori of Granite street, Braintree. Mr. Neres was carrying his 4 1-2 year old child in his arms at the time of the accident and the child received the brunt of the blow. All three fell together and the child was unconscious when picked up by Officer Philip Krohn. The injured parties were attended by Dr. F. R. Dame who found that the child had a bad bruise on the stomach but that no bones were broken. After receiving medical treatment Mr. Neres and his child were able to go home in an electric car.

PROUD OF RECORD.

Ex-Commodore Ira M. Whittemore, owner and skipper of the Dartwell, arrived from Marblehead Sunday where he has been participating in the weeks racing. When seen at City Hall he said that he felt pretty chesty, and the reason was that he went to Marblehead after the first prize in his class and he got it. It was a handsome ships clock.

BUY FLOUR IN BAGS

During the past week or so there has been an unprecedented demand for flour. Prices everywhere have gone skyward. War in Europe is of course the cause given. Really it's simply speculation. No Flour is being exported and the mills are running full blast. A bumper wheat crop is being harvested. We believe flour will be selling soon at much lower prices and advise our customers to buy bags rather than barrels just now. And please note,—our Present Prices are 10 to 15 cents lower than Boston Stores are quoting. Here they are

Dusty Rhodes must give the farming county a wide berth nowadays, or he may get a job harvesting.

The young folks home from college have at least learned that the way to keep cool is to sit in the shade and watch Dad hoe the garden.

Although people often get sunstrokes in a shady office, they can usually play baseball, tennis, or golf out in an open field.

Some people think it is really shocking if a woman wears a skirt that displays her boots.

Although the only son of the illustrious John Hancock died at the age of nine years, a Boston paper reports that the last lineal descendant of the patriot died in Denver on Sunday.

Although Boston, Brockton and other cities are nearer Walpole than is Quincy, the good work of Quincy firemen and the Fore River auto engine are known for many miles, and they received the call on Sunday. It was the longest run the Quincy fire apparatus ever made. Best of all our firemen were able to render some assistance.

FRUITS AND VEGETABLES.

A good deal of skill must be called for in the provision trade, to handle fruits and vegetables. These goods are of the most transient character, all right today, tomorrow unsalable. The dealer who attempts to work off slightly spoiled material on his customers will lose his trade. The goods keep growing worse. By the time they are eaten, they are worthless, and the resolution is made not to patronize again, the man that sold them.

Fortunately newspaper advertising furnishes the way by which these products can be quickly turned. The prices of all food products have been high, and people scan the newspapers closely to see who is offering special bargains. A low price, and assurance that the article is in good condition, will bring a swarm of buyers.

Other kinds of goods can be carried over, and the loss will be only partial. If fruits and vegetables are not sold promptly, the loss is complete. A few dollars spent on advertising will save hundreds of dollars of losses.

SUMMER READING.

The production of literature to be read on the piazza in summer hotels and cottages, and in railroad trains, is a business by itself. In former years, every railroad news stand was covered with a very extensive assortment of novels. These ranged from the latest lovey-dovey wish-wash, up to a few books by good writers like Dickens and Tackeray. Today, newspapers and magazines seem to be getting the bulk of this summer trade.

There is a popular tradition that only light literature will sell in summer. As a matter of fact, most people read about the same kind of thing in summer that they do in winter. If a man is interested in the vital things of human progress, he does not descend from strong meat to spoon food merely because the thermometer may rise to 90.

That is why for the intelligent man, the average news counter in a railroad station is a dreary place. The principal things that strike his eye are the coarsely printed pictures of women done in colors, with about as much taste as you would find in a circus poster. These are a fair index of the contents of the paper novels and magazines whose covers they decorate. These contain sweetly sentimental and sugary stories of the loves of Jack and Edythe. This style of writing may appeal to some people, but the demand for them is not so large as some people think.

The newspaper and magazines sections of the book-stalls seem to be crowding out the books. There is a reason. The newspapers, even though sensational, tell about real life. Many of the magazines do too. They are reports of actual human experiences and achievements. The sentimental novel is an unhealthy compound of sex and suggestion. Compared with the newspaper, it is like the tepid artificial atmosphere of a hot-house as against the outdoors world of real life.

STORIES OF LIEGE FIGHT DISAGREE

But City Is Believed to Be in Hands of Germans

APPARENTLY WAITING FOR RE-ENFORCEMENTS

Report of Fall of Belgian City and Capture of Thousands of Prisoners Causes Much Perturbation In London—Great Battle Between German and Belgian Armies Believed Imminent—Belgians' Position Strengthened by Methodical Advance of French Army to Aid Them—Luxemburg Said to Have Been Cleared of Invaders—French In Alsace

London, Aug. 10.—The occupation of Liege by the German forces is confirmed in dispatches received here from Brussels this morning.

The reports that Liege had been taken by the Germans apparently were confirmed by dispatches received from Berlin Sunday, although advices coming from Belgian, French and British sources maintained that the forts there still were in the hands of King Albert's men.

An official dispatch issued by the Belgian general staff said the advanced German troops were being pushed back and that the German offensive movement had ceased.

A dispatch from Copenhagen says the Germans continue to issue affirmations that they have captured Liege. The Germans apparently are waiting for re-enforcements to come up with which they may flank the Belgian position, probably toward Huy, to the southeast of Liege on the route to Namur. Huy is defended by a single fort which is well armed and dominates the town of Huy and the bridge and the roads to Namur and Liege.

Contradictory Reports

"The position of the German troops has hardly changed since Saturday. Their advanced detachments are retreating under the irresistible pressure of the French troops, who are in considerable force in all the country south of the Meuse, which they are clearing of German troops. The enemy's offensive movement has been completely stopped. The French and Belgian troops will take the offensive simultaneously in accordance with concerted plans."

The discrepancy between the Belgian and German reports on the situation at Liege is believed by military men in London to be accounted for by the retreat of the Belgian troops which had held the routes between the forts and that the town of Liege has been taken by the Germans, who continue to advance on a line between Huy and Louvain, leaving part of their army to besiege the Liege forts.

London Is Disturbed

Much perturbation was caused in London by reports from German sources of the fall of Liege and the capture of thousands of prisoners.

Dispatches spoke of a review of the defenders of the city of Liege by King Albert, but did not say where the king reviewed them. The troops reviewed by the king apparently were, in the opinion of London people, the field army which had been operating at Liege and which was reported as leaving the city to join King Albert's army, the reason given being that the forts of the city were considered able to take care of themselves against the German forces.

Dispatches from Berlin from the semi-official agency there were positive in their statements that "Liege is in our hands and 3000 or 4000 Belgian prisoners are en route to Germany."

Reports from the Belgian minister of war, stating that there had been enormous losses during the fighting between the French and Germans in lower Alsace, stated that the German's had lost 30,000 killed and wounded and the French 15,000, but it was later explained that these reports were based on unofficial advices received at the Belgian ministry of war.

Great Battle Imminent

The object of the German advance through Liege is believed to be Namur on their left flank and Louvain on their right flank. If this position is correct, military men believe a great battle is imminent between the German and Belgian armies, the latter probably being re-enforced by British and French allies.

Belgian official reports received at the war office in Brussels record the important fact that a junction has been effected by Belgian, British and French troops across the line of the German advance through Belgium. The location of the troops of the three armies was not revealed, but in any future operations it is understood they will act together.

The sighting of a German cavalry patrol to the south of Namur was evidence of the activity of the German forces in Luxemburg, showing that they were reconnoitering to discover the position of the defending armies.

The retirement of the German troops out of range of the guns of the forts of Liege was supposed to indicate that they were concentrating and waiting for re-enforcements to renew the attack.

Belgian Army Strengthened

In the meantime the French troops who have crossed the frontiers of Belgium continue to advance methodically, and their approach strengthens the position of the Belgian army from hour to hour. A French officer arrived at Namur in an automobile Sunday and the populace hoisted him on their shoulders and carried him through the streets.

It was reported that the greater part of Luxemburg, which had been occupied by the Germans, had been cleared of the invaders by the advance of the French army.

In the Belgian capital patriotic sentiment increases daily and men of all classes are volunteering for service in the army.

It is reported that the German commanders hitherto have pushed to the front the regiments from Hanover and Mecklenburg, keeping the Prussian regiments in reserve, as they did in the war of 1870.

Troops In Good Spirits

All the Belgian troops sent to the front have displayed excellent spirits, while many of the soldiers wounded at Liege have asked to be sent to rejoin their regiments as soon as their wounds have been healed. Confidence that the final outcome of the war will be victory for the Belgians is general in Brussels.

A dispatch to the Central News from Brussels says there has not been a moment's armistice and that 100,000 rifles of the latest pattern have fallen into the hands of the Belgians.

GERMAN GARRISONS RETIRE

France Is Elated by Her Troops' Invasion of Lower Alsace

The invasion of lower Alsace by a French army under the command of General Joffre, the French commander-in-chief, has awakened great enthusiasm throughout France.

French military authorities, while recognizing that the occupation of Altkirch and Mulhausen by the French troops is not of high strategical importance, believe that the successful advance of the French army far across the German frontier will have considerable moral effect.

It is also unofficially reported that Colmar, farther to the north, has fallen into the hands of the French. None of these three places was strongly fortified, and all of them lie outside the line of real German defense, being regarded as outposts of the strongly fortified cities.

Their German garrisons were numerically fairly streng, but it was understood that in case of attack they would merely endeavor to hinder the French advance before falling back onto their supports.

Official reports of the fighting between the French and German troops state that the French losses were "not excessive," while those of the Germans are declared by the French to have been "very serious."

The Alsatian inhabitants are said to have been so overjoyed at the appearance of the French army that they tore up the frontier posts.

Montenegro's declaration of war against Austria was expected. The only surprise is that it did not occur more promptly, for the Montenegrins are a race of warriors, always ready to rush to arms. They are an offshoot of the Servian branch of the Slavic race, and will stand side by side with Servia in her efforts to reclaim Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Physically speaking they are among the largest and finest people of Europe, drawing strength from their mountain environment. Every man physically fitted is trained as a soldier and they have toward their prince the loyalty of clansmen for their chief. Although the whole country covers only a few thousand square miles, it may be expected to prove a powerful force in this war, as it did in the Balkan disturbances.

PORTUGAL WITH ENGLAND

Officially Announces She Will Stand by an Ancient Treaty

Many years ago a treaty was drawn up and signed by England and Portugal providing that the latter country, in case of necessity, would provide 10,000 soldiers to aid Britain.

Portugal, officially at least, holds to the ancient treaty. The government's attitude in the European crisis was outlined by Premier Machado, who, before parliament, declared that the little republic, formerly a monarchy, should place herself unconditionally on the side of England.

"According to our alliance," said Machado, "we have duties which we in no way fail to realize. Portugal should without question range herself on the side of England."

Amid enthusiastic cheering, the premier's suggestion that Portugal support England was passed. Warships were ordered to prepare at once for a cruise along the coast. Foreign shipping in Portuguese ports have been notified to remove wireless installation. The war office has ordered partial mobilization.

WARSAW NOT CAPTURED

Said to Be Able to Withstand Siege For Many Months

The report that the Germans have occupied Warsaw is denied at St. Petersburg. Warsaw is strongly fortified and has a large garrison in times of peace which has been considerably augmented since mobilization. Quite apart from outside aid, Warsaw could stand a siege for many months.

The small German airship Parseval, of the unrigid type, was riddled with shot and brought to the ground near Czostochova. Two German officers and two navigators were killed.

Brussels has been turned into a vast hospital. Hotels, private houses and public institutions have been placed at the disposition of the Red Cross society.

It was a profoundly moving sight when the first contingent of wounded arrived in Brussels from Liege. Save for occasional murmers of sympathy the onlookers were hushed, but now and then the sobs of women broke the silence.

GREAT BRITAIN CALM

Loss of Amphion Regarded as Regretable but Not Unexpected

The spirit in which the British people are taking the war has found expression in their acceptance of their first misfortune, the loss of the cruiser Amphion, with 136 men.

In a lesser conflict it would have been mourned as a disaster; it is regarded as a regrettable but not unexpected incident. The papers accord the matter neither the largest headlines nor extend expressions of regret.

"ONLY DID HER DUTY"

Carnegie Says Stand Taken by Great Britain Is Correct

Andrew Carnegie, in response to an appeal urging him to join in the protest against Great Britain's participation in the war, says that protest today is useless and that the German emperor, by refusing to listen to Great Britain's peaceful conference, has became the chief destroyer as the war lord of Europe. He goes on:

"I believe the emperor knew not what he did when he refused Great Britain's olive branch of peace and now mourns over the error.

"I feel that Great Britain only did her duty when she promptly refused Germany's proposal to be permitted to invade Belgium to attack France.

FRANCONIA SETS SAIL

But 156 Passengers on Big Cunarder When She Leaves Boston

Boston, Aug. 10.—Thrice balked in sailing plans by uncertain conditions abroad the Cunard line steamer Franconia finally sailed out of Boston for Liverpool.

She carried an ordinary cargo of general merchandise—ordinary for this season of the year—but her passenger list was extraordinary, in that it was one of the smallest in the latter day history of the Cunard line.

Only eight saloon passengers were aboard and only fifty-four souls were quartered in the second cabins, while in the steerage there were but ninety-four—a total of 156.

INADEQUATE CAR SERVICE

People Fight as if Mad to Get Seats

Editor Daily Ledger:

Yesterday, as on previous Sundays, the Bay State Street Railway Company failed to furnish enough cars to properly accommodate the people who desired to return from Nantasket beach.

About 5.30 two cars arrived and before the seats could be turned were taken possession of by men and women whose fear of getting left made them act as if mad. There were enough intending passengers left behind to easily fill two more cars. In the fulness of time, two more cars started for Neponset under even worse conditions. A large number were left behind who were either unwilling or unable to fight their way to seats.

At Hingham we passed two ladies from Quincy on foot. They had evidently despaired of getting a seat from this public service corporation. On the running board of my car I counted at one time 17 passengers and there were nine passengers standing between the seats.

Four times the conductor made the running board passengers move from one side of the car to the other to escape danger from poles and passing automobiles. By the way the conductor, was a polite and clever fellow. Conditions on the other car appeared to be about the same.

At several places in Weymouth and Quincy other people wanted to board the cars, but were derisively told by passengers that there was "standing room only." There wasn't even standing room. I had to stand on one foot practically all the way from Nantasket to City Square. I never witnessed such wretchedly poor service, although I have been riding on street cars for many years. Four fares were collected just the same.

It would be interesting to know what President Sullivan and those associated with him are thinking of in this connection. Do they suppose this kind of treatment will be borne by the public indefinitely? Do they consider it better policy to squeeze by than to give satisfaction? Just why don't they send enough cars to Nantasket to bring back passengers under decent conditions? Why are the cars that leave City Square for Boston every Sunday evening during the summer packed beyond reason?

While I don't sign my name for publication Mr. Editor, you are hereby authorized to give it to the street railway officials or any body else who may ask for it.

IT IS SAID ABOUT QUINCY

That politics is at the bottom of all this hot air over Supt. Vaughn of the Quincy Home.

That the case has been hanging fire over three months now.

That the end is not yet in sight.

That all of these hearings is costing somebody some money.

That the present administration was supposed to be one of economy.

That the expenditure of $300 or $400 simply to get one man out of office is hardly an economical proposition.

That it was hardly fair to try and bring a young woman into the case.

That no one knows how Judge Avery may decide the case.

That should his finding be for Mr. Vaughn the city will have a fine bill to pay.

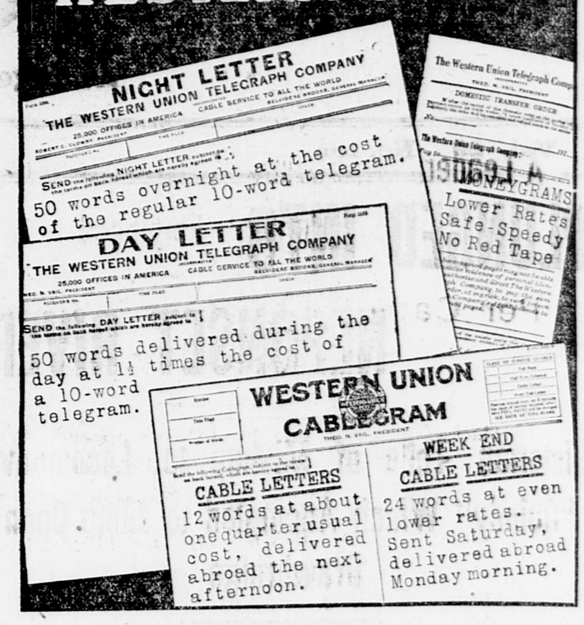

That the city would have to pay him for his services from April 27 to date.

That the $300 or $400 it has already cost the city may be swelled to nearly $1,000.

That to repeat, this was supposed to be an economical administration.

and a leading four wheel truck. The Mayflower had been sold to a railroad in northern New York state previous to the publication of this list and an engine bearing the same name built by John Souther in March, 1849.

LOCOMOTIVE QUINCY.

In April, 1846, Hinkley & Drury built a locomotive named Express and placed it upon the Boston & Worcester railroad for trial and storage. This engine had but a single pair of driving wheels six feet in diameter and was evidently intended for high rates of speed. The Old Colony purchased it in September, 1846, renaming it Quincy and on the first day of the following October sent it out on a special run which terminated at the bottom of the Neponset river.

It seems that the mail carrier from Sandwich, Mass., entered the Boston post office on that day and mistaking a mail bag containing letters destined for Liverpool by the steamship "Cambria" for his own charge, carried it down to the Old Colony depot and thence to Plymouth by the morning train.

Thomas M. Pomeroy, the Boston P. O. agent discovered the loss soon afterwards and hastening to the roundhouse at South Boston chartered the "Quincy" and with engineer John Pickering and fireman Manassa Merritt started out in pursuit of the stray mail bag in hopes of getting it back before the Cambria sailed, an arrangement having been made to hold the steamship for a couple of hours.

In those days the Old Colony was a single track road, and with a freight train somewhere out on the line and no telegraph to warn of the approach of an "extra" the progress of the Quincy was frequently delayed and Plymouth was finally reached only to find that the mail bag had been sent down to Sandwich by the stage coach.

AT TERRIFIC SPEED.

Darkness had set in when the Quincy on its return trip with the recovered mail bag passed through her name town at terrific speed and sped out onto "Presidents Curve" leading towards the old drawbridge which spanned Neponset river.

Here dim signal lamps were burning to indicate that the draw was open, but the engineer saw them not or saw them too late as the locomotive rushed on unchecked and plunged into the gap and smashing against the abutments on the opposite side of the draw fell back a wreck into the river.

The men jumped before the crash and were rescued from the dark waters by the crew of the schooner which but a moment before had passed through the open draw, Pomeroy clasping under his arm the luckless mail bag. This he reluctantly surrendered to the Postmaster at Neponset who took it to Boston, but the Cambria was by that time far out at sea.

So great was the speed of the Quincy at the time she reached the draw that in flying in space across 32 feet width of gap she dropped but four feet as shown by the marks on the opposite side where she struck.

The escape of the men from death or serious injury was considered wonderful. They soon recovered from their trying experiences and were about their duties a few days later as if nothing had happened. The wrecked Quincy was taken from the river after much difficulty and was probably reconstructed as an eight wheeler as described in the schedule.

Brussels has been turned into a vast hospital. Hotels, private houses and public institutions have been placed at the disposition of the Red Cross society.

It was a profoundly moving sight when the first contingent of wounded arrived in Brussels from Liege. A vast crowd, bareheaded and bowed in silence, watched the stretchers with their human burdens enter the station of the Red Cross society. Save for occasional murmers of sympathy the onlookers were hushed, but now and then the sobs of women broke the silence.

GREAT BRITAIN CALM

Loss of Amphion Regarded as Regretable but Not Unexpected

The spirit in which the British people are taking the war has found expression in their acceptance of their first misfortune, the loss of the cruiser Amphion, with 136 men.

In a lesser conflict it would have been mourned as a disaster; it is regarded as a regrettable but not unexpected incident. The papers accord the matter neither the largest headlines nor extend expressions of regret.

"ONLY DID HER DUTY"

Carnegie Says Stand Taken by Great Britain Is Correct

Andrew Carnegie, in response to an appeal urging him to join in the protest against Great Britain's participation in the war, says that protest today is useless and that the German emperor, by refusing to listen to Great Britain's peaceful conference, has became the chief destroyer as the war lord of Europe. He goes on:

"I believe the emperor knew not what he did when he refused Great Britain's olive branch of peace and now mourns over the error.

"I feel that Great Britain only did her duty when she promptly refused Germany's proposal to be permitted to invade Belgium to attack France.

FRANCONIA SETS SAIL

But 156 Passengers on Big Cunarder When She Leaves Boston

Boston, Aug. 10.—Thrice balked in sailing plans by uncertain conditions abroad the Cunard line steamer Franconia finally sailed out of Boston for Liverpool.

She carried an ordinary cargo of general merchandise—ordinary for this season of the year—but her passenger list was extraordinary, in that it was one of the smallest in the latter day history of the Cunard line.

Only eight saloon passengers were aboard and only fifty-four souls were quartered in the second cabins, while in the steerage there were but ninety-four—a total of 156.

INADEQUATE CAR SERVICE

People Fight as if Mad to Get Seats

Editor Daily Ledger:

Yesterday, as on previous Sundays, the Bay State Street Railway Company failed to furnish enough cars to properly accommodate the people who desired to return from Nantasket beach.

About 5.30 two cars arrived and before the seats could be turned were taken possession of by men and women whose fear of getting left made them act as if mad. There were enough intending passengers left behind to easily fill two more cars. In the fulness of time, two more cars started for Neponset under even worse conditions. A large number were left behind who were either unwilling or unable to fight their way to seats.

At Hingham we passed two ladies from Quincy on foot. They had evidently despaired of getting a seat from this public service corporation. On the running board of my car I counted at one time 17 passengers and there were nine passengers standing between the seats.

Four times the conductor made the running board passengers move from one side of the car to the other to escape danger from poles and passing automobiles. By the way the conductor, was a polite and clever fellow. Conditions on the other car appeared to be about the same.

At several places in Weymouth and Quincy other people wanted to board the cars, but were derisively told by passengers that there was "standing room only." There wasn't even standing room. I had to stand on one foot practically all the way from Nantasket to City Square. I never witnessed such wretchedly poor service, although I have been riding on street cars for many years. Four fares were collected just the same.

It would be interesting to know what President Sullivan and those associated with him are thinking of in this connection. Do they suppose this kind of treatment will be borne by the public indefinitely? Do they consider it better policy to squeeze by than to give satisfaction? Just why don't they send enough cars to Nantasket to bring back passengers under decent conditions? Why are the cars that leave City Square for Boston every Sunday evening during the summer packed beyond reason?

While I don't sign my name for publication Mr. Editor, you are hereby authorized to give it to the street railway officials or any body else who may ask for it.

Foot Board Passenger.

IT IS SAID ABOUT QUINCY

That politics is at the bottom of all this hot air over Supt. Vaughn of the Quincy Home.

That the case has been hanging fire over three months now.

That the end is not yet in sight.

That all of these hearings is costing somebody some money.

That the present administration was supposed to be one of economy.

That the expenditure of $300 or $400 simply to get one man out of office is hardly an economical proposition.

That it was hardly fair to try and bring a young woman into the case.

That no one knows how Judge Avery may decide the case.

That should his finding be for Mr. Vaughn the city will have a fine bill to pay.

That the city would have to pay him for his services from April 27 to date.

That the $300 or $400 it has already cost the city may be swelled to nearly $1,000.

That to repeat, this was supposed to be an economical administration.

and a leading four wheel truck. The Mayflower had been sold to a railroad in northern New York state previous to the publication of this list and an engine bearing the same name built by John Souther in March, 1849.

LOCOMOTIVE QUINCY.

In April, 1846, Hinkley & Drury built a locomotive named Express and placed it upon the Boston & Worcester railroad for trial and storage. This engine had but a single pair of driving wheels six feet in diameter and was evidently intended for high rates of speed. The Old Colony purchased it in September, 1846, renaming it Quincy and on the first day of the following October sent it out on a special run which terminated at the bottom of the Neponset river.

It seems that the mail carrier from Sandwich, Mass., entered the Boston post office on that day and mistaking a mail bag containing letters destined for Liverpool by the steamship "Cambria" for his own charge, carried it down to the Old Colony depot and thence to Plymouth by the morning train.

Thomas M. Pomeroy, the Boston P. O. agent discovered the loss soon afterwards and hastening to the roundhouse at South Boston chartered the "Quincy" and with engineer John Pickering and fireman Manassa Merritt started out in pursuit of the stray mail bag in hopes of getting it back before the Cambria sailed, an arrangement having been made to hold the steamship for a couple of hours.

In those days the Old Colony was a single track road, and with a freight train somewhere out on the line and no telegraph to warn of the approach of an "extra" the progress of the Quincy was frequently delayed and Plymouth was finally reached only to find that the mail bag had been sent down to Sandwich by the stage coach.

AT TERRIFIC SPEED.

Darkness had set in when the Quincy on its return trip with the recovered mail bag passed through her name town at terrific speed and sped out onto "Presidents Curve" leading towards the old drawbridge which spanned Neponset river.

Here dim signal lamps were burning to indicate that the draw was open, but the engineer saw them not or saw them too late as the locomotive rushed on unchecked and plunged into the gap and smashing against the abutments on the opposite side of the draw fell back a wreck into the river.

The men jumped before the crash and were rescued from the dark waters by the crew of the schooner which but a moment before had passed through the open draw, Pomeroy clasping under his arm the luckless mail bag. This he reluctantly surrendered to the Postmaster at Neponset who took it to Boston, but the Cambria was by that time far out at sea.

So great was the speed of the Quincy at the time she reached the draw that in flying in space across 32 feet width of gap she dropped but four feet as shown by the marks on the opposite side where she struck.

The escape of the men from death or serious injury was considered wonderful. They soon recovered from their trying experiences and were about their duties a few days later as if nothing had happened. The wrecked Quincy was taken from the river after much difficulty and was probably reconstructed as an eight wheeler as described in the schedule.

SOME FACTS ABOUT CITY OF QUINCY

A Leader in Industries, Value of Products and Persons Employed

Per Capita Valuation Is Increasing Rapidly

The facts relative to the City of Quincy presented below are from the census of 1910 and other official figures, and there is much of which people of the "City of Presidents" may be proud:

AS AN INDUSTRIAL CITY

The last census showed Quincy to have more industries per capita than Boston. Quincy has 151—one for every 202 people, while Boston has 2,747, one for every 244 people. The industries of Quincy are large industries and employ 5,371—one out of every six of population—while the industries of Boston employ one out of eleven. The value of Quincy products is unusually high,—$8,082,446 annually, or $273.92 per capita; while the Boston value is $274.89 per capita.

SHIPYARD OF WORLD-WIDE FAME

Builders of battleships New Jersey, Rhode Island, Vermont, North Dakota and Nevada for the United States government; battleship Rivadavia for the Argentine Republic; submarines for the United States and Japanese navies; also other warships, passenger steamers and freight steamers. Employs about 4000. Has entertained many notables of the United States and foreign countries.

QUARRIES OF QUINCY GRANITE

The standard for excellence among Granites—Increased demand—Quality improving—Inexhaustible rock ribbed mountains—Takes the best polish. Extensively used for memorials both large and small, to be found in all the large cemeteries of the country, the battlefield at Gettysburg, and other battlefields of the Civil War. Bunker Hill Monument is built of Quincy granite; also the First Parish church, Quincy City Hall, and other public buildings.

A POPULAR SEASIDE RESORT

Quincy with its 23 miles of sea-coast has several attractive summer resorts, many now occupied by all-the-year residents. Houghs Neck and Squantum are both parts of Quincy, and all along the shore of Quincy bay between these two peninsulars are resorts of different names—Atlantic beach, Wollaston beach, Quincy Shore reservation, Merrymount, Adams Shore, Post Island, Manet Beach and Great Hill,—also Rock Island, Bethel Beach, Germantown and Quincy Point, all popular for yachting, bathing and cool breezes. The fact that Quincy has four large yacht clubs shows the interest taken in yachting; all these clubs have clubhouses and many yachts enrolled.

AS A RESIDENTIAL CITY

Rev. A. L. Hudson says—"Of all the cities of the country, Boston stands easily the FIRST in the beauty and variety of its many suburbs; and among them all NONE has so many attractions to offer to the home seeker as OUR OWN QUINCY. Its diversified area, sloping from wooded hill tops with their ocean view over rolling parks and level downs to sweeping shore line of the bay, gives ample scope for each man, according to his taste, to possess the one most desirable building site in ALL THE WORLD."

A WEALTHY CITY

In 1870 Quincy had an assessed valuation of $4,449,500, representing a per capita valuation of $597.89. In 1880 the per capita had increased to $712.21; in 1890 to $817.73; in 1900 to $844.54; in 1910 to $994.33. In 1913 the assessed valuation was $36,716,260, a per capita valuation of OVER $1,000.00. Note the BIG increase in valuation, and the fact that the per capita valuation is nearly TWICE as large. Quincy is 20th in valuation in Massachusetts as well as 20th in population.

RESERVATIONS AND PLAYGROUNDS

Quincy has within its borders MORE in Reservations, Parks and Playgrounds than any other city of Massachusetts. Over 2,600 acres in Metropolitan reservations are in this city, also Merrymount park of 91 acres with a shore front, Faxon park of 27 acres and several ward playgrounds. Dr. Eliot says, "Cities with the most exempt property are the best to live in."

AN EDUCATIONAL CITY

Quincy one of the first to employ a Superintendent of Schools. Under Col. Francis W. Parker our schools obtained a National renown. In 1900 celebrated the 25th anniversary of Col. Parker's election. In 1914 all public school buildings are of brick. Quincy is 8th among the 33 cities in number of grammar school graduates, and 14th in High school graduates when Woodward Institute is included. May honestly be compared with other cities in the Metropolitan district.

QUINCY AN HONORED NAME

It was Rev. Daniel Munro Wilson, a former pastor of the First Parish church, who said:—"Quincy seems the one name congenial to the spirit and history of this locality. Deeprooted in chivalrous Norman life, transplanted here with the first settlers, associated with so much that is fine and high in many who here bore it, and in utterance full and dignified, it tastes of the soil, it seems almost the natural product of environment, and not a title fixed by formal vote. Honored at home, abroad revered, it is a distinction to be called OF QUINCY."

NAMED FOR COL. JOHN QUINCY

"The more the name of Col. John Quincy is scrutinized the more he is exalted. For 21 successive years, that is from 1719 to 1740, he was returned to the House of Representatives with unfailing regularity. His personality, his character and judgment, and his sturdy provincial patriotism so impressed his fellow representatives that they elected him Speaker of the House from 1727 to 1741, a period of 14 years. A tribute from town and Province that stamps him as no common man."

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

MODERN CONVENIENCES

Reference might also be made to our public conveniences:—abundance of Metropolitan water, Metropolitan sewer system, auto fire department, permanent police department, electric lights and gas in all parts of the city, nine electric car routes, good train service, excellent banking facilities, daily and weekly newspapers, city hospital, public library, etc. etc.

A PATRIOTIC CITY

With Adams and Hancock as Revolutionary statesmen Quincy early became distinguished. She sent to the Civil war one of the FIRST companies of MINUTE MEN. The first call of Lincoln was issued unexpectedly April 15, and the next day Co. H, Fourth Massachusetts Volunteers, reported in Boston and left for Fortress Munroe, and was mustered into service April 22. FIRST soldier killed in engagement was from Quincy. Sent 954 men to Civil war although population of town was then only 6,800. Erected a Soldiers Monument as early as 1868. In the war with Spain, a majority of the members of Co. K, Fifth regiment M. V. M., were from Quincy. Flag today honored and revered.

BECAUSE OF ITS REMARKABLE GROWTH

In 1875 Quincy was a small town with a population of less than 10,000. We have not only made rapid gains but we have PASSED SEVERAL OTHER TOWNS AND CITIES in the race. A good index of progress. In 1880 Quincy was 29th in population in Massachusetts; in 1885 we had moved up to 27th place; in 1890 we had jumped to 23d; in 1895 to 22d; in 1905 to 21st; and the last census in 1910 showed us No. 20, with a population of 32,642, which has since been increased to nearly 40,000. A rapidly growing city is always a good place for business.

WOMEN'S CLUBS FLOURISH

Prominent in the civic work and social life of Quincy are its Women's Clubs of earnest, able, self sacrificing women, who esteem it a pleasure to work for the uplift of the city and its people. These include the Quincy Women's Club, Wollaston Women's Club, Squantum Women's Club, Riverside Women's Club, Lady Associates of Houghs Neck, Young Women's Club, King's Daughters, Women's Relief Corp, Quincy Catholic Club, Hospital Aid Association, Day Nursery Association, and many others.

A CITY OF CHURCHES

The number of churches in the city is a surprise to everyone, but with two or three exceptions all are flourishing and doing the work of the Master. There are seven Congregational, including one Swedish and one Finnish; four Catholic; four Methodist, including one Swedish; three Baptists including one Swedish; three Episcopal, including a Swedish Lutheran; two Unitarian, two Presbyterian, two Hebrew, one Universalist, one Christian Science, and other mission churches. Many of these churches are free from debt and constantly making improvements.

MANY GENEROUS BENEFACTORS

Few cities have been so favored as Quincy in endowments which are almost without limit, and meet many requirements: an institute for the education of girls, a City Hospital, including the Rice pavilion and a Nurses' home, two large public parks, a beautiful Public Library building, and funds for schools, charity, etc.

JUST A FEW WORDS HISTORICALLY

While Quincy has so much to talk up without delving in history, she has much in history to make her proud, being the birthplace, home and burial place of two Presidents of the United States; the birthplace of the FIRST Vice President; the birthplace of John Hancock, the bold signer of the Declaration of Independence, who was the FIRST Governor of Massachusetts under the Constitution; the site of the FIRST incorporated Railroad in the United States. The birthplaces of the Presidents are preserved today as show houses, also the Quincy mansion owned by the Colonial Dames, and the Church of the Presidents now known as the First Parish church.

ITS MEN AND WOMEN

High average in personal character of those who make up the population—industrious, ambitious, generous, loyal, patriotic and God fearing.

STEALING ALLEGED.

George M. Miller, 27, of 211 Franklin street, South Quincy, and Fred L. Green, 38, of 101 Park avenue, Winthrop Highlands, both employed at the North Grove street morgue were arrested Saturday on indictment warrants on a charge of stealing $230 from the pockets of a dead man.

The police say the alleged robbery took place in June. Thomas O'Brien, an aged painter, died suddenly from heart failure while at work in Boston. The medical examiner was notified and the body was removed to the North Grove street morgue. The body was there searched and the personal effects placed in an envelope. When it was turned over to the estate it is alleged that $230 was missing.

Medical Examiner McGrath, when he learned of the robbery, asked District Attorney Pelletier to make an investigation, with the result that both employees were placed under arrest Saturday night. It is possible that another arrest may follow. Miller is out on $1000 bail.

Close Contest in Game With the Copelands

Div. 22 beat the Copelands on the West Quincy playground Saturday afternoon, 10 to 9, in a league contest. The game was exciting, the lead shifting continually. The Copes took the lead in their half of the ninth, but the Hibernians went to the bat, tied the score, and then netted the extra run.

The special feature of the game was the playing of Sullivan, who made a beautiful one hand catch off the ground after running 25 yards. The hitting of Leary, Mulligan and Duane for the Hibernians, and E. Desmond and Hebert for the Copes enlivened matters. Ed. Desmond went in for Copeland in the second innings and did good work the rest of the game

WON IN NINTH.

The baseball game between the Cunningham Gym and Somerville teams Saturday afternoon was one of the most interesting games played this season. Somerville brought in the first run in the third inning followed by one for Milton in the fourth. The score stood 7 to 2 in favor of the visitors at the first of the ninth. But who can tell what will happen in the ninth? First, Lathen knocked a second bagger, then Hern made a short punt and one by one Milton's players kept playing real baseball until the score stood 7 to 6 with two men on base and "Big Chief" Bender at the bat. As usual this man made a red hot drive through short and brought in two runs which made the score 8 to 7 in favor of the home team. The score by innings was:

ANOTHER FOR WALNUTS.

In one of the fastest games played in the city this season, the Atlantics defeated the Wollaston A. A. on the Ward Six playground Saturday afternoon 4 to 2. It was the seventh straight victory for Walnuts.

O'Neil, the winning pitcher fanned 10 men. The feature of the game was the hitting of Cullen, who hit the four times he came to the bat. The score by innings:

PLAYGROUND ATTENDANCE.

There was quite a drop in the playground attendance last week owing to rainy weather, the circus at Ward Three and good swimming at Quincy Point. The grand total for the three playgrounds was 3668, of which number the girls had 1760. Ward Three, despite the handicap of the circus, had the good total 947 boys and 865 girls. For the first time this season Ward Two went below a 1,000 for the weekly total mark, having just 948 in all. Wollaston kept up its good work by totaling 814.

SOUTH SHORE RACING NOW ON

Some of the Prize Winners in Run from Marblehead

The successful weeks racing at Marblehead is to be followed this week by a series of races along the South Shore starting today with the annual open race of the Quincy Yacht club. Tuesday the yachts with the exception of the 31-raters and the Bar Harbor 31-footers go to Hingham, for a race held under the auspices of the Hingham Yacht club, which will start off Crow Point.

The racing for the remainder of the week will be held under the auspices of the Boston Yacht club off its Hull station. There will be races on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday and in addition to the races the club will have planned entertainments for the visiting yachtsmen at the club house in the evening.

On Sunday there was a squadron run of the fleet from Marblehead to Hull for prizes offered by the Yacht Racing association. The run was a decided success as the yachts were able to make a straight run without tacking. There was a light easterly breeze and a smooth sea, but the fog shut down heavy before all of the fleet arrived. The prize winners in the classes in which Quincy boats are interested were as follows: Class A, Areyto Commodore E. F. Drew; class H. Sinbad, Ralph Packard; class D. Grayling, C. E. Nickerson; class I. Dorchen II, A. W. Finlay; class S. Maritza, C. H. Porter.

SATURDAY RACES.

A fleet of 201 yachts and power boats took part in the Saturday race in the mid-summer series of the Corinthian club off Marblehead. This was the largest list of starters at any yachting event ever held in Massachusetts waters. The winners in the several classes in which Quincy boats took part were as follows: Sonder class, the Sprig; Class I, Jane; class A, Areyto; class D, Clara; class H, Sinbad; class S, Maritza; class M, Meemer. In the sail-off which was held during the morning, the Ellen won out in the sonder class, and the Dartwell in class D.

WEYMOUTH TROT.

The winners in the several events at the weekly meet of the Old Colony Gentlemens Driving club at South Weymouth park Saturday were. Class A, Benjamin; class B, Kalder; class C, Miss Lake; class D, Stella Nelson; class F, Miss Vassar I; class G, Pauline; class H, Tedy Muscovite; class I, Blix; class J, Arena; class K, Annie M; class L, Patriot.

D. T. O'Connell won the cup for the best net in the sweepstakes at the Wollaston Golf Club on Saturday afternoon. He was a stroke better than than David H. Goodspeed, master of the Wollaston grammar school, and F. Percical, both of whom tied for second place with 70 net.

Fore Rivers won the soccer competition of the Boston Caledonian Clubs picnic in a playoff Saturday afternoon The contest was by five men teams. Their opponents were the Boston Americans who proved to be hard players. A corner shot brought victory to the local men.

NO REASON FOR IT!

You Are Shown A Way Out.

There can be no reason why any reader of this who suffers the tortures of an aching back, the annoyance of urinary disorders, the pains and dangers of kidney ills will fail to heed the word of a resident of this locality who has found relief. The following is convincing proof.

A. T. Preston, 33 Park street, Wollaston, Mass., says: "Jumping on and off a wagon a good deal caused kidney trouble. Some years ago I had to give up work and I was in pretty bad shape. The kidney secretions were discolored and caused much pain in passage. I tried remedy after remedy, but got no relief. I was discouraged; suffered awfully at times and did not know what to do. Finally I read in the Quincy paper an advertisement for Doan's Kidney Pills, telling of what they had done for a man I knew. I got a box and began taking them. I noticed a change at once. The passage of the kidney secretions became less frequent at night and caused less pain. I passed two gravel stones; one of them as large as a pea. I kept on taking Doan's Kidney Pills and I can now sleep better at night and am improved in every way."

RESIST ATTACK BY SUBMARINES

British Cruisers Win First Sea Battle of War

GERMANS ARE BEATEN BACK

One of Their Vessels Sent to Bottom and Crew Believed to Have Perished—Vaunted Superiority of Submarines to Dreadnoughts Still Remains a Matter of Doubt

London, Aug. 10.—The first battle for the mastery of the seas has been fought.

A dash by German submarines upon a squadron of fleet British cruisers was beaten off, the German submarine U15 was sunk and the survivors scurried back to the shelter of the German guns on shore.

The story of the first naval battle between the two greatest sea powers was given out at the British admiralty. But the official report was extremely meagre in its details.

As no British cruisers were damaged in the raid, it is supposed there were no casualties in the blockading squadron. It is also taken for granted in London that the crew of the submarine which was sent to the bottom all perished, although no mention of their fate has been divulged. Not even the location of the warring squadrons was mentioned, although, as the operating radius of the submarines is limited, the battle was evidently fought not far from the German coast.

The dash of the submarines indicates that Germany intends to adhere to the naval program that has been forecasted—to postpone a general engagement of the great fleets until the land issue of the war is clearer and to seek opportunities to cut off isolated ships by sudden raids of submarines and torpedo boats.

The vaunted superiority of the submarines to dreadnoughts still remains unproven. The first test in a great war remains with the big ships, as the broadsides of the cruiser squadron, sufficient to drive back the underwater craft, have nothing like the terrible destructiveness of the British battleships.

The official report of the admiralty does not state how many vessels were engaged in the battle. Apparently the submarines were detected before they could get within accurate range of the cruisers and were beaten back by the effective firing of the big guns on the British ships.

No sound of firing heard along shore has as yet been reported from the English or Scottish coasts, which lends credence to the natural belief that the engagement must have been fought close to the German harbors.

BATHING FATALITIES

Three Drown at Worcester and Four In Connecticut Town

Worcester, Mass., Aug. 10.—Three persons met death here while bathing. Mrs. Joseph H. Oliver, 60, was not drowned, but the shock of entering the water evidently affected her heart so strongly that she dropped dead.

Daniel Finnegan, 22, was drowned while endeavoring to learn to swim. He was wearing water wings, but they collapsed.

The third death was that of Guiseppi Siciuino, 23, who was also learning to swim.

Four young men who went in bathing together in a lagoon at Stamford, Conn., were drowned. None could swim. In wading out they stepped into a hole which had been made by a dredger.

MORGUE MEN ARRESTED

Two Employes Are Charged With Robbing Dead Man of $230

Boston, Aug. 10.—The grand jury investigation of the alleged larceny of $230 from the pockets of a dead man while the body lay in the North Grove street morgue awaiting a claimant, resulted in the arrest of two of the morgue employes on indictment warrants. It is possible that another arrest may be made later.

The men arrested are Fred L. Green, 38, and George M. Miller, 27. According to the police Thomas O'Brien, an aged painter, died suddenly from heart failure while at work in a banking office. The body was taken to the morgue, where, it is alleged, the robbery occurred.

Strike Leader Charged With Murder

Trinidad, Col., Aug. 10.—Pete Catzoulas, a striking miner and leader of the Greeks at the Ludlow tent colony, was arrested, charged with murder in connection with the death of nine employes of the Rocky Fuel company.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES

Gladys Woodell, 16, one of a party of Campfire girls, was drowned near Ridgefield, Conn., while bathing.

Schooner Ida, loaded with soft coal, struck off Cuttyhunk, Mass. She filled rapidly and was abandoned by her crew. The islanders stripped the schooner.

Gloucester, Mass., children threw baskets of flowers from Blynman bridge as a memory-offering to Gloucester's dead fishermen.

WAITING TO BE INVITED

Handbills Should Have No Consideration at all

In introducing John J. Morgan, of the Pilgrim Publicity Association. Toastmaster Brown of the Somerville Board of Trade, said that the city benefited greatly from the pay rolls of industries, but that not nearly as much money as should be was spent in Somerville.

Mr. Morgan spoke on the art of retail advertising and was heard with close attention. He said that advertising and service to customers was a combination to extend and defend business. Advertising, he said, is inviting customers to come to your store and they won't come unless they are invited. He said the local newspaper was the best medium advertising. The street cars and sales letters next, and he declared that hand bills should have no consideration at all. He emphasized the need of solidarity among the mercantile organizations and gave valuable hints on writing advertisements and giving good service to customers.

Toastmaster Brown followed Mr. Morgan's address by saying that $10,000,000 were spent outside of Somerville which should be spent inside and he hoped the day was not far distant when a united organization would be formed to develop the retail trade of Somerville and to bring new industries to Somerville.

What is good for Somerville is good for Quincy. It should be easier for Quincy to keep trade at home, because Somerville has a five-cent fare.

FORE RIVER IS SHUT OUT

And United Shoe Take Lead in Manufacturers League

With Saturday's games the standing of the Manufacturers league is:

	Won.	Lost	P.C.
United Shoe	9	5	.643
Fore River	8	5	.615
Norwood Press	8	5	.615
Bird & Sons	8	6	.571
Gillette & Co.	6	6	.500
Telephone Co.	5	7	.416
Gen. Electric	5	7	.416
Forbes Lith. Co.	3	11	.214

The United Shoe Machinery Co., of Beverly, considered among the fastest in the semi-pro teams of the state, took the lead in the Manufacturers league Saturday afternoon. They defeated Bird & Sons, while Fore River and Norwood Press, who were tied for first place, lost their games. The Birds lost to the General Electrics, and Fore River to the Forbes Lithograph Co.

The defeat of Fore River by the Forbes Lithograph Co. at Chelsea, by the tail enders of the league, came in the first innings. Nichols the local pitcher allowed but two hits, one of those being a homer by Roberts which cost Fore River the game and probably the pennant.

It took the General Electric 12 innings to put the Norwood Press out of the running, while United Shoe beat Bird & Sons 10 to 4, an easy victory.

Fore River has one more chance when it plays the General Electrics at Lynn this week Saturday. If our team wins a triple tie will result. The score of Saturday's game:

A Home In America

A Story For Labor Day

By MARGARET C. DEVEREAUX

Jean Stahren and Elsa Vogan lived on adjoining farms on the western coast of Norway. Neither had any brothers or sisters; consequently they were constant playmates, for there were no other children within a couple of miles. Since the country was rocky and not very productive their parents were very poor. But neither Jean nor Elsa had ever known luxuries, and what we do not know of we do not covet. Besides, there is an unconsciousness of deprivation in childhood, and so long as children have enough to eat, though of the plainest food, and enough clothing to keep them warm they are content.

But there came a time with Jean when he began to think of his future. This was when he was seventeen years old. One day, standing with Elsa on a high ridge overlooking the Atlantic ocean, he said to her:

"Elsa, it will not satisfy me to remain here with father and mother to work this little farm. There is barely enough for them to be made out of it, and I feel that I must go out into the world to make something for myself."

A frightened look came to Elsa's face. This was the first intimation she had that she and Jean would not live near each other always as they had lived.

"Where would you go, Jean?" she asked.

"If one sails westward from here in a few days he will reach some islands called Britain. They have a king there, as we have here, and nobles, but I understand that the people are active, and there are opportunities for poor men to make a good living. But if one continues on southwestward he will come to a great continent called America. The people there have no king, no nobles. All are on the same level so far as the law is concerned. To that land people of small means from all nations are flocking. There is plenty of land there which is very rich, and great factories where people work, and those who are skilled receive wages that are unheard of here in Norway. I am thinking of going to America to join in the battle for fortune."

"But, Jean," cried the girl, "you are not skilled at any work, and in no country are farms given away. Having no trade and no money to buy a farm, what will you do to earn a living? And where will you get money to pay your way?"

"I am now of a proper age to learn a trade, and as to the means for the journey I shall work my passage. I shall go on a ship to Hamburg, for which I have the money. There, I understand, there are great vessels sailing to America. They need many persons to wait on the passengers, and it will not be difficult for me to secure one of these places."

"How did you learn all this?"

"Lars Olsen told me; he has been to Hamburg."

Elsa was looking out to the westward, and Jean saw tears gathering in her eyes. He put his arms about her and kissed her. The boundary between childhood and youth had been passed. From that moment they were lovers, though they were still unconscious of the change.

"Don't cry, Elsa," said Jean. "When I have become a skilled workman I will send for you to come over the sea and be with me."

"How could I go over there and be with you, Jean? That would not be right."

"But I will then be a man and you a woman; we can be married."

This ingenuous proposal did not seem to give comfort to Elsa. She said that it would be a long while before Jean could send for her, and even then she could not leave her father and mother, who were every day becoming more dependent upon her. This made Jean feel ashamed, for he knew that he, too, was needed at home. But Jean looked further into the future than Elsa and had more resolution to break the barriers between him and success. Besides, he looked forward to the day when, having become a skilled laborer, he could earn more than he needed for himself and could send money to his parents.

It was a sad day for all when Jean departed. His mother begged him to stay, but his father approved of his going.

"Goodby, my son," he said. "I have heard of that great country beyond the sea where the people are the government and where the workingman must be educated for what he does the same as the lawyer, the doctor and the priest. And they tell me that when he learns his trade he is protected by trade unions against the competition of those who are unskilled. Go, and God grant that you may prosper."

Elsa went a part way on the road with Jean and when they parted surprised him by encouraging him instead of giving way to repining.

"It will not seem long, dear Jean, before you will be building houses or railroads or ships, and every day you will earn more than you need, so that you can send money to your father and mother to buy them comforts they sorely need in their old age."

"But I shall not be satisfied, sweetheart, till I have earned not only enough for that, but to send for you to come to me."

Nevertheless they had no sooner passed away from each other than Jean's eyes became moist, and Elsa broke down and sobbed as though her heart would break.

* * * * * * * *

An ocean liner came sailing down the coast and, entering the lower bay of New York, made its way up toward Ellis island, where emigrants must prove that they come within the laws governing their admission to the United States of America. Among those who were transferred from the vessel to the island was a young woman, who gave her name as Elsa Vogan and her age as twenty-two. She stepped from the lighter that bore her to the dock and looked about her as if expecting some one to meet her; but, seeing no one she knew, her expression of expectancy changed to one of disappointment. Passing with the throng into the apartment where emigrants present their claims for admission, Elsa was brought before an official for examination.

"What means have you?" he asked.

"Only a few silver coins left over after paying for my passage."

"How do you expect to live here in America?"

"I came over here to be married. I expected to meet at the dock when I landed the man who will marry me, but he did not appear."

The official asked the man's name and where he lived. Elsa told him that his name was Jean Stahren and that he was an ironworker in Pennsylvania, but what place in Pennsylvania she could not tell him.

Elsa was told that she might remain on the island for a few days, but if at the end of that time her lover did not appear she must be sent back to Hamburg, whence she had sailed. This was a terrible blow to the poor girl, for she knew that there was some reason why Jean had not met her, which might not be corrected within so short a time.

Fortunately it was summer, the end of August, and Ellis island, surrounded as it is by water, was not a disagreeable place to wait. Elsa gazed out over the bay, wondering at the gigantic statue of Liberty, at the skyscrapers of lower New York, at the Brooklyn suspension bridge and at Castle Williams on Governors island. A day passed, and Jean did not appear. Another day went by and still there were no tidings of him. The third day was Sunday, the 1st of September. Elsa was called before one of the immigration officials and informed that a steamer would sail for Hamburg the next day and if she could not satisfy the authorities that she would not be a burden on the United States before that time she would be sent back to Germany, whence she came.

Elsa was in agony. Jean had sent her the money for her passage, at the same time telling her to write him the name of the steamer on which she would sail, promising to meet her on the dock when the ship arrived. She had written him the name of the steamer, but, not being versed in the ways of the world, had not mentioned the date of its arrival, though she had said that she expected to sail about the last of August. And now, after having waited seven years to be united to Jean and having come all the way across the Atlantic ocean for the purpose, she must go back to Hamburg.

That Sunday was a sultry afternoon, and Elsa in order to get cool sat on the dock gloomily looking out over the waters of the bay. She saw a little steamer leave New York and make for the island. Boats were coming often, and she had looked when each had arrived for Jean. But now she had given up hope. When the boat reached the dock she scarcely noticed those who came ashore. But a man passed near her, stopped and looked at her scrutinizingly.

"Elsa!" he exclaimed.

She arose and for a moment did not recognize Jean, for he wore a full beard.

"Oh, Jean!" she cried. "Why have you not come before?"

"How long have you been here?"

"Three days."

"I supposed you would come on the steamer that is telegraphed to be here presently."

Elsa had little education, and she had written the name of the ship on which she would sail so badly that Jean could not read it. He had therefore judged of the time of her arrival from the date she gave and consequently fell between two steamers. But he wasted few words in explanation.

"Come, Elsa," he said. "We must be married at once, go to New York and leave for my home in Pennsylvania on a night train. Tomorrow will be Labor day, and I am at the head of the committee of arrangements for my union and have much to do."

So Jean and Elsa were married on the island and left there at once. It was past midnight when they reached their home, a cottage near a steel works where Jean was employed. Though it was late, Elsa found time to admire the cozy home that Jean had prepared for her.

The first day Elsa spent in America was Labor day, and though she saw little of her husband she saw one of the most important celebrations of the new world.

Jean Stahren became a master mechanic, and, having a wife who was a good manager, they sent monthly remittances to the old folks in Norway and after awhile made them a visit. But by this time they took with them several children to introduce to their grandparents.

FOR CLEARING FOREIGN SHIPS

New Rules Promulgated by United States Government

PRESERVATION OF NEUTRALITY

Provided For in Instructions to Port Collectors Designed to Free Merchant Vessels From Restrictions—Drastic Orders Rescinded Because of Protests From Great Britain

Washington, Aug. 10.—The regulations governing the conduct of collectors in preserving the neutrality of the United States were promulgated at a conference of officials representing the state, treasury, navy and commerce departments.

The conference decided that arms and ammunition may be shipped from any American port provided the arms and ammunition go as merchant cargo in a merchant vessel; that any number of reservists can leave an American port on a merchant vessel provided they are not in uniform and do not carry arms; that a merchant vessel may leave an American port to be converted into war purposes if the conversion of the merchant vessel does not take place within the waters of the United States.

These regulations were described by the officials as a modification of regulations issued Friday by the secretary of commerce.

Following the conference these instructions were sent to collectors of customs in a statement signed by Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo and Secretary of Commerce Redfield:

"Any foreign bound vessel whose character as a merchant vessel is established to your satisfaction is entitled to clearance, no matter what the character of her cargo or what her destination.

"You will not refuse clearance to merchant vessels whether of the United States or other neutral power or whether of a belligerent power solely on the ground that the cargo contains contraband of war.

"When a vessel of a belligerent power which has arrived as a merchant vessel alters her status as a merchant vessel or there is reason to believe she intends to alter such status so as to become an auxiliary cruiser, you will immediately notify the department by wire.

Any of the following acts will constitute such a change of character:

"(A) The placing in position or otherwise changing or otherwise placing the location of guns which were on board the vessel at the time of her arrival.

"(B) So changing the appearance, color, rig or equipment of a vessel as to render suitable for some purpose of war.

"(C) The taking on board of guns, arms or ammunition under circumstances which in any way indicate the outfitting of the vessel for any purpose of war or in aid of a military expedition.

"Should any vessel depart or attempt to depart from your district without a regular clearance you will wire the department and the commander of the nearest naval vessel or revenue cutter.

"You will wire the department and the commander of the nearest naval vessel or naval station the arrivals and departures of all war vessels of foreign nations.

"You will permit foreign bound vessels to clear only after they have filed with you their full and final manifests.

"You will notify all merchant vessels in your districts that they will be subject to inspection and examination of documents, ships and cargoes by United States authorities before clearance is given and will be subject to further examination by United States authorities after clearance, and while such vessels remain within the territorial waters of the United States such vessels shall stop and lie to for examination when signalled by a United States vessel.

"In case of doubt wire the department for instructions."

Protests from Great Britain were given as the reason for the drastic order now rescinded.

LAST OF RELIEF CAMP

Homes Have Been Provided For Needy Salem Fire Sufferers

Salem, Mass., Aug. 10.—The relief camp at Forest River park, which has been in operation since the day after the conflagration in this city, and which at one time had a population of considerably over 2000, was discontinued Saturday night, the last tent being struck at 6 o'clock.

During the last four days 256 persons were housed by the relief committee. The rent of each tenement was paid one month in advance by the committee, which supplied each family with the necessary furniture to start housekeeping.

The hospital and cook tents and the quarters used by the soldiers were entirely cleared Sunday.

Suicide on Grave of Wife

Boston, Aug. 10.—Brooding over the death of his wife, Thomas W. Cook of Dorchester, aged 72, went to her grave in Cedar Grove cemetery, accompanied by his pet Irish terrier, and committed suicide by shooting through the head.

TAX RATES FOR YEAR 1914

Highest Figures in History of Several Cities

In Dover, the new home of the Rices the tax rate for this year is $5.50 per thousand, an advance of fifty cents over last year's rate. The State tax is $1,035 greater than last year, being $12,075; the County tax is identical with that of 1913, $4,624.66; while the Metropolitan and Charles River requirements show a total increase of $69.97. FELL WITH A CRASH.

A large pole on Adams street, carrying a number of electric light wires and a trolley guy wire, fell with a crash Sunday afternoon, and completely blocked the street. The electric light wires sent up a shower of sparks but fortunately there were no automobiles passing at the time or serious results might have followed. Usually at that hour, 2.30, there is a constant stream of automobiles passing through Adams street in both directions but at the minute the pole fell the street was clear.

Crews of the Electric Light and Street Railway companies were quickly on hand and the damage repaired. The pole was badly rotted at the base which was the cause of its snapping off.

Real Heroism.

To live well in the quiet routine of life; to fill a little space because God wills it; to go on cheerfully with a petty round of of little duties, little avocations; to smile for the joys of others when the heart is aching—who does this, his works will follow him. He may not be a hero to the world, but he is one of God's heroes.—Dean Farrar.

MRS. MARNOCK PASSES AWAY

Prominent in Relief Corps and Knights and Ladies

Mrs. Emma E. Marnock, connected with the granite firm of A. D. Marnock & Co. and one of the most prominent society members of this city, died at the Carney Hospital, Saturday, following an operation. Mrs. Marnock was taken there Thursday and failed to survive the effects of the operation.

Mrs. Marnock was the widow of the late Alexander Marnock, who was in the stone cutting business in South Quincy, and at his death became a member of the firm.

She was past protector of Maple lodge, Knights and Ladies of Honor, and past president of Paul Revere Womens Relief Corps. Also a member of the Loyal Ladies of Clan McGregor, George L. Gill Rebekah lodge and the Riverside Womens club.. She was a faithful worker and accomplished much for these societies during her lifetime.

Several years ago she moved to City Square, and made her home in the Adams building. During the fire last February that threatened to destroy the building Mrs. Marnock was among the rescued. She suffered severely from exposure to the cold and never fully recovered from her experience.

Mrs. Marnock was 61 years of age and is survived by one sister, Mrs. Sarah C. Williams of West Quincy, and two sons, Edward and Alexander Marnock.

NEW JUSTICE OF PEACE.

Frank J. Duffy, former councilman from Ward Two, has been appointed a notary public and justice of the peace by Gov. David I. Walsh. The appointment was confirmed immediately after being received by the counsellors. Mr. Duffy is well known in this city. He is affiliated with several ogranizations and is president of John Adams aerie, Fraternal Order of Eagles. He is employed at the Fore River shipyard and is a student at the evening law school, Boston. Mr. Duffy is married and lives on Beacon street.

GRADUATION AT POST ISLAND

Annual Entertainment by the Deestrick Skule

The Post Island Improvement Associates held their annual entertainment Saturday evening on the lawn of the Webster cottage before a large gathering. The entertainment consisted of the morning and afternoon sessions of the "Deestrick Skule of Punkville Centre." During the recess period musical selections were rendered by the Amherst trio. Messrs Hubbard Bros. and Allison Marsh; tenor solo by Clement B. Nash; readings by Julius Warren and piano solos by Miss Bessie Perry.

The morning session consisted of classes in Arithmetic, geography, spelling and history, while the afternoon session was given over to the graduation day exercises during which their was a wealth of "speaking pieces," songs and compositions.

The school master Hezikiah Pendergrass was taken by Howard B. Blewett in first class manner.

The caste of characters were as follows:

Matilda Billings	Jane E. Shriver
Faithful Snooks	Mrs. A. H. Phippa
Samantha Piper	Bessie Perry
Susan Crowfoot	H. Nelson Shriver
Sally Brown	Mrs. Madison
Mehitable Jones	Mrs. Wm. H Nichols
Luther Brown	William Perry
Jerimiah Jenkins	Chester Bennett
Billy Crowfoot	J. L. Maclary
Obidiah Buzzard	G. L. Browne
Bobby O'Lee	E. P. Fletcher
Samuel Snook	A. E. Marsh
Sam Dipsey	Wm. H. Nichols
Stephen Tucker	J. H. Perry

The bad boy part was taken by Mr. Nichols and the stammering of E. P. Fletcher was some "hesitation" stunt.

Susan and Billy Crowfoot was taken by Miss Nelson Shriver and J. L. Maclary in black face, who did their "plantation" glide, while singing "Sailing down the Chesapeake bay."

Mehitable, the teacher's pet was very "sweetly" taken by Mrs. Nichols. In fact all the characters could have a good word said about their special part.

A silver offering was taken up at the close for Float Night celebration and from the amount of money donated it looks good for a big time "float night."

The committee consisting of Messrs. Nichols, Perry and Maclary did excellent work in planning and carrying out their entertainment in about a week after their appointment.

FRACTURED A RIB.

George Gustin is confined to his home on Chestnut street as the result of injuries received in a fall at the Adams market, where he is employed as a clerk. Gustin felt considerable pain in his side after the fall and an examination by Dr. Sargent revealed that he had a fractured rib. He will be unable to assume his duties for several weeks.

BAND CONCERT.

Several thousand attended the band concert given at Houghs Neck Sunday afternoon by the band of Post 15, G. A. R. of Boston. The program included popular and operatic selections. Extra cars carried the people from Quincy. Another concert is scheduled for the near future.

NEWS FROM TRAVELLERS

T. A. L. Musgrave Hears from His Wife--Others Anxious

Mrs. William E. Hingston of Wollaston Park received a letter Saturday from her sister, Miss Julia B. Hill of Wollaston, who is travelling in Europe. The letter was dated from Bruges, July 28, and stated that she was on her way to Brussels. Miss Hill spoke of the beautiful country and how peaceful everything was. At that time there were not even rumors of war She is now thought to be in Brussels the very heart of the war zone.

In the list of New England people who are registered with the American Relief committee in London are Dr. and Mrs. F. C. Granger, and Dr. F. B. Granger of Randolph.

Representative Sandberg has requested Congressman Gilmore to have the state department inquire about Fred H. Pierson of Quincy, who went to Paris to study.

Thomas A. L. Musgrave of the Board of Health, who has been somewhat anxious for Mrs. Musgrave who sailed for England July 25, was very much relieved on Saturday to receive a letter from her. Mrs. Musgrave's destination was Leeds, England, but the letter received stated that she was at Scarborough, a summer resort on the coast of the North Sea, where it is reported that a great naval battle, will take place if it has not already taken place. Mr. Musgrave expects to hear some war news at first hand on her return. He has cabled his wife to take the first steamer she can get that flies the United States flag and come home.

It has been three weeks since Mrs. Lydia C. Hultman was heard from her daughter, Mrs. Louis Eckert who is in Fiume, Austria-Hungry. Usually Mrs. Hultman receives a letter every Monday. While not much anxiety is felt for her safety, Mrs. Hultman is more than anxious to hear from her. Her last letter spoke of the unrest but at that time war had not been declared. Mrs. Hultman thinks that there is a letter somewhere on the way but as mail and everything else is delayed by the war there is no telling when it will arrive.

Miss Helen Cashman, sister-in-law of Dr. D. B. Reardon of Hancock street, is in Europe and relatives and friends are anxious for news concerning her safety. She left on a trip several months ago and was last heard from on July 26 when she was in northern Italy. She expected at that time to go north and if such is the case may be in the center of hostilities.

From Edward Farnsworth of Boston Senator Weeks has received the following cable, dated Genoa: "Situation Americans, Italy, critical, immediate action necessary for consul-general to secure ship for 300 passengers but government must authorize and guarantee cost; money unobtainable; Government action absolutely necessary."

A LESSON IN GEOGRAPHY.

Do You Know How Far East South America's West Coast Is?

In his book, the "Conquest of the Tropics," Frederick Upham Adams calls attention to some little known geographical facts:

Most of us picture Havana as nearly south of New York, when in fact it is about south of Detroit. A study of a map of the new world discloses the disconcerting fact that all of the west coast of South America is east of Detroit, and that most of it is hundreds of miles east of New York city. The truth of the matter is that we should call that continent "Southeast America."

I also made the astounding discovery that a considerable portion of South America lies north of the southerly sections of North America. When we set sail from Colon for Santa Marta, Colombia, we do not head south or southeast, we point our prow northeast. This is almost as puzzling as the other fact to the effect that Colon, the Caribbean port (the supposed east port), is twenty odd miles west of Panama City, which is on the Pacific and presumably west end of the canal. It is positively uncanny to look out of a window of the Tivoli hotel, in Panama City, and watch the sun rise squarely out of the Pacific ocean! Of course an accurate map justifies the sun in selecting the Pacific for rising rather than setting purposes, but it never seemed right or proper to me. Oceans should stay where they belong, and the Pacific has no business to twist itself to the east of Panama.

TRAVEL IN SAN SALVADOR.

Crossing Rivers and Swamps Tourists Often Get Free Baths.

More than once, says John H. Weeks in his book "Among the Primitive Bakongo," I had in my San Salvador journey a strong krooboy a part of whose duty it was to carry me over the many streams and swamps that crossed the path. His name was a remarkable one. I do not know how he came by it, but the first time I met him I asked him his name, and he replied in krooboy English, "My name, massa, be Napoleon Bonaparte."

Sometimes Napoleon would have me on his shoulders in the middle of a river, and feeling the rush of water against his legs he would begin to quake and say: "Massa, I no fit for carry you. I go let you fall."

I would reply, "Napoleon, I fit for give you one cupful of rice suppose you no drop me."

He would then take a few more careful paces, and feeling the swirl of water more strongly about his legs and the stones slipping beneath his feet he would nervously call out in his curious English: "Massa, massa, I no fit! I bound for let you fall."

Napoleon often received from me the promise of two or three cupfuls of rice to steady him before he landed me high and dry upon the farther bank. At times we were not so fortunate. Then both of us went down into the water, and we congratulated ourselves when it was a stream and not a nasty, muddy swamp.

Shampoo.

A mid-eighteenth century traveler, who is the first person known to have made English of the word "shampoo," wrote that "shampooing is an operation not known in Europe and is peculiar to the Chinese, which I had once the curiosity to go through and for which I paid but a trifle. However, had I not seen several Chinese merchants shampooed before me I should have been apprehensive of danger, even at the sight of all the different instruments." The original "shampoo," as this traveler's detailed account and other allusions for long after his time show, was very much what we call "massage" now. It was from India that the word really came, and it represents the imperative of a verb meaning to knead.

Green Animals a Puzzle.

What makes some animals green? If any reader knows and will tell he will settle a big dispute now going on among scientists who have vowed to find out. Green colorations belong chiefly to insects, worms and reptiles. Whether they get their green hue from the plants they eat or not is a question that has not been conclusively settled, although it has been shown that they will retain their color even when denied all green food.—Exchange.

Giraffe Meat.

The flesh of young giraffe, especially that of a young cow, is extremely good, somewhat like veal, with a game-like flavor. The tongue, from eighteen to twenty inches long, is also very good. But the marrow bones afford the greatest luxury to the South African hunter.

Woman's Aim.

A bullet shot upward from the earth goes up to aphelion with a retarding or decreasing motion, but a bullet fired by a woman at a burglar will turn a street corner and hit an innocent pedestrian in the leg nine times out of ten.—Florida Times-Union.

Having None.

"I am an income tax collector, sir, called"—
"I am an artist."
"Oh, I beg your pardon" (withdraws)—London Tatler.

Alarming.

"Your son's case, my dear Mrs. Comeup, is one of eclectic occultism."
"Law me, professor! Is it catching?"—Baltimore American.

Better Toll Rates

New telephone toll regulations provide that unless you talk to the person asked for there will be NO CHARGE FOR THE TOLL CALL.

Formerly a reduced rate was charged when the number called was reached even though the person asked for was absent or not ready to talk.

N. B. The above does not apply to two-number toll points to which calls for designated persons are not accepted.

Why not make a call now to some one who would like to hear from you today? No talk---no charge.

Wouldn't it be worth the price?

If you don't know the rate, ask the Toll Operator. No charge for a call for rates. If you want the Toll Operator to report to you the actual cost of a completed call, please notify her when you give the order for the call.

A toll call is more satisfactory than a letter or a telegram, and in some instances is more economical, because you get the message and the answer for one price.

FIGHT ON THE ADRIATIC.

A fleet of 13 vessels of the Austrian navy sailed south from the Adriatic sea this morning to join the two German ships which were ordered from the harbor of Messina on Saturday. It is expected that a short sharp battle is impending. Included in the fleet were submarines built at Fiume, Austria, under the direction of Louis Echardt, who married Miss Alice B. Hultman of Quincy.

Genuine Pity.

FIFTEEN CLASSES IN QUINCY OPEN RACE

Stiff Southwest Wind Makes It an Ideal Day for Yacht Racing

Mishaps to the Gabby and the Areyto

The annual open race of the Quincy Yacht club, Monday afternoon, was one of the most successful races that the club has ever held. There was a stiff south-westerly breeze which sent the yachts over the course at race horse speed. There was a fleet of 63 yachts and power boats that came to the line for the start.

There were two minor accidents which marred the success of the race as a result of which two of the yachts lost their sticks. The first of these was the Gabby of George W. Glover of the Squantum club which was run into by the sonder boat Panther on the way down from Wollaston to the club house, as a result of which the mast of the Gabby was broken into three pieces and she was towed to the float and tied up.

In class A, the Areyto of Commodore Drew of the Squantum club had her mast carried away while rounding the second buoy of the course. The Areyto had been beating to the windward and tacked around the home mark but before the sheets could be let off for the reach to the next mark, a shackle in the starboard preventor-backstay parted. This brought all the strain on the masts and shrouds, and the mast snapped off clean to the deck. The sheet was quickly gathered in and a power boat immediately put out from the club house float and towed the disabled boat to a mooring off the channel.

This is the second time this seaso that the Areyto has carried away her stick, the first time being at Marblehead last week.

Class P was the first to get away at 1.55. Just before the starting gun, the Britomart, Italia and Nutmeg III, which had been jockeying for position were timed too soon and were coming around the judges boat to cross again when they came together. The Britomart hit the Italia well astern breaking off part of the rail.

The judges boat was anchored out some distance from the clubhouse, as all races under the auspices of the club start outside the channel where there is sure to be plenty of water In the judges boat aside from the judges, John O. Hall, George S. Morse, W. H. Huy, Edward M. Wight was a representative from each of the clubs belonging to the Inter-Club Association.

There was no danger of the time limit being exceeded in the race, for with the stiff wholesale breeze the yachts made excellent time. Four of the classes finished before 4 o'clock and the other classes came in about as fast as the judges could handle them.

How a Vermont Boy Won Success

Mr. L. M. K. graduated from the Commercial Department of Burdett College in 1903. He was the third of three brothers to graduate from Burdett. Obtaining a position with a manufacturing company in his home town in Vermont, his efficiency and specialized training won him rapid promotion. He is now a member of the firm.

Thousands of other Burdett graduates have achieved similar success.

Burdett College specializes in business education. It teaches more than bookkeeping, stenography and typewriting. It trains students in all the fundamental principles of business.

The courses are: Applied Business and Management, Business, Combined, Shorthand, Secretarial, Normal and Finishing.

A good position provided every graduate. Fall term begins Sept. 8.

CITY EXPENSES FOR CHARITIES

The Annual Cost to Quincy is Over $20,000

According to the last annual report of the Statistics for Municipal Expenses, the cities of Massachusetts are not expending as much for charities as other departments.

The Bureau of Statistics classes under charities:—general administration, the almshouse, outside relief, relief given by other cities, hospitals, etc.

The smaller cities of Gloucester, Chelsea and Pittsfield expended more than Quincy, while the larger city of Everett expended less. The list below includes all cities of less than 80,000 and more than 15,000:

HAVE REACHED PORTO RICO

Argentine Naval Crew Will Soon Be Here

The Argentine transports Pampa and Chaco sailed from San Juan, Porto Rico, Monday for Boston. Aboard the ships are 900 officers and sailors to man the dreadnought Rivadavia which is near completion at the Fore River shipyard in this city.

A large force of workmen is making the final adjustments on the ship so that she will be ready for the Argentine government on Aug. 24, but the ceremonies will take place regardless of whether or not all of the work is finished.

The Rivadavia it is expected will leave the shipyard the day before and on its departure the U. S. S. Nevada will be swung over to the fitting out dock where it will be rushed to completion.

The inauguration of the Safety First campaign has been postponed until after the dreadnought leaves the yard and the company is making preparations to bring their new rules into effect the following day.

CUP FOR MEEMER.

Another skipper who returned from Marblehead on Sunday with a happy smile illuminating his face was John T. Cavanagh, skipper of the Meemer, for as a result of the races last week she captured a handsome solid silver cup. The Meemer was on hand Monday to sail in the race under the auspices of her home club but as she was the only boat to appear in class M she did not sail, for unless a boat has a competitor in a race, she gets no prize.

WATER RECEIPTS HEAVY.

Money seemed to roll into the City Treasurer's office on Monday almost by the bucketful. It was the last day of grace for paying water bills and during the day and early evening, City Treasurer Curtis says that 700 called to pay water bills, and that the receipts from this source alone amounted to over $5,000.

PROTEST FROM SHIP BUILDERS

Boston Committee Oppose the Jones Amendment

President Powell of the Fore River Shipbuilding Coporation left Monday night with a committee from Boston which included Mayor Curley, to oppose the passage of the Jones amendment to the Underwood-Nelson bill, which comes up in the Senate today. If the amendment is passed it allows vessels of another nation to change their registration and would do away with the possibility of ship building to any great extent.

Besides opposing the Jones amendment, the committee will oppose any further legislation which has for its object the admission of foreign ships more than five years old to American registration.

This action was decided upon at a meeting held Monday noon at the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange of representatives of shipping, manufacturing, agricultural and real estate interests.

A telegram from Senator Gallinger announced that action had been postponed until Tuesday.

The general sentiment of those present was that Congress should not rush through acts which they claimed would only relieve the immediate congestion of crops on the seaboard and would tend to wipe out the American merchant marine entirely. The Salsbury clause was characterized as an attempt "to create an American merchant marine over night."

In opposing the Jones amendment, the committee will have to overcome the united efforts of the representatives of the interior and the West, who believe that in this clause lies the only solution of the problem of finding a market for the bumper crops which they have on hand. Capt. Crowley claimed that the foreign ships admitted to American registration by this clause would drive the American ships off the waters.

H. B. Tindale of the Emery Line claimed that if allowed to pass it would entangle the United States in the European war, because the countries engaged in that war would not respect the neutrality of ships which had recently changed their registration from a hostile country to that of a neutral country.

Mr. Martin said there are approximately 175 American-built, American-owned and American-registered vessels now engaged in coastwise trade and about 135 vessels owned in the United States, but registered in Foreign countries, which are available for trans-Atlantic transportation and which could be used to supply the present need.

The Underwood bill as amended by Senator Jones, would enable citizens of the United States to purchase Foreign-built vessels more than five years old, and would admit them to American registry for foreign trade. It was passed by the House Saturday and comes before the Senate today.

TABER—MacDONALD.

Edward A. Taber of 19 Bell street, Houghs Neck, one of the best outfielders in base ball up to his retirement from the game three seasons ago, and Miss Margaret A. MacDonald of Boston, were married on July 25. The ceremony was performed in Boston by Charles A. Feyhl. Mr. Taber is employed by the firm of Stone & Underhill of Boston, of which former Mayor Eugene R. Stone is a partner. His bride is a stenograph and is well known in Dorchester where she has made her home for several years.

HIT BY FLAG POLE.

Walter M. Roberts, 32, of Summit avenue, Wollaston, and Herbert Rice 14, of West Medford, were injured on Hanover street, Boston, Monday afternoon by a flag pole on the top of the four story building at number 90-104 which broke off close to the bottom and fell to the ground. They were taken to the Relief hospital and treated for minor cuts and bruises. The accident was one of the most peculiar on the records of the Boston police.

POOR WEIGHTS CONDEMNED

James M. Cantfill, sealer of weights and measures, has completed his examination of the weights and measures used in the pharmacies of the city. During his trip, which extended over a period of several weeks, he tested 343 weights. He found that 23 per cent. or 74 of the number in use varied from the standard prescribed by law.

Mr. Cantfill's campaign was in line with that conducted throughout the state by the state sealers of weights and measures. Their report incorporates flagrant violations. Boston officials have had a similar experience.

Mr. Cantfill found the Quincy druggist more fortunate than some of their brethren, most of the discrepencies being in the grams and scruples. All of the poor weights were condemned and the proprietors immediately conformed to his recommendations and purchased new ones.

It is safe to say that since the examination that all weights in use by the druggists of the city are standard.

DOG CASE IN COURT.

Mrs. Daniel Whitacre was summoned into court this morning by Officer Henry Thorne on a complaint issued under section 148 of the dog law for neglecting to keep confined a dog supposed to be dangerous. The dog is one which it is claimed jumped and bit the 9 year old son of Officer Thorne on the left arm. At that time the dog was not licensed, but as soon as Officer Thorne served notice relative to the dog it is alleged that Mrs. Whitacre hastened to City Hall and had the dog licensed under the name of her son. After the hearing this morning Mrs. Whitacre was found guilty and ordered to forfeit the sum of $10. She took an appeal.

ILLUMINATED CLOCK.

The thousands of people who use the sidewalk on Hancock street between Granite and School street will appreciate and welcome the large illuminated clock which T. L. Williams is to erect in front of his jewelry store on Hancock street. The clock which stands 15 feet high rests on a concrete foundation at the edge of the sidewalk. The dial of the clock will be 2 feet 6 inches in diameter and will be illuminated at night by electricity. It is what is known as an opal ribbed dial and will be very attractive. Beneath the dial will be a pair of eye glasses which will be illuminated at night and will flash, giving the eyes an appearance of winking.

RANDOLPH FIRE.

TWENTY-FOUR FOOT CHANNEL DESIRED

Without it Battleships Cannot Come to Shipyard for Needed Repairs

Hearing to be Held at Houghs Neck Friday Noon

A number of prominent citizens have been invited to meet Col. W. E. Craighill, of the United States District Engineers office at Boston, and staff to an informal luncheon at the Quincy Yacht clubhouse Friday noon for a conference, relative to deepening the channel of the Weymouth Fore River to a depth of 24 feet.

Among those who have been invited to the conference are the Committee on Water Front of the Board of Trade, Mayor Miller, President Whiton of the City Council, the selectmen of Hingham, Weymouth and Braintree; ex-Councilman Herbert S. Barker, representing the lumber trade; John F. Merrill, chairman of the County Commissioners; ex-Mayor Eugene R. Stone, Thomas Swithin and Herman S. McIntire, representing the real estate interests; Eben W. Sheppard representing the coal industry; W. G. Shaw, of the merchants branch of the Board of Trade, President Powell, Treasurer Sedgwick and Secretary MacQuarrie of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation, and representatives of the local press.

The original hearing was held at the office of Col. Craighill in Boston, July 10. The hearing was relative to the bill now before the United States Senate for dredging the Weymouth Fore river to a depth of 24 feet.

The dredging of this channel is of the utmost importance to the City of Quincy as it would make possible the entrance of any merchant steamships or battleships to come to the Fore River yards for repairs, as well as being of importance to the business enterprises that are located along the banks of the Fore river.

The estimated cost of deepening the river to 24 feet is $389,958.80, and is the largest amount anyone has ever asked for the improvement of the river Dock and Water Front Commissioner Frank Fessenden Crane has been particularly active in seeking appropriations from the government for the improvement of this river, the above mentioned sum being in addition to appropriations of $110,000 and $21,000 that have already been secured.

A few days ago Col. Craighill in a letter of Commissioner Crane suggested that a conference on the matter be held in Quincy, setting the date at which he could be present as Friday, Aug. 14. Acting upon his suggestion Commissioner Crane has arranged the lunch and conference as noted above. The affair will be entirely informal and what speaking there is will be at the dining table.

After the conference Col. Craighill will visit the Fore River shipyard for a tour of inspection.

CRUISE TO MAINE.

One of the most enjoyable trips of the season is being made on board the 30 foot power boat "Maguez" by Angus McLeod (capt.) and crew composed of Charles Bishop (cook), Eddie Carson William Clements, Russell Farquahason, Edgar Nicolls, down the Main coast stopping at Gloucester and visiting friends. Sailing from there to Salisbury beach, to York beach at which an elaborate lobster spread was enjoyed. Sailing Tuesday for Cape Popoise, Prouts Neck, Pine Point and Old Orchard at which place they camped for three days sailing Saturday morning for Portland. Expecting to leave Portland, Monday morning for home after visiting various islands in Portland harbor. On homeward trips stopping at Kennebunk Port, Hampton beach and Annisquam.

STATE PRIMARIES.

The State primaries will be held on Sept. 22, and although the Jewish residents in other parts of the state where the polls close at 4 o'clock will not vote because it is their New Year, the Quincy men will not be affected. The Jewish New Year closes at sun down on that day and the Quincy polls will be open until nine o'clock, fully three hours after. A movement is on foot in other cities and towns to change the hour of closing so that all entitled to the vote will be able to do so.

BUY FLOUR IN BAGS

During the past week or so there has been an unprecedented demand for flour. Prices everywhere have gone skyward. War in Europe is of course the cause given. Really it's simply speculation. No Flour is being exported and the mills are running full blast. A bumper wheat crop is being harvested. We believe flour will be selling soon at much lower prices and advise our customers to buy bags rather than barrels just now And please note,—our Present Prices are 10 to 15 cents lower than Boston Stores are quoting. Few people write letters from the summer resorts. It saves valuable time to call up the old man by long distance and get him to reverse the charge.

It is not expected that the war will affect our national prosperity so long as the baseball games continue.

When a married man starts on his vacation, his friends inquire: "Does your wife go along, or is this a pleasure trip?"

The principal activity of the society girl at the summer resorts is sitting on the piazza and keeping her white shoes clean.

AMERICAN SHIPPING.

The restless, achieving American people cut the Panama continental backbone that defied every other race of workers. They light and protect rocky and sandy coasts with an efficiency elsewhere unknown. But in the operation of shipping they have made a failure. It is the one great world industry which they are content to leave to other peoples.

In time of peace, a profitable avenue for labor and capital is lost. In time of war, it may not be possible to get products transported to foreign shores, as the country is now realizing with consternation.

There has been a half century of controversy between different ideas. Shall the government pay subsidies, shall it remove the restrictions placed on foreign built ships, shall it place preferential duties on imports in foreign ships? It seems impossible to get a majority for any one plan.

For thirty years it was maintained, that if Americans could buy ships abroad, an enormus tonnage now owned by our business men, but sailed under foreign laws, would come under our flag. The law of 1912 permitted such registry, but no such ships have been transferred.

The heart of the problem is this, which must be admitted from all points of view: It costs more to operate under the American flag. A prominent ship owner, who has vessels under both registries, says it costs him $133.15 per day for an American ship carrying 1,100,000 feet of lumber, and but $100.81 per day for a British ship carrying 3,200,000 feet of lumber.

A sailor's lot is called a dog's life. The American government has tried to ameliorate it by a code of protective laws. This makes the operation of ships cost more money. It is not likely that our people want any necessary protections removed. But a shipping code largely created as far back as 1792 must contain many burdensome restrictions, that could and should be removed by agreement of all interests.

USE THE CROSSWALKS.

It would appear that the city council of Cleveland tried to stop the practice of jay walking in that city, by denouncing it. Jay walking, be it known, is the practice of walking across a street at any old place, rather than where the city has constructed crosswalks. One walker may start all right and then take a diagonal course away from the crosswalk, or he may dig across wherever he listeth. In either case he is classed as a jay walker and the act so described is jay walking.

Of course there is more or less danger connected with this practice in crowded srteets and accidents are frequently caused thereby. But no city so far as we have ever seen, has ever sought to interfere with the practice officially until it was done in Cleveland.

Even in Cleveland no penalty was provided and for this reason the law has not been strictly obeyed, although the passage of the same is said to have had the effect of lessening the evil.

Now the Plain Dealer of that city wants the resolution amended so that a fine will be provided for the offence of jay walking with a view to still further discouraging the practice.

This certainly seems a reasonable enough thing to propose. The city builds crosswalks for the people to cross the streets upon and the law protects them when they are on these crosswalks. Within a month some judge has ruled that when a pedestrian is on a crosswalk, automobile drivers and drivers of other conveyances must look out for him and if any accident happens, the driver is wholly responsible in the eyes of the law.

So if pedestrians are to be protected on crosswalks there is no reason why they should not confine their walking in crowded streets to these passageways and not endanger themselves and others by diving through wherever fancy might dictate.—Taunton Herald.

UNTRAINED DOCTORS.

In a list of eighteen states that do not adequately protect the public against untrained doctors is included Massachusetts. Thirty-one other states are making use of legal power conferred upon them to discriminate between medical colleges and to refuse recognition to those which are of low standard or are not properly equipped to furnish their students a satisfactory training in modern medicine. Seven of these thirty-one states have come so well to recognize the importance of this matter of intelligent and comprehensive training on the part of those who set up to care for the physical well-being of the people, that they will not license the graduate of any medical college who has not first completed at least two years of study in an approved liberal arts college before entering upon the study of medicine.

In marked contrast to these latter are the eighteen states whose state boards of registration in medicine either do not have the legal authority to pass on the character or standing of the colleges whose graduates may be admitted to examination, or are not using such power as they have—with Maine and Massachusetts the only northeastern states in the group of seventeen east of Illinois and north of Tennessee and North Carolina, and with Massachusetts one of those without the legal right to discriminate against school or system. It was thirteen years ago that this state legislated to prohibit such discrimination, when it doubtless prided itself upon its broad and liberal policy. But today this legislation operates to make Massachusetts one of the dumping grounds for the output of the inferior colleges.

Of such inferior medical schools there exist thirty that are not recognized in from fourteen to thirty-two states—that is to say, whose diplomas are not recognized in some one or more of thirty-two states because of the low standard of the schools. The Journal of the American Medical association calls to the attention of the prospective medical student the advisability of assuring himself that the school he proposes to enter is on the list of those whose diploma will qualify him for examination and for a license to practice medicine in any state he may choose. The schools from which such recognition is withheld are not making the fact public, but such information is easily available. It is true that hundreds of students have pursued courses in these colleges only to find too late that they are barred from examination and practice in some of the more exacting states.

In this list of exacting states Massachusetts should promptly enroll herself. There is no virtue in a liberality that jeopardizes health and life. Even Egypt denies a license for the practice of medicine to candidates not graduates of recognized colleges.—New Bedford Standard.

Too Many Ideas, Too Little Drama

By HENRY ARTHUR JONES, English Dramatist

THERE IS SOMETHING GRAVE AND STARTLING THE MATTER WITH OUR THEATER. BOTH IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA IT HAS BEEN ATTACKED BY A DEEP, INSIDIOUS AND VERY DEFINITE DISEASE. ITS SUCCESS IS ENDANGERED BY TOO CONSCIENTIOUS A PURPOSE. WE ARE SUFFERING FROM AN OVERDOSE OF "THE DRAMA OF IDEAS."

The playwright must be cautioned against the dangerous encroachments of "ideas," against rampant "purposes" and "convictions" and "social regeneration." We have too much of all this. WE HAVE TOO MANY IDEAS AND TOO LITTLE DRAMA. The theater does not need to be more helpful; IT NEEDS TO BE MORE HUMAN. The great dramatists do not present social theories; they portray human passions. Give us plays, not tracts.

SUPPOSEDLY CLOSED TO INVADERS

France Forces Vosges Passes Into German Territory

GAIN A COMMANDING POSITION IN ALSACE

French Aeroplanes Spy Out Positions of Enemy and Prevent Surprises of Their Own Army's Positions—Fighting Is Desperate, Advance Being Made by Sharp Dashes From Point to Point—Austrian Troops Hastening to Support of Germans—Tide of Battle Turning From Liege, Where Situation Is a "Draw"

London, Aug. 11.—Interest in the war has shifted abruptly from Belgium to Alsace.

The French advance, regarded at first as a mere feinting movement, is developing with extraordinary rapidity.

If the messages received in London can be believed, and it must be remembered that they come from sources unfriendly to Germany, the French movement has now become fully as menacing to Germany as the German advance through Belgium and Luxemburg has been to France.

The penetration into upper Alsace of the French colored troops will provoke German wrath. These troops have been an irritant to Germany, principally because she has been unable to do anything in this line with her own colored populations.

The check at Liege was apparently a severe shock to the invaders; the overwhelming success of the French in their attempt to wrest back historic Alsace has been equally surprising.

Not only have Mulhausen and Colmar fallen into French hands, but another French army, hitherto unsuspected, has broken through the German defenses in the Vosges mountains and is now menacing Strassburg from the southwest.

Mountain Paasses Forced

The seven mountain passes through the Vosges were supposedly strongly closed to invaders. But news came to Paris that in a desperate battle Saturday two of the passes were seized and a further French advance Sunday morning gained for the French a commanding position overlooking Markirch, northest of Colmar.

The importance of the new attack is shown by the fact that the French can now attack Neu Breisach from front and rear.

This is one of the strongly fortified German cities of Alsace and has been the refuge for the German troops driven back from Altkirch, Mulhausen and Colmar.

The battle Saturday night on the high ridges of the Vosges for the first time brought the much-vaunted French aeroplane force into a real engagement. They were not of much service in the night, but the next morning they were able to spy out the German position and to prevent any surprises of the French positions.

One officer was wounded, but the pilot planed quickly down to the French lines and the officer was hurried to the hospital at Epinal, where the wounded soldiers of both armies are being cared for.

Desperate Fighting

The fighting was desperate, but the character of the country, broken hills and great forests, made it quite unlike the battling at Liege. The French advanced by sharp dashes from one advantageous spot to another, dislodging the enemy by accurate firing.

Parisian dispatches report that the German marksmanship was poor, but it is impossible to say how much credence can be given such reports.

When Sunday morning dawned the French held the passes of Bonhomme and Saint Marie, both of them suitable for the passage of all sections of an army. It is admitted that the losses on both sides were heavy, although no estimate of the number slain and wounded has been sent out.

The French advance from the south, although headed by General Joffre, was not regarded seriously by the German defenders of Alsace, who surrendered Mulhausen and Colmar almost without a struggle. Neither of the cities is of any strategic importance.

Aid Hurried Forward

But when dispatches were received of the daring break of the French through the Vosges, reinforcements were rapidly sent from the army of the Rhine, and over the two captured passes other French columns were hurried.

No news of the fighting that must have since taken place there has been received at London, but it is probable that the two French armies have already joined and that they are drawn up in the forest of Hardt, which rises about Neu Breisach. The southern part of the forest was razed by the Germans who fled from Colmar, but the dense growth about Neu Breisach is probably sheltering an army of many thousands of French soldiers.

Neu Breisach is strongly fortified, and here the French will encounter stronger resistance than they did at Mulhausen and Colmar. The importance of the French advance is emphasized by the fact that the Germans, in a vain attempt to check it, flooded the valley of the river Seille, but the water did not rise high enough to stop the French.

Austrians to Help Germany

Austrian troops, now officially at war with France, are coming up rapidly to the support of the Germans, and a battle that may turn the tide of war from Belgium and Luxemburg is confidently prophesied by some military experts.

Little fighting is reported near Liege. The German army massed in and about the city is now said to comprise 120,000 men, but Belgian messages state that the terrible battling about the forts has so weakened the invaders that a day or two more must elapse before another attempt is made to reduce the strongholds about the city.

Just at present, the situation resembles a drawn game at chess. The Belgians have not forces enough to drive out the Germans and the guns of the forts cannot be trained against the city.

AMBASSADORS QUIT POSTS

France Severs Diplomatic Relations With Austria-Hungary

It was officially announced at Paris that France had broken off diplomatic relations with Austria-Hungary.

The French ambassador at Vienna has left the Austrian capital, and the Austro-Hungarian ambassador at Paris has asked for his passports.

In announcing the breaking off of relations with Austria, the French foreign office made the following statement:

"Contrary to assurances given by Austria to the French minister of foreign affairs that no Austrian troops were taking part in the Franco-German war, the French government has ascertained beyond any possible doubt that certain Austrian troops are at present in Germany, outside the Austrian frontier.

"These troops, which have set free certain German troops destined to be employed in fighting the French, ought indubitably, de facto and de jure, to be considered as acting against France. In these circumstances the French ambassador was ordered to leave Vienna.

"The Austrian ambassador at Paris, on being informed of France's decision, asked for his passports."

HUNDRED SPIES SHOT

Severe Military Precautions Taken by Belgian Authorities

A Brussels dispatch says Belgium has been covered with a network of German spies. Six hundred already have been arrested and 100 were shot Monday.

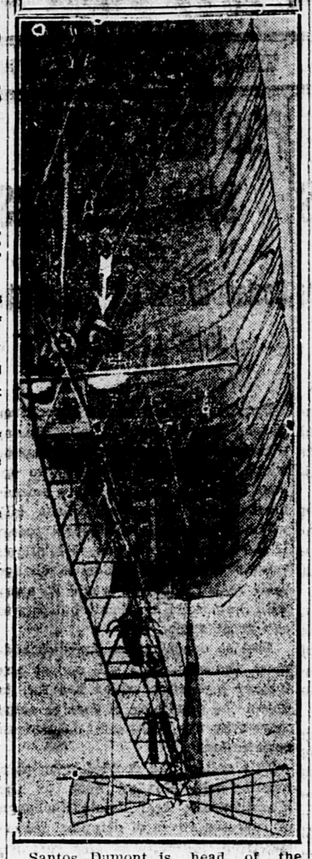

Just before and after the fighting begun private signs were discovered on bridges, military works and aqueducts, indicating that those structures should be blown up.

Severe precautions have now been taken by the military authorities, and no one is admitted at the railway stations without military permits. Automobiles are halted at eery mile.

The war minister has issued a proclamation that every German and Austrian who does not declare himself within twenty-four hours will be considered a spy. Since the Flanders provinces were placed under martial law more than 2000 spies have been arrested.

SANTOS DUMONT

French Aviator Is Shown Seated In a Big Dirigible

Santos Dumont is head of the French aviation corps. He is now scouting on the German frontier and has rendered efficient service since the start of hostilities. Dumont is shown in this picture in one of his big dirigibles. The photograph was taken as the big machine left the ground and is a close view of the bottom of the car.

CANADIAN PORTS CLOSED

Vessels Forbidden to Sail From Montreal, Quebec and Halifax

The ports of Montreal, Quebec and Halifax have been ordered closed.

The reply of military authorities at Ottawa to inquiries for the reasons for the closing of the ports leaves it to be inferred that they are in possession of information that it is not considered wise to make public, though they would not say so in so many words.

A high official said that from time to time certain information was received, pointing to the necessity of certain precautionary measures, and action must be taken without giving any special reasons. The ports, he said, were not actually closed, though vessels were forbidden to sail. The order might not be enforced longer than a few days. Owing to the rigid restrictions on news of all strategic moves, it is difficult to obtain explanations or orders issued from military headquarters.

FORTIFICATIONS GONE

Montenegrin Naval Station Is Destroyed by Austrian Cruisers

Details of the bombardment of Antivari, Montenegro, indicate that the city's fortifications were utterly levelled by the destructive fire from Austrian warships.

Montenegrin troops attempted to reply with small arms, and one of the Austrian cruisers then turned its fire on the city proper, destroying a number of houses. The naval station, with all buildings, was destroyed. The wireless towers were rendered useless.

Montenegrins took refuge in the hills. The cruisers made no attempt to land men and after they had silenced the Montenegrin batteries and troops, withdrew from the harbor.

Montenegrin troops continued their victorious march into Bosnia, capturing a number of cities.

OCCURRED IN NORTH SEA

British Officials Confirm Sinking of German Submarine

Purposely not locating the scene of the encounter, the British admiralty confirmed the sinking by the British cruiser squadron of the German submarine U15.

The fact that the official statement said the "main British cruiser fleet" had been attacked by the submarines was taken as proof positive that the battle occurred in the North sea.

The admiralty said the British fleet had suffered no damage from the submarines' attack.

JAPAN MAY TAKE PART

Thought to Be Getting Ready to Assist Great Britain

An all-night cabinet conference and activity in the navy department has strengthened the popular belief at Tokio that Japan is about to take an active part in the war.

Whether Japan will participate in an attack on the German colony of Tsingtau is a question about which British subjects and other foreigners in China are gravely concerned. It is believed in Pekin that serious "conversations" are now proceeding between Tokio and London in order to determine the future status of that place.

In the meantime German cruisers are said to be searching the Yellow sea and causing British, French and Russian merchant vessels to remain in the various ports. The German fleet at Tsingtau has already seized the Russian steamer Riazan, carrying British subjects, has driven a hundred merchantmen to the refuge of Japanese ports, and has embarrassed the entire Japanese shipping in the Orient.

A British fleet proceeding toward Tsingtau passed Shanghai. It is believed that German warships are bottled up in Tsingtau harbor.

TAKEN TO BERMUDA

Big German Liner, Loaded With Coal, Captured by British Cruiser

While incoming ocean liners at New York brought confirmation that foreign warships are cruising off the American Atlantic coast, strict censorship over the cables leading out of Bermuda perhaps kept hidden from public knowledge the fate of the North German Lloyd vessel Kronprinz Wilhelm, which took 6000 tons of coal out of New York under cover of darkness before the battleship Florida began its enforcement of the neutrality laws.

The British cruiser Essex has the German liner under capture and is taking her, a prize of war, into Hamilton, Bermuda, according to wireless messages declared to have been overheard at sea.

THERE WITH BOTH HANDS.

An incident faithfully proving the old adage, "A friend in need is a friend indeed," and at the same time portraying the gallantry of F. S. Rock came under observation of The Marlboro Times reporter very recently.

A lady of faultless quality, evidently, richly attired, but wearing a hobble dress skirt, was endeavoring to gain access to a car at Monument Square. The narrowness of the bottom of her skirt would not permit her to take the high stride to gain the step. Discomfiture of the kind which pervades some men's faces when confronted by a small but very bothersome problem which diplomacy or ingenuity cannot overcome, and often finds vent in language more forcible than polite, overshadowed the clean cut, intellectual outlines of the lady's countenance. But she couldn't exercise the man's excusable privilege in her plight.

We have seen some men pull up their trouser legs on a like occasion, but such subterfuge availed nothing in her situation, and to raise the bottom of her skirt the required distance to gain the necessary freedom of either limb, was forbidden even by the most liberal of ladylike deportment.

As if contemplating such awful overstepping of the bounds of propriety, she glanced forward and backward. The conductor, as if to aggravate her predicament, said "All aboard."

Turning slightly away from the car, she seemed to have resolved not to show the quality of her hosiery or forfeit her modesty, whatever the result.

Mr. Rock, standing a few yards distant with a couple of friends, had been silently observing the lady's dilemma. Adjured by one of the friends to lend a helping hand, he said, "Hw?"

"Grab her and throw her up on the platform—there's no other way," was the response.

"That won't do, but I have an idea," said Frank.

Without tipping his hat or begging pardon for abruptness, for there wasn't time for either, Frank quickly approached the lady and opening his hands like a fellow would do in drinking water from a spring when he had no cup, he bent over and said: "Lady, put your right foot in my hands and you will make the step all right."

"Oh, sir, I daren't," she said.

"Quick, go ahead. Don't be bashful. There's nothing to fear," replied Frank, as he lowered his hands to make her part of the act look simple. The next instant the dainty foot rested in Frank's palms. "Now straighten up!" commanded Frank, and the command was obeyed. With her left hand on the sidebar of the corner of the car, and Frank gently but sturdily performing the uplift, there was nothing for her to do at the proper height but to step off Frank's palms on to the car step.

It was a pretty act, neatly performed, and the service was acknowledged by a series of smiles while the car was departing.

MRS. WILSON WAS OF AMERICA'S HIGHEST TYPE WOMANLY WOMAN

Home and Family and Good She Could Do Her Objects in Life.

Aid and Comforter of the President In Most Trying Moments.

Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, the wife of the president, died in the White House at 5 p. m. Aug. 6.

Thus spoke Mrs. Woodrow Wilson in an interview a year and five months ago, when she became mistress of the White House and "the first lady of the land."

A woman of high culture and exceptional charm, she set about practicing what she preached in her new sphere the same as she had done when her distinguished husband was governor of New Jersey and before that president of Princeton university. Her home had been her greatest concern and joy since her marriage in 1885, and Washington life with its glamour and social demands left her preference unaffected.

To her mind the home was woman's place quite as much as the world was man's.

Her Doubts on Suffrage.

Of suffrage Mrs. Wilson said:

"When I think of the value as a weapon it might have for the large number of women who earn their own living I am inclined to favor it. When I consider its possible effect on the larger interests of society as a whole I am not so sure."

In an interview in February, 1913, Mrs. Wilson said:

"I do not deprecate the liking for good clothes in any woman, but I am perfectly sure that women who spend a large portion of their time shopping for pretty things and standing for hours to be fitted do not find real happiness in that sort of thing. I think women acquire real happiness by being interested in other things much more worth while."

An Ardent Social Worker.

While placing her home duties first, even as wife of the president of the United States, and surrounded by many who could have relieved her of the smallest responsibility, Mrs. Wilson found time to do much good work in the cause of charity, and her practical assistance in many cases of distress, together with the kindly gentleness of her character, endeared her to many classes outside official circles.

In Washington she participated in a number of civic activities, notably the affairs of the woman's welfare department of the National Civic federation, in which she accepted honorary membership.

Overtaxed Her Strength.

Friends feared that this work in addition to her social obligations was too much for the president's wife, particularly as it was finally observed that, whereas she was robust looking upon taking up her life in the White House, several months of her social and humanitarian activities seemed to prove that she had overexerted her strength.

In assisting the president in the social activities at the White House Mrs. Wilson seemed to stand up well under the strain. She received there alone several times last winter when the president was suffering with a severe cold and indigestion. At one time she stood with Secretary Bryan and shook hands with more than 1,000 boy corn growers from Ohio. The president had intended to receive the boys, but illness prevented, and Mrs. Wilson could not bear to see them disappointed.

This activity in time seemed to tell on her strength, and Passed Assistant Surgeon Grayson advised her to take her ease. She felt, however, that her duty lay in assisting the president and that her place was at his side in receiving callers.

At one of the state receptions last winter, when more than 2,000 persons had called at the White House, Mrs. Wilson fainted and had to be carried to her room. After a musical some weeks later, in February, she tripped and fell to the floor in the White House. She lay in bed for weeks, and her friends understood that her spine had been affected. She underwent an operation, but it gave only temporary relief. All this time she was suffering from Bright's disease, with which she had been afflicted from the time of her husband's inauguration.

Mrs. Wilson went to White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., last Easter, remaining for about three weeks. She passed the time in short walks with her daughters and in driving through the mountains. The president took her back to Washington, apparently much better, on the night that General Huerta refused to salute the American flag because of the Tampico incident.

She appeared at the wedding of her daughter Eleanor to Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo at the White House in May, and friends remarked upon her apparent failing health. Subsequently she denied herself to callers, contenting herself with driving through the parks with the president and spending hours among the roses in the White House garden.

Officials at the executive offices of the White House who caught glimpses of her in a wheeled chair through the trees could scarcely recognize the hearty woman they had known in the early days of the administration.

Strain on the President.

Only those in closest touch with the president knew of the severe strain under which he labored during the critical part of Mrs. Wilson's illness. Not only the press of domestic negotiation and appointments, but the burden of direction for the relief of Americans stranded abroad by reason of the European war and the precautions for preservation of stable financial conditions at home fell upon him during this trying time.

During the last days of the Mexican crisis the president was practically without a moment's rest. Weeks before that Mrs. Wilson succumbed to her ills, and every hour that the president could get from his trying labors he spent at her bedside.

During his fight in the senate on the Warburg and Jones appointments and while he was averting a strike on ninety-eight railroads the president was constantly apprehensive of Mrs. Wilson's condition. He refused nevertheless to permit any bulletin hinting at his domestic worries to be issued, even though at times Mrs. Wilson became unconscious and the end seemed to be near.

It was while sitting beside his wife, his constant helpmate and adviser, that the president wrote his message to the European crowned heads, appealing to them to stay their conflict and discuss peace.

Wouldn't Leave Capital.

For several weeks the president and his friends had endeavored to persuade Mrs. Wilson to leave Washington for a cooler climate. She steadfastly refused to leave the White House, believing that it was her duty to remain by the president as long as he was compelled to stay in Washington.

One of her chief relaxations during her illness was to peruse the newspapers and tell the president what she read in them concerning him and his administration. In this work she brought a breadth of vision, a comprehension and spirit of lofty charitableness which has been of immense value to the president, who has not personally had the time from his official duties to keep posted on the state of public opinion as expressed in the newspapers. Whenever the president was praised for his work Mrs. Wilson was enthusiastic, and when he was criticised she never failed to find a silver lining.

"Take Care of My Husband."

In one of her last conscious moments she said to Dr. Grayson, "Doctor, if I go away promise me you will take good care of my husband."

Mrs. Wilson died in the big bedroom at the southwest corner of the White House overlooking the Potomac river. The president sat beside her, holding her hand, and on the other side of the bed knelt her daughters—Mrs. William G. McAdoo, Mrs. Francis B. Sayre and Miss Margaret Wilson.

A touching incident occurred the day of Mrs. Wilson's death. When Mrs Wilson first came to Washington she was deeply interested in the improvement of the alleys and slums. Partly as a result of her interest, a bill was introduced in the house for the reclamation of the pest spots. No action was taken, and it had not been discussed much recently.

Her Dying Request.

While the president was sitting at Mrs. Wilson's bedside she recalled her interest in the slums and mentioned that it would add much to her happiness if the pending bill could be passed. The president mentioned the matter to Secretary Tumulty and asked that something be done about the bill if possible.

Mr. Tumulty discussed the bill with Secretary Bryan, Senators James, Hollis and Hughes and Chairman Johnson of the house District of Columbia committee. All promised to interest their friends, and Representative Johnson, returning to the capitol, called a meeting of his committee, where it was decided to report the bill favorably at once. It was passed by the senate.

Throughout her illness Mrs. Wilson had been continuing her interest in the poor children in Washington. This was evidenced in her desire to do away with the alleys and also in her attention to the library for the blind, where Miss Margaret Wilson had frequently sung and her mother has been a frequent visitor.

While the campaign for the elimination of the alleys was at its height Mrs Wilson visited Washington's most squalid streets and personally talked to the children and their parents. She was also a frequent visitor at settlement houses in Washington and attended many of their entertainments and festivals.

Daughter of a Minister.

Before her marriage Mrs. Woodrow Wilson was Miss Ellen Louise Axsen, daughter of a Presbyterian clergyman at Savannah, Ga. She was born in Georgia fifty years ago. Her family is said to be the only one of the name in America, and, like the president, she has one brother and one sister—Professor Stockton Axsen, voted the most popular member of the Princeton faculty, and Mrs. Edward Elliott, wife of a Princeton professor of international law.

Three daughters were born to the Wilsons, and to their upbringing Mrs Wilson devoted almost all her energies. On the eve of her husband's election she said to a friend:

"I have always had the greatest desire to be a painter, but the bringing up of three daughters and the cares of a housewife have taken up most of my life since my marriage, and just when my girls are quite able to care for themselves and my domestic problems seem over with on that account I am confronted with the prospect of the White House and the duties of the nation's hostess. But," she added, with a smile, "whatever the result of the election, I intend never entirely to desert my art."

Talented as a Painter.

And neither did she. Whenever time permitted she spent hours at her canvas in the White House with brush and palette.

That she was a painter of no small talent was generally admitted. All through life Mrs. Wilson was fond of painting, and as a girl she attended the New York Art school. Her work has been exhibited at numerous art galleries. As a landscape artist she was at her best, and many scenes she painted in Washington have received high praise from connoisseurs.

IN FIELD FOR ANOTHER TEAM

Representative Sullivan Says He is a Candidate

Representative Michael T. Sullivan of the fifth Norfolk district this morning authorized the announcement that he was a candidate for reelection. His declaration ends the rumors circulated throughout the city that he would enter the mayoralty race, to succeed Mayor John L. Miller.

REPRESENTATIVE SULLIVAN

Mr. Sullivan is now serving his second term in the House of Representatives. Last fall he defeated Walter E. Piper, Republican candidate for that office 1289 to 1254, a margin of 45 votes, and the previous year he won by 59 votes.

Mr. Sullivan will be the Democratic candidate. It is expected that Representative Sullivan will have a clear field for the nomination.

Mr. Sullivan is a member of the House committee on public lighting and was conspicuous in the fight against the acceptance of the decree of the commission on the abolition of grade crossing in Quincy by elevation.

GOOD BILL AT KINCAIDE'S

A splendid show is being presented by Manager Wardwell this week and although the house was packed last night it was comfortably cool, as the big fans furnish fresh air for the entire house every minute.

Mystero & Co., gave a fine exhibition. They escape from chains, handcuffs and all kinds of locks. A big milk can securely sealed cannot keep them prisoner, nor is a big trunk with several padlocks any more successful. They certainly are clever artists and you must see the act to appreciate it.

The Empress singing four quickly sang their way into the hearts of their hearers, and were loudly applauded. Houseley & Nicholas filled the house with good music for many minutes, playing a variety of instruments and playing them well.

The two reels of the Perils of Pauline were watched with breathless interest, as usual. The Pathe Weekly is chock full of news pictures from all over the world. Two other real good photo-plays and the orchestra complete the splendid programme.

TO GO FOR TOURISTS.

The first of the British steamships to change its registry to the United States flag as a result of the situation in Enrope will be the Plant liner Evangeline, which arrived in Boston today Monday from Halifax and other Nova Scotia ports with 206 passengers on its last trip under the British colors.

Wednesday the stars and stripes will be raised on the Evangeline for the first time and on Thursday the vessel will leave Boston for Liverpool to bring back American citizens who have been unable to secure passage to the United States.

The transfer from British to American registry is made in accordance with the Panama canal act which permits the change if the vessels have not been built more than five years.

DISTRICT COURT.

James W. Foley was fined $15 for creating a disturbance on a public conveyance.

Mrs. Emma J. Whilman and Ralph Coulter were arraigned for a statutory offence at Randolph. Cases continued until Wednesday.

Mrs. Daniel Whitacre was ordered to forfeit the sum of $10 on a complaint for neglecting to confine a dog supposed to be dangerous at Quincy.

ACETYLENE GAS.

Carbide of Calcium, Which Produces It, and an Accident.

The immense production at Niagara falls of carbide of calcium, the curious artificial stone which when bathed in water gives off acetylene gas, recalls that this substance was first manufactured in America by accident through the metallurgical operations of T. L. Wilson, near a small stream in North Carolina.

While using limestone and salt in smelting he noticed among the melted slag which day by day ran nearer to the brink of the little stream a grayish-white substance new in his experience, but thought little of it until one day the molten slag overhung the water and began to flow into it. Then suddenly a bright white flame burst out of the molten mass and enveloped it for some time.

He drew from the dry slag some of the strange material and touched a match to it, but without result. Then he poured some water upon it, and at the next trial the liberated acetylene gas broke into flame.

Thus in 1892 accident discovered a practicable way of producing that acetylene gas first discovered in England in 1836 by Edmund Day while experimenting with potassium tartrate and charcoal. It remained, however, for the intense heat of the hydroelectrical furnaces of Niagara to turn out this wonderful stone in almost perfect purity and immense quantities.—National Magazine.

GUARDING THE DIAMONDS.

Thousands of Miles of Barbed Wire Inclose Kimberley's Mines.

Machinery and barbed wire have supplanted the rude methods of breaking up diamond bearing blue earth and protecting the valuable finds employed twenty years ago in the South African diamond mines.

The depths of the strange, crater shaped hole in which the peculiar diamond bearing earth is confined are now penetrated by shafts, reaching hundreds of feet down into the earth, with forty foot levels. The broken earth is removed in closed trucks to the surface, where, after a season of exposure to sun and atmosphere strewn on the ground, it is hauled to the mills.

Here pulsators finally locate the diamonds on grease covered inclined tables, to which the diamonds adhere, while loose sand, earth and gravel are washed away by water.

Acres of ground covered by broken earth brought up from the mines contain possibly millions of dollars' worth of gems, and these treasure troves are protected by high fences of barbed wire, with intricate arrangements at the corners and at the gates. About 4,000 miles of wire are used in the defenses about the Kimberley mines.—New York Press.

Plane Trees of Cannosa.

Not least among trees which have become celebrated are two giant plane trees at Cannosa, near Ragusa, that "pearl of the Adriatic." Within three hours' walk of Ragusa, on an elevation above the tideless sea, lies the famous garden of Count Gozze. From a primitive landing place a path leads up between olives and pomegranates, myrtles and oleanders to the level spot where the two colossal trees have stood from time immemorial. The effect of the larger tree upon a spectator standing beneath it is positively overwhelming. It takes twenty-five paces merely to walk closely round the trunk, while the spreading branches reach horizontally for from thirty to forty paces and then bend upward and fork. A good sized public meeting could be held in the shade of either of these immense trees.—Wide World Magazine.

Got Away From the Odd One.

A curious story comes from the people of the Niger. A very rich man died, leaving the vast fortune (for Nigeria) of 20,001 cowries. It fell to the lot of the king to divide them among three sons, and he was at his wits' end to know what to do with the one cowrie. A wizard was called in, who gained boundless credit by doling out the cowries one by one until only six remained. These he divided into three lots of two each and gave a lot to each son. The king to this day attributes this very satisfactory outcome to conjuring.—Independent.

Food of the Chickadee.

The food of the chickadee is made up of insects and vegetable matter in the proportion of seven of the former to three of the latter. Moths and caterpillars are favorites and form about one-third of its food, while beetles, ants, wasps, bugs, grasshoppers and spiders make up the rest. The vegetable food consumed is composed of seeds, largely those of pine, poison ivy and weeds.

Sky Effects.

"This scenery isn't what it was," complained the artist.

"I can't see a bit of difference," declared the old farmer. "What do you miss?"

Work That Blinds.

Many of the workmen in the Venetian glass factories begin to lose their sight after they have passed their fortieth year and soon become totally blind. This is caused by the excessive heat and also by the glare of the flames from the glass furnaces.

The unfortunate thing about good resolutions is that they are so often made too late.

GARDEN PARTY AT WEYMOUTH

Mayor Curley of Boston a Guest and Speaker

The Garden Party committee felt that they had the favor of the weather man on Saturday, when a morning of unpromising weather developed into an ideal afternoon and evening. To be sure the sun was hot but this served to promote the sale of ice cream and temperance drinks.

The Mission Church Band of Roxbury arrived at 3 and played popular selections at intervals, between which the spectator might view the various booths and indulge in the many pastimes.

At 4 there was a parade of children in costume. There were fairies, Indian squaws and braves, clowns, gypsies, several representations of Erin. At the head of the parade were three children of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Tobin. Little John drew a jaunting car in which sat his sister Mary in an Irish costume and holding a harp. At the side of the car walked David, bearing an American flag and an Irish flag. This was accorded first prize by the judges. The second prize went to Miss Alice McIsaac who also represented Erin.

The first boys' prize went to Michael Damon, who was a wounded soldier, being cared for by two Red Cross nurses, Miss Marie Delorey and Miss Edith Tutty. Master Damon wore a noteworthy costume. His grandfather, Charles Damon, was outside guard at the White House at the time of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, and Michael wore the cap, bayonet, cartridge box, knapsack and canteen worn by his grandfather at that time. The second boys' prize was awarded to Walter Cope, who was a real gentleman of Erin, his costume being complete even to a blackthorn stick.

Cabaret numbers followed directed by Miss Kathryn Fogarty. There was aesthetic dancing by Miss Mary Hoffman, her specialty being a violet dance, and Miss Helen Linnehan who gave the "Dance of the butterflies." Walter Cope sang a solo in costume. The accompanists were Mrs. May Fiske Hoffman and Miss Loretta Cope.

During the evening Miss Hoffman and Miss Linnehan danced the Tarentella in striking costumes which was well received. A baritone singer gave pleasing numbers, which were encored.

A number of events for the children were run off with the following winners:—

Potato race, Alice, Stone, Robert Creighton.

100 yd. dash for boys, Francis Lonergan.

50 yard dash for girls, Alice Dolan.

Three legged race for boys, Robert Tufts, Frank Grady.

In a ball game between the Riversides via the Bigelows, the Riversides won by a score of 21 to 10. A North Weymouth team defeated an East Weymouth nine by 12 to 8, ten innings being played.

A tug of war had been arranged between East Weymouth and North Weymouth crews, but when Peter Gallant and his faithful supporters were confronted by the "Farner" they decided it was useless to compete with the "Beef Trust" as Peter expressed it. However Wallace Chappell's crew easily defeated Peter Peterson's crew, a suitable prize being provided.

A three mile race was a feature, the event being won by James Hennigan of the Dorchester club, A. F. Merchant of the Riverside A. A. second. The prizes were silver cups, the time being fifteen minutes.

DISTINGUISHED GUESTS.

The arrival of the Hon. James F. Curley, mayor of Boston, and Ex-Cong Joseph O'Connell at 9 caused a stir. They were escorted to the platform by the Mission Band, where Luke Mullen introduced Ex-Congressman O'Connell, who in turn presented the mayor. They both remarked the high esteem in which Father Allison is held by every one, and mention of our President, and also of the Governor were received with cheers and applause. Mayor Curley's speech was on "The influence of the church on the community."

Mulazzo's Orchestra played for dancing, the tango coming in for the lion's share of popularity. The illumination by gas and colored electric lights was the most elaborate ever seen in this section.

The cafe where P. J. Derrig said the clam chowder was the "best ever," was in charge of Mrs. Henry Hurley, assisted by Miss Marguerite Coleman, Misses Agnes Crehan, Anna Egan, Mary Monahan, Isabel Murphy, Agnes Monahan, Mrs. J. P. Pitts, Mrs. John Pitts, Mrs. John Delorey, Miss Almira Tanguay, Isaac McIsaac and Lester Richards.

The North Weymouth fish pond was in charge of Mrs. Edward Quinn, and the East Weymouth pond under the direction of Mrs. Kathryn Bowles Howley. Miss Rose Landry was chairman of the fancy table, and Miss Mary O'Rourke of the candy table. The East Weymouth ice cream booth was under the supervision of Miss Mary Kearns and Miss Teresa Delorey presided at the North Weymouth booth. Charles Smith ran the wheel of fortune, Joseph Buckeley the country store, Charles M. Daly the temperance drinks. Miss Annie Egan presided at the N. U. fortune wheel; Joseph McCarthy at the hoopla Barney Verno, at the African dodger Martin Thyne, the bucket ball game; Martin Cody at the roulette. Silk Hat Harry, was in charge of Edward Donovan.

Matthew J. Coleman was chairman of the General Committee, P. J. Derrig, treasurer, and E. C. Donovan secretary. The executive committee included Rev. Fr. Allison, chairman; Luke Mullen, Richard Baker, Rupert Carven, Mrs. Dr. Quinn, Bart Connell, Frank McCarthy, Charles Tobin, J. T. Wood, Bernard Mitchell, Charles Smith, Miss Kathryn Fogarty, Mary Sheehy, Ruth Reidy, Annie Kearns, Loretta Cronin, Ida Cronin, Mrs. Henry Hurley, Miss Kathryn Egan, John Dooley, J. J. Lane, Thomas F. McCue, Sr., Misses Almira Tanguay, Alice Hurley, Lillian McCue, Agnes Pitts, Annie Delorey, Clara McEnroe, Rose Landry, Leonora O'Rourke, Mary Monahan, Agnes Monahan, Nellie Coneen, Helena Reidy, Mrs. Nora Joyce, Mrs. Mary O'Rourke, Lester Veno, David Shaw, Lucy Tanguay, John Cornerford, John Cullivan, Thomas DeCoste.

Officers Lawrence Schofield and James McQuire had charge of policing the grounds and several special officers were sworn in, but the order was perfect and they were not required to do active duty. About $2,000 were realized.

NOONAN WITHDRAWS.

Leo P. Noonan writes to the Daily Ledger declining to be a candidate for Representative. He says:

"Since Representative Sullivan is to be a candidate for re-election I beg to announce that I have withdrawn from the field in his favor. I believe that he is entitled to the Democratic nomination by condign merit, and that his record of the past two years is sufficient to justify his re-election.

WARD THREE BOYS WIN

Shut Out Wollaston Playground Team 3 to 0

By giving the Wollaston playground team a coat of white-wash Monday afternoon at South Quincy the Ward Three boys increased their claim to the playground base ball championship. Only one defeat has been chalked up against them this season and that was by the Ward Two team after a great game.

The score Monday was 3 to 0, and two of these runs were gifts by Favereau who passed three men in succession in the third inning. Barry put two runs across the pan by a good clean single, and after a man had been run down between the bases, DeSenso scored him with another hit.

Favereau gave ten passes in all in the game but kept them scattered, he also struck out nine batters. Anderson was successful in making 7 of the Wollaston boys take three vain swings at the ball.

Barry, who played third for South Quincy, made three of the six hits totaled by his team, and Curtin, center fielder, did good work. Mullen at third for Wollaston did the best work in the field.

The batteries were as follows: For Ward Three, Anderson and Cahill; for Wollaston, Favereau and Baker. Hits, by Ward Three 6; by Wollaston 3.

SPORTS AT WARD TWO.

Owing to last Thursday's rain, the games at Quincy Point were not held and as a result the events will be doubled up in this week's program. The girls will compete in the potato race, back-yard race and the base-ball throw for distance. The boys will take part in these events, 75 yard dash potato race and baseball throw.

ED WALSH BACK IN SHAPE AFTER YEAR OF BENCH WARMING

ED WALSH, greatest spitball pitcher in the world and for years the standby of the Chicago White Sox, has regained his form after a year of bench warming. Last season Walsh hurt his arm and pitching hand badly and was unable to get the "stuff" on his delivery. In his last two starts, however, he has come through brilliantly, and the White Sox rooters are all "het up."

LITTLE BITS OF SPORTING CHAT

National League Insures Umpires Against Bottles.

CHALLENGERS WORRY WELSH

New Champion Pestered by Small Fry Seeking Publicity and Stage Engagements—Al Reich Picked as a Comer. Matty McIntyre's Winning "Bone." Carpentier Discovers His Method.

Arrangements have just been completed whereby the National league has taken out accident insurance policies in favor of the ten umpires on the rolls of this organization. This is not due to any demonstrations on the part of players or spectators that have been made or may be made against the persons of the arbiters of play, although it is not likely that the chance of some wayward soda-pop bottle colliding with some umpirical dome of thought was altogether ignored. But mainly the action of the league authorities is in line with a policy of protecting against railroad accidents, flying balls and the like, it being the practice, when an umpire has been injured in the line of duty, to defray the cost of medical and surgical attention, while at the same time keeping the incapacitated field judges upon the salary rolls during periods of inactivity.

The terms of the policies call for a payment of $25 a week while victims are out of commission, $5,000 in event of death and $10,000 in event of death through railroad accident. It is considered likely that the American league will follow suit.

The King's prize, the most coveted trophy of the annual prize meeting of the British National Rifle association, was won by Sergeant J. L. Dewar of the Royal Scots Territorial regiment, after a tie with Private A. G. Fulton of the London Territorials. Each made 300 out of a possible 335 and then shot off the tie. Private Fulton was the winner of the King's prize in 1912.

In St. Louis one day Matty McIntyre pulled off an unexpected play that has never been equaled. Bases were full with Matty on second. He started to steal third. The man on third saw him coming and got into action. The Browns did not know what the Tigers were trying to pull off. They began heaving the ball around and two wild throws resulted in three men scoring.

That play reminded Joe Sugden of one that took place in Portland while Joe was with Vancouver.

Vancouver was leading Portland by a single run in the ninth inning. It was Portland's turn at bat and they filled the bases with one out. Under these conditions Casey, a member of the Portland team and a hard hitter, came to bat. Casey let the first ball go by for a strike and the next two were wide. "We're gone," said Sugden. But Vancouver was not gone. The next pitched ball was bunted by Casey. The pitcher tossed to Sugden and Sugden threw to first ahead of Casey completing a double play that ended the game.

Al Reich now bids fair to justify all the kind words said of him when this big, strapping youngster first deserted the amateur ranks to try his fortune in the professional ring. Reich's display of form comes at an opportune time. He can now be counted upon to help enliven boxing during the dull summer season.

There may be some room for doubt as to whether he will ever attain real championship form, but he has at least established the fact that he can put up a highly interesting battle. And, after all, to amuse the spectators is the main object. Reich is eminently fitted to do that. He is easily the most interesting heavyweight developed during the past two years.

It looks as if another great runner has been developed in Dismond, the colored freshman of Chicago university, who ran a quarter mile in 48 3-5 seconds in the Central Amateur Athletic union championships.

He may prove a successor to J. B. Taylor of the University of Pennsylvania, who died several years ago.

Abel Kivlat, the Irish-American Athletic club of New York runner, will try for the one mile record this year.

As always happens when a boxing title changes hands, a flood of challenges is now being turned loose against Freddie Welsh, the newest of champions. At the same time it is evident that the challengers are wasting time and wind if they are sincere in their efforts to get a match with the Briton.

If they are simply seeking a little free advertising their efforts may bear a little fruit. Certain it is that there are any number of lightweights who would welcome a battle with the new title holder and his much discussed "feather duster" blows. It is equally certain that they will get nothing of the kind until American vaudeville houses and European music halls cease to offer tempting sums for weekly engagements.

Georges Carpentier, French champion boxer, in his amusing little book, "My Method," just published in Paris, gives some sound and interesting advice to amateur athletes.

He begins with the confession that the pen has always appeared to him as a dangerous instrument and that [illegible] his friends first suggested that he should write a book on his methods. "Besides," writes Carpentier, "I did not know that I had a method and no one could have been more surprised than I when I was told I had one."

Carpentier, who passes most of his time at his country place, Manitou on Reine, in Normandy, between Elverney and Vernon, is a good all round athlete and when training does a great deal of rowing, tennis, sprinting, rope skipping, jumping and Swedish leg and arm joint exercises, always accompanied by scientific deep breathing.

THIRD ARREST MADE

Another Man Charged With Robbing Body at Boston Morgue

Boston, Aug. 11.—Thomas H. Kingston was arrested, the third to be taken on indictment warrants in connection with alleged larceny at the North Grove street morgue.

With George W. Miller and Fred L. Green, he will go before the superior court, in connection with the disappearance of $230 from the body of Thomas O'Brien.

Kingston was superintendent of the mortuary, and the others were, respectively, night and day men there, all under the supervision of Medical Examiner Magrath.

LEADERS FAVOR A STAMP TAX

Must Be Levied Because of Reduction of Imports

CURTAILED BY FOREIGN WAR

Whisky, Beer and Tobacco Likely to Be Penalized in United States For Revenue-Raising Purposes—No Immediate Need of Passing Emergency Taxation Bill

Washington, Aug. 11.—Although the United States is at peace, legislative leaders admit levying of a "war tax" is inevitable. Prospects that the European conflict will be prolonged and that it will materially reduce, for years to come, the imports of this country make it necessary to adopt emergency measures for the raising of revenue.

Majority Leader Underwood, author of the new tariff law, admits that the falling off in the imports from Europe will be such that congress must begin to think of other means of bringing in money. Underwood said that no definite plan had been considered, but the impression in legislative circles is that a stamp tax will be imposed as in the Spanish-American war. Whisky, beer and tobacco, certainly, and possibly checks, mortgages and other legal documents will most likely be penalized for revenue raising purposes.

"There is no immediate need of passing an emergency taxation bill," said Underwood, "for there is a good surplus in the treasury now. But before the session ends it is practically certain we will have to pass some sort of an emergency measure.

"Our imports necessarily will be greatly reduced by the war abroad, but we can run along, probably for three or four months, without feeling the direct effect of the falling off. I have made no plans for raising additional revenue, although it is a matter which we are considering, of course."

Underwood called attention to the old law permitting the sale of Panama canal bonds, but the Democratic party is against bond issues when they can be avoided, and although about $250,000,000 of such bonds might be sold, it is understood that a "war tax" is preferred by the Democratic leaders.

Rough estimates are that the European war will reduce import revenues about one-third.

ACT FOR UNCLE SAM

Americans Now in Europe Will Become Military Observers

These American officers will be in the field in a few days as military observers with the European armies now in conflict:

Major Cosby, corps of engineers, with the French army; Major Squier, signal corps, with the British expeditionary force; Captain Briggs, Twenty-Sixth infantry, with the Austrian army; Major Langhorne, Fifth cavalry, with one of the German armies; First Lieutenant Miles, field artillery, with the Servian army.

It is possible that Major Lawton, United States army, retired, now at Berne, Switz., will join one or the other of the opposing armies.

Surprise has been expressed abroad that American army officers had not been detailed for service as observers with the European armies. The officers named are now stationed in Europe at different capitals as military attaches. They do not have to wait for orders, but on permission from authorities of the different European countries can start into the field at once.

Several American army officers went abroad on the Tennessee, which carried the relief money. They may be ordered to join the military attaches who are about to go to the battlefield of Europe.

AUSTRIA IS SHUT OFF

Germany Has Refused to Carry Mails Even to Her Ally

Germany, by a blanket refusal to carry mails in transit to other countries, has temporarily shut off postal facilities to its war ally, Austria-Hungary.

The United States postoffice department arranged for dispatch of all the mails for northern Europe except Austria by the steamship Rotterdam from New York. This will clear up all waiting European mail, except for Austria, whose mails will have to go forward by some later and less expeditious route because the German government has served notice that it will not carry across its domains the mails for any other country.

Woman's Body Found In Swamp

Darien, Conn., Aug. 11.—The body of a well-dressed young woman was found in a swamp here. The body was so badly decomposed that it was unrecognizable. A bottle which had contained poison nearby indicated that the woman was a suicide.

Suffragettes Are Released

London, Aug. 11.—King George has ordered the release of all suffragists serving terms in British prisons as the result of their militant tactics.

All of Local Interest

Joseph Fay Phelan of South Quincy, who started running when in High school, has developed into one of the best 100 yard dash men in the state, and during the past month his performances have safely established him in the front rank of well known athletics. Three weeks ago he took first place in the century dash at the Caledonian Club picnic. He was obliged to qualify in four heats to get into the finals, and two of these he run in 10 seconds flat. Last Saturday he finished first in the West End games and was presented with a medal, which is prettier in design and more valuable than any like awards in his collection.

Fay Phelan wears the colors of the Filene store of Boston where he is employed. He considers himself one of the fastest of the dash men and although he has issued no challenge to Quincy runners it would not be difficult to arrange for an elimination race for the championship of the city.

A Family Affair

Pertaining to the Servant Question

By SADIE OLCOTT

Mr. Starkweather came home after business. His wife met him at the door, and by her lugubrious expression he knew that something had happened.

"What's the matter, sweetheart?"

"Annie has gone."

"That's too bad."

"The third servant I have had within two weeks."

"I suppose you'll have to try another."

"I'll do no such thing. I'm going to board."

It was the husband's turn to look rueful. He detested boarding.

"Haven't you always said that your mother insisted on your learning domestic science?"

"She did."

"And that you rather like cooking?"

"It's the only thing I do easily."

"Well?"

"Well, it's very plain what you mean. You suggest that I do the work myself."

This was received in silence.

"I'm surprised that you are willing to have your wife go into the kitchen and make a servant of herself. And how would I be able to take care of this big house? But, granting I could do it all, what would become of us socially? The doorbell rings. Mrs. Brinkerhoff, who keeps ten servants, calls. I go to the door from the kitchen with a working apron on and my hands covered with dough. What do you think of that?"

"I think that it would remind Mrs. Brinkerhoff of the days of her childhood. Her mother kept a small hotel and did the cooking for her guests. The daughter was chambermaid."

"Well, if my husband is willing to make a cook and housemaid of his wife I am not willing to so demean myself."

"The servant question is yours, my dear. It is my part to provide the money for the house and your part to run it. One thing let me impress upon you—I won't board. I was obliged to board before I was married. It was bad enough as a bachelor; it will be worse as a married man. Talk of respectability! Is it respectable for half a dozen families and a dozen bachelors and spinsters to herd together under one roof? It seems to me if I were a woman I would hold my head much higher living in privacy even if I did have occasionally to go to the door to admit the wife of a multimillionaire whose wealth grew up like a mushroom in a single night."

"TO MY HAPPY HOME."

"Your arguments are very plausible, but I'm going to board. This house can be easily rented, and the income from it alone will pay our board."

"You mean your board."

"And yours too," decidedly.

"Not at all. I'm not going to board. I do not decide upon the expediency of that plan of living for any one but myself."

Mr. and Mrs. Starkweather had not yet bridged those years between the matrimonial honeymoon and working amicably in double harness. In other words, they had not yet learned that domestic differences must be settled or misery must ensue. Nor had they learned how dependent they were on each other. Quite often down in the bottom of their hearts each wished for a return to the freedom of single life. They had now reached one of those crises which in the case of some couples are impassable, cases in which a separation takes place and the pair are never again reconciled.

Mrs. Starkweather determined to board, and Mr. Starkweather determined to keep house. The wife engaged quarters for herself, and the husband, having rented his house, took a smaller one, removing such articles of his furniture to it as he required. There was no quarrel between them, nor did they consider the subject of divorce. They remained together where they were till Mr. Starkweather had got his new quarters in order. Then the wife insisted on seeing that her husband wanted nothing to make him comfortable. A married sister had attended to all arrangements, but Mrs. Starkweather would trust no one but herself to make the final dispositions.

Mr. Starkweather suggested that they go there together Saturday afternoon and remain till Monday morning. Then the lady could go to her quarters and he would go to business. He offered to have a dinner sent in from a restaurant. It was in the middle of the afternoon that the couple met at the husband's domicile to pass the last period they expected to pass together, the husband arriving a little in advance. He let his wife in and welcomed her with a kiss. She looked about her curiously and with evident admiration. Her sister-in-law had shown excellent taste in the arrangements.

"What a cozy little box!"

"I shall be very comfortable."

The lady walked through the living room to the dining room and thence into the kitchen.

"Why, this kitchen is as attractive as the other rooms."

"Why shouldn't it be? It's the most important room in the house. It's where the food is prepared, and if there is cleanliness anywhere surely it should be here. You see, I'm going to get my breakfast here, and occasionally I may bring a friend home to dine with me. I'll bring a steak and have a few French fried potatoes and a little lettuce. No trouble to get that, you know."

"Who's going to cook the steak?"

"I'll do that. I've learned it between the going of one servant and the coming of another when you have been laid up. There's nothing nicer than a simple dinner lifted right off the fire and served hot."

"It makes my mouth water."

"I've got a colored woman engaged to come in when I want her to wash the dishes and put everything in order."

"You won't be able to depend upon her."

"Yes, I will. I'll pay her double wages. You see, I'll have from $20 to $30 a month servants' hire saved. You can get anything done if you pay enough for it."

"Let's go upstairs."

She led the way to the second story and entered the front bedroom.

"How lovely!" she exclaimed. "It's small but small rooms are more easily taken care of than large ones. I see you have electricity in the house."

"Yes. I have that not only for light, but for power. I shall need it for various purposes."

"I see. Where is the bathroom?"

"Here."

"Isn't it lovely! How you will enjoy bathing here. Everything in the house is just too cozy for anything. Have you a telephone?"

"Yes; in this nook."

"Handy, isn't it?" She took up the receiver. "Give me 1476. Is this Perkman's restaurant? You needn't send the dinner that was ordered by Mr. Starkweather. All right. Goodby."

"Why, sweetheart, aren't we going to dine here?"

"Yes; on steak and French fried potatoes. Your talk about the dinners you are going to cook spoiled my appetite for restaurant cooking. I'll take care of the dinner."

"In that case perhaps I'd better put a bottle of wine on ice."

"And I must make a beginning of the dinner."

"While I set the table."

The dining room and kitchen being adjoining apartments, Mr. Starkweather chatted with his wife while he set the table, and when he had finished he went into the kitchen and chatted with her there.

"It seems all right for you to be in the kitchen here. In our other house I never dared go into it myself. I was always afraid the cook would drive me out with the range poker. What a heavenly smell there is to that broiling steak! Let me hold it over the fire for you."

He took the broiler out of her hand, giving her a kiss at the same time, she going about other business. When the dinner was served and they sat down at the table the husband remarked that his wife looked as tidy as if she had been working at embroidery instead of cooking a dinner. Then, having popped a cork, he gave a toast:

"To my happy home!"

The toast was drunk in silence by the wife, who was evidently thinking very hard.

"I'll invite you to a dinner like this once in a while," said the husband.

"H'm! Maybe I'll invite you to dinner."

"At your boarding house? No, thanks. I shall decline."

"I'm not going to a boarding house."

"Going to a hotel?"

"No."

"What are you going to do?"

"Stay here."

Starkweather rose from his chair, went to his wife and put his arms about her. Neither spoke, the two words in which the announcement was made being quite sufficient.

This happened several years ago. The Starkweathers are still living in the little house and without a servant. The plan has its disadvantages; but, though Starkweather's income is much larger than it was and he can afford to pay the highest prices for servants, he and his wife have got used to having their house all to themselves and revolt at having others about. They are always intending to get a servant, but never can make up their minds to have the house turned upside down and only half of it to themselves.

For the Children

Prince Henry of England in Scottish Costume.

Prince Henry of England, third son of King George V., has just completed his first term as a student at Eton college. He is now fourteen years old, and a handsome lad he is. When he went to Eton last fall he received no favors, although his royal parents did their best to have an exception made in his case. Their desires, however, did not prevail, and the young prince was treated as any of the sons of dukes, marquises, lords and commoners. He had to make ten, run errands and even black boots for the older scholars, as is the time immemorial custom at Eton. It is to the young prince's credit that he performed his duties cheerfully and won the friendship of his comrades. He is known simply as "Henry" to his more intimate friends, while with the general run of students (he being in the low class) he was addressed as "Scug." This shows that there is very little room for snobbery in Eton college.

Intelligent Savages.

It is a common matter for people to speak of savages as though they had no brain. A scientist lecturing recently in London was one of a party to Torres strait, and he found that the head measurement of the natives was just about the same as that of the average junior college man in civilized countries.

In the interior of Borneo the scientists came across a savage tribe who live in houses 100 feet long, raised on twenty foot poles, with chambers for each family and a long corridor where the community life was carried on.

These dwellings proved beyond question that the natives have a keen sense of the value of air and cleanliness and their kindly social relations that they had a highly developed sense of brotherhood.

Riddles.

Why would a woman lose her religion if she changed her sex? Because she would be a he then (heathen).

My first is a point, my second a span. In my whole often ends the greatness of man. Dotage.

Why can you never buy a new chronometer? Because it must always be a second hand one.

What word is that to which if you add a syllable it will be shorter? Short (short-er).

Why is it better to be burned than to have your head cut off? Because a hot steak is better than a cold chop.

Curious Facts About Diamonds.

A file cannot scratch a real diamond, but will quickly spoil an imitation. A sapphire is the next hardest stone to a diamond and is a better test than a file.

Thrust a diamond stone into a bowl of water and the stone will glitter through the liquid, but an imitation stone loses all its brilliancy under water.

Place one drop of water upon the face of a diamond and touch it with the point of a pencil. The drop will keep its globular form and the stone remain dry. If the brilliant is an imitation the water at once spreads out.

A Wise Arab.

Joseph Abou, an Arabian doctor of great fame in scientific matters, upon being asked to solve a difficult problem candidly confessed that he had no knowledge whatever of the subject.

"How is this?" said the man who had put the problem to him. "Does not the caliph pay you for your knowledge?"

"Certainly," answered the doctor. "He pays me for my knowledge, for all his treasures, wonderful as they are, would not be enough to pay me for my ignorance."

The Swastika.

It is interesting to know the meaning of the sign of the swastika so often made into pins and badges. It runs thus: "By this sign may all blessings attend thy footsteps. May the four winds from the four corners of the earth blow gently upon thee. May they ever bring thee good luck and prosperity. May thy life be long and joyful and may perfect peace find thee at last."

TAX RATES FOR YEAR 1914

Highest Figures in History of Several Cities

The tax rate of the city of Lowell, which was announced Monday is the highest in the history of the city, being $2.50 higher than the rate of 1913, the rate this year being $21.90. The valuation of the city shows an increase of $2,330,907.63 over last year, and the net gain in polls was 1124.

The town of Sterling reports an increase from $14.50 to $14.70, and Wenham a decrease from 8.80 to 8.00, while West Bridgewater remains the same.

STRUCK A CABLE.

Pitroff had a narrow escape from drowning today when in making a dive from the draw of the Fore River bridge he struck against one of the submarine cables floating near the surface.

The accident was witnessed by upwards of 500 people who lined the banks of the stream and the bridge. The cuffs, regulation police make, were interlocked on his wrists by Patrolman Edward Johnson and promptly at 12.30 he dove off.

When he came to the surface he was swinging the cuffs in one handbut was bleeding profusely from the mouth He set out to swim ashore but the force with which he struck the cable had weakened him and he was carried downstream. Several young men who witnessed the performance and realized his predicament put out in a power boat and brought him to safety.

When examined it was found that the inside of his mouth was badly cut. Several teeth on the left had cut deeply, opening a bad wound Pitroff was taken to Quincy in an auto, and at 2 o'clock had practically recovered from the effects of the accident.

WOLLASTON PEOPLE RETURN

Mrs. Hultman Hears From Daughter in Austria

Mrs. Lydia C. Hultman of Hancock street received a letter Monday afternoon from her daughter Mrs. Louis Eckert, who is in Fiume, Austria-Hungary. The letter was dated July 28, and stated that war had been declared and that there was great excitement in Fiume. At the Whitehead torpedo plant where her husband is a superintendent they were rushed with work. She also stated that the plant had recently built a large number of torpedoes for the Russian government, but now that war had been declared the Torpedo company were not allowed to deliver them and that they would probably be taken over by the Austrian government. She says that she is well and is in no immediate danger. As much as she would like to come to America and Quincy it was impossible to get away at the present time.

Mrs. Hultman said that her sister Mrs. Freeman of Dorchester who had been in Europe arrived home on the Mauritania, which landed in Halifax last week.

Among the cabin passengers of the Leyland steamer Bohemian which arrived from Europe on Monday were Mrs. G. Morgan, Misses M. and A. E. Morgan and Master V. G. Morgan of 317 Belmont street, Wollaston. They are the family of Edward D. Morgan, a Boston wool broker. Others on this same steamship was Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Hatch Comins of Braintree.

Josiah H. Benton of Boston, who is at Innsbruck, Austria sends a cable that he is unable to receive or dispatch mail. This is the city where Mrs. George N. Harman of Quincy was last reported.

Friends of Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Grant of Elm place are anxiously waiting for some word from them. They sailed July 7, intending to spend the month of July in Scotland and going to Paris about Aug. 15.

Mrs. Nils Jacobson of Rock Island is in Norway, and her husband has advised her to come home.

The Quincy list of European travellers includes:

Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Grant.
Miss Helen Cashman.
Manley Perry.
Mrs. Charles Prout.
Mr. and Mrs. Brooks Adams.
Miss Louise E. Lummis

LIKE ONE FROM HUMBLE HOME

Funeral of Mrs. Wilson of Most Simple Character

TWO CLERGYMEN OFFICIATE

Reading of Scriptures and Prayers Following Presbyterian Ritual—Congress Adjourns and Government Departments Close—Silent Tributes Along Route to Burial Place

Washington, Aug. 11.—Simple funeral prayers of the Presbyterian faith were said over the body of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson in the White House east room. Grouped around the casket were the president, his and Mrs. Wilson's kinsmen, members of the cabinet and official congressional delegations.

Both houses of congress were in recess and orders had been issued that all government departments be closed at 1 o'clock. All flags in the city on public buildings and private homes and stores were at half mast.

A funeral from a humble home could not have been simpler. Scriptures were read by the president's Washington pastor, Rev. J. H. Taylor, from the Presbyterian ritual, and the Presbyterian funeral prayer, mingled with extemporaneous prayer, were said over the bier by Rev. Dr. Sylvester Beach, the Wilsons' pastor at Princeton.

Arrival of Stockton Axson, brother of Mrs. Wilson, completed the family party for the services, which were confined to congressional committees, the cabinet members and their wives and a small group of friends. There were no honorary pallbearers, six veteran police officers being active pallbearers.

Members of the senate committee of honor met at the senate chamber and proceeded to the White House. The house members met at the east gate of the White House.

The White House grounds were closed to all visitors, but the iron fences were lined with crowds of mourners. Ritual passages of the services were drawn mostly from John, xiv., and I. Corinthians, xv., 35 to 85.

Truckload after truckload of flowers and floral pieces filed up to the White House. So numerous were the flowers that the air around the White House was redolent a block away.

The trip to Rome, Ga., for interment of the body beside the parents of Mrs. Wilson in Myrtle Hill cemetery was made in a special train, bearing only members of the presidential family, Dr. Grayson and Secretary Tumulty. At Rome the body was taken from the train direct to the cemetery today and placed in the family vault, with services conducted by the Presbyterian pastor at Rome. Most of the floral pieces were taken to Rome.

All along the route to Georgia there were silent tributes by officials and citizens meeting the funeral train at the station, with bells tolling.

REACHES BERMUDA PORT

Apprehension Regarding Safety of Shamrock IV. Is Relieved

New York, Aug. 11.—News was received here that Sir Thomas Lipton's racing yacht, Shamrock IV., convoyed by the steam yacht Erin, arrived in good shape in the harbor of St. George's, Bermuda.

The Shamrock sailed from Fayal, in the Azores, on July 29, for New York. Several days later a wireless message to the Erin diverted the yachts to Bermuda.

There has been some apprehension regarding the safety of the yachts, because England has become involved in the European war since they left the Azores.

PITROFF AT KINCAIDE'S

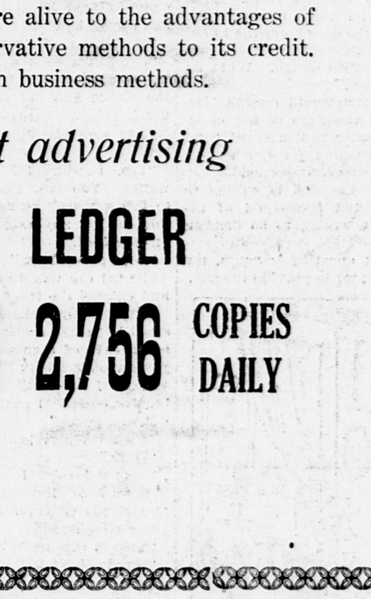

Gives Sensational Open Air Stunt Tonight

Pitroff, the Russian mystery man, whose stunts have furnished amusement for thousands of people, opened a three days engagement at the Kincaide threatre Monday afternoon. Tonight he attempts his first open air stunt when he escapes from a murderer's straight jacket while suspended in mid air, head downward, from the roof of the theatre.

At 7.30 he will be placed in the straight jacket and lowered over the side of the roof. His writhings to free himself is one of the most sensational exhibitions the city was ever promised.

Pitroff has attained a fine name in theatrical circles and wherever he appears he challenges the police department of the city to handcuff and iron him so that he cannot escape. He has sent his challenge to the Quincy officers.

Pitroff is unlike other mystifiers, inasmuch as he changes his bill each performance. A committee from the audience always assists his make his preparation for his performance and examine locks and bars to see that seals are not broken after he releases himself.

UNFAVORABLE TO OUR SHIPYARDS

National Senate Accepts Jones Amendment and Passes Shipping Bill

Allows Foreign Built Ships to Enter Coastwise Trade

President Powell of the Fore River Corp. is reported to have stated in an interview that "The Jones amendment to the Underwood ship bill will absolutely kill American ship building. The Senate this afternoon in a debate of half an hour has completely upset the coastwise shipping laws which have been in successful operation since 1787, affecting millions of dollars invested in American ships, and millions more invested in the shipbuilding industry."

In spite of the vigorous campaign made by the Boston committee headed by Mayor Curley and President Powell of the Fore River Corp. against the acceptance of the Jones amendment to the Shipping Bill now before Congress, the amendment was accepted by the Senate on Tuesday. The amendment in brief provided that foreign ships may also be admitted to the carrying trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports, via the Panama canal which will be opened to commerce Saturday.

The Boston protest was made because it was claimed that the Jones amendment would strike a severe blow at the protective policy of the United States in favor of its coastwise shipping.

The Boston committee was frankly told that it was an emergency measure and that it would probably pass.

It was also said that the principal interest of Senator Jones was to provide adequate transportation facilities for the lumber products of this part of the country.

Immediately on the arrival of the Boston party Tuesday morning a conference was held at the Willard hotel and several speeches were made against the Jones amendment by the visitors who included Mayor Curley, Senator Gallagher of New Hampshire, Senator Johnson of Maine, Capt. Crowley and others.

All argued that the amendment would permit foreign owned vessels to compete with American coast-wise ships, and they urged that foreign bottom vessels should not be allowed to engage in this line of business.

After the morning meeting the members of the party went to the Capitol and saw the legislative leaders.

Just before the measure passed it was amended by a vote of 26 to 25 so as to require American ownership of a majority of the stock of corporation seeking to register vessels hereafter acquired.

It is thought however that this amendment may be killed later.

It was not long after the Boston party had left for home that the Gallagher motion to strike out the Jones amendment was defeated and the bill passed by a large majority. The bill now goes back to the House where the Senate amendments will be acted upon.

Mayor Curley announced that a committee would probably be sent to the President asking him to recommend measures for the establishment of a merchant marine, and probably placing before him concrete suggestions as to how this might be done.

The President will also be asked, if the bill becomes a law, not to allow foreign ships to enter this coast to coast trade. Mayor Curley also believes that Senator Weeks proposal for a committee to study the subject an excellent one, which should be provided by Congress. Mayor Curley also stated that Representative Underwood had indicated that Congress would be asked before long to enact legislation of a permanent character, as the pending bill was only an experiment.

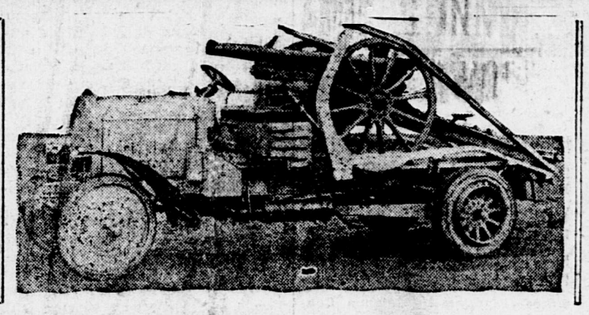

President Powell is reported as having further declared, that Speaker Underwood would not allow a hearing before the amendment was referred back to the House for action Tuesday and that despite the protest from both the Atlantic and Pacific coast and the Great Lakes, the amended bill would undoubtedly become a law.

The Jones amendment reads as follows:

"The President is hereby authorized whenever in his judgment the need of domestic trade requires, to suspend by order, so far and for such length of time as he may deem desirable, the provisions of law confining the trade from points on the Atlantic coast to points on the Pacific coast and from points on the Pacific coast to points on the Atlantic coast, and points on the gulf coast or from the Great Lakes ports to points on the Pacific or Atlantic coasts, and from points on the Pacific or Atlantic coasts to points on the gulf or to ports on the Great Lakes to American-built ships and permit foreign-built ships having an American registry to engage in the trade between said points."

GENERAL CITY EXPENSES

Cost in Quincy Is Over One Dollar Per Capita

When taxpayers are clamoring for their "share" of improvements they overlook the cost of "general government." In Quincy this item amounts to $38,149 annually, which is over $1 per capita—men, women and children.

What is included in general government? The Bureau of Statistics includes the legislative department or City Council, the executive or Mayor's office, the financial department, other genneral departments, also municipal buildings.

Chelsea is the only smaller city in the list below where general government costs more than Quincy. It is also less in the larger cities of Fitchburg and Everett.

In Boston the expense of general government is over $1.50 per capita but it is less than $1 in 12 of the 33 cities, viz: Worcester, Fall River, Lowell, Springfield, Lawrence, Somerville, Brockton, Malden, Salem, Fitchburg, Chicopee and Northampton.

In the list below all cities of less than 80,000 and more than 15,000 are included:

	Maintenance	Outlay
Somerville	$68,766	$2,313
Holyoke	71,121	2,101

SUBMARINE TRIALS.

The yachtsmen who took part in the race of the Quincy Yacht club house Monday afternoon had an opportunity to view at close quarters one of Uncle Sam's submarines. The submarine is one of those building at the Fore River shipyard and she went out Sunday on a trial run. Monday afternoon she was sailing in Quincy bay. Some of those on shore thought for a time that she was doing guard duty.

WASHINGTON PARK.

Things have taken a start at Washington Park off Independence avenue. John A. Clark of the Empire Polishing Co., has purchased fifteen lots and will begin immediately the erection of two $5000 houses.

RIVADAVIA TO SAY GOOD BYE

Will Leave the Quincy Shipyard Aug. 23 or 24

The transports Chaco and Pampa with 1000 officers and men to man the dreadnought Rivadavia are making their way up the coast from San Juan, Porto Rico, from which they cleared Monday, and unless their passage is interfered with by foreign ships and to be plying along the Atlantic sea board both should reach New England waters about Thursday.

The ships will anchor off Provincetown for four days, after which they will sail for the Boston navy yard to debark the crew. All preparations have been made to furnish food in sufficient quantities for the men while they are in the north and the contract has been awarded to a Boston firm.

The Rivadavia will be taken through the draw of the Fore River bridge for what is expected to be the last time, on Aug. 23 or 24. Workmen are rushing work in preparation of the ships delivery to representatives of the Argentine government on the latter date.

The ship will stay in Boston harbor for perhaps two months while repairs are made, after which she will be taken to the dry dock at the New York navy yard where her bottom will be scraped and she will be provisioned for sea. The run to Argentina will be made about Oct. 15 unless something unforseen causes a delay.

PLAYING FOR FIVE TROPHIES

Press Club Golf at the Wollaston Links

There were 32 matches played in the four divisions in the Boston Press club tourney at the Montclair links of the Wollaston Golf Club on Tuesday.

Frank H. Hoyt of Woodland beat W. H. Thayer of Wollaston in the best match of the day. He claimed victory only at the home hole. Hoyt had a medal score of 75 for his round and Thayer was two strokes behind. They went out in 37 and stood even on the turn. The lead shifted on the way home, and Hoyt won the 17th in 4 to 5. They halved on the green and Hoyt, winner of two legs for the General Taylor trophy was the victor.

J. J. Gallagher of Wollaston lost his chance to beat L. B. Paton of the Homestead Club, one of the strongest golfers in the state when a tee shot hit the barn. Gallagher was four down and five to go but from the 14 hole played one of the best uphill games the links have seen.

Arthur H. Goodale of Wollaston, who took the medal for the best gross score in the qualifying round, met the Hatherly golfer, J. E. Lancester, and beat him 8 and 7. He was out in 41 and stood 6 up at the turn. He took the next two holes.

David H. Goodspeed, principal of Wollaston grammar school beat C. M. Hart of Wollatson by 3 and 2.

Second rounds will played today for the Gen. Charles H. Taylor trophy, the Boston Post trophy, the Boston Journal trophy, the Boston Press Club trophy and the Secretary's trophy.

FERTILIZER PLANT TO CLOSE

War Causes Large Weymouth Industry to Shut Down

The vast manufacturing plant of the American Agricultural Chemical Co., at North Weymouth, familiarly known as the Bradley Fertilizer plant, closes on Aug. 25 for an indefinite period. The reason given is the scarcity of material used in manufacturing because of the war in Europe.

Potash and nitre used in immense quantities at the plant are imported from Germany where there are 39 mines. The little opportunity for commerce in vessels flying the German flag has brought about the situation.

The material after it is brought to Boston is shipped to North Weymouth in lighters, and an explosion on one that was tied up to the wharf resulted in the half million dollar fire which nearly swept the plant off the map last summer.

A long reinforced concrete, fireproof building was erected to take the place of the one burned, and since its completion, several months ago nearly 450 men have been employed.

The stock on hand is getting lower and workmen are being suspended daily on that account. It is expected that it will be about the 25th of the month before the remaining stock is used. The complete tieup will follow.

MANY SOCIETIES INTERESTED

Funeral of Mrs. Emma Marnock Largely Attended

The funeral of Mrs. Emma Marnock was held Tuesday afternoon from Bethany Congregational church. The services were very largely attended. Mrs. Marnock was a member of the church and was affiliated with a number of fraternal orders, which included Maple lodge, Knights and Ladies of Honor, Paul Revere Woman's Relief Corps, the Loyal Ladies of Clan MacGregor, George L. Gill Rebekah lodge, the Riverside Women's club, and the Order of the Eastern Star, all of which organizations were represented at the funeral services as well as many personal friends.

The services were of a simple nature and were conducted by the pastor, Rev. Benjamin A. Willmott, who came from Townsend, his summer home to officiate. The casket was met at the entrance of the church by Rev. Mr. Willmott and with the bearers preceded it down the centre aisle, Rev. Mr. Willmott, reading the scriptures.

During the services Mrs. Harry L. Bates and Mrs. Emma S. Moore sang "Lead Kindly Light," "Still, Still with Thee" and "Passing out of the shadow."

There was a profusion of beautiful floral tributes, which included set pieces from the several organizations with which she was affiliated. These were arranged about the casket and pulpit platform.

The burial was in the family lot at Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

DISTRICT COURT.

Alexander Ducker and Bernard F. May were fined $10 each for drunkenness at Quincy.

William F. Patnaude was fined $15 and Ralph A Cohen $10 for violation of the park rules at Milton.

CAMPING IN PINE WOODS

Mayor Miller Finds It Lonesome at Hingham

Inspector of Buildings Merrill, at whose farm in Hingham Mayor Miller is passing his summer vacation, says that the Mayor appears to be getting along nicely. He is getting back to nature having pitched a camp in a pine woods, where he and Mrs. Miller are camping out. The Mayor however finds it a little lonesome, although he is kept supplied with the daily papers so that he keeps posted on what is going on.

CITY BUILDING IS ENDORSED

Editor Daily Ledger:

At the last meeting of the Norfolk Downs Improvement Association the editorial, published in your issue of July 22, on "City Building," was read before our members, and was most heartily commented on.

The secretary was duly authorized to write a letter thanking you on behalf of the Association, for your valuable suggestions, and we trust the results will be far reaching among our fellow workers and residents in our home city.

Our Association realizes that co-operation is the keynote of success, and any future efforts to increase the attractiveness and efficiency of the city will always meet with our endorsement and approval.

Is this to be the grand finale of the long series of "Hapsburg tragedies?"

War fever and gambling in life's necessities always go hand in hand.

Whoever invented the phrase "so-called civilization" may have seen troops mobilizing somewhere.

There seems to be no doubt that the United States Senate is the solemnest body on earth.

When Howard Elliott was made president of the New Haven he did not know it was loaded.

From their respective mountain peaks Switzerland and Montenegro can thank goodness that they are not fertile valleys.

As Kaiser William is evidently not getting all the fun he wants, it is also expected that he will declare war against the United States, Japan, China and Pancho Villa.

It may be all right to kill off a million men for the sake of a few bushy mountain pastures away over in Servia, but it does not look like a business proposition.

The fellows who go to work in banks and insurance offices get good jobs where they can keep their hands clean, and if they can give security they can always borrow money of fellows who dig in the dirt and wear overalls.

Anyway, Mr. Carnegie's peace palace at the Hague will be an excellent place to quarter several companies of soldiers in.

The small boy is convinced that it will be of no use for him to study any geography this fall, as everything he learns about the European boundaries will soon be upset.

The intelligent American public, after carefully and thoughtfully digesting the baseball news, turns to the European war dispatches with much interest.

The most dangerous position in a fight is that of the innocent bystander which the United States should thoroughly realize at the present time.

WAR AND COMMERCE.

The foreign trade and business relations of the United States would have been much less interrupted could Europe have adopted the American principle of exemption of private property from capture at sea in war.

At the Hague conference of 1907, the American delegation made a plea for such exemption from capture. This principle has always been advocated by our government. France, Great Britain, Russia, Japan, and other governments opposed it at the Hague, and it was beaten.

In more barbarous times, wives and children were captured and sold into slavery, cities were burned, and non-combatants put to the sword.

Gradually these wicked customs have been refined, as respects the lives and freedom of non-combatants, and as respects property on land. Even in a country so backward and reactionary as Mexico, non-combatants have been mostly safe, and destruction of private property has been at least the exception.

Yet in the matter of capture of private property at sea, the old archaic principles of ancient warfare yet prevail in all their barbarism. The warriors may be too cultured to attack women and children. Yet they will capture the food supplies that will keep those women and children from starvation. They will seize the materials of manufacture that will permit a country to maintain its economic existence.

Nothing is gained by these survivals of savage practices. History shows few instances where nations have been overpowered by blows at economic prosperity. Besieged cities always eat horse flesh rather than submit. It is only by direct attack on fighting power that war can win. The subjection of the commerce of the world to the terror of naval attack is thus a medieval survival. The United States has the glory of having led the fight against this barbarism.

POPULAR GOVERNMENT AND WAR

War has always been primarily an affair of kings and nobles. In the old feudal days, the lord gave his subjects certain protection, and in return exacted military service. The subject got security from universal lawlessness. He could well afford to take the chances of occasional scrapping in behalf of the ruling baron.

Autocratic monarchs guard jealously their ancient prestige. Their conception is not different from that prevailing centuries ago. It is the survival of this archaic feudal spirit that has brought on the tragic conflict in Europe.

In older history, kings and generals, their ambitions, passions, and rivalries, were the center of interest. The life, labor, suffering, taxation, and sorrow of the common people, who feed the maw of the cannon, was a minor matter.

Democratic government by no means provides escape from war. National hatred may be nursed at every hearthstone. Mothers may bring up their boys under oaths of racial vengeance. The moment some headstrong power casts the firebrand, every humble home leaps into fire.

But as a general thing, popular government reduces the chances of war. Where ministries and cabinets are subject to Congresses and parliaments, the lust of battle stands the scrutiny of common sense. If progress and national integrity are only possible at the cost of this final sacrifice, the common people will sanction and support a war.

But if the challenge is thrown down merely from regal arrogance, of for some worthless little strip of territory, the workers of the nation will ask why should sacrifice their lives and their little savings for so trifling a cause. Autocratic governments that bring on needless wars are likely to find themselves buried under the rising tide of popular government.

WILL EXHIBIT VARIOUS PESTS

Harris Reynolds of Boston, secretary of the Massachusetts Forestry Association, was in Quincy on Tuesday inspecting the work done on several estates on Adams street under the direction of William Hamel, field secretary. At present the specialists are devoting their time to forestry alone and within a few weeks will start on the extermination of moths and other pests. Mr. Hamel has made arrangements to place fine specimens of various pests in the window of a Quincy store and included in his collection will be the Army worm.

TEUTONS ARE IN FRENCH TERRITORY

Thousands of Soldiers Enter at Widely Separated Places

ARMY OF THE MOSELLE AS BATTERING RAM

Germans Evidently Place Their Reliance Upon It to Reach Capital of France—Almost Unimpeded Road to Within Seventy-Five Miles of Paris If French Line Can Be Broken—Impossible to Tell at Present Whether French Strategists Have Been Outwitted—Fighting In Belgium Continues at Various Points—Signs of Disaster Off California Coast

London, Aug. 12.—For the first time since the Franco-Prussian war a German army in full strength is marching into French territory.

The army of the Moselle, the great German force that has been for days pouring through the duchy of Luxemburg, is well within French territory—at Longwy, Longuyon, Marville and Montmedy.

Flushed by the successful check to the German advance by the heroic defenders of Liege and by the audacious dash of their own army into Alsace, the French strategists may have been caught off their guard.

There was more bitter fighting Tuesday in the vicinity of Liege and in Alsace than in the French territory invaded by the Germans, but it was less portentous for the future.

Headinf For Paris

Events go far to indicate that the army of the Moselle and not the army of the Meuse is to be Germany's battering ram that will be driven against Paris.

The army of the Meuse, unless the plan of campaign is changed again, will be relied upon to hold back the British, French and Belgian armies that are concentrating in Belgium, while the army of the Rhine, stirred into action by the French advance, will, with its Austrian allies, not only be strong enough to resist the invaders of Alsace, but can even reinforce the army of the Moselle if sudden need arises.

Into French territory tramped the army of the Moselle, spread out in a great fan-shaped formation along the frontier where Belgium, Luxemburg and Lorraine in Germany are separated from France.

Many days ago desultory skirmishes began in this strategic territory, where there is a great gap in the French line of fortifications.

But not until Tuesday did the skirmishes develop at widely separated towns—clear indications that at last the army of the Moselle is in full strength and prepared for the dash into France.

Skirmishes In France

At Londwy, a fortified French town almost on the boundary, a sharp encounter was reported between French outposts and a strong column of Germans. Toward the southwest, at Longuyon, still further inland in French territory, patrols of the hostile army exchanged shots in a skirmish that merely tried out the positions of the invaders and the defenders.

Most serious of all the activities of the advancing army of the Moselle was the appearance of its patrols at Montmedy and Marville, the first time that Germans in strength had penetrated into the department of the Meuse in France.

Two or three days must probably elapse before the full strength of the invaders and their actual intentions become clear, but it is evident that, for the moment, at least, the Germans have placed their reliance upon the army of the Moselle.

Although it is thought that thousands of German soldiers are now upon French soil, it is generally believed that the main force of this army is still in Luxemburg and Belgium.

A cavalry encounter between French and Germans occurred at Virton, in Belgium territory just over the French boudary, and at Houffalize, a Belgian town about forty miles to the norteast, a French patrol drove back a force of German cavalry.

French Outwitted?

Whether the French have been outwitted, no one can tell. If the French line can be broken by the army of the Moselle, they can march almost unimpeded to Rheims, only seventy-five miles distant from Paris.

The line of march carries the invaders well to the north of Verdun, the northernmost of the great French forts that form the Meuse line of fortifications, and well to the south of Maubeuge, the most southern of the northernmost forts.

The advance movement may explain the cessation of hard fighting at Liege for the past two days. The French and Belgians have taken it for granted that soldiers by thousands from the army of the Moselle were being hurried northward to reinforce the desperate army of the Meuse.

Have the French been fooled by the German strategists and have reinforcements in reality been sent southward, from the Meuse to the army of the Moselle?

Germany appears to be taking a desperate chance, but battles are usually won in that way. The check at Liege deprives the army of the Moselle of any great aid from the army of the Meuse and also makes its flank exposed to French and Belgian soldiers operating on the Meuse.

The Situation In Belgium

A Brussels dispatch says hostilities began Monday between German cavalry and the Belgian cavalry outposts in the Hesbaya district. This district is to the west of Liege and north of the Meuse, and forms part of the provinces of Liege, Limburg and Namur.

The Germans have begun a systematic reconnoitering of Hesbaye in order to discover the positions of the Belgian field army. Their cavalry patrols are followed by infantry detachments.

German cavalry passed the outskirts of Liege, following a route to the south of the province of Limburg to Tongres and St. Trond, and evidently proceeding toward Hesbaye. Two hundred German cavalry with quick-firers have already reached Hannut, seventeen miles to the northwest of Liege.

Engagements have taken place principally along the line between Tirlemont and St. Trond and half way between Esemael and Gussenhaven. Engagements also have taken place near Tongres.

The German cavalry have everywhere been repulsed with loss. These engagements are regarded as a prelude to German offensive movement to the north of Liege. It is thought that they may foreshadow more important fighting and a big battle in two or three days.

SIGNS OF SEA DISASTER

Wreckage on California Coast May Have Come From Warship

That a British warship was torn to pieces by an explosion some place off the near California coast is the conviction of persons who carefully examined flotsam cast upon the beach at San Francisco.

Bolts and fittings were not only torn from their seats, but in one instance the brass runner on a sliding door had been twisted into a tangled knot. An iron reinforcement two inches wide by a quarter inch thick had been snapped in two.

Portions of the woodwork were splintered into matchwood, and the general effect of the damage done was totally dissimilar to what would have been the work of even the hastiest dismantlement. One door panel bore the appearance of having been pierced by a shell or some other fragment of flying metal.

All the woodwork was in excellent condition, the paint bright and the brass work freshly scoured, showing that it could not have been long in salt water. Nowhere were there marks of tools such as supposedly would show had the woodwork been pried loose and cast overboard. There was nothing to indicate the identity of the vessel.

CREPE IS REMOVED

For Forty Years It Had Enveloped Strassburg Shaft In Paris

The crepe festoons which for forty years have hung from the monument of the city of Strassburg, capital of Alsace-Lorraine, which stands in the Place de la Concorde, Paris, were torn down and replaced with flowers and palm branches, while a tri-colored sash was draped about the figure.

The ceremony was conducted by 2000 members of the Federation of Alsatian societies in Paris. Joseph Sansboeuf, mayor of the Eighth arrondissement, embraced the statue and then addressed the gathering. He said:

"The hour of revenge for which we have prayed unceasingly for forty-four years has at last struck. The French army is in Alsace. The red trousers are again seen on our plains and mountains. The gay bugles of France sounded the charge at Altkirch and Muelhausen."

Here Is Good News for Stomach Victims

Some very remarkable results are being obtained by treating stomach, liver and intestinal troubles with pure vegetable oils, which exert a cleansing, soothing and purifying action upon the lower bowels, removing the obstructions of poisonous fecal matter and gases and preventing their absorption by the blood. This done, the food is allowed free passage from the stomach, fermentation ceases and stomach troubles quickly disappear.

George H. Mayr, for twenty years a leading Chicago druggist, cured himself and many of his friends of stomach, liver and intestinal troubles of years' standing by this treatment, and so successful was the remedy he devised that it has since been placed in the hands of druggists all over the country, who have sold thousands of bottles.

Though absolutely harmless, the effect of the medicine is sufficient to convince any one of its remarkable effectiveness, and within 24 hours the sufferer feels like a new person. Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy is now sold here by Clyde T. Cox and druggists everywhere.

ENGLAND TO MINE SEA

Warning to Neutral Shipping of the Danger of Navigation

Great Britain, pointing out the danger to neutral shipping from German mines in the North sea, has indicated a purpose to plant mines in the same waters. Colonel Barclay, charge of the British embassy at Washington, presented to Secretary Bryan the following memorandum:

"The Germans are planting contact mines indiscriminately about the North sea without regard for consequences to merchantmen. Two days ago four large merchant ships were observed to pass within a mile of the mine field which sank H. M. S. Amphion. The waters of the North sea must therefore be regarded as perilous in the last degree to merchant shipping of all nations.

"In view of methods adopted by Germany the British admiralty must hold themselves fully at liberty to adopt similar measures in self-defense, which must inevitably increase the dangers to navigation in the North sea. But before doing so they think it right to issue this warning, in order that merchant ships under neutral flags trading with North sea ports should return back before entering the area of such exceptional danger."

LANDSTURM CALLED OUT

Indicates That Germany Considers Situation Desperate

Germany, so Brussels hears, has called out her "landsturm" in an effort to raise another million men to throw against France and Belgium.

If the report is true it indicates the desperate view of the situation that Germany takes, for the landsturm is absolutely the last resort, and means the conscription of virtually every able-bodied man in the empire.

The landsturm is composed of two classes of men—those who have served their alloted time in the army during time of peace, have been members of the landwehr or second line army for five years, or until they are 39 years old, and those who are absolutely untrained and who, for one reason or another, have escaped military duty.

The majority of men in landsturm are between 39 and 45, the latter the age limit for military service, and most of them have served their terms in the army. A large number, however, are men between 17 and 45 who have no military training.

ACTIVE RECRUITING

British Army Now Numbers Over Five Hundred Thousand Men

According to the London Times, England is now well on with her mobilization and has between 500,000 and 600,000 men under arms, not counting the national reserve. "We should, therefore, view the situation with comparative equanimity," says The Times, "and not be turned from any masculine resolve by the threat of an assault by the German navy."

Recruiting is proceeding at the rate of several thousand men a day. The business men are organizing their employes into a fifth line of defense. A majority of the able-bodied men of the country are drilling in their home organizations.

RUSSIAN MONEY SEIZED

Deposits In Berlin Said to Have Amounted to $25,000,000

A dispatch from Berlin says the Russian funds seized by the German government in Berlin banks are said to total $25,000,000.

A special commission appointed by the government in Germany reports that the country has a sufficient stock of food to last a year.

Emperor William has given $100,000 to the German Red Cross society and a similar sum for the relief of the families of soldiers killed or wounded in the fighting.

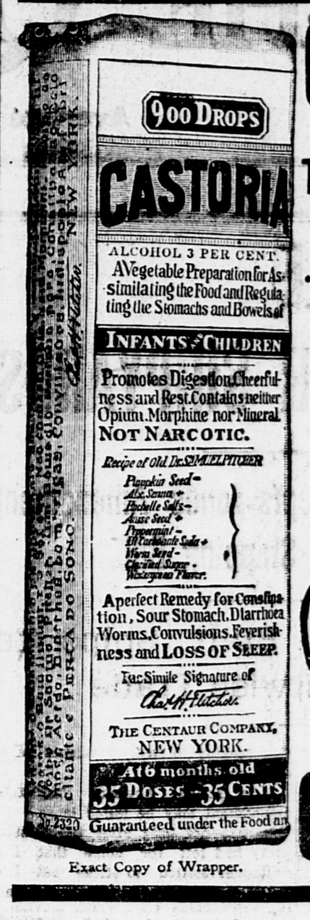

CLOSE TO YANKEE LAND

Hostile Warships May Soon Battle Off Coast of New England

Wireless messages picked up at Portland, Me., have given rise to the belief that a naval battle off the New England coast in the future is not an impossibility. The dispatches which are being sent between British war vessels show that a British fleet is being mobilized on this side of the water.

Naval authorities believe the mobilization of a British fleet, together with the closing of the port of Halifax, means that Great Britain is determined to rid the transatlantic steamship lane of the menace furnished by the German cruisers Karlsruhe, Dresden and Strassburg. The German vessels are said to be scouting in these waters, and it is believed England intends to run them down and engage them in a naval battle.

It has been learned through messages picked up that the first-class battleship Britannia is off Halifax. Other British fighters in these waters are the Lancaster, Essex, Berwick, Bristol and Suffolk.

BATHING IS NOW POPULAR

An idea of the popularity of salt water bathing may be had any afternoon when the weather is warm and pleasant by a ride to Houghs Neck on the street cars. The first sight of the bathers is obtained as Adams Shore comes in sight, but the real crowd of salt water nymphs is not seen until the entrance to Post Island is reached. From there on, the beach is alive with men, women and children sporting in the water and having the time of their lives. No very striking bathing suits are seen, all being very modest, and none at which the most sensitive could take offense. Bathers are seen all along the beach until the turnout on Manet avenue is reached. On reaching the end of the line and walking to the beach near the public landing one sees a crowd extending all along the beach toward Rock Island. It is a cooling sight on a warm day with a mid-afternoon tide. Bathing is also popular at the Ward Two bathhouse and at the Quincy Shore reservation at Wollaston Park and Atlantic.

PRIZE RECRUIT.

The Spokane naval recruiting station has drawn a prize recruit in E. W. Steele, a physical giant weighing 197 pounds, who speaks four foreign languages, and is the son of a noted inventor. Steele is 24 years old, a native of California, and is 5 feet, 10 inches tall, with a chest measurement of 37 inches and expansion of four and one-half inches. He is of German extraction and was educated in the San Francisco public schools. He later went to Germany and graduated from Berlin university. He is an expert stenographer, and also speaks the universal language, Esperanto. After serving a term in the navy young Steele expects to go into partnership with his father, a manufacturer of high explosives and president of the Steelite Explosive company, Slocan Lake, B. C. As a side issue Steele expects to do photographic work in the navy.

NOVEL HONEYMOON.

Gilbert E. Counts of Spokane, Washington and Miss Daisy Schultz of Pomeroy, after their marriage this week will enjoy a decidedly novel five-year honey moon. Following a summer trip to Oregon the young couple will enroll as students at Spokane university, taking the same course and graduating simultaneously five years hence.

As they first met at the university and their courtship was conducted there, college life is playing a prominent part in their destinies. Both will study for A. B. degrees and will take a year of post graduate work.

Miss Schultz followed ministerial studies last year, intending to prepare herself for foreign mission work, which she may take up at the conclusion of her studies.

Mr. Counts is inclined toward a somewhat similar line, having preached at a Spokane church in addition to pursuing his studies at Spokane university the last year.

GREAT BRITAIN'S MIGHTY FLEET

The Armament In Home and Foreign Waters.

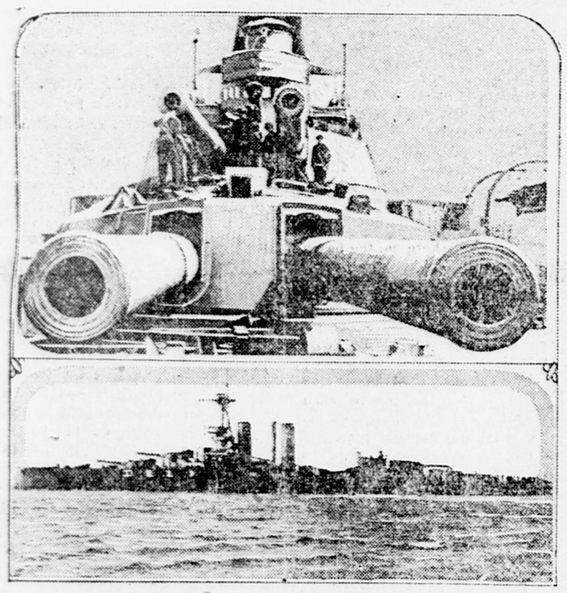

IRON DUKE GREAT FIGHTER.

Flagship and Commander of the First Division Ordered to Sea—The Newest, Heaviest and Swiftest Vessels. Battle Cruisers Strong and Swift. Armament to Cope With Aerial Warships—Phenomenal Speed Attained by New Battle Cruisers of King George.

THE fleet of British battleships which sailed at the end of July under sealed orders from Portland in command of Sir George Callaghan is a division of the first home fleet of Britain. This division is known in the navy as the first fleet and is always kept ready, fully manned, for sea service. Neither the second nor the third fleet has been kept fully manned, as many of the officers and men are training on shore and would not be able to go into action without first taking a period of training at sea.

The flagship of the commander in chief of the home fleet, Admiral Sir George Callaghan, is the battleship Iron Duke. She is of 26,400 tons displacement, 20,000 horsepower and has a speed of twenty-one knots. Her armament consists of ten 13.5-inch guns in double turrets on center line, twelve six-inch guns mounted in an armored battery and six three-pounders. She has four torpedo tubes.

The flagship of Vice Admiral Sir Lewis Bayly, commanding the first battle squadron, is the Collingwood. The other battleships of the first squadron are the St. Vincent, Hercules, Colossus, Neptune, Marlborough, Vanguard and Superb. These are among the biggest and most powerful fighting ships in the world, costing about $12,500,000 each. The guns are mounted in pairs in turrets, one of which is placed in the bows, two side by side amidships and two astern, one behind the other. The weight of the projectile is 850 pounds, and it has a muzzle velocity of 2,000 feet a second and a range of about twelve miles. This squadron has also a battle cruiser squadron comprising four vessels and one attached cruiser besides.

[King George spent years at sea and is admiral in more than name.]

Second, Third and Fourth Squadron.

The second battle squadron comprises the battleships Ajax, Audacious, Centurion, Conqueror, King George V., Monarch, Orion and Thunderer.

The second battle squadron also has a cruiser squadron of four vessels as well as an attached cruiser.

The third battle squadron comprises the battleships Edward VII., Africa, Britannic, Commonwealth, Dominion, Hibernia, Hindustan, Zealandia, and an attached cruiser. Four cruisers constitute the third cruiser squadron.

The fourth battle squadron, forming a part of the first fleet, consists of the Agamemnon, Bellerophon, Temeraire and Dreadnought, which is the flagship of Vice Admiral Sir Douglas A. Gamble, commander of this squadron. The Dreadnought is of 17,900 displacement, length 536 feet, beam 82 feet, draft 31 feet and speed 21 knots. She carries ten twelve-inch guns and twenty-four little twelve-pounder quick firing guns. The Agamemnon is of 16,500 displacement, has four twelve-inch, ten 9.2-inch, fifteen twelve pounders and five torpedo tubes. The Bellerophon and Temeraire were built after the Dreadnought and are of 18,600 displacement, 526 feet long, 82 feet beam and carry ten twelve-inch and sixteen four-inch guns and three torpedo tubes.

The fourth battle squadron has also an attached cruiser and three other cruisers.

Second and Third Home Fleets.

There are also a second and third home fleet. The second home fleet or division comprises two battle squadrons, numerically the fifth and sixth. The fifth battle squadron comprises eight battleships, an attached cruiser and a cruiser squadron of two vessels.

The sixth battle squadron comprises five battleships and a cruiser squadron of three vessels; also a light cruiser squadron of four vessels.

The third home fleet has also two battle squadrons, known numerically as the seventh and eighth. The seventh battle squadron consists of eight battleships, one attached cruiser and a cruiser squadron of seven vessels. In the eighth battle squadron besides six battleships are five distinct cruiser squadrons of six vessels each.

The first home fleet comprises in addition to the vessels already mentioned four distinct flotillas, each comprising a cruiser, a depot boat and fifteen to twenty torpedo boat destroyers. The second home fleet is accompanied by a mine layer squadron of seven ships.

Battle Cruisers.

Germany and England are the only nations in the group which have built any battle cruisers. These are huge cruisers of high speed and of great offensive power. They are in reality battleships, in which some thickness of armor has been sacrificed in order to permit the installation of powerful driving machinery to obtain speed. They might be called fast battleships. What they lack in armor is made up in speed. Still, they are heavily armored, though not so heavily as are battleships of the Dreadnought type. England has nine and Germany four of these battle cruisers.

Squadrons In Far Waters.

As its name implies, the home fleet lies in home waters. The navy maintains patrol flotillas to the number of four, besides a submarine flotilla numbering forty-seven vessels. Each patrol flotilla comprises a cruiser and about twenty torpedo boat destroyers. These vessels patrol the seas.

In the Mediterranean squadron there are eleven cruisers, heavy and light, and ten destroyers. The eastern squadron in China waters comprises six cruisers, six attached ships, ten river gunboats and eight destroyers. Both the Mediterranean and the eastern squadrons are likely to become involved in case of a general European conflict. Small squadrons, chiefly cruisers, are maintained in Australian waters, in the East Indies, around the Cape of Good Hope and off the west coast of America.

The Iron Duke.

The new battleship Iron Duke, the first of the five large ships of the 1911-12 program to be completed, was commissioned only last March for duty as the flagship of Admiral Sir George Callaghan, the commander in chief of the home fleets.

The Iron Duke is the sister ship of the Emperor of India. She was laid down Jan. 15, 1912, and was over two years in construction.

The Iron Duke and the Emperor of India are the first Dreadnought ships in the British navy to carry the six inch gun, previous ships, with the exception of the famous Dreadnought, first of her class, which was furnished with twelve pounders, mounting four inch guns.

Another notable feature of this class is the provision of two twelve-pounder guns on high angle mountings for use against aerial warships. The training and elevating gears of these mountings are arranged to permit of large and rapid movements of the guns in both directions. The effective high angle ranges is stated to be about 7,000 yards at an angle of not less than 80 degrees. The displacement of the Iron Duke and Emperor of India is 26,400 tons, speed 22½ knots.

KING GEORGE INSPECTING HIS FIGHTING MEN ON A DREADNOUGHT.

The fleet flagship of the German navy is the Friedrich der Grosse, having a displacement of 24,310 tons and an armament of ten twelve-inch guns.

Great Britain's Best Ships.

Since the beginning of 1913 the already mammoth British navy has been re-enforced by several ships of the Dreadnought or super-Dreadnought type, several of which appear in the lists of the battle squadrons of the home fleet above cited. Among these new monsters are the Conqueror, King George V., Centurion, Ajax and Audacious and the battle cruisers Princess Royal, Queen Mary, New Zealand and Australia. The Princess Royal and Queen Mary carry 13.5 inch guns.

The Australia and New Zealand were paid for by the colonies whose names they bear, but are at the disposal of the British admiralty. Their largest guns are twelve inch. The Princess Royal has reached a maximum speed of 32.7 knots, while the Queen Mary has been credited with the phenomenal rate of 35.7 knots. Other vessels of the 1911 program may be added to Great Britain's naval armament should she engage in a protracted war.

ADMIRAL SIR GEORGE CALLAGHAN, COMMANDER IN CHIEF OF THE BRITISH HOME FLEETS.

The British fleet is scattered around the world, but the British sea lords have never failed to have a strong right arm of their naval power concentrated in home waters under the denomination of the home fleet. The British fleet in the Mediterranean is nothing compared to the wonderful aggregation of steel concentrated in the home fleet. Great Britain is depending upon France to look after her naval interest in conjunction with the British battle cruiser squadron in the Mediterranean.

TAX RATES FOR YEAR 1914

Highest Figures in History of Several Cities

One of the towns of the commonwealth which will have an increase in tax rate this year is Winthrop, whose rate was announced Tuesday at $21, an increase of 90 cents over 1913. The real and personal estate show a large increase but the increase in the state tax and a large addition to the budget over last year caused the rate to jump. The total real estate valuation is given as $14,486,250 a gain of $697,350 over last year and the personal valuation is given as $1,795,900, an increase if $204,650 over last year.

Belmont's rate has increased from $20.50 to $21.00.

The tax rates reported to date are as follows, over one half being larger than in 1913:

The Lesson.

She gazes at her little brood,
Their clamorous wants she must supply.
New tenderness is in her tones—
"Oh, blest and happy mother I!

"But yesterday, this drum-drum life,
Its homely burdens, wearied me.
Impatient I, and discontent,
My cares were all that I could see!

"From dawn to dusk new tasks arose—
How blessed each one seems today!
The plain farm duties! How I joy
Here, safe, protected, dull to stay!

"The plenteous fields are stretching wide,
The quiet village lies below,
No rumor comes of pillage, want,
There's no alarm of threatening foe!

"Gay hollyhocks nod by the wall,
The boughs with ripening fruit hang low,
From yonder oat field sounds the voice
Of one whose fealty well I know!

"God pity women oversea,
Who husbands, sons, must give to die.
God make me thankful! They deserved
Love, safety, peace as much as I!"

AMERICAN NEUTRALITY HAS BECOME SERIOUS PROBLEM.

Prompt Steps Taken For Observance of President Wilson's Proclamation.

The magnitude of the problem of American neutrality in the international war into which Europe has been plunged, what it may mean in the future in the international relations of the United States and how great its importance may prove to Americans at present have come sharply to the attention of the administration at Washington.

Prompt steps have been taken to see that the president's proclamation of neutrality is observed to the letter. Instructions have been telegraphed to every collector of customs throughout the country to see that it is observed and that vessels clearing from American ports make out the necessary papers.

Commanders of revenue cutters from Eastport, Me., to Seattle and Nome, Alaska, have orders to give every possible assistance to customs offices to avoid violations of the proclamation. The cutters' cruising grounds cover every mile from Maine to Galveston and up the Pacific coast. For the present their officers and men will act in conjunction with the customs officials in port. If there are reports, however, of strange expeditions in the windings of the coast where there are no collectors and if the smuggling of arms is attempted the cutters will be sent out on patrol duty.

Very soon now the wheat crop, much of which goes normally to Europe, will be at the seaports clamoring for ships and passage. American owners will be anxious to sell, and no one doubts that some of the belligerents will wish to buy. Whether wheat will be contraband of war and whether the United States, as a neutral, can permit it to be loaded for shipment to a nation at war are questions. Wheat is only one of the many things which Europe usually takes from this nation which may be regarded as contraband. There is some question even as to whether gold is free from the ban.

Naturalization Rush to Avoid War.

Foreigners subject to military service in the continental countries and desirous of avoiding the "call to the colors" are applying for naturalization at the federal and state bureaus.

NO CAUSE FOR ALARM, SAY AMERICAN BANKERS.

Bankers throughout the United States, with the financial authorities in Washington, New York, Chicago and other cities, assure the American public that the war in Europe, which has upset international business to an unprecedented extent and has affected American interests, especially those dependent on foreign trade, need occasion no alarm in this country.

"The situation throughout the country is excellent and no greater testimonial to the inherent strength of our financial and economic position and condition could be given than the way in which the country has withstood the shock of the greatest European disturbance that has occurred in the last hundred years," says Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo.

"I know from my conferences with the secretary of the treasury, who is in very close touch with the financial situation throughout the country, that there is no cause for alarm." is President Wilson's statement to the public. "There is no element of unsoundness and there is no cause for alarm. The bankers and business men of the country are co-operating with the government with a zeal, intelligence and spirit which make the outcome secure."

The public is especially advised against withdrawing its money from savings and other banks.

Eugene Lamb Richards, superintendent of banks in New York state, says:

"In these days good citizens should trust those who are guarding their property and go on with their work without excitement."

FALL OUTFITS.

This month the thoughts of mothers are turned toward the school outfits that will be needed all at once for packing in the trunks of the older girls, and the many garments for the younger children that must be ready to replace the outgrown or outworn stock of Summer clothes.

THE VOGUE OF SERGE.

Serge holds the leading place in wool fabrics and comes in stripes, plaids and checks that contrast fashionably with the plain colored materials. Black serge is to be a favorite with grown up wearers, but the younger set take navy blue or very dark brown as their darkest color, and grade up from these into lighter shades of the same tone, or perhaps select some of the new bronze or leaf greens, or the dull copper reds that are especially becoming to certain youthful, clear complexions.

The trend of style though is toward rather darker tones than have been worn for several seasons, brightened by a touch of contrast in drop skirts, wide girdles, vests and collars.

PLEATS HAVE ARRIVED.

The pleats that came back in accordeon types last Spring are now firmly established, and all the other varieties promise to be with us now that the fashionable outline makes a demand for their use. One of the most satisfactory of the new skirts is laid in side pleats from waist to foot, and made up without any tunic or trimming in a style that we all liked several years ago. Even the long circular tunic so smartly endorsed, has its fullness flattened by pleats laid at intervals placed like the ribs of an umbrella. This effect is at once novel and particularly becoming where the figure needs height and slenderness. Skirts of accordeon plaiting without other decoration or with the pleating used either for tunic or drop skirt, are shown on many of the best Fall models. Where a plain drop is used it remains exceedingly narrow, and the pleated tunic is often in as many as three tiers.

TUNICS AND GIRDLES.

Tunic skirts are shown in an almost endless variety of models, and each style is varied in length and fullness of the over dress to suit the style of the wearer. "Wash Waists" remain only a tradition, and every device seems to be employed to give girth and freedom to the figure at this line.

Girdles of great width, wrinkled and boned simulate the new basque waists so closely that they are an invaluable aid in refurbishing last season's frock and lending it a modish air, so that a judicious investment in these appurtenances helps out a girl's outfit, out of all proportion to their cost, or the trouble of making them.

SCHOOL FROCKS.

The fashionable endorsement of wash fabrics for school wear at all seasons, is a boon to the woman who wishes to conserve her resources. Excellent wash materials of sufficient firmness of texture to hold the shape of the garment and with colorings that stand all tests can be had at moderate prices in attractive patterns and pretty colors.

Renfrew Devonshire Cloth holds a leading place in this class of textiles. Guaranteed sun proof and tub proof, this comes in fine clear colors, in modish stripes and patterns, and there is a matching plain color for every pattern shown, so that the color combinations, which are the favorite trick just now are easily made. Dresses of this sort come out fresh and new looking after repeated washings, and need no trimming other than the contrasting material.

REDINGOTES.

Redingotes will rule the mode both for separate long coats, and as suit garments. These are roomy in cut, but with long stitched pleats that make for trimness of effect, and with dropped sashes, belts and girdles that add very much to the style of the garment. Very wide flaring cuffs are worn and collars that are cape-like in their spread. Where the material is plain in color, linings are striped or plaided.

Black and white stripes are most popular for linings both in coats and capes.

OPEN RACE AT HINGHAM

The Eleanor, Dartwell and Dorchen Among Winners

There was plenty of wind Tuesday for the fleet of yachts, 47 in number, that took part in the annual open race of the Hingham club off Crow Point. The breeze if anything was a little stiffer than on Monday and most of the yachts went out with reefs tied in. The Areyto which carried away her mast in Monday's race steeped in a new mast that night, and was able to take part in Tuesday's race. There were no accidents to mar the success of the race which was remarkable considering the stiff breeze.

Class A the Eleanor of the Wollaston club won from the Areyto by 34 seconds corrected time.

In class D, the Dartwell again came to the front, winning out against a fleet of four boats by nearly one minute corrected time. In this class the Clara was second, the Mudjekeewis third and Iris fourth.

In Class I, the Dorchen II, was a winner with a lead of a minute corrected time.

Today the yachts are in Hull bay taking part in the opening race of the mid-summer series of the Boston yacht club.

SPORTS AT WARD THREE

Only One Week More of These Weekly Competitions

A good sized crowd took part Tuesday afternoon in the regular weekly sports at the South Quincy playground The competition was good in the boys' events, especially so in the baseball throw in class B, when four boys were tied for second place. In Class C, Iver Anderson put up a new record for the boys by throwing the baseball 279 feet.

Only one more week remains for these weekly contests, and it looks now as if W. Hartrey will take first place in the Class A, for he has a total of 38 points, and his nearest competitor has but 29.

In class B, Carl Westberg is leading, and in Class C, L. Curtin and E. Barry are having a clase contest for first place.

THROWING BASEBALL, GIRLS.

Class A, Florence Rosenberg, 69 feet; 2nd, Mabel Beaton; 3rd, Catherine Campbell.

Class B,—Won by Amelia Ferrazzi, 12 feet; 2nd and 3rd tie between Alice Gerrior, Mary Curtin; 4th Gertrude Eddy.

Class C,—Won by Theresa Zacchinni, 120 feet; 2nd and 3rd tie between Agnes Carroll and Elizabeth Cremmins; 4th, Lillian O'Brien.

35 YARD BACKWARD RACE, GIRLS.

Class A,—Won by Mabel Beaton; 2nd, Florence Rosenberg; 3rd and 4th did not finish.

Class B,—Won by Gladys Imlay; 2nd, Louise Hartrey; 3rd, Alice Gerrior; 4th, Mary Curtin.

Class A,—Won by Wm. Nelson, 2nd. W. Hartrey, 3rd W. Schwartz, 4th E. Littlewood.

Class C—Won by H. O'Brien; 2nd, E. Barry; 3rd, L. Curtin; 4th, C. Carson.

THROWING THE BASEBALL, BOYS.

Class A,—Won by W. Hartrey 162 feet; 2nd, W. Schwartz; 3rd, E. Littlewood; 4th, H. McLeod.

Class B,—Won by M. Cowe, 189 ft.: 2nd, 3rd and 4th tie between R. Deboer, C. Westberg and J. Fontella and J. Cahill.

Class C—Won by I. Anderson, 279 ft.; 2nd E. Hegblood; 3d, L. Curtin and I. Dahlberg.

The sports scheduled for this afternoon at Ward Two will be held tomorrow afternoon. This is the second postponement for the Ward Two youngsters and their events will have to be doubled up accordingly.

REMARKABLE CASE.

With a bullet from a 22 caliber rifle buried in his brain, eight-year old Lief Thormadsgard, son of a Spokane, Washington minister, will live, according to surgeons who have attended him the last month.

The case is one of the most remarkable ever presented to local medical men. The boy was accidentally shot more than a month ago, and after lying unconscious for a week survived two delicate operations for the removal of a portion of the brain. Unless unforeseen complications ensue surgeons say he will recover, despite the fact that it is impossible to probe further for the bullet.

The leaden missile penetrated a portion of the brain in a place where it would usually be fatal. A hemorrhage which followed had to be stopped by an operation. A few days later a portion of the brain that had been shattered by the bullet was removed. Many small bits of bone imbedded in the brain also were removed. The patient immediately began to recover, displaying a remarkable resistance. He has recovered his eye sight, which for days was absent. He can speak some again and recognize his parents. He is able to distinguish colors and in a short time can read. Whether or not the injury will leave his intellect dormant the surgeons at this time are unable to ascertain.

To Save Closet Space.

Metal towel racks, that have flat places at each curved end to screw to a wall, will almost double the capacity of your closet if screwed to the bottom of the lower shelf. A dozen garment hangers may be suspended from each one.

Generally Succeeds.

A woman likes to marry a man who feels that he was born to command, just to prove to him that he wasn't. —Puck.

FOR PEACEFUL DISSOLUTION

New Haven Directors Reach Agreement With Government

GIVE UP BOSTON AND MAINE

Will Also Part With Trolleys Without Fighting Suit—The Massachusetts "String Bill" Accepted—Hustis and Billard Resign as Directors and Elliott Is Elected President

New York, Aug. 12.—An agreement has been reached between the government and the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad company for the peaceful dissolution of the New Haven system, according to an announcement after a meeting of the road's directors here.

President Hustis resigned as a director of the New Haven, as he is to become president of the Boston and Maine. Chairman Elliott was elected president of the New Haven. The resignation of John J. Billard was accepted.

The New York, New Haven and Hartford agreed to relinquish its control of the Boston and Maine railroad, of its trolley properties and of many of its steamship properties without the ordeal of a contest in the federal courts.

This is the effect of a vote passed by the railroad's directors, accepting terms of compromise already accepted by Attorney General McReynolds. A decree embodying the compromise will be registered in the federal courts.

The compromise means that the New Haven will accept the "string bill" passed by the Massachusetts legislature at its last session, if the federal court in which the agreed decree is to be registered so orders, and if no other arrangements can be made with the legislature. The road is given one year's time to reach an agreement with the legislature as to the "string" provision.

The result of the vote on the railroad situation will be as follows:

An agreed decree will be prepared by the attorney general, along the lines laid down in the original agreement. It will provide for the turning over of the stock of the Boston and Maine now held by the Boston Railroad Holding company to a board of trustees, of which Marcus P. Knowlton is chairman.

The other parts of the New Haven system—trolley and steamship properties principally—will be turned over to similar boards of trustees.

PLEAD NOT GUILTY

Men Charged With Oleo Frauds Are Held In $15,000 Each

Providence, Aug. 12.—Pleas of not guilty, with the right to substitute demurrers or different pleas within thirty days, were entered by William J. Higgins and Jeremiah H. Hall to charges of conspiring to defraud and defrauding the United States of $400,000 in oleomargarine taxes. The defendants were held in $15,000 bail.

The New England Manufacturing company, of which Higgins and Hall are officers, pleaded in the same manner as the individuals to a charge of defrauding the government of the $400,000.

KIDNAPPED AND SLAIN

Girl Taken From Bed In Presence of Mother and Aunt

Schuyler, Neb., Aug. 12.—The mutilated body of Miss Louise Mick, the 18-year-old girl who was taken from her home Sunday night by a kidnapper, was found in a cornfield north of Schuyler. The young woman had been beaten to death with a club. Frank Heldt, a farm laborer, has been arrested.

Miss Mick was taken from her bed and carried away after her mother and aunt had been bound with wire.

The Ohio Senatorial Fight

Columbus, O., Aug. 12.—Returns received here indicate a close race between Foraker and Harding for the Republican nomination for United States senator. The nomination of Hogan for United States senator on the Democratic ticket was assured.

Railway Mail Bill Passed

Washington, Aug. 12.—The bill for readjustment of railway mail pay, under which it is estimated the railroads will receive about $2,000,000 additional per year for carrying the mails, was passed by the house on a vive voce vote.

QUESTION OF FOOD SUPPLIES

Of Vast Importance to Countries Engaged In War

MUST LOOK TO UNITED STATES

All But Russia Import Wheat For Home Consumption, While Triple Entente Leads In Production of Meat Products—Allies May Starve Out Germany and Austria

Washington, Aug. 12.—How long will the food supply of the warring nations of Europe last? This question is partly answered by statistics now being prepared by the department of agriculture.

These same statistics also show that, of the triple entente, Russia alone produces food products more than sufficient for her own needs. Furthermore, they show that all allies will be very largely dependent upon the United States for the food with which to maintain their armies. Apparently, if the war is long continued, Germany and Austria may be starved out.

Uncle Sam, with bumper crops, a wheat production of 2,250,000,000 bushels more than the average for the last ten years, and occupying a position of absolute neutrality, with the power to enforce that neutrality, will be able to make pretty much his own terms. These facts stand out strongly in considering the food products situation in Europe.

Of the six nations at present embroiled only one—Russia—produces more wheat than it consumes. All the others import wheat for home consumption.

Aside from Russia, only two nations produce more cereals of any kind than they consume. All others, excepting Germany and Austria-Hungary, are forced to import cereals for home consumption. Germany exports 7,054,600 bushels of rye annually, and Austria-Hungary raises 10,646,575 bushels more of barley annually than is consumed wihin her borders.

In meat products, the countries allied with the triple entente produce nearly twice as many cattle and five times as many sheep as do Austria-Hungary and Germany combined.

Germany and Austria-Hungary, with a total population of 110,432,740, face an annual shortage in wheat of 72,446,468 bushels.

The countries of the triple entente face a net shortage in wheat of 89,245,942, spread over a population of 250,142,525. Russia alone of the countries in the triple entente exports 150,875,000 bushels of wheat annually. The United States was the second largest exporter of wheat in the world, until this year. Her bumper crop is expected to place her in the lead.

The live stock figures for the countries embroiled are quite as illuminating as those for cereals. Here are some on the production of cattle, swine and sheep:

Austria-Hungary and Germany, 37,920,000 cattle; 36,464,000 swine; 19,270,000 sheep.

Triple entente and allies, 65,766,000 cattle; 25,972,000 swine; 96,277,000 sheep.

These figures do not, except in the case of Indian and Asiatic Russian wheat, take in the products of the various colonial possessions.

NEW PROCEDURE ORDERED

Rush of Foreigners to Become Citizens of the United States

Federal courts throughout the country are doing a land office business in naturalizing foreigners, a rush for American citizenship papers apparently resulting partially from the war, officers of the bureau of naturalization of the department of labor at Washington stated.

New procedure because of the doubt where victory will fall has been ordered by the naturalization bureau. Figuring that the whole map of Europe may be changed in a few months and that no alien now here can tell who his sovereign will be in ninety days, the courts are not requiring applicants for naturalization to fill in blanks on their papers requiring them to name their present sovereign.

Three months later, when they take the oath of allegiance to Uncle Sam, they may have the same sovereign and they may not, but, in any event, a change of kings or emperors will not hold up their naturalization applications.

REBELS IN CONTROL

Mexico City Is Evacuated by the Carbajal Federal Forces

Washington, Aug. 12.—The peaceful transfer of the reins of government at Mexico City from the Carbajal administration to the constitutionalists has actually begun, according to official advices to the state department.

The federal troops evacuated the capital, leaving the city in charge of municipal police, who by agreement were to be regarded as neutral.

The federals withdrew from the city to a near-by point, there to await an announcement of amnesty from General Carranza. Should guarantees be refused, officials do not doubt that a counter-revolution will be set in motion immediately.

Estelle Martindale's Plow

Story of a Duel That Did Not Come Off

By RUTH GRAHAM

It was somewhere between 1850 and 1855 that Adelbert Swift graduated from a northern university and, having heard a great deal about plantation life in the south, concluded to go there with a view to becoming a planter. He had inherited some means with which he might buy and stock a plantation; but, realizing his ignorance of the art of tilling the soil, he felt that it was prudent for him to gain some knowledge on the subject before making an investment.

In order to do this he conceived the idea of obtaining a position as tutor in the family of some planter. The hours he would be required to teach would not be many each day, and he would have time to familiarize himself with the workings of a plantation. He was not long in finding a position in the family of a Colonel Southgate in South Carolina. The Southgate plantation was a very large one, including some 500 negroes. Swift found he had not made a mistake in assuming that there was a great deal to learn in running a plantation. One of them was in itself a community consisting of two main branches, the planting branch and the business branch.

Swift, being young and not yet enervated by the climate, occupied a portion of the day riding about on the plantation observing the methods used and asking questions. He volunteered beside to handle the colonel's accounts, to which he devoted himself during the evenings.

The south has always been noted for the hospitality of its people, and Swift was made at home in the families of the planters in the vicinity of Colonel Southgate's manor house. Indeed, he received more invitations than he had time to accept, which was a source of trouble to him, fearing that when he declined one of them it would be set down as a slight.

Not far from the Southgate plantation resided Miss Estelle Martindale. Her father was supposed by many to be the owner of the plantation he managed. He had married its owner, who had died and left him with a little girl, Estelle. Martindale had contrived to get into debt to his wife for a considerable sum, and she had made a will leaving him an amount equal to his indebtedness, bequeathing the residue to her daughter.

Estelle was about Adelbert Swift's age. She had inherited from her mother not only the plantation, but a practical nature, and was principally occupied in checking an impractical father, whose chief idiosyncrasy was to sink money. She had learned as her mother had learned before her that to save her property from being wasted she must keep it and her finances in her own hands. In managing her father she was very adroit. Nothing hurt his pride so much as to have any one think that he was his daughter's employee. Consequently she always spoke of the plantation as his and consulted him about everything, though, matching her own good against his poor judgment, the consultation always ended in her views being carried out.

Swift, having been highly educated, made an impression upon Estelle Martindale. He found her particularly congenial, and she preferred him to any of the young men of her acquaintance.

When Albert Martindale noticed that an intimacy was springing up between Swift and his daughter he fancied he saw the end of his administration. He was not a bad man. Indeed, he was an honorable man, but it was impossible for him to contemplate with equanimity his daughter's marriage, since her husband must learn that his wife's father had no right in law to the plantation or its management. It is very easy for one to find reasons for preventing what is not to his interest and oftentimes to believe his reasons to be sound.

Martindale said nothing to his daughter about the prospect before him, but showed—he could not help showing—his antagonism to Swift. When they met, except at the Martindale home, he bowed to the young man coldly. In his home he would have scorned to treat any guest except with an appearance at least of cordiality. Estelle saw what was in her father's mind, though Swift did not.

What began between Swift and Miss Martindale with friendship developed into love. Swift called frequently at the Martindale home. Then came flowers, a sure sign that there were intentions. Martindale watched the process with disquietude.

Martindale, himself an ardent southerner, had a friend, a Major Marston, who was much prejudiced against the north. Marston, meeting his friend one day, spoke of Swift's attentions to Estelle and asked if Martindale were going to give his daughter to a northerner. This was the straw that broke the camel's back. Martindale made an evasive reply. But the die was cast. From that time he began to lay plans for breaking up the impending match.

He could not attack Swift on political grounds, for the young man had no political views. But Martindale must find some ground of objection to the man who, by marrying his daughter, would doubtless make an inroad upon his authority as manager of his plantation. It annoyed him that he could find no valid ground on which to base an opposition. Meeting his friend Marston again, he confessed the fact. There was nothing for Marston to do as his intimate friend but help him out. He covertly circulated a report that Swift was agent for a northern abolitionist society.

When this report came to Martindale's ears he forbade Swift his house, giving the report as a reason for doing so. Swift denied the charge. Hot words ensued, and before Swift realized what had happened he received a challenge to mortal combat from the man whose daughter he was engaged to marry.

He was wondering what in the world to do when Estelle's quadroon maid appeared and handed him a note from her mistress. It appointed a meeting between him and her at the house of a mutual friend. At the time named he went to the place designated and found Estelle waiting for him.

"You have heard what has happened?" he asked.

"I have."

"Is there no possible way out of it?"

"Either you must resign me and leave here or we must find some expedient to head father off."

"How can be be headed off?"

"First, you must not be placed in a cowardly position. He would kill me as well as you if I should marry one who showed the white feather. You must accept his challenge."

"What!"

"Be quiet. I have a plan for preventing the meeting or, at least, delaying it. And if it can be delayed long enough I may bring father to his senses."

"What are you going to do?"

"Perhaps it is better that you should not know. I may have to change my plan at the last moment. One thing you may be assured of—there will be no duel between you and my father. But he must not know that I am aware of his challenge. He would probably take measures to change the hour and place of meeting, and you would then be placed in a position to fight or be disgraced."

This ended the interview, Swift going to his own home. Estelle remained where she was till later that she might not be seen in his company.

The next morning the two principals and their seconds met in an opening in a wood not far from the Martindale plantation. The ground was being measured off when a horseman rode up and began to read something from a paper he held in his hand.

"Who are yo'," asked Martindale, "and what do yo' want?"

"I am the sheriff of this county, and I want either security or the money on your note of hand past due for $2,000. The holder of the note is not willing that you should risk your life without first satisfying his claim."

"Nonsense!" cried Martindale, looking at the sheriff as though he would like to shoot him as well as his daughter's lover. "Yo' get out o' the way, and don't yo' interfeah with a southern gentleman vindicating his honah."

"Can any of yo' gentlemen," said Martindale to the seconds, "relieve me of this unpleasant situation by taking up my note and holding it till I have settled with this man who has insulted me?"

No one present seemed inclined to take the risk.

Martindale stood looking upon those about him with wonder. That a man who was about to defend his honor should be denied a favor like this was incomprehensible to him.

"Do you mean to tell me, gentlemen," he said, "that you deny me the means whereby I may proceed with this affair?"

His friends were spared the necessity of replying, for at the moment there came the clatter of hoofs and a man rode on to the ground in great haste.

"Major Martindale," he said, "are yo' about to engage in mo'tal combat, suh?"

"What is that to yo', suh?" was the reply.

"In that case I expect yo' bet'o' risking yo' life to satisfy a claim I have against yo' fo' three hundred and seventy-six dollahs and fo'ty-five cents."

"And yo', too, Walker!" exclaimed the major reprunchfully. "Has it come to pass in the south that a man cannot protect his household without first settling every trifling amount of indebtedness he has outstanding? Has a man's honah become of less impo'tance than filthy lucre?"

"Yo' have my sympathy, majah. I have no desire to prevent this meeting. Give me security and I shall make no opposition to its proceeding."

"Will no one help me out of this degrading position?"

"I will, father." The words were spoken in a woman's voice from behind a tree, and Estelle appeared leading a horse on which she had been riding. All looked at her astonished.

"My dear little girl," said the father, "I knew you would be sensitive to yo' father's honah."

"I will take up these notes on condition that you shake hands with Mr. Swift and consent to my marriage with him. He is about to buy the Venable plantation, and I shall go there with him, leaving you to take care of your interests here as you always have done."

Estelle put her arms around her father's neck and did not release him till he had given Swift his hand and consented to the marriage.

It was she who had informed his creditors of the risk he was about to take.

AMERICAN GRIT IN STRESS OF WAR

Rich Men Glad to Get Bunks on Liner Leaving London.

WOMEN DO MEN'S WORK.

Paris Enjoys Novelty of Society Matrons and Girls Acting as Store Clerks and Small Boys as Subway Guards. All Classes Leveled and Hardships Borne With Smiling Faces.

From all parts of the war disturbed regions of Europe come reports of the withdrawal of men from the field, the shop, the store and the factory and the drafting of women to garner the crops and do other necessary work.

Throughout Germany the public schools have been closed in order that the children may take the place of their elders, called to arms, in the care and gathering of the harvest in the fields.

The women of Paris rose to the emergency created by drafting the men of the city for the army. Society women took the place of men clerks in stores to sell necessities. Young girls sold tickets in the underground stations. Others acted as waiters in cafes. Grocery stores and meat shops were run by women. Small boys were put on as guards of the underground trains. The motormen are aged, gray haired men, ineligible for service in the army.

American character was shown finely and typically at Southampton when 932 Americans sailed on the American liner Philadelphia. Of the total 502 were in the second class, which is the best the vessel affords since it was placed in the "one class" service by the International Mercantile Marine some time ago, and the remaining 430 were in the steerage.

The list of the Philadelphia included many wealthy men and women and many of prominence. They showed no annoyance at being compelled to travel in the steerage and made no complaint at their novel position.

Three wealthy Pittsburgh men agreed that it was true democracy, really illustrating the ultimate value of money.

Share Their Staterooms.

Persons who had staterooms to themselves went to the agents of the line and said:

"I have too much room. Fill the extra berths in my stateroom."

Many of the steerage passengers were cultured American women, and very soon they began exchanging berths, men in the first class staterooms giving up their places to women from the steerage.

Two trains taking American passengers to Southampton to embark for home aboard the Philadelphia left the Waterloo station to the strains of bands of British territorial regiments. The refugees showed the stress under which they were laboring on their arrival in London from the continent.

Men of great wealth carried as their sole baggage a bunch of golf sticks, and their wives had only fashionable Paris confections for traveling apparel. A fine American spirit of mutual helpfulness was shown. Men with first class cabin tickets gave them to women traveling in the steerage.

Rich and Poor Fare the Same.

News that they probably would be able to leave France Aug. 15 was received with cheers by American refugees at the embassy in Paris. Stranded Americans in the French capital showed the same optimism and cheerfulness as their fellow unfortunates in London.

Ambassador Herrick positively refused to allow favoritism in issuing passports. His friends and rich persons took their places in the line, waiting for hours. Mrs. Howe, sister of President Wilson, stood for three hours at the side of a schoolteacher from Nebraska.

As illustrating how the situation brought everything to the same level, James Gordon Bennett, whose motorcars and horses were all requisitioned, was going to the United States embassy to get news for his paper.

Two cattle trains of fourteen carriages filled with Americans left Paris for Havre to meet the French liner La France sailing for New York.

Many passengers were standing or lying on the straw covered floors. Millionaires stretched on the floors expressed themselves contented.

Nobody was permitted to take more baggage than he could carry in his hands.

HOW TO SEND MONEY TO FRIENDS IN EUROPE.

Sending money to relatives and friends marooned by the war in Europe is a simple procedure, as explained by Wilbur J. Carr, chief of the United States consular service.

Send to the state department a certified check, draft or postal money order, payable to "chief, bureau of accounts, state department." State plainly the name of the person (full name), city and address, if any, abroad.

The money will be cabled immediately to the nearest American consul, who will issue local currency or a draft (United States warrant) upon the state department, payable to the payee, who calls at the consulate.

THE SUPPLY OF BABIES.

What a Procession of Those Born in One Year Would Mean.

It has been computed that about 30,000,000 babies are born into the world each year. The rate of production is, therefore, about seventy per minute, or more than one for every beat of the clock.

With the one-a-second calculation every reader is familiar, but it is not every one who stops to calculate what this means when it comes to a year's supply. It will, therefore, probably startle a good many persons to find, on the authority of a well known statistician, that, could the infants of a year be ranged in a line in cradles, the cradles would extend around the globe.

The same writer looks at the matter in a more picturesque light. He imagines the babies being carried past a given point in their mothers' arms, one by one, and the procession being kept up night and day until the last hour in the twelfth month had passed by. A sufficiently liberal rate is allowed, but even in going past at the rate of twenty a minute, 1,200 an hour, during the entire year, the reviewer at his post would have seen only the sixth part of the infantile host.

In other words, the babe that had to be carried when the tramp began would be able to walk when but a mere fraction of its comrades had reached the reviewer's post, and when the year's supply of babies was drawing to a close there would be a rear guard, not of infants, but of romping six-year-old boys and girls.—London Tit-Bits.

HANGING PICTURES.

The Old Rule and Origin of the Term "On the Line."

People still speak of pictures being hung "on the line" at the Royal Academy, but very few indeed, even among the present members themselves, know the origin of the term. The common belief that it implies a place on the walls on the level with a spectator's eye is more or less correct. But when the exhibitions were held in Somerset House and Trafalgar square the term meant something far more definite. In those days people not only spoke of pictures being hung "on the line," but "above the line" and "below the line." "The line" was then a regular and permanent fixture. It was a horizontal line exactly eight feet from the floor, marked by a projecting ledge that left the surface of the wall below it two inches in advance of that which was above it.

A picture was said to be hung "on the line" when the top of its frame was level with this ledge. "Hung thus," says G. D. Leslie, R. A., in "The Inner Lift of the Royal Academy," "the picture, unless a very small one indeed, was exactly at the height to be viewed comfortably by a spectator."

The rule in old times was that all very large pictures, as well as whole length and half length portraits, had to be placed above the line, the bottoms of their frames resting on the ledge which marked the line, but no lower. The line was thus preserved level, no pictures breaking through it either from above or below.

Origin of "Navvy" Workers.

The seventeenth century canals or navigations gave rise to the "navvy," a term very slowly evolved from "navigator." There are many country public houses in England still existing that testify to the navvy's early designation on their sign, "The Navigators' Arms," which depicts a brawny laborer with a spade in one hand and a foaming pot of beer in the other. But you may search England through and through and you will not find a "Navvy's Arms." Curiously enough, while the navvy who makes our roads now obtained his designation from digging out canals, the canals were all legally classified as roads in a great body of statutes—the "road acts." But what would have been his nickname if railways had come before waterways?—London Globe.

The Judge's Misgivings.

A serious case of highway robbery, tried some years ago before Chief Baron Green on the last day of the Ennis assizes, resulted in an acquittal. The chief baron, addressing the sheriff, said, "Mr. Sheriff, is there any other indictment against this innocent man?"

"No, my lord," was the reply.

"Then you'll greatly oblige me if you don't let him out until I have half an hour's start of him on my way to Limerick!"—London Mail.

Your Height and Foot.

The height of the human figure is six times the length of the human foot. Whether the form is slender or plump, the rule holds good on the average; any deviation from the rule is a departure from the beauty of proportion. It is claimed that the Greeks made all their statues according to this rule.

Contrary.

"My husband thinks I'm extravagant and gets wild every time he sees me with new clothes."

"Does he?"

"Yes. He never sees me dressing up without giving me a dressing down."—London Telegraph.

An Invitation.

"How beautiful it is! How beautiful!"

"Yes, it is beautiful. It is from this point that no todrist has ever been able to view the scenery without giving me at least a dollar tip."—Paris Rire.

A man's task is always light if his heart is light.—Lew Wallace.

Mrs. Hannah Owen and two children to England.
John Monier to Scotland.
John Collins to England.
Erick Mattson to Finland.
Antan Schon to Sweden.
John Walker to Scotland.
Stama Erickson to Sweden.

The whereabouts of Mrs. William G. A. Pattee and Miss Elizabeth Pattee which has been in doubt for some time has been cleared up, for among the list of Americans registered in London, either waiting to take passage home or for money from friends, published in today's Globe, are those of Mrs. Pattee and Miss Pattee. Both were expected home a week ago but probably were unable to obtain transportation home. Quincy friends will be glad to learn that they are all right.

A cablegram was received Tuesday from Miss Bernice J. Everett, daughter of Mrs. Willard E. Everett of Wollaston, stating that she was safe at Interlaken, Switzerland, and that she expected to sail for home Tuesday, via Naples on a special sailing. In Miss Everetts party are a number of Boston school teachers, among whom is Miss Blanche Hall of Weymouth.

Winwood Prescott and wife of Boston are reported in London. Mr. Prescott is well known at Atlantic, being a cousin of Mrs. Edward A. Burkhardt of Billings street.

The following extract is from a letter written by Mrs. Helen Rhines Harman, daughter of Mrs. Effie Rhines at Innsbruck, Austria, July 26:

"Shortly after midnight came the first outbreak of enthusiasm over the Servian-Austrian war. News came of Russia's intervention for Servia. Bands played up and down the streets followed by the mobs of soldiers and natives waiting for the news. Today it is all excitement here. War bulletins are passed to us every couple of hours and this noon when the publication was made of the skirmish at Belgrade, the bands marched again and thousands followed, cheering, singing, etc. The soldiers are all on the qui vive, and the streets are filled with groups of three or four, talking, arguing, etc.

"The feeling uppermost now is indignation at Germany, that the forced Austria to send drastic terms to Servia, the latter might refuse and so Russia would help Servia, Germany is in the alliance with Austria and thus Germany gets the war with Russia that she wants. Italy is with Austria, so it looks as if we would be in the war regions yet for a couple of weeks. In case the soldiers are transported from here tomorrow, the trains will be in use by then and we will be detained here until the government is through with the trains."

The Quincy list of European travellers includes:

Miss Bernice J. Everett.
Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Grant.
Miss Helen Cashman.
Manley Perry.
Mrs. Charles Proctor.
Mr. and Mrs. Brooks Adams.
Miss Louise E. Lummis
Walter Grant Thomas
Miss Everett of Elm avenue.
J. J. Johnston of Pearl street.
Miss Jane Fortier.
Walter B. Holden.
Miss Clarice B. Doble.
Mrs. W.G. A. Pattee.
Miss Elizabeth G. Pattee.
Richard Pattee.
Mrs. Joseph L. Whiton.
Mrs. Harry L. Whiton.
Miss Ruth Whiton.
Miss Corrine LaBrecque.
James H. Penniman.
Mrs. T. A. L. Musgrave.
Mrs. George N. Harman.
Miss Bessie Roberts.
Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Duggan.
Miss Mary E. Parker.
Miss Mary Elcock.
Mrs. Louise Hernan.
Herbert P. Arnold.
Mrs. Charles A. Howland.
Mrs. Alice Hultman Eckhert.
Mrs. E. H. Dewson.
Mrs. Frank Floyd.
Mrs. V. Ruswood
Mrs. Mabel Phillips.

HOME ARRIVALS.

The Daily Ledger has already announced the safe arrival home of the following:

Mrs. Wilson Tisdale.
Dr. Harold Curtis.
Mrs. Warrener.
Miss Annie N. Morse
Hon. Louis A. Cook
Mrs. Edward D. Morgan.
Misses M. and A. E. Morgan.
Master V. G. Morgan.

When readers of the Daily Ledger hear from Quincy friends in Europe they are requested to telephone to the Daily Ledger,—Quincy 425, as their friends are anxious to hear from them.

NEW WATER MAIN.

Excavation for the relaying of the 24 inch water main on Adams street commenced this morning necessitating the closing of the street from Beale to Robertson streets. The work is being done under the direction of the Massachusetts Highway Commission engineers and a Lowell man is the contractor. It will be necessary to lay the duplicate line within two weeks the time alloted for the change. A diversion of traffic is required autos going to Milton via Adams street being obliged to use Robertson and Willard streets.

Put Curb on Campaign Expenses of Candidates

By CHARLES S. MELLEN, Former President New Haven Road

PUBLIC ownership is inevitable and is coming fast in this country, even if all these reforms are adopted. The cry against public ownership will vanish when the opportunity for making profit "out of concessions" of the business is gone.

© by American Press Association.

I DO NOT BELIEVE THIS DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC IS DOOMED TO FAILURE, BUT IT CANNOT LONG STAND IF MEN ARE GOING TO CONTINUE THE ACCUMULATION OF GIGANTIC FORTUNES, WITH ALL THE POWER THAT GOES WITH THEM AND ALL THE CLASS DISTINCTIONS AND ARROGANCE AND SERVILITY WHICH FOLLOW.

The temptation on the part of candidates for public office to receive assistance from the corporations in their campaign for election ought to be removed as far as possible.

I WOULD DO THIS BY ABSOLUTELY FORBIDDING ANY CANDIDATE TO PAY ANY EXPENSES BEYOND INCIDENTAL AND PERSONAL EXPENSES, SUCH AS CARFARE AND TRIFLING THINGS WHICH WOULD GO UNDER THE HEADING OF AN INCIDENTAL ACCOUNT.

DREDGING AT CAPE COD CANAL

No Large Volume of Traffic Forthcoming

Instead of Sept. 1, as announced after the formal opening ceremonies, it probably will be Jan. 1 before the Cape Cod canal is dredged to a uniform depth of 25 feet says the Brockton Enterprise. What effect this deepening of the present shallow section near the middle of the eight-mile water course will have upon the current or tidal flow is uncertain, but it is expected by the officers of the contracting and owning companies that it will appreciably reduce the rush of water back and forth and make navigation much easier.

While the Boston office of the Boston, Cape Cod & New York Canal Co., reports that business is increasing slowly, no large volume of traffic is forthcoming or likely to be for some months. This is largely due to the high toll rates, the tidal flow and the fact that craft drawing more than 12 feet are not wanted, although some vessels drawing as much as 15 feet are being put through when they come along all ready to make the passage.

The tolls are higher now than they will be when the canal is completed and in good working order. Purposely they were kept high in order that there shall not be too much business to interfere with the dredges and their barges and possibly cause an accident which would block the channel for a time.

Talk of a boycott by shipping interests is scouted by the officers of the company, because they feel so sure that terms will be made satisfactory when the time comes that they are ready and have the facilities for taking care of a large volume of commercial business.

NEW RECORD.

Conductor Hennessy of the Bay State St. Ry. set a new record at the Wardwell alleys Tuesday when he rolled a single of 143. In his performance he bettered the alley record of 136 made by Paul Poehler on the opening night. The latter score was made in a ten string competition, and Hennenssy's in rolloffs. The single was nevertheless a dandy and will be considered the record of the alley. Several men started out to equal it but fell down around the 110 mark.

NOT A CANDIDATE.

Councilman Griffin took out nomination papers as a Democratic candidate for representative from the Fifth district, but after learning that Representative Sullivan had announcel that he was to again try for the election, Councilman Griffin decided to circulate the papers in the interest of Representative Sullivan.

COUNCIL MEETING.

It is now thought that the special meeting of the City Council which is necessary to be held to draw jurors and transact some other necessary business will not be held until Monday, Aug. 24. It was thought that the meeting might be held next week but the venire for drawing of jurors has not been received.

Progress.

"Thirty years ago," said a woman of middle age, "it was the custom of demure girls to sit in public conveyances with their silk-gloved wrists crossed. It is now the custom of demure girls to sit in public conveyances with their silk-stockinged ankles crossed."—New York Sun.

FIREMAN TO RETIRE

Samuel Hibbard Has Been Milton Driver 22 Years

Samuel Hibbard, driver of the steamer of the Milton fire department for the past 22 years, is on his annual vacation, and at its expiration he retires from active service on half pay, as provided for at a town meeting three years ago.

There is perhaps no better known man in Milton than Mr. Hibbard. He is 71 years of age and makes his home on Central avenue. He is a widower and the father of two married daughters.

He took up fire department work in Boston when a young man, and for 16 years was the driver of engine 16, of that city. He then resigned and after conducting an express business in Milton for several years was appointed to the local department.

During his service he has never been in avoidable accidents and the occasions that he considered slight accidents have been very few and far between.

Mr. Hibbard, in addition to fire fighting, also did real fighting during the Civil war and is now a prominent member of Post 68, G. A. R. of Dorchester. Upon his retirement he will make his home in Milton.

OUT DOOR EXHIBITION

Pitroff, the Russian mystifier, who ends a three days engagement at the Kincaide theatre tonight, in an outdoor performance Tuesday evening, which combined all the elements of sensation, escaped from a straight jacket while suspended by the feet in mid air.

It had been announced that he would hang from the roof of the theatre but the upper structure made it impossible, so he picked the next best point, a window on the front side of the house, about 2 feet above the sidewalk.

At 7.15 the straight jacket was adjusted by a committee of spectators, the rope hitched to his feet, and he was hoisted nearly eighty feet from the gorund.

His perilous position seemed more so as he commenced to wriggle and writhe in trying to escape. With the blood rushing to his head he hung there for nearly two minutes before his tugs and twists released his arms. A few seconds after he pulled the jacket off over his head and was lowered to the ground amid the plaudits of the large gathering.

The exhibition was witnessed by over 500 adults and children and many afterwards attended the show and saw Pitroff, Jr., the youngest jail breaker in the world make his escape from a crazy quilt hitched to a bed in the same fashion a violent inmate is held in check in an insane asylum.

WORSE THAN SLAVERY.

Judge Lindsey in an interview in the New York Times, said: "Conditions in Colorado are not understood. By a bill supported by this board (Children's Aid Society) a widow whose husband has been killed in the mines and who has been forced to take a lodger in her two-room cottage may have her children taken from her. Her lodger is not married to her, and so it is held immoral that he should live in the same house. The children may be sent to an institution and may be adopted without their mother having the right to know what becomes of them. Oh, it is worse than the old slavery days." It is truly appalling that in a state where women have voted for 20 years, conditions for women and children should be worse than slavery!—

How To Make A Toll Call

Call the Local Operator in the usual way;
Local Operator will say, "Number, Please?"

Ask for the "Toll Operator";
Operator will say, "I will connect you with the Toll Operator."

Give to the Toll Operator:
Your own Telephone Exchange and Number;
Your own name;
Name of the person with whom you wish to speak;
Town or city where called party is located.
Toll Operator will ask, "If —— is out will you talk with any one else?"

Give name of alternate party, if desired.
Toll Operator will say, "The Operator will call you."

Hang up your receiver and await the call of the Operator.

THINGS WORTH REMEMBERING

1. You will not be charged on such a call if you do not get the person for whom you ask.
2. You can make a toll call from any telephone.
3. You can obtain rates to any place by asking the Toll Operator. No charge for such a call.
4. You can talk about 100 words per minute—the average speed of a telephone message.
5. If you want the Toll Operator to report to you the actual cost of a completed call, please notify her when you give the order for your call.
6. If you can't find the number in your directory, you can call for the party wanted by giving name and address.
7. If the person wanted has no telephone, we will try to arrange to call him to a pay station, if the caller will pay a small additional charge for messenger service.
8. When you leave your office or your home, tell your associates where you are going and your toll call will follow you.

LAST WOODEN SHIP IN NAVY

The Adams, the last of the old wooden ships of the United States navy, which from 1908 until last fall was the training ship of the Pennsylvania state nautical school, has been turned over to the New Jersey naval militia for their cruise off the Maine coast, we read in the Philadelphia Ledger.

This relic of the "old navy," is one of the most picturesque ships now afloat. Bark rigged, with her towering masts and high black topsides and the guns peering through her ports, she is an object of admiration and curiosity in every port she visits.

She was built in 1874. Until June, 1889, when she was sent to Samoa, she had an uneventful existence. During the controversy with Germany she was the sole defender of the American flag in that territory. She then was sent to the Pacific coast, and in 1894 went ashore in Bering strait. She was floated, repaired and brought back to the United States. She then went out of commission until 1908, when she was turned over to the Pennsylvania state nautical school.

SPIRITUALIST PICNIC.

The Church of the Universal Brotherhood, the Spiritualist society that has been meeting in Electa hall, will join with the Co-operative Spiritualist society of Boston, and hold a picnic at Glen Echo park, Stoughton, Sunday, Aug. 23 After a basket lunch and social hour under the pines a meeting will be held in the pavilion.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Barron and Master Clarence of Orchard place are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Ivan P. Horton of Somerville at the Idlewydle, Littlejohn Island, Maine.

FAIRBANKS FAMILY REUNION.

Members of the Fairbanks Family in America, and their friends will meet in reunion for the 13th annual home-coming of the Fairbanks Family at the old homestead, Dedham, Aug. 20. It will be an all-day gathering. Luncheon can be obtained on the grounds.

The homestead is the original dwelling built in 1636 by Jonathan "Fayerbanke" and contains Dutch brick fire places, solid English oak timbers and much white pine panelling, all in a splendid state of preservation. It is the oldest frame dwelling house in New England and has been owned and occupied continuously by the builder and his lineal descendants.

The Fairbanks Women's Club, an auxiliary to the association, and of which Mrs. Willard E. Dow of Braintree is president, has been doing good work during the past year and many new contributions of furniture, are due to its efforts.

All persons having a Fairbanks ancestor, by birth or marriage, are eligible for membership in the association. All persons interested are invited to attend this reunion.

Henry Irving Fairbanks of Dedham, is president of the association, and Mrs. Emmie Louise Peabody of Annisquam is secretary.

TO SUIT THE BIRDS.

Martins, bluebirds, and wrens do not take kindly to houses made of new, bright wood. Their instincts lead them to prefer the places which more nearly resemble the inside of decayed trees, in which their ancestors have nested from time immemorial. Build your birdhouses to suit the birds rather than to please your own tastes.—Farm and Fireside.

PLAYGROUND FESTIVAL.

The annual festival of the school playgrounds at Waltham will be held Friday afternoon at 2.30 on Waltham Common.

QUINCY GRANITE DATA OF INTEREST

Building of Bunker Hill Monument Brought Our Granite Into Prominence

Several of Quincy Churches Built of Quincy Granite

It would not be easy to enumerate the costly work into which Quincy granite has entered, but the yearly output is now in excess of 100,000 tons. With the increased demand there has been increased production, and there is more of it and better quality than ever before. Quincy quarries are equipped with everything that is up-to-date and modern, and a multitude of monumental manufacturing plants are fashioning this beautiful stone in the various forms of memorials and structures for commemorating the lives of departed ones. It is power, power, power everywhere, in the quarries, at the monumental works, in the polishing mills, in the turning plants, in the granite sawing plants, and with the tool manufacturers.

Composed of quartz, felspar and hornblend.

Crystalline in formation; some ecarse, some fine, some extra fine.

Differs in color and shades.

1715—town established rules to limit output of granite, that supply might not be exhausted. Unable to enforce however.

1749—Granite first used in construction of building; then split by heating and dropping large ball upon it.

1804—Blacksmith shops established in quarries.

1826—Granite railway built from quarries at West Quincy to Neponset river by Gridley Bryant; first incorporated railroad in United States.

1827—Stone for First church Quincy, quarried.

1829—Schoolhouse of granite erected on School street (used in 1914 as police station.)

1831—Bush hammer invented by Joseph Richards.

1840—Granite in large blocks used for street paving

It is with this modern implement of warfare rather than with her own airships that Germany fights the aerial fleets of her enemies. The machine is capable of attaining a speed of sixty miles an hour and is a good match for the bomb throwing air craft of the enemy.

CORCORAN A CANDIDATE

Councilman Daniel T. Corcoran of Ward Four announced Wednesday evening that he would enter the Democratic primaries as a candidate for the nomination of representative from the Sixth Norfolk district comprising Wards Four, Five and Six. He will have no opposition as far as is known.

His opponent on election day will be Representative Edward J. Sandberg, the present incumbant.

Councilman Corcoran is serving his second term and is on the committee on sewers, drains and water supply; ordinances, licenses, printing, rules and orders. He will receive the Democratic endorsement from the voters of his ward.

Representative Sandberg is also a member of that ward, where he received 214 votes last year. Last year he defeated Cornelius M. Duggan, 932 to 907. Mr. Richmond the Progressive candidate had 640 votes, mostly from Ward Five.

IDEAL SPOT FOR A CAMP

Mayor Miller came up from his camp at Hingham this morning to attend the Vaughn hearing at the Court House. When seen at City Hall the Mayor was feeling happy. His face is well browned and he said that he was feeling good.

Speaking of his camp he said it was an ideal spot. The air was fine and there was a fine spring of water near at hand. In pleasant weather it was ideal but on a day like Wednesday when it stormed all day it was not as pleasant. He had found a way to beat the bad weather however, he said, and this was by lying abed all day.

Soon after his arrival at City Hall he disappeared into his private office with Acting Mayor Crane to consult over some city business.

IN HONOR OF ST. ROCCO

Italians of City to Have Two Days Celebration

The Italians of Quincy are preparing to hold a two days' celebration in honor of St. Rocco, their patron saint. The festivities will commence Sunday morning and will close Monday night. The varied program to be presented on those two days includes street parades and fireworks.

The affair will be held under the auspices of the Society of St. Rocco di Croce of this city and they will be assisted by two branches of the society from Boston. The Brockton contingent has been invited to participate.

Last year the celebration was on an elaborate scale but this year more interest will be taken in it since the European crisis has embroiled Italy in its meshes, and many look for a demonstration of loyalty from her patriots in this country.

The Boston branches of the society are military organizations and they will participate in the parade on Sunday afternoon which starts from the Johnson building. The route will be Hancock, School, Franklin, Water streets, Quincy avenue, Scammell, Washington, Canal, Coddington streets to the Johnson building. In the line will be the families of the members and several bands.

After the parade disbands there will be an open meeting in Electa hall when addresses will be made by men prominent in the Italian movement in this country. Several officials of standing in the state will honor the occasion with their presence.

In the evening the Italians of the city will hold open houses when it is expected that several thousand visitors from Braintree, Weymouth, Boston and Randolph will be their guests.

On Monday evening another parade will form on Canal street and march from there to Merrymount Park, where there will be a fireworks exhibition. The society has raised $656 by subscription and all will be expended for this purpose. A band stand will be erected at the park and during the illumination they will furnish a concert of operatic and popular airs.

REUNION OF THE OLD 39th

The forty-eighth annual reunion of the Thirty-ninth regiment, Massachusetts Volunteers, with which company (the Quincy company) served during the Civil war, will be held in Woburn on Tuesday, August 18. This date is the fitieth anniversary of the battle of Weldon railroad, which was one of the thirty-ninths' most disastrous engagements during the Civil War.

The wives, sons and daughters and friends of comrades are invited to join in the reunion which will be held in G. A. R. hall, Pleasant street, Woburn, opposite the railroad depot. There will be a business meeting at 11 o'clock and dinner will be served at 1 P. M.

Co. D. was mustered into United States service Aug. 24, 1862 and the following are now living: Samuel D. DeForrest, Harrison G. O. Newcomb and Luther H. Parrott. Also George Monk of Co. H.

POLICE AND FIRE EXPENSES

Nearly Every City Expends Over $1 Per Capita

It is interesting to note how expenses of different cities vary for the police and fire departments. In the list below of 22 cities (of 80,000 to 15,000 population) fourteen expend more for their fire department than the police departments, Quincy being in this group.

In the group of eight which pay more for police are Somerville, Salem, Newton, Taunton, Everett, Chelsea, Pittsfield and North Adams.

The only smaller cities to expend more for police than Quincy are Gloucester and Chelsea. None of the larger cities expend less than Quincy.

For fire protection the smaller cities of Gloucester and Chelsea again spend more, while the larger city of Everett spends less.

In Quincy both the police and the fire departments cost over $1 per capita. In Chicopee, Northampton and Melrose the police departments expend less than $1 per capita, but in other cities the cost exceeds $1.

The only Massachusetts cities where the per capita cost of the fire department is less than $1 are North Adams and Northampton.

The figures are from the annual report on the Statistics of Municipal Finances for the year 1911

MURPHY—SULLIVAN.

A very pretty wedding took place Wednesday evening, when Thomas J. Murphy and Miss Mary Agnes Sullivan, both of Quincy, were united in marriage by the Rev. Father Coan.

The bridesmaid was Miss Jeanette McClellan of Quincy and the best man John J. Murphy of South Boston, who is a cousin of the groom, and at present is a candidate for the Senate. The bride was becomingly attired in a white crepe de chine waist and blue travelling suit and white hat.

Immediately following the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Murphy left amid a shower of confetti from their many friends, travelling by auto to Boston.

SUNSHINE CLUB.

The Sunshine Club comprised of girls of Post Island met with Gertrude and Frances Fitts for its weekly meeting on Wednesday afternoon. There were twenty-one members and visiting friends present. The usual sewing instructions were given followed by music and games, and refreshments were served by the hostesses. It was the largest attendance at any meeting this summer.

NEW WITNESSES AT VAUGHN HEARING

Mrs. Marsh and City Physician Tell of Happenings at the Almshouse

The Testimony May Be Concluded Friday

The Vaughn hearing, resumed before Judge Avery this morning, took a pathetic turn when Mrs. Catherine Campbell, an 89 year old resident, took the stand as a witness for the administration. Mrs. Campbell gave her testimony while seated.

She said she scoured the bath room most every day and had to take care of a sick woman who was so weak at times she needed attention every hour. Mrs. Vaughn, she said, abused her when she got her temper up and that she threatened to knock her block off.

It was part of her duty she said to dust stairs, and because of poor eyesight she frequently left some behind, and had to go back and do it over. She said she was not abused a great deal, because she did not deserve it.

Mrs. Alice A. Marsh a volunteer visitor of the State Board of Charity and a member of the philanthropic committee of the Woman's club, repeated what had been told her by inmates, including the story of how Mr. Vaughn had choked an inmate until he was blue in the face and stopped when an old woman flew to his protection and was afterward punished for it.

Counsel McAnarney raised his objection to new witnesses and they were noted by Judge Avery. The hearing adjourned at one o'clock and will continue Friday morning.

In cross examination by counsel J. J. McAnarney she said when she washed the dishes, another helped her, wipe them. She also charged that an inmate scalded her by pouring hot water on her hands. It was established by Mr. McAnarney that eight people washed and wiped dishes.

She said she heard inmates call Mrs Vaughn names, but she declined to tell their names. Judge Avery ordered her to name the parties, and she named Mrs. Shea and others that are dead.

Mrs. Campbell said the abuse consisted of scolding

Dr. Fred A. Bartlett, city physician, said he had visited the almshouse several times with Mr. Green. Once to investigate trouble reported by Mrs Vaughn.

Mr. McDonald, accused of starting something, when questioned, denied it. Mrs. Vaughn said it was the word of a pauper and guttersnipe against hers. An exchange of boisterous language followed.

Dr. Bartlett said he found the inmates suffering from ailments incident to old age, and that clothing was sometimes worn, and shoes were poor.

In cross examination he said he had used the word pauper at the other hearing. Counsel McAnarney then offered the stenographic report of Dr. Bartlett's testimony in which the word pauper does not appear.

He said he had tasted bread there and found it good. That McDonald had been to City Hall the day before their investigation with a kick but had no knowledge of its purpose.

Q.—Do you recall saying "Mrs. Vaughn don't cry!"

A.—I don't think so.

Dr. Bartlett left the stand only after a rigorous cross examination.

Mrs. Alice M. Marsh said: In 1905 the condition of the house was very clean. The rooms were furnished plainly, with no carpets on the cold floor in winter, no pictures, no rocking chairs. She spoke of having tea with inmates at the table.

In October, 1906, it was cold she said and there was no fire in the furnace. Inmates were shivering and cold. The matron said it was because the smoke pipe was out of repair. In consequence of an investigation she found a firm had been given the order.

The next day she said she called to see if the repairs had been made and was refused admittance by Mrs. Vaughn.

She said one inmate begged on her knees for her help. Mrs. Vaughn said women there should be chastised.

Mrs. Marsh said she had been told Mr. Vaughn choked an inmate until blue in the face and stopped when an old woman flew to his protection and was punished for it. She said Michael Curtis told her the same story and also that milk from the farm supplied

Speaking of travel in Europe. See America first!

Evidently America's big crops will be needed at big prices too.

Who, by the way, put the "mob" in "mobilize?"

However, bright may be the prospects for peace in Haiti and Santo Domingo the outlook upon the populace is dark.

That is what Europe gets for carrying so many guns and thinking uncharitable thoughts about the neighbors.

There is quite a wretched discord in the concert of the powers. Need of a competent bandmaster is apparent.

Mr. Bryan might send John Lind to Europe to try his hand.

Bringing on a great war is the biggest kind of colossal folly. It takes intelligence and statesmanship to keep peace.

Man was made to mourn and find things to worry about.

Probably Spain, Portugal, and Turkey are too poor to afford a war just now.

Mexico will now have the opportunity to quit acting and sit with the audience.

There are psychological moments and then again there is plain undiluted trouble.

Belgium and Holland as innocent bystanders more than ever deplore their lack of mountains.

Uncle Sam may have to send over a few ships of his own and bring home his wandering nephews and nieces.

Anybody might think that the original command was, "Be fruitful and multiply and replenish the standing armies."

Anyway with the Slavs involved, the slaughter of consonants is going to be something awful.

FAKING NEWS.

War-time always produces journalistic fiction. There is a twice a day demand for some fresh thriller, to justify the poster headlines. If no real dispatches have come, there is an industrious and imaginative bunch of young men who are expected to earn their pay. With the help of maps, guide-books, and a scrap book of recent military information, they turn out a very creditable bulletin from the seat of war.

Probably the majority of large daily newspapers print unchallenged, every dispatch that comes into their office. Half of this news is mere rumor, that is denied before the linotype has finished with it.

It never occurs to many people to compare the news of today with what was printed yesterday. The fact that half of the guesses of their favorite journal turned out to be mere pleasant fictions does not bother them.

But as the American public grows in intelligence, that kind of newspaper work seems to be growing less popular. To the man who has just learned to read, anything in black type has the authority and prestige of learning and intelligence. But another day comes when he begins to want to know what really happened, not what some reporter guesses about it.

The one thing that is hurting the success of faking newspapers is the fact that they are not good advertising mediums. The man who can be deceived by slip-shod and slap-dash work is not a buyer of anything but the barest necessities of life. The big newspaper successes of today are the newspapers that take themselves seriously, as a daily record of the world's actual doings, which feel humiliated, if by chance they have been worked for a fake. That kind of paper goes into the comfortable homes of substantial people, whose support is what advertisers are looking for.

WIVES OF PUBLIC MEN.

It is the rule in public service, that the man wins the applause, but the wife often carries a burden the weight of which is unrecognized. The fact is suggested by the pathetic death of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, and the ill health encountered by Mrs. Taft in the White House. The position of "first lady in the land" is not the ornamental joy it seems to many aspiring women.

The experiences of a public man's wife must be a little like those of a soldier's wife. The latter does not have to meet the shock of battle nor suffer from the miasma of fevers. But she can imagine untold suffering in her quiet life at home.

Similarly it is probable that the wives of public men worry a good deal more about attacks on their husbands than do the men themselves, who are used to the rough and tumble of politics.

Modern social dress parade places a heavy strain on women in public life. It ought to be sufficient for them to supply a quiet and peaceful home life, where their husbands would find refreshments after the contentions and toil of the day.

The customs of political centers make the wives of public men social leaders. They must entertain dignitaries in an attractive fashion, must maintain an appearance of social ease and charm, remove friction, subject themselves to critical comment, meet the intrusions of ambitious persons, and live in a flutter and turmoil.

Mrs. Wilson, not satisfied with meeting all obvious duties, generously tried to uplift the slums of Washington. Her case is a conspicuous instance of the many women who attempt tasks beyond their power to fulfill. Life in the social lime light is one of strain. The greatest kindness the public can confer is to let the wives of public men enjoy a quiet family life so far as is possible.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

For those interested in the present European war—and who is not—the Thomas Crane public library has collected some of the late books relating to the question.

This collection includes books about the past history of the following countries—Servia, Austria-Hungary, Germany, Belgium and Russia (the histories of France and England being too numerous are not included); also books presenting various conditions which are considered to have brought on this terrible calamity and books which treat of the ethics and probable results of war. These books, which may be taken out, have been placed on the shelf near the registration desk.

On the bulletin board near the door has been posted a bulletin of pictures relating to the first outbreak of the war—those of the Archduke and Duchess of Austria just before their murder, the arrest of the assassin, the present heirs to the Austrian throne, the three monarchs, Wilhelm II, Emperor of Germany, Francis Joseph L., Emperor of Austria, and Peter, King of Servia; and two German and French air cruisers. There is also a map of Europe with a list of the armies and navies.

An ingenious example of alliteration in the form of a tongue-twisting rhyme called "The Siege of Belgrade," which first appeared in a magazine in England in 1828, has been revived by the newspapers and may be read again with interest at this time.

Defective Hearing Cause of Dull Child

By Professor M. V. O'SHEA, Department of Education, University of Wisconsin

IT has been found that a CONSIDERABLE PROPORTION OF PUPILS ARE DULL BECAUSE THEY HAVE DEFECTIVE HEARING. This may be due to accumulations in the external ear, or it may be due to congestion in the nostrils. It is practically certain that any child whose head is stuffed up cannot hear with distinctness, and it would be a safe bet that NINETY-FIVE OUT OF ONE HUNDRED SUCH CHILDREN WILL BE MORE OR LESS DULL, UNRESPONSIVE AND STUPID. Such children will be handicapped in this competition with other children who are normal in this respect.

ANY PARENTS OR TEACHERS WHO HAVE A DULL CHILD ON THEIR HANDS OUGHT CERTAINLY TO MAKE A TEST OF THE ACUITY OF HIS HEARING. SOMETIMES PECULIAR FACIAL AND BODILY HABITS ARE DUE TO INABILITY TO HEAR CLEARLY IN ONE EAR, WHILE THE OTHER MAY BE NORMAL.

GERMANS ARE MOVING ON TO CAPITAL

Brussels Thought to Be Their Objective Point in Belgium

VIGOROUS RESISTANCE BY FORTS AT LIEGE

Movements of Invaders Not Generally Understood by Belgians, Who Are on the Alert—French and British Profitably Employed Precious Time Lost by Germans—Allies Make Vast Preparations For Telling Strike—Belgian Lancers Repulsed by German Cavalry—Food Supply of Belgium Said to Be Safe

London, Aug. 13.—Renewal of operations against the Liege forts by the German troops in and near the city, the advance of a large body of Germans through central Belgium, evidently toward Brussels, and minor reverses to the French troops in Alsace-Lorraine, are the principal developments of the war in Belgium and along the Franco-German frontier.

Heavy firing is under way at Liege and the forts are vigorously resisting the German advance. The movements of German troops through Belgium toward Brussels are not thoroughly understood, but several conflicts have taken place between the German troops and Belgians, who are supported by French and English soldiers, and are in good strategic positions.

From Muelhausen no word has come that is cheering to the cause of the allies thus far. The operations in that vicinity do not appear to have been extensive, but such as they are, they have apparently favored the Germans, who report having captured 500 French soldiers.

By Way of Brussels

A dispatch from Brussels says the Belgians are on the alert, as important bodies of German cavalry are making their way through the country above Liege, proceeding in the direction of Tongres and St. Trond.

The allied forces have been so disposed as to be supported by a fortified position at many of the chief points, but little or nothing has been done around Brussels, and it is thought that Brussels is being used as a bait to attract the Germans on.

The Belgian people are fearful regarding Brussels, as the German cavalry are carrying their raids nearer to the capital, but such considerations are not likely to have any effect on the decisions of the general staff.

On the report that operations on an extesive scale were imminent, a correspondent, by permission of the war control, made a circuit along twenty miles of the Belgian front, visiting the extreme advance and talking with the officers and men.

Correspondent's Impression

The impression of the correspondent is that no heavy fighting is likely in Belgian Limburg, where the Germans have little or no infantry. By the opposition offered by the Belgian troops at Liege, the Germans lost precious time, which was profitably employed by the French and British in concentrating masses at convenient points.

It is certain that vast preparations have been made by the allies, now spread out for battle, and they are likely to move quickly when the hour to strike comes.

A regiment of dragoons coming from the direction of Liege, who attempted to surprise the Belgians at Aineffe, in the province of Liege, were driven off, leaving 153 dead and 102 prisoners.

Cavalry Attacks Lancers

An important fight occurred near Tirlemont, where a thousand German cavalry, with quick-firing guns, mounted on horses, attacked a regiment of Belgian lancers. The latter retired, owing to numerical inferiority. The Belgians lost two officers and a small number of men in killed and wounded.

The Germans are erecting fortifications in the streets of Liege with a view to resisting a possible Belgian attack on the right flank.

Belgian aviators made flights as far as the German frontier. Belgian peasants accuse the Germans of giving no quarter.

An official report states that communication has been restored with Landen, a village in the province of Liege, seven miles southeast of Tirlemont, which German troops were said to have taken. The Belgians blew up several bridges at their front in that vicinity, which gave rise to the report of an artillery engagement. No news has arrived showing that such an action took place.

A German aeroplane flew over Brussels at a height of 2000 feet. Civic guards fired several shots at the airship, but they fell short.

There is no fear regarding the food supply of Belgium.

Fighting at Liege

The fight for the possession of the Liege forts has vigorously recommenced. The Germans erected a bridge at Lixhe for the transport of troops and heavy material, and it is possible that simultaneously an attempt will be made to cross the river Meuse in front of Liege, for convoys have been sighted proceeding toward Eugis.

The German advance is being greatly retarded by the Liege fortifications, as they dominate the routes taken by the Germans and also the intervals between the forts, thereby preventing the passage of artillery and transport wagons. The forts are beng fired upon and are returning the fire vigorously.

Germans In Rear of French Lines

The London Chronicle military expert attaches the highest importance to the British press bureau's announcement that "German troops are reported to be entrenching along the line of the river Aisne." He comments as follows:

"This means that the Germans in force have penetrated for a considerable distance into French territory from the Belgian frontier. This invasion is of far greater importance from a military point of view than the French incursion into Alsace.

"The Germans must have penetrated in the rear of the French lines along the upper reaches of the river Aisne. The mere fact of entrenching suggests the presence of a strong body of infantry."

Bodies of Slain Cremated

Wholesale cremation of the bodies of German soldiers killed in the fighting before Liege are described by German fugitives who have crossed the frontier into Holland.

During two or three successive nights after fearful carnage around the forts of Liege, the Germans collected their dead and piled them in heaps of twenty or thirty each. Officers explained to the men that it was necessary to burn the dead bodies in order to prevent them from becoming a menace to the living, and that there was nothing disrespectful to those who had died for their country in thus disposing of their remains.

Short funeral services were conducted over each heap and a military salute given by firing parties. In cases where the dead were lying too close to the Belgian forts for this process, the bodies were dragged under cover of darkness and pitched into the river Meuse to float seaward.

Sanitary considerations were not the sole reasons for removing the dead as rapidly as possible. The German officers realized that the sight of so many victims demoralized the German troops as they advanced to fresh attacks.

A French Explanation

"Up to the present hour no encounters between the German and French forces, except those of outposts, have taken place.

"The occupation of Mulhausen was effected by a French brigade of infantry in order to destroy the German intelligence centre in operation in that town. This accomplished, the brigade was withdrawn, the general in command considering the position too perilous.

"The French brigade was followed by the entire Fourteenth German army corps and a division of the Fifteenth army corps which were halted by our principal lines.

"Our strategical situation remains as before, excellent."

RUSSIANS CONCENTRATING

Preparing For Eventualities Along the Coast of Finland

The Swedish steamer Runeberg, which arrived at Stockholm from Raumo, Finland, reported that she had not seen a single warship in the Aland archipelago or anywhere else.

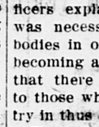

Her captain was told the Russian fleet had not met the German fleet at all, but was awaiting in the inner part of the gulf of Finland for a suitable opportunity to start an action.

The Russians are concentrating their troops at all important points along the gulf of Finland, especially at Ekenas, on the north side of the entrance to the gulf and Sveaborg, and keeping in reserve a considerable force reported to number 100,000 men.

A pier a half mile in length in the harbor of Hango was blown up by mistake. The commander, who had been ordered to prepare for the possible destruction of the pier, hanged himself upon discovering that he had acted prematurely.

The vessel had no news from the Baltic.

MEETS OBLIGATIONS

Germany Will Take People's Savings of $7,500,000,000 For War Purposes

The Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung of Berlin declares that Germany has successfully conquered the financial difficulty which followed her mobilization.

"The Reichsbank," the newspaper says, "came up to expectations and all the great banking institutions in Berlin and the provinces followed it. In the public interest no moratorium is desirable or necessary. The people's savings of about $7,500,000,000 will be taken first. All fears are unfounded that the mobilization will interfere with the harvest."

SOUNDS LIKE COMBAT

But No Warships Are Sighted Off the New England Coast

Sounds of heavy firing, evidently at a considerable distance out to sea, caused much apprehension among guests at the hotels on the Isles of Shoals, and reports were current that a German cruiser had engaged an English warship in battle.

At the Portsmouth, N. H., navy yard strange code messages, which the operators are unable to read, have been received.

Life savers with powerful glasses could make out no war vessels in sight from the shore near Portsmouth.

Inquiry among the coast defenders developed that some mortars had been discharged at Fort McKinley at Portland, Me., nearly forty miles distant, in a northerly direction.

Some color was given to the stories of a battle by the statement of Captain Dennison of the coastwise steamer Governor Dingley, at Portland, that he had sighted a vessel he thought was a British warship apparently pursuing another steamship.

AMERICANS IN AUSTRIA

Most of the Twelve Hundred In Disturbed Country Are Tourists

According to the latest information received by the American embassy at Vienna there are now 1200 Americans in Austria, mostly tourists—among them many students and artists.

There are 400 Americans at Marienbad and Carlsbad, 250 in Budapest and its environs, and possibly 100 in the Tyrol. During the last few days several hundred Americans left Fiume and Trieste for Italy.

There is no distress among the Americans at the present time, but there is apprehension for the future.

Columbus, O., Aug. 13.—Former Senator Foraker concedes his defeat for the Republican nomination for United States senator. He telegraphed congratulations to his successful competitor, Warren G. Harding.

Congressman Cooke has been defeated for renomination. Cunningham was given the Democratic nomination by a majority of 800. All of the other present Ohio congressmen who were candidates were renominated except in the Twenty-First district, where Congressman Bulkley and Congressman Crosser, thrown into the same district by reapportionment, are fighting it out.

Nicholas Longworth was nominated in the First district without opposition on the Republican side.

IS LEADING PHILADELPHIA

Buenos Ayres the Third Largest American City

The members of the Argentine commission who have been in this city in connection with the building of the battleship Rivadavia, have been modest in their claims for their South American republic, but the following from an exchange is an eye opener, and will be read with interest.

What are the names of the three largest cities in the western hemisphere? About 100 out of every 100 wellposted citizens of the United States would promptly answer—New York, Chicago and Philadelphia. And according to a communication just received by the Pan American Union they would guess wrong. This message states that the corrected returns of the recently taken census show that the population of Buenos Aires has grown to 1,700,000, thus passing Philadelphia and crowding her out of the third place.

The growth of the Argentine capital has been phenomenal. In 20 years it has almost trebled its population and become the largest city in the world south of the equator, the largest Spanish speaking city in the world, the second largest Latin city—Paris along outranking it—and the third largest city in the western world. Immigration is, of course, largely responsible for this rapid increase, but the city's birth rate, 34.1 per thousand, has cut considerable figure.

Some more interesting questions the answers to which are not very generally known, might be asked in this connection. For instance.

Where the most expensive theatre in the Americas?

Where the most elaborately housed municipal waterworks station?

Where the most architecturally artistic business street?

And the answer to each is Buenos Aires.

A few other noteworthy facts relative to the Argentine metropolis are the following: Not only is it the greatest South American sea port, but in point of entrances and clearances of vessels engaged in foreign trade it is ahead of even New York, while in tonnage and value of foreign commerce it ranks next to New York in all the Americas. It is the greatest wool-exporting port in the world, late returns showing that it has crowded Sydney, Australia, out of first place. In exports of frozen and chilled beef Argentina leads the world; next to Russia it exports more wheat than any country in the world; in the production and export of linseed it leads the world; while in the export of corn it more than trebles the United States and, of course, leads the world.

Relative to the newspaper building mentioned above, in a descriptive article in a recent issue of the Monthly Bulletin of the Pan-American union, Edward Alces writes

"The building is on the Avenida de Mayo, not far from the Plaza, and is said to have cost over $3,000,000. In addition to the newspaper plant the owners of La Prensa (The Press) maintain at their own expense a free medical dispensary, an able physician and assistants who prescribe for and attend charity patients; a law office where the poor may go for free legal advice; a free library; and a free employment agency. A large concert hall, beautifully decorated with paintings and frescoes, is maintained for its staff of employees, who also have a gymnasium and a private restaurant. Finally a suite of rooms is maintained consisting of a banquet hall, smoking room, ladies' boudoir, reception room and sumptuously furnished bed rooms for the accommodation of distinguished visitors from foreign countries as guests of the nation in general and of La Prensa in particular. These apartments are not inferior in their furnishings and artistic decoration to many of the renowned palaces of European royalty. Incidentally the paper claims to have the most extensive foreign news service of any paper in the world.

"The Avenida de Mayo is unquestionably one of the greatest thoroughfares in the world. It is about 120 feet wide and nearly a mile and a half long, extending from the Plaza de Mayo at the lower end of the new plaza in front of the Capitol at the upper. Along the middle, suspended from ornamental iron posts, is a double row of arc lights, and on each side near the curb of the 20-foot sidewalks, is a row of fine trees extending the entire length of the street. The main feature which strikes the stranger, however, is the uniformity in height, and the fine architecture of the buildings. The municipal government offers an annual prize for the most artistic building erected on the several business streets, and supplements this prize by exempting the building from taxation for a certain number of years. Again, under the building regulations each new structure must harmonize in architecture, height and material, with its neighbors. Thus no one and two story cheap buildings are found to mar the general effect on the Avenida."

K. OF P. FIELD DAY.

The largest number of Knights of Pythias and Pythian Sisters, who have ever gathered for a social affair in this State, are expected to attend the Pythian field day and outing at New Downers Landing, Saturday, August 29. Boston lodges of the order to the number of 26 are actively interested in the affair as are Apollo of Chelsea, Delphi of Weymouth, University of Cambridge, Valhalla of Everett and Aspinwall of Brookline.

Give Your Neighbor an Equal Chance

BY HOLLAND.

IF you have been buying goods of a mail order house you doubtless think it has been to your advantage to do so. You have believed that you were saving money or were getting better goods. Let us see if this is true.

Have you tried to do business with your local merchant—your neighbor—on the terms that the mail order house exacts? No? Then suppose you try it.

Just go into the store, plank down your cash and tell what you want. You might even tell the merchant that you will wait a few days for the goods. See if your local merchant can't serve you better and as cheaply as the mail order house.

The local merchant usually extends credit for two, four or six months. The mail order house demands cash in advance. It uses your money as working capital. It loses nothing in interest, nothing in bad debts or on slow paying customers. Try this cash in advance plan on the local merchant—the man you know—and see if he can't make it to your advantage to

SPEND YOUR MONEY WHERE YOU MAKE IT.

ON WALK TO PROVIDENCE

James P. Cahill Out for a Walking Record

James P. Cabill of Wollaston, seeking to emulate some of the noted long distance walkers, started from his home at 33 Berlin street at 7.30 this morning, his ultimate point for today's stunt being Providence, R. I. He reached the Daily Ledger office shortly before 8 o'clock and said that from here he would first hit Brockton where he should stop for a few minutes to transact some business before going on to Providence. From Brockton his route will be through Taunton, to Swansee where he turns just at the bridge leading into Fall River. His object is business and pleasure combined. Whether he will continue on Friday or return to Quincy he had not decided this morning. Mr. Cahill is employed in the office of the Old Colony Trust Co., of Boston and takes this method of passing his vacation.

OUTING AT NANTASKET.

Col. Henry L. Kincaide was one of the speakers at the annual outing of the Home Furnishers' association which was held at Paragon Park on Wednesday. The principal speaker was Judge Michael J. Murray of the Boston Municipal court who spoke on intemperance in Massachusetts. The other speakers however opposed the position taken by Judge Murray. After dinner the party indulged in a number of athletic stunts.

PRESS TROPHIES.

Finals were played for one of the Press Club golf trophies on Wednesday, when J. F. Murphy of Wollaston defeated J. McGuiness of Albemarle for the Secretary's trophy. All the other trophies are down to semi-finals which will be played Friday.

RECORD IS BROKEN AGAIN

Michael J. Hennessey Bowls a String of 149

"Records are only made to be broken" remarked Michael J. Hennessey, a conductor on the Bay State street railway Wednesday evening as he removed his coat to bowl at the Wardwell alleys, and he kept his word, for instead of leaving his single string record of 143 alone he jumped it by six pins.

Hennessey conformed to the rules as closely as possible and delivered each ball nearly a foot behind the foul line. A well informed man directed the removing of the deadwood.

His performance was in competition with other bowlers, but not in match play. Hennessey has been a consistent roller since bowling became the city pastime, and has brought down some fine scores. A large gallery saw the event, most of them having dropped in after the show at the Kincaide theatre.

Hennessey got one strike and six spares. His failure to get spares the other boxes cannot be blamed onto himself. His string, the best made to date, is 13 better than the one Paul Poehler, the champion small bowler roller of the world, garnered on the opening night in a ten-string match. Hennessey's string was as follows:

Strike	20
19	39
17	56
17	73
19	92
13	105
10	115
8	123
17	140
9	149

THREE STRAIGHT FOR DARTWELL

Fifty-two yachts started Wednesday in the first of the mid-summer races of the Boston Yacht club off the Hull headquarters of the club. The air was rather light from an easterly quarter. In addition to the regular prizes offered by the club for the series there are a number of special trophies in class P, the Bar Harbor 31-footers, and two special Boston Yacht club classes.

In the Sonder class the Ellen which will defend the Quincy Yacht Club challenge cup later in the month was a winner by lead of nearly four minutes over the Eleanor.

The order of finish in class D. was Dartwell, Grayling, Clara, Iris and Mudjekeewis. The Dartwell finished with a lead of nearly five minutes corrected time over the Grayling, making three straight this week.

In class A the Areyto of Commodore Drew of the Squantum club, who had her mast carried away at the open race of the Quincy Yacht club on Monday, was a winner, defeating the Marie L of A. W. Finlay by over ten minutes corrected time.

Home Made.

"My dear," said Mr. Wombat, "you look as fresh as a budding tree in your new spring dress." "The comparison is good," sneered Mrs. Wombat. "Like a tree, I had to make it myself."

HARVESTER MUST DISSOLVE

Declared by Federal Court to Be In Restraint of Trade

St. Paul, Aug. 13.—The International Harvester company was declared to be a monopoly in restraint of interstate and foreign trade, and was ordered dissolved by a majority decision in the United States district court.

Unless the $140,000,000 corporation submits a plan for the dissolution of the combination into at least three independent concerns within ninety days, or in case of appeal within ninety days of the issuance of an appeal mandate from the United States supreme court, the decision announces that the court will entertain an application for the appointment of a receiver for all the properties of the corporation.

Farmer Kills His Aged Father and Then Takes His Own Life

Clinton, Ills., Aug. 13.—In a quarrel over $12 in accounts, Porter Spencer, aged 48, a farmer, shot and killed his father, John Spencer, aged 78.

The quarrel started between Porter and his brother Thomas. When the father interfered, Porter shot him. After chasing his brother into a cornfield, Porter turned the gun on himself and blew out his brains.

TEARS, IDLE TEARS.

Tears, idle tears, I know not what they mean.
Tears from the depth of some divine despair
Rise in the heart and gather in the eyes,
In looking on the happy autumn fields
And thinking of the days that are no more.

Fresh as the first beam glittering on a sail
That brings our friends up from the underworld.
Sad as the last which reddens over one
That sinks with all we love below the verge;
So sad, so fresh, the days that are no more.

Ah, sad and strange as in dark summer dawns
The earliest pipe of half awakened birds
To dying ears, when unto dying eyes
The casement slowly grows a glimmering square;
So sad, so strange, the days that are no more.

Dear as remembered kisses after death
And sweet as those by hopeless fancy feigned,
On lips that are for others; deep as love,
Deep as first love and wild with all regret.
Oh, death in life, the days that are no more!

—Alfred Tennyson.

CONSPIRACY TO RAISE PRICES

Alleged In Bills Calling For a Wide Investigation

MATTER COMES TO CONGRESS

European War Said to Furnish Dealers With Excuse For Boosting Prices of Foodstuffs—Sherman Anti-Trust Law May Be Invoked to Put a Check on Speculation

Washington, Aug. 13.—War prices for food in the United States have called forth four investigation resolutions in the house. All of the measures propose inquiries into the reasons why, when American bumper crops are deprived of their foreign markets, the price of foodstuffs should go up in the domestic market.

Representatives Moore, Kelly and Farr of Pennsylvania called on the executive departments to make the investigation and Representative Donohue of Pennsylvania proposed the creation of a special house committee for the task.

In a resolution introduced in the house Representative Howard of Georgia called upon the department of justice to advise what steps are being taken to prosecute alleged combinations among dealers to advance the price of foodstuffs. The house resolution also asked the department of commerce to advise regarding the quantity of foodstuffs exported for the months preceding the European war and the quantity exported since the beginning of the war.

The preamble of the house resolution recites that the European war is being used by dealers as an excuse for boosting prices, and that such claims are false.

Representative Kahn of California said he would offer a bill making it a penal offense for any two persons, firms or corporations to enter into an agreement to raise the price on articles of food.

While Attorney General McReynolds was absent from the city, officials of the department of justice indicated that the strong arm of the Sherman anti-trust law might reach out to crush any conspiracy to boost prices.

Action of western meat packers in raising wholesale prices was particularly under suspicion. It was stated at the department that United States District Attorney Wilkerson, at Chicago, had the situation under scrutiny, and is vested with complete authority to take whatever steps are necessary.

Investigations by the department of justice and also an independent inquiry by some congressional committee were also urged. Democratic Leader Underwood of the house stated emphatically that he, personally, wishes any inquiry to be under auspices of the department of commerce rather than by a house committee. He said action could be secured quicker through the department.

Pennsylvania representatives led the movement for a federal inquiry. Representative Kelly declared the Chicago grain exchange should be investigated, primarily to ascertain if grain gamblers and speculators rather than legitimate "supply and demand" were responsible for the soaring of grain prices in the face of bumper crops and also despite the fact that prospects for "war" exportations are unfavorable.

BETRAYED BY DAUGHTER

Murder Mystery Is Solved by Confession of a Woman

Concord, N. H., Aug. 13.—Mrs. Eva Mills of Henniker confessed to the murder of Charles A. Manley, for whom she acted as housekeeper, according to officers who arrested her. The woman was brought to the county jail here.

Manley's head was blown off by his own shotgun after his return to his home at Henniker late on the night of March 6. Mrs. Mills declared he committed suicide.

The alleged confession of Mrs. Mills followed a statement from her 14-year-old daughter Frances, an inmate of the state industrial school. The child declared that her mother killed Manley, Detective Hildreth said.

When Mrs. Mills was confronted with this statement at Henniker, Hildreth said, she confessed the crime.

QUINCY BOYS ENJOY CAMP

One of Them Describes a Day at Wyanoke

Editor of Daily Ledger:

On Winter Harbor, which is an indentation of Lake Winnepesaukee, stands a cluster of tents and a cosy one-storied building, known as the lodge. This white village is known as Camp Wyanoke, and every summer since 1909, from seventy to eighty boys go to New Hampshire and spend nine weeks in playing healthly American games, growing stronger, physically and mentally. One of these days in July or August I am about to describe.

At 6.55, reveille sounded, and five minutes later in answer to three sharp blasts on the bugle, the camp lined up before Mr. Carter, who led them through a series of evolutions known as the "setting-up drill." After that followed a dip in the lake for those who desired it. At 7.15 a warning call for breakfast was sounded, and at 7.30, "soupy" brings all the camp to breakfast.

At 8.00 everyone gathered in the lodge. Mr. Bentley (the head of the camp) read a chapter of the Bible and a hymn was sung. He then gave out the various notices of the day. On this particular day, there was a junior base ball game in the morning, and a senior one in the afternoon, while a vaudeville show was planned for the evening.

After chapel, the boys proceeded to fit their tents for inspection, which was conducted by Mr. Bentley at 9.30. On this day of which I am speaking, tents 1 and 11 won the inspection banners, which were placed on the winning tents for the day.

Immediately after inspection, came tutoring, and the junior ball game between Exeter and Lawrenceville, the former winning after a close game by 6—5. While this was in progress some of the older boys were engaged in playing tennis on the courts, some were in the canoes, while others were doing various things.

The ball game was over by 10.30, and in answer to the bugle, there was a general rush to the wharf. There, all the swimmers disported themselves until called from the water. On this particular day, a diving contest, and swimming race were arranged, "Tubby" Dyer winning the second event, and John Love the first.

Soon after this, dinner was served to a group of hungry campers. After dinner followed an hour of siesta, during which the boys read, wrote, and a few went to sleep.

Immediately after the rest period, the Harvard and Yale teams reported at the diamond, where, after seven innings of loosely played ball, Harvard emerged the winner by the score of 13—2.

The tired players rushed to the afternoon swim, and from then till supper time, shot quoits and in numerous ways passed the time till supper. At supper, Mr. Bentley announced the program for evening.

About 7.30, the camp went to the lodge to enjoy an entertainment, which was as follows; the Lotus Quartet, composed of four councillors, sang the principal events of the week; Mr. Goodwin, another councillor, gave a fine exhibition of clog-dancing; then a bunch of acrobats. An imitation ball game was also on the program. After a few more minor acts, the entertainment was over, and at 8.45 "tattoo" sounded. Fifteen minutes later "taps" hushed the various noises of the day, and closed a typical day at Camp Wyanoke.

Now, having described a day at camp, I will give a few particulars about the camp itself. It is situated two and one half miles from Wolfeboro, on Winter Harbor, an indentation of Lake Winnipesaukee, in the south central part of New Hampshire. There are about eighty boys in camp this year, the following from some part of Quincy; W. Boyden, R. Sears, L. Crosscup, B. Blake, J. Dasha, W. Doble, K. Pfaffmann, J. Pfaffmann (councillor,) W. Jenuis, A Stevenson, W. Harlow, H. Schenkleburger, and G. Priest from Neponset.

On the camp council are 17 men.

There are eleven tents with a councillor and seven boys in each one, a hospital tent, while the lodge, dining hall, offices of the doctor and Mr. Bentley, the manual training shop and store rooms are all in one building. There is an excellent raft and wharf, and a beach for beginners.

Cups of all descriptions and sizes are awarded each year. There are two tennis courts, and of course, a ball field.

This is Camp Wyanoke, a wonderful place for a boy to spend his summer.

NEW ENGLAND'S VAST TRIBUTE

Has Paid $10,000,000 Annually to Germany in Trade

TOYS MAKE UP LARGE PART

Picture Postal Cards, Colored Prints, Dyes Used In Textile Mills and Other Merchandise Brought Over In German Ships Are Now Cut Off by the European War

Boston, Aug. 13.—Effects of the war in Europe will be felt in many ways in New England. Toys and picture postal cards, as well as all kinds of colored prints, dye necessary for New England mills, chinaware and chemicals, make up a large portion of the $10,000,000 trade which will be shut off by the closing of the ports of Bremen and Hamburg in Germany.

It is really a tribute of $10,000,000 which Germany has been collecting from New England because of its industrial and commercial enterprise and intelligence; for Germany not only manufactured this merchandise in her own shops and factories, but she landed it on our shores in her own vessels. These same German vessels took back from our ports whatever New England manufacturing enterprise had to offer in return.

Fully 75 percent of the toys sold in the United States come from Germany and most of the remainder come from Japan. Picture postcards, millions of which are sold in New England, come chiefly from Germany. This is a business which Germany has built up in an extraordinarily enterprising way.

But aside from these picture postcards the Germans have been doing an enormous business with New England in all kinds of color printing, from the cheapest and most insignificant labels and prints up to the finest kinds of reproductions of paintings.

Most of the dyes used in our textile establishments are manufactured in Germany. The Germans are supreme in the manufacture of aniline dyes and colors. Through their chemistry they have been able to extract more colors from coal tar than the chemists of any other nation. Another important chemical which has to do with our textile industry is bleaching powder. A great deal of this comes from Germany. So does most of the muriate of potash which is used in our fertilizers. Besides these things the Germans furnish us with most of our best acids—especially acetic acid.

In photographic chemicals and lenses Germany has also been doing a large business with New England, and, in fact, in all kind of optical instruments; also in musical instruments.

But next to toys the items which Germany has supplied our markets most exclusively are crockery and glassware and chinaware. In ten years Germany has pracically controlled the markets for these articles, although Austria and France do a large business with the United States in pottery and glassware.

The Boston candy trade will be hard hit by the advance in sugar due to the war, as Boston candy manufacturers require about 1000 barrels of sugar daily. The 2½-cent-a-pound advance within ten days means an additional cost of $6000 daily.

Sugar is not the only thing that has advanced in the making of candy, as the price of nuts has jumped an average of 10 cents a pound.

Boston, as the largest manufacturing centre in the world for chocolate candies, feels these increases in the prices of materials severely.

DECLARED IRRESPONSIBLE

Finding of Insane Hospital Head In Case of Mrs. Folsom

Concord, N. H., Aug. 13.—Dr. Bancroft, superintendent of the New Hampshire state hospital for the insane, issued a statement in regard to the condition of Mrs. Mary R. Folsom, wife of Henry M. Folsom of Somerville, Mass., whom she shot to death while he was driving her to their summer home in Newmarket, N. H.

The statement declares Mrs. Folsom is suffering from a form of dementia, that she is entirely irresponsible and that her mental tendencies are both homicidal and suicidal.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

LADIES NIGHT OF THE Q. Y. C.

Concert by the Philharmonic Orchestra and Dancing

The inclement weather Wednesday evening did not prevent a large attendance at the annual ladies' night of the Quincy Yacht club. A special car left City Square at 8 o'clock for the clubhouse and returned at 11 o'clock.

The large assembly hall in the clubhouse was none too large to accommodate those present, a larger part of whom were ladies. The ladies were welcomed by Commodore Crane who said the club was always glad to see the ladies.

The evenings program was given by members of the Boston Philharmonic orchestra under the direction of A. H. Hanley, assisted by Miss Gwenn Avec, who gave a number of pleasing Briton folk songs, and Miss Helen Russell Smith, contralto.

The Breton folk songs which were given in costume included "The Angelus," "The Shoemaker," "The death of a betrothed," and "At the pardon," while Miss Smith's group of solos included "Sing, smile, slumber," "Melisande in the wood," and "Who'll buy my lavender."

At the conclusion of the concert there was general dancing until 11 o'clock.

BOTH GUYS FILE PAPERS

Both Want Two Nominations for Councillor

"Guy Adams Ham" is the way in which that gentleman's name will appear on the official ballot for the caucuses next month. Mr. Ham filed papers with the City Clerk this morning for the Republican nomination as Councillor from the Second district, and also papers for the Progressive nomination.

The other Guy, Charles W., also filed papers for the same office. He is seeking the Democratic nomination and also the Republican nomination, having filed papers for both party nominations. In his usual characteristic way, the latter Guy gives his occupation as "A farm." What was evidently meant however was "A farmer" the last two letters of the word however were omitted. These papers were filed by his campiagn manager, David J. Roach.

TREASURER FOR TWENTY YEARS

For twenty years August N. Weeden has held the responsible position of treasurer of the Swedish Baptist church and the church people surprised him on Tuesday evening, when they presented him a beautiful leather arm chair. Rev. Paul Hallin was spokesman, but there were several clergymen in the party who spoke, including Rev. Bjork, Rev. Anderson, Rev. Coleman and Rev. Hanson. A. E. Lundin recited a poem written by himself for the occasion, which proved popular. All the speakers referred in complimentary terms to the long service of Mr. Weeden as treasurer. The church was prettily decorated with flowers. Refreshments were served.

DISTRICT COURT.

The continued case of Nestor Hmunen, for assault with a dangerous weapon, Quincy was called. Nestor withdrew his plea of not guilty and entered a plea of guilty and was fined $50.

Patrick Hanahay was fined $15, and John Smith $10 for drunkenness at Quincy.

Ray Wilcox was arraigned on two complaints for assault at Quincy. Cases continued until Aug 20.

Joseph W. Brown and Frank E. Morales were arraigned for breaking and entering and larceny at Weymouth, and were held in $500 each for the grand jury.

Edward Asnes was arraigned for buying junk from a minor at Quincy. Case placed on file on payment of $10 costs.

OYSTER SHELLS.

Once Little Valued, They Are Now a Boon to Oyster Growers.

Ten years ago any stranger could spot the shore location of an oyster fishery by means of the mammoth piles of oyster shells. These were heaped up on the shore in great stacks sometimes from thirty to forty feet in height. These shells were considered of little value. In many places they were actually given away and they were used to be crushed up and spread over road beds and they were also burned in order to get the lime from them.

Today these piles have disappeared and if you wanted a ton or so of them you would have to pay a pretty good price, simply because the owners want to dump them back into the sea.

There used to be a great deal of difficulty in preparing oyster beds for breeding purposes. Then it was discovered that the best possible breeding place for the embryo oysters was on the smooth inside surface of the adult oyster shells, and so every year the shells from the shucked oysters are taken out and scattered over the beds. The baby oysters attach themselves to these surfaces and thrive mightily.

There are experts today who know nothing of fishing for oysters or marketing them, but who devote all their time to the preparation of artificial oyster beds. This has become a recognized part of the industry. After the shells have been properly spread over the bottom of the water the spawn is liberated upon them and they are left to fight their own battles with the crabs, periwinkles, starfish and other enemies—Boston Herald.

SOURCE OF SHELLAC.

Insects Producing It Are Victims of Their Own Industry.

Scale insects of the group coccidae are responsible for one of India's most interesting exports, lac, the export value of which amounts to nearly $9,000,000 annually. Lac is the resinous exudation of the insect. The insects live upon the twigs of certain trees, and soon become covered with a resinous secretion that increases in thickness, protecting the body and the eggs.

When a colony, consisting of a few adult females and one or two males, find their way to a new branch, they attach themselves to the bark, and, having pierced it with holes through which they draw up the resinous juices upon which they feed, they become fixed or glued by the superfluous excretion, and after a time die, the females forming by their dead bodies little domes or tents over the myriads of minute eggs which they have laid. In a short time the eggs burst into life, and the young, which are very minute, swarm over the twig in such countless numbers as to give it the appearance of being covered with blood red dust. Generation after generation dwells upon the same twig until it is enveloped in a coating of the resinous exudation often half an inch thick.

"In the beginning the insect was much collected for the dye it contains. Later when the use of the resin became known the demand for the dye began to diminish, until now it has been almost completely displaced by coal tar colors. After separating the resin from the coloring matter the former constitutes the shellac of commerce.—Argonaut.

Condors In Chile.

The majestic condor is, air men excluded, the largest flying creature in the world. Swift and extraordinarily strong of wing, it figures in the Chilean national arms as a symbol of strength. The following is one of the native devices for killing it:

The hunter, having covered himself with the skin of a newly slain ox, would lie on his back on the ground, while his companion would hide himself not far away. Down would swoop the condor to feast upon the carcass, but directly the claws touched the body they were seized from within the oxskin by strong gloved hands that held the bird a prisoner. Then the partner would break cover and slay the captive with what Chaucer would have called "a yerde smerck" from a club.—"Chile—Its Land and People."

The Sin of Trousers.

Trousers were not introduced into England without a struggle—a struggle in which the great Duke of Wellington suffered his only defeat, for it is on record that in 1814 Wellington was refused admission to Almack's "because he wore trousers instead of breeches and silk stockings." Next year trousers were admitted to Almack's and Wellington won Waterloo. —London Tatler.

Disapproval.

SQUANTUM TO CELEBRATE

Plan a "Get Together" Night for Aug. 25

"Get together" night by the Squantum Improvement association will be celebrated at the Squantum Inn on Tuesday night, August 25. Plans were made at the regular meeting of the association at Squantum Inn Tuesday night to have a 75 cent Dutch supper in the main dining room of the inn, and to invite all members of the association and their friends to participate. The affair will be in the nature of a jollification and a boost for the association. It is expected that many new residents of Squantum will attend and become interested in joining the fine work which the association is doing for the community.

The dinner will be in charge of the following committee: Chairman W. N. Kenyon, John Holmes, James H. Foster, Herbert A. Smith, Charles Bostwick and T. F. Callahan. There will be speechmaking and an entertainment.

President John R. Nelson presided at the regular meeting. There was considerable discussion as to the presence of mosquitoes this year. Mr. Kenyon, the mosquito expert of the community, declared that it was obvious that enough oil had not been used on the fresh water breeding pools, or that there had not been enough sprayings of oil.

Chairman Foster of the mosquito committee said that he would make another spraying the first clear day, and it is hoped that future breeding of mosquitoes can be stayed. Mr. Kenyon admitted that it had been a particularly bad year for mosquitoes and that the utmost vigilence would have to be taken to keep down the pests this summer.

Reports of chairman of street improvements in various sections reported that work was going on. Considerable improvement has been made to Bayside road.

Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Bond celebrated their 29th wedding anniversary with a dinner party at the Squantum Inn this week. They have a pretty bungalow in Squantum and are popularly known in this section. Those to join them at the festive board were: Mr. and Mrs. James Foster, Mr. and Mrs. Harry E. Bean, Arthur Hunt, Elmer Colby, Miss Mildred Bean, Federick Bean, Miss Ruth Bean and Mrs. Tamar King.

Mrs. Horace W. Smith and her granddaughter Miss Verne Inez Smith are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert A. Smith of Wedgewood street for two weeks.

Mrs. Mahlon Wallace of New York is the guest of her father, Perley Bostwick of Brunswick street, Squantum. Mrs. Wallace will remain six weeks.

Mrs. P. Lawson Cosman of Brookville, who is a guest at the home of Mrs. George Morrill and a member of the Colonial Book Club of Brookville, entertained the members of the club at Mrs. Morrill's home Tuesday. The ladies arrived about 10 o'clock. At noon Mrs. Morrill assisted by Mrs. Cosman served a shore dinner. The favors were dainty bouquets of sweet-peas from the hostess gardens. It was a late hour before the good-byes were said, and all declared it was one of the most enjoyable outings they had ever had. Those present were: Mrs. Maurice Thompson, Mrs. Charles Faunce, Mrs. Fred DeCoster, Mrs. Marcy and Mrs. John Niles.

The many friends of Henry Guild will be pleased to learn that he was able to sit out on the veranda on Tuesday. This is the first time he has been out since his recent illness.

MINES IN HEADGEAR.

Hereafter hotel porters will look carefully under the bands of cast off hats, in search of for-gotten fortunes. By accident the employees of a Spokane, Washington, hotel have discovered that the hat band is even more popular than the stocking as a private safety deposit vault. The collection of discarded "lids" left by guests at this hotel assumed such proportions that the manager ordered the porters to consign the hoary headgear to the crematory. The first derby was thrown into the garbage can with such force that a strip of 2-cent stamps fluttered out. The discovery set the porters to thinking, and every hat was given a thorough inspection. Bills ranging from $1 to $5 were found stored under the linings and sweat bands of several, and when the treasure was collected it was found to aggregate nearly $40 in stamps and currency.

The Interference of Kitty

She Was Forgiven

By JOSIAH T. NEWCOMB

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

I.

The galleries were packed to suffocation. The lobby and even the senate floor were crowded. A sharp fight was expected over the merger bill, notwithstanding the confidence of the head of the promoting syndicate, who arrived the night before and established headquarters in a nearby hotel, and of Colonel Moulton, the chairman of the state committee, who kept the run of things from his office on the second floor of the capitol. Both believed they had the situation well in hand until they heard about Kittinger. Then they talked with each other over well guarded telephones, and Moulton sent for the senator.

Neither the first nor a second message brought him. The chairman put on his hat and walked to the governor's room.

"We are beaten. I suppose you know," Moulton said without preface, as he sat down.

"Kittinger has been here," answered the governor.

"What excuse did he give?"

"I did not hear him give any."

"Didn't you discuss the bill with him? Didn't you ask him what is the matter with him?"

"No."

"Then I'd like to know what did you talk about?"

"He did most of the talking. I told him that he was foolish not to see you."

"He isn't coming, then?"

"No. He said he wouldn't."

"George, do you know what this means to us?" the colonel demanded.

"I know what you think it means."

"Yes, and I'm right. It means that you lose the United States senatorship and that we go out of business. That's what it means."

The governor swung around in his chair wearily.

"I suppose you didn't come here just to tell me that again," he said.

"No, I didn't. I did not know that you had seen Kittinger. Anyway, it does not matter. Send for him now, and ask him to vote for the merger."

The governor walked to the window and looked out across the long stretch of dull brown lawn.

"I guess I'll keep out of it, Fred," he answered presently without turning around.

Just then the door opened, and a girl of twenty stood on the threshold. She held her long riding skirt in her hand.

"Joe said it was important and that I mustn't interrupt, but father promised to go riding with me this morning as soon as he finished his mail. You will forgive me, won't you?"

II.

A little later, when the merger bill was reached on the senate calendar, the majority leader blandly asked that the measure be laid aside for the present. Nobody objected, and the disappointed crowd filed grumblingly out of the galleries. Though they did not understand the delay, few believed that the merger was really beaten. This was the outside view. On the inside Colonel Moulton, Sanderson, head of the promoting syndicate; the governor and two or three others knew that without Kittinger's vote there was a tie. If he voted no the bill was lost.

"Well, find out what he wants," growled Sanderson when the situation was explained to him.

But nobody cared to undertake the task. Kittinger did not understand the game, they felt; and, besides, he might be against the bill on principle. They had heard of such things.

"Can't you call it up when Kittinger is absent?" suggested Sanderson.

They considered this, but not hopefully. The lieutenant governor could be depended upon for the casting vote, but Kittinger was never absent.

III.

Within half an hour after her return from the ride with her father Kitty Millard knew that in respect to the merger bill she had unwittingly put her dainty little foot into it. Such details of the situation as she failed to get from her father she skillfully extracted from Colonel Moulton. She took at face value all that the colonel said about the bearing of the merger bill on her father's political fortunes. This is the reason why she marched into Moulton's office the next morning and offered her services to help pass the bill.

"I'm afraid, though," she admitted, "that I can't do much with father. He has made up his mind not to interfere. He told me that."

"I don't just see, then"— began Moulton.

"No, I know you don't," answered Miss Millard, "though you are an old dear. I'm going to capture your senator for you. I've made up my mind."

"Do you know him?"

"Just. I've met him at dinner once or twice. How much time do you give me?"

Moulton was ready to catch at straws, which accounts for his answering seriously.

"If we cannot pass the bill by this time next month we never can," he said.

"Very well," said Miss Millard.

"I wish you luck," said the colonel.

Kittinger was young, and at first things went swimmingly. He was assigned to take her into dinner an evening or two after the temporary defeat of the merger bill.

Among the privileges enjoyed by those who were crowned with Kitty's royal favor was a license to ride with her in the mornings.

She was unconventional as to grooms. On the morning Kittinger rode with her, for the fourth or fifth time since their more intimate acquaintance began, they went alone.

It was mad riding from the beginning. Kitty intended that it should be. It is useless to excuse or extenuate her conduct. Any defense would fall below the documentary evidence of her guilt in the form of a scribbled note to Colonel Moulton dispatched the night before. It said:

Call up your bill early tomorrow. He will be absent part of the session.

KITTY.

The start was early, and they were a good distance from town when Kitty saw the young senator look at his watch. As he shut it with a determined snap the horse that Kitty rode gave an unexpected jump, and the bridle broke. The spirited black went into the air, then sped wildly down the road, headed from town. Kitty cast a wild, appealing glance behind her, with a pitiful little cry, and clung to the saddle.

For perhaps a mile Kittinger was unable to overtake them. Then came an accident which could not have been planned, however dark a view is taken of Kitty's conduct. A team, dragging a long timber wagon, occupied nearly all of the narrow highway. The black swerved suddenly, and Kitty landed in a heap at the side of the road.

Kittinger had forgotten the senate, the merger bill, his public duties, everything except Kitty's danger. He ran to her and lifted her in his arms, and he was conscious of a great thrill of joy and relief, for she opened her eyes and spoke.

"I'm not hurt in the least," she said. But when she tried to stand on her feet she promptly sank back into Kittinger's arms and fainted dead away.

IV.

Kittinger reached the senate chamber an hour after the merger bill had been called up and passed. Extras were already in the street announcing it.

Kittinger was furious. He rose to a question of personal privilege and denounced the proceeding as a dastardly trick. The leader of the majority, in reply, declared that he was surprised and grieved at the unwarranted charge. He disliked, however, to impute malice to any one, and therefore he would put it down to the youth and inexperience of the senator. Kittinger, unconvinced, marched out of the chamber and down to the office of Colonel Moulton. That genial gentleman, however, was not present to listen to his denunciation. The room was empty, but Kittinger's eye took in at a single glance a scrap of paper carelessly left lying on the chairman's desk. It was Kitty's note to Moulton, and the single glance told Kittinger its contents.

He knew the handwriting. He knew the signature. He rushed out of the room with feelings hard to describe.

V.

For three days an impatient young woman with a plaster cast on her ankle sat up in bed at frequent intervals to look at cards which came with deluges of flowers and fruits and dainty trifles, only to fling them aside and sink back again to her pillows, wholly unsatisfied.

When the doctor announced her recovery from the shock and permitted her to be dressed it was a penitent and remorseful Kitty who wrote a pitiful little note to Senator Kittinger. She said that she had a confession to make and would he please come to her and listen to it; after which he alone should decide what was to be done.

Senator Kittinger came. His indignation lasted until he reached the room where she awaited him, propped up with pillows. She was quite pale, and she extended a wan little hand to him timidly, for she was not sure that he would take it.

He did take it, and on the instant all his anger died out, for he saw again the great black horse with bridle dangling, thundering down the highway and after a huddled little figure lying by the roadway and not stirring for what seemed an eternity until he lifted it in his arms.

And so he held the small hand tightly and went down on one knee beside her, and the only words of reproach which he spoke were:

"Kitty, Kitty, how could you? It was terrible! You might have killed yourself!"

"Wait!" she said. "You do not know how bad I am—how wicked!"

"Yes, I do," he mumbled through the small fingers. But she did not heed.

"You think that I was reckless. That was nothing—nothing. I did not mean to fall off and be hurt, but I broke the bridle on purpose. I planned the runaway. I intended to keep you from getting back in time. I did it deliberately."

"I know all about it," said Kittinger. Kitty looked puzzled.

"You—kissed me—after you knew?" she inquired wonderingly.

He kissed her again to convince her.

A few minutes later Governor Millard himself came in. Kittinger was still half kneeling beside the low chair, and there were explanations.

Presently, when Kittinger was taking his departure, the governor called him back.

"By the way, senator," he said, "I have a piece of news which may interest you."

"Yes?" said Kittinger.

"I have just vetoed the merger bill," said the governor.

GERMANS MUST OCCUPY LIEGE

Belgian City Vital Point In Their Plan of Campaign.

KEY TO ATTACK ON FRANCE

Three Great Teuton Armies Put In Motion Against Enemy In First Hours of War—Balked by Unexpected Resistance of Belgians to Invasion of Their Territory.

To understand the fighting which marked the beginning of the great Franco-German conflict it is necessary to grasp clearly just one simple geographical fact.

From the Rhine, which is the base of German operations, three routes lead west and south into France. The first starts at Cologne, crosses the Belgian frontier just beyond Aix-la-Chapelle, reaches the Meuse at Liege and ascends the Meuse to enter France between Maubeuge and Givet by a natural gap in the divide between the headwaters of the Oise and the Sambre. This is the route followed by the main railroad between Paris and Berlin.

The second natural avenue to France starts at Coblenz and ascends the valley of the Moselle until it arrives at Luxemburg. It then crosses into France by Longwy and the gap of Stenay.

The third approach follows the Rhine valley from Mayence to Strassburg, and then turns west through the famous Saverne gap to cross the frontier of France near Luneville and Nancy and directly in the center of the open space left in the French forts between Epinal and Toul.

Three Great German Armies.

Conforming to the geographical conditions, the Germans are directing at France three great armies—the Army of the Meuse, based on Cologne; the Army of the Moselle, based on Coblenz, and the Army of the Rhine, based on Mayence and on Strassburg. The first would naturally become visible when it touched Belgian territory; the second when Luxemburg was invaded; the third would remain masked behind the fortifications of Metz and Strassburg. The first two would arrive in France behind the Belfort-Verdun barrier of forts and presumably compel the French army on this line to fall back, opening the way for the Army of the Rhine and permitting the concentration of all three German armies well within French territory and north of Paris, the German objective.

A German advance guard walked into Luxemburg and occupied the principality. This was plainly only a flying expedition made up of garrisons of frontier posts. Having occupied Luxemburg, they began to skirmish in front of Longwy, and this fighting continued growing stiffer as the mass of the Army of the Moselle came up.

In the same fashion they also began on the same day skirmishing on the border facing Strassburg. Crey was seized, raiding parties crossed the boundary, and a dirigible dropped bombs in Luneville, the first considerable town on the line of the approach of the Army of the Rhine.

Belgians Opposed the Advance.

The Army of the Meuse had assigned to it the most difficult preliminary role. Between Cologne, its base, and the frontier is a distance of twenty-five miles. Its advance was preceded by a demand to be permitted to cross, made by the kaiser upon the Belgian government.

The permission being denied and Belgian resistance assured the invading force deployed rapidly until it spread out over an area of some thirty miles, its right flank resting upon the Dutch frontier at Vise, its left upon Spa and Stavelot and its bulk on the line of the railway from Liege to Cologne, which, going south, descends the Vesdre river to its junction with the Meuse at Liege.

Three possibilities had to be considered by the German commander of the Army of the Meuse. The Belgians might make no resistance. They might content themselves with a formal and insignificant resistance or they might, in attempting to make a real resistance, fail utterly because their mobilization was incomplete. In any case his necessity was to push on at top speed and endeavor to lay hands upon Liege, a strongly fortified town, before it was prepared and at the same time endeavor to isolate it by an enveloping movement, which necessitated crossing the Meuse at Vise.

Could the Germans lay hold of Liege all Belgium to the sea would lie open to them. As they were anxious not to fight in Belgium, but to get across Belgium to France as quickly as possible, it would have been necessary to leave only a little garrison in the forts of Liege, thus protecting their flank, and press on up the Meuse valley to the open French frontier.

So valuable in the scheme of German operations was Liege that the sacrifice of some thousands of men to capture it was held worth while. This explains the apparent recklessness of the opening attacks and the slaughter which Belgian dispatches declare accompanied their repulse.

An unexpectedly heroic Belgian resistance has temporarily delayed the advance of the Army of the Meuse.

IT IS SAID ABOUT QUINCY

That the price of necessities of life have commenced to go up.

That the recent increase is said to be due to the war in Europe.

That the price of flour went up $1.50 a barrel a week ago.

That the price of coal went up 25 cents a ton the first of the week.

That the price of sugar advanced from 5 cents to 7 1-2 cents on Wednesday.

That fish and eggs are about the only things left for the economically inclined.

That lobsters are a species of fish, yet the price is 30 cents a pound.

That the ice man is supposed to give a 25 pound piece of ice for 10 cents.

That some of the drivers do, but more of them do not give 25 pounds.

That if some of the drivers were put into court and made to suffer, it might have a wholesome effect.

That while most everything is going up the price of straw hats is going down.

That only about 15 days more of the straw hat season remains.

That this is possibly the reason for the reduction in price.

That now is a good time to buy shoes.

That $4 shoes of some styles can now be purchased for a little more than $2.

That the time is near at hand when the robbers of apple and other fruit trees make their appearance.

That the only way to get rid of this pest is to fill their hides full of salt

That while it may be against the law to do so, it would be a good thing in some cases.

That it is rather aggravating to have a tree of nice fruit despoiled by a lot of thieves.

That it is boys, in most cases, any not the grown men who rob fruit trees

That if you catch them at it, tan their hides with a good whip.

MISS WILLIAMS IN SWITZERLAND

Anxiety for Mr. and Mrs. Elmer A. Lord

Among the inquiries sent to Washington on Wednesday was one from W. A. Bradford of Quincy to Senator Weeks asking about Edna L. Williams of Quincy and Grace E. Withum of Marblehead, who were at Interlaken, Switzerland, July 29.

Quincy friends of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer A. Lord of Boston are anxiously waiting to hear from them. They sailed for Germany, July 9, and left their trunks there and proceeded to St. Petersburg, having in their possession letters of introduction from former Ambassador Curtis Guild. The most of their money was in letters of credit. It is thought that they turned back to Germany when war was declared and that they are now there.

In the list of Americans registered with the citizens committee in London, published in the Globe are the names of Frank R. Arnold of Braintree and Ruth Whittier of Milton.

Friends of Dr. and Mrs. Felix Sellers (Clara Connell), Braintree, are anxious concerning their safety. They sailed two months ago to pass three months in Germany, the land of Dr. Sellers' nativity. When last heard from they were in Berlin. Mrs. Sellers, who is a German scholar, speaks the language fluently. It is feared they will find it difficult to leave that country.

The Quincy list of European travellers includes:

Edna L. Williams
Miss Bernice J. Everett.
Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Grant.
Miss Helen Cashman.
Manley Perry.
Mrs. Charles Prout.
Mr. and Mrs. Brooks Adams.
Miss Louise E. Lummis

COOMBS MAY BE A CANDIDATE

The Democratic city committee meets Friday evening in Wilson hall to discuss the coming campaign. Many candidates will be present. It is probable that the question of candidates for the mayoralty will be brought up.

Members of the committee this week approached Rednor P. Coombs of Atlantic, a former representative, in behalf of his proposed candidacy for office at the State election but he did not entertain their suggestion. He dismissed the committee men with the remark that Atlantic and Wollaston hadn't a mayoralty candidate for several years and he was strongly considering it."

It is hardly expected in Democratic circles that Mr. Coombs would enter the race and if he does the three men in the field for the Democratic nomination will be Dr. John H. Ash, Edward J. Fegan and himself. Mr. Coombs in years past was a strong candidate.

Mrs. Marsh said the inmates were pleasant to the matron when she was present but would show a feeling against her in her absence.

Mrs. Marsh said complaints had been made to her by inmates. Judge Avery said he would allow her to state specific complaints made to her by inmates. They were many she said and one was by a Mrs. Dunn, now dead, of excessive work required of her.

She said she talked over some of the complaints with Mr. Vaughn and the latter received them kindly but usually they were not corrected.

Mrs. Marsh explained the assistance rendered by organizations for the benefit of inmates.

The case will be continued Friday.

TWO MEN HELD FOR GRAND JURY

Acting Chief Thomas Fitzgerald and Officer A. H. Pratt of East Weymouth arrested John W. Brown and Frank E. Morales at East Weymouth on Wednesday evening, on a charge of breaking into the store of Frederick H. Humphrey annd the larceny therefrom of a leg of lamb, and a quantity of canned goods. The police visited the home of Brown where they found the missing goods, which it was claimed by Mrs. Brown had been brought to the house by Morales.

Morales was formerly employed in the Humphrey store and was familiar with the premises. Enntrance was made through a window in the rear of the store, which admitted to the ice box room, from which room the main store was easy to reach.

The two men were arraigned in court in Quincy and after a hearing were held in $500 each for the grand jury.

PLEA OF GUILTY FINE OF $50

The fight among the Finnish residents, which took place on Arthur street Saturday July 25, during which Arthur Gropst received several severe cuts on the head, was settled in court this morning when Nester Knnunen, who it is alleged did the stabbing, withdrew his plea of not guilty and entered a plea of guilty on which he was fined $50.

Gropst received a slash which extended from the lower right side of the mouth across to the ear, which was so deep that his face dropped down exposing his teeth and gums. He was taken to the City Hospital after receiving first aid treatment by City Physician Bartlett, where it was necessary to take 25 stitches in the wound to close it. His condition remained serious for some time but he is now all right and was able to appear in court this morning. Just what started the row is not known for all that the defendant would say was "too much whiskey."

TAX RATES FOR YEAR 1914

Highest Figures in History of Several Cities

New Bedford made a bid this week for the highest city tax rate in the state, but fell a little short of Woburn and Everett. The 1914 rate of New Bedford is $23.20 an increase from $20.20. An increase of nearly $4,000,000 was reported in valuation, but there was a large shrinkage in corporation receipts.

Weymouth is to be congratulated on a tax rate of $18.25, an increase of only 75 cents.

Concords rate is $17.30, an increase of $1.70.

The tax rates reported to date are as follows, over one half being larger than in 1913:

NEWSY BRIEFS

Miss Rose Sullivan of West street and Lexina Gillis of Hill street are spending several weeks at Niantic Conn.

An important meeting of the Ward Four Republican committee will be held Friday evening at Sandberg's garage on Buckley street.

Band concert tonight at 7.30, the first of the season on the Furnace Brook parkway, to be given by the Ninth Infantry M. V. M. band.

Miss Bertha J. Schneider and Lawrence A. White were married by Rev. Fr. Coan, St. Johns church, Quincy Wednesday evening at 7.30. The bridesmaid was Miss Emma Schneider and the best man Rudolph Schneider.

Ex-Commodore Frank Burgess returned this week from a cruise along the coast of Maine in the Katherina. He was accompanied by relatives. Again Thursday he left for another cruise to Maine ports.

NEW BOYS' WORK DIRECTOR

Allen H. Blanchard, Boys' Work Director at the Quincy Y. M. C. A. leaves Saturday for a two weeks' vacation. This week will also be his last with the local Y. M. C. A., as he has handed in his resignation to take effect on Sept. 1.

Mr. Blanchard was formerly connected with the Daily Ledger but resigned three years ago to accept a position with the Y. M. C. A. as boys' work director. He has been very successful and has proved an efficient official. He however finds the work, while congenial, rather too confining, and has decided to enter some business pursuit. Just what line of business he will take up, he has not determined.

Mr. Blanchard will be succeeded by Charles Humphrey of New Haven who assumes the position on Sept. 1.

IMPORTANT DAY IN CONGRESS

Unfavorable Action May Result in Laying Off 1000 Men at Shipyard

President Powell Is Quoted by Mayor Curley

In conference with Mayor Curley on Thursday, says the Globe, in regard to the agreement reached for a ship registry bill in Congress, President Joseph H. Powell of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation is reported by the Mayor to have said that if the bill passed it would result in the laying off of 1000 men at the Fore River plant at the week's end.

Mr. Powell also expressed the opinion that the final result of the measure would be the closing of all the Nation's shipyards, and that even serious International complications might ensue.

A Washington dispatch of Thursday to the Globe says:—Champion of American coastwise shipping in the House and Senate today let it be known that they would oppose bitterly the adoption of the conference report on the Emergency Shipping bill, which would admit foreign-built ships to the coastwise trade if they take American registry within the next two years.

Senator Perkins and Congressmen Mann and Greene refused to sign the conference report, which was agreed to early in the day, and will lead a fight against its adoption.

The proposed legislation is the first in which it ever was seriously suggested that foreign-built ships be granted the right to participate in coastwise trade, which has been reserved exclusively for vessels built in American yards.

The existing law was criticised repeatedly in the recent debate on the repeal of Panama tolls exemption, and the present action is regarded in some quarters as a continuation of the Panama Canal tolls fight.

Senator O'Gorman submitted the Senate report today, but action on it was deferred until tomorrow.

Construction by the Government of 12 passenger and freight liners of 10,000 tons each, to be manned by officers and crews from the Navy was proposed in a bill introduced today by Congressman Humphrey of Washington.

The plan contemplates three lines operating between ports of the United States and Central and South American cities. The ships would have a contract speed of 16 knots and be available for service as transports in time of war.

A Washington dispatch to the Monitor says: The House and Senate conferees agreed on Thursday upon the final form of the alien-built ship registry bill. Their act defeats the interests of the coastwise trade which the Boston delegation sought to protect by coming to Washington Tuesday, by adopting a provision that alien-built ships may engage in all coastwise trade if registered pursuant to this act within two years.

It further opens up coastwise trade to alien-built ships by striking out the Cummins-Saulsbury amendment which required a majority of stock in the ships to be owned by Americans.

The clauses permitting use of navy yards for repairing the vessels and permitting naval officers to accept temporary employment on the ships, were stricken out.

"This is a momentous piece of legislation," said Winthrop L. Marvin of Boston. "They have opened wide the doors to our coastwise trade as a bait to get the big alien ships to take American registry. As a result many American built ships will have to tie up to their wharves because they cannot compete and grass will grow in our ship yards for two years while 25,000 men who work there will lose employment."

Let us hope that Congress may see light, or that Mr. Marvin is not a good prophet relative to shipyards.

SLIGHT FIRE POINT HOTEL

Department Handicapped by Work on Scammell St.

The alarm from Box 723 at 10.35 this morning was for a slight fire in one of the sleeping rooms in the Point Hotel at the corner of East Howard and South streets. While someone ran to sound the alarm occupants of the house rushed up stairs and threw the burning clothing out of the window, so that by the time the department arrived the fire was out.

In responding to this box the fire department from the Central station would naturally go via Quincy avenue, Scammell and South streets but on account of Scammell street being torn up and impassable part of the apparatus went via Quincy avenue and East Howard street and part via Elm and South streets.

WEDDING AT FAXON HALL

Miss Ida Katz the Bride of Peter Kline

Miss Ida Katz, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Katz of 106 Sumner street, and Peter Kline of 86 Bow street, Everett, were married in Faxon hall Thursday evening. The ceremony was performed under a canopy by Rev. Julius Sandolovitz of this city.

The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Rosie Katz, as bridesmaid, and her brother Samuel Katz, as best man. She was nearly without the services of the latter for the occasion, the strenuous objection of his parents being the only reason he did not sail for Germany two weeks ago to join two brothers in the military service.

The bride, given away by her father was dressed in white satin trimmed with pearls, and wore a veil caught up with apple blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley. Her bridesmaid was dressed in white chiffon and carried white carnations.

Following the ceremony a wedding supper was served after which there was a reception to the young couple. Dancing was enjoyed until midnight, music being furnished by Choirnan's orchestra.

Mr. and Mrs. Kline are now on a honeymoon and will make their home in Everett. The bride was been employed at the Rice and Hutchins factory at South Braintree and the groom is a chauffeur.

WALKED NEARLY THIRTY MILES

J. P. Cahill Peaches Taunton on a Trip to Providence

James P. Cahill of 33 Berlin street, Wollaston, who is spending a part of his vacation on a walking trip sends word to the Daily Ledger that he spent Thursday night in Taunton. Mr. Cahill left Wollaston at 7.30 Thursday morning, his objective point being Providence. In a letter received from him this morning he says "I have decided not to travel beyond Taunton, tonight. I reached here at 5 P. M. My course so far has taken me through Braintree, South Braintree, Randolph, Avon, Brockton, South Easton, Eastondale, Raynham to Taunton. I start out fresh Friday morning to cover the remaining distance between here and Providence. I was told that I must have travelled about 28 or 30 miles up to 5 P. M., which I think is very good for an amateur."

FINED IN WATERTOWN.

A Boston paper reports that Rafael NeClerio was in the Watertown court Thursday morning charged with illegal transportation of liquor. He comes from Quincy and was delivering wine in that town. He claimed that he had a right to deliver. The court found him guilty and imposed a fine of $50. He appealed.

FATALITY AT SQUANTUM

Dorchester Woman Falls From Squaw Rock into Sea

Mrs. Ellen F. Connell aged 60 years, residing at 60 Corona street, Dorchester, was instantly killed Wednesday at Squantum. She had been sitting on top of Squaw rock a few minutes before the accident, and it is supposed that in some way she lost her balance and fell over. The rock rises about twenty feet from the water, and an old legend has it that an Indian maiden cast herself from the top of the rock and was dashed to death on the rocks twenty feet below.

Aid was quickly at hand and the body was immediately brought ashore. Paul Hersey, a special officer on duty at Squantum, sent an emergency call for physicians, and Dr. Daniel A. Bruce of Atlantic, who was the first to arrive said that death had probably come almost instantly.

In the absence of Medical Examiner Jones, Associate Examiner Dr. George V. Higgins of Randolph was notified and later viewed the body at Hall's morgue, where it had been taken. He found that Mrs. Connell had sustained a broken neck, a fractured right wrist and fractured ribs.

Later in the afternoon the body was turned over to a Dorchester undertaker.

At the home of her daughter Mrs. Charles T. Johnson, with whom Mrs. Connell made her home, it was said that the unfortunate woman had gone to Squantum for a days outing with a neighbor. That she was subject to dizzy spells, and probably she was seized with one of these spells while seated on the rock and unable to control herself she had fallen over.

POSTAL DEPOSITS.

Since the postal savings banks were established by the Post Office department in 1913 nearly $100,000 has been deposited at the Quincy post office. There are today 420 depositors. This department is open from 8 A. M. to 8. P. M., and one hour later on Saturdays.

SUMMER KINDERGARTEN

Crossing Exhibition and Exercises Today

The Educational committee of the Quincy Women's Club continued their good work this summer by maintaining a kindergarten for non-English speaking children who will enter our public schools in September. In all 58 boys and girls availed themselves of the opportunity offered including Swedes, Finns and Italians from four to six years of age. Their teacher was Miss Frances Burke of West Quincy who at times was assisted by her sister Miss Jessie Burke.

This morning the closing exercises were held including a good morning song, a little prayer, a greeting by Mrs. J. R. Mellen of the Educational committee, address by Dr. E. H. Bushnell of the School Committee, remarks by Mrs. Herbert Pinkham, Mrs. W. F. Cummings, Mrs. Levi Turner, Mrs. R. M Harmon, also motion songs, folk dances, etc. by the pupils, closing with the singing of America

Only two or three of the children could speak an English word when they entered, but all can now speak several words and are interested in getting an education

The school has been in session six weeks for ten hours a week, 9.00 to 11.30 A. M. About the school room in the Lincoln schoolhouse were exhibitions of their work—drawings of fruit vegetables, a butterfly, flowers and kindergarten designs; also articles they had made.

Several mothers and friends of the pupils were present. Also Mrs. J. R. Mellen, Mrs. Arthur Foster, Mrs. Herbert Pinkham, Mrs. Levi Turner, Mrs. W. F. Cummings, Mrs. Frederick Barnicoat, Mrs. John R. Richards and Mrs. Frank F. Prescott of Quincy Women's Club; Mrs R. M. Harmon and Mrs. Blanchard of Riverside Women's Club; Dr. E. H. Bushnell of the School Committee; and W. G. Spargo

The ladies served ice cream, cake and candy to all. Mrs. Barnicoat contributed six pounds of home made candy which was delicious.

The work of the children will be exhibited at the first meeting of the Quincy Women's club in October.

RESIGNATION OF RECTOR

Rev. R. E. Armstrong Going to New York Church

Rev. Richard E. Armstrong, rector of Christ Episcopal church, has resigned his pastorate to accept a call from a large church in New York state. His resignation was read and accepted at a meeting of the vestry of the church on Thursday evening. His successor has not as yet been chosen.

The resignation of Rev. Mr. Armstrong closes a term of service extending over five years. He came to Quincy from St. Stevens church of Boston, to which he was appointed after he had served as a missionary in the Philippine Islands at the close of the war. Rev. Mr. Armstrong is spending the summer in New Hampshire and it is expected he will preach his farewell sermon here some time in September.

SEMINARY PRESIDENT.

Rev. C. G. Wallenius, D. D., president of the Swedish Theological Seminary at Evanston, Ill., will speak tonight at the St. Paul's Methodist church. Dr. Wallenius is one of the best known Swedish churchmen in America and a fluent speaker.

THE DISTURBED BUSINESS CONDITIONS

Which naturally follow such a war as is being waged in Europe, are being given our most careful attention Prices in general have been sent skyward—largely because of heavy buying by people unnecessarily alarmed about the future. Don't get excited. There's an abundance of food in this country and no need whatever of prohibitive prices.

The wheat crop of the United States this year is estimated at 940,000,000 bushels, which is 200,000,000 bushels greater than ever before in the history of America. Other record-breaking crops are being harvested. So, considering these facts, we look for lower prices, rather than higher. One thing is certain, namely, our prices ARE and always WILL BE at the lowest possible notch.

Business here is booming. We are doing our utmost to keep stocks intact, that our customers may not be inconvenienced. If you want pure fresh food, and pleasing store service, call around. We are anxious to serve you right. COME.

Now is the time for all good men to keep cool.

Modern warfare may be short, but it is not sweet.

Of course a married man can live off less than a bachelor—if his wife takes in washing.

Europe needs the civilizing influence of baseball and chautauquas.

Maybe the Balkans exposed the rest of Europe to the war infection.

Belgrade just naturally sits there by the Danube and aksk to be shot at.

Mexico is doing a large export business in former federal offifficials.

Membership on the Federal Reserve Board seems to be a case of many are called, but few are chosen.

As we understand it, Carranza is willing to grant amnesty to all the Mexicans that he cannot catch.

The average woman can do anything with a hairpin, except sharpen a pencil—and she can do that with her teeth.

The German Emperor is the greatest gambler that ever lived. He staked his crown and empire on the neutrality of England and lost.

If kind words can be of any value a Presidential appointee who is turned down by the United States Senate should feel no very serious disappointment.

COMMUNITY SUICIDE.

Statistics show that the big cities of the country are growing faster than the smaller ones. There are exceptions, but this is the rule. One of the principal reasons for this ominous tendency is the lack of community spirit among so many people.

When a person buys supplies out of town, he helps some other place to grow. His support permits a merchant in some other place to enlarge his business, hire more clerks, and pay more taxes. The merchant thus favored does nothing in return, except to sell his goods at a price that can usually be equalled or bettered in a home store.

When you buy goods at home, you help your home business men to increase their business, to draw more help from other places, to pay more taxes, and do more to support all home institutions. It pays to think what will become of your money after you spend it. Do you want it to help your own interests, or those of some larger city?

ECONOMIES.

The romance of waste products is a veritable El Dorado. Great fortunes have been made from materials supposed to be valueless. The first annual dinner of the National Association of Waste Materials Dealers recently held, represented a business with a total volume of $700,000,000.

The story of coal tar is a bonanza by itself. Formerly the black, viscid liquid made in distilling gas was considered not merely good for nothing, but it was an actual expense and irritation. Now fortunes are made turning it into naphtha, pitch, creosote, paraffine, etc.

But while such splendid economies have been made in industrial plants, the average household has lost many arts by which waste was once utilized. People brought up by grandfathers and grandmothers of an economical turn of mind, will recall many thrifty little habits.

Making soap from grease was a traditional employment in many families. Now this toilsome task is known to but few housewives. Many families for a long time economized matches by making lamplighters. Long strips of paper were twisted into long slender sticks, that would hold a flame much longer than any kind of match.

How many families today have thrifty dickerings as of yore with the rag man? The housewife who swapped off carefully sorted white and colored rags for the spoil from the peddler's cart, used to be quick at a bargain. Another economy was the careful saving of every bit of twine, which was stored in the "string box." No one bought any balls of twine then.

Such little economies strike a great many, people as stingy today. Probably some of them took too much time to be worth while. But many fortunes were founded in just such patient little accumulations.

BASEBALL CAREERS.

The constant expansion of baseball is leading to a more serious consideration of it as a business career for young men. Every year a few more leagues become established. They offer new openings to young men to earn more than they could get, for the time being, in any other employment. When a fellow can draw his $50 and upward a week, it is hard to persuade him that in the long run he might make more money to enter a business office at $15.

The expected retirement this fall of Hans Wagner, a leading hero of the diamond, marks the culmination of a career lasting about twenty years. It is an exceptional case of endurance. If the average player could likewise look forward to twenty years, the business would be more worth while. But the average career is under rather than over ten years.

As it usually works, easy money leads the player to contract expensive habits. When quitting time comes, he has no capital and no trade. He must begin somewhere at the bottom, with the first flush of youth's energy burned up in the fire of athletic overstrain.

There are also cases where players have put aside very comfortable little fortunes, only to lose them when they launched out on an untried business venture.

The average parent is probably right in his reluctance to see a boy enter baseball after leaving school or college. For every one who acquires a bank account, there are a score who either drop out in a few years, or who never save anything.

As the game develops, it takes more and more brains to play it. Capable and gifted fellows fare better and better. If they have grit and self control, and spend their spare time winters in acquiring the rudiments of some business, they should be in a position when they quit at thirty, to make a favorable start in trade.

Arguments For Woman Suffrage Convincing

By Secretary of State WILLIAM J. BRYAN

I SHALL ASK NO POLITICAL RIGHTS FOR MYSELF THAT I AM NOT WILLING TO GRANT TO MY WIFE.

As man and woman are cotenants of the earth and must work out their destiny together, the presumption is on the side of equality of treatment in all that pertains to their joint life and its opportunities. The burden of proof is on those who claim for one an advantage over the other in determining the conditions under which both shall live. THIS CLAIM HAS NOT BEEN ESTABLISHED IN THE MATTER OF SUFFRAGE. On the contrary, the objections raised to woman suffrage appear to me to be invalid, while the arguments advanced in support of the proposition are, in my judgment, convincing.

BIG VICTORY IS CLAIMED BY BELGIANS

Thousand Germans Killed and Wounded at Haelen

CONFLICT RAGES FOR TWO DAYS

Invaders Number About Ten Thousand, According to Report From Brussels, While Defenders Have Seven Thousand Fighters—Germans Retire In Great Disorder After Being Completely Defeated—Victims of Hail of Metal Thickly Strewn About Fire Zone—Paris Dispatches Record Great French Victory on Franco-German Frontier—German Version of Fighting In Alsace to the Effect That French Were Beaten

London, Aug. 14.—Two important actions are reported, one at Haelen, in Belgium, and the other at Pont-a-Mousson, north of Nancy, on the Franco-German frontier.

From the information received in London, all of which has come from Paris and Brussels, both battles went against the German forces. The German losses at Haelen, however, underwent a mighty diminution during the day, for, while the first messages received indicated a wholesale slaughter, the latest reports are that 1000 will cover the German killed and wounded.

Of about the same importance appears to be the fighting at Pont-a-Monsson, where the French are said to have captured a number of prisoners and some guns. A German dispatch reports the capture of about 2000 French troops at Mulhansen.

Many of the dispatches are received in London with considerable doubt. Among these are stories that the German troops in Belgium are starving and that the German losses at Mulhausen are up in the thousands—one estimate giving them as 10,000, and asserting that the hospitals are full of wounded. Military experts believe these stories are to be taken with an allowance for the partisan enthusiasm of French and Belgian officials and correspondents.

The Battle of Haelen

The losses of the German troops at the battle of Haelen, near Hasselt, north of Liege, which raged Wednesday and Thursday, dwindled in each telegram that reached London.

In the early reports of the battle, the Germans were practically annihilated, and even the most conservative dispatches affirmed solemnly that the invaders had lost fully three-fifths of their number. The latest word is that the German losses are about 1000 killed and wounded, and this report is from a Belgian source.

The Germans engaged in the battle of Haelen, according to late details to the Exchange Telegraph company from Brussels, numbered more than 10,000, composed of cavalry, artillery and a small force of infantry. The Belgian force numbered about 7000.

"It is believed," says the dispatch, "that the object of the Germans was to take a position north of the St. Trond road at Tirlemont, from which they would be able to execute a turning movement against the Belgian army.

Belgians on the Alert

"Through efficient cavalry reconnaissance, the Belgian commander obtained accurate information of the movement of the attacking force. To reach Diest the Germans had to cross the river at Haelen, and it was before this place that the Belgians took up their principal position, erecting barricades, building entrenchments and placing guns where they could be most effectively employed.

"The Germans came in sight about 11 o'clock in the morning, and soon after that the artillery on both sides came into action. The German fire had little effect. The Belgian fire was deadly, even at a rage of 2000 metres, and played havoc with the German cavalry, which, notwithstanding, continued to advance.

"The Belgian cavalry repeatedly charged, but owing to the conformation of the country, which is intersected with hedges and hillocks, could attack only in small groups. The Germans again and again hurled themselves at the barricades, only to be shot down by the deadly Belgian fire.

Fierce Attack on Bridges

"The attack on the bridges spanning the Gette was fierce. German officers could be seen urging their men to the attack, to meet almost certain death from the Belgian guns. Men and horses fell like flies until, when almost shattered, the order for retreat was given at 6 o'clock in the evening.

"The German defeat was complete, their loss amounting to more than 1000, and they retired in the greatest disorder. At nightfall they were making their way hastily toward Tongres."

A report to Le Soir, the Paris newspaper, gave the German losses as 2000 and those of the Belgians as trivial. An official dispatch from Brussels says:

Ruler of Holland Mobilizes Army to Resist an Invasion

"The Belgian cavalry division Thursday morning took up the offensive against the Germans who were defeated in Wednesday's battle of Haelen, with the object, it is believed, of picking up the dead and wounded and collecting the abandoned material of war.

"No German surprise was expected, and there are no reasons to fear any German cavalry movement on Brussels from the south, all of the roads leading to the capital being guarded by the Belgian army and the civic guard."

Another Belgian communication says: "The battle centred around Haelen, in the Belgian province of Limburg, extending to Diest, in the north of the province of Brabant, after passing around Zeelhem.

Hundreds of Germans Dead

"At 7 o'clock Thursday evening, all the country between the three towns mentioned had been cleared of German troops, except the dead and wounded, who were thickly strewn about the fire zone. Upward of 200 dead German soldiers were counted in a space of fifty yards.

"Great quantities of booty were collected on the battlefield, and this has been stacked in front of the town hall of Diest. Many horses also were captured. The strength of the German column was about 5000 men.

"The German troops in other parts of Belgium are understood to be gathering in all the railroad cars they can find. A passenger train near Warremmes was halted by a German cavalry patrol and the passengers left in the open country, the train, with its engineer, being taken toward the German lines.

Dispatches from Paris report a French victory at Pont-a-Mousson, on the Franco-German frontier, while conflicting messages have been received regarding the fighting about Mulhausen.

French Win a Victory

From the fact that fighting is reported at Pont-a-Mousson, it appears that the German army of the centre, which mobilized at Metz, may be on the move. The scene of the encounter is sixteen miles southwest of Metz, and not far north of Nancy.

From Paris have come the following details, in an official dispatch, of the fighting at Pont-a-Mousson:

"The fighting which started on Aug. 11, was continued on Aug. 12 under thrilling conditions for the French. It may be summed up as follows:

"The first phase was an attack on two French battalions by German forces greatly superior in number. The two French battalions fell back but, being re-enforced during the night, assumed the offensive, well supported by artillery.

"This counter attack caused the Germans to retreat precipitately, leaving behind them a large number of killed, wounded and prisoners. The Germans abandoned a battery of artillery, three machine guns and several wagon-loads of ammunition.

"The French troops followed up their advantage, and on Wednesday a French battery surprised the Twenty-First Baden Dragoon regiment while the men were dismounted. In a few minutes the regiment was destroyed.

"The effect of this double success was immediately perceptible. Not only was the forward movement of the German troops stopped, but their columns fell back, closely followed by the French. In the course of this pursuit the French found many German soldiers who had been wounded in the fight on Aug. 11. Nine German officers and 1000 wounded men fell into the French hands as prisoners.

"The poor quality of the projectiles used by the German heavy artillery was convincingly demonstrated during the bombardment of Pont-a-Mousson. More than 100 shells, containing enormous charges of explosives and weighing altogether 220 pounds each, were fired from a battery of twenty-one centimeter mortars at a distance of about six and one-quarter miles. The total result of this avalanche of iron explosives was four killed and twelve wounded in the town.

A German Version

"German troops took 120 French officers and 1110 French soldiers prisoners in the fighting at Mulhausen, Alsace. They also captured four French cannon. Another 1000 French officers and men were taken prisoners by the Germans in the fight near Longwy. German soil is now entirely cleared of French troops."

A dispatch from the French foreign minister, issued by the French embassy at London, reiterates that the French troops behind Mulhausen, Alsace, "have not retired, but have victoriously resisted an entire German army corps."

A telegram from Paris to the Central News says the German troops shot the mayor of Igney, a village between Luneville and Avricourt, on the Franco-German frontier.

AFTER AUSTRIAN FLEET

British Ships Likely to Soon Start Big Battle In the Adriatic

Orders were flashed to the British fleet in the Mediterranean to strike against the Austrians. The orders as sent out from the admiralty announced that a state of war with Austria exists. The British admiral commanding in the Mediterranean was therefore ordered to proceed against the Austrians at once. The Austrian fleet is believed to be lying off its naval base in the Adriatic.

While details of the present strength of the Mediterranean fleet are withheld for strategic reasons, it is known that when war broke out there were three of the first-class battle cruisers and several armored cruisers and accompanying destroyers at the Mediterranean naval base.

They have been in pursuit of the German cruisers Goeben and Breslau and are now probably near the Austrian coast, where the French fleet is also understood to be.

CHARGE ATROCITIES

Belgians Say Kaiser's Troops Are Violating Two Conventions

It is stated at Brussels that the intervention of the neutral powers is to be asked for by the Belgian foreign minister through their diplomatic representatives in the Belgian capital in reference to alleged repeated violations by the German troops in Belgium of the Geneva and The Hague conventions.

M. Davignon, the Belgian foreign minister, has drawn up a long list of cases, declared to be fully attested, of the killing of the wounded, the abuse of the white flag, the killing of civilians and the seizure of private and public funds.

TEN THOUSAND STRANDED

Many Tourists In Switzerland Are In Extreme Distress

The fashionable season in Switzerland was at its height when war was declared and as a result more than 10,000 English and American tourists are stranded in that country. The British minister at Berne issued the following proclamation:

"During mobilization travel through France is impossible and tourists are recommended to remain where they are until it is possible to arrange for transit."

Many tourists are hard pressed for the bare necessities of life.

FUNDS FOR RED CROSS

President Wilson Appeals to American People to Contribute

As president of the Red Cross, Woodrow Wilson addressed a letter to the American people asking all possible assistance in the work of reducing distress and suffering in the European conflict. The letter read:

"The present wars in Europe are certain to impose upon the Red Cross of the nations engaged a burden which demands the sympathy and aid of the world.

"The American Red Cross is earnestly desirous of assisting its sister societies in their endeavor to alleviate distress and suffering among the combatants, and therefore appeals for funds to be expended impartially in relief of the sick and wounded soldiers of the nations at war.

"Contributions for this purpose may be sent to the American Red Cross, Washington, D. C., or to local treasurers of the society in other cities. I confidently hope that the humanity and liberality of the people of the United States so often manifested in the past will cause them to respond promptly and generously to this appeal."

LYNN FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Lynn first began to motorize her fire department four years ago. Since that time she has been changing over her apparatus, piece by piece, until now, with Springfield, she is the envy of the fire departments in various parts of the State and New England. The city is better fortified to combat fires than ever. Her department ranks with the best in the country.

The new system saves time and time is what counts with every fireman. The saving of five minutes on a fire to a department means much.

Squad A, $5000; chemical 1, $6000; chemical 2, $2325; chemical 3, $5000; chemical 4, $5700; chemical 5, $5300; engine 1, $4000; engine 2, $9000, permanent engine; engine 3, $4000; engine 4, $4000; engine 5, $4000; engine 6, $4000; hose 1, $2225; hose 3, $2140; hose 4, $2140; hose 5, $2325; hose 6, $2140; ladder 1, $3250; ladder 2, $3250; ladder 3, $3750; ladder 4, $3250; Chief Chase's car, $2850; Chief Robert's car, $1800.

THE MILTON MYSTERY.

Just what happened at the automobile accident at Milton last week or how it happened will probably always remain a mystery. It will be remembered that Officer Farrington found a disabled automobile on Brook road about 1.30 one morning. Laying across the mud guard in a helpless state of intoxication was Bernhard B. Cook of Brockton while in the grass ten feet away was another man unconscious. Cook was locked up and the injured man taken to the Massachusetts General Hospital. Cook could not tell anything about his experience that night, nor could the injured man. The case was disposed of in the Quincy court this morning when Cook was fined $25 for operating an automobile while under the influence of liquor.

Inflammatory.

At a dinner of firemen recently the following sentiment was proposed: "The Ladies! Their eyes kindle the only flame which we cannot extinguish, and against which there is no insurance."

BRAZIL SHIPS TO NEW YORK

It now appears, says the Christian Science Monitor, that while discussion is under way for the purpose of solving the ocean transportation question, in an hour when speed counts for much, Brazil is taking the lead in providing means for moving cargoes up and down the entire Atlantic seaboard. Withdrawing its fleet of seven steamships from the coastal trade of its own country, the Brazilian Steamship Company will enter its carriers in the trade between its own ports and New York. This move should bring considerable relief to localities where goods and raw products have been accumulating since the breaking out of war in Europe.

It is expected that the leading South American governments will soon lift embargoes placed on shipping. With few exceptions, the ships engaged in trade between the United States and South America fly the German or British flag, and consequently have been withdrawn. Brazil's move doubtless will be quickly followed in the north, where commercial interests are eagerly awaiting federal enactments that will make possible a material increase in the number of ships sailing under United States colors.

GRANDMA'S PRAYER.

I pray that risen from the dead
I may in glory stand;
A crown, perhaps, upon my head,
But a needle in my hand.

I've never learned to sing or play,
So let no harp be mine.
From birth until my dying day
Plain sewing's been my line.

Therefore accustomed to the end
To plying useful stitches,
I'll be content if asked to mend
The little angels' breeches.

TAX RATES FOR YEAR 1914

Highest Figures in History of Several Cities

Another city to announce an increase in tax rate is the city of Holyoke whose rate for 1914 is $18.80, an increase of $2.20 over that of 1913. The increase in rate is accounted for by the city having built considerable permanent roadway and erected a number of new buildings at a cost of more than $400,000. The total valuation of the city is given as $63,455,439 the real estate having increased $2,500,000 and the personal estate $500,000.

The tax rates reported to date are as follows, over one half being larger than in 1913:

SELF SACRIFICE DAY.

Tomorrow, "Self Sacrifice Day," suffragists in every town and city in Massachusetts are asked to answer the call of the "melting pot" with trinkets and keepsakes of gold and silver, which they will send to Miss Jane Addams of Chicago, treasurer of the sacrifice fund, which is to be given to aid the seven campaign states. Thimbles, bracelets, rings and other bits of jewelry that suffragists would part with for no less honored cause will be turned in to swell the molten stream that is to help the states on the firing line.

GOLF COURSE TO COST MORE THAN $250,000.

Philadelphian Has Full Eighteen Holes and Massive Clubhouse.

When 150 Philadelphians agreed to subscribe $1,000 apiece to build a golf course near Chestnut hill the many thousands of nongolfers in that city were surprised to know that there was so much interest in the ancient Scottish game, yet one Philadelphian alone and unaided has spent $250,000 in the construction of an eighteen hole golf course near Absecon, N. J., and the chances are that it will cost many thousands of dollars more before he is satisfied.

Clarence H. Geist some years ago decided he would like to have a links which he could use in summer and winter alike. He owns the Atlantic City and Wilmington gas companies and other companies in twenty or thirty municipalities, and there is no other Philadelphian who has achieved more success or wealth than he. So it was not a case of money.

Nowadays thousands of golfers go south every winter to play golf. Mr. Geist, like hundreds of other busy Americans, decided that he did not have the time for these trips, and he began the quest for a place where winter golf was practicable and within easy access of Philadelphians and New Yorkers.

After a long search he found a tract of 230 acres two miles from Absecon and six miles nearer Philadelphia by motor than is Atlantic City. The tract had been used for a big truck garden, and the soil was a sandy loam. Work began a little more than a year ago, and today golfers are playing over the entire eighteen holes.

Forty-eight acres have been set aside for the clubhouse and immediate grounds. There are fifty sleeping rooms, and in the locker rooms are accommodations for 500 golfers. The piece de resistance is the huge pool of salt water, sixty-two feet long and twenty feet wide.

The clubhouse is brick and stucco, with an entrance from the side, so that nothing interferes with the view. Around three sides runs a wide porch, which will be inclosed in glass during the winter months. It will accommodate 500 dancers.

The clubhouse will be formally opened some time in September, but the locker room and dining facilities have been in use for some time.

The present length of the course is 6,025 yards.

$150,000 Race Horse Dies.

Racing enthusiasts are lamenting the death of Rock Sand, the famous race stallion, formerly the property of August Belmont. In 1906 Mr. Belmont paid $125,000 for the horse, and in 1912 sold him to a syndicate of Frenchmen and Americans for $150,000. Rock Sand was in 1903 the winner of the English Derby. He was fourteen years old when he died.

Milady's Mirror

Sun Baths For the Hair.

In some cases the scalp becomes extremely dry and the hair wiry and brittle when exposed to the salt air. It is then necessary to use a little oil to replace the natural oil.

While the sun has an ill effect upon wet hair (salt water) it is very beneficial when the hair is dry. So while at the seashore a daily sun bath will be good.

Take off the cap, shake out the hair and let it float in the breeze, running the fingers through so the hair roots may be benefited by the air, sun and ventilation.

This treatment if persevered in will be found to work wonders and incidently mean a saving of time and money, for professional treatment will be entirely unnecessary upon the return home.

Headache Cure.

For summer headaches there is nothing better than an aromatic sponge. Any good cologne or toilet water can be employed for this, though Florida water, bay rum and lavender water are perhaps the most effective.

Fill a basin with very hot water. Add cologne until the vapor of steam arising from the mixture is pungent, then with a bit of old, soft table linen dipped into the water bathe the face gently, patting it rather than rubbing it.

Use a rotary motion on forehead and temples and when the face feels soothed reheat the water or add more, dip the cloth into it, wring out a little and allow the dripping cloth to rest at base of brain and behind the ears.

Then lie with body relaxed and eyes closed for at least fifteen minutes.

Shapely Finger Nails.

To keep the finger nails a good shape file them every day rather than cut them once or twice a week. Before filing the hands should be thoroughly washed with soft water and good soap. The file should be used lightly from the sides to the middle.

Don't trim the nails to a point; it is ugly. A rounded form is far prettier. A little good cold cream or olive oil should be rubbed into the nails before filing if they are inclined to be brittle. It will prevent them from splitting.

A Cleansing Cream.

For cleansing the skin try the following cream: One-half ounce each of white wax and spermaceti, two ounces of sweet almonds and two ounces of rosewater. Melt the wax and spermaceti, add the almond oil and when well blended remove from the fire and add the rosewater, stirring briskly till cool and creamy. You can dissolve a tiny pinch of borax in the rosewater if you wish or can add ten drops tincture of benzoin while stirring the cream.

Saw the Entire Faces.

A man at the international polo games remarked that he had never seen women's faces look so well. He puzzled about it until a woman enlightened him as to the reason—their hair was brushed away from the brow and temples. This new coiffure shows all the face, and it even goes so far as to uncover the ears. This is a part of a woman's anatomy that she has skillfully kept from the public for the last four years.

Eyebrow Tonic.

A good tonic for the eyebrows is made with two ounces of petroleum jelly, one dram of tincture of cantharides, fifteen drops of oil of lavender and fifteen drops of oil of rosemary. Apply night and morning with a tiny brush. This can also be used on the eyelashes, but must not be allowed to get in the eyes since any oily preparation will inflame them.

Damp Hands.

Needlewomen who suffer from damp hands will find it is an excellent plan to rub the palms of the hands occasionally with a solution of borax in a little alcohol. When sewing keep a sponge saturated with the solution ready at hand and occasionally squeeze it in the palms of the hands, allowing the moisture to dry without wiping.

Nervous Headaches.

Nervous headaches are a common complaint among women. If a doctor is not consulted the best treatment is to keep the patient in bed and allow nothing to come near her which might worry her. All troubles should be kept away and perfect quiet preserved until the overwrought nerves resume their natural condition.

The Secret of Beauty.

Good health, good grooming and a good complexion are the secret of feminine beauty and charm, and it is a woman's own fault if she does not possess all these. Much depends upon her choice and use of her toilet accessories, for eternal vigilance is the price of beauty as well as of liberty.

Deep Breathing.

When you breathe deeply your muscles gradually strengthen, your eyes glow like twin stars, your chest becomes full and rounded and your pale cheeks are stained a vivid red.

THE PLAYHOUSE

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

The offering of Miss Nance O'Neil at the Majestic Theatre next week will be "Leah, The Forsaken," sometimes called "The Jewess." This play is one of Miss O'Neil's earliest successes, and by many considered the strongest of her entire repertory. At any rate her impersonation of the unhappy Jewess is a masterly portrayal, particularly in the famous curse scene, where she rises to emotional heights only equalled by a Bernhardt. When Miss O'Neil presented this piece in Boston ten years ago, the audience at the end of the curse scene arose en masse and cheered for several minutes, a tribute never before paid an actress in a local theatre. The story of "Leah The Forsaken" is strong and pathetic, the scene of which is laid in Austria during the time when hatred and superstition against the hapless Jew was at its height. Miss O'Neil will have the support of the greatest array of local stock favorites ever assembled here, or in addition to the regular members of the Majestic Players, her leading man will be Wilson Melrose who is perhaps the most popular stock leading man Boston has known in years. This will be Mr. Melrose's first stock appearance here in two years. Another welcome addition to the company will be Walter Walker the well known member of the Castle Square Company. There will be matinees every day.

PLYMOUTH THEATRE.

"Under Cover" begins the last week at one of its engagement at the Plymouth theatre, Boston, where it is completing a return engagement of three weeks only. The cordial welcome accorded this remarkable play is another instance of its great popularity. No play in years has won the profound admiration of New England's laygoing public as has Roi Cooper Megrue's play of love, mystery and thrills. "Under Cover" is just the sort of play that makes an emphatic appeal to all classes of theatregoers. Moreover it can be enjoyed with genuine delight when witnessed the second or third time. This fact has been evidenced by the large number of repeaters that have viewed the play during its record-breaking run at the Plymouth last season. "Under Cover" holds the astonishing record of having scored the longest run of consecutive performance in Boston's theatrical history. When the piece closes its present engagement it will have achieved the phenomenal record of 31 weeks, a feat that is likely to remain unbroken for many years to come. It is safe to say that despite the long run of the play there still remains a large number of playgoers who have yet to witness it. Another fact of interst to amusement seekers is the announcement that "Along Came Ruth," Holman Day's brilliant comedy of New England life and produced by Henry W. Savage will be the next attraction at the Plymouth beginning Monday, Aug. 31. It will be presented by the same New York cast that scored an immense hit during its long run at the Gaiety theatre.

PARKWAY CONCERT.

The Ninth Regiment band gave a concert at Furnace Brook parkway, West Quincy, Thursday evening, under the auspices of the Metropolitan Park Commission, which was attended by several thousand from all parts of the city. The gathering was entirely lacking in enthusiasm and rendered little applause. The program was the first in a series of two the last one of which will be given Aug. 25.

Give Your Neighbor an Equal Chance

By HOLLAND.

IF you have been buying goods of a mail order house you doubtless think it has been to your advantage to do so. You have believed that you were saving money or were getting better goods. Let us see if this is true.

Have you tried to do business with your local merchant—your neighbor—on the terms that the mail order house exacts? No? Then suppose you try it.

Just go into the store, plank down your cash and tell what you want. You might even tell the merchant that you will wait a few days for the goods. See if your local merchant can't serve you better and as cheaply as the mail order house.

The local merchant usually extends credit for two, four or six months. The mail order house demands cash in advance. It uses your money as working capital. It loses nothing in interest, nothing in bad debts or on slow paying customers. Try this cash in advance plan on the local merchant—the man you know—and see if he can't make it to your advantage to

SPEND YOUR MONEY WHERE YOU MAKE IT.

NOMINATION PAPERS FILED

Ericson and Corcoran Will Be Candidates

Seven papers were filed with the City Clerk this morning, the interest of Councilman Charles A. Ericson for representative from the Fifth district, on the Republican ticket.

Papers have also been filed by Councilman Daniel F. Corcoran of West Quincy for the Democratic nomination for representative from the Sixth district.

The City Clerk announced this morning that his office would be open until 5 o'clock Saturday to receive nomination papers, which is the last hour for filing them with the City Clerk.

After papers are filed in Quincy they must be certified by the Registrars of Voters. However to become effective parties having filed papers with the City Clerk for certification must file them with the Secretary of State not later than 5 o'clock next Tuesday in order to have their names appear on the official ballot at the primaries.

It is no part of the duty of the City Clerk or Registrars to file these papers with the Secretary of State, but it is up to the parties themselves to call for them in Quincy and see that they reach the Secretary of State before 5 o'clock Tuesday.

It is very doubtful if the nomination paper of Guy Adams Ham filed in Quincy as a Progressive party candidate gets by, as it is reported that a larger part of the signatures are of enrolled Republicans who can not under the law be certified as Progressives.

PRESS CLUB FINALS.

Frank H. Hoyt of Woodland and Arthur H. Goodale of the Wollaston Golf Club play the finals for the Gen. Charles H. Taylor trophy in the Boston Press Club annual tournament at Montclair today. Goodale in his three rounds of match play has never been over 80.

H. B. Emerson of Hatherly will be given a special medal by the golf committee for his net score of 64 made in the club's qualifying round on Monday. His card was made by a clerk who blundered.

T. H. Clarkson of Woodland and R. V. Bean of Winchester play for the Boston Post trophy, J. B. Brennan of Wollaston and W. H. Garland of Woodland for the Boston Journal trophy and W. G. Kendall of Wollaston and J. A. Barnes of Wellesley for the press club trophy.

DISTRICT COURT.

John Davis was arraigned for drunkenness at Quincy. Davis was in court about a year ago and fined $10 for the same offence and given time to pay up. He neglected to do this and was later defaulted. This morning he was ordered to pay the old fine or go to jail. At last accounts he was trying to find some friend to advance the necessary ten spot.

Thomas Webb was sent to the state farm for being a tramp at Quincy.

The case of Bernhard B. Cook of Brockton for operating an automobile while under the influence of liquor was called and he was fined $25.

DIVORCE LIBEL.

Mrs. Alice Burley Curtis of Milton filed with the clerk of courts at Dedham on Thursday a suit for divorce against her husband, William G. Curtis of Quincy. She charges him with cruel and abusive treatment, and refusing to provide suitable maintenance for her and her one child, Elizabeth, age 13. Mrs. Curtis asks for custody of the child and alimony.

A HOUSE WITH SEVEN CHAMBERS.

Design 768, by Glenn L. Saxton, Architect, Minneapolis, Minn.

PERSPECTIVE VIEW—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH.

FIRST FLOOR PLAN. SECOND FLOOR PLAN.

This plan is an exceptionally good design for a large farmhouse or for a family that desires to keep roomers. There are seven sleeping rooms provided for in the plan and space for two or three more in the third story if owner desires. The size of the house is 30 feet wide and 48 feet deep. Full basement. First story, 9 feet; second story, 8 feet. Finish throughout first story in birch or southern pine; second story finish throughout with pine to paint. Birch or maple floors throughout first and second story. Cost to build, exclusive of heating and plumbing, $5,000.

Upon receipt of $1 the publisher of this paper will supply a copy of Saxton's book of plans, "American Dwellings." It contains about 250 up to date designs of cottages, bungalows and residences costing from $1,000 to $6,000.

BASKET BALL MEDALS.

The N. E. A. A. U. has appropriated $60 for medals for the players of the team that won the championship of their basket ball league the past winter. The medals will be of solid gold and will be handsomely engraved.

The awards cannot be made however until the basket ball commission determines whether the Quincy A. A. of St. Josephs C. T. A. of Boston, finished in first place.

Manager Williams H. Flynn claims the Quincy team won, and if his views are upheld they will have won the championship three years in succession.

President James A. Sullivan of the A. A. U. has ruled recently that consistent performers will be entitled to represent the N. E. A. A. U. body at the National championships at the Panama Pacific International Exposition on Feb. 22, 1915. A decision in favor of the local team will mean considerable in their favor as they intend to go west if possible.

The Boston fans consider St. Josephs team the winner because they secured victory in the last game played under the league direction. The game with Quincy A. A., scheduled at a later date, was forfeited and with the two game lead Quincy held when the league disbanded Manager Flynn is positive the commission will recognize his aggregation as the champions.

In that event the players who may be awarded the medals will be Sid and Joseph Duggan, Edward "Bull Moose" Brown, Charles Hebert, Joseph and Frank O'Rourke and Joseph Pinel.

TYLER MEMORIAL.

Work on the memorial shaft to be erected at Richmond, Va., by the government in honor of John Tyler, tenth President of the United States, at a cost of $10,000 is well along in a little studio, which has been loaned to the sculptor, Raymond A. Porter of Watertown, for a workroom, near the foundry where the bronze portions will be cast at the Monitor.

Mr. Porter, working with the T. F. McGann & Sons Company, won the commission for the memorial in a competition of 26 designs last April. The specifications call for a tall granite shaft to fit a ground space 12 feet square which should contain a portrait bust or relief of the President. The design made by Mr. Porter is a shaft about 27 feet in height surmounted by an urn which is supported by two American eagles with wide spread wings.

SECOND OF HULL RACES

There was plenty of good wind Thursday at the second race off Hull under the auspices of the Boston Yacht club, and the event brought out a large number of racing yachts. In all 57 yachts took part in the race the courses being the same as on Wednesday.

In the sonder class, the Ellen, which will defend the Quincy Yacht Club challenge cup in this years series of races, was again a winner, with the Harpoon formerly owned and sailed by Charles F. Adams, 2d, second, but nearly three minutes behind the Ellen.

In class I the Dorchen II was the first to finish, but she only led the Reina by 19 seconds.

In class A the Areyto which has been winning everything in sight evidently did not find the wind to her liking for she finished third in the list. The Virginia won out with the Marie L. second.

In class D, ex-Commodore Ira M. Whittemore was right there with the goods and succeeded in capturing another first with the Dartwell, defeating the Clara by two minutes corrected time. The order of finish of the other boats in this class was Dolly III, Grayling, Iris, and Mudjekeewis. The Dartwell has been very successful in this year's racing and the ex-Commodores locker as the club house will exhibit many trophies at the end of the season.

BRADY WON FIRST PRIZE.

"Mike" Brady, open golf champion of the state and professional at the Wollaston Golf Club, took the main prize of $200 in an open tournament in Chicago on Thursday. Bradys card in the 36-hole medal round was 73 in the morning and 75 in the afternoon. Tom Kerrigan of Dedham took seventh place with 155.

TO PUT CHECK ON EXTORTION

President Wilson Orders Action on Food Question

ADVANCE "UNWARRANTED"

Declared to Be Based Upon Pretext of Conditions In Europe—Department of Justice to Be Aided by Commerce Department In Nation-Wide Investigation Concerning Prices

Washington, Aug. 14.—President Wilson personally, by letter, called the attention of the attorney general to the general and apparently abnormal inflation of food prices and asked the department of justice to conduct an investigation to ascertain corrective measures and whether there is a conspiracy. The president's letter was as follows:

"The rapid and unwarranted increase in the price of foodstuffs in this country upon the pretext of the conditions existing in Europe is so serious and vital a matter that I take the liberty of calling your attention to it.

"I would be very much obliged if you would advise me whether there is under existing law any action which the department of justice could take either by way of investigation or legal process and what federal legislation, if any, would in your judgment be justifiable and warrantable in the circumstances.

"I feel that this is a matter which we cannot let pass by without trying to serve the country. Certainly the country ought to be defended, if possible, against men who would take advantage of such circumstances to increase the price of food and the difficulties of living."

President Wilson asked the department of commerce to aid the department of justice in the national investigation which the justice department put under way immediately.

The president's reference to the price increases as "unwarranted" served to crystallize public indignation. Members of congress began discussion of the best method of dealing with the situation.

They took steps to introduce new legislation and decided to enlist President Wilson's assistance in the fight. They proposed to ask him to send a special message to congress, protesting against the price advances and suggesting the line new legislation should take.

Attorney General Boynton of Massachusetts has started an investigation to determine the reason for the increases in the price of foodstuffs. The attorney general has authority to investigate high prices of the commodities of life, and the additional power to take action to break up conspiracies to boost prices, if such exist. The state police department may be used later to assist him in his investigation.

A triple investigation of food prices in New York was swung into life. District Attorney Whitman ordered one probe, Borough President Marks directed another and Mayor Mitchel set on foot a third.

In Rhode Island the officials are taking action. Governor Pothier has determined on an investigation of the price increase.

J. O. Armour and A. G. Leonard, big Chicago packers, issued statements charging that the increased meat prices are the result of a tremendous shortage, and that this shortage is the result of refusals by the farmers and stockmen to put their cattle, sheep and hogs on the market.

MRS. MILLS IS HELD

Pleads Not Guilty When Arraigned For Killing of Manley

Concord, N. H., Aug. 14.—Mrs. Mills of Henniker was arraigned in the district court at Bradford, charged with the murder of Charles Manley. She pleaded not guilty, waived examination, was held without bail for the grand jury.

Neighbors of Mrs. Mills in Henniker, in spite of the brutal details of the murder which she admits committing, have a feeling of sympathy for her. They say that Manley, especially when he had been drinking, had treated Mrs. Mills, who was his housekeeper, cruelly for a long time. They tell many stories of how he continually beat and otherwise ill-treated her.

Five Years For Assaulting Girl

Boston, Aug. 14.—Edwin P. Winsatt, telegrapher, was given five to seven years in state prison for abusing a 10-year-old girl. Winsatt was found guilty by a jury. The girl had run errands for Winsatt for some time before he attacked her.

Hub's Big Postal Savings

Boston, Aug. 14.—The Boston postoffice, in point of postal savings deposits at the end of the fiscal year, June 30, was the fourth office that passed the $1,000,000 mark. New York leads, Chicago is second and Brooklyn third.

IT IS SAID ABOUT QUINCY

That Mayor Miller did not remove Supt. Vaughn of the Almshouse because of politics.

That His Honor has so stated.

That he would probably say the say about the Commissioner of Public Works in 1913-1914.

Also relative to the Board of Assessors he found in office.

That there is no politics at City Hall this year.

That some people think differently.

That the tax rate may be delayed.

That the City Council of 1914 should adopt a tax limit for 1915.

That the removal of the $12 limit has caused an increase in city tax rates generally.

That Quincy's tax rate may be reduced.

That it will not be because of economy.

That the total levy will be larger than ever.

That an abnormal increase in valuation may keep the rate down.

That $22 per $1,000 is a guess.

That City Hall says it will not be $22.

That is not saying whether it will be more or less.

That many tax-payers will find themselves wealthier this year than in 1913.

That one cannot always tell by assessed valuation.

That a tax rate of $20 is high enough.

GOOD FISHING.

Oak Lodge, the residence of this correspondent is one of the quiet rural resorts for health-seekers from the Bay State, and is situated amid a varied outlook of hills vales and charming small lakes, much noted among lesser Maine country, retreats for fishing and other favorite summer sports. This house has been for many years a chosen summer home for citizens of Brockton and neighboring towns during the vacation season. Among recently arrived guests are Mr. and Mrs. Henry D. Higgins, and six years old daughter, Miss Barbara Higgins of Braintree—the daughter—has the enviable distinction to have this morning, about 7 o'clock, while trolling from a boat in company with her father, securely hooked the largest Salmon ever caught in Bear Pond within any living memory. It is a land-locked salmon of the Sebago Lake variety, 29 inches long and of 11 lbs weight. It is a very sensational incident among the everyday happenings at this place where startling events are quite infrequent.

Oak Lodge is the home of Mrs. Elsina York and daughter, Miss Lena York, whose efforts for the comfort of their many guests are widely known and appreciated. This is a favorite section for locating rural camps for boys and girls, under the management of competent gentlemen and ladies from New York, who are professional educators. The summer has been unusually cool, but is now quite warm.

CITY CHARTERS.

Two-year terms for Mayor of Massachusetts cities was one of the things advocated Thursday before the recess committee of the legislature, who are investigating the subject of city charters. A two year term was advocated by Mayor Charles E. French of Melrose and others. Another man declared that if city officials were paid higher salaries that better men would be obtained. Ex-Mayor George L. Richards of Malden opposed any definite form of charter for all cities.

WOLLASTON A WINNER

Defeats Boys from the Ward Two Playground

Thursday morning at Merrymount Park the boys of the Wollaston play grounds defeated the Quincy Point boys in a loosely played game by the score of 10 to 7. The Wollaston boys tried out "Shy" Baker in the box and he did very good work; letting down the Point boys with only four hits. He also struck out 11 men and did good work at bat, getting two hits, one a two-bagger. Ryan also pitched well for the Point boys, but his support was very ragged at times. He struck out eight men, but passed several men at critical times.

THE PEOPLE WILL DECIDE.

At a special town meeting to be held on the evening of August 18, the voters of Braintree will have an opportunity to express themselves on the matter of the Honorable Board of Water Commissioners in prohibiting boating on Sunset Lake.

Sentiment seems to be overwhelmingly in favor of allowing this innocent pastime and against the action of the Water Commissioners in denying the citizens of this town that right. But votes count more than words and a large attendance of the citizens and voters from this town is expected on this occasion.

A little careful investigation will prove to anybody that the waters of the lake are not contaminated by boating, and it is believed that the voters of this town will decide that the Water Commissioners are in error.

VANISH FROM MEXICO CITY

Carbajal and His Cabinet Hastily Flee to Vera Cruz

DISAPPEAR DURING NIGHT

President Says That to Remain In Capital Would Mean to Either Fight or Accede to Rebels' Demands—Victors Will Find City Without Money, Arms or Ammunition

Mexico City, Aug. 14.—When the inhabitants of the federal capital awakened yesterday the arsenals were empty, the barracks were deserted, and the provisional president of the republic, as well as the members of his cabinet, had vanished.

President Carbajal left the city on a special train at 3:15 a. m., reaching Vera Cruz last night.

Carbajal left behind him a manifesto to the nation, saying that he had done his best in a provisional capacity to save the country from further bloodshed, but that the constitutionalists had met his peaceful overtures by uncompromising demands for an unconditional surrender.

Two paths lay before him, he said: to fight or to accede to the constitutionalists. Under such conditions the president claimed his government could no longer exist, and he concluded:

"I leave the high post which I have occupied in the belief that I have fulfilled my duty towards my country and intrusting the lives and interests in the capital to the governor of the federal district.

"The whole responsibility for the future rests with the revolution, and if we should behold with affliction a repetition of the situation which I am trying to put to an end, the truth will be manifested once more that by violence society cannot be reconstructed."

Perfect quiet reigns throughout the city.

The flight of Carbahaj and his cabinet caused no interruption in the normal life of the capital, but, for the first time in its history, Mexico finds itself without legislative, judicial or executive powers.

When the constitutionalists enter the city they will find it without money, arms or ammunition. The taking away of all war material by the federals is causing some uneasiness here.

Although the destination of the federal army was carefully guarded it is believed that Puebla City is the point to which it is proceeding.

INVENTOR HOLLAND DEAD

Father of Submarine Boat Never Saw It Put to Greatest Test

Newark, N. J., Aug. 14.—Fate has denied that John P. Holland, inventor of the submarine boat, should live to see the craft to which he gave up years of his life put to its greatest test as an implement of war. Holland died at his home here from pneumonia.

Holland was 72 years old. He first submitted plans to the navy department in 1875, but they were rejected. When new plans were submitted in 1893 an appropriation of $20,000 was made. A cat and a rooster were sent beneath the surface of the sea in the first submarine trial. He then began the construction of mancarrying submarines.

SKELETON IS IDENTIFIED

New York Woman Died From Poison In Connecticut Woods

Darien, Conn., Aug. 14.—The body of a woman found in the woods here was identified by Thomas H. Kane of New York city as that of his wife.

Identification was made by the clothing, as when the body was discovered it was practically a skeleton. The clothing was found a short distance away. Near the garments were two bottles containing tablets of a poisonous nature.

Kane said his wife, who was mentally erratic, left home June 1 for a trip to the country.

RELIEF FUND CLOSED

Enough Money Has Been Raised For Salem Fire Sufferers

Salem, Mass., Aug. 14.—Enough money has been contributed for the relief of the Salem fire sufferers and no more need be raised, according to a letter sent by John F. Moors, chairman of the Salem relief committee, to the committee in charge of raising the relief fund.

As a result of this notification, the committee voted to notify the public that further contributions were unnecessary.

An Episode In Mexico

By BURKE JENKINS

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Nick's little back room on the ground floor was our customary meeting place. Here we came together in the equality of true democracy. There have been evenings when eleven or twelve different professions of our throbbing metropolis were represented about Nick's little three legged table.

This evening attentive ears were turned toward Carusworthy, the opulent. That gentleman busied himself for a moment with a seltzer siphon. "Yes," he commented. "I rather believe in secret societies, fraternities, brotherhoods or whatever you choose to call 'em—that is, some of them."

He lounged into an easier attitude. "It happened down in Mexico in the state of Chihuahua—little, old, driedup town—can't exactly recall the name, but it began with a V."

"THE TALE WAS RATHER A TALL ONE."

"Varrejo?" inquired Shaw, the detective, quietly.

"The very place," agreed Carusworthy, glad to come by the name. "You know your geography, Shaw."

"Have to," was Shaw's laconic answer.

"Well," went on the narrator, "I had been making a thorough investigation of certain mines in which I was interested.

"Of course it had been convenient to make my visits to the nearest shipping points of the mines in my private car, and I had managed pretty well to avoid those sad hostelries of a flea bitten populace. I carried my own hotel. On the night of which I'm telling my car had been sided at a little town not an inch on the map from the Texas border, and I was counting on hitting the states some time the next day. Varrejo was the name, as Shaw reminded me.

"But the through limited that was to pick me up was reported full six hours late, and an attack of acute indigestion didn't help me to look on the bright side of the situation.

"I went to bed early, but sleep wouldn't woo for a copper. So I got up, slipped on the universal duck and Panama rig of the clime and time, left the car without being seen by any of my attendants and made for anything that might show semblance of a drug store. I rustled into a dilapidated wicking, roused a profusely polite Mexican from postprandial slumber and demanded some cure all device of the doctor's for that sense of oppression.

"He led, with many explanations, to a stuffy little rear room, and there I underwent the ordeal of the most conglomerate mixture of all the Russian-Turko-Fiz Zip, steam-calorific baths that ever I suffered the shock of.

"But, nota bene, it did the trick. I became another 'pleased patron' and reached for my roll for the wherewith to requite my deliverer.

"My hasty toilet had omitted the prime necessity. I explained matters; hastened back to the siding.

"My car was gone. The through limited had caught up some of that lost time and, likewise, as per schedule, had caught up my outfit and was now merrily whirling my belongings northward. And my crew thought I was comfortably ensconced for the night. It was distinctly annoying.

"I hastened back to the apothecary and explained the situation. I could not blame him for that smile of incredulity which broke through his set politeness. The bill was rather a tall one, and it was evident that he took me for a new species of the genus grafter.

"I first turned my attention toward a civilized expedient in this extremity. 'Will you direct me to the telegraph office?' I assumed more or less of an imperial tone, for I calculated on soon disabusing my creditor of his erroneous impression concerning myself and standing. 'I will telegraph to New York for money.'

"His expression changed from one of sarcasm to one of alarm. 'You're from New York, senor?'

"'Certainly! What's odd about that?' I replied, somewhat nettled by his attitude, for I could see that his alarm was coupled to a hatred which an unpaid bill could scarcely account for.

"He changed his face on the instant, and, assuming a semblance of his former politeness, he said: 'Certainly, senor. I myself will conduct you to the telegraphic office, though it is rather late.'

"He led the way up a dingy street, casting furtive and what seemed to me uneasy glances at a little shack beside what I took to be a freight depot. My guide here left me for a moment, saying, 'I'll see what can be done, senor.'

"He disappeared into the shack and returned a minute later. 'Extremely sorry, senor, but the telegraph office is closed.'

"I didn't believe him, so I pushed my own way into the house and confronted a sleepy operator. 'The line is closed,' snapped that worthy before I could say a word.

"For some reason these two were in collusion against me. The why of it I couldn't fathom. The apothecary had apparently tipped this fellow off—to what I couldn't imagine.

"Accordingly, in distinct chagrin, I left the two and strode off into the night to think my situation over.

"But I had never been a man to look too long on the wrong side of a cloud, so it didn't take a great while for me to catch a glint of the silver lining.

"And this glint could almost be said to be a glint in very fact, for as I rambled around those tangled streets of that little old town I became aware of a gleam of light upon a hill just without the village limits.

"To add to the cheer, from time to time I caught the sound of music.

"Now, I have never been characterized by bashfulness, so, carried away perhaps by the entire incongruity of my whole evening thus far, I decided to add to it, and I headed for the scene of merriment, the grand house on the hill.

"I entered from a balcony unobserved, for the dance was in full swing, and I'm here to state that when a Spaniard dances he puts all that's in him in it. As for the senoritas I'm silent, for words fail on occasion.

"So I will attempt no description of that little woman who sat somewhat apart from the dancers, eagerness written all over her. 'Of course she must dance!' I stated emphatically to myself. 'What in the world can these fellows mean by leaving her for a wallflower?'

"Without further thought I trotted up to her and asked for the dance. At first she looked up in alarm; then, the spirit of coquetry conquering, she merely glanced down the hall before she rose and took my arm.

"When the dance ended I led the pretty senorita out on the balcony, where I had observed tables for refreshments.

"Seated vis-a-vis we continued the frothy conversation we had begun inside. As we chatted I looked up at her. Her gaze had left me and was fastened with frozen fear on something behind my back.

"I glanced up quickly, for something glinted above me. It was a pretty bit of a stiletto, and I could even note the arm that wielded it. There, tattooed on the tender skin of the under forearm, was the device of a brotherhood. I belonged to that order myself.

"But no time was there for an interchange of signals. I reached a quick hand and caught the wrist above me. Then I shoved forward, bringing my assailant with one lunge on to my back, and, with the impetus of my vigorous resistance, over the balcony rail we both went, landing in the shrubbery. I fell on top.

"The fellow was not seriously hurt, but without much trouble I wrested the jeweled weapon from his grasp, and as he recovered from the shock of the fall I leaned toward him and whispered something in his ear.

"His entire attitude changed, and in spite of his bruises he jumped to his feet and called to the anxious faces that peered from the balcony down into our darkness in the shrubbery: 'It's all right, friends. I have made a mistake. Nobody hurt.'

"And then he explained matters to me. He was the son of Don Roderigo, chief man of that region, and had had the misfortune to be ignorant of the views of the United States in such matters as the too free use of knife or revolver. It seems he had been forced to track an enemy to New York, and there, ignorant of our viewpoint and caring little, he had found him and knifed him after the most approved Castilian style.

"It had all been about that very girl I had just danced with too. Now, the friends of the murdered man had even gone so far as to get out extradition papers, and it had been rumored that detectives had set out for the border.

"'Then you took me for a detective looking for you?' I asked, beginning to comprehend.

"'Exactly,' he answered, 'and Pedro, the apothecary, my good friend, thought so too. It didn't help matters, either,' he went on, with a half smile, 'when I returned from Pedro to find you dancing with my partner.'

"Well, there is little more to add, gentlemen, except that for two days, until my car returned, that populace turned itself loose doing nice things to me. But I have often wondered how the real detective fared when he arrived in that tender spot. I'll bet he had his troubles."

"He did," drawled Shaw, the detective. "In fact, I had to give that case up."

Avoid White Paper.

White paper is not as good as blue or brown for wrapping up things that are to be put away for a long while as the chloride of lime in the paper will fade fabrics.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

For the Children

Youthful Members of Newport's Smart Set.

Copyright by American Press Association.

Newport, R. I., as nearly everybody knows, is where the fashionable folks spend their time in summer. And, of course, there are lots of young people there who in time will be the leaders of society, although now they are simple little children enjoying themselves at the seashore. In the social life of Newport the little folks take very little part, although they are permitted to play on the sand and in the breakers that roll up on the beach. Recently a camera man was present at a social function at the famous Casino and snapped some of the little folks as they watched a game of tennis. The two youngsters shown in the picture are Miss Frances Mills and her brother, Master J. Mills, children of Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills of New York and Newport.

Game of Bricks.

Draw two lines fifteen feet apart, then divide the boys into two companies, allowing each player a piece of brick or square wood that can be easily thrown. Each player on one side throws his brick, trying to come as near as possible to the line on the other side. The one farthest from the line sets up his brick on the line and the one nearest standing on the opposide side pitches at it. If he fails to knock it over he sets up his brick and the other boy pitches at it. If he succeeds he picks it up, goes back to the line, pitches it again near the other brick, hops over it and kicks his brick near that of his companion. Then he must pick up his brick and carry it successively on his head, on each shoulder, on his back, on his breast (walking), in the bend of his knee (hopping), in between his legs (shuffling). Each time starting at the line and proceeding to the other brick and knocking it over. Finally he marks a square inclosing the brick and about eighteen inches square, and if he can hop over this he is declared a winner. If he fails in any one of the "stunts" he must wait his turn, but can then begin at the point where he failed.

Owls' Queer Home.

A pair of solemn little brown owls have made their home in a strange place on the farm of a certain English fruit grower. They have laid their eggs in the furnace of a movable boiler used for washing beehives. The fire has not been lighted recently, but the boiler is in daily use, and when the owls are "at home" they do not mind this at all. They enter and leave their home by means of the small iron chimney attached to the copper.

Nature lovers are intensely interested in this species of owl because it is not native to England. It originally was brought from Spain. The little owl flies by day as well as by night.

Game of Rimes.

Two words that rime, as "game" and "name," may be chosen. Each person is required to write four lines in rime, as—

I played a game,
Without a name,
I won no fame—
But who's to blame?

There can be a great deal of fun in this game, and it is really surprising what really clever rimes are sometimes made.

The Boastful Bantam.

I am Sir Bantam,
A rooster brave and bold.
I stand upon the fences.
I make the neighbors scold;
I can crow the very loudest
Of all the bantams round.
My voice it is the shrillest.
My equal can't be found.
Cock-a-doodle,
Cock-a-doodle,
Cock-a-doodle-doo!

Yes, I have a rival,
Whom I love to whip.
He's so much afraid of me
That he gives me the slip.
But I always catch him,
And, as I'm very handy,
I knock the feathers out of him
To Yankee doodle dandy.
Cock-a-doodle,
Cock-a-doodle,
Cock-a-doodle-doo:

Hear the hens all cackle:
"See our boy so true!
Let's hurrah for him
And the red, white and blue!"
Ho, I am Sir Bantam,
A bold one and a brave!
I shall praise myself forever
And let the neighbors rave.
Cock-a-doodle,
Cock-a-doodle,
Cock-a-doodle-doo!

MRS. J. M. RICHARDS.

Word has been received of the death in London of Mrs. John Morgan Richards, a former Boston woman, and mother of Mrs. Craigie, who is known in the literary world as Mrs. John Oliver Hobbs. Mr. and Mrs. Richards were married in Boston in 1864 and a banquet was served in London last January in honor of their golden anniversary at which Ambassador Page was present and Queen Mary sent a congratulatory telegram. Although Americans they have made their home in London for many years, Mr. Richards being one of the founders of the American club.

Mrs. Richards was a daughter of Seth H. and Susan C. Arnold who for thirty years were residents of Quincy, the old Arnold farm being located on the site now occupied by the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation where the lines of the battleships are laid down.

Mrs. Richards is a sister of Mrs. John L. Eldridge of Quincy, and an aunt of Paul R. Blackmur, a well known Quincy attorney.

ATLANTIC PEOPLE ABROAD

Some Have Not Been Heard From Since Outbreak

Atlantic people are anxious about friends in Europe. Miss Laura Tolman, master's assistant at the Quincy school was last reported in London with the Metcalf party. She expected to return before Sept. 1.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Reed of Billings street went to England to visit relatives.

Miss Ella M. Horton and Miss Helen K. Horton of East Squantum street started for Germany to study. They landed at Italy, but no word has been received from them.

Miss Marion Downey of Atlantic was among those who returned last week after a tour of England and Scotland.

Frederick F. Peterson of Cranch street is thought to be in Paris, where he went to study.

The steamship Creole built by the Fore River Corp. in Quincy, for the Southern Pacific Steamship Co. is the first steamship that has been chartered to bring American tourists stranded abroad to America. The Creele has been chartered by the Raymond & Whitcomb company and she is to sail from New York, Aug. 19. She is expected to arrive in London in seven and a half days and to start back for New York Aug. 28, or 29. She has a capacity for 400 passengers and her total capacity has already been taken in London.

The Globe prints a cable from Geneva, Switzerland under date of Aug. 13 which says: Eight hundred Americans have left Genoa and other Italian ports, where there are already 2000 other Americans waiting to take passage for home.

The American Ambassador at Rome has advised the American Minister to Switzerland that seven steamers are ready to sail, but all room has been taken. Ambassador Page says there are 8000 Americans in Italy and they continue to arrive from every center.

SUPPLEMENTARY BUDGET

May Be Included in Call of City Council

Mayor Miller is expected from his camp in Hingham some time today in order to sign a call for a special meeting of the City Council for next Monday evening. There are a number of matters to come before the meeting which will be mentioned in the call but just what they are has not been made public as yet.

Rumor has it however that one of the important matters will be a supplementary budget to furnish some of the departments with more money.

A supplementary budget would have no effect unless passed before the tax rate is announced as the amount involved by the supplementary budget must be provided for in the tax levy.

In other words it means that the Assessors will be unable to announce the tax rate until after the proposed supplementary budget has been passed and as it will take two meetings of the Council to pass the order. In that case a week or ten days more must elapse before the tax rate can be announced.

The Assessors were about ready to announce the rate, and it was said from their office the first of the week that the rate would be made public today. Thursday however the matter of a supplementary budget came up and it was all off on the Tax rate for today.

No hint has been given out as to what the rate will be, but it is claimed about the corridors of City Hall, that it will be a little less than last year which was a record breaker for the city.

In the call as signed by the Mayor are these items:

To receive and act on petitions of Bay State Street Railway Co.

To receive and act on petitions of New England Telephone and Telegraph Company.

To designate polling places for State primaries to be held on September 22, 1914.

To receive and act on supplementary budget.

To receive and act on application of Michael T. Sullivan for auctioneers license.

To receive and act on communication from His Honor the Mayor appointing special constable.

To receive and act on communication from City Treasurer regarding interest on municipal bonds.

WITNESSES CROSS EXAMINED

Another Day Necessary for the Vaughn Hearing

Mrs. Alice M. Marsh was cross examined by Counsel McAnarney this morning. She said she was appointed in 1905 as a volunteer visitor, and had called at the almshouse five times the first year. She served in 1905, 1906, 1907 and was not reappointed in 1908. When asked about not being reappointed in 1908 she said she wanted to make an explanation, but Counsel McAnarney did not then press the matter.

Mrs. Marsh said the order to repair the smokepipe had been sent to Sanborn & Damon before she commenced her investigation and the work was done after she started. She said it was difficult to determine who was to blame because so many were involved.

Q—Then you don't hold it against Mr. Vaughn.

A—Not entirely.

Q—Do you know wherein Mr. Vaughn is to blame for the furnace not being in operation in October.

A—I do not know.

Q—Do you know when he reported it to his superior.

A—No.

Mrs. Marsh said the rooms were clean without any qualification. She said she learned the carpets had been removed so vermin could be disposed of and never replaced.

Q—With whom did you take up this matter.

A—With the matron and Mr. Vaughn

Q—You don't know but what she did all she could to procure them.

A—I do not know.

Mrs. Marsh said she did not remember the name of the man said to have been choked, but learned of it in 1906 from Mrs. Dunn and Mrs. Ford, and Mr. Curtis told her the same thing in 1913. She said she reported indefinite charges of cruelty to the State Board of Charity. She admitted after many questions that she talked to Mary Ford alone and that Mrs. Vaughn and Mrs. Ford were present when she spoke of the man being choked.

Q—Did you try to establish if she was a truthful woman.

A—I found no one who knew her well.

Q—Did either Mrs. Ford or Mrs. Dunn say they saw the choking.

A—I don't think so.

Q—Would you place much reliance on Mrs. Ford if you knew a shock had affected her mind.

A—She was lucid at times and not at others.

Q—Except for Mr. Curtis singing this same song to you, seven years after, you would not know whether it was a reality or not.

A.—No.

Q—You don't know whether Curtis got his impressions from Mary Ford.

A—I do not know.

She said rumors about store eggs being substituted for farm eggs were not investigated, and Mr. Curtis confirmed them after she severed her connections as a visitor.

It was brought out that she was refused admittance to the almshouse because of instructions from the Overseer of the Poor.

Mrs. Marsh said the first statement of Michael Curtis was prepared for her and later read before the Associated Charities when the question came up as to whether the almshouse was the proper place for a patient.

In speaking again of the alleged choking, she said she did not ask the inmates because it might get them into trouble, and did not ask Mr. Vaughn about it.

Mr. Pinkham in rebuttal asked why she had neglected to ask Mrs. Ford about the choking incident when alone with her and Mrs. Marsh said the talk was to get at personal matters and she did not care to give color to her interwiew.

Judge Avery asked if she had any bias against the keeper when she became a visitor, and she said she had none. He asked who objected to her reappointment as visitor and she said she did not know.

The cross examnation of Mrs. Alice M. Marsh, a former visitor of the State Board of Charities consumed the greater part of the morning session of the Vaughn hearing. Nothing of a definite nature relative to the alleged choking of an inmate was established. Mrs. Marsh failing to recall the name of the man in question.

Several other witnesses were heard and an adjournment was taken at one o'clock. The case will be resumed next Wednesday morning at ten o'clock.

Frank Sandblom employed by the Board of Health, Jeremiah Connolly of the city stables, Henry Hense who formerly lived at the almshouse, William Isaacs and Philip Green, present inmates, practically reviewed the testimony given by them at the public hearing.

Philip Green in reply to a question by Judge Avery said he had no complaint to make of the way he was treated.

IDOLS OF THE ANCIENTS.

Those That Gave Their Names to the Days of the Week.

In the museum at Berlin there are representations of the idols from which the names of the days of the week are derived.

From the idol of the sun comes Sunday. This idol is represented with his face like the sun, holding a burning wheel with both hands on his breast, signifying his course round the world.

The idol of the moon, from which comes Monday, is habited in a short coat, like a man, holding the moon in his hands.

Tuisco, from which comes Tuesday, was one of the most ancient and popular gods of the Germans and is represented in his garments of skins, according to their peculiar manner of clothing. The third day of the week was dedicated to his worship.

Woden, from which comes Wednesday, was a valiant prince among the Saxons. His image was prayed to for victory.

Thor, whence comes Thursday, is seated in a bed, with twelve stars over his head, holding a scepter in his hand.

Saeter, from which comes Saturday, has the appearance of perfect wretchedness; he is thin visaged, long haired, with a long beard. He carries a water pail in his right hand, wherein are fruits and flowers.

READY FOR A WRECK.

The Careful Man Who Believed In Taking Every Precaution.

Two friends boarded a great transatlantic liner and set sail for Cherbourg. One was a good fellow. The other was a niggardly man. The first night out they went to their stateroom.

"Say, Bob," said the niggardly man, "I wish you'd step out on deck while I undress."

"That's a remarkable request," objected the good fellow. "Why have you developed this streak of bashfulness at this late day? I never saw any signs of it before."

"Never mind about that," said the niggardly man. "You get out!"

After a long and acrimonious argument the good fellow went out on deck and stayed half an hour. When he returned to the stateroom the niggardly man was stretched out in the upper berth. Moreover, he was dressed up like a Christmas tree in a beribboned nightgown and a woman's boudoir cap.

"Say," exclaimed the good fellow, "what in thunder is the matter? Why have you got that makeup on?"

"Look at me and be wise," said the niggardly man. "Remember the rule 'In case of a wreck women and children first.'"—Popular Magazine.

Peru the Source of Cocaine.

There is a shrub in high Peru which does not bring the blessing of the potato—I mean the cocoa tree, whence comes cocaine. The leaf is chewed by young and old. Some doctors say it is very bad for the people of Peru. The infantile death rate is high, and they say few old persons are to be found. Other doctors aver that the cocoa leaf is very good for the peasants. I am inclined to take a view between the two opinions. I met a man in Cuzco who was running a grocery store, and Professor Giessecke told me they had very good proofs in that town that he was a hundred and fifty years old. He sold me chocolate and also cocoa leaves. I chewed the leaves to try to cure an ulcer in my stomach, and they helped me more than all the medicines of civilization that I had tried.—Peter MacQueen in National Magazine.

FROM THE WORLD ELECTRIC.

An electric machine has been perfected which sorts, counts and wraps coins at the rate of 1500 a minute. The machine is very accurate and throws out all mutilated coins.

A 30,000-horse power hydroelectric plant at Parr Shoals, South Carolina, has recently been opened to supply cheap electricity to the manufacturing plants of Columbia.

The largest submarine power cable is being laid across San Francisco Bay. The diameter of the cable is 4 inches and it extends along the bottom of the bay for 20,788 feet. The cable was made in sixteen parts each weighing 15 tons.

If all the water power of this country was developed electrically it would save the handling of 285,000,000 tons of coal a year.

It is expected that electric transmission will be improved and perfected until electrical energy can be economically transmitted for at least 5000 miles.

Recently over 5000 MAZDA lamps were installed in one hotel in New York. Many of these lamps were for decorative purposes.

New York City spent $11,000 for ornamental park lighting on the Fourth of July.

The largest electric sign in London was recently erected for the Evening News. It contains about 1000 incandescent lamps.

The Trans-Atlantic wireless station at New Brunswick, N. J., has been completed and messages have been sent to the station in Wales.

The Saxony State Railway has decided to begin work on the electrification of its system. The first section to be converted will be that between Klingenthal and Untersachenberg, after which the Pirna-Dresden-Meissen line may be taken in hand.

OPEN AIR MEETINGS.

Open air meetings will be held on Sunday by the Swedish Congregational church on the lawn at the residence of Charles Anderson, 65 Smith street. Music by male chorus and a mixed choir. A general invitation is extended to all. Afternoon at 4.30.

MASSACHUSETTS WOMAN SAYS MAYR STOMACH REMEDY CAME AS BLESSING

Mrs. W. H. Brown Tells How She Was Relieved After Long Suffering.

Mrs. W. H. Brown of Danvers, Mass., was a victim of stomach trouble which tortured her for years. She tried many treatments and medicines and got little relief.

Then she took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy and got results right away. In telling of her case she wrote:

"For years I have suffered terribly with stomach trouble. I could find no relief. Then like a blessing from above, I heard of your remedy; sent for it, and after a few treatments am being cured. I am going to tell all my friends of your miraculous remedy."

Such letters come from stomach sufferers all over New England. This remedy is known everywhere because of its genuine merit. The first dose convinces—no long treatment.

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of mucoid accretions and poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from ailments of the stomach, liver and bowels. Many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations and many are sure it has saved their lives.

Because of the remarkable success of this remedy there are many imitator, so be cautious. Be sure it's MAYR'S. Go to Clyde T. Cox's drug store and ask about the wonderful results it has been accomplishing in cases they know about—or send to George H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, 154-156 Whiting St., Chicago, Ill., for free book on stomach ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you its wonderful results.

UNKNOWN AUTOIST WRECKS FIRE TEAM

Two Firemen and a Policeman Injured While Responding to a False Alarm

Apparatus Strikes Telegraph Pole on Beale Street

A false alarm fiend and an unknown autoist brought about a fire department accident on the Beale street bridge last evening which nearly resulted in reacting the Wollaston Tragedy of 11 years ago when two men died as a result of injuries. The autoist sped on down the hill, stopped and told another person an accident had occurred, and then disappeared in the darkness of the night before his number was secured. An investigation is being made but his apprehension has not been brought about.

The accident occurred when Ladder 2 of the Wollaston house was responding to a false alarm from box 515 at 8.35 o'clock, crashed against a telegraph pole. Two firemen and a policeman were injured one of them seriously.

According to the firemen the hose wagon was the first piece of apparatus to leave the house, and the ladder followed directly after. An auto turned into Beale street near the bridge, from Newport avenue in an effort to get between both pieces of apparatus and in making the turn struck the off horse, throwing nim and causing the other horse to swerve to the left and run the apparatus against the telegraph pole.

The injured men are Richard Callahan, a permanent firemen, who is at the Quincy City Hospital with a badly bruised right leg, and possibly small bones in the leg broken; Daniel McNice, driver, who sustained bruises about the body, and Patrolman John J. Avery, who has a slightly bruised leg.

Another patrolmen, Walter Ferguson, was thrown from the apparatus but escaped injury. Both officers jumped the ladder as it left the house, Box 515 at the Quincy Mansion school being in their territory.

Callahan who was riding on the running board was jammed between the ladder and the telegraph pole. McNice was pulled from his seat and was thrown heavily. He recovered and jumped to the head of his horses and brought them under control.

The unknown auto continued down the Beale street hill. Several people who saw the accident, and the police officers, secured only the first two numbers of the machine but the person at the foot of the hill did not take the registration.

The horse was cut up and the pole on the apparatus snapped. The ladder was in commission shortly after the accident.

Callahan's injury is to the same leg injured about a year and a half ago in another accident to apparatus. Today an x-ray examination will be taken to see if any bones are broken.

McNice was suffering severely from the shock, but instead of going to his home spent the night at the fire house.

All of the witnesses say the autoist was to blame for the accident and exonerate Driver McNice.

THE DISTURBED BUSINESS CONDITIONS

Which naturally follow such a war as is being waged in Europe, are being given our most careful attention Prices in general have been sent skyward—largely because of heavy buying by people unnecessarily alarmed about the future. Don't get excited. There's an abundance of food in this country and no need whatever of prohibitive prices.

The wheat crop of the United States this year is estimated at 940,000,000 bushels, which is 200,000,000 bushels greater than ever before in the history of America. Other record-breaking crops are being harvested. So, considering these facts, we look for lower prices, rather than higher One thing is certain, namely, our prices ARE and always WILL BE at the lowest possible notch.

FUTURE OF EARTH AND MAN

"The Man Who Knows" Will Lecture Here Saturday

In this day of the world's greatest favor, many are wondering why mankind should be apparently more dissatisfied than ever before. Riots, strikes and bloodshed are daily occurrences, despite our boasted twentieth century civilization. One is constrained to ask, "What are we to expect next? What will be the outcome?" It is said that these questions will be answered in the coming I. B. S. A. Bible lecture on "The Glorious Future of Earth and Man," which will be delivered in Colonial hall, City Square, Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock by R. E. Streeter of Providence.

The speaker is reputed to have a keen insight into the present situation. It is said that he is not blind to the existing malady, yet believes that he has a sure footing for his optimistic views regarding the future. He is frequently spoken of as "The man who knows." His lecture here will be free to the public. All are welcome.

TWO FELLOWS FINED $80

Found Weymouth Officers Too Smart For Them

Singing "Old Fall River Line" and thumbing his nose to Chief Fitzgerald, with the advice to "shoot a nickel," cost two fellows a sum total of $80 in court this morning. The two men gave their names as John Doyle and Stewart Hall. They passed through East Weymouth Sunday afternoon on a motor cycle singing "Old Fall River Line" which so disturbed the peace of mind of Officer Schofield that he ran to a telephone and called Chief Fitzgerald at Weymouth and told him to hold them up. Chief Fitzgerald ran out as they passed and held his hand for them to stop. Instead of stopping however they shouted "On the Old Fall River Line," and one af them thumbing his nose to the guardian of the peace told him to go and "shoot a nickel."

Chief Fitzgerald telephoned to Braintree officers to hold them up, but as he telephoned they shot through Braintree. Randolph was then called and here the young men fell into the officers hands.

In court this morning Hall was arraigned for reckless driving of a motor cycle at Weymouth and Braintree, and was fined $50 on the two complaints. Doyle was arraigned for disturbing the peace at Weymouth and at Braintree and he was fined $30 on the two complaints. It is doubtful if they succeed in raising the money. One thing is certain and that is when they feel like singing "Old Fall River Line" the next time it will not be in Weymouth or Braintree.

SERIOUS FOR THE SHIPYARD

Report That Cramps May Move to Canada

The shipping bill has not yet passed Congress, but it is thought nothing can check it, and it is reported that President Wilson is ready to sign it. However all the shipyards of the country are arrayed against it.

The National Senate has agreed to take a vote Monday.

The Herald prints a dispatch from Philadelphia which says: The William Cramp & Sons Ship and Engine Building Co., the largest of the kind in this country, will move its plant from Philadelphia to Canada if the emergency registry bill, as approved in conference, is enacted into law. This statement was made Friday by Harry W. Hand, vice-president and general manager of the company, when asked what effect the law would have on American ship yards.

Officials of the New York Ship Building Company and the Harlan & Hollingsworth Corporation, the other two large shipbuilding plants on the Delaware river, said they would be forced out of business, in case foreign vessels were allowed to take American registry and were permitted to engage in the coastwise trade. All of these officials were agreed that virtually every shipyard in the United States would be forced to close down inside of a year should this bill become law.

Three thousand employes of the Cramp yards today signed and forwarded a statement to Senator Penrose in Washington declaring that if the bill now before Congress was passed it would take from them their means of livelihood. They asked him to use all of his influence to oppose the passage of the bill. There are about 5000 men employed in this yard and all of them would lose their positions, according to the petition, in case the bill was enacted into law.

Mr. Hand pointed out that, with the exception of government work, the shipyards of this country were solely dependent upon the construction of vessels for the coastwise trade and for coast-to-coast trade.

Not a yard in the country has been operating at its full capacity for the past 18 months. There has been hesitation on the part of capital to invest in the building of new tonnage, and with the inclination of the government to construct more of the vessels for the United States in government shipyards, he declared these plants have already been hard to make even the slightest profit on capital invested.

Although the material for American-built vessels costs only a little more than it does for vessels built in foreign countries, the cost of labor, said Mr. Hand, is from 40 to 60 per cent more.

WARD FOUR REPUBLICANS.

A well attended meeting of the Ward Four Republican committee was held Friday evening at Sandberg's garage on Buckley street. At this meeting John C. Kapplas was favored as delegate to the state convention, and the following as members of the ward committee: William H. Teasdale, Edward J. Sandberg, Louis K. Badger, W. S. Beattie, John C. Kapplas, August Williams, Victor E. Serberg and Albert A. Farnham. The necessary nomination papers for these gentlemen were filled out and will be filed today.

DISTRICT COURT.

Leon J. Owen was fined $15 for drunkenness at Quincy, and James McGill $15 for drunkenness at Weymouth.

The liquors from various parties in Quincy on recent liquor raids were ordered forfeited.

Stewart Hall was fined $50 on two complaints for recklessly driving a motor cycle at Weymouth and Braintree and John Doyle was fined $30 on two complaints for disturbing the peace at Weymouth and Braintree.

400 FEET WIDE AND 24 FEET DEEP

Improvement of Fore River Channel Urged Upon the United States Engineer

Of Importance to State As Well As City

Many forcible arguments were made at the conference at the Quincy Yacht clubhouse Thursday between some of the business men of the city and Col. W. E. Craighill, United States district Engineer, on the necessity of widening the Weymouth Fore river to 400 feet and deepening the channel to a depth of 24 feet.

A hearing on this same subject was held before Col. Craighill at his Boston office last month and today's conference was held at the suggestion of Col. Craighill, and was arranged by Dock and Water Front Commissioner Frank Fessenden Crane and the Water Front Committee of the Board of Trade.

Col. Craighill and his clerk came from Boston in the government tug Executive, which came to anchor in the bay, and the party was brought to the yacht club float in a launch.

Here they were presented to the Quincy and Boston gentlemen present who included the following:

Among those present were:

Hon. Emery L. Crane, acting Mayor of Quincy.

Joseph A. Sedgwick treasurer of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation.

Samuel T. McQuarrie clerk of Fore River.

Hon. John F. Merrill, chairman of the Norfolk County Commissioners.

Ex-Mayor Eugene R. Stone.

Ex-Councilman H. S. Barker.

Frank S. Patch of C. Patch & Son.

L. F. Baker of Baker Yacht Basin.

Henry S. Crane, commodore Quincy Yacht Club.

Edgar W. Emery, vice commodore Quincy Yacht Club.

John L. Hamilton, president Board of Trade of Quincy.

John O. Hall, secretary Board of Trade of Quincy.

Capt. Joseph Kemp, Boston Tow Boat Co.

William B. Shaw.

L. K. O'Rourke commissioner of public works of Boston.

John N. Cole, chairman of the Boston Industrial Committee.

A. L. Whitman of Quincy Point.

William H. Teasdale.

Capt. Daniel Higgins.

Mayor Curley has accepted an invitation to be present, but at the last minute was unable to come, but he showed his interest in the movement by sending Commissioner Louis O'Rourke and John N. Cole, the latter chairman of the Industrial Development Board of the City of Boston.

Letters of regret at inability to be present were read by Commissioner Crane from the Chairman of the Selectmen of Hingham and Braintree, and from J. S. Swingle, all of whom spoke of the necessity of a deeper channel in the Fore river and that it would benefit not only the industries of Quincy but the towns bordering on the river.

After informal introductions an adjournment was made to the dining room at the club house where a lunch was served.

COL. CRAIGHILL

After dinner Col. Craighill called upon his secretary who briefly read what action had been taken by the government in relation to the Fore river, closing by stating that the matter had been referred to his department for a report as to the advisibility of the matter. Col. Craighill then said that perhaps if widened to less than 400 feet and the channel was made less than 24 feet perhaps the matter might be satisfactory. He called upon Commissioner Crane, who acted as master of ceremonies.

ACTING MAYOR CRANE.

City Clerk Emery L. Crane, who represented Mayor Miller, briefly welcomed Col. Craighill to the city and spoke of the necessity of widening the channel as well as making it deeper as it would be of great benefit to the industries of the city. It was a question in which every citizen was interested and he hoped for a favorable consideration of the proposed plan.

EX-MAYOR STONE.

Ex-Mayor Eugene R. Stone said that it would be of great advantage to the business interests of Quincy if the river was widened and deepened. The city has been authorized to expend

Go to war in haste and repent at leisure! That is the regular way.

In the meantime the Hague Peace Tribunal is supposed to be swatting flies.

This country has no part in European wars, its troubles being longitudinal.

Haiti seems to be the tar baby of the republics.

Carranza's new press agent seems to be a very capable one.

There has been much reckless driving of motor cycles through the town of late and the safety of people is greatly endangered thereby. We have no doubt that the police officers do all in their power to stop the practice but the offenders are generally more wary when approaching the public squares and generally hit up the pace when past these points and often at a time of day when the patrolmen are not on duty. A swift machine and a good road make a tempting combination to the average rider but unless more care is used there is likely to be a serious accident.

We have often wondered why the local merchants allow their windows to become all cluttered up with posters and placards advertising attractions or sales which in many cases do not occur in town and for which they, in all probability, receive no money or other compensation. It would seem that space in store windows is too valuable to be filled with advertising matter much of it out of date and having nothing to do with the business upon the domains of which it encroaches. Many of these aforesaid placards are tacked upon trees, telephone poles etc., and the result is anything but pleasing to those who desire to see the town look its best. We believe there is a town by-law which forbids the defacing of trees and other public property in this manner and at any rate the practice is one that should be discouraged by all good citizens. Advertising is a good thing and is necessary in order to attract patrons but the public highways should not be used for any such purpose.

VACATION TIME.

Some people are perfectly content to spend a long summer outing at some lonely farm home or forest camp. Such persons are usually very sensitive to the voices of nature. Daily work and the clash and grind of city life have been a strain and a burden to them. The mere absence of the clang of car-wheels and the honk of motors is a joy. Mere inaction is happiness.

When to this there is added the merriment of bird songs, the lulling swish of the tree-tops, the rippling voice of river or sea, their content is complete. The simple life of the few villagers with whom they may come in contact is human companionship enough.

At the other extreme of the scale are restless creatures who must play the same game that occupies their time the rest of the year. The hotel by the sounding sea is principally valued as a place to dance and play bridge in.

Every one to his taste. Probably the majority of people today are living lives of overstrain. A vacation of absolute inactivity is for a great many persons the most wholesome thing in sight.

The high-strung, restless American temperament does not take kindly to the middle ground of moderation. Many people spoil their vacation by a degree of physical activity for which they are not capable. The stimulus of some unfamiliar scene, or of out-door life in some tonic air, impels them to unusual effort. They take long walks and play vigorous games, twice as hard as would be possible at home. The effort is largely done on a basis of nervous excitement. When the holiday is over, they return more jaded than before.

One needs to be something of a philosopher. Don't try to do everything in two weeks. Leave something for next time!

GERMANS ARE MAKING GAINS ON BELGIANS

Brussels and Antwerp Threatened by Steady Advances

IMPORTANT BATTLE IS CLOSE AT HAND

Allies Expected to Clash With Germans Within Next Few Days—Brussels Reports Rout of Enemy In Engagement South of Haelen—German Casualties of Wednesday Were Three Thousand, Men Being Apparently Sacrificed Without Scruples—None of Liege Forts Have Capitulated—Roberts and French to Take Field For England

London, Aug. 15.—German troops are advancing to positions that threaten Brussels and Antwerp, according to the latest dispatches from Belgium.

Word from Tirlemont is to the effect that the German advance has become more pronounced and general.

Their infantry is advancing in the direction of Tongres and St. Trond, and another attack by several army corps is expected in the direction of Diest and Aerschot, to the northeast of Brussels.

Formidable defensive works have been erected by the Belgians around Namur. To obviate any pretext for reprisals on the part of the Germans, all the inhabitants of Namur are being disarmed.

Great masses of German troops are to pass through Aix-la-Chapelle today, according to a dispatch from Amsterdam, which says the mayor of Aix-la-Chapelle has issued a proclamation informing the inhabitants that the troops are on the way. This advance, it is believed, is coincident with the advance of the Germans on the Belgian capital and Antwerp, but will probably be directed elsewhere.

Opinions of Experts

Many observers of the military operations of the last few days believe the German army is seeking to reach the French border through the southern part of the Belgian province of Brabant, crossing that section where the plain of Waterloo is situated and forcing the Belgian army to retreat on Antwerp.

Important developments, in which the French troops will take a leading part, are anticipated within the next few days, and an official announcement says that a large number of French troops have entered Belgium and are proceeding from Charleroi to Gambloux, ten miles to the northwest of Namur.

Brussels reports a fresh engagement between the Germans and Belgains occurred at Geet-Betz, five miles south of Haelen. The Belgian troops fired heavily on a detachment of 400 Germans, who retired hastily. In general, the position of the Belgian troops is excellent.

Losses In Haelen Battle

German casualties at Haelen Wednesday were 3000 dead and wounded. The Germans apparently sacrificed their men without any scruples. During the fight the Germans were obliged to pass two bridges over the Gethe and Velne rivers, where they were exposed to a heavy fire. The retiring Germans left plies of dead and wounded at these bridges.

The same carnage occurred on the road from Threck to Haelen, where the German cavalry, exposed to the gatling guns of the Belgians, fell in droves.

The German infantry and cavalry had a similar reception near Colfaelin.

The success of Belgian arms is considered at Brussels particularly important, as most of the Belgian troops participating had not been under fire before.

The Belgian casualties at Haelen were light in dead, as the troops were well intrenched, but many were wounded.

The victory at Haelen was followed by new and successful engagements near Noville-Taviers and Eghezee, about nine miles north of Namur.

Bombardment Is Shifted

The Germans have suspended the bombardment of the Liege forts on the right bank of the river and concentrated all their efforts on those to the west of the town. The forts attacked were Pontisse, Liers, Lantin, Loncin, Hollogne and Flemalle, an especially severe attack being made on Pontisse.

It was officially announced at Brussells that none of the Liege forts have capitulated, as had been stated in German reports. It was declared the defenders had been instructed to blow up the forts themselves rather than surrender.

To Head British Troops

Two of England's finest fighters figure in the day's news. One report is that Viscount Roberts, the conquerer of the Boers, is to lead the British troops in the continental warfare. Another report is that Field Marshal

SCENE OF BATTLE.

French-German Border, Where Greatest Battle of History Is In Progress.

The battle of millions of soldiers, which to all appearance will eclipse any conflict of men in the world's history, seems to have been begun. Until one side gains some decided advantage no reliable information can be expected from either army. All telegraph and other possible lines of communication with the world are in the vigorous grasp of vigilant censors.

Sir John French, at present in chief command of the English field army, has joined General Joffre, the French commander-in-chief, at headquarters.

Of operations to date in Belgium, the war and admiralty information bureau has this to say:

"It is now confirmed that the Belgian troops were successful in their engagement on Aug. 12 with six regiments of German cavalry, supported by 2500 infantry with machine guns and artillery.

Germans Disorganized

"The Germans were completely disorganized. The six cavalry regiments suffered great loss and the Belgian troops pursued the infantry, which gave way.

"Friday morning toward Eghezee, ten miles north of Namur, a mixed detachment from the garrison surprised some cavalry regiments encamped, threw them into confusion and fought them toward the east after taking numerous prisoners and capturing cannon and machine guns.

"To the southward of the Meuse the German cavalry avoids contact with the French.

"News of the fight in the vicinity of Haelen confirms that the Germans were driven to the eastward, and that there is now no German cavalry between Sasselt and Ramillies, in the province of Brabant.

"The Liege forts still hold out and have plenty of supplies.

"German cavalry patrols are now reported to the north of Montmedy, which lies on the Franco-Belgian border, in the department of the Meuse."

The communication of the official press bureau concludes:

"Belgian cyclists and cavalry from Namur surprised a force of German cavalry, accompanied by artillery and machine guns and compelled them to retire. The Germans lost a field gun and several machine guns."

Many Prisoners Taken

The Havas Agency indicates in the following dispatch that the allied army of France and Belgium have thus far taken 3500 German prisoners:

"The Belgians in the operations around Liege took more than 2000 German prisoners and, in consequence of its restricted territory, the Belgian government has asked France to arrange for their confinement elsewhere.

"At various points along the French frontier the French troops have taken over 1500 prisoners."

JAPAN IS PREPARING

Declaration of War Against Germany Expected Very Soon

Cable reports received from agents of the United States government in Tokio state that a declaration of war by Japan against Germany is expected, possibly within the next twenty-four hours. The exact nature of these reports cannot be learned, but they are given general credence in official circles in Washington.

It is reported that Japan has prepared her fleet and has concentrated an expeditionary force of 50,000 men for this service. The concentration of troops is believed to forecast a Japanese occupation of the German-leased territory in China, with its annexation by Japan as a logical result.

WARSHIPS CRIPPLED

Two Badly Damaged Vessels Enter Hong Kong Harbor

Two warships, each having four funnels, badly damaged and carrying many wounded, entered the harbor at Hong Kong, according to a dispatch from Shanghai.

Their identity has not been learned, but the vessels are believed to be either the British armored cruisers Minotaur and Hampshire or the French armored cruisers Dupleix and Montcalm.

They are reported to have had an engagement with the German cruisers of the same type, Scharnhorst and Gneisenau.

FRANCE MAKES A CHARGE

Says Swiss Neutrality Is Violated by Germans In Flight

The French government made the direct charge that Germany is violating the neutrality of Switzerland. It claims, in an official statement, that numerous German mounted patrols, routed by French cavalry columns, have crossed the border into Switzerland. The official announcement continues:

"These scouting parties of the enemy have not hesitated to violate the Swiss territory in efforts to escape from capture by the French cavalry attacking them. The French commanding officers, however, have the strictest orders not to pursue their advantage across the Swiss frontier, and as a result many of the German patrols escaped almost certain capture."

It is announced that the French government will direct the attention of the Swiss government to this violation of its territory.

DIKES ARE OPENED

Holland Remains Neutral, but Is Making Preparations For War

Although Holland has again given official notice that she will remain neutral in the great European conflagration, war preparations are going forward, especally along the western and southern frontiers, on a grand scale.

A great number of dikes have been cut, flooding large areas as a precautionary measure, and more than 60,000 troops have been thrown along the southwestern border.

The chief fear is that Germany will invade the provinces of Limburg and North Brabant, where they join Belgium, but it is considered likely that the Germans will not do this unless it becomes an absolute necessity.

TO RULE FOOD PRICES

Canada Prepares to Adopt Measures to Prevent Undue Increase

A law for the control of the prices of fuel and all necessaries of life will be enacted by the Canadian parliament which meets Tuesday next in special session to pass war measures.

The government will make a law by which the prices charged by manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers may be brought before a judge and if it is found that advantage has been taken of conditions created by war unduly to advance prices they may be reduced by court order.

It is expected that parliament will be asked to impose some form of war tax. The modest contribution of aid for England and defense for herself which Canada has made is costing about $100,000 a day. Therefore, it is regarded as certain that the finance minister will ask for the imposition of war taxes.

KIDNAPPERS SENTENCED

Leader of Band Must Serve Not Less Than Twenty-Five Years

New York, Aug. 15.—The maximum sentence of from twenty-five to fifty years in Sing Sing was imposed upon Pasquale Milone, leader of the band that kidnapped 8-year-old Frank Longo from his home on the East Side and held him a captive for forty-nine days.

Francesco Malacuso, another member of the band, was sentenced to from twelve to twenty-five years in Sing Sing, while a third member, Vincenzo Acena, was given from twenty to thirty years. Six more alleged members of the band are in the Tombs awaiting trial.

SIX HUNDRED KILLED

But TwentyTwo of Eight Hundred Indians Unhurt In Battle

Washington, Aug. 15.—The most mortal battle of the Mexican revolution was reported to the navy department.

Admiral Howard from Mazatlan reported that one regiment of 800 Indians charged across a field which had been mined and covered with barbed wire, facing the concentrated artillery fire and firing from the gunboat Guerrero.

At the close of the engagement only twenty-three Indians were unhurt. Six hundred were killed outright and 178 wounded.

400 FEET WIDE

$100,000 in a public dock and in order to make such a dock available it was necessary to have a channel deep enough so that vessels could readily come to the dock. If we do not get a deeper channel the public dock will be of but little use.

Mr. Stone then told of action that the city had already taken in the matter of a public dock. We can not expect to develop along our water front unless we have a deep channel. He also spoke of the street railway power house at Quincy Point, saying, vessels had a hard time to get up to it. It would not only benefit Quincy but every town along the river, and what benefits one community will benefit the whole of New England. When the Fore River corporation takes a contract for a big vessel they do not know if they can get it out or not and he hoped that favorable action would be taken.

MERCHANTS INTERESTED.

William G. Shaw of the Board of Trade said that he represented 100 retail merchants all of whom realized the great benefit that would come to Quincy industries if proper water facilities were had.

PRESIDENT HAMILTON.

John L. Hamilton, president of the Board of Trade, spoke of the big dock that was about to be built in Boston harbor. If we had plenty of water in the channel large vessels that needed repair could come to the Fore River shipyard and have necessary repairs made in a very short time. A wider and deeper channel would help all industries.

COMMISSIONER MERRILL.

Hon. John F. Merrill, chairman of the County Commissioners said that the county was interested in the development of its water front, and that anything he could say to help along the improvement of the water front he would gladly do. He believed it a necessity and should be carried out.

PRESIDENT WHITON.

Joseph L. Whiton, president of the City Council, spoke of the unlimited advantages of our water front if we had proper facilities. When much of our water front along the Massachusetts coast has been taken by boulevards there was no question but what Quincy would become a great factor in the shipbuilding line if we had facilities.

It is so near Boston that it is surprising that it has not been more developed than it is, and it would be developed if we had the opportunity This is the only place south of Boston in which the industry can be developed. The United States cannot do more for New England than help in the development of its own waters. In regard to deepening, he said that it was not a question of money. We must develop the mouth of the river. It would be useless for the city to expend a large sum for a public dock when the mouth of the river did not have a deep channel so that vessels could use the dock. In case of a war in this country, if there was a deep channel government vessels could readily reach the magazine and armament could be brought by rail to the waters edge.

HERBERT S. BARKER.

Ex-Councilman Herbert S. Barker said he did not know much about shipping but he did know that now practically all of the lumber industries were situated in South Boston, and that it cost $70 to get a vessel to the wharf with lumber. If the lumber trade had a chance to spread out, which it would have with a deep channel, money could be saved.

TREASURER SEDGWICK.

Joseph A. Sedgwick, treasurer of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation, said this was not a local matter but a part of the development of a Greater Boston. We claim we are entitled to assistance as we are a part of Greater Boston, and what helps Quincy helps Boston and New England. The Fore River Corporation spends yearly a million and a quarter in supplies purchased in Boston alone, and outside of Boston in the west and other places two and one half millions, so that all of the sections where material is purchased for the company are interested in our industry and the development of the channel as a means of reaching the plant.

The company was now building a vessel 625 feet long with a draft of 30 feet, and it was almost impossible to get these ships out of the Fore river. If we are restricted as to the size of vessels which we can build it does away with certain competition, and therefore might cost the government more to build its ships. The battleship Rivadavia, about which so much has been said, and which the company hoped to get rid of soon, could only be taken out at a very high tide, and if a tide was missed it meant a wait of a month before there would be water enough. It was very important therefore that there should be a channel deep enough to accommodate the largest of vessels, if we are to get the best results. He did not think 300 feet wide enough. It should be at least 400 feet, and the channel not less than 24 feet. The upkeep of a vessel like the Rivadavia which is held at the yards waiting for a high enough tide to take her out is $1,000 a day.

COMMISSIONER O'ROURKE.

Commissioner O'Rourke said that Mayor Curley sent his regrets at being unable to be present. It seemed to him that anything that would have a tendency to improve the water front of Quincy must naturally be of benefit to Boston which was now expending $3,000,000 for a dry dock. Unless you have proper facilities for repairing vessels in Quincy, Boston will have to build a shipbuilding plant to do repairing.

CHAIRMAN COLE.

Chairman Cole of the Industrial Development department, made a forcible argument in the needs of improving the water front. He felt sorry that Mayor Curley who had made a study of these matters and was fully conversant with them was unable to be present. Every appropriation that will aid Boston in reaching out to its neighbors would give him great satisfaction. The dry dock will be in Boston but there should be facilities here so that vessels can readily come to the Fore river plant for repairs.

If the state of Massachusetts is expending large sums of its money in this line the government should cooperate. It is for Boston and New England to reach out and secure new business development and this it cannot do without facilities. We must have facilities for shipping to all parts of the world our product and we must have facilities for bringing to us the raw material that it may be manufactured in our industries. This was why the state of Massachusetts was expending large sums in the development of its water front. The development of Boston is directly related to the development of the great industry at Quincy. The granite business of Quincy is not developed as it should be. This developing question is a wonderful study. The time has come for us to wake up and help put Massachusetts, Boston and New England where they can do their share.

CAPT. KEMP.

Capt. Joseph Kemp spoke of the difficulties he had experienced in getting the Argentine battleship out of the river. At times there was not over three inches of water below the keel of the vessel. After the first trial she had to come back for repairs, and it was necessary to anchor in Boston harbor and workmen were taken back and forth every day as well as supplies thus increasing the expense. Had there been a deeper channel she could have come to the works.

The channel at present was not deep enough to take out the Nevada now building at the plant. If a tide is missed it means that you must wait a month before you get another tide. A narrow deep channel is not much good. It wants to be wide as well.

COMMISSIONER CRANE.

In closing the speaking, Commissioner Crane said that some consideration should be given an industry which went out into the world and secured contracts amounting to $22,000,000. It was not right that such a concern should be penalized $1,000 a day because of lack of a channel deep enough.

It was not unfair to ask the government to expend four percent when a private company brought a $22,000,000 contract to this country. The supplies for this company were purchased all over the United States, so that it is not Quincy alone that is benefited. The government should not curtail an industry of this magnitude. Then deepening of the channel would give the granite industry of the city an opportunity to expand which it does not now have.

After concluding his remarks Commissioner Crane said that he hoped that favorable action would be taken on the proposition.

This closed the conference, after which at the invitation of Col. Craighill the party boarded the tub Executive and visited the shipyard. The tug then steamed back to Boston.

GIRL'S SCHOOL DRESS.

Fall Model Along Lines Approved In Adult Gowns.

GIRL'S SCHOOL GOWN.

For the young girl of from twelve to fourteen the three piece suit illustrated here makes an attractive school costume. Navy blue cloth is used for the skirt, tunic and short coat, the blouse is of blue satin with a pretty frill of plaited net running around the neck and down the front of the garment.

FIRELESS KETTLE.

A Convenience That Will Be Welcome In Hot Weather.

The principle of the fireless cooker kettle is the same as the well known fireless cooker except that the kettle does not come in a cabinet. It is made of aluminium and insulated with mica. On the base is a metal ring which prevents the kettle from warping when used for baking purposes. The top is arranged that heat and moisture cannot escape. An asbestos pad accompanies each kettle. On this the kettle is set after it has been allowed to boil about one-third of the time it would require to cook the inclosed food in the ordinary stove. There are four sizes of the kettles, of two, four, six and eight quart capacity, the two quart size being for cereals.

SCHOOL SWEATER.

Silk and Mercerized Models That Are Handsome Affairs.

The schoolgirl finds a sweater a very useful garment. In the early fall it may be substituted for a coat.

Very attractive are the sweaters now shown in the shops. Some of the models are of silk or mercerized to present a silky appearance.

The attractive sweater and cap shown here are of green silk. The fringed sash knotted about the waist is a pretty touch. The two large pockets are decidedly convenient.

Caps Jackets.

Some of the short jackets of tailored suits have two or three short capes falling just below the shoulders in the back and in the front a sort of revers as a necessary complement of the capes. These jackets are very good looking. Especially when they are developed in bright blue serge or gaberdine, perhaps with red buttons and a white collar, they have a quite military look.

SOCIAL LIFE IN BRAINTREE.

One of the interesting summer plans in prospect is the arrangement made by Mr. A. N. Hoe president of the Y. M. C. A. to allow the girls an opportunity to enjoy camp life at Manomet beach, Plymouth. Among those who are planning to go are Edith Pratt, Helen Sears, Eleanor Wilson, Esther McGill, Gladys Bryant, Gertrude Piercy, Louise Pennock, Pauline McGrath, and Marion Pennock. It is hoped to get a party of about twenty-five Mrs. James Folsom of Mt. Vernon street and Miss Nellie Bowles of East Braintree have charge of the arrangements

CAPE COD PAGEANT.

Arrangements for the Cape Cod pageant, which is to be held at Bourne today, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday are completed. Captain Avery of New Bedford arranged to have the whaler, "Bertha," go down to the canal on Friday, with a captain and two men aboard. The pageant directors then put a crew in costume aboard her for the pageant spectacle, since the "Bertha is to be used to typify the early days of New Bedford's industry.

Henry A. Morse's "Halcyon," a 78 foot yacht which has been fitted up by the owner as a complete replica on the outside of the Santa Maria, Columbus ship was sent to Bourne from Marblehead on Friday. The pageant committee plans to have Bartholomew Gosnold's party land from the "Halcyon" on the shores of the canal.

The committee announces that the performances will begin at 3 o'clock and will last until 5 o'clock. Saturday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday will be the regular performance days, but there are to be four performances, and if there are any rainy days that come in and make it necessary to postpone any day's performance, it will be held on Thursday, and will even go over to Friday if it is necessary to get good weather.

The committee is letting spaces on the edge of the pageant grounds to street fakirs, and lemonade stands, and to insure everybody going into the grounds in order to see the pageant, a canvas barrier is being put up to shut off the view of the grounds from the road.

Monday is to be Govenor's Day, and Governor Walsh and his entire staff are to be visitors to the pageant grounds on that day.

Eggs Long Used as Food.

Just how long people have been eating eggs is not known, certainly long before breakfasts were "invented" or made a custom. There is no doubt mankind in a barbaric state had learned of the use of certain eggs as a food.

MUDJEKEEWIS A WINNER

The Clara Also Led the Dartwell at Hull

A fleet of 77 boats participated in the open and interclub race under the auspices of the Boston Yacht club off Hull on Friday afternoon. There was a fine westerly breeze which made racing ideal and changed the order of finish in several of the classes.

In the sonder class the Eleanor, which has not been within shooting distance of the top at any race this season, finished in first place winning over the Panther by nearly two minutes.

In class I the Dorchen II finished in third position the race in this class being won by the Reina.

In class A, Maria L. won out with the Areyto, Eleanor and Virginia in the order named.

In class H ex-Commodore Dawes of the Wollaston club was out in the Wanderer IV and won on both actual and corrected time.

In class S the Warweenock, also of the Wollaston club, was a winner with the Maritza second and Zoe third.

There was a good scrap in class D the racing class of the Quincy Yacht club, and in this race the Mudjekeewis of Vice Commodore Emery won. The genial vice commodore was detained at the club house at the dinner given Col. Craighill until after the yacht had left for Hull so that he did not have the pleasure of sailing her in Friday's race. He however watched her pull out from the fleet from the club house. She finished with a lead of nearly a minute over the Clara while ex-Commodore Whittemore who had pulled off four firsts this week took third position. The Grayling was fourth in the line of finish and the Bobs Mc in last position, as she withdrew before the race was over.

McReynolds Receiving Reports on Increases in Prices

INQUIRY TAKES WIDER SCOPE

Activities of Combined Wholesalers and Commission Men to Be Closely Scrutinized—Broad Instructions to Agents of Department of Justice Are Already Bearing Fruit

Washington, Aug. 15.—President Wilson's campaign against "rapid and unwarranted increase in prices of foodstuffs upon the pretext of conditions in Europe" has borne early fruit.

Preliminary reports from United States district attorneys and department of justice special agents declaring many price increases speculative, unjustifiable and some bearing elements of illegal conspiracy, subject to anti-trust law prosecution, began to pour in by telegraph upon Attorney General McReynolds.

Within a week or ten days, McReynolds expects to be able to submit a final report to the president, called by the president's letter, whether immediate resort to the courts shall be taken or a further investigation be made jointly by the departments of justice, commerce and agriculture.

Supplemental instructions regarding the price inquiry have been issued. It is reported that scrutiny was ordered, particularly of activities of combined wholesalers and commission men, such as livestock and grain exchanges, produce and poultry exchanges, butter and egg markets, fruit exchanges, vegetable "unions" and cold storage houses.

Reports that meat, egg, butter, cheese and poultry dealers were deliberately creating an artificial "famine" by storing in cold storage warehouses, were received.

At the cabinet meeting the whole situation was canvassed and determination made to use drastic measures to prevent extortion.

Instructions sent to field agents of the department of justice in New York, Boston, Seattle, Chicago and New Orleans are as follows:

"You are instructed to inquire immediately and carefully whether there has been a recent rise in retail prices in your city and vicinity and if so, on what articles and to what extent.

"Special attention should be given to foodstuffs and articles of clothing and other necessities. Learn whether the advance, if it exists, is general, or confined to particular commodities, and if so, what ones. Find if it has been sudden or gradual; if any articles have fallen in price, state the facts concerning them. Learn what reasons are given for any advance that may have occurred and inquire particularly as to whether such reasons are the actual ones.

"Give special care to determining if there has been any advance due to speculation, either on the general war situation, or on the temporary delay in ocean transit. Consider whether a fair stock exists or is available of any commodity that may have been advanced and whether the facts show a purpose to use the war situation to secure undue extra profits by increased prices.

"Study to learn if any combination exists for the advance of prices under existing conditions. When the facts shall have been determined sufficiently to give a clear idea of the general situation, report them promptly to the chief of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce and continue the inquiry subject to his instructions."

Thus far McReynolds plans to rely on the Sherman law for punishment, but he is making an investigation to find if there is any other law to meet the situation, and also if any further legislation from congress is necessary.

RULES FOR AMERICANS

All Those Going Abroad Are Warned to Take Their Passports

Recognizing the existence of a state of war in practically every quarter of continental Europe, except the Scandinavian and Iberian peninsulas, Secretary Bryan made public notice to Americans. The text follows:

"All American citizens who go abroad should carry American passports.

"American citizens are advised not to visit unnecessarily countries which are now at war.

"It is especially important that naturalized citizens refrain from visiting their countries of origin or countries which are at war therewith."

It is well known that less than 10 percent of the Americans who go to Europe for pleasure or business, except those who visit Russia, ever take the trouble to get passports before leaving the United States.

Twenty-Six Passengers Hurt

Nashville, Aug. 15.—Twenty-six persons were injured, nine seriously, when two passenger coaches of an accommodation train left the tracks near Mount Juliet. The cars rolled down an embankment.

A MARKET IN SPAIN.

With a Bargain In Cheese Plus the Price of the Compliments.

At early morning the market place of Medina is a rare sight, says C. Bogue Luffmann in his "Quiet Days in Spain." It is thronged with hundreds of tilted carts and pack animals, loaded with all the materials that the population requires. So universal is the practice of buying in the market square that there are very few shops, and those are both small and old fashioned.

At a stall in the market place a bright eyed dapper little woman was offering tiny cheeses of goat's milk. A countryman examined one carefully, tucked it in his pocket and put down a real. I bought the cheese a bargain and said to the little woman, "I'll have one," and gave her a peseta, which is four reals. She beamed and gave back two reals. I remarked, "The price of the cheese is one real."

"Ah," said she, with a winning smile, "but you are a caballero." (A nobleman.)

I enjoyed her audacity so much that I had to laugh and say, "You are a little rogue;" and she, seeing that she had beaten me, curtsied and laughed as she cried, "Ah, great senor mine, you are many times a caballero!"

I do not complain. Such incidents and compliments are cheap at the price.

ROYAL DOUBLES.

Understudies Who Played the Role of Monarch In Public.

In a land of distrust like Russia it is only natural that the precautions taken should be of the most drastic order; hence the use of a royal understudy who has always been a conspicuous figure at that court. Indeed, it was the understudy of the late Czar Alexander III.—a man named Komaroff—who was murdered in Moscow some years ago, when the murderer thought he had covered himself with glory by assassinating the czar.

Nicholas, like his father before him, has an understudy, and the many state functions he attended at the opening of his reign, when the relations with his people were less strained than they are today, were attended for the most part by proxy.

No monarch, however, made such frequent use of his understudy as the late Emperor William of Germany. Every day as the clock struck 12 the emperor came out and bowed on the palace balcony. It was not until some time after the emperor's demise that the secret was made known that the man who appeared daily on the balcony was the royal understudy. And the person who gave the secret away was the great Bismarck.—London Black and White.

Trinidad's Asphalt Lake.

The proverb about the folly of building on sand might be written to include the vicinity of the Trinidad asphalt lake. This remarkable body of pitch is perhaps the nearest thing to the "goose which laid the golden egg" that has ever been found, for it has the obliging faculty of replacing during the night the asphalt which has been dug from its surface during the day.

That the replenishment "comes from somewhere" was graphically illustrated a short time ago when a house located near the edge of the lake began settling on one side, not to stop until the digging of pitch in that vicinity ceased.

The pitch is dug laboriously from the lake by negroes, using pick and shovel, and is carried on an overhead trumway directly to the waiting ships.—Wide World Magazine.

As a Clown Sees Us.

"It is lots of fun to watch the big crowds that throng the circus or any huge amusement place," says a famous clown. "Just as soon as they get within the doors they all grow younger except the children, and they become just a wee bit older. Highbrows call it the psychology of the happy crowd, but we clowns say it's the 'old uns getting gay.'

"A great big crowd, no matter how old or dignified they may be in everyday life, are just about nine years when they smell the sawdust in the ring. My, it's fun to watch them! Many a time we clowns laugh in real happiness just because the 'old uns' make us laugh with their happiness."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Business Instinct.

The business man noticed that the friend he was talking to continually examined his watch.

"Don't let me keep you," he said. "If you have an appointment."

"Oh, no," said the other. "I sent the wife to London this morning on a visit and took the precaution of insuring her at the booking office for £500. I am just thinking that I shall know in another twenty-five minutes if I have £500 or a wife."—Manchester Guardian.

Progress.

"My daughter is having her voice cultivated."

"Is it improving?"

"It's growing stronger. She used to be heard only two apartments away. Now we get complaints from the next building."—Washington Star.

Britain's Capital Crimes.

There are five capital offenses under British law—murder, high treason, piracy, arson in the port of London and attempts to destroy public arsenals.

Whatever be done, let it be for love of service and not for praise.

NORTH WEYMOUTH

The officers and committees of the District Nurse association are all working on their respective details, and arrangements are nearly completed for engaging a nurse to begin active work about September first.

William Babcock who has recently finished his enlistment in the United States Navy, is stopping with James W. Preston.

Arthur Delorey leaves Saturday for Kennebec, Maine, where he will be employed by a construction company, building dams.

Chester Stoddard, the letter carrier on route 1, is enjoying his annual vacation at North Easton, Mrs. Stoddard being there also. Louis McNamara is substituting during his absence.

Mr. and Mrs. Russell G. Niles of Rockland formerly of Weymouth, are the happy parents of a boy, born Monday morning.

See page three for additional Weymouth news.

The funeral of S. Waldo Tirrell was held at his late home, 76 Mill street, Wednesday afternoon, the service being conducted by Rev. Henry C. Alvord of the Old South Congregational church. Interment was in the Reed cemetery, Front street.

Crescent Lodge, No. 134 of Odd Ladies have contributed an additional sum of $7.00 to the Salem relief fund.

The pop concert scheduled for Wednesday evening at the Wessagussett Yacht Club was held inside the clubhouse on account of the rain. Dancing was enjoyed at the close of the concert.

The funeral of Mrs. Susie Carter was held Wednesday with services at Zion's Hill chapel, near the Hingham line. Interment was at Lake View cemetery, South Weymouth.

The funeral of James D. Dunbar, a Civil war veteran was held Thursday afternoon in the chapel of the East Weymouth Congregational church, Rev. Edward Torrey Ford conducting the services. Post 58, G. A. R. attended. Interment was at the North Weymouth cemetery, where three volleys were fired and taps sounded over the grave.

SUDDENLY STRICKEN.

Ozro Estes, a well known resident of the North section, was suddenly stricken with a paralytic shock at his place of business Thursday. Mr. Estes is manager of the J. W. Bartlett company's summer store at Fort Point, and feeling ill shortly after noon went into the cottage adjoining the store to rest. He was found later by a member of the family in a serious condition, such that it was not considered advisable to move him to his home on Neck street. At last report his condition remains about the same.

MRS. ELIZABETH DENBROEDER.

Mrs. Elizabeth (Roode) Denbroeder aged 87 widow of the late Adrian Denbroeder, and for more than 50 years a resident of this town, died at the home of her daughter, Miss Cisco Hart at Bridgewater on Thursday afternoon. Mrs. Denbroeder was a member of the East Weymouth Congregational church and a charter member of W. R. C. No. 102. Mrs. Denbroeder leaves five sons, two daughters, thirteen grand children and one great grandchild. Funeral services will be held at the East Weymouth Congregational church Sunday afternoon at 2 and the W. R. C. ritual will be carried out.

K. C. B. C.

The annual field day of the King Cove boat club will be held at the clubhouse this afternoon and evening. There will be water and land sports for young and old.

The Auxiliary to the K. C. B. C. met Friday evening at the clubhouse.

From Both Sides.

Steamers plying between England and Holland have been equipped with apparatus by which all their lifeboats can be launched from either side of a vessel.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

QUINCY CUP RACES NEXT WEEK

Many Clubs Are After the Trophy This Year

The regatta committee of the Corinthian yacht club has selected the Huskie, formerly the Beatrice, to represent them in the race for the Quincy Yacht Club challenge cup which commences off Marblehead next Monday. The Boston Yacht club, present custodians of the cup, has received nine challenges for the cup this year so that the open race is likely to see ten of the sonder class boats out for the trophy. The Quincy yacht club did not challenge for the cup this year, although the races will be watched with interest by members of the club.

TENNIS TOURNAMENT.

A handicap tournament in singles for women members is announced by the Quincy Tennis club to open on Monday Aug. 31, at the Presidents Hill courts. Play will begin at 10 A. M. and all matches will be the best two out of three matches. The club has hung up a handsome silver cup for the winner.

Limit of Pessimism.

A Gentleman Chauffeur

A Story of the Purchase of Mexican Oil Lands

By F. A. MITCHEL

Cuthbert Harrington, a portly gentleman with mutton chop whiskers, partly gray hair, florid complexion indicating high living and making a fine contrast with an azure polka dot neck scarf, sat in his private office in a skyscraper not far from Wall street, New York, opening his mail. He put the letters in different baskets as he read them till he came to one that arrested his earnest attention. He pondered over it for some time, then tapped a bell.

"Tell Mr. Erskine I would like to see him," he said to the attendant who entered.

Mr. Erskine, a tall, slender man with a shirt collar so high that it seemed to have pushed his hair back from his forehead, entered with a serious look on his face. No one of Mr. Harrington's subordinates ever entered his presence without appearing to suppose that he had been called for a purpose of supreme importance.

"Mr. Erskine," said the magnate, "I have a letter from Mexico this morning from Perkins saying that Manuel Furtado is very ill and likely to die."

"Senor Furtado is dead," replied Erskine, with unheard of daring, venturing to interrupt his chief.

"Dead! How do you know that?"

"His death is mentioned in the morning papers."

"What! Furtado dead! I didn't see it. Let me have the paper."

A journal was produced and the item pointed out.

"Erskine," said Harrington, turning to his subordinate, "this is a crisis in the oil industry of Mexico. Furtado owned the most valuable petroleum lands in that distracted country. There will be a race between some one sent out by me and some one sent by Sir Oliver Tisdale's British combination to buy these lands that belong to the Furtado estate. It is well known that the prospective heirs have wished these lands sold, but Furtado would sell nothing. General Grant said that victory in war depends on getting there first with the most men. In this case victory for us depends upon who gets there first with the most money."

"We are nearer Mexico than England."

"In this case we are at the same distance. Joe Blinker has kept me advised that John Handiside, the Tisdale manager here, has long been trying to get possession of this property. He will send"—

The door opened, and a clerk entered.

"Joseph Blinker says that he has important information for you, sir."

"Send him right in."

Mr. Blinker was about twenty-five years old, stupid looking, but a close observer would have remarked a crafty eye. He was a spy of Mr. Harrington's in Mr. Handiside's employ.

"What is it, Joe?" asked Mr. Harrington eagerly.

Joe instinctively looked at the walls and the ceiling for an eavesdropper, then said:

"Mr. Handiside is leaving by train this evening for Mexico."

"The deuce you say! How do you know that?"

"I was directed to purchase his sleeping section and his ticket."

"But how do you know they are for Mr. Handiside?"

"I was directed to engage a cab to be at his house at 5 o'clock this afternoon."

"How much of all this have you done?"

"Bought the tickets."

"How about the cab?" asked Mr. Erskine.

"I have not yet ordered it."

"Mr. Harrington," said Erskine, "may I have a few moments' conversation with you?"

"Yes. Joe, wait outside."

When alone Mr. Erskine said: "This information gives us a fine advantage. We may possibly delay Mr. Handiside while some one leaves by the evening train empowered to buy the Furtado property."

"How delay Handiside?"

"Let Joe give me the order for the cab. I will manage the rest."

"I think I see your point."

"Whom will you send?"

"Whom will I send? Why, I'll go myself! Whoever gets the Furtado property will own what turns the scale of a monopoly of the oil product of Mexico. The matter is altogether too important to trust to a subordinate. Now tell me how you propose to delay Handiside."

The door was locked to avoid interruption, and the two men went into secret conference.

* * * * * * *

"Sue," said Hugh Erskine, who surprised his wife by going home to luncheon, "I have a bit of work for you this afternoon."

"What is it?"

Erskine told his wife of the rivalry for the oil property in Mexico, unfolded his plan to delay Handiside and explained how he wished her assistance. Then he lunched and went to the garage in the rear of his house.

"Carl," he said to his chauffeur, "I wish you to take a note to a man on Staten Island. You needn't hurry. Take the whole afternoon."

When Carl had departed his master began an examination of his cars, selecting a closed one, on which he began to make certain changes. He sent for a locksmith, whom he directed to fix the locks to the doors so that they could not be opened from the inside. This done, Erskine drove a nail into the sash of every window so that it could not be opened. Next he bored a hole from behind the driver's seat into the interior of the car. Having finished all this, he went to a drug store and purchased a rubber bulb and tube.

Mr. Erskine then went to his dressing room, where he found his wife with cosmetics ready to make him up so that he would not be recognized for himself. He was smooth shaven, and his wife had no difficulty in dying on him a beard. His hair was light, and she blackened it with pomade. Then he got into a suit of his chauffeur's clothes that he had brought from the garage and, after surveying himself in a pier glass, went out to get the car he had altered.

At the appointed hour Chauffeur Erskine pulled up at the residence of the representative of Sir Oliver Tisdale's British oil corporation. The front door was opened, a gentleman whom Erskine recognized as Mr. Handiside came out, kissed his hand to his wife who appeared at an upper window and got into the car, giving his directions before closing the door.

Mr. Handiside was being driven through a narrow street leading down to the Hudson river when there was a puff and the car was filled with a fine powder. Astonished, he tried to let down a window. It could not be moved. Then he tried the one on the other side of the car. This, too, was stuck fast. He rapped on the partition between him and the chauffeur. No response was accorded him. Lastly, he tried to open a door and failed.

Meanwhile Mr. Handiside was breathing in the powder that filled the car. It had been injected by the chauffeur, who had squeezed a rubber bulb, forcing it through the tube, an end of which had been inserted into a hole bored in the partition. The man inside began to feel languid, drowsy, and his efforts to get out of the car relaxed. Finally he passed into dreamland.

When Mr. Handiside came out of his trance it was pitch dark. He was lying on what was evidently a bed, but his surroundings, being invisible, he could not see them. He got up and felt about him till he came to a door and, turning the knob, opened it and looked into a dimly lighted corridor. Returning to the room, by the increased light he saw a dresser, and on it were matches. Lighting one, he stood before an electric switch and turned on more light.

By this time it was evident to Mr. Handiside that he was in a hotel. Pushing a button, he called for some one from below. A bellboy responded, who called the night clerk, and Mr. Handiside was informed that the evening before a chauffeur had driven up to the hotel, said that he had a fare who was ill and begged to be permitted to leave the invalid till his family could be communicated with. The landlord had consented, and Mr. Handiside had been carried in and put to bed. The chauffeur had gone off to bring a doctor, but had not returned. Since the invalid seemed to be gently sleeping he was left to himself.

Day was breaking, and Mr. Handiside, feeling weak, decided to return to his bed. At 8 o'clock he arose, called up his own chauffeur by telephone and was driven to his home to break the news of his strange adventure to his wife.

How near Mr. Handiside's surmises as to the cause of his experience were to the truth is not known. He certainly never knew who had been his chauffeur in his ineffectual effort to reach the railway station. He took the next through train southward, but somehow he had a feeling that the delay he had been subjected to would be fatal to his buying the Furtado oil lands.

Meanwhile Cuthbert Harrington, dressed in somewhat shabby traveling clothes and a felt hat pulled down over his eyes, was driven to the station, where he entered a private compartment in a sleeping car. He reached his destination without having been recognized, and the morning after the funeral of Manuel Furtado appeared at the home of the deceased man's oldest son, and after an effort that lasted ten hours succeeded in getting the property at a price the heirs never had dreamed of. The papers were signed sealed and delivered at 10 o'clock that night, when Mr. Harrington went to bed to sleep the sleep, if not of the just, at least of the winner.

The next morning he called on young Furtado to say goodby before going to the station, and while standing in the patio who should come through the large Mexican doorway but Mr. Handiside.

"Good morning, Mr. Handiside," said the American magnate. "Come to buy the Furtado oil lands? There's the principal heir to the property right there. Mr. Handiside, Senor Furtado."

With this Mr. Harrington took his departure, was driven to the station and returned to New York.

Hugh Erskine was well to do before he demeaned himself to become Mr. Handiside's chauffeur, but this service made him a double millionaire. Mrs. Erskine has since assumed a leadership in New York society. She says she made more by dressing her husband once than she ever made in dressing herself in all her life.

As for the Furtado heirs, though they became rich by the sale of their lands they have been miserable ever since that they did not get more.

TURKS AROUSE GERMANS' FOES

Allies Protest Alleged Purchase of Two German Cruisers

THEY SUBMIT SHARP DEMAND

Immediate Repatriation of Crews of Goeben and Breslau Called For—Said to Have Sought Refuge In Ægean Sea With Complicity of Turkey—Bitter Feeling In Rome

London, Aug. 15.—The allied governments opposed to Germany and Austria-Hungary have agreed to bring Turkey to a realization of its obligations as a neutral power in connection with her purchase from Germany of the cruisers Goeben and Breslau.

Great Britain, France and Russia have sent a sharp demand to Turkey for the immediate repatriation of the officers and crews of the cruisers. It is reported that the two cruisers were met by Turkish vessels outside and escorted into the Dardanelles.

There is no official confirmation of the actual purchase of the cruisers by Turkey, but the report to that effect is generally credited.

The news that Turkey has purchased the German cruisers Goeben and Breslau was discussed with intense interest in political circles in Rome, where it was held that it was fraught with the possibility of grave results.

It was stated in semi-official quarters that the vessels would become a strong weapon in the hands of Turkey if Constantinople abandons its attitude of neutrality. The belief was expressed that the purchase preludes a new position on the part of Turkey and in favor of Germany and Austria-Hungary, which is especially important as bearing on the interests of the Balkan states.

The Rome Tribuna says the preparations made at Messina for "a noble death" by the officers of the German cruisers, who before sailing from that port made their wills, left the public "unprepared for this farce."

"Seeing the impossibility of escape from the Anglo-French fleet if they followed their original idea of molesting the transports moving French-African troops, the German cruisers sought refuge in the Ægean sea, where, with the complicity of Turkey, which continues to make love to Germany, the two vessels contemplated how they might paralyze British commerce in the Mediterranean and interrupt traffic with India," says The Tribuna.

"But, closely pursued, they had no alternative to taking refuge in the Dardanelles and disarming. Instead Turkey purchased them. This is not considered permissible according to the law of nations. Never has a nation at war sold her own ships which already had been used against an enemy. During the Russo-Japanese conflict many Russian ships entered Chinese and American neutral ports, but they were disarmed and there awaited the end of the war."

A dispatch to The Daily News from Rome says:

"Turkey's purchase of the German cruisers Breslau and Goeben has made an unpleasant impression here. Italy probably will demand an explanation as to the future use of these ships and also warn Turkey that she will not allow the equilibrium of the lower Mediterranean to be threatened, as Italy is determined to prevent complications."

A dispatch from Paris says advices received there from the Dardanelles declare that, contrary to the statement of the Turkish government, the German flag has not been lowered on the German cruisers Geoben and Breslau, nor have their crews been landed since their arrival in Turkish waters.

A dispatch from Athens says that King Constantine has called a conference of all former premiers and party leaders to determine the attitude of Greece in the face of Turkey's purchase of the cruisers.

ACTOR SEATON SLAIN

His Wife, a Crack Pistol Shot, Is Charged With Murder

New York, Aug. 15.—Frederick R. Seaton, 35, a vaudeville actor, was shot and instantly killed in his home at Bogota, N. J.

His wife, Mrs. V. C. Seaton, who, according to the police, is a crack pistol shot, was placed in the hospital ward of a jail in Hackensack, charged with murder. She was in a comattise condition and could not answer questions.

One bullet had crashed through Seaton's mouth into his brain, another had penetrated his heart.

BRAINTREE

Rev. R. H. Cochrane, formerly of the Union church spoke Sunday morning in the Congregational church at Marion on the European war. Mr. Cochrane's treatment of the situation showed a close study of the subject. The historical facts and causes which led up to the present situation were clearly presented. It was shown that the underlying motive was hatred.

A pleasant surprise was given Mr. and Mrs. George Nordell of Nelson avenue, Saturday evening. A large delegation from Quincy with numerous friends from town called to congratulate them on the 25th anniversary of their wedding. A purse of silver was presented the couple, one dollar for each year of their married life, as also many other gifts typical of their silver wedding. After a joyous evening the friends departed leaving the couple scarcely recovered from their surprise.

Midshipman Arthur Emerson of Bellevue road, who was expected home this month on his annual furlough, after the Middies Cruise in European waters, is detained at Gibraltar, the U. S. Battleship Maine, aboard which the midshipmen are cruising, having been held there by the Navy department. It is supposed to assist if necessary in returning Americans who are unable to procure steamship passage home, owing to the war.

Postals from the party of young men cruising aboard the motor boat Varuna, tell of the long continued spell of foggy weather, experienced on the main coast. The boys have been fog bound in Portland harbor and immediate vicinity for four or five days. At last accounts they were trying to make Bath, Maine, after which they expect to start the homeward trip.

Alfred Decoste, who has been spending a few weeks with his parents in East Braintree, after an absence of four years, left last Saturday for Washington, D. C. His travels were in Florida, Mississippi, Texas, Colorado, New Mexico and California. He has been a member of the Y. M. C. A., which gave him good associates the use of their gymnasiums and baths, and comes back rigged with good health and with high ideals and lofty ambitions. Alfred spent eight months in a boys' college in California, taking an electrical course, which gave him a position with the Bell Telephone Co. Of late he has been in Mexico, patroling lines in the mountains and expects to return there soon, for he likes the country. He thinks there are great opportunities there for young men. His friends wish him success.

OLD TIMERS TO PLAY.

The sporting feature of the afternoon will be the base ball game at Merrymount Park between the Fore River team of the Manufacturers league and the Old Timers, composed of ball players in the city. The game was arranged by Michael Kiley, one of the best known second basemen in New England. Kiley will play his position and it will probably be his farewell performance on the diamond. His team is known as the Kiley Kolts and will have the services of a pitcher of the Boston Red Sox. Fore River will take the field with its same team, and in anticipation of a solid opposition, they have put in considerable practice this week.

Lieut. Albert M. Jones of the 10th U. S. Infantry who has been stationed at Camp E. S. Otis, in the Canal zone, accompanied by his wife and daughter is in Quincy on a short visit.

REPORTED AT LONDON

Braintree Travellers in Europe Heard From

Several steamships are scheduled to sail from Europe for America next week and it is more than probable that some of the Quincy people now in London will arrive home. From what can be learned Americans are probably in no immediate danger in foreign countries although many are doubtless somewhat tied up for ready cash and are put to some inconveniences.

Miss Mary Brown and Miss Eva Frosted of Atlantic were probably passengers on the steamer Dorchester of the Merchant & Miners line to Baltimore, which Boston papers report was fired upon Thursday afternoon. At the time the ship was sailing without a flag. It was all right when the stars and stripes were hoisted.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Edwards who, with their daughter Dorothy have been in Europe this summer, will be relieved to know that they accomplished safely the return to England and latest advices from them dated August 3rd state that they were located at Paddington, London. After touring through Germany and Austria they traveled to Stockholm Sweden and enjoyed that clean and thrifty city very much. At the Grand Hotel many Americans were guests and all spoke English. They took the train for Stettin and crossed the Baltic sea then took the train to Hamburg where having seen no newspapers of recent date, they first learned of the sad conditions in Germany.

The shipyard owners, where the S. S. Imperator and Vaterland were built, were friends and the son who had formerly been entertained by Mr. Edwards in Pittsburgh, advised them to leave Germany at once while they were having lunch with him at the Hotel Atlantic where many Americans were staying hoping to return home in the S. S. Imperator. She was not allowed to sail. So the entire company came by train to London. They suffered many unpleasant experiences through constant stoppages and much discomfort as it was impossible to obtain refreshment or sleeping accommodations. The train was searched by German officers Soldiers boarded the train at Genappe. Telegrams held up the train at the Dutch frontier.

It was a thankful tired set of travelers who arrived in London. If they had not come that day they would have been obliged to remain on the continent, for all travel has been stopped in France, Germany, Austria and Russia. They are somewhat shaken by their experience but all right and expecting to return to America as soon as possible.

The latest news from Harold M. Gage and family, who went to Europe for a year, reports that they left Paris for London and will sail for home on the first opportunity.

PRIZE DANCE HOUGHS NECK

New Arrivals, Personels and Items of Interest

The weeks social season at Houghs Neck came to a close Friday night with the annual dancing party of the Quincy Athletic Association at the Tellus summer ball room. Over 200 couples from all parts of the city attended. The feature of the evening was the prize dance in which four couples participated. The judges were Elmer Baker, Charles C. McHugh and Matthew Cummings. Their decision in awarding the prize to Miss Ethel VanDerStreet of Brockton and Paul Franzi of this city was unanimous, and met with popular approval. The winning couple's exhibition was the best ever given at the beach. The floor was in charge of William H. Flynn and he was assisted by other members of the club, including Webb and Ray McDonald, Charles C. McHugh, Matthew Cummings.

Daniel Maloney, of Crosby street connected with the Nut Island pumping station is on his annual vacation.

P. A. Collins and family of Boston are summering at the Warren cottage on Crosby street.

Arthur and William Dunham left Thursday for an auto trip to the Cape including an inspection of the canal.

The boat running between Boston and Houghs Neck has had a prosperous summer. Many of the residents have taken advantage of the popular prices. The past three weeks the passenger list has swelled to unusual numbers because the trip provides a fine opportunity to view vessels in the barbor which fly the German flags also the United States craft which is on inspection duty.

Fred Baird of Sea avenue, who was injured in an auto accident at Milton is rapidly recovering from its effects and expects to resume his duties with a Boston firm within a short time.

The Houghs Neck Catholic Lyceum is planning to hold an outing on Bumkin Island next week, and the members are making preparations for the affair. The exact date my be chosen Sunday.

SUCCESSFUL ON LONG WALK

James P. Cahill Makes Trip to Providence

A telegram received from James P. Cahill of Berlin street, Wollaston, who left Thursday morning to walk to Providence, R. I., announces his arrival in that city at 2.30 Friday afternoon having covered the distance from Taunton to Providence in 5.45 minutes.

Mr. Cahill left Wollaston, Thursday, at 7.30, and made severals stops on his way, so that it was 5 o'clock before he arrived in Taunton Thursday night, having covered between 28 and 30 miles. In going from Quincy to Taunton he took the longest route, that is the route through Randolph and Avon. The route from South Braintree through Holbrook would have been several miles shorter

He remained in Taunton Thursday night and started out bright and early Friday morning at 6.45 for Providence arriving at 2.30.

Mr. Cahill is not taking this walking stunt to save money. He is employed in the Old Colony Trust Co. of Boston, and is having his vacation and believed that the walk would not only do him good but give him an opportunity to see the country.

It is not known whether he intends to come home by the same route or not, but if he should decide to walk he would seem more of the country by coming home via Dedham, and the distance is not quite as long as via Taunton.

DEMOCRACY IS QUESTIONED

Object to Charles W. Guy as a Candidate

Leo P. Noonan created a sensation at the meeting of the Democratic City Committee in Wilson hall last evening when he challenged the Democracy of Councillor Charles W. Guy who is a candidate for re-election.

Mr. Noonan said he did not see the necessity of a man trying to secure the nomination of parties other than the one he represented, and objected to Councillor Guy filing papers for such nominations.

David Roche, who for several years has been the campaign manager of Councillor Guy came to his defense and stated that Mr. Guy was an old man and had been a Democrat for many years. He read the copy of a letter written by Gov. David I Walsh to Councillor Guy endorsing his Democracy, and Mr. Noonan, it is said questioned the authority of the Governor to issue such a document.

The discussion lasted quite a while and was the only exciting incident at the meeting which was called to examine nomination papers to be filed today. The only office to which no candidate from this city aspires is county treasurer.

NOMINATION PAPERS.

Tonight at 5 o'clock is the last hour for filing nomination papers of candidates for officers to be voted for at the State primaries, and in order to accommodate citizens the City Clerk will keep his office open to receive nomination papers until 5 o'clock. These papers will be certified later by the Registrars of Voters and will be ready for delivery to the persons who filed them Monday morning. They must reach the office of the Secretary of State before 5 o'clock Tuesday in order to have the names appear on the ballot.

TWO RACES TODAY FOR QUINCY CUP

Nine Yachts Are Entered, the Largest Number Since the Trophy Was Offered in 1898

Quincy Yacht Club However Is Not Represented

Never since the Quincy Yacht Club challenge cup has been in existence, and that is since 1898, has there been as many challengers for the trophy as this year, and this year is the first in the sixteen years that the Quincy club was not a challenger or defender of the cup. In all nine clubs this year have challenged for the cup and the races begin today. There will be two races each day the morning race starting at 10 o'clock and the afternoon race at 2 o'clock. The first race will be over a windward and leeward course, and the second over a triangular course, and the time limit will be three hours.

After four races, only yachts that have won a race will be allowed to compete, and after six races only those yachts that have won two races will be allowed to compete. A yacht to win the cup for its club must win three races.

Previous to 1906, the first year of the International sonder class boats, the matches for the trophy were between yachts who were restricted to 21 feet on the water line. After the first year the extreme type of boat came into existence until in 1901 the yachts were little more than scim dishes and of no earthly use other than to race for this trophy. This rather discouraged racing men, and for five years the cup remained in the keeping of the Manchester club. Then the deed of trust was changed so as to allow sonder class boats to participate and there has been a race every year since that time.

The first year after the change, the cup went to the Corinthian club. Since then the Corinthian club has held it one year, the Quincy club three years and the Boston club three years.

In the races this year the Boston club will depend on the Ellen to defend the cup. The yachts that will represent the challengers are:

Eastern club, H. M. Sears, Mingo.

Manchester club, Guy Lowell, Cima.

South Boston club, George E. Carroll, Chance.

Columbia club, Chester Payne, Caramba.

Mosquito Fleet club, W. D. Lane, Harpoon.

Savin Hill club, Gordon Munroe, Sally XI.

Cohasset club, D. K. Jones, Robin.

Corinthian club, A. F. Breed, Huskie.

It will be seen by the above list that while the Quincy club is not officially represented in the races, that the Marnoon, built and sailed by C. F. Adams, 2d, in the last few years races is out for the trophy now being enrolled in the Mosquito Fleet club.

POPULAR AT ATLANTIC.

The amount of deposits in the Postal Savings system at the Atlantic post office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914 was $1,732 by 50 depositors, which was an increase of $506.00 and 21 depositors for the year. This savings system should prove a great advantage to the residents of Atlantic where there is no bank. Accounts can be opened for $1.00 with interest at two per cent per annum and can be withdrawn at any time. The postal savings service is open from 8 A. M. to 8 P. M.

THREE REPUBLICAN CANDIDATES FOR REPRESENTATIVE

Ericson, Gelotte and Whitman Anxious to Run Against Michael T. Sullivan in Fifth Norfolk District

REPRESENTATIVE SANDBERG.

SENATOR LANGELIER.

REPRESENTATIVE SULLIVAN

The nomination papers filed with the City Clerk Saturday indicate that there are to be some interesting contests locally. For instance in the Congressional district there are candidates from Quincy, Brockton and Boston. In the fifth representative district among the Republicans seeking the nomination are A. L. Whitman, Otto Gelotte and Charles A. Ericson, while among the Democrats Michael T. Sullivan will have no opposition.

In the sixth district, Representative Sandberg will have no opposition for seeking office. For instance Charles W. Guy has filed Democratic and Progressive papers. Thomas J Halpin has filed Democratic papers, Frederick H. Bishop has filed Progressive papers, and Guy Adams Ham has filed Republican and Progressive papers.

CHARLES A. ERICSON,

DANIEL F. CORCORAN

No one has filed papers in Quincy in opposition to Hon. John F. Merrill for County Commissioner.

For state officers on the head of the ticket, papers have been filed for all candidates of the three parties.

The papers filed for offices in which Quincy is directly interested were as follows:

CONGRESSIONAL.

Frank Fessenden Crane, Quincy, Republican.

Edward C. Reed, Quincy, Progressive.

Henry C. Howard, Brockton, Republican.

Richard Olney, 2d, Democratic.

SENATOR, FIRST NORFOLK

Louis F. R. Langelier, Quincy, Republican.

Charles W. Proctor, Randolph, Democratic.

COUNCILLOR.

Charles W. Guy, Quincy, Democratic, Progressive.

Guy Adams Ham, Republican, Progressive.

Frederick H. Bishop, Quincy, Progressive.

Thomas J. Halpin, Boston, Democratic.

COUNTY COMMISSIONER.

John F. Merrill, Quincy, Republican.

REPRESENTATIVE, 5TH DISTRICT.

Otto Gelotte, Republican.

Charles A. Ericson, Republican.

Albert L. Whitman, Republican.

Michael T. Sullivan, Democratic.

REPRESENTATIVE, 6TH DISTRICT.

Edward J. Sandberg, Republican.

Daniel F. Corcoran, Democratic.

Herbert O. Cassidy, Progressive.

the Republican nomination, but Democratic papers have been filed by Daniel F. Corcoran, and Progressive papers by Herbert O. Cassidy and there promises to be a warm contest at the election.

Senator Langelier will have no opposition locally at the caucuses, but as papers have been filed for C. W. Proctor of Randolph as a Democratic candidate, he will have opposition at the election.

For Councillor there are a number

DROWNING IN OLD QUARRY

Albert Vanner Plunged in For a Swim

Albert Vanner, 25 years, living at 23 Water street, lost his life in the abandoned Wilson quarry, off Centre street, Sunday afternoon, while in swimming.

Vanner asked a friend to accompany him and when he declined he plunged over himself. He was seen swimming by boys; later his clothing was found on the banking but no trace of Vanner.

They conducted a search and decided he had been drowned. The police were notified and they grappled the waters until dark for the body but without success.

Vanner is well known in South Quincy where he has lived since boyhood. Several years ago he married Annie Hannon of Hillside street. He is survived by his wife and two children.

A few months ago his brother Fred Vanner fell from the peak of the Nevada which is being built at the Fore River shipyard and was instantly killed.

The body was recovered this morning by Ralph Burrell, a son of Chief Burrell who sent his son to the quarry early this morning, and after being out an hour or more dragging succeeded in bringing the body to the surface. It was given in charge of an undertaker.

George H. Dunham, the longest employed conductor of the Bay State street railway in Quincy, rounded out 26 years of faithful service Aug. 13. He now wears five stripes and is proud of them, as well he may be, for he never has had a serious accident on his car.

Italians of City Began Yesterday the Celebration of Feast of St. Rocco

Parade With Out-of-Town Societies Participating

City Square had the appearance of a Roman holiday Sunday afternoon, when several hundred Italians emerged from Johnson building, all wearing either military uniforms or sashes with the national colors across their shoulders, and formed a parade which passed through the principal streets of the city on which Italians reside.

The parade was held in connection with the first days celebration of the feast of their patron, St. Rocco della Croce, and although not as large as last years was a better demonstration of the patriotism rampant in the breasts of the over-sea Latins.

The affair, given under the auspices of the Quincy society of St. Rocco commenced with sunrise and a band later marched from South Quincy to the hall where headquarters were formally opened. Later visitors from out of town were met by the reception committee and entertained until the parade formed.

The band arrived in the morning while services were being held in City Square churches and at the request of patrolman James Murray they ceased playing because they created some disturbance.

In the afternoon the parade formed with Vito Tenori, Anton Spadocci, Frank Cappucchie and Orlando Pace at the head of the line. Following them was the Quincy Italian band of 35 pieces and four divisions in which the flags of their native and adopted country were conspicuous.

In the first division were three members of the Societie de Garabaldi, dressed in cerise shirts with green braid, blue trousers and wearing blue caps.

In the second division were members of the heavy artillery brigade of Boston, and the fourth division had the light infantry connected with them.

The artillery of the Sons of Italy of Brockton comprised the third division and were headed by Antony Fabrizzio, who was decorated with a medal of honor by King Umberto for bravery on the field of battle in the African campaign in 1895-96.

The fifth division included the members of the Society of St. Rocco of this city, with President Pasquale.

A large committee arranged the Sunday observance, and tonight they will direct a fireworks display and band concerts in Merrymount Park. The committee is Vito Tenori, Leonardo Nini, Joseph Tomasi, Lewis De Eranio, Francesco Capucchi, Salvatore Barba, Gusippe Picanco, Antonio Spadiccio, Jacketti Rocci.

EFFECTIVE ADVERTISEMENTS.

The supposed difficulty in writing skillful advertising, in the case of some merchants, is a bugbear in the way of publicity work. It occasionally happens that merchants never advertise because they feel that they have too little time, or too little brains, to write advertising that shall have selling power.

Yet a well written advertisement is not a matter of smart sentences, humorous conceits, or literary gifts. It is simply the art of talking direct about your goods and their prices, as a merchant would talk to a man over the counter. Any one who is able to conduct a store can do it.

The force of these statements was finely illustrated in an actual experience that came to the ears of the writer a short time ago. One of his friends is a business man who had had some success in advertising and selling a proposition of his own invention. He had no special gifts or tricks of expression. Yet he succeeded in selling his goods.

Feeling perhaps that a trained advertisement writer could do still better, he sought out a competent and highly trained man in that line in the nearest large city, talked over his proposition, and showed him files of his previous publicity work. The professional writer took the material and put quite a lot of work into producing a form letter. It had all the ear marks of professional ad-writing work. It was smooth, personal, intimate, and clever.

The work was accepted and sent out to the mailing list. The promoter of the proposition liked the letter so much that he expected double returns. But to his surprise, the returns were only about a third as large as those he had previously secured from his own simple off hand tale, told in a conversational way, as he would talk to the man across the counter. The incident teaches its own lesson to all who are seeking publicity for their goods.

ALLIES ARE SURPRISED BY GERMANS

Cavalry and Infantry Rally and Repulse Attack at Dinant

INVADERS AND THEIR HORSES MOWED DOWN

Hundreds of Animals Captured by French and Belgians to Be Used as Remounts—Serious Clash Considered Unimportant In Comparison With Great Battle Which Is Almost Due—Brussels Thinks Danger of German Attack Has Passed—Movement of French Into German Territory Grows More Important—Bitter Fighting at Close Quarters

London, Aug. 17.—At last the allied armies have come into contact with the advancing army of the Meuse and at Dinant the French and Belgians drove back a division of German cavalry which was supported by several battalions of infantry.

The great battle has not yet begun, but the renewed presence of German infantry close behind the cavalry screen indicates that the tremendous lines of hostile armies are now less than five miles apart.

The German movements are proving perplexing, and London was wholly unprepared for the attack upon Dinant. Everyone was expecting to hear that the Germans were sweeping toward the north, but the sudden appearance of the invaders at Dinant, south of Namur and less than ten miles from the boundary between France and Belgium, makes it seem possible that the tremendous cavalry movements north of Liege may have been intended merely to mask a battering at the gates of France in the south of Belgium and from Luxemburg.

Allies Taken by Surprise

The German assault at Dinant apparently surprised the allies, for the official messages from Paris admitted that in the first onset, the French fell back before the thundering German cavalry.

The cavalry, besides being supported by infantry, were armed with several quick-firing guns, and at first these swept everything before them.

Then the allies rallied, artillery mowed down men and horses, and while the Germans were wavering, a French detachment of cavalry drove down upon them, scattering the Germans in precipitate flight. The infantry behind did not attempt to hold their ground for long, but retreated northeastward.

Hundreds of horses are reported to have been captured by the allies. The animals were sent to the rear to be used as remounts by the successful cavalry. Throughout the fight, which lasted but a short time, the French and Belgians fought like brothers, the Belgians cheering frantically as their allies dashed into the fight and the French shouting as wildly at every heroic deed of a Belgian soldier.

Losses Are Important

The capture of so many horses, if it proves true, may prove more important than it would appear, as rumors are coming out of Brussels that the Germans are suffering greatly from lack of horses.

The unexpected resistance of the Belgians has resulted in the loss of hundreds of mounts and the Belgians say the losses are not being made up by arrivals of fresh animals from Germany.

A sudden and unexplainable lull has succeeded to the constant fighting of the last few days in northern Belgium. Nowhere about the towns where engagements have been occurring recently is there any sign of a large German army. No hostile movements were directed against Diest or Haelen, and a hasty conclusion would be that the German advance has been momentarily checked.

The clash at Dinant was unimportant from the point of view of the great battle that must soon be fought. Apparently the invaders were merely trying out, as they have so persistently for the last few days, the strength of the hostile army. They retreated as soon as they found out what they wanted to know.

Brussels Feels Safe

Brussels messages report that the Belgian capital is breathing much easier, believing that the danger of a German attack has now passed. The impression continues to gain ground that all the elaborate movements of German cavalry apparently directed against Brussels have been feints to mask the attack upon France along the Meuse and through Luxemburg.

The attack upon Dinant proves that the French have come in great force to aid their Belgian allies. The main strength is presumably at Namur and, as the French at Dinant were apparently as numerous as the Belgians, the Germans cannot expect to prove numerically stronger than the allies gathered in Belgium. No mention of British troops was made in the dispatches, which tends to bear out the previous conjectures that they have been stationed at Namur.

Fragmentary messages from the Alsace-Lorraine boundary indicate that the French are pushing forward into German territory. Each day that the German advance into France is postponed, this movement of the French into Germany grows more important.

It cannot be regarded as a mere feint, for the desire of General Joffre to take the offensive rather than to rest on the defensive is something that has been known to military experts for years.

French Still Hold Passes

Dispatches from Paris state that the French are now in position to march immediately against the Germans at Mulhausen and Colmar. It is not expected they will meet much resistance in either of these cities, but they will encounter vigorous opposition at Neu Breisach. The Germans made no attempts to retake any of the Vosges mountain passes which the French have seized.

Further north, in Lorraine, the French are still advancing against Sarrebourg, but they are not yet reported as in direct contact with the enemy there.

Further details came of the fighting on Friday and Saturday at Blamont and Cirey-sur-Vesouze. Each message seems to show that the forces engaged in these towns were greater than in almost any encounter of the war except at Liege

The fighting at both the towns was so bitter and at such close quarters that bayonets were the principal weapons. Artillery duels preceded the French charges. More strategy was shown in the later battling after the Germans, driven from the towns, had seized commanding heights to the north. They were dislodged by a double flanking movement that threatened to annihilate them by simultaneous assaults from the flank and rear. The French maneuver was detected, however, in time for the Germans to retreat safely toward Sarrebourg.

VON EMMICK IS DEAD

Leader of German Forces at Liege Had Received a Rebuke

A Brussels dispatch says the death of Lieutenant General Otto Von Emmich, commander of the German army at Liege, has been confirmed.

First reports of the death of Von Emmich were in the form of rumors, with no details whatever. Later a report was received from Belgian sources to the effect that the kaiser's commander had committed suicide because of a rebuke from the German war office for the manner in which he had directed the attack on Liege, with its disastrous results to the German forces.

Now comes the confirmation of the death of Von Emmich, but with no further information.

TURKEY IS DEFIANT

Ingignant Over Seizure of Her Warships by Great Britain

That the Turkish government will refuse to pay any heed to the wishes of Great Britain and her allies in the matter of yielding up the two German warships which were reported to have taken refuge in the Dardanelles, and that any demands on the part of Great Britain may bring upon the allies a declaration of war from Turkey, was the intimation in a statement made by the Turkish ambassador at Washington, A. Rustem Bey.

The ambassador declared that "Great Britain has outraged not only Turkish sentiment, but that of the whole Islamic world" by her seizure of two Turkish dreadnoughts in English shipyards, and thereby has forfeited any appeal to international law in the matter of the German ships.

"DAWN OF NEW LIFE"

Russia Asks For Loyalty of Poles and Promises Autonomy

A dispatch from St. Petersburg says Grand Duke Nicholas, commander-in-chief of the Russian army, has addressed a manifesto to Poland, appealing for the loyalty of the Poles and promising them autonomy in return. The manifesto concludes:

"Russia expects from you only the loyalty to which history has bound you. The dawn of a new life commences for you. In this glorious dawn is seen the sign of the cross—the symbol of suffering and the resurrection of a people."

THE POPE'S EXHORTATION

Prayers For Peace Should Ascend From Cahtolics of World

Following is the text of the pope's exhortation to the Catholics of the whole world to unite in prayers for peace, as cabled by the Rome correspondent of the Catholic Press association:

"While nearly all Europe is being drawn into the vortex of a disastrous war, and all who consider the dangers and horrors of its consequences must be overcome with grief and terror, we also must be deeply affected.

"Our soul is torn with the bitterest grief for the safety of the lives of so many of our beloved children. We feel and know that this terrible and universal trouble demands of our paternal love and apostolic ministry that we cause men's minds to be lifted to Him from Whom alone help can come—Christ, the Prince of Peace, the Potent Mediator before God and mankind.

"Wherefore we exhort the Catholics of the entire world to hasten to His throne of grace and pity and, first, as an example we order all clergy, under the direction of their bishops, to offer public prayer in their respective parishes that God may take pity and remove as soon as possible the fearful torch of war and mercifully inspire the rulers of the earth with thoughts, not of affliction, but of peace."

BOSTON CARGO SEIZED

British Get Freighter From Calcutta Worth Over a Million

The Hansa line steamship Schneefels, bound from Calcutta and Colombo for Boston with a cargo of tea, gunnies and other merchandise valued at more than $1,000,000, has been siezed by the British at Gibraltar.

The Schneefels, a brand new freighter, on her first trip across the Atlantic, left Calcutta July 3, and Colombo July 13, for Boston. She was captured by the British war vessels Aug. 6.

The steamer and her cargo constitute one of the most valuable prizes yet taken by the British. The underwriters will be hit hard by the seizure of the freighter.

CRAZED BY REPRIMAND

Negro Kills Four Persons and Fatally Injures Three Others

Spring Green, Wis., Aug. 17.—A mad negro, armed with an axe, ended the romance of Mrs. M. B. Borthwick, formerly Mrs. E. H. Cheney, and Frank L. Wright, wealthy Chicago architect, with whom she has lived as a wife since 1911.

Setting fire to the elaborate bungalow built by Wright for Mrs. Borthwick, after his estrangement from his wife, the negro stood outside and attempted to brain Mrs. Borthwick and eight occupants of the building, members of the family and employes, as they fled from the flames.

He succeeded in killing her and three others, probably fatally injuring three, and seriously wounding the remainder.

Mrs. Borthwick is said to have reprimanded the man, Julian Carlton, chef of her kitchen. He brooded over this, it is thought, and became insane.

The dead are: Mrs. Borthwick; John B. Cheney, her 13-year-old son; Emil Burdell, aged 30, and Martha B. Cheney, Mrs. Borthwick's 10-year-old daughter. Carlton is under arrest.

OPEN TO SHIPPING

Ancon First to Make Commercial Passage Through Panama Canal

Panama, Aug. 17.—The Panama canal is open to the commerce of the world. Henceforth ships may pass through that great waterway, a new ocean highway for trade thus being established.

The steamship Ancon, owned by the United States war department, with many notable people on board, made the official passage which signalized the opening. She navigated the waterway in nine hours.

The Ancon will discharge her cargo at Balboa, this being the first commercial voyage made through the canal.

TAX RATES FOR YEAR 1914

Highest Figures in History of Several Cities

The tax rate of the town of Scituate for 1914, as announced Saturday, will be $18.50 per $1,000, an increase of $1.50 over the rate of 1913. The valuation of the town was reported at $5,696,535, an increase of $150,330 over 1913. The increase in tax rate is attributed to increases in the running expenses of the town.

The rate in Lincoln also shows an increase from $11 to $12.

The tax rates reported to date are as follows, over one half being larger than in 1913:

CITY COUNCIL TONIGHT.

It is somewhat doubtful if all of the 23 members of the City Council respond to their names at roll call at the special Council meeting this evening, as it is more than probable that some of the members are out of town. There is but little doubt however but what there will be a quorum. There is considerable business to come up before the meeting as will be noticed by the call published in the Daily Ledger.

Another special meeting will be necessary for the following Monday, Aug. 24, as jurors must be drawn and action taken on the list of election officers which must under the law be appointed in August.

SQUANTUM BY-THE-SEA

Mr. and Mrs. John Jepson Give an At-Home

Mr. and Mrs. John Jepson had an "open house" Saturday evening at their attractive bungalow on Bayside road about one hundred and fifty guests were present. The house and grounds were effectively decorated with gay colored lanterns and cut flowers. Dancing was enjoyed in the large living room music being furnished by the postal clerks, and an entertainment consisting of solos by Mrs. Louise Osborne Holt and Mr. Gardner was well received. Refreshments were served. It was a late hour before the guests said their adieux. All agreed that the host and hostess were so hospitable that one simply couldn't help but have a good time. Mr. and Mrs. Jepson were assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Chester Young and John Jepson, Jr.

NEWS ITEMS FROM MILTON

The Milton Boat club will observe its ladies' day on Aug. 30. The ladies will have full charge of the day's program, with the exception of the handling of the boats.

According to the report of the selectmen, Milton has expended but four of the appropriations made at the annual March meeting, and there are substantial balances in all of the other appropriations, some of which have not been drawn upon as yet.

Harvey Holt of Wollaston is building a house on Eaton street, East Milton.

East Milton people who have been away for the summer have begun to arrive home and another week will see the most of them returned.

Mrs. Patrick Fanning and son of State street, East Milton are at Orona, Maine.

The children of the school gardens at East Milton have organized clubs and elected officers. The gardens are being conducted by the Milton Educational society.

It is reported that good progress has been made by the State Board of Health in reclaiming the meadow along the Neponset river for which the state appropriated $190,000. The work is now reported to be 81 percent. completed and the amount expended has been $148,000.

THE BUGGY WAS OVERLOADED

An old democrat buggy, overloaded with intoxicating liquor, broke down on Hancock street Saturday night, and was taken to the Hall stable. The shipment included five sealed jugs of whiskey, about 100 quart bottles of ale, and a gallon of liquor in packages. The liquor was seized by the police and is now in their possession. The name of the owner of the team and liquor is not known.

The police boat Guardian was in the lower harbor all day Sunday holding up motor boats who were violating the muffler law, and also to examine the skippers to see if they were supplied with a proper license. It is reported that several of the owners of motor boats of the Wollaston club will be summoned into court for violation of the muffler law.

MR. PENNIMAN'S EXPERIENCE

Would Not Go to Europe Alone Again

Miss Mary Elcock of this city reached her home Sunday evening after an eventful trip on the White Star liner Canopic which docked at the Commonwealth pier Sunday. Miss Elcock is enjoying the best of health and had an exciting experience.

When Austria declared war on Servia Miss Elcock was in Switzerland and on her way through Italy saw hundreds of Servians returning to their country to fight.

The Canopic sailed from Genoa on Aug. 1, and several days later put in at Naples. During the stay of three days there was much uncertainty as to whether the voyage could be continued but finally the ship weighed anchor.

The trip across the Atlantic, fraught with possibilities, was made without mishap. The run was made under cover of darkness, the port holes being covered with canvas and on lights were carried.

Miss Elcock was high in her praise of the officers of the ship, their assurances relieving the anxiety of the passengers who always felt the unexpected would happen.

ENGINEER EDWARDS.

A letter from the family of Charles B. Edwards, formerly chief engineer of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation announces their safe arrival in London after disagreeable trip from Germany. They went from Sweden to Hamburg, where they first learned of the war situation. They had intended to embark on the Imperator, but the sailing was canceled.

The owner of the yards where the Imperator and the Vaterland were built, the Vulcan Iron Works, was no stranger to Mr. Edwards. A son of the owner, who had been entertained in this country by Mr. Edwards, gave him and his family a luncheon at the Hotel Atlantic, and then courteously advised them to leave Germany with all possible haste if they wanted to get back home.

The party went by train to Holland, it was impossible to secure sleeping accommodations or refreshments and the train was frequently stopped by German soldiers. The journey was a long and uncomfortable one, but ended safely with the Edwards family in London. They intend to start for America as soon as possible.

James H. Penniman of Quincy, who is making his home in Boston this winter, arrived back from Europe a week ago on the Mauritania, which landed in Halifax, as announced at that time in the Daily Ledger. Mr. Penniman was in town Saturday, and in speaking of his trip said that he was in Edinborough when war was declared by Austria Hungary and immediately it flashed upon him that home was the best place for him.

He had intended to remain abroad two weeks longer and was planning to visit Paris, but he cut this short. He was booked to return on the Carmania on which steamship he had secured a large stateroom all to himself. He made application to return on the Mauritania, but was informed that there was no accommodation. When it was learned however that he had a full stateroom on the Carmania the officials evidently seeing an opportunity to realize a premium on his stateroom, said after a little hesitation that they could give him an upper berth. The lower berth he learned was to be occupied by a Scotchman so that he readily made the exchange and left for home on Saturday, Aug. 1.

At that time war had not been declared by England, and the first two days out everything went smoothly. When he went to buy the ship's paper Wednesday morning he was informed that no charge would be made for the paper that morning as there was nothing in it. It was then for the first time that he learned that England had declared war and that the wireless office was closed to all communication.

Almost immediately the ship began to make great speed and she flew through the water at a thirty knot gait. "I never believed that a vessel could go through the water as fast as she did." Blankets were hung over the windows and portholes, and we ran along at top speed without even the red and green lights showing. The blanketing of the stateroom windows and port holes made it rather stuffy inside, and there was but little air. From that time on we hit it up at top speed. The heavy fog did not make any difference for we shot through that at the same speed which naturally made some of the passengers nervous. However I do not believe there was a war ship within five hundred miles of us. Fortunately we did not hit anything.

We all supposed that we would land in New York, the port we sailed for, but one morning we were informed that in a few hours we would land at Halifax. It was some time after landing before we were allowed to go ashore and there seemed no provision to get the passengers to Boston, or New York. Finally we were told that we could go ashore, and were given a red ticket, at the same time being informed if we went ashore that we gave up any claim we might have against the steamship company. Not knowing how soon we would be able to get on to Boston and being anxious to once more set my feet on American soil, I went ashore and secured accommodations at a hotel for the night.

There are but two trains a day out of Halifax, which is a single track road, one in the morning and one at night. The next morning quite a party of us took the train for Boston, and believe me I felt good when we crossed over the line at Vanceborough and a United States custom officer came through the train. As he approached me, I could not help shouting, "You look good to me."

Speaking of the trip over, Mr. Penniman said that he did not know a single person on board and there was not one of them that he ever saw before. He had letters of credit while abroad but was getting rather shy of ready cash when he arrived in Halifax. When he went to purchase his ticket for Boston he offered the ticket agent an English sovereign and although it was gold the agent did not want to take it, asking if he did not have any United States money. "Yes I have, and I am going to keep it" replied Mr. Penniman, and as the agent could not refuse English money he got his ticket.

He further said that he did not believe there was any danger of being captured at any time and that the reason that precautions were taken was because the government ordered it done. While nominally owned by the Cunard Steamship Co., the steamship really belonged to the English government, and the reason she was sent to Halifax was because she was wanted for a transport ship, and the discommoding of a few hundred travellers did not concern the English government any.

Mr. Penniman said that he had a good trip but was rather lonesome at times, and that he would never think of taking a similar trip again unless he had company with him.

EARLY VISITING CARDS.

Those Used In Italy Were Elaborate Works of Art.

Some authorities hold that the origin of the visiting card lay in the circumstance that when Pericles first laid siege to the heart of Aspasia he sent her a bouquet to which, fearful lest she might not guess from whom the compliment proceeded, he caused to be attached a strip of wood wherein his name was cut.

According to Bertarelli, who, among others, has been at much pains to compile the history of the card, it is difficult to say whether it was first used in Greece or in China. However that may be, it seems to be an ascertained fact that the visiting card did not really obtain to any extent in Europe until the time of Louis XIV. It crossed the Pyrenees with Philip of Anjou when he was installed in the palace at Madrid, and Louis himself was the cause of its being introduced into the Netherlands.

Then it was adopted in Italy, where it was subjected to much elaboration. First, the cards showed a modest border of flowers or leaves; then appeared landscapes, bits of architecture, allegories, etc. Finally came scenes of rural life, alternating with views of monuments and towns. The name was printed on the picture of a wall, a tree or a fountain.

A view of the Adriatic figured on the card of Count Alexandre Papoli, while the Franco family favored a large stone guarded by two dogs, with the amphitheater of Verona in the background.—Baltimore News.

ITS PRODUCT TOO GOOD.

A Wonderful Oil Well That Was Found In the Balkans.

In Mr. Caton Woodville's "Random Recollections" is the story of a rich oil well that was discovered in the Balkans.

On one of his journeys he was shown a deep hole, sunk most probably by the ancient inhabitants of the country for mining purposes, but which he was assured was a petroleum well. Afterward Mr. Woodville heard the full story of this well.

A petroleum "find" was reported from the district, and an expert from Baku, in the Caucasus, the great petroleum district, was sent to the Balkans by a syndicate to inquire into this valuable discovery. He was taken by eager natives to this hole, and a bucket was dropped down at the end of a long rope and drawn up again, brimful of oil.

The expert examined the contents of the bucket, tested it carefully, and then, turning to the assembled natives, he exclaimed: "This is the most wonderful oil well in the world. The petroleum is already refined."

The explanation was, of course, that some enterprising person, not knowing that petroleum comes from the oil wells in a crude state, had carefully placed some ordinary commercial petroleum in the well in the hope that the expert would think there really was an oil well there and offer a big price for the property.

First Feminist Party.

The earliest deputation of women to parliament was organized close on 2,000 years ago. Under the triumvirate of Augustus, Antony and Lepidus it was proposed to tax the property of 1,400 wealthy Roman matrons in order to meet part of the expenses of the civil war then raging. They refused to submit to this imposition and sent Hortensia, one of their number, to plead against it before the senate. In the course of her speech she asked, "Why should we be compelled to pay for a war into which we had no wish to embark or for the support of a government whose policy we have no means of controlling?" This argument proved so effective that the tax on women was reduced to one-third of the amount originally proposed.—London Tatler

Lakes of Massachusetts.

Like other glacier roughened areas, Massachusetts, though not specially distinguished as a lake region, is liberally supplied with inland bodies of water. A recent survey showed 1,115 lakes and ponds exceeding ten acres in extent, the total area covered being nearly 100,000 acres. The largest is Assawompsett pond of 2,121 acres in Lakeville, and the one having the longest name is Chaubunagungamaug of 1,188 acres in Webster. Only one is in Nantucket county, while Worcester county has 298.—New Orleans Times-Picayune.

Star Dust.

A constant rain of meteor, star and comet dust is pouring upon this world of ours But you should not jump to the conclusion that the earth is perceptibly "growing" on account of the influx of dust from without. It does grow a very little in that way, but it has been calculated that it would take a thousand million years to accumulate a layer one inch thick.—New York Journal.

Reverse Side.

"Have you managed to get a new cook yet?"

"Not quite."

"What do you mean by that?"

"The last one we applied to wants references from the cook who just left us."—Baltimore American.

Better Toll Rates

New telephone toll regulations provide that unless you talk to the person asked for there will be NO CHARGE FOR THE TOLL CALL.

Formerly a reduced rate was charged when the number called was reached even though the person asked for was absent or not ready to talk.

N. B. The above does not apply to two-number toll points to which calls for designated persons are not accepted.

Why not make a call now to some one who would like to hear from you today? No talk---no charge.

Wouldn't it be worth the price?

If you don't know the rate, ask the Toll Operator. No charge for a call for rates. If you want the Toll Operator to report to you the actual cost of a completed call, please notify her when you give the order for the call.

A toll call is more satisfactory than a letter or a telegram, and in some instances is more economical, because you get the message and the answer for one price.

OVERTURNED OIL STOVE

Set Fire This Morning to Cottage on Warwick Street

The contents of an overturned oil stove exploded and set fire to the cottage occupied by Edgar Hall on Warwick street this morning, and for a few minutes the lives of his wife, baby and two older children were imperilled.

Mrs. Hall was bathing her baby when the explosion occurred. Blinded by the smoke which rapidly filled the rooms she got her three children and herself to safety.

The house was a mass of flames when the department arrived. They laid two streams and extinguished the fire. The damage is estimated at about $250.

Edmund Hayden, a call fireman, operating a Ford machine, in driving through the crowd near the fire, knocked down George Dolan, aged 14 years, of Oak street.

Dolan was taken to the Atlantic office of Dr. J. T. Reynolds and later removed to his home. Dr. Reynolds says there is every indication his left leg is broken.

Several police officers were present when the accident occurred. Capt. Daniel R. Mackay who made an investigation said as far as he can learn Hayden neglected to blow his horn, but Hayden says he did and that he was exercising due care. With him at the time was Capt. Rhodes of the Wollaston company. They stopped immediately and saw that the boy received attention.

Mrs. J. E. Dozier and Miss Dozier of Lynn, formerly of Quincy, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Penniman.

Dr. Edwin E. Davis will be at his office 34 Chestnut street, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays as usual from 8 a. m. to 5 p. m. and evenings by appointment. 16-tf

W. Y. C. PICNIC AND LADIES DAY

Large Party Enjoy Sail to Weymouth Back River

The annual picnic of the Wollaston Yacht club was held Sunday and included a run from the clubhouse to Weymouth Back river. It was made a ladies day as well, and the party numbered about 200 yachtsmen and ladies, who landed from a fleet of forty sail and power boats. The committee in charge included C. A. Franklin, Thomas Raiche and Fred Bustler.

Each yacht carried along baskets of eatables and an enjoyable day was the result. In the party, which was headed by Commodore Frank A. Taylor, were ex-Commodores Frank E. Dawes, William M. Chase, Edward A. Bean and J. A. Fenno, and most of the Wollaston yachtsmen.

MARRIED AT MAINE CAMP

Quincy Young People Surprise Their Friends

A Boston paper prints the following telegram from New Meadows, Maine, under date of Aug. 15: William Rentz and Miss Florence S. McLean, both of Quincy, Mass., were married here today at Camp Ahwahnee, the Summer home of the groom. Rev. R. J. Davis of Yarmouth, formerly of Quincy, officiated, and there was a large attendance of Summer people.

James Guthrie of Quincy was best man, and the bride's sister, Miss Mary McLean, was bridesmaid, Irene Roseberg of Lisbon Falls was flower girl.

After the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served. Mr. and Mrs. Rentz left for a trip to New York, after which they will return to their camp to remain until Fall. Mr. Rentz is a marine draftsman.

SPORTS AT PLAYGROUNDS

This the Last Week of the Athletic Contests

The three playgrounds of the city totaled 3338 for their attendance last week with Ward Three as usual in the lead. The South Quincy youngsters came out to enjoy the apparatus, etc, to the number of 793 boys and 775 girls. The Quincy Point grounds had a total of 1025 while Wollaston brought up the rear with 775.

Tomorrow will see the close of the regular weekly athletic sports at Ward Three when the running broad jump and the three-legged race will be on the program for the boys and the three-legged race for the girls. The other event for the girls is to be selected.

The same events will be contested at Ward Two on Wednesday afternoon

TROPHY FOR DORCHEN.

Lack of wind prevented all but the larger boats finishing within the time limit of three hours at the annual open race of the Boston Yacht club off Hull on Saturday. There were 83 yachts to start but the only boats to finish were those of class P, the Bar Harbor 31-footers, and the Boston Yacht club first rating class. In the evening the club gave a dinner to the winners of the club championships of the special trophies and summer series, which included the Dorchen II, of A. W. Finlay.

WEYMOUTH TROT.

There was some exceptionally good trotting Saturday at the matinee meet of the Old Colony Gentlemen's Driving club at South Weymouth park. The winners in the several events were: Class A, Benjamin; class B, Kaldar; class D, The Guy; class E, Capt. Murphy; class F, Miss Vassar; class G, Higgins; class H, Teddy Muscovite; class I, Diamond Dick; class J, Nellie Herr; class K, Sampson Maid; class L, Patriot; class M, Red Bord.

From Both Sides.

Steamers plying between England and Holland have been equipped with apparatus by which all their lifeboats can be launched from either side of a vessel.

OLD TIMERS WIN 2 TO 0

Fore River Team Shut Out at the Park

The Old Timers, retired base ball players with few exceptions, organized for the express purpose of showing the crack Fore River team of the Manufacturers league how the national game was played 15 years ago accomplished their purpose Saturday afternoon by defeating them 2 to 0 in a real base ball game.

The services of McDoyle, pitcher for the Lowell team of the New England league, secured at a fancy price for the game, was all that was needed to point out victory and the support he received from the "million dollar" infield was gratifying to the 1500 fans assembled for the reunion.

McDoyle pitched a no-hit-no-run game, the first of his career and although at times he was nervous over the outcome he either equalled the situation by fanning the batter or shooting it across so Fore River hit to the infield. The outfield smashes were good for triples or homers but they were pulled out of the clouds, Kalson and McAuliffe making sensation stabs.

The only error recorded was made by the Old Time right fielder Harry Stevens who misjudged a high fly. Otherwise the fielding was perfect, Hoyt, a former New England league player, "Zip" Duane of the police force, and Jimmie Logan who was considered the fastest fielder in the game some years ago, coming across in fine style.

The game was also featured by the playing of Michael Kiley who, in addition to handling two difficult chances in big league fashion, cracked out a pretty single. Kiley, it was who arranged the game and he marshalled a force of 16 players to bring about a win and used 13 of them successfully.

George Donaher who pitched for Adams Academy in 1901-1902 and later played with the New Jersey league was on the hot corner. Harry Stevens, of the old Weymouth Institute team was in right. Jean McAuliffe of Randolph who caught a swell game in his day also fielded that position. Jack Duffy whose batting eye was such that "Connie" Mack often used him as a pinch hitter was in the field, as well as Jack Kalson who pitched the old Merrymount team to victory in many games. Pitts who played on the old North Weymouth team started at second and Eddie Forbes the old W. Quincy catcher went in in the eighth. The Kolts used in the gambol were Sid Duggan who caught a beautiful game and Paul Mulligan who has played little base ball this season.

A timely hit brought in the first run for the Old Timers and the second was scored when Mike Kiley outgeneraled them from the coaching line and sent a runner to second to draw a throw so another could score.

None of the Fore Rivers realized when they trotted on the field they would be beaten but they exhibited an absence of base ball instinct which was conspicuous in the Old Timers. They didn't get a hit because they couldn't outjudge the perfect fielding of the "comebacks." Nichols, their pitcher, mixed fast and slowness and although he pulled out of several bad holes and fanned three in the second innings it was not his day. He was touched for nine hits against an average of two per game this season.

One boy who played here with the Makaria team when that flourished was "Honey" Curtis who reached this city from Egypt this week. "Honey," with "Allie" Bonney of Quincy Point, graduated from Tufts Dental School and went across to the prehistoric land to do a successful business. Dr. Curtis received a warm welcome, played a Fore River position well and renewed friendships that were born in boyhood.

One middle aged woman seated on the first base bleachers was hit by a hard batted ball in the seventh inning. The ball shot off the bat to Jean McAuliffe and through the crowd. It struck her on the face, just missing her glasses. Her nose bled freely and she became very weak and was taken home in an auto.

Otherwise the game was without accident, none of the players even stumbling while in the game. With the defeat of Fore River goes the explanation that lack of batting practice was responsible. However, the Old Timers accomplished their purpose. The game by innings:

FIRST INNING, Old Timers—Hoyt flied out to Jenkins. Donaher doubled. Duane singled, scoring Donaher. Stevens fanned. Duggan hit. Logan out, Gillis to Jenkins. One run.

Fore Rivers—Gillis flied out to Hoyt. Curtis flied out to McDoyle. Gloster out, Hoyt to Duane. No runs.

SECOND INNING, Old Timers—Pitts, Kalson and McDoyle fanned. No runs.

Fore Rivers—Stevens flied out to Hoyt. Galvin fanned. Cain got a pass and stole second. Jenkins fanned. No runs.

THIRD INNING Old Timers—Hoyt hit. Donaher popped to Cain. Duane hit and was thrown out at second when Stevens hit a ground ball, Gillis to Gloster. Stevens played way off and Kiley from the third base coaching line ordered him to pull a throw. He started with Nichols arm and Wall fell for it and snapped to second. Stevens returned to first and Hoyt, who had reached third crossed home an instant before Stevens was run down between first and second for the third out. One run.

Fore River—Wall reached first when Stevens dropped his fly to right field and was thrown out while trying to make second, Stevens to Hoyt. Nichols fanned. Gillis flied out to Logan who run nearly to centre and made one of his old time catches. No runs.

FOURTH INNING Old Timers—Duggan out, Gloster to Jenkins, Logan out, Cain to Jenkins. Kiley hit. Kalson out, Gloster to Jenkins. No runs.

Fore River—Curtis out, Kiley to Duane. Gloster out, McDoyle to Duane. Stevens out, Donaher to Duane. No runs.

FIFTH INNING Old Timers—McDoyle and Hoyt fanned. Donaher out, Cain to Jenkins. No runs.

Fore Rivers—Galvin walked and stole second. Cain flied to Logan who made another pretty catch. Jenkins fanned and Wall flied out to Stevens. No runs.

SIXTH INNING Old Timers—Duane out, Cain to Jenkins. Stevens flied out to Curtis. Duggan hit, stole second. Logan flied out to Cain. No runs.

Fore Rivers—Nichols out, Kiley to Duane. Gillis walked and stole second. Curtis walked. McDoyle who was in a bad hole weakened the shipyard chance of scoring by fanning Gloster for the second out and Stevens grounded to Hoyt who threw him out at first. No runs.

SEVENTH INNING Old Timers—Kiley flied out to Gillis. Kalson fanned McDoyle out, Gloster to Jenkins. No runs.

Fore River—Galvin dumped the ball in the batters box and Duggan threw him out at first. Cain thrown out at first, McDoyle to Duane. Jenkins out, Hoyt to Duane. No runs.

EIGHTH INNING Old Timers—Hoyt flied out to Curtis. Donaher hit. Duane walked. McAuliffe out, Cain to Jenkins. Duggan out, Gloster to Jenkins. No runs.

Fore Rivers—Wall walloped the ball and started it toward the fence but Kalson beat it out and made a remarkable one hand catch. Nichols grounded toward first and the ball struck a stone and bounded high in the air. Duane was equal to the emergency, jumped and speared the ball with his right hand and completed the play unassisted. Gillis out, Hoyt to Duane. No runs.

NINTH INNING Old Timers—Duffy stepped to the bat and amid the plaudits of the fans got a single which he stretched to a double. Mulligan, one of the Kolts trotted out by Kiley got a pass and stole second. Forbes swung too slow for Nichols' delivery and fanned. Duffy got out trying to make home. McDoyle walked. Mulligan stole third. Hoyt, with two men on bases tried to lay a bunt between pitcher and third. The ball rolled to Nichols who threw him out. No runs.

Fore River—Curtis drove a high one to right field and McAuliffe misjudged it. He recovered his faculties and instead of running toward it with both hands and every chance of missing it entirely he loped across with antelope strides and pulled it down with his right hand making a sensational play. Gloster fanned. Stevens, the one hope left for Fore River stepped to the bat and the rooters with visions of seeing him repeat his relief stick work saw him instead dump the ball to McDoyle who threw him out at first. The first team match at the Wardwell alleys will be rolled Tuesday evening between the Weymouth All Stars and a team representing the alleys. The lineup of both aggregations are considered the fastest in either place. On the Quincy team will be Louis Ross, James Olindy, T. Bergfors, Michael Hennessy who holds the alley record and J. Dell. Weymouth will be represented by B. Shea, B. Cornell, Herb Smith, T. Kiley and B. Burrill.

The Dream Lion.

A Vienna professor is credited with saying that dreams are usually wish fulfillments. Maybe so. What about that childish dream in which the ferocious lion comes bounding along behind you, and you run as boy never ran before, and the lion closes the gap little by little, and then, all of a sudden, your legs grow limp and your muscles turn to water and your feet fray out and the lion leaps and you awake with a yell if your voice isn't paralyzed, and everybody in the house wakes with you?—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The "Antique" Craze.

Those of us who can afford it steal and borrow and beg the arms, the dress, the emotions of Greece and Rome. Too often we hang their rotting trophies upon our walls, ignorant of their origin, unacquainted with their meaning and not even sympathetic with the emotions that produced them, bent only upon the paltry respectability that their presence argues.—World's Work.

"Oh, no," was the reply. "Norah is the name of the famous American who built the ark."—Youth's Companion.

Needful Knowledge

Quincy People Should Learn to Detect the Approach of Kidney Disease.

The symptoms of kidney trouble are many. Disordered kidneys often excrete a thick, cloudy, offensive urine, ful of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding. The back may ache, headaches and dizzy spells may occur and the victim is often weighted down by a feeling of languor and fatigue. Neglect these warnings and there is danger. Delay often proves fatal.

Mrs. S. Nelson, 177 Washington St., Quincy, says: "One of my family had pains across the small of the back. Four boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills were used and they made a great improvement. Doan's Kidney Pills deserve great credit for what they have done in that case."

NEUTRALS MAY GET OUR MONEY

But American Loan to Nations at War Is Opposed

THE GOVERNMENT'S ATTITUDE

Decision of President Wilson, Prompted by Inquiry of Bankers and Swiss Diplomat, Represents Advanced Position of United States on Much-Mooted Question

Washington, Aug. 17.—The United States government announced itself as opposed to the floating of loans in this country for the benefit of any of the belligerent powers of Europe.

Switzerland, a neutral country, inquired through her charge d'affaires if she might float a loan in the United States and was informed that the restriction would not apply to neutral countries.

J. P. Morgan & Co. were approached by a group of private bankers who wished to know whether a loan could be floated in the United States if it should ever be desired by the French government. The Morgan firm announced that regardless of its legal rights to engage in private commercial transactions at its own risk, it would take no action which the state department might disapprove.

Inquiry was made of Secretary Bryan by the bankers as to what the attitude of the American government would be. Then the Swiss charge d'affaires also presented an inquiry.

To cover both inquiries, the following pronouncement of policy was issued by Bryan at the direction of President Wilson:

"Inquiry having been made as to the attitude of this government in case American bankers are asked to make loans to foreign governments during the war in Europe, the following announcement is made:

"There is no reason why loans should not be made to the governments of neutral nations, but in the judgment of this government, loans by American bankers to any foreign nation which is at war is inconsistent with the true spirit of neutrality."

This principle represents an advanced attitude on the part of the United States on a much mooted question. Hitherto loans have been floated in the United States as well as other neutral countries for the benefit of belligerents. During the Russo-Japanese war, loans for Japan were floated in the United States and in Europe, while Russia obtained money from different countries in Europe.

International authorities have been agreed that while the loaning of money is forbidden to any neutral government, her subjects might engage in the practice without involving the responsibility of their government.

Many writers, however, have argued that, by furnishing the wherewithal to continue a war, the loaning of money was inconsistent with a true spirit of neutrality, and Washington has decided to adopt this view.

FOOD PROBE PROGRESSING

Prices In Every State In Union Are Being Looked Into

Washington, Aug 17.—Reports to the department of justice show that the investigation into food prices is progressing in every state and almost every large city.

The United States attorney at San Francisco telegraphed that the investigation already had prevented an increase in shipping rates to foreign ports on canned goods.

The department of justice is gathering comparisons of food prices on July 1, 1913; July 1, 1914; the prices before the first of the war in Europe and the present prices in this country.

CONDUCTS OWN DEFENSE

Aged Vagrant, Who Has Law Degree, Is Sentenced to Prison

Pawtucket, R. I., Aug. 17.—Edward McPartland, aged 60, on trial in the district court for vagrancy, conducted his own defense. He was found guilty, sentenced to six months in the house of correction, and appealed.

The defendant said he was a college graduate, had a law degree from Boston university in 1876, was admitted to the bar in Massachusetts in 1884, and practised law until he had a mental breakdown in Worcester.

Crook Outwits Authorities

Concord, N. H., Aug. 17.—By shamming insanity, Edgar J. Beach, a crook of international reputation, convicted of a $20,000 jewelry robbery at the home of George N. Studebaker at Northampton, and wanted in other cities for similar exploits, escaped from the state hospital here.

Death of Mayor Scanlon

JAPAN'S DEMAND UPON GERMANY

Must Surrender Kiau Chau and Withdraw War Vessels

ULTIMATUM SENT TO KAISER

Gives Germany Until Next Sunday to Abandon Naval Base In China and Remove Fleet From the Far East—Promise Is Made That United States Interests Will Be Safeguarded

Tokio, Aug. 17.—Japan has signified her readiness to go to war with Germany in behalf of her ally, Great Britain, by sending an ultimatum to Germany demanding the withdrawal from the Pacific of German warships and the surrender of Kiau Chau, the German naval base in China.

The ultimatum expires next Sunday. If within this week Germany does not accede to the demands of Japan the Japanese government will act. The official report affirming the issuance of the ultimatum was greeted with acclaim in Tokio.

Takaki Kato, the Japanese foreign minister, simultaneously with the dispatch of the ultimatum, conferred with George W. Guthrie, the American ambassador, and made to him a broad statement calculated to assure the United States that American interests in the Far East would be safeguarded and the integrity of China upheld.

Owing to doubts whether communications with Berlin were assured, Japan, in order to insure the arrival of the ultimatum, forwarded it to Berlin by six channels, including Washington, London and Stockholm. The government also notified Count Von Rex, German ambassador to Japan, and likewise retarded the time limit for a reply until Aug. 23.

Count Okuma, the Japanese premier, invited the peers, the newspaper men and the leading business men of Tokio to come to his office, when he made known to them the terms of the ultimatum and gave out the negotiations in connection with the alliance.

Inspired utterances express regret at the inability to maintain neutrality, but say that Great Britain, the ally of Japan, is compelled to defend herself against the aggressions of Germany.

Moreover, it is pointed out that Germany is making preparations day and night at Kiau Chau, where it is storing provisions, while its warships are scouring the seas of eastern Asia to the great detriment of commerce, and that its converted cruisers are seizing English merchant vessles. Such actions, it is argued, are directly calculated to disturbe the peace of eastern Asia and accordingly, after full and frank communication with Great Britain, Japan has found herself compelled to send an ultimatum to Germany.

The port of Kiau Chau is the only one that is German in the Far East, and for that reason is considered of extreme importance. Lying in the Chinese province of Shantung it is close to the extensive coal fields which lie in the vicinity of Tsintau and Wei-hsien, and it is connected with them by a recently constructed railroad.

Before 1897 Kiau Chau was a Chinese port of rather small consequence compared with the more important ports of Shanghai and Canton, but in November of that year Kiau Chau was occupied by the Germans, and in January of 1898 it was ceded to Germany by a ninety-nine-year lease. It was immediately changed into a coaling station. A large dock was built, and the place fortified, but left free on account of trade. Railroads were built and the place soon became a port of great importance to the Germans as a coaling station.

The territory ceded to Germany extends 160 miles along the coast and occupies a space of 120 square miles, exclusive of the bay. It is bounded by a stretch of neutral zone with an area of 2500 square miles, and which has a population of 1,200,000. Kiau Chau has a population of about 60,000.

The value of this port to Germany is shown by the exports, which amount to more than $1,475,000 and the imports, which amount to $5,248,910 a year.

Washington Not Surprised

Washington, Aug. 17.—Japan's ultimatum to Germany was received with little surprise in official circles here, but it is feared that it may lead to complications because of American interests in close proximity to German interests in the Pacific.

The ultimatum was received by American officials as one of the gravest developments in the war situation, bringing for the first time the great military power of the Far East into a range of conflict heretofore held within Europe.

HUSTIS IN NEW OFFICE

One of 20,000 Men Trying to Bring the Boston and Maine Back

Boston, Aug. 17.—Wholly unannounced, James H. Hustis, ex-president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, assumed the duties of president of the Boston and Maine system.

In reply to a question as to his plans, Hustis said:

"In due time, when I have gained a more intimate knowledge of the affairs of the company, I may make a statement. Just now I must say that this is no time to talk.

"I am one of 20,000 employes of the Boston and Maine railroad who are trying to bring the railroad back. The Boston and Maine railroad will in the future be run for the Boston and Maine."

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES

Joseph Vitkis of New York was instantly killed by an express train at a Hartford street crossing.

A two-alarm fire n the grain elevator of William E. Livingstone at Lowell, Mass., caused $50,000 damage.

From June 1 to Aug. 15 the Milk and Baby Hygiene association at Boston cared for 2126 babies, as against 1784 last year.

A Reversal

A Love Story of Wealth and Poverty

By F. A. MITCHEL

Edward Ferguson was a very good fellow, but all good fellows have their faults, and Ned has his. His father was at the head of the firm of Ferguson & Co. and understood to be rich. At any rate, he and his family lived in fine style. Ned was to take his father's place at the head of the firm and was looked upon as an excellent catch by all the young girls of his acquaintance. He could have married any one of several with a fortune in her own right.

This he would have liked to do, for he was ambitious to take a high position in the world—that is, such a position as great wealth brings—but unfortunately he fell in love with a girl who could not aid him in this respect. Marcia Fosdick was the daughter of a man who was a born experimenter. He had tried so many experiments and failed so many times that whenever he launched a new scheme it was dubbed another of Fosdick's follies.

Ned must either relinquish the plan of adding to his prospective fortune by marriage or suffer and cause Marcia to suffer, for the affair between them was mutual. I have said that he was a good fellow. He showed it by giving up so much of his ambition as pertained to an addition to his fortune by marriage. I have said that he had his faults. The way he showed one of them was this:

He wished Marcia to appreciate the sacrifice he was making in marrying a girl who could not aid him in his desire for that power which wealth is capable of giving. But how could he transmit a statement of the fact to her? It was a very delicate matter for him to handle. He was a much better writer than talker. In a letter he could say just what he wanted to say, and no more; in speech he did not express himself well and was apt to say too much. It occurred to him to make his formal declaration to Marcia in a note. Under cover of this greatest compliment a man can pay a woman he might impart the fact that he had resigned one of several fortunes for her. This, instead of making him appear to honor her by marrying her, would show that he loved her better than worldly goods.

He wrote a number of notes, trying his best to give this impression, but do what he would an appearance of condescension on his part would crop out among his most carefully chosen words. He laid the letters aside and in a few days read them over, choosing the one that he considered smacked the least of honoring the girl he was asking to be his wife. But to another it would certainly not have been an ideal proposal, for every one knows that a lover must be nothing more than a beggar.

Ferguson laid the letter on his writing desk in his room, intending to post it the next morning when he went to business. But before leaving in the morning he read it over and concluded not to send it till his return in the evening. He put it in an unaddressed envelope and locked it up. During the day he had a good deal of business correspondence with parties in San Francisco about a matter that occupied his whole attention. On returning to his home in the evening he took out the letter with the intention of reading it again, but, being ashamed of his vacillation, refrained, addressed it, sealed it and after dinner took it out and put it in the letter box.

When several days had passed and he received no reply to his proposal he began to worry. Could it be that, after all, the letter had appeared to Marcia as if he considered himself altogether too good for her? Every day after that added to his terror, and when a week had passed and he received no answer he was completely demoralized. Then followed periods of sensitive fear, calmness, shame and pride. Why could he not have gone to see Marcia and said simply, "I love you—be my wife?"

Instead of taking a train and going a dozen miles to the suburban town where Marcia lived and having it out with her he undertook to analyze her feelings on receiving his note. He could see her lip curl on reading his so called delicate reference to what he had given up for her. Then he decided her indignantly tearing the note into little bits and tossing them into the wastebasket.

Instead of going to Marcia and throwing himself on her mercy he listened to the dictates of pride. A man, he argued, conscious of right, of superiority defers to a woman. She receives his deference and appreciates it as homage. But let him beg forgiveness for a wrong he has done her and he will only add to her contempt for him.

This reasoning decided him to stand on his dignity. He would await some word from Marcia if it killed him. It certainly wore on him dreadfully. He had been used to calling on her at least once or twice during each month. They seldom met except when he called upon her, for she seldom came to the city, and when she did there was a very slight probability of their passing each other. However, a couple of months after Ned had written his proposal they did meet in a crowded street. Marcia passed him with a constrained bow.

One day Ned's father fell and was picked up unconscious. He never spoke again and died within two days. Ned now became the head of Ferguson & Co. and began his administration of its affairs by making a thorough investigation as to its finances. One reason for his overhauling its accounts was that he had noticed shortly before his father's death that he had appeared worried, and it was suspected that the cause had brought on the stroke that had resulted in his death. What was Edward Ferguson's surprise to find that his father had been engaged in speculations that had caused an enormous gap in the firm's finances. Had he lived he would have been obliged to face a failure within a very short time.

There was nothing to do but for Ned to wind up the affairs of the concern. Fortunately he was not a member of the firm and was not loaded with its debts. But now, instead of thirsting for the power that wealth gives, his only ambition was to pay the debts left by his father.

While Ned was awakening from a dream of wealth, Marcia Fosdick was awakening from a dream of poverty. Her father had at last struck a scheme that paid him very largely. He had invented an attachment for an automobile which sooner or later all such machines must have. He was selling the right to use it to all manufacturers, and his royalties were already considerable.

Ned Ferguson saw in the newspapers an account of the invention and the change it made in Marcia's affairs. When he had written that condescending letter he was rich and she was poor. Now the conditions were reversed. He had lost his fortune and the girl he loved. He did not expect a continuance of the favors he had received from any of the wealthy girls he might have married. They were quite sympathetic, but none of them gave him any further encouragement.

One morning Marcia Fosdick received a letter postmarked San Francisco. Withdrawing it from the envelope, she found two letters. One was from a lady whom she had met several times socially, who said: "The inclosed has been going the rounds of this state for a long while and has finally come under my notice. I think it must be intended for you. At any rate, I send it to you."

The moment Marcia saw the address on the inclosure, covered with stamped finger pointers, "try this" and "try that place," she recognized Ned Ferguson's handwriting.

Ferguson came home one evening with a heavy heart. He had placed the affairs of Ferguson & Co. in liquidation and had offered the family home for sale. He found a letter in the hall awaiting him and, taking it up, saw at once that it was from Marcia. He opened it and read it:

Your lovely letter was only received this morning after having traveled all over the state of California. I regret that it did not come to me in time to show you how deeply I have felt for you from the moment I heard of your affliction and misfortune. I give you all the consolation I can—my own unworthy self.

Ferguson stood dazed. In an instant the fabric he had built up about his relations with Marcia Fosdick had collapsed. He had nothing to fear from her on account of his condescension in offering to marry her. But the fact that he had so considered it came down upon him with sledgehammer force. Singular it is that, while he had then considered her poverty a barrier between them, he now considered her affluence in the same light.

However, Marcia Fosdick had no desire for anything more than the comfort and comparative independence that wealth can give. She loved Ned Ferguson with her whole heart, and she would accept no withdrawal of his proposal.

Ferguson often thinks of the day that he wrote his proposal and was corresponding with parties in California at the same time. He blesses the fact that the two fell together and an interval elapsed between the writing of the note and its reply. What occurred during that interval doubtless gave him an acceptance instead of a refusal.

LONG CHECKED COAT.

For Motoring or Traveling This Wrap Has Advantages.

NEW CHECKED COAT.

The coat illustrated here is a handsome affair of green and white check with one of the new turned over collars of velvet. There are epaulettes of velvet combined with fancy buttons on the shoulders. The raglan sleeve is finished with deep turned back cuffs. The coat is suitable for general wear in the fall or makes a convenient wrap for the motorist or traveler.

ADJUSTING WAISTS.

Tape Stretched Across the Back Is Convenient.

Since separate blouses are a necessity with tailored suits here is a good point to remember. Instead of sewing the tape at the waist line down on the waist all around leave the fronts loose and stitch the tape only across the back. This will give ends that can be brought around and tied in front.

You can regulate the fullness much more easily by this method and so prevent bulging in an unsightly manner. Before sewing the tape to the waist be sure you get it adjusted properly at the waist line; otherwise it will be very uncomfortable.

Another good method of keeping skirts and waists together is to fasten a broad stay piece across the back of the waist or blouse. To this fasten large ordinary eyes and sew to the inside of the skirt band heavy flat hooks to correspond. Round eyes buttonholed in twist may be used on silk and sheer waists.

BRILLIANT COLORS.

French Dressmakers Favor Them For Their Most Elegant Creations.

The couturiers of Paris are featuring odd combinations of materials in their latest creations. Silk, linen and pique will be effectively allied in one model, while another is fashioned of voile, silk and batiste.

Blouses have jumper effects of one material worn over guimpes of another, while the skirts are formed of long Dutch tunics and underskirts of contrasting weaves.

Brilliant colors are combined with ecru, white, dark blue or gray. The designs selected are bold and striped fabrics are general favorites, and many of the long tunics are evolved from these striking materials.

Closely Woven Crape.

The popular cotton crape is a very fine, close weaving, resembling its more expansive sister, crepe de chine, and the ratine—or sponge cloth—is also finer and closer than that worn last year. Both come in a large range of colors, of which at the moment pink is extremely fashionable, ranging from the palest blush to the deepest rose tints, also light or dark pekin blue, mauve, mastic and dove gray.

Comfortable Corsets.

A medical man has said that nothing more sane than the new corsets has come into fashion's realm for a long time. The waist line of these corsets is large and the bust low. They are of such shape that full, deep breathing is possible.

Motoring Hats.

The perfect motoring hat is made of satin, corduroy, or it may be of white felt. All of these are soft, shaping themselves to the head in whatever way the fancy of the wearer may dictate.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

BOARD OF TRADE ON A VISIT

Plant of Quincy Daily Ledger in the List

The Quincy Board of Trade has nearly completed arrangements for its annual visit to local industries on Wednesday of this week. The board requests members to assemble at headquarters in the Adams building at 11.30 where a light lunch will be served.

Automobiles will then be taken for the trip over the city, leaving shortly after 12.

Plants will be visited in the north part of the city, leaving there at 2 o'clock stopping at the Telephone Company about 2.25, arriving at Daily Ledger office at 2.45 then to South and West Quincy leaving visits to stone industry about 4.30, leaving the Baker Basin at Quincy Point about 5 o'clock, arriving at Norteman's at Houghs Neck at 5.30 for dinner.

Members having automobiles are requested to report with them at 11.30 to convey the members over the route.

MRS. MURTO MOYNIHAN.

Mary E. Moynihan, widow of Murto Moynihan, died at her home at 130 Sumner street Saturday after an illness of several weeks. She was in her 70th year.

Mrs. Moynihan was one of the original settlers at the Point and was well known throughout the city. She was the aunt of former councilman William H. Flynn and is survived by her sister, Bridget Flynn.

Her funeral will take place Tuesday morning. A high mass of requiem will be celebrated at St. Johns church.

CAPE COD BAY CHART.

The Coast and Geodetic Survey, Department of Commerce, has issued a new edition of chart 112 of Vineyard Sound and Buzzards Bay, showing the latest information to date of issue, including rocks and shoals located in recent wire drag operations. This chart will be of special use to those passing through the new Cape Cod canal, which was opened to navigation on July 30 for vessels of 15-feet draft. The chart is on a scale of 1-80,000 on the Mercater projection, and is sold at the office of the survey in Washington and at the agencies of the survey in the principal seaports at 50 cents each. The corresponding chart for the north end of the canal is No. 1208, Cape Cod bay, on the same scale, and sold at the same price.

POST ISLAND PARTY

The following invitation:—

"Next Saturday night by candle light,
In childrens garb, and to our delight,
We wish, you to meet our Philas Light,

was responded to by a large number of her friends who from their dress and make up, carried us all back to our good "old school days."

Each one was presented with a small slate and from the drawings, we believe we have found some artists who will be developed with a little age and practise. Miss Ruth Shriver and James Shriver proved the winners in drawing contest.

The usual "Kids" games were played, and the forfeits in many cases proved a stumbling block.

In the pie contest Miss Nelson Shriver carried off the cake, with Mr. Fletcher on the small end, a slice.

Mrs. Brown and Miss Baker won high honors in the "clay modelling" class.

Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Fletcher of Dorchester, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Browne of Ashmont, Allison W. Marsh, the Misses Shriver of Dedham, Roscoe Ricker of Quincy, and others.

BRIEFS

Mrs. Thomas Mitchell of Nash avenue spent Sunday with friends in Lawrence.

Dennis Crowley is constructing a canal at Cape Cod connecting a manufacturing plant with the sea. The strip is a mile long and is nearing completion.

Arthur W. Stetson attended Saturday the reunion of the Stetson Kindred of America at the old homestead at Norwell. About 150 were in the party. Special car was attached to the regular train.

Mrs. John Parker and two children of Leominster are spending the remainder of August with Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Gill, who have recently purchased a cozy little bungalow at the foot of Edison park.

Rev. Sarah A. Dixon of Tewksbury was the preacher on Sunday at Bethany church, and gave a scholarly address on the text to be found in St. John 1:14—"The world was made flesh."

The steamer located at the Central station was put aboard the cars this noon and shipped to Providence, R. I., where a tractor truck will be attached to the machine. During her absence a relief steamer will be in use.

Thomas Dillon, father of Edward Dillon, a conductor on the Bay State Street Railway, died at his home at 42 Hall place Saturday. He was about 65 years of age and leaves a family His funeral will take place Tuesday morning, a high mass of requiem being celebrated at St. Mary's church.

Novelties In Old Fleet Street.

Fleet street was formerly the wonder place of London, where all that was novel, bizarre and marvelous was exhibited by enterprising showmen. Ben Jonson alludes to "a new notion of the city of Nineveh, with Jonah and the whale, at Fleet bridge," and at the "Eagle and Child" was exhibited a collection of freaks and monstrosities that set the whole town agape. In 1710, too, were advertised as on exhibition at Fleet bridge "two strange, wonderful and remarkable monstrous creatures, an old she dromedary, seven feet high and ten feet long, lately arrived from Tartary, with her young one, being the greatest wonder, rarity and novelty ever seen in the three kingdoms."—London Express.

Worse Off Than He Thought.

Shadbolt—Well, I'm $50 worse off than I was yesterday morning. Dingus—How's that? Shadbolt—I was held up by footpads on my way home last night and robbed. Dingus—I'm sorry for you, old man. But they didn't get the $5 I borrowed of you before you started home, anyhow. Shadbolt—That's so. I forgot that. I'm $55 worse off than I was yesterday morning.—Chicago Tribune.

A Matter of Feet.

"If one did not know better," remarked an observant man, "he would be inclined to believe an aviator is akin to a centipede. Not long ago I was telling a friend that a certain airman had dropped forty-five feet. 'Yes?' he asked. 'And how many has he left?'"—New York Tribune.

Women Physicians.

Women physicians are not a modern innovation. There were plenty of them among the ancient Greeks, some of them being famous.

REAR END COLLISION

Passengers on East Milton Cars Shaken up

Nearly 80 passengers were riding in two East Milton cars that had a rear-end collision at Hancock and School streets Sunday afternoon, and eight were more or less injured. The most seriously injured were as follows:

Lawrence Cahill, 4 years old, son of Policeman George Cahill of 76 Phipps street, severely shaken and suffering from nervous fright.

Mrs. Mabel Boddie of 7 Pearl street, bruised on shoulder and suffering from nervous shock.

Mrs. Robert Mitchell and baby of 25 Brooks road, severely shaken.

Mrs. W. Walsh, year-old baby and 2-year-old son Francis, of Brooks road shaken up.

Both cars left City Square for East Milton at 4.50, the first being an eight and the second a four wheel trailer. The former was crowded and the latter was comfortably filled. Arthur Holmes was motorman of the first car and Myles Gilmartin of the second.

The accident occurred while the car stopped for the motorman to throw the switch on the East Milton-Quincy avenue line. Motorman Gilmartin saw the big car at a stop and shut off his power below Hancock court. His brakes failed to hold and the car slid and struck the other car.

Arthur Holmes was bending over in the act of throwing the switch when the crash came. His switch stick flew from his hand to the street and he struck the front of the car with his stomach. He was able to finish his run.

The passengers most severely shaken up were riding in the small car in the first two seats, facing each other. The impact sent the small car back a distance of nearly four feet and men, women and children were tumbled on top of each other. They were taken to the Walsh drug store and given first aid attention. The Cahill boy was taken to his home where he was treated by a physician. Mrs. Mitchell and Mrs. Boddie were later treated by Dr. W. H. Blanchard.

The accident was witnessed by several people whose attention was attracted by the screams of five little girls who were riding on the outside seat of the second car, who realized a collision was imminent when they saw the motorman frantically trying to stop his car. The crash was loud and was heard for some distance but neither car was damaged.

USE LESS SUGAR.

"If you are in the habit of using two spoonfuls of sugar in tea or coffee, use one in the future. Purchase all the commodities of life in smaller quantities. It is necessary to be calm and to buy judiciously, as in the past." This is the advice of the National Housewives' League, of which Mrs. Edward P. Barry, wife of the Lieutenant Governor, is president.

SERIOUS FALL.

Daniel Murphy, familiarly known as "Maffit," to former base ball rooters, is in a critical condition at the Quincy City Hospital. Murphy sustained a spinal injury in a fall in the barn of J. F. Sheppard & Sons on Thursday. He was taken to the police station and later removed to the hospital. Total paralysis of the body from the shoulders downward has resulted.

Mayor Willing Fire Department Should Have More

A special meeting of the City Council was held Monday evening, the call for the meeting having been issued by the Mayor.

There were seven matters in the call and the business was put through with dispatch. There was nothing in the call that required any debate at this meeting at least and the only things that resembled a debate were some questions which Councilman Ross asked the Mayor in relation to needs of the departments. That is if they all had money enough to carry them through.

Mayor Miller replied that as far as knew they had enough with the exception of the Assessors who desired $300 for extra clerical instead of $200 as noted in this communication.

Councilman Ross then asked if the Fire Department had enough to carry it through, as he understood that the department would need $1,000.

Mayor Miller replied that nothing had been said to him that this department would need more money.

Councilman Ross then asked if the Mayor would be willing that $1,000 should be included in the supplementary budget if it was found the department needed it, as he had been informed that the Council could add to the amounts if the Mayor were willing.

Mayor Miller replied that he was willing the amount should be increased.

The chances are therefore that when the Finance Committee report the supplementary budget that some of the amounts will be increased.

Councilman Bass and Barnicoat were the only absent members.

THE SPECIAL CALL.

The items in the call were as follows:

In the call as signed by the Mayor are these items:

To receive and act on petitions of Bay State Street Railway Co.

To receive and act on petitions of New England Telephone and Telegraph Company.

To designate polling places for State primaries to be held on September 22, 1914.

To receive and act on supplementary budget.

To receive and act on application of Michael T. Sullivan for auctioneers License.

To receive and act on communication from City Treasurer regarding interest on municipal bonds.

HANCOCK STREET TRACKS.

A petition was received from the Bay State street railway Co. for a relocation of its tracks in Hancock street, between School and Granite streets. Councilman Gilliatt offered an order for a hearing. Adopted.

A petition was also received from the Street Railway for a relocation of one pole on Copeland street, which was granted.

A petition was received from the Telephone Co. for attachments which was granted.

A petition was received from the Telephone Co. for a location for underground conduits on Elm avenue. Councilman Gilliatt offered an order for a public hearing which was adopted.

ITEMS IN BUDGET.

The Mayor forwarded a communication asking for a supplementary budget to contain the following items:

Street lighting	$3,000
Contagious diseases of Board of Health	6,000
Extra clerical assessors	200
Miscellaneous Assessors	200
Miscellaneous Inspector of Buildings	100
	$9,500

Councilman Bailey offered the budget order which was referred to the Finance Committee.

PETITION.

An application for an auctioneer's license was received from Michael T. Sullivan. Councilman Beeman offered an order granting the license which was adopted. The bond was also approved.

TAX LEVIES ABOVE AVERAGE

Quincy Assessment More Than Larger Cities

Supplementary budgets, so called, are something new. They were unheard of until the $12 limit for current expenses was removed. But one extra budget has already passed the City Council of 1914, and now the Mayor proposes another one which will require a tax levy of at least 25 cents on the $1,000.

In 1911, according to the figures of the Bureau of Statistics, no smaller city in Massachusetts raised so much by tax levy as Quincy, and the figures below show that Quincy raised more than the larger cities of Haverhill, Salem, Fitchburg, Taunton or Everett.

Quincy was No. 15 in tax assessment, although No. 20 in population, and No. 20 in valuation in the State.

What was true of Quincy in 1911, was undoubtedly true in 1912 and 1913 and promises to be in 1914.

The levy of 1912 was $131,054.97 larger than in 1911, and the levy of 1913 was $93,241.63 larger than in 1912. The Quincy tax levies by years were:

1911	$668,636.76
1912	799,691.73
1913	892,933.36
1914	Nearly a Million

A remarkable increase in three years.

Here are the receipts of Quincy compared in the last annual report on the Statistics of Municipal Finances with other cities of Massachusetts with less than 80,000 population and more than 15,000. It should be remembered that Quincy is not half as large as Somerville.

	Tax Receipts	Total Receipts
Somerville	$1,257,059	$1,638,489
Holyoke	906,944	1,658,499
Brockton	955,568	1,324,726

GALBREADTH—PHALEN.

Miss Beatrice C. Phalen, of 24 Webster street, a popular waitress at the Thompson cafe, and Dr. Edgar E. Galbreadth, a Quincy dentist, eloped to Nashua, N. H. last week and were married there on Aug. 13. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Stephen L. Hallinan, justice of the peace, and the couple were unattended.

Dr. Galbreadth left this city the latter part of July obstensibly to visit friends in Nashua, but in reality to establish a residence. He filed a marriage intention on July 27, and returned here after a few days. Last Thursday he and his prospective bride went to the Gretna Green and were married. Both returned to Quincy, Miss Phalen going directly to her home. She broke the news this morning to her parents.

Dr. Galbreadth was born in Germany and has been in this city about two years. He is connected with the office of Dr. H. Almon Jones. His bride was born in this city and was one of the most popular waitresses ever employed at the Thompson cafe.

THE ELLEN AND HUSKIE

Winners of First Two Races for Q. Y. C. Cup

Of the nine yachts that had challenged for the Quincy Yacht Club challenge cup, only four appeared at the line for the first race in the series off Marblehead Monday morning. They were the Huskie of the Corinthian club, the Mingo of the Eastern club, Cima of the Eastern club, and the defender Ellen of the Boston club. Why none of the other yachts appeared is not known.

The morning race was sailed over a windward and leeward course, twice over. There was a good breeze during the first round, but it soon died out so that the last half of the match was a little more than a drifting match. Just before the finish the air freshened a little, just enough to carry the leader across the line with three minutes to spare of the time limit.

The start was a little unsatisfactory as a power boat got in the way and it was called off until 10.30. The morning race was won by the Ellen the defending boat, the time of the four starters in the race being as follows:

Ellen,	2	56	40
Cima,	2	59	18
Huskie,	3	00	14
Mingo,	3	04	21

The afternoon race was sailed over a triangular course, but as the skippers failed to read the directions right only one of the four boats turned the home buoy right. The result was that the Huskie which was the last boat was given the race while the other three boats were disqualified for failing to turn the home mark correctly. The time on the afternoon race was as follows:

*Cima,	1	09	36
*Ellen,	1	01	04
*Mingo,	1	10	41
Huskie,	1	15	38

* Disqualified.

FIREWORKS IN THE RAIN

Italian Society Give Good Display at Park

With the weather threatening hundreds gathered at Merrymount Park Monday evening to witness the fireworks display given in connection with the celebration of the feast of St. Rocco by the Italian members of the society named in his honor, and although the heavens opened up a bombardment of rain the majority remained until the finish.

Autos which lined Hancock street and different sections in the field were packed with humanity, all seeking refuge from the storm, and one corner of the park appeared like a sea of umbrellas. Those who left home with the impression the sky would clear returned drenched.

The display, furnished by a Randolph manufacturer was very good, and according to Dr. Galen V. Bowditch, surpassed any program ever given under the auspices of the Fourth of July Association.

Opening with an aerial salute, the boom of which resounded again and again and was heard below Hingham, the different arrangements were rapidly touched off. The feature was a huge set piece of St. Rocco, magnificently proportioned and colored.

A set piece which was loudly praised was "Old Glory" and the Italian flag twined round a central illumination, the color scheme of which was a deep golden, with numerous shells bursting around them in a salvo.

Other features represented sunlight, morning, noon, night, etc, and were a beautiful collection of animated colors which twinkled and danced in the misty air.

The members of the Quincy Italian band, believing the affair was postponed, arrived one by one and when the display was nearly over a full corps had been mustered. A concert was furnished consisting of popular and national airs and as the final broadside shook the grounds they played the national anthem.

They then formed in line and escorted by 100 children burning red fire, marched to City Square where the members of the City Council and city government were serenaded.

It is estimated that fully 7000 people took part in the celebration of the feast day which opened Sunday with a reunion, street parade and concert and closed Monday with the last rocket blazing a trail toward the heavens. No one was injured in connection with the observance and no arrests on either day is attributed to the gaiety of the foreign population.

FUNERAL OF MRS. MOYNIHAN.

The funeral of Mary E. Moynihan, widow of Murto Moynihan, one of the original Irish settlers of Quincy Point was held from her home at 130 Sumner street this morning. Among those who attended were relatives and long time friends from this city and the South Shore.

A high mass of requiem was read at St. Johns church at 9 o'clock by Rev. Fr. Walter A. Quinlan. The Gregorian chant was sung by the regular choir, under the direction of John Mahon, organist. The soloists were Mrs. Mary Burns King and Dennis S. Sweeney.

The floral remembrances were many and partially covered the family lot in St. Mary's cemetery where the body was interred. The bearers were, Charles F. Mullane, John T. Moriarty, John J. Sullivan, Timothy J. Collins and Michael Sweeney of Quincy, Martin H. Foley and Morris Berry of Brockton, and Jeremiah O'Connor of South Framingham.

Mrs. Moynihan is survived by one sister, Mrs. Bridget Flynn, a niece, Mrs. Charles Mullane and a nephew, William H. Flynn.

EMPLOYEES AT FORE RIVER YARD

Forward Unanimous Protest Against Conference Shipping Bill and It Was Defeated

House Bill As Sent to President Is More Favorable

Everybody is happy at the Fore River shipyard today from President Powell down to the apprentice. There's a reason. The National Senate on Monday obliterated the objectionable clauses to the so-called Shipping Bill as reported by the conference committee, and then passed the bill. The bill which is an emergency bill authorizes the President to admit foreign-built ships to American registry, so that merchant ships may sail the seas under the protection of the American flag while belligerents in Europe are at war with each other.

SENATOR WEEKS.

The bill as reported in the senate a week ago contained the Jones' amendment which if it had passed would have been a death blow to American shipbuilding industries.

Things looked pretty serious at one time said an official of the Fore River Co., this morning, but it is all right now. While the bill as passed may not do us any good, it can do us no harm, and we may receive some benefit from it in the way of repairs that ships will require. The way things looked last week it hardly seemed possible to accomplish what has been done.

Mayor Curley of Boston and others have been incessantly at work trying to kill the Jones' amendment, for it was generally admitted that should the bill pass with this amendment tacked on it meant a death blow to the shipbuilding industry not only of New England but in other parts of the country as well.

No enormous standing army is going to stand contented with peace very long.

Greece probably feels better with those two newly purchased battleships in its navy.

Little neutral countries across the big waters are being stepped on in the excitement.

Mme. Caillux having been acquitted, presumably will continue to keep her powder dry.

It is suspected that some of the advances in prices are not due so much to the war as to the desire of dealers to acquire a 1915 automobile.

It is difficult to feel the horrors of war keenly when you are a farmer with food products to sell.

At the present time a treaty solemnly signed by the European powers seems nearly as valuable as an outlawed lottery ticket.

Some people will pay $25 a week hotel board to live in a resort where the principal excitement is going to the post office twice a day to get the mail and newspapers from home.

On account of the war, there will be fewer toys than usual for the kids to smash Christmas week, and the high prices of sugar and candy will make their stomachache come higher.

It is hoped that the Harvester trust will not be permitted to dissolve merely by running curtains across the office.

The censorship of war news is very strict, but they can't stop the fellows in the back office who are turning out dispatches from the battle-field at the rate of two columns an hour.

It seems strange to most people that cities and towns do not buy the best of everything in all public works and reduce the taxes at the same time.

A majority of the 33 cities of Massachusetts have now reported increases in tax rates, so that Quincy will be an exception if our tax rate is less. Of the 21 reporting, 17 are higher, three lower and one the same as in 1913. The reductions were in Beverly, North Adams and Salem. In Lynn there was no change.

SIMPLICITY.

There is a growth of feeling against elaborate funerals. Such services as held for the late lamented Mrs. Woodrow Wilson are better expressive of present day sentiment. Her conspicuous position and the warm admiration excited by her sweet and generous life would have furnished plenty of excuse for stately formalities. But these exercises were restricted to Scripture readings and a brief prayer. Only three carriages were allowed to join the last sad journey to the railway station.

There used to be an element of competition in funerals. The longest line of carriages and the highest stack of flowers were desired, and not merely as an expression of grief. It was an assertion and demonstration of the position in the community occupied by the departed and his surviving friends.

Many people felt an injustice was done to a deceased unless the trappings of woe were elaborate and costly. A long procession of carriages was often hired, whether occupants were sight or not.

The social game was often being played even in this setting of sorrow. The arrangement of the procession called for keen discrimination. Influential friends were placed near the head of the line, others were abased by becoming tail-enders.

How much more appropriate seem exercises like those held for Mrs. Wilson. Long prayers, even a tactful address, and emotional music, but add to the anguish of the moment. Recognition of the value of a life can better come in other ways, when the first shock of sorrow has passed.

GERMANS ARE PRESSING ON TO BRUSSELS

Belgian Capital May Soon Be In Their Possession

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS REMOVE TO ANTWERP

Hurried Stampede to Coast City When Invaders Reach Point Only Fifteen Miles Distant—Opinion That Germany Might Have to Abandon Campaign In Belgium Undergoes Change—Invaders Close to Famous Battlefield of Waterloo—Have Been Feeling Their Way by Means of Numerous Clashes With Cavalry—Germans Probably Lost Twenty Thousand Men In the Battle at Liege

London, Aug. 18.—Brussels, no longer the capital of Belgium, is so menaced by the German army that it is believed it will fall to the possession of the invaders within a few hours.

The government officials removed to Antwerp, which is now the official capital of the nation. The appearance of a force of German cavalry at Wavre, only fifteen miles distant from Brussels, and the knowledge that these outposts were closely followed by the infantry and artillery of the army of the Meuse caused the hurried stampede to the coast.

Few messages are being received in London from Brussels or even from Antwerp, but rumors state that the departure of the officials, wholly unanticipated by the inhabitants, caused almost a panic in the city. Everyone who could leave did so—by trains, automobiles, wagons and on foot.

London Is Disappointed

The news of the abandonment of Brussels by the officials was the most disheartening news that London has received since the war began.

Stories of German defeats day after day, although accepted as probably exaggerated, made it the opinion in London that Belgium had been so fiercely defended that the whole German campaign through the country might have to be abandoned.

Late Monday afternoon the French and Russian ministers to Belgium handed their papers to the Spanish minister and took the train to Antwerp with the Belgian officials.

Fighting at close quarters, which is perhaps the opening of the feverishly awaited great battle, has been going on not many miles distant from Brussels. It is impossible to learn where the hostile forces are clashing and whether it is a mere skirmish or the commencement of one of the greatest battles ever fought.

A few hours after dawn cannonading could be hard in the streets of Brussels, which were soon filled with the excited populace. The calm that has been preserved in the capital during the weeks of frenzied suspense was still apparent, but it was noticeable that fear was coming nearer to the surface.

No reports of the fighting were issued in Brussels, but as nearly as it was possible to conjecture from the sound of firing the Germans have abandoned their threat against Louvain, where the main force of the Belgian army is located, and are swinging slightly southward from Jodoigne.

Cavalry Near Waterloo

Wavre, where the cavalry appeared Monday, is less than ten miles from Waterloo, so that the most famous battlefield in Europe may again resound to the crash of conflict, almost a century after the epochal battle in which the British and Germans shattered the limitless ambitions of Napoleon.

Whether the German force within a day's march of Brussels is really the advance guard of the army of the Meuse or merely a raiding detachment of cavalry and artillery cannot be determined.

Presumably the Belgian aeronauts have information about the strength of the invaders, but absolutely nothing has been given out by the war office in Belgium.

The ability with which the Germans, despite the defeats inflicted upon their cavalry, advance steadily westward day after day has begun to cause considerable worry in London. After each defeat the cavalry screen appears the next day still nearer its objective, although usually a few miles south or north of the places where resistance has been met.

Military Sharps' Opinion

Although it has always been believed in London that the reports from Brussels were materially colored from the standpoint of the allies, they have been regarded as authentic with this reservation.

There is no reason now to suppose they have been untrue and that Belgian and French soldiers have been successful in nearly every engagement on Belgian soil.

To military experts it has been clear for days that all these clashes between cavalry were not meant for anything except to try out the hostile position. The Germans, having located the position and the fortifications of the Belgians, have fallen back and the movement has been heralded as a German defeat. The invaders, however, had no intention of starting a real battle and have always been ready to retire as soon as they had found out the strength of the allies.

"Ten Marches to Paris"

"Ten marches to Paris," is now the German cry. The reports from all sources, so far as they can be coordinated, indicate that things are going better with the Germans in Belgium, who have been hampered of late by severe heat and probably by disarrangement of the commissariat.

Explanation of the stiff fight put up by the Belgians against the Germans was forthcoming when it was learned that in maneuvers last September the Belgians made preparations for just such an emergency as has confronted them. Such straws indicate that the European trouble may have been much longer brewing than is generally known.

No official report of the German losses at Liege has been obtained, but unofficial German figures are 5000, as against the 38,000 reported from Belgian sources. Probably the real figures are between these estimates, and 20,000 may not be too high. Liege appears to have been the most sanguinary engagement of the war thus far.

The French, spurred on, no doubt, by the sentiment of the populace, are invading Alsace and Lorraine. The French say that they have taken Blasein, in Baden.

Fighting on Austro-Russian Border

Fighting of some moment appears imminent on the Austro-Russian border, if reports can be believed. Austria says several army corps have invaded Russia, while St. Petersburg tell of victories over Austrian troops, checking an offensive movement.

Reports came of a French naval victory in the Adriatic. A Dutch steamer reports having seen a crippled German dreadnought at Trondjem harbor, while several merchant steamers tell of perils of the deep that include chases by hostile men-of-war.

PENETRATING PRUSSIA

Cossacks Are Actively Engaged Along the Russian Frontier

A St. Petersburg dispatch says strong forces of Cossacks, supported by light artillery, machine guns and mounted infantry, are penetrating the Prussian frontier. The advance is reported to have pushed forward nearly to Insterburg, having followed the line of the railway from Eydtkuhnen. The German columns are reported contesting the advance, but falling back slowly toward the line of their main fortifications.

The columns engaged are purely reconnoitering parties, as the main Russian column is still at Kovno and Vilna. It is not believed any general invasion of Germany will be undertaken until the entire mobilization movement is completed.

Many prisoners are reported taken, but all details regarding losses on either side are withheld by the Russian war office.

GERMAN TRADE IS LOST

Thought to Be Inevitable Regardless of Result of War

The Paris correspondent of the London Chronicle sends an interview with an American business man who has just arrived at the French capital from Berlin by way of Hamburg and Vienna. He says:

"Business of every sort is at a standstill throughout Austria and Germany. Business men frankly recognize that the war, whether successful or not, has delivered a terrible blow to German trade for generations. If Germany's best markets her goods will be tabooed for many years. The state of uneasiness in Berlin is increasing constantly.

AN ARMY OF PRISONERS

Question of Housing Them a Serious Problem For Both Sides

A troublesome problem of the war is likely to be the housing and guarding of prisoners. Already more than 5000 Germans have been captured before the battles have really begun. The Belgians are sending a large proportion of these prisoners into France.

When the big fighting begins, with at least 2,000,000 men engaged, the number of prisoners probably will run into vast and embarrassing totals on both sides.

There will be exchanges of prisoners, but these are not always easy to arrange. Another difficulty is anticipated in the matter of the commisariat for unprecedentedly large armies. The Germans are even now confronted with this gigantic task.

MINISTER VON JAGOW

In Charge of Foreign Affairs of Germany

CRY OF "HOLY WAR"

Religion Made a Feature of Measures by Russia to Inspire Loyalty

Russian authorities have renewed their efforts to arouse the ardor for warfare among the people by playing on their religious principles and their prejudices.

Religious services have become part of the mobilization, and whenever troops march on their way to the railway station they are preceded by priests of the Orthodox church, in full vestments. Altar boys carry huge crosses, the choristers sing sacred music, and holy water is sprinkled upon the troops as they leave, with the blessing of the clergy.

The authorities are making every effort to convince the people that this is a holy war—and that it is a just one from the Russian standpoint. It is pointed out, too, that the Rusians must win or else the Teutons, generally hated throughout Russia, will sweep through the empire and leave death and devastation in their paths.

PRUSSIAN EAGLE IN PARIS

First Captured Flag Displayed In Front of War Office

The first Prussian eagle captured by the French during the present war was swung above the entrance to the French war office in Paris.

It is the red and black flag bearing a Prussian eagle in the centre, which was borne into battle by the First Lower Alsatian infantry regiment, No. 132, of the German army, when it came into action at Sainte Blaise, also known as Sainte Marie aux Mines and Markirch. The regiment came from the German fortress of Strassburg.

The flag was taken by the Tenth battalion of French rifles, and was brought to Paris by Colonel Serrat, formerly French military attache at Berlin.

Thrust suddenly into the limelight by the assassination of Francis Ferdinand of Austria-Hungary and the resultant European war, Archduke Charles Francis Joseph, heir to the Austrian throne, observed his 27th birthday anniversary.

He is the eldest son of Archduke Otto, a younger brother of the late Francis Ferdinand. His father died in 1906. He is proficient in many languages and is the first heir to the throne of Austria to be proficient in English language.

The archduchess, his wife, was Princess Zita of the Bourbon house of Parma. They have two sons, Francis Joseph Otto, now in his second year, being the elder.

Roosevelt Says Progressives Will Be In Next National Campaign

Boston, Aug. 18.—Ex-President Roosevelt made it plain to the Progressives of Massachusetts in a speech here that he stood for the preservation of party solidarity and was opposed to any program of amalgamation which entertained a truce with the leaders of the Republican organization throughout the country.

In emphasizing his adherence to the party he promised that the Progressives "shall enter the lists as a national party in the next campaign."

The colonel was explicit enough in his statement on the matter of amalgamation to satisfy those Progressives who entertained doubts of his future course because of his indorsement of Mr. Hinman, a Republican, for the Progressive nomination for governor of New York.

GET AWAY WITH $4000

Professionals Crack and Clean Out Safe In Lynn Shoe Store

Lynn, Mass., Aug. 18.—Yeggmen made a haul of $4000 in money and jewels by forcing the safe in the shoe store of Benjamin Masofsky in the Farley block. About $500 was in cash, $2000 was in jewelry and diamonds, the property of Mrs. Masofsky, and $1500 more in money and jewels, representing the life savings of Miss Cecelia Bloom, a relative.

Masofsky discovered the break when he opened his store. A blue coat with a St. Louis dealer's label and burglars' tools were found. The job is believed to be one of professionals.

DRANK AND QUARRELLED

Man Held on Charge of Slaying Brother With an Axe

Plymouth, Mass., Aug. 18.—Peter Goncaloes of Halifax, twelve miles from here, was held without bail in Plymouth district court for a hearing on charge of murdering his brother Vincent in their cottage at Lake Monponsett.

The police say the brothers drank and quarrelled, that a challenge was passed and that Peter killed his brother with one blow from an axe.

WEATHER TABLE OF YEARS AGO

Visit of Lafayette to Baltimore in 1825

(From the Masonic Mirror and Mechanic's Intelligencer, Boston, Saturday, Jan. 8, 1825.)

LAFAYETTE IN BALTIMORE.

On the 27th ult., Gen. Lafayette dined with his Masonic brethren in Baltimore, (in compliance with an invitation given by the Grand Lodge of Maryland, on his first visit to that city,) accompanied by his son and secretary. The entertainment appears to have been splendid and worthy of the occasion. The following account of it, is given in the Baltimore Patriot.

"We shall endeavor to give our readers some idea of the hall and its splendid decorations—but we feel certain that any written description cannot do justice to the taste and elegance which were displayed on the occasion. It is proper to remark that it is only a short time since this property was taken by Mr. Barnum as an appendage to his extensive hotel, and that in the hands of its new proprietor it has undergone a thorough and costly repair, including new furniture, hangings, etc.

The tables, four in number, ranged the whole length of the hall from west to east, and at the latter extremity, terminated in an elevated table which crossed the hall from north to south.

In the centre of the east end of the hall was placed a beautiful marble bust of the Father of his country—one of the brightest ornaments of the Masonic Fraternity. It rested on a pedestal of dark polished marble. Suspended over the bust were the Golden, Square and Compass, and surmounting the whole was a rich crimson canopy, the summit of which was crowned by the American Eagle.

At the south east angle of the hall was placed an elevated, full length transparent portrait of Gen. Lafayette in military dress.

At the north east angle was a corresponding transparent painting of Washington, as commander in chief of the armies of the United States also surmounted by a motto: "Washington, Columbia's Boast."

The R. W. Grand Master of Maryland Benjamin C. Howard, presided at the entertainment, taking his seat at the centre of the elevated table in the east. On his left was seated the guest whom all hearts delight to honor.

The entertainment itself we venture to assert, has never been excelled in this country. The tables were decorated in a splendid and tasteful manner with appropriate masonic emblems and fancy devices, and presented everything which could temp the palate or delight the eye. After the sumptuous repast had been concluded and the cloth removed, many excellent sentiments were given.

PREDICTIONS OF THE WEATHER.

Dr. Adam Clarke has lately communicated to the public some meteorological observations, in which he remarks,—"From my earliest childhood I was bred up on a little farm, and as I found that much of our success depended on a proper knowledge and management of the weather, I was led to study it ever since I was eight years of age." In this science, he states that he has attained extraordinary success; as a result of which he advocates the weather table attributed to Dr. Herschel, but which the son of that gentleman has recently disclaimed on the part of his late father.

Dr. Clarke says that the accuracy of this table is truly amazing; and that if Dr. Herschel had lived for no other purpose than to construct it, posterity would have reason to bless his memory

Some of our readers may perhaps thank us for inserting this table, as arranged by Dr. Clarke.

SELF MOVING MACHINE.

Dr. D. M. Donald of Sunderland, (Eng.) has invented a "self moving machine" for travelling on roads, which has carried seven persons. It is propelled by means of treddles; a man sits behind working the same, and there is a fly wheel operating upon two cog wheels, which operate upon a square axle. The man behind has little labor, as, from the velocity of the fly wheel, together with the aid of a lever, which is in the hand of a person in front steering, he has not often to put his feet to the treddles.

LAFAYETTE HOTEL.

The new building erected for a tavern and boarding house, opposite the Boylston Market, has been rented to Col. Ethan Cobb, formerly keeper of the hotel in Broomfield's lane. A new line of stages runs from the Lafayette tavern to Providence. Our townsman, Penniman, has just finished a sign for the Lafayette Hotel, in this city, which represents Gen Lafayette on one side, as the youthful warrior, and on the other, the venerable sage, viewing the great changes of our country since his first visit. The painting is beautiful, and the likeness very correct.

LAW CASE.

A few weeks since, all the journeyman tailors in the village of Buffalo, N. Y., had what they called a turn out for higher wages. On the next day several of them were arraigned at a special court of sessions, on complaint of their employers, for a conspiracy.

It was urged on the part of the prosecution, that every combination to injure one, or more individuals, or to do acts which are prejudicial to the community was a conspiracy; and that journey men who refuse to work in consequence of a combination until their wages are raised, may be indicted for a conspiracy. That their combination, and not their refusal to work, constituted the crime.

Decisions in the English and New York courts were cited in evidence. For the defendants, it was contended, that the doctrine of conspiracy as applicable to journeymen, as in this case, was not known at common law, that it was a specfal statute in England and did not exist in this country, and that to make the conduct of these defendants criminal, was contrary to the bill of rights.

The first jury could not agree, a second was impanelled, who found the defendants guilty, and they were fined two dollars each.

LIFE PRESERVER.

(From the Liverpool Mercury)

Mr. Scheffer has made trial of his life preserver. He threw himself into the water at Temple gardens, and buckled a preserver under his arms; he then swam through Blackfriar's bridge with great velocity. At different times, as he proceeded, he unbuckled the preserver, squeezed the wind out of it, filled it, and buckled it on. All this filling and emplying was the work of a moment. Crowds of boats accompanied Mr. Scheffer, and four or five lads swam over to him and supported themselves down the river upon his preserver, without the slightest effort.

As soon as he approached near to London bridge, he obliged the boys to leave him. He had determined to leap from London bridge into the water, but was dissuaded from so dangerous an experiment, by the argument that his preserver might, by preventing him from sinking deep enough, shake him by the violence of the concussion.

He swam to the centre arch and darted through it with impetuosity. When he reached the eddies in the river he felt great suction, and is convinced that he would have been overwhelmed, had he not had the preserver on. He carried a bottle of spirits and a glass in his hand. He was two hours in the water.

CITY COUNCIL

APPOINTMENT.

The Mayor forwarded the appointment of Edward J. Cooper as a special constable, at Boulevard hall, on the Wollaston boulevard. Confirmed.

RATE OF INTEREST.

The Mayor forwarded a communication from the City Treasurer asking that the rate of interest on the Houghs Neck school, new streets and widening Hancock street orders be changed from four to four and one-half percent.

Councilman Bailey offered an order changing the rate which was referred to the Finance Committee.

Adjourned at 8.06.

Immediately after the adjournment, the Finance committee held a meeting to act on the two matters, and it is probable that another special meeting will be called for next Monday evening to act on reports. It will also be necessary to draw jurors and to act on the appointment of election officers which under the law must be made in August.

MISS PHILLIPS RETURNING

Pupil of Woodward Has Been in Scotland

President Whiton of the City Council received a cable from his mother Monday night, [illegible] in Europe stating that she was sailing on the Creole a Quincy built steamship which was launched in 1916 and has been running between New York and New Orleans. All the cablegram said was "Sailing Creole." By this he understands that she either has sailed by this time or was about to sail on the steamship and that she will probably reach home the latter part of this week or the first of next week.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Phillips of West Quincy expect their daughter, Miss Mabel B. Phillips is on her way home from a visit in Scotland and England. Miss Phillips is a pupil at the Woodward Institute.

Washington has been informed that 2500 Americans are waiting in Genoa, Italy, for transportation back to the United States. The Consul says that from reports he received, 5000 more Americans will come from Switzerland as soon as transportations can be arranged.

Miss Elsa Johnson and Miss B. S. Beal of Milton were passengers on the S. S. Laconia which arrived at New York on Monday from Liverpool, having sailed August 8.

The Quincy list of European travellers includes:

Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Edwards.
Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Reed.
Miss Laura Tolman.

ATTITUDE OF UNITED STATES

Will Not Interfere In the Japanese-German Tangle

WILSON WILL NOT COMMENT

Considers Assurance From Tokio Is Made In Good Faith and Regards It as Satisfactory—Possible Results of Coming Conflict Are Discussed by Army Strategists at Washington

Washington, Aug. 18.—Japan's sudden entry into the European war situation as a factor that might quickly increase the range of the great conflict to the Far East commanded wide attention both among officials of the Washington government and diplomats generally.

The attitude of the United States, it became clear, would be one of non-interference in the controversy between Japan and Germany.

This was reflected somewhat in the studied reticence of both President Wilson and Secretary Bryan. The president asked whether the assurance of Japan that she would eventually restore Kiau Chau to China in case that territory was obtained from Germany, was regarded as satisfactory here.

Mr. Wilson replied that he saw no reason to question Japan's good faith in that connection, but carefully refrained from expresssing any opinion on the merits of the ultimatum or Japan's attitude. Published reports to the effect that the president had expressed himself as satisfied with Japan's course were promptly denied by Secretary Tumulty at the direction of the president.

"The president feels it incumbent upon himself," said Tumulty, "as the head of a neutral nation, to express no opinions whatsoever on the attitude of Japan or any other country."

Diplomatic dispatches brought no further information as to the future course of either Japan or Germany, but official Washington was diverted for the moment from the thought of the hostilities in Europe to a hypothetical consideration of how American possessions in the Far East ultimately might be affected by the results of an extension of the war to the Orient.

Army strategists discussed among themselves whether Japan might not also take the German possessions in the Samoan and Caroline islands, which are on the American line of communication to the Philippines, and how that eventually might affect the interests of the American government in the Pacific.

It was pointed out in Japanese circles that the ultimatum to Germany applies specifically to the German occupation of territory on the Asiatic mainland, nothing being said about the German insular possessions in Australasia. However, it was explained that, in the event of Germany's refusal to meet the Japanese demands and of Japanese success in war, the conditions imposed upon Germany might be extended so as to include the cession to Japan and to her ally, Great Britain, of all of these island groups gathered in by Germany during the past quarter of a century.

ULTIMATUM STIRS CHINA

Her Troops May Try to Recapture Territory Now Held by Germany

China is deeply stirred over the Japanese ultimatum to Germany. Her statesmen see in it an attempt on Japan's part to take possession of the rich German colony. It is reported at Pekin that a strong detachment of Chinese troops has been started toward Kiau Chau, apparently for the purpose of forestalling any outsiders and recapturing the territory for the Chinese republic.

Copies of the Japanese ultimatum to Germany were received at Pekin. Simultaneously came word that Japanese transports have been sighted off Dalny. It is believed to be the Japanese plan to have a strong force within striking distance of the Shantung peninsula when the time limit of the ultimatum expires.

Hub Tax Rate Boosted

Boston, Aug. 18.—The new tax rate of $17.50, an increase of 30 cents over the rate of last year, was announced by the city assessing department. Mayor Curley says the increase is due to the "absolute disregard for the rights of the public which characterized the administration of my immediate predecessor."

Cobbler Held as Counterfeiter

Lynn, Mass., Aug. 18.—Delfano R. Verantzo was arrested at his bench in a shoe shop here, charged with being one of a gang which has been flooding beaches with counterfeit coin.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES

Frank Cummings, 50, while at work cleaning windows on a Boston building, fell thirty feet and was killed.

Judge Jenney, in the equity motion session of the superior court at Boston, declined to appoint receivers for the Associated Trust, on the petition of unsecured creditors.

Henry E. Marsh, proprietor of the Cooley House, Springfield, Mass., filed a petition in bankruptcy, scheduling liabilities of $84,669.

VENOMOUS WEAPONS.

Blowguns of the Mangeromas and Their Poisoned Arrows.

The mysterious poison with which some of the South American tribes smear the points of their arrows is a thick sirup made by boiling together parts of the Strychnos toxifera vine and other plants and a number of the deadly venomous black ants of the Amazon region.

Instead of a bow the Mangeromas use a blowgun, a very ingenious weapon. It is made from a tall, hollow reed that grows near the river banks, and at one end it has a mouthpiece made from the hollowed half of the fruit of the Aracara palm. When the hunter sees a monkey or bird in the top of a tree, often 100 feet above him, he puts a poisoned arrow in the tube and raises the mouthpiece to his lips. With his left hand he finds the necessary elevation, fills his lungs with air and blows into the tube with no apparent exertion. The arrow flies out swiftly and silently. Almost as soon as the animal is struck it drops to the ground paralyzed.

The flesh of the game is not injured by the poison. Like the venom of snakes, it is dangerous when introduced into the vascular system, but harmless when taken into the stomach. The action of the drug on birds culminates in from three to four minutes; a monkey died in five minutes and a three toed sloth expired in seven minutes. A human being cannot survive more than fifteen minutes. The slightest scratch means inevitable death. Even the Indians know no antidote.—St. Paul Pioneer-Press.

DIAGNOSING DISEASE.

A Plea For Annual Medical Examinations For Every One.

We have heard too much about the rights of the individual; let us know more about his duties. Too much stress has been laid on the sacredness of private property and too little on the duty of all to contribute to the welfare of the whole. Preventive medicine has demonstrated in a practical way the force of the Biblical statements that no man liveth to himself alone and that every man is his brother's keeper.

If preventive medicine is to bestow on man its richest service the time must come when every citizen will submit himself to a thorough medical examination once a year or oftener. The benefits which would result from such a service are so evident to medical men that detail is not desirable. When recognized in their early stages most of the diseases which now prevail are amenable to treatment.

The early recognition of tuberculosis, cancer and heart disease, with the elimination of the more acute infectious diseases, would add something like fifteen years to the average life, besides saving much in invalidism and suffering. The ultimate goal of science is the domination of the forces of nature and their utilization in promoting the welfare of mankind. Science must discover the facts and medicine must make the application for either cure or prevention.—Victor C. Vaughan, M. D., in Journal of American Medical Association.

An Odd Problem.

Can you place ten lumps of sugar in three teacups so that there is an odd number of lumps in each cup? A statistician to whom this problem was once propounded declared it was impossible to accomplish such a feat, but the following explanation shows that it is not only possible, but very easy to accomplish: Put one lump in one cup, two lumps in another cup and seven lumps in the third cup, and then put the cup with one lump in the cup with the two lumps. By placing the cup that holds one lump inside the one that holds two lumps it can be correctly stated that every cup contains an odd number of lumps, for if a cup contains another cup it also contains the contents of that second cup.

Consoling.

Noticing that his lady cashier was weeping copiously and sucking her finger, the proprietor asked her what was the matter.

Sobbingly she told him she had p-p-inched her f-f-finger in the cash register.

"Never mind, little girl!" he said. "A great many more cashiers got pinched before there were any cash registers."—Indianapolis Star.

The Worm Turned.

"Is any one waiting on you?" finally asked the haughty saleslady, condescending at last to notice the shopping person.

"I'm afraid not," replied the latter. "My husband was—I left him outside—but I'm afraid he's become disgusted and gone home."—Toledo Blade.

Woman, Lovely Woman.

Every time a new young man calls the girl who wouldn't know a waffle griddle from a nutmeg grater gets terribly domestic in the trend of her conversation.—Florida Times-Union.

To Make Them Smart.

"Mr. Pedagog is an old time teacher. He believes in the rod to brighten up dull boys."

"Well, isn't that the natural way to make them smart?"

Elephants.

In India elephants over twelve and up to forty-five years of age are deemed the best to purchase and will generally work until eighty years old.

I would rather sit on a pumpkin and have it all to myself than be crowded on a velvet cushion.—Thoreau.

ROLL OF MONEY MISSING.

When Epiir Hummick went to sleep last Sunday afternoon in his boarding house in the Fore River district he had $290 safely stowed away in his trousers pocket. He woke up some time later, but feeling for his roll it was gone. No one seemed to know how it disappeared, and after a time he reported it to the police. Capt. McKay made an investigation and this morning Antony Slisarsicy was arraigned before Judge Avery in the district court charged with having stolen the money. Antony denied the allegation, and apparently there was no one who saw him take the money. After hearing the evidence the court continued the case until Saturday, in order that further investigation might be made.

FORE RIVER PETITION.

A petition containing the signatures of the thousands of employees of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation, as well as similar petitions from other shipbuilding firms, had their effect, and these with the good work of the New England representatives in Congress did the trick.

The conference report as it reached the Senate on Monday contained all of the objectionable features, the main objection being to the provision which would have admitted to the American coastwise trade all foreign-built vessels taking American register within two years.

Had this provision passed it would have been possible to build merchant ships on the other side for the American coastwise trade, and that they would have been built there rather than America was well established from the fact that labor is much cheaper abroad than in the United States.

HOW THEY VOTED.

Twenty Republicans and twenty Democrats voted against accepting the conference report, while seventeen Democrats, two Republicans and one Progressive voted for it. Senator Gorman who championed the report arraigned the Democrats declaring that they were championing an "Offensive monopoly" and borrowed Republican arguments of un-American principles of protection.

As finally agreed to, the bill, besides providing for the registry of foreign-built ships, authorizes the President, in his discretion, to suspend provisions of the law requiring all watch officers of American vessels in the foreign trade to be citizens of the United States, and requiring survey, inspection and measurement of vessels admitted to registry by officers of the United States.

The Senate subsequently passed a joint resolution granting permission to the American Red Cross to charter a ship which may fly the American flag. This provision was included among the Senate amendments to the House bill, but made a separate matter by Monday's action, that the registry bill might not be delayed.

NEW ENGLAND HAPPY.

No legislation during this Congress has cheered the New England contingent here like the action of the Senate Monday in rejecting the conference report on the emergency shipping bill. All immediate danger, at least, of encroachment upon coastwise shipping has passed. There is no likelihood of it during this Congress and probably none at all. President Wilson announced Monday morning that he preferred the House bill to the Senate text, which probably had much influence with the subsequent action in the Senate.

All New England senators present voted against the conference report and later voted to accept the House bill. That measure now goes to the President for signature and the fight, that looked hopeless almost up to the hour when Congress assembled Monday proved a general surprise. Senator Weeks was one of those who spoke in the Senate against the conference report. He presented the protest of great numbers of signers from the Fore River ship building works.

Representative Gallivan of Boston, called attention to the outcome as something for which Boston people should congratulate themselves. "It was Mayor Curley and Boston business men who came down to Washington a few days ago," said Mr. Gallivan, "and began a battle." They waked the shipyards and stirred other cities into action. The Boston congressmen stayed right on the job here. Sentiment was aroused and the result you now see. It was really a fine piece of work on the part of Boston."

NOW WEARS AN ARTIFICIAL LEG

Hero Gisburne Able to Get About With Cane

Edward A. Gisburne, wireless operator on the U. S. S. Florida, who lost his leg in the first days fighting at Vera Cruz, returned to his home at 12 Oakley street, Dorchester, this morning after a two days' visit with his grandmother, Mrs. Catherine Allen of 53 Summer street, Quincy.

Mr. Gisburne now wears an artificial leg. It was attached for the first time last Friday and the crutches in use since he left the Hospital ship Solace at the Brooklyn Navy Yard were then laid aside. He is getting about with little difficulty with the assistance of a cane.

Since his accident his rating in the navy has been advanced and he has been voted a medal of honor and a gratuity of $100 in gold for extraordinary conduct in battle. His term of service expires on Aug. 27 of this month.

Mr. Gisburne is the proud possessor of a watch purchased from a purse contributed by the wireless operators aboard his ship, as well as many other tokens given him. Clarence Burgin, treasurer of the Quincy fund, turned over the money contributed to the "hero fund" on Monday and Mr. Gisburne is profuse in his thanks.

Before entering the navy Mr. Gisburne followed newspaper work, and it is probable that he will, as soon as circumstances permit, resume that occupation.

WHITE SOX IN THE LEAD

Win From Red Sox in Ward Two League

By winning from the Red Sox on Monday in the Ward Two playground league, the White Sox go into first place. The final score was 3 to 2, and the game was a pitchers' battle throughout. Gamble who pitched for the loser allowed five hits and gave two base-on balls, while Ike Tower of the White Sox allowed five hits and passed five men.

Shay played a dandy game in the field for the winners making several fine catches. Greenhalgh, who plays first base for the winners made a dandy one- handed catch of a red-hot grounder in the sixth inning. There were two men on bases, due to passes by Tower when Early came to the bat. He picked out a nice slow one that Tower threw and it started on a line for first base about two feet above the ground. Greenhalgh made a dive for the ball, just managing to get his bare hand on it. If he had not made the stop the men on second and third would have scored and the game would have been tied up.

Three teams, White Sox, Red Sox and Tigers have been tied for first and second places in the league for the past two weeks and this win by the White Sox will probably capture the championship.

Yale Engages Nickalls For Another Year.

CHIEF MEYERS' BONE PLAY.

Nap Rucker of Brooklyn Team Will Be Unable to Pitch For Some Time—New Record For Motorboat—Public Still Pays to See Fake Fights.

Captain Bayne Denegre of the Yale university crew for next year has announced that after consultation with the graduate rowing committee he has arranged with Guy Nickalls of England again to coach at Yale and that the same stroke taught by Mr. Nickalls last year will be taught to both the university and freshman crews next season.

Captain Denegre also announced that he has arranged with Eugene Giannini to again join Mr. Nickalls in the coaching of Yale crews.

Mr. Nickalls planned to arrive in New York about Oct. 1 for a period of six weeks and be in New Haven in the spring from February until the race. Mr. Giannini will be at New Haven all through the college year.

The following constitute the graduate committee: Frederic W. Allen, 1900, captain of '99 and 1900 crews, chairman; Payne Whitney, '98, captain of '98 crew; John Goetchius, '94; Alfred Cowles, '86, captain of '86 crew; Augustus S. Blagden, '01S, captain of '01 crew; W. Averill Harriman, '13; Alfred Swayne, '92; John C. Greenleaf, '90S.

There is much significance in Captain Denegre's announcement. On the surface it would seem to indicate a fixed purpose in New Haven to give the English style a test to the finish. Nothing is said as to the rigging of the boats, but there is little room for doubt that Nickalls' ideas as to this are also to prevail. That both crews are to row under Nickalls' domination makes it clear that the Yale management is well satisfied with the results of the season just past.

Chief Meyers, the Giant catcher, is another who has his name written in the "hall of fame." He scored two "bones" in one day, and he did it in Cincinnati too. That may excuse him and it may not. But anyway Meyers, who will never set any records for base stealing, saw a beautiful chance for theft in this particular game. He started at full speed—100 yards in 42 seconds—amid yells from his team mates and triumphantly anchored at the keystone sack to find that he had pulled a "John Anderson."

A few innings later, just to show that it's possible for one fellow to do a couple of foolish things in one day, Meyers heaved the ball down to second in an attempt to catch a man off the bag. The bases were filled at the time, two were out, and the man on third had almost as big a lead as the man on second. Result—the man on third just about walked in, the Giants, flustered, began to throw the ball around, and about three runs were scored before the excitement died down.

Nap Rucker of the Brooklyn team, who up to this year was considered one of the best pitchers in the National league, underwent an examination by a physician, which showed that the muscles of his pitching arm have contracted into a sort of a bunion, which will probably prevent him pitching for some time. His trouble is technically described by the physician as deltoid bursitis. The only cure for the trouble, according to Dr. Thayer, who made the examination, is absolute rest.

This world may be heartily disgusted with fakes and fourflushers, as per the following paragraph printed in an eastern newspaper:

"The American public is heartily sick of that class of fighters who continually stall off challengers and demand fortunes in sure thing money, independent of the result of the bouts. The thing has been overdone, and the champion who will go out and prove himself a good sport as well as a great fighter will become a popular idol such as were John L. Sullivan, Bob Fitzsimmons, Kid Lavigne, George Dixon and Terry McGovern.

But what we'd like to know is: Why, if the public is so all fired weary of the gentlemen in question, does it keep on ambling up to the boxoffice and handing these fighters the change? The dear old public is evidently not too sick to pay the freight.

Motorboat owners throughout the country are still talking about the record breaking performance of Baby Speed Demon II., which carried off the championship cup at Lake George last week. Driven by Robert Edgren, the boat owned by Mrs. Paula H. Blackton set a new world's record for the thirty mile course in travelling the distance at an average speed of better than fifty miles an hour. The regatta at Lake George was one of the most successful ever held in this country.

Europe, before the war, awoke to the march of progress in swimming and swept aside tradition to adopt modern American ideas. Until quite recently both in England and on the continent it was heresy to even compare the elementary crawl with the breast stroke as a means of teaching the principles of natation. But things are changing fast. A few months ago Austria began to favor the new American method, then Great Britain made a bid for Matthew Mann, one of our leading crawl advocates, and then Germany came around. Professor Manz, the foremost of her instructors, proclaiming broadcast that George Corsan, originator of the elementary crawl school, is the greatest teacher in the world.

NEW SHAMROCK IN PORT

Racer Will Be Hauled Out at New York For the Winter

New York, Aug. 18.—Sir Thomas Lipton's cup challenger, Shamrock IV., was warped alongside the dock of a South Brooklyn shipyard and workmen began to remove the ketch-rig under which the sloop had sailed most of the way of her voyage from England to this country.

Captain Turner, sailing master of the Shamrock, said the Shamrock would not be re-rigged, but would be hauled out, boxed up and placed in winter quarters at once. Sailing master and crew were greatly disappointed because the cup yacht races would not be sailed this year.

ADVERTISE IN THE LEDGER

FIELD DAY AT WEYMOUTH

Demonstration of the La France Fire Apparatus

The King Cove Boat Club is so famous for its hospitality that it is needless to enlarge on it. Saturday was the annual field day and the club kept open house all day, dispensing good cheer to all the guests.

At 2 o'clock the land sports began, in charge of Mrs. Edward Parker and Mrs. Charles Abbott. The boys three-legged race was won by Charles Wolfe with Alex. McPhail second; the boys' potato race won by Edward Gill; the girls' potato race, Muriel Malley first, Clare O'Dowd second; marshmallow race Miss Alma Terrio of Salem first, Mrs. George Abbott second; peanut race, Mildred Morgan first, Mrs. George Abbott second; girls' rowboat race, Ida Bates first, Marion Austin second.

The prizes were more elaborate than are usually provided on such occasions. Miss Alma Terrio the winner in the marshmallow race was awarded a handsome hand painted china plate. Miss Terrio's family was one of the many to lose their homes in the Salem fire and says the plate is the first article she has toward a new home.

Excitement was not lacking, there being several "thrillers." The first of which was when the cry "Man overboard" went up from a motor boat in midstream. That there was no fatality was due to the celerity of several of the club men who hastened to the scene in boats. The men in the water were Frank Hawkes and Oliver Bean, who were thrown from the tender of Mr. Bean's motor boat. Mr. Hawkes was very nearly overcome and was kept afloat by Mr. Bean until help arrived who then swam ashore.

After the girls' rowing race, Miss Viola Wolfe one of the participants, collapsed on the pier, and but for the speedy action of her father, Phillip W. Wolfe, would have dropped to the water below. Restoratives were used and after a two hours rest Miss Wolfe was taken to her home. No serious results are anticipated.

The more superstitious of the guests looked for a third accident, and they were not disappointed, for as if to bear out the "rule of three" Harold White was the next victim and went overboard from a row boat. He quickly swam ashore without assistance.

Temperance drinks and ice cream were served by P. W. Wolfe, Mrs. Wolfe and Mrs. Walker and a grab bag was in charge of I. W. Morgan. The arrival on the club house grounds of the La France combination caused a stir, and when it left, all the men who could board it left also.

Supper was served at 6 to 175 members and guests. This was a club affair, but the services of the Ladies' Auxiliary were indispensible and a committee of ladies assisted, consisting of Mrs. Irving Morgan, Mrs. Charles Abbott, Mrs. Lester Culley, Mrs. Henry Miller, Mrs. McNeil, Mrs. Sadie Miller and the men were represented in the kitchen by Philip Wolfe and Irving Morgan. The menu consisted of cold meats, salads, beans, pies, coffee and cream.

When all had partaken, a musical program was rendered by the Lotus Mandolin Trio. First Mandolins, Arthur B. Szidat of Somerville and Miss Ethel Andrews of Ayer; second mandolin, Frank W. Palmer of Roslindale and Miss E. Hazel Fallis of Somerville accompanist. Their numbers were "The Meteor", Rubensteins "Melody in F", "The Assembly," "Good bye waltz," "Chung Loo," and "Simple confession." Mrs. C. W. Schnetzer sang "I love you" and "Absent," and responded to encores. Mrs. Mary R. Flint was accompanist and also played for the Virginia reel. Mrs. I. W. Morgan gave a reading entitled "Retribution."

It was announced that the judges had decided to run the motor boat race over on Saturday, August 29. The reason for doing this is that John Veader appointed himself a committee of one to salute the boats as they passed Hunt's hill and the shot he fired was mistaken by four of the racers for the signal to turn. Two did not turn and in fairness to all the judges made this decision.

Miss Mabelle Carlton played the piano for the tango and other up-to-date steps, of which there was a pleasing demonstration.

Mrs. John I. Heibeck, president of the Ladies' Auxiliary had as guests at the affair Mrs. Charles Baldwin, Miss Agnes Baldwin, Mrs. C. W. Schnetzer, and during the races the "Gloria" the Heibeck's boat conveyed a large party to the course.

Mrs. Mary E. Mahoney, Mrs. Levi Curtiss and Miss Lillian Curtiss were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Culley.

Others present were Miss Alma Terrio and Miss Mabelle Carlton of Salem Mr. and Mrs. Charles Abbott, Mr. and Mrs. George Abbott, Mr. and Mrs. Frank A. Hagar, Francis E. Hagar, Mrs. F. W. Dixon, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Parker, Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Carter, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph McEnroe, Mr. and Mrs. John Wolfe, Ed Culley, Elizabeth Holbrook, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Hilton, Dorothy Hilton, Mr. and Mrs. John I. Heibeck, Mr. and Mrs. Philip W. Wolfe, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Winward, Mrs. Ethel Kelley, Mrs. F. A. Loud, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Loud, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Miller, Mrs. Mary Cox, Miss Pillsbury, Mrs. Scoville, Mrs. George Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Lester Culley, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Austin, Mr. and Mrs. Harry A. Bailey and family, Miss Laura Egan, Mrs. Oliver Horton, Mrs. Charles Nash, Nathan Nash, Mrs. Ida Bates, Mrs. Clara Wilder, Mrs. Mary Brassil, John W. Heibeck.

W. R. C. FUNERAL.

The funeral of Mrs. Elizabeth Denbroeder, widow of Adrian Denbroeder, was held at the East Weymouth Congregational church Sunday at 2 P. M. Rev. Edward Torrey Ford, pastor of the church, of which Mrs. Denbroeder was a member, conducted the service. His theme was "God's arching sky, above us when we live or die." A quartette composed of Mrs. Edith C. Page, Miss Ethel Raymond, Mrs. Ella Bates and Miss Susie Raymond sang "Jesus Saviour pilot me," "Still with thee," and "Perfect peace." The burial service of the W. R. C. was read by the officers of Corps 102, of which Mrs. Denbroeder was a charter member, viz: President, Mrs. Agnes Baldwin; S. V. P., Mrs. Annie Jordan; J. V. P. Mrs. Ida Keene, chaplain, Mrs. Eliza Ferris; color bearer, Mrs. Sadie Wolfe and acting color bearers Mrs. Mary E. Mahoney, Mrs. Isabelle Wollaver and Mrs. Marian Bailey. Miss Ethel Raymond presided at the organ and played Chopin's funeral march.

NEW FIRE APPARATUS.

A La France combination chemical and hose auto came from Providence, R. I., on Saturday and was demonstrated to the committee which was appointed at the special town meeting to purchase auto apparatus for the Fire department.

The start was made at the King Cove Boat Club house where Engineer "Philly" Wolfe left the ham he was busily carving to an assistant and got aboard. The machine got a test at the start as the club house is under a hill and it was necessary to climb a sharp incline of ungraded grass land from a standing start. The 70 horse power engine did it easily and quickly, an important factor, as the machine would be called upon to cover a large ungraded area on the shore, in order to get close to cottages.

Mr. Stone was taken on at his garage, and with G. H. Hopkins of the Combination Ladder Co., of Providence, R. I., the present owners in charge, and C. N. Richardson, Jr., of the same city at the wheel, the real demonstration began.

At Thomas's Corner ten men were in the machine, and, headed for East Weymouth, went up the Cemetery Hill at 35 miles an hour, took King Oak Hill at 40 miles, slowing down half way up to pass a team, hit a 60 mile clip in the vicinity of the High school which is more speed than would be needed in actual service.

East Weymouth Engine House was reached in four minutes, thence to Lovell's Corner, four minutes; to Nash's Corner via Lake View Park, three and one half minutes; to Columbian Square, two and one half minutes; on the last lap hitting a clip of 65 miles an hour. The road was rough in places, but little jar was felt by the occupants.

The chauffeur, C. N. Richardson, was entirely unfamiliar with the roads and demonstrated to the committee the facility with which the machine could speed up and tone down in passing vehicles and pedestrians, proving that a careful driver could quickly reach a fire without endangering the lives of firemen or pedestrians.

Joseph "Fay" Phelan of South Quincy continues to be successful in the dash events at athletic meets, and Saturday took first place in the century at the field day of the Amoskeag Textile Mills at Manchester, N. H. Phelan made the distance in 10 1-5s. It was his third successive win from scratch in three successive Saturdays.

The Haunted House

A Story of Mexico.

By F. A. MITCHEL

"Is there a hacienda near by where I can stop for the night?" I asked a man I met on the road. I was traveling in the province of San Luis Potosi in Mexico.

"No, senor; there is nothing within a convenient distance where one can find entertainment. There is a deserted house about two miles down the road, but I would not advise you to stop there. You had better go back to Venado."

I had come from Venado, a distance of eight miles. To go back and return to where I was would be a round trip of sixteen miles. I was well mounted, but did not care for such an additional journey in any event. I asked the man to tell me more about the deserted house.

"It was formerly the country place of a Spaniard who lived there with his wife—he a crusty old man, she a beautiful young woman. He was jealous of her, and a tragedy occurred in the house. Some say he murdered her lover, and others say he murdered both her and her lover. At any rate, he disappeared, leaving the house with all the furniture in it, and so it has remained to the present day."

"Is it locked?"

"Oh, yes; it is locked, but you will have no difficulty in getting into it."

"I have provisions in my haversack. Why should I not go in there, roll myself in my blanket and sleep till early morning, then resume my journey?"

"Well, senor," replied the man, "there is nothing to prevent your doing that, but I would not do it for all the gold there is in Mexico."

"What is there to fear?"

"Men have slept there who have never been seen or heard of afterward. Men have slept there who have told fearful tales."

This was not encouraging, but I was familiar with the superstition of the lower class of Mexicans and knew that they were very easily frightened. I must either sleep in this deserted house or return to Venado or bivouac. The latter I did not wish to do, for a norther was blowing and a fine rain was falling. So I thanked the man for his information and rode on.

THERE LAY THE BODY OF A MAN.

I reached the house just before dark, and an attractive place it must have been in its prime.

The house had been handsomely furnished, but that must have been many years before, for, though the framework of the furniture was solid as ever, the woven fabrics were in tatters. And yet the place looked as if persons had used it since the olden time, when it was occupied regularly. There were bits of food scattered about and other evidences of the sojourn of human beings. Perhaps, I thought, these things were left by those persons of whom the man I met on the road told me. The first thing I did was to gather some wood which I found scattered about the place and, putting it in the great fireplace, soon had a cheerful blaze, which I needed not only for warmth, but to help banish the dreariness about me.

I ate my supper beside the fire. The apartment I occupied had apparently been the principal bedroom of the house in its better days, and its walls were hung with portraits. One I judged to be the likeness of the former owner, the Spaniard who had murdered his wife and her paramour. He certainly looked capable of murder. One of his eyes seemed to differ from the other; but, since I had no light except what came from the hearth, I could not make out wherein this difference lay.

Having finished my supper, I went out and gathered what green stuff I could find for my horse to eat—I had watered him shortly before at a runnel beside the road—and, returning, smoked a pipe beside the fire. I had no mind to occupy the bed with its enormous rotting canopy and other ttungs; so, rolling myself in my blanket, I lay down on the floor. But hard wood is not comfortable for a couch, and after fitful sleeping for a couple of hours I arose, mastered my repugnance to the moldering bedclothes and, spreading my blanket on them, tried again to sleep. But, the uncanny place getting the better of my feeling, I arose and got my 45 caliber revolver. There was nothing alive to shoot at, but somehow there was a sense of protection in the weapon.

How long I slept before waking again I don't know. I was, or thought I was, awakened by a sound. But there was a strong wind, and many parts of the house had rotted loose and rattled. The fire had gone out, but one of the heavier pieces of wood blazed and cast a lurid light about the apartment. Directly opposite was the portrait I have mentioned, and the eye which I had noticed being unlike the other seemed to me to belong to a human being and was looking straight at me.

I rubbed my own eyes to see more clearly, and when I looked again the human expression had gone out of the eye of the portrait. Thinking that I must have been mistaken, I composed myself to sleep. Naturally I thought of my money and my weapon. The former was in a belt made for the purpose of carrying funds and strapped around my waist. The revolver was in my hand on the bed.

My next awakening came from a heavy weight falling on the floor in the room above. Then came the sound of whistling wind, followed by a cry. Then all was still again. In a few minutes the stillness was broken by frightful shrieks. From the moment of the first sound I sat up, clutching my revolver. My gaze lighted on the portrait of the old Spaniard, and it had again become human.

I cannot say that I was frightened, but I will assert positively that I was mad. Yielding to an impulse which I cannot well describe, I raised my revolver and sent a bullet straight at the eye that caused the commotion within me. And so sure was my aim that an open space was left where the eye had been.

Something fell on the floor of the adjoining room. The sound seemed to come from behind where the portrait was hanging. Throwing myself from the bed, recocking my revolver with my right thumb and snatching a burning brand from the fireplace, I ran through a doorway and stood on the other side of a partition. There lay the body of a man. I had shot him in the eye and pierced his brain.

The stillness was broken by some one running in the patio, but this was all the indication I had of the presence of any one except the dead man. I stood listening for some time, then was seized with a desire to get out of the place as soon as possible. I started for the patio, dropping my torch as I went that it might not make me an illuminated target, and, reaching the door of the house, gained the outside. There I stood trying to pull myself together.

There was a streak of dawn in the east. It tended to quiet the horror there was within me. After all, what was there to flee from? I could hear no sound from within, and all except the wind was still without. I was as well armed and had the same chance as any one else. I had killed a man, and I preferred to learn if possible whether I had been justified in doing so. Summoning my resolution, I reentered the house, peering through the dim light for any one who might be there.

I regained without opposition the room in which I had slept. There were embers on the hearth, and I rekindled the fire. There I stood with my back to it, waiting for the day to break. As soon as I could see without artificial light I went to the room, where the body lay in the same position I had left it. It was on the floor beside a table, and the table was directly under a hole in the partition, the latter being about the height of a man. I got up on the table, put my eye to the hole and looked into the bedroom.

Now I could form a theory. There had been two or more men in the house. One of them had looked through the hole, which formed an eye of the picture, and seen me on the bed. If he wished to rob me my revolver was in his way. An attempt had been made to frighten me, but whether to get an advantage over me or to drive me out of the house I could only conjecture. I inclined to the latter opinion.

Having gone thus far in my investigations, I resolved to go further. I ransacked the house. I looked into closets, up chimneys, under furniture. The last thing I did was to pull the clothing and mattresses off the bed on which I had slept. Out rolled a shower of gold coins.

It was now quite light, and I resolved to gather up the coins, hide them and report my experience at the next town at which I would stop.

I reported my find as I had intended to the police, informing them where I had hidden the gold pieces. They visited the house in question and recognized the man I had shot as a notorious bandit. They wondered when he had seen me lying on the bed that he had not shot at me through the partition, but I reminded them that this would have been difficult. Besides, it was doubtless to his interest to frighten me away.

I never heard that anything was done to prevent the premises from being used by bandits. The Mexican rural police are not very effective, and soon after my experience Governor Carranza started his rebellion against President Huerta.

Points for Mothers

What Children Should Eat.

"The best meats for children of all ages are crisp bacon, broiled and roast beef, lamb, mutton, chicken and white fish. If meat broths are used it should be remembered that they are valuable chiefly as stimulants and contain very little food substance," declares Miss Cora E. Binzel, instructor in the extension division of the University of Wisconsin.

"Between the fifth and tenth years the diet should still include a large amount of milk. New foods are gradually added until the child is eating practically the same food as the adults of the family. A well mixed diet, including a reasonable amount of vegetables and well ripened fruits, is always desirable. Individual preferences cannot always be overcome, but careful training will do much toward cultivating a taste for all kinds of food.

"In the adolescent period the large amount of food needed makes it important that it be of an easily digested kind, simple and rich in protein and mineral salts. The average active boy of fourteen will need quite as much food during the day as a grown man of sedentary habits.

"Egg lemonade, made with two yolks to a glass, is a valuable addition to the diet of the girl in her teens if she is pale and undernourished."

Teaching Baby to Walk.

Do not try to teach a baby to walk. As soon as its leg bones are strong enough it will stand and toddle of its own accord. You can, of course, guide it, but do not set it on its feet and make it stand and lead it by the hand when it doesn't want to go.

It is pitiable to see a weak legged little creature pulled along by the hand when its heavy body has no firm support from its frail legs and its mother or nurse is under the delusion that by making it walk thus she is strengthening its limbs.

Instead of this she is letting the child run the serious risk of being permanently deformed. It is thus that bow legs are formed.

The child should take exercise rolling and kicking on a rug. It may have its legs massaged twice a day with salt and water, but should have only as much exercise on its legs as it wishes to take.

Care of Baby's Ears.

Never by any chance should a baby's ears be filled with soapsuds in the daily bathing; neither should the finger be inserted in the orifice to dig out the soap left.

The washcloth should be rinsed, one corner folded softly to make a sort of small mop, and inserted very gently, never far and never forced.

To use any sort of implement, like a hairpin or the point of a toothpick or, indeed, anything that can possibly enter too far, is to perhaps cause loss of hearing that seems unaccountable.

If a child complains of earache do not gouge into the ears to extract any hard deposit that may have accumulated, but drop a very little melted petroleum jelly—not hot, but melted—from a spoon, insert very lightly a bit of absorbent cotton and cleanse the ear.

Tactless Parents.

In the Woman's Home Companion a story filled with observations of child life comments as follows on the everlasting question that parents ask their children, "Have you washed your face for supper?" The magazine says:

"This is not a happy greeting, as you will realize more keenly if you are able to think back into your own childhood. Very few people can think back definitely, but those who can must remember cautious homecomings by back ways, careful avoidance of mothers and fathers for a few minutes, knowing that the first word that those beloved people would speak would be one of disapproval. What, with torn clothes and dirty hands and coming in late, the return of the child can be and very often is a very trying ordeal."

Picturesque Garb For Boys.

The small boy just exalted to trouser suits signifies an appreciation for picturesque effects by wearing Oliver Twist raiment, comprising a pair of Knickerbockers fastened on a blouse, the whole displaying a far more generous use of material than poor Oliver's scanty clothes did.

Many mothers, however, still prefer the belted tunic and knickerbockers of time honored use, thinking that it suits the rotund figures of their young sons better than the new kind of dress. But there is a spice of novelty in the Oliver Twist design which is of appealing force.

Selecting Juvenile Shoes.

The footwear of small girls and boys is of exceeding importance to their appearance. Not only must the shoes be of the shape best calculated to the proper development of the feet, but they must be kept shapely. For mornings and play hours the best summer shoe is the high boot, laced or buttoned, in white canvas or in dark tan kid. Next to these comes the tie for semi-dress occasions. For parties are the patent leather sandals for boys and sandals in various shades for the girl, whose shoes and stockings invariably match the color of her dancing frock.

PROFFER OF GOOD OFFICES

Received In Friendly Spirit by the Nations at War

REPLIES ARE SENT TO WILSON

Offer of Mediation Acknowledged by All Except Russia—No Action Toward Acceptance Expected Until Some Great or Decisive Battles Have Been Fought Washington, Aug. 18.—Germany has acknowledged receipt of President Wilson's proffer of good offices in mediation or arbitration. All the warring countries except Russia have now replied.

The French foreign minister, Premier Viviani, replying to the American offer of mediation, remarking that France had been attacked despite her steady refusal to take the aggressive, says in thanking President Wilson: "You may be assured that the French government and people will recognize in your idea new evidence of your interest in the destinies of France."

The reply of the French premier is not understood to be final at the state department, nor as indicating an indisposition on the part of the French government to consider the proposal. It is construed only as a polite acknowledgement of the offer and about what was to be expected at this time.

The administration did not expect that mediation would be considered in the first heat of conflict and before any great and decisive battles had been fought. The offer was made simply to remind the participants in the war that the United States stands ready to act without discrimination in the effort to bring about a peace when the time is ripe.

Difficulties of communication with Berlin are taken as the cause of the delay in Emperor William's reply. All the others replied several days ago. It is known here that the offer has been received at the St. Petersburg foreign office, but because Russian officials say they have been unable to get it to Emperor Nicholas, acknowledgement has been delayed.

While none of the replies received from any of the European governments specifically reject the tender of good offices made by the United States, some acknowledgements are accompanied by statements of the replying nation's position in the conflict.

Department officials are inclined to regard the answers as non-committal and believe more definite answers may be given later, especially if any of the principals in the war show an inclination to treat for peace.

"MADE IN AMERICA"

Label Will Become More Familiar as Result of War Abroad

Secretary Lane believes that the effect of the European war will be a direct benefit to the American people in making them realize to a greater extent the value of their mineral resources.

"It is entirely possible," he declared, "to so utilize these resources and expand our industries that the label 'made in America' will become familiar to our own and foreign markets.

"Second only in importance to the food supply," said Lane, "is the supply of the necessary mineral products to meet requirements. One of the first effects of the war," he says, "has been to make us realize the interdependence of nations in the food supply."

Lane believes the United States could very largely make itself independent of the rest of the world in its manufactures, the main difficulties to overcome being the arrangement of the distribution system."

CAN FLY AMERICAN FLAG

Bill to Register Foreign-Built Vessels Becomes a Law

Washington, Aug. 18.—Congress passed the emergency shipping bill, which authorizes the president to admit foreign-built ships to American registry, so that commercial fleets may sail the seas under protection of the American flag while belligerents of Europe are at war and scouring the oceans for prizes. President Wilson signed the bill today.

The bill, besides providing for the registry of foreign-built ships, authorizes the president in his discretion to suspend provisions of the law requiring all watch officers of American vessels in the foreign trade to be citizens of the United States, and requiring survey, inspection and measurement of vessels admitted to registry by officers of the United States.

Honeymoon Interrupted

Worcester, Mass., Aug. 18.—While on the way to the railroad station with his bride of an hour, about to depart on his honeymoon, Joseph C. Lavoie was arrested on a charge of horse stealing.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

Board of Trade to Visit Local Industries

Plans for the annual tour of some of the industries of the city on Wednesday by the Board of Trade are completed, although at the present time the committee having the trip in charge have not obtained quite as many automobiles as it desires. It is hoped that by Wednesday there will be plenty of cars.

As now planned the party will meet at the rooms of the Board at noon when a light lunch will be served at 11.30. The party will start on its trip at 12.30 the first objective point being Squantum which will be reached via Coddington, Valley, Greenleaf and Hancock streets.

At 1 o'clock the party plan to be in vicinity of the Norfolk Downs depot where short calls will be made at the Wollaston Foundry, the Norfolk Iron Works and the Pneumatic Scale works, reaching the Boston Gear Works at 2 o'clock.

At 2.25 the party will reach the office of the Telephone Co. on Merrymount road. At 2.45 a stop will be made at the office of the Daily Ledger where the party will have an opportunity to see the afternoon edition of the Ledger run off.

It is planned to visit the quarry of J. S. Swingle at West Quincy which they will leave at 4 o'clock, arriving at the plant of the Quincy Column Turning Co. on Water street at 4.15.

At 4.30 they will reach the plant of the H. C. Smalley Granite Co. on Penn street from which point they go to the Baker Yacht Basin at Quincy Point. From there they go to Houghs Neck where dinner will be served at 5.30 at Norteman's Cafe.

MUSICALE AT WOLLASTON

Given at Residence of Mrs. Jessie L. Rogers

On Monday afternoon, a very pleasing musicale was given at the home of Mrs. Jessie L. Rogers, 150 Grand View avenue under the auspices of the fancy committee of the Wollaston Unitarian fair.

The program was given by Miss Hannah Bright, soprano; Mrs. Dorothy B. Carpenter, reader and William Weston pianist.

Two of McDowell's works, "Nautilas" and "To the sea," were the selected pieces rendered by Mrs. Weston, the well known Wollaston pianist.

Miss Bright, the soloist, left her home near Macon, Georgia, in May, and since then has been a pupil of Mrs. Edith Cary Page of Quincy.

Miss Bright has a very pleasing personality, and her rendering of the song groups especially, was delightful, the last number receiving an enthusiastic encore.

Mrs. Carpenter, from Lynn, won applause by her two readings, her last one gaining an encore. Her selections and rendering were both excellent.

Refreshments were served by Mrs. Bates, Mrs. Ayers, and Miss Lacy.

BULL PLOWS OF PERU.

Primitive Methods and Implements Still Used In Farming.

The tilling of the soil is done in the crudest way not only in Peru, but throughout the whole of South America. Outside of the wheat fields of the Argentine, the methods would not do credit to the Egyptians in the days of Rameses. In fact, the bull plow as it is used in Peru today dates back to the kings of the first dynasty of Egypt.

The plow, the Peruvian spade and the grub hoe, which latter is simply a crooked stick with an iron shoe, are the three implements of agriculture in Peru today. No implement is found to crush the hard lumps of ground in the plowed fields. This is done by the women and children with a short club like a ball bat. Corn is planted by using a sharp stick to make a hole in the ground. Then the kernel is dropped in the hole and covered by a push of the bare foot on the softened earth.

Rain is not a necessity in these valleys. The natives have made admirable irrigating ditches that convey an abundance of water to every portion of the cultivated fields. The water moistens the roots of the corn from day to day, or turned into the ditches that follow the cane fields it becomes a potent factor in the luxuriant growth of the sugar cane. The best sugar cane in the world is grown in Peru, but 90 per cent of it is used, I am told, to make rum.—National Magazine.

LUCERNE'S QUAINT BRIDGE.

In Its Center Is an Old Time Prison and Torture Chamber.

Lucerne, in Switzerland, possesses what is probably the most curious bridge in the world as well as one of the greatest historic interest. This bridge, known as the Kapellbruecke, or "Chapel bridge," crosses the River Reuss at its junction with Lake Lucerne. It was constructed so long ago as 1333 and for nearly 600 years has formed the chief avenue of traffic across the broad but sluggish stream. In other days the bridge extended its zigzag shape to nearly twice its present length and reached as far as the hofkirche, or cathedral, whence its name.

In the center of this covered wooden bridge stands the famous octagonal "wasserthurm," or water tower, where in olden times the municipal treasure was stored. For ages it was also used as a prison, and among its dungeons is a torture chamber. But the most unique feature of all consists of the series of curious pictures in the roof of the bridge. There are sixty-nine of these painted on triangular wooden panels fitted into the pitched roof of the bridge. One after another they tell the salient facts of Swiss history or portray events in the life of the saints of the town, St. Leodegar and St. Maurice.—Washington Star.

Footprints In Stone.

From time to time amateur geologists unhampered by "book learning" make as they suppose wonderful discoveries in the primeval rocks. They find what they hail not as footprints on the sands of time, but footprints of men and animals on flat rock surfaces and slabs of stone. The real origin of such hollows is now known to be the former presence of concretions which have in time been worn out. In every part of the earth such "footprints" have been found. The most remarkable of these is a print two feet long on the top of a lofty hill called Adam's peak, in the island of Ceylon, which is believed by the natives to be the stamp of the foot of Buddha as he left the earth and sprang into heaven, and it is accordingly an object of worship. —London Globe.

SONNET CXLVI.

Poor soul, the center of my sinful earth,
Fool'd by those rebel powers that thee array,
Why dost thou pine within and suffer dearth,
Painting thy outward walls so costly gay?
Why so large cost, having so short a lease,
Dost thou upon thy fading mansion spend?
Shall worms, inheritors of this excess,
Eat up thy charge? Is this thy body's end?
Then, soul, live thou upon thy servant's loss
And let that pine to aggravate thy store;
Buy terms divine in selling hours of dross;
Within be fed, without be rich no more.
So shalt thou feed on death that feeds on men
And, death once dead, there's no more dying then.
—William Shakespeare.

FOUND DEAD IN NEW HOUSE

Mrs. Cleary of Weymouth Missing All Day

Mrs. Julia Cleary, age 60, left her home on Keith street, Weymouth, at 7 o'clock on Monday morning to visit her sister who is employed in Quincy and when she failed to appear at either place a search was commenced. Officer Baker of the Weymouth police and Officer Johnson of Braintree found her dead in an unoccupied house at 28 Quincy street, Braintree.

When she was reported as missing a good description was furnished and John B. Whelan said he saw a woman answering it, board a Braintree car. It was later learned her son Maurice had leased the house at 28 Quincy street but had not taken up his residence there as yet.

The police went to the house and shortly after found the body. Medical Examiner Fred E. Jones who was called said she had a fractured skull. It is thought she fainted while looking over the new apartments and fell downstairs.

DEPARTMENT HEADS LIABLE

No Ex'ra Appropriations After Tax Rate Is Dec'ared

Chief Billings of the Fire department finds that he will not have money enough in his appropriation to carry him through the year, and the City Council will probably be asked to provide him more money. At first he thought that he might get along with $500, but now it is said that he will require at least $2,000 to carry him through.

It will be impossible for the Finance Committee to increase the budget order that was introduced at the special meeting Monday night so as to provide for the deficiency in this or any other departments, and the only way it can be done is for the Mayor to send another supplementary budget to the Council.

Under Chapter 719 of last year it is possible to send in supplementary budgets until the tax rate is announced. There is another important provision in that law, and that is the clause which makes the official personally responsible for any sums his department may expend in excess of the sum stated for that department in the budget.

Nearly every year, and in fact it might well be said that every year during the last month of the year, one department after another comes to the City Council with a deficit which has to be provided for. Under the present law this will be impossible, for if an official expends fifty or more dollars than the appropriations given him, he will have to pay it out of his own pocket.

Although Charles W. Guy only needed 250 signatures to his nomination papers he had the signatures of over 1,000 voters. A cane presented to Councillor Guy by Fr. Murphy, chaplain of the States Prison at Charlestown, is on exhibition in the show window of a City Square store.

OWNING A HOME.

The Real Estate Man Presents His View of the Question.

The public has no better friends than the real estate agents, although individuals may sometimes think that they are a trifle persistent in their efforts to induce one to make a purchase.

In reality, however, this is where they do the greatest good, not only for the city in which they live, but for the man to whom they sell property, and this is especially true in the case of a home.

The great majority of people are too slow to realize the importance of becoming home owners, and the efforts of the real estate dealers have induced thousands to purchase who otherwise would have let splendid opportunities pass.

It is especially important that all young people become home owners at the earliest time possible, because in the strength of their youth they will have no trouble meeting the payments on a home, and in a few years they will have it paid for. On the other hand, if they fail to buy the years will pass and find them living up all they make.

Because of taxes, insurance and depreciation many people figure that it is cheaper to rent than to own a home, but since the man owning the property is willing to make that kind of investment it is pretty evident that in the long run it pays the owner.—National Real Estate Journal.

MISSED THE TRAIN.

It Was Not the Agent's Fault, Either, Only His Misfortune.

The real estate man from the city was eager to close the deal for Uncle Billy Weatherman's forty acres, which would front on a beautiful lake after the big White river dam in the Missouri Ozarks was built.

The papers lay on the table awaiting Uncle Billy's signature. The real estate man was impatient. He was in a hurry to get back to Hollister, the nearest railway station, so as to catch the only train that would get him back to Kansas City the next morning.

"Now, if you'll sign right there—on the dotted line," he said, handing a fountain pen to Uncle Billy.

"I reckon I'd better not be in too big a hurry about this hyar," he temporized, with the shrewdness of the Ozark mountaineer. "I don't read as peart as I used to. I b'lieve I'll have my sons read them papers, mister."

"It would be a great favor to me, Uncle Billy," remarked the Kansas City man, looking at his watch, "if you could manage to see them in time to finish up this transaction by noon. You see, I've got to get away today. How many sons have you, anyway?"

An Early Underground Road.

London's underground railway stations are decidedly different from what they were when first built. A writer in London Society of May, 1863, describes Farringdon street station as resembling "a family vault on a large scale, with a series of hip baths introduced diagonally into it for light and ventilation. The hip baths are lined with glazed tiles, and to keep the resemblance to their prototype we find the leakage drained off at the end into a vessel something like a soap dish. A dense fog filled the place when I was there, and, as the people waiting for the trains were seen wandering up and down the platform, one might have imagined them ghosts of the great unwashed condemned to linger in sight of those lavatories they neglected in their mortal life."

Looking Ahead.

"I have just telephoned to our new neighbors to ask them if there is anything we can lend them," said Mrs. Scrimpins.

"Aren't you getting wonderfully generous?" asked her husband.

"Oh, it's just as well to be neighborly. Most of our stuff is pretty well worn, and as they moved in I saw a lot of things that will be worth having when it comes our turn to borrow."—Washington Star.

Two at One Trick.

"Let me plow this field."

"Thanks."

"I'm canvassing this district for congress," said the willing worker after finishing the field. "Do you own this fine farm?"

"Oh, no," replied the other man; "I'm the candidate on the other ticket! The farmer has gone to town, but I assured him the field would be plowed by the time he got back."—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Silent Chill.

He—There's no use introducing me to any one. I can't dance.

She — What nonsense! I saw you dancing with Miss James the night before last.

"Yes, but she hasn't spoken to me since."—Life.

Corrected Him.

HIS NECK WAS FRACTURED

Daniel F. Murphy Dies As Result of Injuries

This morning Medical Examiner Fred E. Jones performed an autopsy on the body of Daniel F. Murphy who died at the Quincy City Hospital, to determine if he was the victim of foul play. Mr. Murphy while delirious, told his brother he had been struck from behind by somebody with a club.

The autopsy revealed a fractured neck, something that seldom follows as the result of a blow. A further investigation will be made before Dr. Jones makes a finding.

Murphy was found in the barn at Quincy Point and was taken to the police station. Sunday morning he was sent to the hospital after symptoms of paralysis appeared. Just before his death he was totally paralyzed from the second rib down.

The deceased was 42 years old, and lived at 72 Washington street. He leaves one brother, John Murphy, a conductor on the Bay State Street Railway.

Dr. Jones was assisted by Dr. William Higgins of Randolph who was recently appointed assistant medical examiner of Norfolk County.

LONG BICYCLE RIDE.

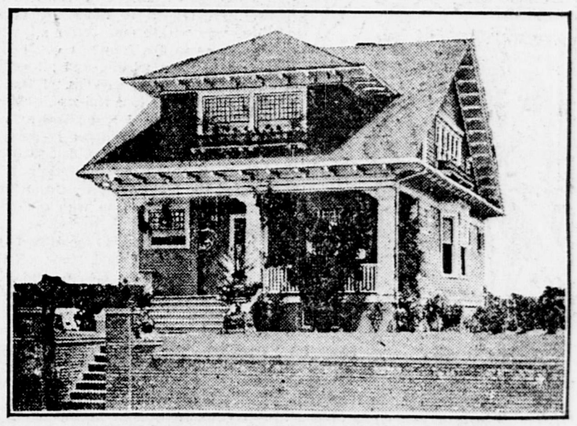

Harry Libby, clerk at the pharmacy of Clyde T. Cox, is planning a visit to his home at Carthage, Me., and expects to make the trip by bicycle The distance, 130 miles, he says can be covered in two days. Mr. Libby has made a practice of long rides and will leave here within a few days, weather permitting.

BURIAL AT BRAINTREE.

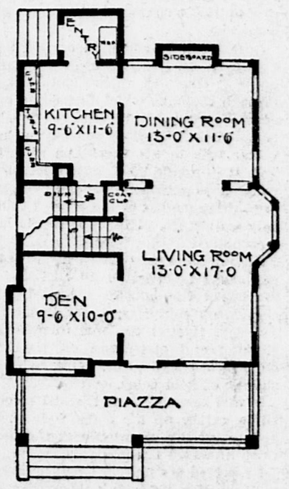

Charles L. Stevens who died at Worcester on Monday, will be brought to South Braintree on Wednesday for interment at Plain Street cemetery.

PERSPECTIVE VIEW—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH.

FIRST FLOOR PLAN.

SECOND FLOOR PLAN.

This is a very attractive cottage at low cost. The large living room has a den adjoining, which can be used as a bedroom. There are French doors between the two rooms. Dining room connects with the living room by wide pedestal columned opening. The pedestals are four feet six inches high, making space for bookcases on the living room side. A built-in sideboard in dining room. Built-in cupboards in kitchen. Good sized entry in rear, with space for refrigerator. Three chambers and bathroom in second story. Abundance of closet space. Size, 24 feet wide and 30 feet deep under the main part. Full basement. First story, 9 feet; second story, 8 feet. Finished in first story with birch, Washington fir or red oak; finished in second story with pine to paint. Birch or maple floors throughout first and second stories. Cost to build $2,600.

Upon receipt of $1 the publisher of this paper will supply a copy of Saxton's book of plans, "American Dwellings." It contains about 250 up to date designs of cottages, bungalows and residences costing from $1,000 to $6,000.

ONE OF THE LEADING INDUSTRIAL CITIES OF NEW ENGLAND

MORE INDUSTRIES PER CAPITA THAN BOSTON

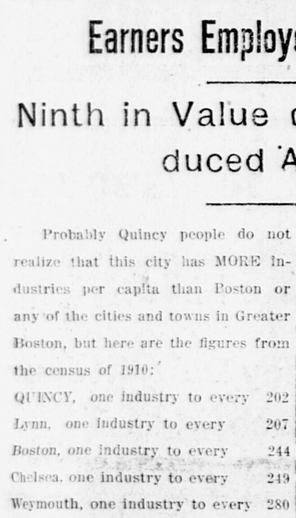

Fifth in Greater Boston in Number of Wage Earners Employed in Home City

Ninth in Value of Products Produced Annually

Probably Quincy people do not realize that this city has MORE industries per capita than Boston or any of the cities and towns in Greater Boston, but here are the figures from the census of 1910:

QUINCY, one industry to every	202
Lynn, one industry to every	207
Boston, one industry to every	244
Chelsea, one industry to every	249
Weymouth, one industry to every	280
Woburn, one industry to every	286
Hyde Park, one industry to every	362
Cambridge, one industry to every	400
Waltham, one industry to every	493
Wakefield, one industry to every	518
Watertown, one industry to every	562
Melrose, one industry to every	654
Everett, one industry to every	656
Malden, one industry to every	752
Newton, one industry to every	839
Somerville, one industry to every	999

Quincy has 161 industries, many more than Somerville, or Chelsea, or Newton, or Everett, or Malden, or other large cities, and is well up in the list in Greater Boston.

THOMAS L. WILLIAMS.
Ex-President.

The census also shows that the Quincy industries give employment to 5,371, or one in six of the population, while the industries of Boston only give employment to one in eleven of the population.

In value of products, Quincy also makes a great showing. The total product for the year is $8,082,446, or $273.92 per capita, while Boston value per capita is $274.89.

A recent issue of the Boston Chamber of Commerce Journal contained the following table, which shows that Quincy ranks high in Greater Boston, although some of the cities have a much larger population:

EX-MAYOR STONE.
Ex-President.

	Industries.	Wage Earners.	Value of Products
Boston,	2747	59,160	$184,351,163
Lynn,	431	21,540	55,003,023
Cambridge,	262	14,586	42,407,064
Somerville,	78	3,474	22,955,197
Watertown,	20	3,322	15,524,675
Chelsea,	130	4,930	13,879,159
Malden,	59	2,954	11,235,635
Melrose,	24	1,571	9,450,929
QUINCY,	161	5,371	8,982,446
Waltham,	60	6,208	7,149,697
Hyde Park,	40	3,991	6,739,307
Everett,	51	2,186	6,135,650
Weymouth,	46	1,841	4,921,950
Wakefield,	22	1,804	4,807,728
Woburn,	52	1,482	4,654,067
Newton,	48	1,893	4,140,096

The only cities in the Metropolitan district actually having more industries are Boston, Lynn and Cambridge.

Quincy gives employment in its industries to more people than Somerville, or Chelsea, or Malden, or Melrose or Watertown.

All the watches and other products of Waltham in a year are not worth as much as the Quincy product for the same period.

The building of battleships and steel steamships, and the manufacture of granite memorials enter very largely into the industrial figures of Quincy.

ANNUAL TOUR OF LOCAL INDUSTRIES

In Diversity and Interest, In Activity and Prosperity, They Are Unexcelled

Combined With Seashore and Attractive Homes

The custom of Boards of Trade to hold outings during the summer months is a general one, but in most cases the boards select one of the numerous summer resorts as their destination. The Quincy Board of Trade however adopt a different method, and one that on the whole is a much better plan, as it affords an opportunity for the members to see at first hand some of the important industries of their own city.

WALTER E. PIPER.
Ex-President.

The plan of visiting the industries of the city was first inaugurated during the reign of Charles C. Hearn as president and it has been carried out every year since that time.

Many in a round about way have an idea of the different industries of the city, but to visit the plants is a revelation to many, and it is not to be wondered at therefore that the outings always serve to draw a large number of members.

FRANK FESSENDEN CRANE.

Today's trip is affording an opportunity to see some of the many plants. Unlike a year ago it will not be dusty for the heavy rain last night laid the dust. The air this morning was hot and sticky and the indications were that it would continue so throughout the day.

The itinerary of today's outing has already been published but as there have been some changes since Tuesday it is published again today.

The members met at the rooms of the Board at 11.30. A light lunch was served in the rooms and they got away promptly at 12.15.

Leaving the rooms of the Board the line of automobiles will pass down Coddington street, thence through Valley street to Park lane, thence through Merrymount park to Fenno street, to the Wollaston boulevard, to Squantum street, thence through Atlantic,

J. WINTHROP PRATT.
Ex-President.

via Squantum street to the Norfolk Downs depot where they were due to arrive at 1 o'clock.

Here a short visit will be paid to the plant of the Norfolk Iron works, the Wollaston Foundry, Pneumatic Scale Co. and the Boston Gear Works. Leaving the latter plant at 1.45 the line will proceed to the residence of President John L. Hamilton where they will arrive at 2 o'clock.

At 2.15 they reached the Telephone

GETTING NEW INDUSTRIES.

There is intense competition between cities and towns to secure new industries. Whereas formerly many large towns had no boards of trade, now these organizations are common even in small villages. Their first and foremost activity is the effort to land new manufacturing propositions.

No sooner does a corporation express a desire for a new location, than it is deluged with all sorts of gifts propositions, free rents, remission of taxes, etc. Some of the concerns looking for such favors are mere drifters and beats who stay in a place a year or two and then move on.

Many boards of trade compass distant states to land new enterprises and then overlook chances in their own city. There are probably enterprising young fellows in our own town who would be perfectly capable of conducting a profitable manufacturing enterprise if they had capital. Other concerns need a little encouragement. At the same time our business men are sending money away because they know of no chances to invest favorably at home. This capital and this enterprise should be brought together. The plant fathered by home enterprise and capital is most likely to be permanent.

Getting new factories is mostly a case of persistent search. Ninety-nine tips may prove hopeless, but the hundredth may be genuine. If all possible chances are investigated, some day there will come a real opportunity that can be landed.

SOUTH AMERICAN TRADE.

Some people think the United States can now annex a little yearly item of $500,000,000 South American trade ,merely by providing the needed shipping facilities. Undoubtedly Brazil, Argentina etc., will buy in our country while customary sources of supply are tied up by the war. But if the war lasts but a few months, great European exporting houses are not going to lie down while Uncle Sam walks off with their trade.

Business methods in dealing with these countries must be radically changed, as all intelligent observers know. A system of American banks is needed. An American business man recently said it took him three days to cash a United States subtreasury draft. Uncle Sam is not on the map in South America. The foreign bankers take copies of every invoice and scrap of paper that goes through their hands. They know the prices at which goods are sold by American producers and that valuable information is transmitted to Europe.

It is a country where social relations must precede business success. Business goes by favor and friendship

Perhaps our exporters do not now so frequently print Spanish directions on goods used in Portuguese speaking countries. But they still have too much of the slap dash method. The salesman with a smattering of Spanish tries in vain to push our goods. It is about as if a Hungarian laborer, just out of night school, should try to sell grand pianos in a swell American residence street.

No mere emergency buying for a brief war period will win that trade. But there is a great field for young men who will study the South American temperament and learn its whims and individualities. The buying that will be done here during the present war gives a unique opportunity to make a start, and open up new markets for American products.

The peace conferences have long been insisting that war armaments are too large, and the powers are now proceeding to reduce them.

The generals in the present conflict are heroically leading their troops by dispatches dictated in a quiet office to a force of stenographers.

The kidlets will be keenly interested in swimming as long as the newspapers continue to print reports of drowning accidents.

Much sympathy is felt for the wealthy people who will not be able to buy their customary supplies of oriental rugs during the war.

Meanwhile the Krupps are remaining as cheerful as circumstances will permit.

TALKIN' WAR

Everybody talkin' war—just you come with me
Where the red cheeked apples shine on the winesap tree.
Just come out to take the mile
That leads to country day
And let them fuss and fight and bile;
We'll hear what God's things say.

Everybody talkin' war—it's time to lend an ear
To something sweet and beautiful and ripe with sun and cheer.
Just come out and let them rant,
And we'll go glory stirred
So far from all their fuss and cant
And hear the mockin' bird.

Everybody talkin' war—and now's our time to slip
Down where the good green country sings on many a warbling lip,
Down where there is no bloody strife,
No hate and dread and tears,
But everything so glad of life
That it dances and it cheers.

Everybody talkin' war—and what good does it do?
Just come with me where violets peep and skies are bendin' blue,
Just come out to grass and tree
And babbling brook and stream,
Where God's things dwell in all the glee
Of romance and of dream.

BOY SCOUTS OF EUROPE FIGURE IN EUROPE'S WAR.

Young Patriots' Activities Recall Napoleonic Episode In Browning Poem.

The boy scouts have already furnished one of the first heroes of the war. Nisbon, a lad of Liege, went out from his home, laid his own plan of campaign, gave his own orders, carried them out himself and marched back with two captured German spies.

Boy scouts are being utilized as the chief bearers of dispatches along the frontier. This recalls the Napoleonic episode celebrated in Browning's poem "An Incident of the French Camp." The emperor was a mile from Ratisbon, awaiting the result of the siege.

Out 'twixt the battery smokes there flew
A rider, bound on bound
Full galloping; nor bridle drew
Until he reached the mound.

Then off there flung in smiling joy,
And held himself erect
By just his horse's mane, a boy;
You hardly could suspect—

So tight he kept his lips compressed,
Scarce any blood came through.
You looked twice ere you saw his breast
Was all but shot in two.

The boy gave his message of victory. "We've got you Ratisbon!" he cried. The emperor's eye flashed with triumph, then softened in sympathy as he saw the blood. The poem ends:

"You're wounded!" "Nay," the soldier's pride
Touched to the quick, he said.
"I'm killed, sire!" and his chief beside,
Smiling, the boy fell dead.

General Baden-Powell first organized the boy scouts on the other side of the water. Thompson Seton and Dan Beard had already led bands of young fellows into wood and field to promote health and habits of observation. In this country, however, a distinct effort has been made to avoid emphasis on the military features that have naturally been prominent in Europe. There the soldier is a familiar sight to boys of almost every nation, and all their ambitions are colored by the talk about them.

The boys of Europe now organized in scout camps number 350,000, England has 200,000, Germany 50,000, France 8,000, Austria-Hungary 15,000, Russian Poland 8,000, Servia 4,000 and Scandinavia 30,000. The titles of the organizations vary somewhat. In Germany the boys are called pathfinders. One division of the Belgian group, equipped with bicycles, is known as "The Queen's Own."

SHOULD THE KAISER WIN.

History Professor Predicts Clash With Us Over Dutch Possessions.

Professor George H. Blakeslee, professor of history at Clark university, Worcester, declares that if Germany should win the present European war the United States would be fighting her soon afterward. He bases this forecast on the fact that, in the event of victory, Germany would seize Holland and her possessions, which include important approaches to the Panama canal. This the United States would never allow, he says.

In an interview he said:

"Germany wants Holland for two reasons. In the first place, sentiment demands it, for there is a feeling that all the German race should be under the German flag; secondly, the Dutch possessions in the East Indies are the very richest, including the island of Java and Sumatra. Naturally Germany wants to control these possessions.

"If Germany annexes Holland, then she will get control of Curacao, a Dutch harbor in the West Indies, recognized as one of the finest in the Caribbean sea, because from there a nation could virtually control the approaches to the Panama canal. But I will go so far as to say that if there was a possibility of Germany getting possession of any valuable approaches to the canal this country would even go to war to prevent it."

Duchess Tends Wounded In Brussels.

The Duchess of Sutherland has assumed the leadership of the Red Cross work in Brussels. Associated with her are a number of titled Frenchwomen, and the organization is largely French. The duchess is hard at work in an improvised hospital, which is being equipped to accommodate 300 patients. She is dressed in the simple white costume crowned with a nurse's cap.

TO HELP OUT THE TEACHERS

State and City of Boston Officials Act

Friends of Quincy school teachers who are in Europe should be interested in the following. The school authorities of Boston and the Commonwealth have become deeply concerned about the condition of teachers abroad. This concern has been deepened by the reports of those recently returned. Chairman George E. Brock of the School Committee of Boston called a meeting at the office of Franklin B. Dyer, superintendent of public schools, at which were present the chairman and Supt. Frederick W. Hamilton of the State Board of Education of Massachusetts Deputy Commissioner R. O. Small of the State Board, and Paul V. Donovan, master of the Blackinton School District of East Boston, who has just returned from Europe.

After conferring on the matter, it was decided to make an appeal to the relatives and friends of those schoolteachers who are now marooned in Europe because of the war, with a view to ascertaining their names and whereabouts It is therefore, urged upon the relatives and friends of such teachers to communicate at once with the school authorities, giving this information.

Concerning those who are teachers in Boston, the information should be sent direct to Franklin B. Dyer Superintendent of Schools, Mason st., Boston, and concerning those teaching in the other cities and towns of the Commonwealth, to R. O. Small, Deputy Commissioner, Ford Building, Ashburton pl, Boston.

This information should reach the respective addresses not later than Friday evening, Aug. 21. With this information at hand, the National authorities will be urged to take such steps as will give the needed relief and to facilitate early return of the teachers to this country.

COLLECT WHITE PINE SEED.

This is a white pine seed year. Just look at the pine trees loaded with cones. If these cones are collected before they open, and are cared for, the scales will open up and the seed will drop out. There are two seeds under each scale and each has a wing attached to it. These cones, now green, within a few weeks turn brown and they open up while still hanging on the tree. It is at this time that the seeds fall out and scatter about the country. In order to secure the seed, therefore, collect before they are fully ripe. Usually the last week in August or the first of September is about the best time to gather the harvest. Beware of waiting too long, for it is better to collect early than late, when they begin to shell out. I have seen the German foresters picking them when they were still green. The seeds are probably mature even now and one can observe the squirrels very busy tearing the cones to pieces to feast on the seed. A bushel of cones before they open will produce about a pound of seed. We Americans should get into the habit of harvesting this seed crop just the same as we do any other; it has market value and surely there is plenty of waste or depleted lands that should be planted. White pine as a forest crop is well worthy our attention. Now is a good time to interest our boys and girls in a branch of practical forestry. Those in charge of summer camps may find herein a pleasant diversion. How about the boy scouts undertaking to supply the country with white pine seed? The State Forester has a pamphlet entitled "How and When to Collect White Pine Seed." Send for it to 6 Beacon street, Boston, if you are interested.

F. W. Rane,
State Forester,

AN ECLIPSE FRIDAY.

A partial eclipse of the sun will take place Friday morning shortly after sunrise and will be visible in Quincy for a short time.

At precisely 5.49 the shadow of the earth begins to touch the penumbra of the sun. From then until 6.09 the shadow will continue larger and larger. Then it will begin to diminish, and at 6.30 it will have vanished.

If the morning should be cloudy Quincy people will not be able to see the eclipse. According to Prof. Frank E. Seagrave, a leading astronomer of Boston, the family of eclipses has about run out and the next return of the eclipse will not take place until Aug. 31, 1932, and the final one in this particular cycle will occur October 3, 1986.

TAX RATES FOR YEAR 1914

Highest Figures in History of Several Cities

The tax rate of Fall River as announced Tuesday night will be $23.20 per $1,000 valuation, an increase of $2.90 over that of 1913. The rate this year is the highest in the history of the city. The total valuation of the city is given as $102,169,268 an increase of $2,283,300 over 1913.

The tax rate of Chicopee this year is announced as $18.70 as against $21.50 in 1913, a decrease of $2.80. The valuation is given as $18,875,220 as compared with $17,025,510 last year. The reason for the reduction in the tax rate is given to the bonding of the city.

Carver, one of the Cape towns, will have a tax rate this year of $16.75 an increase of $2.25 over that of 1913. The total valuation is given by the assessors as $2,096,180 a gain of $4,215 in personal and $116,270 in real estate. The number of assessed polls is 423.

The tax rates reported to date are as follows, over one half being largtion from $21.00 to $16.20.

C. W. GUY HAS PARTY RIVALS

Four Democrats Are After the Nomination

The race for party nomination has now started in earnest. The time for filing nomination papers with the Secretary of State expired Tuesday at 5 o'clock, and the final filing of paper shows some interesting contests. Those in which Quincy is particularly interested are given, and it will be noticed that there are several candidates whose names have not previously been mentioned:

CONGRESSMAN, 14th DISTRICT.
Frank F. Crane, Quincy, Republican.
Harry C. Howard, Brockton, Republican.
Robert L. Raymond, Milton, Republican.
Richard Olney, 2d, Boston, Democratic.
Edwin C. Breed, Quincy, Progressive.

COUNCILLOR, 2d DISTRICT.
Guy A. Ham, Boston, Republican, Progressive.
William A. Bellamy, Taunton, Republican.
William L. Murray, Boston, Democrat.
Charles W. Guy, Quincy, Democrat.
George W. Reed, Boston, Democrat.
John P. Ratigan, Boston, Democrat.
Frederick H. Bishop, Quincy, Progressive.

Progressive papers were filed by Charles W. Guy of Quincy as well as for the Democratic nomination, but his papers evidently lacked the required number of signatures to get him a place on the Progressive ticket.

Special Town Meeting Made No Appropriations

The special town meeting held in Braintree Tuesday evening was called to order at 7.45 o'clock by William L. Gage, who is acting as town clerk during the absence of Henry A. Monk who is enjoying a vacation at Brewster with his family. There was a good attendance of voters and the fair sex was in evidence in the gallery.

After some discussion, it was voted that the articles in the warrant be read by the clerk.

Under article 1, Benjamin F. Woodsum, Jr., was the choice for moderator the large number of ballots cast for him, two in number, being deposited in the box by William May and Stillman F. Pratt. On motion of John Kelley the polls were then declared closed.

Elmer E. Abercrombie made a short speech in which he stated that in the opinion of the appropriation committee all appropriations should be made at the annual March meeting and that not one dollar should be appropriated at the meeting then in session. Mr. Abercrombie moved that the meeting adjourn sine die, and after considerable talk the vote was carried, 127 to 93 at 8.20.

Talking Shop.

Enthusiastic interest in one's occupation is always an advantage, but, on the other hand, it is not well for a woman in business to talk of her work at all times and places. Naturally, the thing that we do constantly is our most absorbing interest, but we must remember that other people have other things to talk about.

WALKOVER FOR THE ELLEN

Won Three Races in Two Days for Quincy Cup

The Quincy Yacht Club challenge cup will remain in the keeping of the Boston Yacht club for another year, as the races of Tuesday settled the question for this year. Two races were sailed on Monday one of which was won by the Ellen the defeuding yacht. Tuesday two races were held both of which were won by the Ellen.

As in Monday's race several of the challengers did not put in an appearance and in the morning race but three yachts came to the line. These were the Ellen, the Huskie and Cima. The Mingo was to have appeared but her skipper decided to use the morning hours in making a change in the rig of his craft.

The morning race started promptly at 10.30 and the Cima gave the defender a close race. The breeze was rather light during the entire race, but at the finish the Ellen only led the Cima by 53 seconds.

In the afternoon, the race started at 2.30 and there was a fair sailing breeze. The Mingo with her new rig was the first to get away with the Ellen in a bad fourth position. It did not seem possible for her to pull up. She did however and turned the mark at the finish with a lead of ten seconds over the Mingo. The summary of the two races was as follows:

MORNING RACE.

Ellen	1	46	48
Cima	1	47	31
Huskie	1	51	30

AFTERNOON RACE.

Ellen	1	15	51
Mingo	1	16	15
Cima	1	16	42
Huskie	1	21	10

WON BY FOUR PINS.

The Wardwell alleys were crowded Tuesday evening to see the opening match of the series between the Weymouth and Wardwell All Stars, the former winning the total by the slight margin of four pins.

Weymouth easily carried the first string by 28 but Quincy came back in the second and took it by 23. The third string, on which victory rested, went to the locals by one pin but not enough to overcome the lead of Weymouth.

Louis Ross got high single, his first being 121. Burrell was high on the visitors, his three strings going over the century. The summary:

BATTLE FOR THE MASTERY OF BELGIUM

Rumors In London That It Has Begun In Earnest

GERMAN CAVALRY SEEN CLOSE TO ANTWERP

Reverse at Dinant Suffered by Invaders, but Not Believed to Have Significance—Brussels Not Yet Captured, but Its Fall Appears to Be Only Matter of Hours—French Rush at Strassburg Only Partially Allays Worry Over Almost Inhuman Ability of Germans to Steadily Continue Advance After Numerous Checks

London, Aug. 19.—Rumors are flying fast in London that the great battle for the mastery of Belgium has now been going on for hours and that the slow, machine-like advance of the German army is steadily grinding on, battering down the stubborn defense of the Belgian and French soldiers.

From Brussels and Ghent in Belgium and from Paris came reports that the hostile armies were battling at Waterloo, at Dinant, at Gembloux and at Louvain. The Waterloo engagement was later discovered to be untrue, and there is doubt about the encounter at Louvain, but confirmation was received of clashes at Dinant and Gembloux.

The additional news that German Uhlans were sweeping through the countryside both north and south of Antwerp adds to the belief that a battle is already in progress.

French Hold the Meuse

The latest story of fight carried the campaign back to Dinant. Another attempt of the Germans to force a passage across the Meuse not far from the city led to an artillery duel in which the invaders were worsted and the possession of the river was held by the French.

The most serious menace to Belgium was noted in a dispatch from Antwerp in which it was stated that German cavalry had been described both north and south of the city. The civil guard was at once mobilized and the forts, the strongest fortifications in Belgium, were placed on a war footing for the first time.

The reverse that the Germans suffered at Dinant is not believed in London to have any significance. From the meagre details afforded by the censorship, the Germans did not make a strong effort to cross the Meuse, but retreated as soon as they had drawn the fire of the French artillery.

Germans Are Everywhere

The almost inhuman ability of the German army, its appearance after every defeat several miles in advance of the place where it was checked—this machine-like quality is beginning to cause a profound depression that is only partially lightened by the stories of the French rush upon Strassburg.

Reassuring messages came from Brussels, but the fact that the city has not yet been captured does not allay the general feeling that the capital must fall within a few hours.

With the fall of Brussels impending, it seems presumable that the aim of the army of the Meuse is to drive a strong force between the allies who are, according to the last definite dispatches, concentrated at Louvain and Namur. If this maneuver is successful, the Belgian forces at Louvain will be crowded back into Antwerp, and the French at Namur, probably reinforced by several thousands of English, will be thrown back from Namur into Maubeuge in France.

If Namur can be isolated by such a brilliant coup it will relieve the pressure of the French there from the army of the Moselle and allow that army, so long inactive, to be hurled into the gap in the French defenses north of Verdun.

Still Pressing Forward

So far as can be gleaned from the fragmentary messages from Belgium, daily growing less communicative, this bold jab against Brussels is proving successful. The resistance has been stubborn and practically all of the victories in the preliminary encounters have ended in a German withdrawal, but each day the Germans have made progress. They fall back at one point only to emerge nearer Brussels either to the north or south.

Hopeful dispatches were sent from Brussels which said that the German advance had been stopped and that the city was calm. Other messages, generally thought to hold more truth, indicate that the inhabitants are leaving the city by all possible conveyances and that hundreds have streamed out toward the west on foot.

It is evident that the German advance has been slower, but there is nothing to indicate that it has stopped. From information gained by scouts, both on land and in the air, the army of the Meuse has been tremendously reinforced from Aix-la-Chapelle and may no longer be regarded as a feinting body.

This, however, does not prove that the main attack is not to be made by the army of the Moselle, which is ready to strike the moment the Germans in Belgium have driven apart the forces of the allies.

Reports of fighting at Louvain on Sunday has just been received in London, indications of the slowness in which information is coming through the censorship. This delay is one of the strong reasons for belief that even now the battle for the possession of Belgium may be on.

In the Louvain fight, which started when a body of Uhlans rode almost into the city, both the Germans and the Belgians used machine guns and batteries, indications of the closeness of the main forces.

South of the fighting column that the Germans are now throwing westward against Brussels, the fighting is reported to be more bitter than at any other place in Belgium.

Aeroplanes as Indicators

The inference that the Germans are unusually strong there is borne out by the fact that aeroplanes are being used in great numbers on both sides. Three Zeppelins are said to have been destroyed by accurate fire from French batteries, but the location is not specified.

About Gembloux, where severe fighting took place, it is fair to presume that the hottest conflict is taking place.

The French embassy in London issued a statement in which it was admitted that the French were now in direct contact with the invaders, although no places were mentioned. It was denied that any important engagement was taking place, but as this denial would probably be made in any event, little reliance can be placed upon it.

On Monday night a German force, supposedly of cavalry, was caught between a detachment of French cavalry and some Belgian infantry. Before the Germans retired they had suffered several casualties.

BRITISH ON FIRING LINE

Address From King George Expresses His Confidence In Them

With the admission from the British war office that England's army is on the firing line, interest in the impending battle became intense in London. The British forces number in excess of 100,000 men. Their whereabouts is a carefully guarded secret, but that they are at the front was indicated in an address to the troops sent to General Sir John French. In it the king said:

"You, my soldiers, have left home to fight for the safety and honor of my empire. Belgium, whose country we are pledged to defend, has been attacked. France is about to be invaded by the same powerful foe. I have implicit confidence in you. Duty is your watchword. I know it will be nobly done. I shall follow your every movement with the deepest interest and mark with eager satisfaction your daily progress. I pray God to bless you and bring you back victorious."

Meanwhile the curtain of censorship bars out all news of the fighting now known to be in progress in Belgium. War office officials agree that the greatest army ever in the field in modern times is being used in Belgium by the kaiser.

TWO AMBASSADORS.

These are the Japanese ambassador to America, Baron Chinda, and the American ambassador to Japan, George W. Guthrie, who play important parts in the present crisis. It was necessary for the Japanese government to send her ultimatum to Germany through the American ambassador, acting in behalf of the United States, a neutral power.

PREPARED TO FIGHT

Elaborate Precautions In Holland to Repulse an Invasion

The Rotterdam correspondent of the London Telegraph reports that Holland is making most elaborate precautions along her frontier to enforce her neutrality. Detachments of cavalry constantly patrol the frontier and large forces of infantry guard the roads, which are blocked at frequent intervals with barbed wire entanglements and barricades.

The roads are the key to the situation, as the artillery cannot be taken across the open fields, which are marsh lands.

In towns near the frontier large bodies of troops are congregated and the possible lines of invasion are commanded by powerful forts which are strong and modern. Arrangements are complete for flooding the country of the frontier at a moment's notice.

In the neighborhood of the forts, houses, trees and crops have been levelled to make it impossible for an army to approach under cover. Several whole orchards have been cut down. The rivers are protected by armed barges.

Holland knows Germany wants ports on the North sea for her navy, and that the Dutch ports are geographically the most obvious objects of her ambition. So in silence Holland is getting ready.

PUSHED TO THE FRONT

Russian Cavalry In Action With Prussian and Austrian Forces

The Rusisan cavalry is in action along miles of the Prussian and Austrian frontiers. The entire cavalry forces of the nation have been pushed to the front to prevent raids by either the Germans or the Austrians while the infantry was being mobilized. As a result, it is stated, there have been numerous skirmishes in which heavy losses were sustained by the enemy, but none of them has assumed the importance of a general engagement.

Meanwhile the mobilization for all practical purposes is completed. En route to Moscow the czar was greeted everywhere with outbursts of patriotic enthusiasm. It is stated at St. Petersburg that he plans to go to the front as soon as it shall be determined where he can best serve the nation.

CONCESSIONS BY RUSSIA

Czar Plans to Give Jews Equal Civil and Political Rights

The Czar of Russia will sign a proclamation at an early date giving the Jews in his dominions equal civil and political rights with his other subjects.

It is announced officially that Russia will treat with especial consideration any prisoners from the German province of Alsace and Lorraine who may be captured by her forces. France, on her part, will show equal consideration toward any Polish prisoners she may take. The two countries have reached an understanding to this effect.

GERMANY LOSES CRUISERS

Two Are Captured by British and Taken Into Hong Kong

Two German cruisers have been disabled and brought into Hong Kong. Confirmation of this fact was received at Shanghai.

The deckworks, the trurrets and the barbettes of the two cruisers were demolished and their masts and funnels had been shot away. Their sides were stained with blood, which had run through the scuppers.

TURKEY'S NEUTRALITY

Promises Made by Powers In Effort to Smooth Over New Crisis

Several powers have promised Turkey that her independence and interest will be protected if she will maintain her policy of strict neutrality.

This probably will avert the crisis that has developed between Greece and Turkey and prevent participation in the war of the Balkan states other than Servia and Montenegro.

LOOKING BACKWARD

Famous Gravelotte Battle Was Fought Forty-Four Years Ago

Forty-four years ago yesterday was fought one of the msot decisive battles of the Franco-Prussian war—Gravelotte—and one of the greatest battles of history.

Two hundred thousand Germans, commanded by King William himself, were opposed to 130,000 French under Marshal Bazaine. The fighting lasted twelve hours. The French right was outflanked and the French forced to retreat in utter rout to Metz.

The French army was completely defeated, cut off from communciation with Paris, and bottled up in Metz. The Germans lost in this battle 25,000, the French 19,000.

Gravelotte is in Alsace-Lorraine.

American Orders For France

Paris, Aug. 19.—The American chamber of commerce has obtained orders from America amounting to $60,000,000 which will make the silk, textile, dressmaking and kindred industries employing women operate as usual.

A Tragic Episode.

By BAYARD VEILLER

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Late in an afternoon of October the warden of the county jail stood smoking in the doorway of his office.

Two dogs were wrangling happily over a bone. Farther along a crowd of boys were playing with a ball.

A keeper came out and stood beside the warden, who paid no attention to him. The old man coughed slightly and touched his superior on the arm.

"Th' man in numbah 7 wants t' see you all."

"What's he want now?" asked the warden querulously. "He's always after sumthin'. Does he think I ain't got nuthin' ter do but run errants fer him?"

He still spoke with the accent of his New England birthplace.

"I dunno," said the old man.

"What's he here fer, anyhow?" went on the warden. "Lord knows, I can't keep track of all them fellers!

"I SWAR I'LL COME BACK HEAH."

You fellers down here gets arrested fer th' darnedest funny things I hev ever heerd tell on. Up north we gits fellers in jail fer reel sure enough crimes. Down here th' criminals ain't no account. What's he in fer, I say?"

"He all got kotched fer runnin' a still," explained the keeper. "He's a right good feller tew."

"Well, I ain't goin' up there," announced the warden. "You bring him down here to me. I reckon he won't git away."

The keeper slouched away and returned a few minutes later in company with the prisoner. He was tall, rawboned, uncouth. He stood awkwardly before the warden, fumbling a torn cap in his hand.

"Well, what's yure name?" asked the warden.

"Wilbur Rawlins," said the man, with a slow drawl. "I got kotched fer runnin' a still," he added. "'Twan't mine," he went on after a pause.

"Oh, I ain't th' jedge," said the warden cheerfully. "Whut you want with me?"

The man was silent. He rubbed one foot over the other slowly and then scratched his ear.

"Come, come, young feller," said the warden, not unkindly. "Ye sent word thet ye wanted ter see me. Waal, now, ye see me. Whut ye want with me?"

"I gotter go home fer a couple o' days."

"You gotter go home?" said the warden. "Young feller, this ain't no boarding house. You gotter stay right here till you are tried."

"Kain't ye let me go?" pleaded the prisoner. "'Tain't is if I'd done much. I ain't killed nobody. I ain't even ben in a feud. I swar I'll come back heah."

"Can't do it," said the warden. "They's no use askin' me. I tell ye I can't do it."

"I ain't got nuthin' but er mewel," urged the prisoner. "Yo're welcome ter that ef you all 'll lemme go."

The warden smiled grimly. "I couldn't let ye go ef ye offered me a thousand dollars," he said. "What'd ye wanter go fer, anyway?" he added.

"Mah little gal's all alone up on th' mountain," said the prisoner. "an' they ain't no neighbahs ter go ter her, an' they's a babby a-comin, an' I gotter be thar. Heavens, man, ye kain't let her be thar alone at a time like that! Kain't ye see I jess natchelly gotter be thar?"

"Can't be did," said the warden briefly.

"Ef you all 'll let me go I'll name th' babby aftah you all." He had the air of a man offering a bribe of stupendous value.

"Supposin' it wuz a gal?" suggested the warden.

"I doan' keer. We all 'll name her aftah you all. Whut's yure name?"

"Zebulon," said the warden shortly. It was a sore point with him, this name. "But can't ye see, man, I can't let ye go? Not but I'd be proud ter hev th' baby named after me," he went on politely. "I dunno es I ever hed a baby named after me. But, honest, I can't let ye go."

"Jess fer one day," pleaded the prisoner.

"Not fer a minit," said the warden. "Now, look here, man, ye jest go back ter yer cell an' trust t' the Lord. Ye're wife'll be all right. It'll be kinder lonesome mebbe, but it'll be all right."

"I gotter go, an' I'm goin'," said the prisoner defiantly as he turned away.

The warden slept late the next morning. He was still sleeping when his wife came and shook him roughly by the shoulder. She was crying, and so was the child clinging to her skirts.

"Git up, Zeb!" cried the woman.

"Whut's th' matter?" yawned the warden sleepily.

"Thet moonshiner's killed Tom an' broke out!" cried the woman.

The warden leaped from his bed and, clad only in his nightshirt, ran hurriedly through the house and up into the jail.

On the floor in front of cell 97 he found the keeper lying dead. The old man's face was purple, and about his throat was the imprint of fingers. The door of the cell was open.

"Merciful heavens," cried the warden, "who'd 'a' thought it? Thet feller wus jest es peaceable es a lamb."

"I foun' the front door open when I got up this mornin'," said the woman, "an' I mistrusted all wa'n't right, so I come here an' foun' thet. It was turrible. I shan't git over it ter my dyin' day, Zebulon Waters, I shan't."

The man had been the only prisoner on the tier, and he had been so docile and quiet that in his case the usual discipline had been relaxed. The door of his cell was never locked when the keeper was in the corridor.

"Thet's whut comes o' bein' kind ter them prisoners," said the warden's wife.

"Shet up, can't ye?" cried the warden. "Ain't I got trouble enough 'thout you chimin' in? Like es not I'll lose th' job for this."

"Whutje goin' ter do now?" asked the woman.

"Put on my pants," said the warden shortly.

"D'je think I thought ye wuz goin' ter hunt fer thet feller in yer night shirt?" retorted his wife angrily.

"Lucinda, shet up," said the man solemnly. "Don't fergit ye're in the presence of death. Yer jest go into the house and hurry up the breakfast. I gotter git after this man lively, and we may nab him fer he gets much of a start."

Within an hour the warden had organized a posse to hunt for the missing prisoner. Two of the men brought bloodhounds.

"I won't hev him torn up by them dogs," announced the warden—"not ef he killed th' hull town. 'Tain't Christian. I'm fer law an' order, an' we're goin ter catch this feller right. We aint goin' ter hev him et up by no dogs."

It was explained that neither of the dogs would be unmuzzled; that they would merely be used to trace the man.

"Ye don't need no dogs," said the warden's wife. "I talked 'ith thet feller yestedy an' I know. Ye don't need no dogs. Ef ye jest go ter whar he lives ye'll git him easy enough. That's whar he's went."

In spite of this they took the dogs. The men were on horseback, and for the first five miles they had no difficulty in following the animals. The dogs ran straight, their noses close to the ground. The trail was easy for them to follow.

Ten miles from the town the party had to abandon their horses, leaving the animals in charge of one man. After that they slowly made their way up the mountain, the dogs, still in leash, tugging frantically at their chains.

The cool, brisk air of the October woods, fragrant with pine and balsam, made no impression on these men. They were hunting a human being—a murderer. Two or three suggested that it would be a good thing to hang him as soon as he was caught.

"No, ye won't," said the warden. "Me an' th' sheriff's runnin' this hunt, an' it's goin' ter be lawful all through. I'm goin' ter take that feller back ter jail, an' he's goin' ter be tried fer murder."

The others gave a sullen assent.

Suddenly the party stopped. Half a mile above them, standing out in the clear fall air in sharp lines, stood a small log cabin.

"He all lives thar," said one of the party in a whisper.

The dogs tugged harder on their chains.

"We'd better go kinder quiet," suggested the warden. "Mebbe he's got a gun."

Slowly the men made their way toward theshouse. From the place there came no sound. The men came nearer and nearer. Two or three drew pistols and held them ready for instant use.

The warden, closely followed by his posse, finally stood in the doorway of the little cabin. The sunlight streaming through the open window fell on the figure of the fugitive, sitting with bowed head beside a tumbled bed on which lay the dead bodies of a mother and child. The man looked up dreamily.

"I wuz sho'ly sorry ter hev ter kill Torm," he said slowly, "but I wuz jess natchelly bleeged ter come."

WARNING FROM THE PRESIDENT

Americans Urged to a Strict Observance of Neutrality

IN DEED AS WELL AS NAME

Careful Observance of Speech and Conduct Will Best Safeguard Nation Against Distress and Disaster —Danger in Passionate Discussion Between Men About War

Washington, Aug. 19.—Addressing the American people, President Wilson issued a statement in connection with the European war, warning citizens of the United States against "that deepest, most subtle, most essential breach of neutrality which may spring out of partisanship, out of passionately taking sides." The president's address follows:

"My Fellow Countrymen—I suppose that every thoughtful man in America has asked himself during the last troubled weeks what influence the European war may exert upon the United States, and I take the liberty of addressing a few words to you in order to point out that it is entirely within our own choice what its effects upon us will be and to urge very earnestly upon you the sort of speech and conduct which will best safeguard the nation against distress and disaster.

"The effect of the war upon the United States will depend upon what American citizens say and do. Every man who really loves America will act and speak in the true spirit of neutrality, which is the spirit of impartiality and fairness and friendliness to all concerned.

"The spirit of the nation in this critical matter will be determined largely by what individuals and society and those gathered in public meetings do and say, upon what newspapers and magazines contain, upon what our ministers utter in their pulpits, and men proclaim as their opinions on the streets.

"The people of the United States are drawn from many nations and chiefly from the nations now at war. It is natural and inevitable that there should be the utmost variety of sympathy and desire among them with regard to the issues and circumstances of the conflict. Some will wish one nation, others another, to succeed in the momentous struggle.

"It will be easy to excite passion and difficult to allay it. Those responsible for exciting it will assume a heavy responsibility; responsibility for no less a thing than that the people of the United States, whose love of their country and whose loyalty to its government should unite them as Americans all, bound in honor and affection to think first of her and her interests, may be divided in camps of hostile opinions, hot against each other, involved in the war itself in impulse and opinion, if not in action.

"Such diversions amongst us would be fatal to our peace of mind and might seriously stand in the way of the proper performancne of our duty as the one great nation at peace, the one people holding itself ready to play a part of impartial mediation and speak the counsels of peace and accommodation, not as a partisan, but as a friend.

"I venture, therefore, my fellow-countrymen, to speak a solemn word of warning to you against that deepest, most subtle, most essential breach of neutrality which may spring out of partisanship, out of passionately taking sides.

"The United States may be neutral in fact as well as in name during these days that are to try men's souls. We must be impartial in thought as well as action, must put a curb upon our sentiments as well as upon every transaction that might be construed as a preference of one party to the struggle before another.

"My thought is of America. I am speaking, I feel sure, the earnest wish and purpose of every thoughtful American that this great country of ours, which is of course the first in our thoughts and in our hearts, should show herself in this time of peculiar trial a nation fit beyond others to exhibit the fine poise of undisturbed judgment, the dignity of self-control, the efficiency of dispassionate action; a nation that neither sits in judgment upon others nor is disturbed in her own counsels and which keeps herself fit and free to do what is honest and disinterested and truly serviceable for the peace of the world. Shall we not resolve to put upon ourselves the restraint which will bring to our people the happiness and the great and lasting influence for peace we covet for them?"

Woman's World

Cabinet Member's Clever Daughter Takes to Literature.

MISS LUCY BURLESON.

One of the most interesting families in Washington is that of Postmaster General Burleson. His wife is a successful playwright, and his daughter, Miss Lucy, has evinced a decided literary gift. She is said to have inherited her mother's talent for writing, together with her father's love of outdoor life.

The Burlesons are from Austin, Tex. They have lived in the capital for many years, where Mr. Burleson has served as congressman. For three generations the Burlesons have been prominent in public affairs in the state of Texas. Mrs. Burleson is of southern stock. Her father was a native of Maryland, but settled in Texas. He was a surgeon in the army during the war with Mexico and liked the life of the frontier so well that he brought his bride to Texas and settled there when the war was over.

Miss Lucy was educated at the Sweetbriar Academy For Girls in Virginia. She is a charming and accomplished young woman. The attentions of a bachelor statesman to her have set Washington to wondering if there may not soon be another wedding in cabinet circles.

PLANNING A HOUSE.

Some Hints For Convenience In Its Arrangement.

If you are preparing to build a house plan first for an airy, sunny cellar. It is quite true that a high cellar, as it is usually treated, is an eyesore. But if the cellar foundation is faced with cement or shingles or brick or whatever the material of the house may be it is not out of harmony with the rest of the house and does not have the stilted, ungainly look that a high cellar of different construction from the rest of the house gives. Remember that a dry, sunny cellar means health.

Be careful to have all electric lights where they can be easily reached. In many houses the pantry light, for instance, is where it is hidden when the swinging door is fastened open.

Arrange the lights to illuminate the bureaus, chiffoniers and dressing tables or other pieces of furniture which boast mirrors. These must be placed so that the light shines to some extent on the face that looks into them.

Plan the bedrooms with an idea of the placing of the beds. Put the windows where drafts directly across the beds can be avoided.

Have a door that closes easily and securely on the back stairs, either at the head or at the foot, so that the odor of cooking in the kitchen will not penetrate throughout the house.

Plan to have the bedroom closets in the walls between the bedrooms which are to be occupied by persons easily disturbed. If the closets separate the bedrooms they serve to deaden noises. This arrangement occupies interior space, of course, when closets can be put in the eaves, but it insures quiet bedrooms.

Button Bags.

Pink and blue gingham button bags with one or two members of the button family embroidered on the outside, with a bone button for their heads, are convenient for the family workbasket.

SMART STYLES.

Extremely deep cuffs will be very smart.

Upstanding ruff collars are more and more liked.

The velvet sash is a new and very effective note.

Velvet millinery will surely have a great vogue this autumn.

Cavalier capes are being made nowadays for quite little girls.

White silk serge is used for tennis costumes by very chic women.

Pique is more used than any other material for collars and waistcoats.

TWO FIRES IN CLUBHOUSES

Both in the Same Neighborhood at West Quincy

Heavy peals of thunder, sharp cracks of lightning and a heavy downpour of rain prevailed throughout the greater part of last night. It began to rain in the early evening. The rain at that time however was falling easy, yet it was of sufficient volume to drench those who happened to be out without the sheltering umbrella. Along toward midnight the storm increased in violence and for a time the rain came down in volumes.

Then the sound of distant thunder was heard, reminding one of the bombardment which is now going on in Europe. Soon there were vivid flashes of lightning, but as far as known nothing was struck.

It was about 11.50 while the rain was coming down the hardest that an alarm was sounded from Box 446. Someone in passing Hibernian hall on Copeland street, discovered a fire in the upper part of the building and going to the West Quincy station notified the firemen who responded on a still alarm.

As they responded to the call one of the firemen ran to Box 446 and sounded the alarm, and as the Central Station apparatus started toward the box the rain fell in torrents.

Before the Central apparatus arrived the West Quincy firemen had got to work. It was in one of the upper rooms and had worked in behind the ceiling. The fire made a thick heavy smoke and the firemen had to eat smoke for a few minutes until the exact location of the blaze was found. This proved to be back of a lounge which was destroyed. Chemical streams soon had the fire under control.

About this time a fire was discovered in a closet in the pool room of Reinhalter's block just around the corner and Chief Billings sent part of his force to cope with this blaze. The fire here seemed to be in a closet among a lot of sawdust, which had been swept from the floor, and doubtless started from a cigar stub or match that had been swept up. The fire was confined to the closet and did but little fire damage although the building was filled with smoke.

The impression about the buildings seemed to be that the fire in the pool room was incendiary. The loss at Hibernian hall will amount to several hundred dollars while that at the pool room will be small.

While at the fire in Hibernian hall, John Monahan, a fireman attached to the West Quincy house had both his feet badly burned. When the alarm sounded he hastily dressed and pulled on his shoes, not stopping to put on stockings or to lace his shoes. He was handling a line of hose and the water becoming hot by contact with the fire filled his shoes, with the result that both feet were quite badly burned. He remained at the fire until it was under control and then went home.

The impression about West Quincy this morning seemed to be that both fires were of incendiary origin.

MRS. JENNIE B. SMITH.

The death of Mrs. Jennie B. Smith at Seekonk, Mass., August 13 came as a great surprise to her many friends. She was ill but ten days and had been pronounced out of danger, until two days of extreme heat combined with her weakened condition caused a rapid change for the worse, the end coming at 5.30 Thursday morning.

A short service was held at Seekonk Friday afternoon where she had a large circle of friends, and prayers Saturday at the grave in Waltham, where she was laid beside her husband, the late Charles F. Smith of Hartford, Conn.

Mrs. Smith has made her home for the past twelve years with her son, Mr. Frederick B. Smith of Willow street, Wollaston Park, and in that time has endeared herself to all with whom she came in contact.

DISTRICT COURT.

Alex Zettz was fined $20 for assault on Mike Kostell at Quincy.

Edmund M. Cronican was fined $10 and James Moran $10 for drunkenness at Cohasset.

John F. Duffy and Joseph A. Henderkson were fined $10 each for drunkenness at Quincy and Kale Eskola and Victor Selene $10 each for drunkenness at Weymouth.

John Moran, John J. Barrett, Dennis O'Halloran and Joseph Condon were fined 50 cents each on account of costs for loitering at Randolph.

BRIEFS

The Lois E. Gragg sewing circle will meet with Mrs. August Johnson, Kendrick avenue, Friday afternoon, instead of Thursday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur R. Fergusson of New York City are receiving congratulations on the birth of a daughter. Mrs. Fergusson will be remembered as Miss Elinor P. Randall of Quincy.

BROOD OF PHEASANTS.

A bantam and a brood of young pheasants were shipped from the State hatchery at Wilkonsville, Mass., Tuesday evening, to Arthur B. Hultman to be liberated in this city. The erection of a gunning stand at Merrymount Park has occasioned a change of plans and they will be liberated instead in Faxon Park. It is expected that the brood will increase rapidly, and add beauty to the picturesqueness of Faxon Park.

The KITCHEN CABINET

Economy no more means saving money than spending money. It means spending and saving, whether time, money or anything else, to the best possible advantage.—John Ruskin.

EASY DESSERTS.

There is no dessert which is easier made than the frozen one, especially that which needs no stirring in the freezer. The following one is a great favorite with those who are fortunate enough to have the recipe.

Take the juice of two oranges, two lemons, two cupfuls of sugar, two cupfuls of milk, and two cupfuls of cream, mix well and stir slowly in the freezer at first. Let stand to ripen for two hours or more after freezing.

Cherry Parfait.—Cook two cupfuls of sugar and a cupful of water together until it threads, pour this hot sirup over the well beaten whites of six eggs, beat until cool, cut two and a half cupfuls of cherries into bits, roll in powdered sugar. Beat a quart of cream, reserve a cupful of cream and fold into the egg whites, add a tablespoonful of vanilla. Pack in a pail if no better mold is at hand, and let stand four hours. Serve with the following sauce:

Orange Sauce.—Beat the yolks of six eggs, add a cupful and a half of sugar, the juice of two oranges, and cook over hot water until thick, cool and fold in the cup of reserved cream.

Duchess Loaf.—Boil a pint of cherry juice with the juice of half a lemon and a cupful of sugar, ten minutes. Whip a pint of cream, add half a cupful of sugar, a half teaspoonful of vanilla and a half cupful of finely minced candied cherries. Put into a mold and pack in ice and salt for four hours.

Velvet Sherbet.—Take the juice of three lemons, a quart of milk and two cupfuls of sugar, mix well and freeze.

A plain ice cream will become a most elegant dish with the addition of some chopped nuts, candied ginger, chocolate sauce or a maple sauce. In fact, a sauce of any preserved fruit is always an addition.

When strawberries are reasonable in price there need be no question of dessert, for this queen of fruits makes a most delectable sauce, as well as an ice with water or a sherbet with cream when frozen.

WAR EXPECTED IN FAR EAST

Conflict Between Japan and Germany Now Appears Inevitable

REJECTION OF THE ULTIMATUM

Will Be Followed by Determined Resistance by Chinese Garrison Defenders Which Will Result in Their Slaughter—American Is to Take Charge of Japan's Embassy at Berlin

Washington, Aug. 19.—Official information came from Berlin that the Japanese ultimatum had been delivered to the German government, and it was intimated in the diplomatic dispatches that war between Japan and Germany was not unlikely.

The Japanese minister at Berlin, apparently foreseeing such an eventuality, asked Ambassador Gerard to be prepared to take over Japanese interests in Germany.

There is no information thus far as to what Germany's course will be on the Japanese ultimatum. But the prevailing view in the best posted diplomatic and official quarters is that Germany cannot and will not accede to the demand.

In that event, it is believed, the garrison at Kiau Chau will make a determined resistance with the prospects of slaughter of the comparatively small force against the overwhelming odds which Japan can bring to bear.

The German estimate of the force at Kiau Chau is about 3500 people, which include the wives and children of the governor and numerous officials stationed there; also three small cruisers in the harbor, which in no way will match the naval force Japan can assemble.

It is understood that Germany, failing to secure the neutralization of the Far East, would prefer to have Kiau Chau pass back direct to China rather than have it pass through Japan as an intermediary for China.

This may possibly serve as the basis for an offer of compromise, by the direct recession to China. But there is little or no prospect that Japan would consider such a proposal, even if it were made.

OFFICIALS ENJOINED

Court Orders Decree Against Transfer of New Haven Stock

Boston, Aug. 19.—Certain former directors, including William Rockefeller and Charles S. Mellen, were enjoined from transferring any of their stock in the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad company, by an order of Judge Braley in the supreme court in connection with the $300,000,000 equity suit brought against the corporation by the executors of the estate of the late Olea Bull Vaughan.

The injunction is a temporary one. A stipulation or promise made not to transfer the holdings is embodied in the court's decree instead of an injunction against other defendants.

VATICAN IS ALARMED

Pope's Illness Takes Unfavorable Turn Under Strain of War

Rome, Aug. 19.—Pope Pius is very ill. He is confined to his bed with two doctors in constant attendance. He is suffering from bronchial catarrh, complicated with gouty manifestations.

In addition the news of the war and the realization that millions of Catholics are aligned on both sides of the titanic struggle has resulted in such extreme melancholia that his entire household is alarmed.

The doctors gave strict orders that under no circumstances is the patient to be permitted to receive any news of the progress of the war.

Roosevelt Finds Fault With Tariff Ideas of Old Parties

Lewiston, Me., Aug. 19.—Theodore Roosevelt made a strong appeal to the Maine farmers to join the Progressive party in a speech here before an audience drawn from many parts of Maine.

He described the Democratic and Republican tariff ideas as two extremes, neither of which would give the farmers what he wanted. The Progressives would take a sane middle course, he declared.

ANOTHER DAY IN VAUGHN CASE

Seeks Reinstatement As Almshouse Superintendent

The last witnesses for the city in the Vaughn hearing were heard this morning and they added but little to their testimony as given at the public hearing.

Just before the noon adjournment City Solicitor Pinkham introduced a statement by Michael Curtis deceased, in support of charges on which Mr. Vaughn was removed from the wardenship of the almshouse.

Counsel McAnarney objected to its admission on the grounds that the defendant had not the opportunity to cross examine since it was written before the hearing and not introduced until after the death of its author.

Counsel McAnarney charged bad faith, but despite his strenuous objections Judge Avery admitted the statement and it was made a part of the city case.

Mr. Pinkham addressed the court for several minutes after the document was admitted in refutation of the charge of bad faith. He said Mr. Curtis was seriously ill at the time and could not be examined.

Three witnesses were heard today, Thomas Phelan, "Senator" George Hobart and Thomas Cooper.

Senator Hobart enlivened matters when he said that he had called at the tuberculosis camp where Curtis was a patient in response to a telephone message from Mr. Campbell, who is now the warden of the almshouse, and in consequence of that visit called on Mr. Green.

The first witness for the defense was introduced this afternoon. Their side of the case will be presented inside of two days.

"Senator" George H. Hobart was the first witness of the morning. He spoke of the several times he has lived at the almshouse. He spoke of harnessing a horse at 5 o'clock in the morning and other duties performed.

The senator said he arranged the goods on the shelves of the storehouse as Mr. Green ordered and on one day when he told Mr. Vaughn things were not in order he answered "I don't care a snap about that, I am going to have something to say about it myself."

He said Overseer Green gave Mrs. Vaughn orders that were carried out, and spoke of milk not being secured.

He said orders were filled for outside poor and slips were provided for memorandum. Mr. Vaughn he said always insisted the first item on the slip should be flour if any was furnished and pork when sent out was exactly weighed, an ounce over being cut off.

Witness said inmates were summoned by an electric bell, and all were obliged to answer.

He also spoke of going to Vaughn's Spa in City Square which has been called "The New City Hall."

Mr. Pinkham asked if Mr. Vaughn spoke of inmates in a respectful or disrespectful way and he answered in a rough manner, like a dog.

Counsel McAnarney asked the characterization be striken out, and Judge Avery said it was only an expression.

Judge Avery asked witness if men were frequently spoken to in a rough way, and he said yes.

The "senator" said he could almost swear that on one occasion Mr. Vaughn said he was going to find out if the paupers were running the home.

He said it seemed to be a hobby of Mrs. Vaughn to get something going between the women.

In cross examination he admitted he had publicly criticized Mr. Vaughns administration.

In being questioned about assisting in making out reports, he charged that Mr. Vaughn "couldn't even figure," and that he had told citizens that he was incompetent and inefficient. He said he learned the words in school but knew they were embodied in the charges.

He said that outside of his being obliged to harness the horse early, he had not been ill treated, and that if it hadn't been for that and Mr. Vaughn's figuring so it disturbed his mathematical sensibilities he would have been happy.

He said he could have given more testimony at the public hearing, but refrained from doing so. He verified the testimony read from a transcript of the hearing relative to Jack Wrenn.

He said he and Mr. Vaughn wore aprons sometimes in the storehouse.

Counsel McAnarney asked if he had ever stopped at Mr. Greens house and he said no. In rebuttal Mr. Pinkham asked if he had and Mr. Hobart said he had called at Mrs. Greens.

Thomas Phelan an inmate said while calling inmates Mr. Vaughn once remarked "I'd like to know who is running this place, me or the inmates." He accused him of hollering frequently.

He said he heard Mrs. Vaughn, Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Shea, two inmates, arguing back and forth and scolding. Witness charged that in a discussion over how eggs were used Mrs. Vaughn called him a "liar."

In cross examination, Mr. Phelan said Mrs. Vaughn's language was "don't you know you are telling lies."

He said a delivery of his furniture preceded his admittance to the almshouse.

He admitted he had been at the State farm when counsel McAnarney introduced records to that effect.

Patrick E. Maddigan said he had several arguments with Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn. He charged the latter threatened to throw him into the brook if he didn't return to work while he was after a drink of water.

Orders to shake Thomas Butler were given him by Mr. Vaughn, but not carried out according to witness.

He said the swill he carried out contained good meat and in cross examination he said he never spoke to Mr. Vaughn about.

Counsel McAnarney offered a stenographic report of evidence showing profanity had not been used as claimed by the witness this morning.

Busy Industrial Plants Full of Interest

BOARD OF TRADE ON ANNUAL VISIT

Find a Well Equipped Newspaper Plant at Daily Ledger Office

Variety and Magnitude of Industries a Surprise

The hot weather Wednesday afternoon coupled with the high humidity, that made the perspiration stand out all over the body, doubtless had the effect of keeping many, who had intended to take part in the annual trip about the city from participating. However upwards of sixty occupied the eleven automobiles which left the rooms of the Board of Trade promptly at 12.15.

For three quarters of an hour previous to that time those intending to participate were gathering at the rooms where they fortified themselves for the trip with an appetizing lunch that was seryed by A. L. Whitman and T. L. Williams. Promptly at 12.15 the horn on the pilot auto sounded, and the party were off. Each auto had banners on either side reading "Quincy Board of Trade," "Annual outing," etc., while numerous small American flags testified to the patriotism of the party.

Leaving the rooms of the Board the autos passed down Coddington street, thence through Valley street to Park lane, through Merrymount Park, to Penno street to the Quincy Shore reservation to Atlantic street, thence through Newbury avenue, Squantum street to Hancock street.

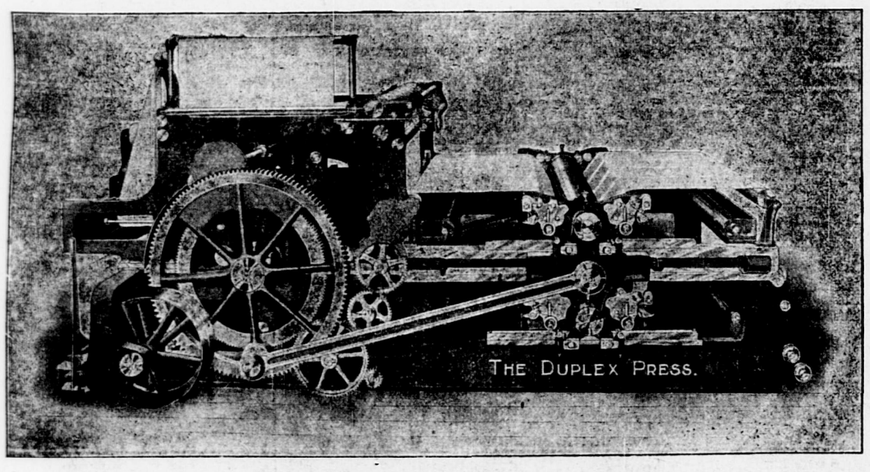

The time for reaching the Norfolk Downs depot was 1 o'clock, and as the party were a little ahead of the schedule, the autos turned down Billings road, and the line passed through a number of streets in the beautiful Wollaston Park district bringing up at the Norfolk Downs depot as the whistles sounded the hour of 1 o'clock.

PNEUMATIC SCALE PLANT.

Before entering the Pneumatic Scale plant, President Hamilton briefly called attention to the plant as an evidence of what the Board of Trade had accomplished. The plant he said were about to move elsewhere as they were unable to obtain additional land. The Board of Trade took hold of the matter and were successful in obtaining the land desired, with the result that the plant was to remain in Quincy. Since then one large concrete unit had been erected, and others were to follow. The buildings were built in such a substantial way, that additions could readily be made.

As the party entered the plant they were met by Arthur Axburg, one of the office force, who piloted them through the plant. The machinery manufactured here is almost human in what it accomplishes. For instance one operator with one of the many machines manufactured, folds, weighs and seals 25 packages a minute, the machine occupying a space 6-6 by 15-6. The packages may also be lined automatically and dated, the weight of each package being guaranteed not to vary one-sixteenth of an ounce.

It would require too much space however to go into detail about all the machines manufactured, but they are wonderful in their way and although the company is now employing over 200 men it can not begin to keep up with its orders with its present capacity. This means immediate enlargement.

position. In fact of any material which the customer desires. Many of the handsome and ornamental gates seen on the stately mansions on Beacon street, Boston, and on some of the extensive estates at Newport, R. I., are manufactured here. On the first floor the heavy work in manufactured and assembled, while on the upper floor is the drafting room, the pattern room, etc. It was interesting to note that many of the iron ornaments used on the material were wrought and forged and not moulded of cast iron.

BOSTON GEAR WORKS.

Going back to the cars, a short ride took the party to the Boston Gear Works, the screeching of the horns and whistles on the automobiles sounding a warning ahead that the party were coming. Here they were divided into groups of ten, each group being given in charge of some foreman, in order that the plant might be inspected in the quickest possible time.

The large room is full of gear cutting machines, of which in number there were 200, while 180 men are engaged in their operation. Gears of all kinds are cut, some of the machines being wonderful in the work which they do. There is nothing in the line of gears that is impossible here, and as the advent of automobiles has greatly created the demand for gears of all kinds it is said that the company can not keep up with its orders, and that even now the visitors saw an addition to the plant in the process of erection.

Many of the gears, in fact the larger part of them, are cut by machines, upon which a stream of oil is constantly pouring to keep them from being heated and ruined. This oil they were informed is all filtered and used over again.

AT PRESIDENT'S HOME.

The autos went through the park district drawing up at the residence of President Hamilton on Elm avenue, where a large sign in front of the house read "Welcome Board of Trade."

Miss Janet Hamilton, the 22 months old daughter of the President, came down the walk to meet the party and gave them a welcome. On the piazza Mrs. Hamilton assisted by Mrs. J. K. Barber, Mrs. Howard S. Reynolds and the Misses Rachel and Nellie Boniface of New York served refreshing punch, while the president passed out some smokers. President Hamilton also read a telegram from H. S. Reynolds, a member of the Board, who is now in Omaha, expressing his regret at being unable to be present and extending his congratulations. After three cheers for the President, the trip was resumed, via Beale street, Newport avenue, Bridge and Hancock streets to the exchange of the Telephone Co., on Merrymount road.

WOLLASTON FOUNDRY CO.

From here the party passed through the plant of the Wollaston Foundry Co., where L. W. Newhall took them in charge explaining the method of making the moulds into which the hot metal is poured for the castings. The work making these moulds was also in progress, so that the party saw all but the actual process of pouring the hot metal, which did not occur until 4 o'clock. Nearly 100 men are now employed in this factory which has been established in Quincy since 1873, and although the plant has been destroyed by fire several times it has been immediately rebuilt.

NORFOLK IRON CO.

Near by is the plant of the Norfolk Iron Co., which is owned by Councilman Charles L. Gilliatt of Wollaston. The party were shown through the plant by Carl Gilliatt, and while doing business in a quiet way it employs about 150 men. Ornamental and structural work of all kinds is manufactured both in iron, brass and com-

TELEPHONE EXCHANGE.

From the outside one would never imagine this to be a telephone exchange, with which 3500 subscribers are connected, for no lines are visible entering the building. The fact is that all wires enter the building by the underground route. Here also the party were divided into groups that they might better see and understand

DAMAGE BY LIGHTNING

House Struck and a Stone Wall Wrecked

A severe thunder and lightning storm passed over the city shortly after midnight, and although the lightning was the sharpest that ever accompanied a storm the damage reported is slight.

Gutters on many streets were out and catch basins proved to be too small to carry off the heavy rain. The damage to trees was heavy, and limbs were snapped off in different parts of the city, and in some cases carried electric wires with them.

The emergency crew of the Quincy E. L. & P. Co. were on duty all night, but their services were not required for any serious break in service.

The storm was heaviest in the South Quincy and Houghs Neck sections. No damage is reported from the latter. The precipitation is said to have been one and three eighths inches.

A bolt of lightning last night struck the roof of the home of Councilman Stanley Barnicoat on Bedford street and did slight damage. The bolt split the slate near the chimney, followed along the ridgepole to the end of the roof where it tore another hole. The upper flat is occupied by Andrew Milne, Jr., and family. Although awakened by the crash they were not shocked. The damage is confined principally to the upper attic structure.

Mrs. Barnicoat is a patient at the Quincy City Hospital and her husband spent the night with his father Charles Barnicoat on Franklin street.

Lightning struck a high retaining wall at the home of Sergt. Ernest Bishop on School street and loosened it so the heavy rain undermined it and caused the stones to tumble to the field in the rear. The wall was about 20 feet long and 15 feet high. It was built of stones of various sizes

One large piece, weighing nearly half a ton, rolled from its position to a point nearly seven feet away. All the others of which the wall was built formed a heap of granite which resembled a miniature grout pile.

The wall aside from being the retainer of the yard also served as the foundation for the rear piazza. When the support gave away it was twisted out of shape and left in a condition too dangerous for use.

Sergt Bishop left police headquarters at midnight and retired immediately on his arrival home. He and his family were later awakened by the noise of the falling rocks. They ran to the kitchen and saw the slide in progress but were powerless to prevent it. The damage is estimated close to $200.

DEFENSE IN VAUGHN CASE

General Demand of Some of Testimony Given

Annie English, a former cook, said very good food was furnished, and the supply was never stinted. She said she never heard Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn swear or the latter use harsh language.

In cross examination by City Solicitor Pinkham she said her work called her only to the kitchen and that she had nothing to do with the rest of the house.

Marie Aronsen, formerly employed there as a second girl by Mr. Vaughn said she never heard Mrs. Vaughn use harsh language to inmates. She said Mrs. Shea was given milk three times a day which contradicted the evidence given by the person in question Also eggs once in a while. She said she heard no complaints and never heard Mr. Vaughn swear at inmates.

In cross examination she said she never washed white coats and saw Mrs. Vaughn wash them twice.

Mrs. Anna Vaughn, wife of William J. Vaughn who was matron, said the position carried with its salary, home

THE PAN-AMERICAN SPIRIT.

The All-America spirit has been slow coming. The acceptance by the United States of the mediation of three South American powers seems almost the first instance in history where the political ties joining the two continents have passed beyond the realm of formalities.

The idea of a Pan-American Congress dates way back to 1826 and Simon Bolivar. Since then there have been several Pan-American conferences. It is an impressive sight to see together the statesmen of all these different races. It is inspiring to note the harmony with which they discuss technical points in customs regulations.

Meanwhile really vital matters have been tactfully removed from the program. Nothing controversial gets in. A large part of the subjects are merely perfunctory, like resolutions of appreciation. But no doubt these conferences have done good, in bringing national leaders together in a social way.

The American people are principally interested in wider commercial relations with South America. The South American peoples have a morbid fear of American aggression, and they want positive assurances against that. The conferences never seemed to get to the heart of these vital questions.

Now the fortunes of Mexican diplomacy have brought these international relations up against real work to be done. Brazil has been made the guardian of American interests at Mexico City. Argentina, Brazil, and Chile, will try to unravel a tangle in which the United States is vitally interested.

In daily life people never get acquainted when they simply go out to make stiff social calls. Friendship is only created when people get interested in doing something together. Perhaps this mediation may be a step toward a more intimate friendship with the Southern powers.

GROWTH OF POPULATION.

According to the estimates of the census bureau, by July 1, the United States will have a population of 103,021,992 people. This is a gain of over 7,000,000 persons in four years. Such rapid gains look alarming to some people. They begin to think that population will become too congested.

Estimates of the possible population that could be supported in the United States have varied very widely. Prof. A. P. Brigham, a leading scientist who discussed that subject in the Popular Science Monthly a few years ago, had it figured out that this country could support only 305,000,000 people. At present rates that number would be reached in less than 100 years.

The editors of that magazine, however, are much more liberal. They say that three-quarters of our land can be made productive, capable of producing 50 bushels of corn per acre. A bushel of corn has the food value to support a man about a month. That would make it possible for an acre to support four men a year.

They think therefore that 3,000,000,000 people could be fed in this country on the present basis of production. By scientific methods the corps could be doubled. The development of the tropical regions, which are far more fertile, and exchange of the manufactures of the temperate zone for the food of the tropics, would, they say, permit 10,000,000,000 people to live in our territory.

In Europe every little crevice on the sunny mountain slopes is utilized for little patches of culture only a few feet wide. In this country there is gross waste everywhere. The loss of rainwater, the throwing of sewage containing valuable chemical elements into the sea, and soil and forest exhaustion, are a few of our more wanton extravagances.

The rapid growth of Uncle Sam's family is thus to be welcomed. It may not uplift average prosperity. But it is a welcome testimony to the fact that economic conditions in this country are still very much more favorable than elsewhere.

BRUSSELS NOT YET IN HANDS OF GERMANS

But City Cannot Hold Out Against Attack In Force

STRONG BARRICADES ABOUT THE CAPITAL

French Have Relieved Belgians of Bearing Brunt of German Attack, Which Is Said to Be Personally Directed by the Kaiser—Invaders Are Driven Back After Getting Within a Mile of French-Belgian Frontier—Nothing Definite About Situation at Liege—Namur Still Held by Allies—Formidable French Advance Into German Territory

London, Aug. 20.—The great battle for the possession of Belgium has begun. This is the only inference that can be drawn in London from the meagre dispatches which hint at bitter fighting from north to south in the little country that has for so many days held back the German invasion.

Brussels has not yet fallen and the Germans may not find it so easy to conquer as they have anticipated. The capital cannot hold out against an attack in force, but it will not surrender to a sudden rush of the invading cavalry.

Trenches have been dug about the city and earthworks reinforced with paving stones have been thrown up in the principal streets. Barbed wire has been strung across the roads leading into the suburbs and mines have been planted wherever the Germans are expected in force.

Brussels has recovered from the panic which seemed imminent when the government officials removed to Antwerp. Business is, of course, suspended, but hysteria has given way to a tense suspense.

French Fighting In Belgium

The residents could hear the dull boom of cannonading, but reassurance came as the faint roar of great guns did not grow louder. From the fragmentary dispatches received in London, it is evident that the Belgions are no longer bearing the brunt of the German attack and that the French have met in force the long dreaded threat of the Teutonic invasion of France.

The severest conflict was centred about Tirlemont and Jodoigne, where the middle column of the army of the Meuse is being driven straight toward Brussels. It is impossible to get trustworthy information about the battling of Wednesday, but everything points to a decided check in the onward march of the Germans.

The Belgians and French were fighting together Wednesday between Gembloux and Jodoigne, and in that coveted section of Brrabant the invaders were everywhere held to the positions that they had occupied Tuesday. It must borne in mind that no German messages have been received and that the check will probably prove only temporary.

More Fighting at Diest

Diest, where several cavalry clashes and one engagement of considerable importance have already been fought, was again the scene of hard fighting, the Germans developing an attack against the city in great strength.

Reports that the Belgians have retired to Antwerp seem to be premature. The latest advices received from Brussels anonunce that the main force of the army is still concentrated at Louvain. The city will be held until the Germans have their heavy artillery in position, when it will probably be abandoned in favor of Antwerp, one of the most strongly fortified cities in Europe.

Emperor William, from his headquarters at Mainz, is said to be personally directing the movements of the German army. A story printed in the Cologne Gazette confirms the French advices. The German paper states that the progress of the army of the Mepse is slow, but that it is not seriously checked.

Extensive Battle Lines

The tremendous extent of the battle lines is indicated in two messages from Paris. In one it is said that severe fighting between the Germans and French is being waged in northern Limburg, a surprising bit of news, as this province was supposedly cleared of opposition to the German advance.

Tongres, St. Trond and Hasselt, the principal towns in this province, were scenes of cavalry encounters several days ago, but recently the battling has shifted westward. It is probable that the clashes of Wednesday may have occurred in the north of the province, which would indicate a wide sweep of the Germans aimed against Antwerp.

A second message from Paris told of the appearance of the Germans at Florenville, where they were said to have been beaten off by the French. The result of the encounter is unimportant, but the fact that the Germans have emerged there from the passage of the Ardennes is significant. Florenville is only a mile or so distant from the frontier between France and Belgium, opposite a great undefended French region that stretches from Mezieres to Verdun.

Wide German Advance

The width of the German advance is evidenced by the refugees who are pouring by thousands into Brussels. They come from Tirlemont, from Huy, from Liege, from Namur, from large cities and small towns in every part of eastern Belgium.

They had lived through days of horrors, but the presence of so many other sufferers has done much to steady their nerves and violent outbreaks of grief are rare in Brussels.

Absolutely nothing can be learned about the situation at Liege. The Germans maintain that the forts have been battered into uselessness; the Belgians insist that they are still holding out. Another rumor, which comes from Holland, says that the garrisons, realizing the hopelessness of further resistance, have blown up the forts and have joined their comrades along the front.

Namur, the second stronghold on the Meuse, is still held by the allies. Here, it is presumed, the British are stronger than elsewhere in Belgium, although this is conjecture. Dinant is also resisting the German advance, but these two strong cities are facing isolation through the German movements to the north and south.

The invaders have been reported crossing the Meuse between Liege and Namur. Some German cavalry patrols appeared at the river bank at Namur and attempted to force a crossing there, but they were driven back with heavy losses. The great guns in the forts are said to have been most efficient.

The French Invasion

Interest has been centred on Belgium, but the French invasion into Alsace-Lorraine grows hourly of more importance. Wednesday the French advance was so rapid that it seems evident that the Germans have withdrawn thousands of their soldiers to aid the march into Belgium. It may prove a costly maneuver, for the French advance, from the meagre dispatches that have been received, seems as formidable an undertaking as the German movement against France.

With but little opposition, the exultant French moved on until their advance patrol occupied Morchingen, a town only nineteen miles southeast of Metz. It is a place of considerable strategic importance, as it is on one of the principal railroad lines from Metz to Strassburg. Travel between the great German fortified cities must now be made by a rundabout journey.

AUSTRIA'S THREAT

Montenegrin Hostages Will Be Shot If Nicholas' Army Attacks

A dispatch from Rome says a message from Cettinje states that the Montenegrin army is within two hours' march of Ragusa, a fortified seaport of Austria-Hungary in Dalmatia, and thirty-eight miles northwest of Cattaro.

King Nicholas, the message adds, has been notified by the Austrian authorities that if his army attacks, the large number of prominent Servians and Montenegrins held at Ragusa as hostages will be shot. Among the hostages is Count Wopiovic, a brother of King Nicholas.

NORTH SEA FIGHTING

All That Has Occurred Thus Far Has Been at Close Range

While the official war bureau at London announces there has been desultory fighting between the British and German warships in the North sea, it insists that "no losses are reported or claimed." It is stated that the fighting was confined to an exchange of shots at long range between scout ships and destroyer divisions.

The bureau says: "A certain liveliness is apparent in the southern area of the North sea." This is interpreted to mean there are indications of a possible German dash with submarines and destroyers against the British blockading fleet. Such action has been expected, as the German hope of success on the seas is based on the belief they will be able to pick off individually some of the British war fleet while their own heavy ships remain under the protection of the land guns.

LACK OF ENTHUSIASM

Mobilization In Austria Accompanied by Great Disorder

It is officially stated in Paris that the mobilization of the Austrian army was accompanied by much disorder and even open mutiny in many places owing to the unpopularity of the war among the many classes of people.

This information is conveyed in a Paris dispatch to the London Telegraph, which continues:

"In many parts of Austria enthusiasm for the war is comparatively lacking, and the people complain bitterly against spending blood and money in a useless cause."

The official statement adds that a large number of Czech soldiers have been shot at Prague for refusing to fight, and that a whole Serb regiment of the Fifteenth Austrian army corps mutinied. A similar mutiny occurred in Bohemia.

TO CHECKMATE JAPAN

Germany Plans to Give Back Leases to Chinese Republic

The German emperor is planning to make Japan's ultimatum ineffective. Germany will probably voluntarily surrender to China her concessions on the Shantung peninsula.

In turning back to the Chinese republic Kiau Chau and the German land and water leased territory, the kaiser is expected to emphasize that Germany has been an economic force in the Orient that has made for improved conditions.

While definite decision has not been reached, a high German diplomat declares that Germany is already negotiating with China to turn back to the oriental republic its leased territory.

SWISS FACE STARVATION

Mills Closed, Business Paralyzed and Crops Are Rotting

Swiss mills and factories are closed, business is at a standstill, and enterprises dependent on manual labor paralyzed, according to Charles Hubscher, charge of the Swiss legation at Washington.

With the army mobilized, Hubscher said crops are rotting in the fields for lack of harvest hands, and the country faces starvation unless wheat is received from the United States. "Switzerland will remain absolutely neutral," Hubscher said. "It is her only course for self-preservation."

HITS ROCKS IN FOG

Prince Albert of Grand Trunk Pacific Line Is Breaking Up

Vancouver, B. C., Aug. 20.—Beating her way through a dense fog in Brown's passage, the Grand Trunk Pacific steamer Prince Albert fouled the Butterworth rocks near South Dundee island and is breaking up rapidly.

Distress signals from the Prince Albert were first picked up by the wireless operator on Digby island, which is separated by a narrow strait from Kalen island. He at once sent out wireless calls to any ship that might be in the vicinity. The first vessel to reply to the call for help was the Prince Albert's sister ship, the Prince John. There were only a few passengers on the Prince Albert.

NOTES ARE REPUDIATED

Carranza Will Not Recognize $10,000,000 of Huerta Paper

Mexico City, Aug. 20.—A decree is to be issued by the federal district repudiating government notes of the issue of July 25 last. This issue was made during the regime of Provisional President Carbajal, on the authorization of the $60,000,000 6 percent ten-year gold bonds made by the Huerta administration.

About $10,000,000 of this paper is now in circulation. The repudiation is based upon the decree issued by Venustiano Carranza on April 26 refusing to recognize the acts of the Huerta government.

POPE PIUS X. PASSES AWAY AT VATICAN

Unable to Recover From Relapse Which He Suffered

MUCH DEPRESSED BY THE EUROPEAN WAR

Grief Over Great Clash of Arms Hastens End of Pontiff Who Suffered From Acute Bronchitis—Collapse Comes Suddenly After Doctor Had Found Nothing to Indicate Grave Crisis—Had Granted Audiences as Late as Aug. 10 Last

Rome, Aug. 20.—Pope Pius the Tenth died early this morning.

The supreme head of the Catholic church passed away surrounded by members of the college of cardinals, his devoted sisters and his devoted personal attendants. The relapse which he suffered yesterday was too much for the strength of the venerable pontiff. Although he rallied somewhat to the ministrations of his physicians, he quickly sank again. The end was very peaceful.

Grief over the war in Europe caused the pope much depression from the first outbreak, and several days ago symptoms appeared of the old bronchial affection from which the pontiff had suffered in times past.

On Tuesday Dr. Marchiafava announced that the pope was suffering from a simple cold and that possibly complete rest for a week would restore him to his usual health. The bronchital condition, however, spread and on Wednesday it was announced that the pope's condition was serious.

Marchiafava was able to leave the Vatican for a time owing to the amelioration of symptons. He said that nothing early in the morning had indicated the grave crisis, which had come on rapidly. Shortly after he left, Dr. Amici examined the patient.

He explained that the sudden collapse was due to the pontiff's age and the gouty affection, which always combine to give bronchial catarrh of an acute nature a most serious character.

At times during the day the pope had much difficulty in breathing. He suffered much from headache and inability to rid himself of the accumulations in the lungs.

Stimulants were injected and oxygen administered. Several times the pontiff revived and seemed much better. He would then speak to those about him and insist that his desires be executed. In one of these intervals he asked for Mgr. Rosa, who was recently appointed secretary of the consistorial congregation.

As soon as he was notified he rushed to the Vatican and was immediately admitted to the apartment where the pope was lying. Rosa remained alone with the pope, and the incident was considered significant, as, owing to his present position, Rosa will be secretary of the conclave which elects the new pope. It is thought that the pope confided to him his last wishes.

Cardinal Merry Del Val, the papal secretary, telegraphed to all the cardinals, notifying them of the grave condition from which the pope was suffering. Later the ringing of church bells announced to the faithful the exposition of the holy sacrament and calling them to prayer for the restoration of the pontiff to health. This gave rise to rumors of the pope's death, which the Vatican denied, owing to the many inquiries from all quarters.

Ill-health had been the pontiff's lot for many years, and intermittently the attacks have been so serious that the world was prepared several times to hear of his passing.

As late as Aug. 10 last, upon the occasion of the eleventh anniversary of his coronation, Pope Pius granted numerous audiences. Two days later it became known that he had cancelled virtually all engagements. His attendants reported that he was unable to work and that he sat listless and silent for hours, evidently brooding over the great clash of arms in Europe.

His physician, Dr. Marchiafava, ordered the pope to bed on Aug. 16, when it was announced that the war and the intends fate of Rome had combined to depress him, so he had continued to dream of the conflict by night and to discuss it by day.

"I shall not cease to implore God to put a stop to this awful slaughter," he reputedly said, and certain physicians had to deal with his mental condition as well as physical suffering.

Arrangements were made by which Cardinal Merry Del Val would render the pope a daily report of the war situation. The pope desired to see some way in which he might exert his influence to check the bloodshed, and he was the more affected because any action seemed useless.

At the commencement of the European crisis he had addressed an exhortation to all the Catholics of the world, asking them to lift their souls toward Christ, who alone was able to aid, and he called upon the clergy to offer public prayer.

O'CONNELL—CROWLEY.

Miss Bridget Crowley, a sister of contractor Dennis S. Crowley of Grove street, and Daniel O'Connell, whose home is a short distance away, were married Wednesday evening in the presence of their immediate relatives and friends.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Fr. William J. Duffy, curate of St. Mary's parish, at the parish house. The bridesmaid was Miss Ellen Dugan of East Milton, a niece of the bride, and the best man was Daniel O'Connell of the same town, a nephew of the groom.

Following the ceremony a short reception was held at the home of her brother, Dennis S. Crowley at Adams and Robertson streets. Mr. and Mrs. O'Connell are now on a honeymoon to the Cape and on their return will reside on Grove street.

The bride is one of the best known Hibernians in the city and is a past president of Auxiliary 5. The groom, an athletic man, was one of the most aggressive football players in New England when the Milton A. A. team held the professional championship.

BOARD OF TRADE

some of the workings of this office in which every telephone subscriber is interested.

Taken first to the operating room they saw how quickly one subscriber was connected with another, miles and miles away, yet with a quietness that it was impossible to hear a pin drop.

Adjoining the main operating room is another room fitted up with chairs, couches, etc. This is the lounging room for the operators, who the party were informed worked at a board for two and a half hours, after which they were given a fifteen minute rest. The operators work in shifts, the greatest number of course being employed during the rush hours which it was said were from 9 to 10 in the morning and from 7 to 8 in the evening.

In all fifty operators are employed who are directly in charge of Miss Catherine C. Walsh, the chief operator. In addition to the operators at the switch boards, there are also two supervisors, a chief operator, information and monitor operator on duty at all times.

One young lady seated at a desk by herself was pointed out as information and as most telephone users frequently have occasion to consult information many eyes were turned in her direction. In front of her she has a card index upon which the names of all subscribers are arranged alphabetically so that one's number can quickly be obtained.

Down stairs the party saw where the wires came in from outside, where they were assembled before they passed up stairs to the switch boards, and where the trouble men were at work. All line trouble is reported to these men who by means of galvanometers and other testing apparatus are able to tell pretty near at all times where the line trouble is located and what kind of trouble it is.

As one went through this plant he could hardly realize the rapid strides that had taken place in the telephone system in Quincy. The first switchboard, if memory serves the writer correctly was located on Temple street on the second floor of the building now occupied by Frank Fessenden Crane, the man with the longest titled office in the city and the smallest salary.

But one operator was employed, the first being Miss Emma Wight, then Miss M. Lizzie Furnald. There was also but one switch board of what is known as the Deland pattern. When a subscriber desired to be connected with another subscriber, he turned the crank of a generator near his telephone. This sent a current over the line which operated an armature on a set of coils, which caused a red shutter to drop, on which was painted the line number. The number of subscribers on a single line often ran as high as half a dozen and at times it was a long wait for some subscribers before they could get to the line.

In front of each operator suspended on springs was the square box like Blake transmitter, into which the operator talked, and the constant dropping of the red shutters and the voice of the operator made considerable noise. Then again the operator in calling a subscriber had to turn the crank of a generator, which eventually fitted them as candidates for hand organ grinders.

Contrast that method with that now in use. The subscriber has no crank to turn. He simply takes off his receiver immediately in front of the operator at the central station a tiny electric light glows forth. These electric lights have different markings so that the operator knows at once whether the party calling has a limited, a party line, an unlimited or a private line. In fact the light tells at once what kind of service the subscriber calling is paying for. Then again when the operator rings a subscriber she has no crank motion but simply presses a small button and presto the bell rings on the end of the line.

Instead of the Blake transmitter, the operator now wears suspended about her neck a horn shaped transmitter, which is so suspended that it is always within an inch of her rose bud mouth. Then as the operator at one table can connect with any one of the 3500 subscribers without moving from her seat or speaking to another operator, it can readily be understood how church-like stillness prevails at all times in the operating room.

DAILY LEDGER PLANT.

Armed with cigars which were passed as the party left the Telephone building, they headed for the office of the Daily Ledger, where they were received by Frank F. Prescott the managing editor, and Eben Prescott in charge of the plant and invited to the basement where they saw the regular edition of the paper run off on the large duplex press. The edition in a way besides containing all the news of the day contained a special souvenir edition in honor of the outing, and each one of the party carried away copies of the paper hot from the press.

From the press room they visited the composing room where they saw the linotype machines in operation This also was a revelation in a way to most of the party, for it was wonderful to see how easily and quietly the young lady operators played their fingers over the typewriter like key board, and how a moment later, out came a line of hot metal.

One operator on one of these machines can no wset at much type in an hour as a half dozen or more could do by the old-hand method of setting type.

The young ladies operating the machines readily explained the working of their machines, and several of the visitors carried away a line of type bearing their name as a souvenir of the visit.

In the job printing department presses were busy and were watched with interest.

VISIT TO QUARRIES.

As the party passed out of the Daily Ledger office they took with them a cigar to cheer them on the trip to West Quincy where the quarries of J. S. Swingle and the Granite Railway were visited. The Swingle quarry is the deepest in Quincy at the present time, and although the location of the quarry gave the visitors quite a climb they were well repaid for their visit. Walking across the supension bridge built over the quarry they looked down and saw below several workmen who from the top of the quarry looked like toys. Here they saw how the massive blocks of granite of "The Extra Dark Man" were quarried and hoisted to the surface. Because of the fog over the water the view from these quarries was not as good as usual.

The next stopping place was at the Quincy Column Turning Co. on Water street, where solid blocks of granite were seen in process of being turned into beautiful columns some of which were later given a polish so bright that they might almost be used for mirrors.

One particularly interesting exhibit seen was a large polished granite ball, whose diameter was about four feet.

BAKER YACHT BASIN.

The next stopping place was the Baker Yacht Basin at Quincy Point which Commissioner Crane informed the party was a concern that came into Quincy quietly, purchased property to the value of a quarter of a million dollars, and had expended a million and a quarter of money in its plant, facts that were eye openers to many who never had any idea of the existence of such an industry.

Passing down the long wharf surrounding the basin they saw yachts and steamers safely housed during the winter months, Commissioner Crane called attention to the beautiful water front along Town river which was only waiting to be developed to bring a large line of business along its shores Commissioner Crane is right at home when it comes to water front and he gave an interesting talk. For the dredging of this beautiful river $25,000 was available just as soon as the city selected a site for a public dock. He also emphasized the necessity of a wider and deeper channel for the Fore river.

QUINCY BEEF CO.

The last place to be visited was that of the Quincy Beef Co. on Dimmock street. Here, within a short period the upper room of the building was used as a large ice chest, being filled with ice several times a year. Now, however a cold storage plant has been added so that more room is afforded.

Entering the cold blast refrigerator on the ground floor one found the temperature near a freezing point, but what took their eye most of all was the large sides of beef that hung about the room.

With so much beef, hams, and other meats hanging about, one had to stop a minute to think why it was that stores were asking upwards of fifty cents a pound for steak, and other meats in proportion.

On the upper floor were seen tub after, tub of lard, pork and innumerable cases of eggs, while in a little side room a young man was busily at work spotting the eggs. That is exposing them to a bright light to see if they were good or bad.

Q. Y. C. CLUBHOUSE.

From here the party journeyed to Houghs Neck where Commodore Crane of the Quincy Yacht club tendered the use of the club house to the party that they might have an opportunity to remove some of the dirt that had accumulated during the trip and refresh a bit before participating of the shore dinner which William Norteman had prepared for them.

SHORE DINNER.

Promptly at 6 P. M., the Board of Trade took possession of Norteman's pavillion and were soon enjoying a shore dinner which included clam chowder, steamed clams, fish, cold meat, mashed potato, green corn, tomoto, lobster, ice cream and cake, coffee and cigars.

At the head table were President Hamilton, Acting Mayor Crane, ex-Presidents E. R. Stone, E. J. Sandberg J. W. Pratt, T. L. Williams and Walter E. Piper and Frank Fessenden Crane.

Brief speaking followed the dinner. President Hamilton said the members of the Board of Trade were grateful to the enterprises which during the afternoon had entertained them, and to the Quincy Yacht club for hospitality.

The industries had been a revelation to many, but it should be remembered that we did not see one-tenth of the Quincy plants. It would require several days to really understand Quincy. He felt that the Board of Trade was no longer a joke. That it was doing good work for Quincy. He thanked all present for their loyalty, making the oting such a success.

City Clerk Emery L. Crane, the Acting Mayor, opened with a story. Some time ago a newspaper writer attempted to tell us what was the matter with Quincy. But the solution was getting together. In union there is strength. Stop hammering at new industries. We welcome people who come to town without knocking and go out the same way.

E. J. Sandberg was introduced as the first president and reviewed the early history of the Board of Trade which was organized in 1903. He paid tributes to the work of J. W. Pratt, T. L. Williams, W. E. Piper, J. R. Richards and others, but particularly to Eugene R. Stone and John L. Hamilton.

J. F. Scott, the new local representative of the Telephone Co., asked cooperation for improvement of the telephone service. He said Quincy should have the best if they would only come to him with their grievances and stop knocking.

Secretary Hall urged an increase in membership of the Board of Trade and the outing came to a close.

AUTOS AND GUESTS.

The autos for the trip were furnished by Charles H. Penniman, Hon. E. R. Stone, W. F. Hodgkinson, Frank Fessenden Crane, Oscar S. Sandberg, Hall, William J. Spargo, Freeman W. J. S. Swingle, B. F. Macomber, Stanley Grant and W. F. Dinsmore.

Those who enjoyed the outing were: Stanley Hall, P. W. Luce, T. H. Irving, John L. Hamilton, G. A. Emslie, Hon. E. R. Stone, Hon. John O. Hall, James H. Elcock, H. S. HEARING BY PORT DIRECTORS

Relative to Channel to Wollaston Clubhouse

Dock Commissioner Crane, Secretary Hall of the Board of Trade, and Representative Sandberg attended a hearing his morning before the Directors of the Port of Boston relative to the expenditure of the $10,000 appropriated by the legislature for dredging a 6 foot channel from deep water to the Wollaston yacht club basin and the Squantum club:

There seemed to be a disposition on the part of the directors to hold the matter up, as estimates by the engineer of the directors gave the cost from $14,000 to $16,000. The Directors intimated that it would help matters along somewhat if the City of Quincy and the two yacht clubs were to contribute toward the expense.

Commissioner Crane and Representative Sandberg spoke on the question and Commissioner Crane urged that the directors go ahead with the appropriation of $10,000, and if it was not found to be sufficient, then the matter of a contribution by the City of Quincy and the two yacht clubs could be taken up later.

It was understood at the hearing that the $10,000 would only deepen the channel to 6 feet from the main channel to the Wollaston yacht club basin, and that it would not be sufficient to connect with the Squantum yacht club basin.

MAYOR NOT AT CITY HALL.

It was expected that Mayor Miller would come from his camp at Hingham this morning to attend to some pressing city matters and to issue a call for a special meeting of the City Council next Monday evening. He sent word however that he would not be up today but would be at City Hall Friday morning.

DUTY OF THE CHURCH.

It is the duty of the church to make religion supreme. To leave the word of God and serve tables; to subordinate salvation to social service; to substitute philanthropy for piety; is a weakness of the flesh, a compromise with the world, a concession to the devil. This is the "passing of faith;" this is the "decadence of the ministry;" this is "materialism in the church." This is to give up, to surrender to the clamor of those who believe mistakenly that man can live by bread alone.

To make a church a religionless mixture of civil service reforms, debating societies, gymnasium contests, oyster suppers, ice cream festivals, stereopticon lectures, good advice, coal saving funds, sight singing classes, dancing schools, refined minstrel shows, reading circles and dramatic entertainments is certainly not to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness.—Rev. David M. Steele, Philadelphia.

Injustice to Fail to Have Women Represented In Constitutional Convention

By Former President ROOSEVELT

THERE are at present at least fifty women serving on the boards of New York state asylums, hospitals, industrial schools and special schools for the blind and crippled. There are two women on the state commission for the blind and two on the widowed mothers' pension commission. In our private charitable work women stand ahead of men in the importance of the functions they perform. There are EIGHT HUNDRED THOUSAND WOMEN WAGE EARNERS IN NEW YORK CITY ALONE, and this fact is recognized by the bureau of factory inspection, UNDER WHICH SYSTEM WOMEN ARE INSPECTORS. The majority of teachers in our public schools are women. Surely there can be no more important work than this of educating the next generation. WOMEN ARE VERY HEAVY INVESTORS. It has recently been shown that in two hundred and fifty-two railways and industrial corporations which were invested in there were THREE HUNDRED AND TEN THOUSAND WOMEN SHAREHOLDERS.

A MERE CONSIDERATION OF THE ABOVE FACTS IS ENOUGH TO SHOW THAT IN THE FIRST PLACE WOMEN ARE NOW SERVING AS PUBLIC OFFICIALS AND IN THE NEXT PLACE THAT THEY HAVE VITAL INTERESTS WHICH MUST BE CONSIDERED AS IN SOME DEGREE APART FROM THE INTERESTS OF MEN. IT IS TO MY MIND RANK INJUSTICE TO FAIL TO HAVE WOMEN REPRESENTED IN THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION. MOREOVER, MANY OF THE WOMEN CAN GIVE INFORMATION AND ASSISTANCE SUCH AS FEW MEN CAN GIVE IN MATTERS IN WHICH MEN ARE PRIMARILY INTERESTED.

NORTH WEYMOUTH

David Kidder of Pearl street is enjoying his annual vacation, a part of which he will spend at The Wiers, N. H.

After careful consideration the auto apparatus committee decided not to purchase the La France machine, demonstrated here last Saturday, it being the concensus of opinion that the committee will do well to buy the three pieces voted of one concern and get some reduction thereby. The La France machine meets with general favor.

Miss Bierly of Bridge street is ill.

W. B. Shaw of Lowell, who is employed by the Armour Beef Co., is spending his vacation at his home in the East section.

Mrs. Abbott Spinney spent the day Thursday with Mrs. Jacob Loud, of Commercial street. Mrs. Spinney will return soon to her home in Miami, Florida.

The Embroidery Club, composed of seventeen members of Tent 32, D. of V., enjoyed a trip to Marblehead on Wednesday in Cushing's "South Shore Tourist," with Carl Hamilton at the wheel. Stops were made at Revere and Franklin Park.

A roomy piazza is a recent addition to the home of David Kidder.

Fred G. Merrill, Jr., of Amesbury, a former resident has been visiting Joseph O'Rourke of Neck street.

Miss Ruth Pettee, bookkeeper at the store of F. A. Loud, is enjoying a week's vacation at Tilton, N. H. Mrs. Fred Loud is substituting.

Mr. and Mrs. Barclay and their four daughters of Academy road, South Braintree, were recent guests of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Loud.

Mrs. Edward J. Jordan leaves Thursday for Chatham, to be the guest of her sister Mrs. Irving Reade.

A concert was given at the Wessagussett Yacht Club on Wednesday evening by home talent.

Mrs. Clara Maynard is recovering from her recent illness.

Mrs. Willis Keene entertained relatives from Brockton this week.

Miss Doris Poole of Malden has been the guest of relatives in this town.

Mrs. Charles Abbott entertained Miss Alma Terrio and Miss Mabelle Carlton of Salem over the week end. Miss Terrio returned to her home Monday.

The condition of Ozro Estes, who suffered a paralytic shock last week, remains about the same. Mr. Estes was brought to his home on Neck street Tuesday.

"At a dinner of firemen recently the following sentiment was proposed: "The Ladies! Their eyes kindle the only flame which we cannot extinguish, and against which there is no insurance."

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

In the Thomas Crane public library gallery are forty-eight copies of the best selections in English art, as exhibited in the national museums of London and Edinburgh. The pictures are accompanied by short biographies of their painters and by appreciative criticisms of their work.

Among the best known pictures in the exhibit are the "Shrimp girl" and "Garrick and his wife" by Hogarth, the interpreter of comedy in art. Among the famous portraits are the "Duchess of Devonshire and child," by Sir Joshua Reynolds, and "Mrs. Siddons," by Thomas Gainsborough.

Perhaps the most lifelike picture is Sir William Raeburn's "Brother and sister," while the most graceful is John Hoppner's "Countess of Oxford" and the most pathetic is Sir Edwin Landseer's "The shepherd's chief mourner."

Turner's vivid imagination in portraying history in art, can be realized upon viewing the copy of his "Fighting Temeraire," while, on the contrary, Constable's sincerity in art, is most apparent in "The Haywain" or "Hampstead Heath."

NEW PUBLIC MARKET.

The Quincy Public Market, whose new store in the Kincaide block was opened last week extend thanks to the public in general for the large patronage on the opening day. This company which is owned by M. Berg & Co. have markets in Malden, Medford and Woburn and has been established for 32 years.

The new market in Quincy however is known under the name of the Public Market. By having a chain of stores the company is enabled to buy in larger quantities, thus getting all the discounts which revert to the advantage of the retail purchaser who gets the benefit by reduced cost. Their line of goods, which numbers over 100 varieties is always fresh. In connection with the market is also a fish market where fish is obtained daily from the big wharfs in Boston, and is sold at wharf prices. Their teas and coffees are unsurpassed in excellence and free trials are given in order that customers may become acquainted with their methods of doing business.

Quincy welcomes this new business enterprise and bespeaks for it all success.

Home Made.

"My dear," said Mr. Wombat, "you look as fresh as a budding tree in your new spring dress." "The comparison is good," sneered Mrs. Wombat. "Like a tree, I had to make it myself."

WHAT TO DO IN DROWNING CASE

The question of what to do in drowning cases is an important one, the sad occurrances last Friday and yesterday afternoon bringing the matter very forcibly to mind at this time. The following very timely suggestions by Capt. John W. Bickford of Gloucester are important and well worth bearing in mind in case of an emergency:

As soon as the person is out of the water, if in a boat or elsewhere, lay him on his stomach, straddle him, put your arms around his body, with your hands on his bowels, lift up and lower down, as regular as you breath. That will pump the water out and the air in; at the same time let some one draw out on the tongue and the head held back a little. Put him into warm bedding as soon as possible, having first removed the water from patient, and give the person warm drink as soon as he is able to swallow

"I have got them back to life after they have been called dead," says Capt. Bickford,—Gloucester Times.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS.

As for myself I am not in doubt as to my duty. Without minimizing other arguments advanced in support of the extending of suffrage to woman, I place the emphasis upon the mother's right to a voice in molding the environment which shall surround her children, which operates powerfully in determining whether her offspring will crown her latter years with joy or bring down her gray hairs in sorrow to the grave.

Politics will not suffer by woman's entrance into it. If the political world has grown more pure in spite of the evil influences that have operated to debase it, it will not be polluted by the presence and participation of woman. Neither should we doubt that woman can be trusted with the ballot. She has proved herself equal to every responsibility imposed upon her; she will not fail society in this emergency. Let her vote!—William Jennings Bryan.

HITS PORT DIRECTORS

Bay State Demands Their Working Time, Says Attorney General

Boston, Aug. 20.—Attorney General Boynton has rendered his opinion that when a statute declares that an official "shall give his entire time" to the work of the office to which he was appointed, it means he must give every regular working hour of every regular working day to the work of that office.

This question arose in connection with the reappointment of Joseph A. Conry and the appointment of Edward F. McSweeney, to be port directors. The new statute under which the board was reorganized provided that directors must give their "entire time" to the work. Conry is Russian consul in Boston and a lawyer, and McSweeney is chairman of the trustees of the Consumptives' hospital.

THE ISLE.

There was a little lawn islet
By anemone and violet.
Like mosaic paven.
And its roof was flowers and leaves,
Which the summer's breath enweaves,
Where no sun nor showers nor breeze
Pierce the pines and tallest trees,
Each a gem engraven.
Girt by many an azure wave
With which the clouds and mountains pave
A lake's blue chasm.

TO BE PUT UP TO CONGRESS

Government Plans to Safeguard the Merchant Marine

TO BUY FLEET OF SHIPS

Bill Will Be Introduced Asking For $25,000,000 to Meet Shipping Emergency Due to European War—To Be Operated Through Corporation Owned by the Government

Washington, Aug. 20.—The government will go into the business of shipping to meet the emergency caused by the paralysis of shipping due to the European war. This was decided at a long conference at the White House, President Wilson approving of the plans submitted.

It was determined that as soon as possible a bill should be presented in congress whereby the government would be empowered to purchase "an adequate number" of ships for merchant marine purposes through a corporation organized like the Panama Railway company.

It was tentatively agreed that an appropriation of $25,000,000 would be asked of congress, for the purchase of the ships. The president conferred with senate and house leaders on the question of developing and safeguarding the American merchant marine and the purchase of ships, and passage of a bill under which the government will undertake the insurance of war risks were agreed upon. Bills carrying out the plans will be introduced immediately in both houses. After the conference this statement was given out:

"The conference was about the development and safeguarding of the merchant marine, and every aspect of the question was gone over. It was agreed that a bill should be introduced in congress providing for the insurance of war risks by the government.

"In addition to the agreement of opinion as to the insurance bill, there was an extensive discussion of the best means for immediately providing ships for carrying goods now waiting for the markets.

"Several plans were proposed and it was finally agreed that a bill should be drawn and introduced at a very early date which should provide for the purchase of an adequate number of ships by the government and their operation through a corporation controlled by the government, as in the case of the Panama Railroad company, which now operates ships as well as the railroad itself, and which is controlled by the government."

In addition to the president, those at the conference were Secretary McAdoo, Senator Simmons, chairman of the senate finance committee; Representative Underwood, chairman of the house ways and means committee, and Representative Alexander, chairman of the house committee on merchant marine and fisheries.

CARS ARE TIED UP

Trolley Employes Dissatisfied With Recent Arbitration Award

Northampton, Mass., Aug. 20.—Street car service in this city was completely stopped by a strike of the sixty-five conductors and motormen of the Northampton Street railway.

Recently a board of arbitration to which differences between the company and the union of employes had been submitted announced an award upholding the company. The union declared the award to be unsatisfactory and voted to strike.

The principal demand of the men is a reduction in working hours from ten to nine a day without a reduction in wages.

To Spread Ohio Coal Strike

Indianapolis, Aug. 20.—The strike of coal miners in the eastern district of Ohio is to spread into western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, according to a decision reached by the executive board of the United Mine Workers of America.

Police Check High Jump

Boston, Aug. 20.—F. R. Law of New York went to the new custom house tower prepared to jump with a parachute from the top of the 500-foot structure. The police prevented the plan being carried out.

Robbers Get $25,000 Booty

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 20.—Daring robbers stole jewels valued at $25,000 from a strong box at Clovercroft, the summer home here of Mrs. Oscar Iasigi of Boston.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES

Joseph Jefferson, 23, of Cambridge, Mass., died as a result of injuries received when he dived into shallow water from a raft. His neck was broken.

Burns received when she upset a kerosene lamp caused the death at Boston of Mrs. Hattie Knapp, who lived alone.

Henry C. Luther, 82, former Rhode Island senator and past commander of Slocum post, G. A. R., died at his home at Johnston, R. I.

Joseph Reynolds, 7 years old, of Medford, Mass., died from lockjaw. The boy's foot had been pierced by a piece of wood, and later tetanus set in.

MOTORCYCLES USED ON MANY LONG JOURNEYS.

Miss Della Crewe Expects to Encircle the Globe on One.

"I'll bet you couldn't stand it to ride those motorcycles farther than the state line," was the taunt made by fellow students to two cadets of the Staunton Military academy. "Well, we'll bet we can ride them clear across the continent," was the response of the two wheeler enthusiasts.

That's how it started. And as a result the two boys, Jesse Alexander of Waco, Tex., and Kenneth Browning of Ogden, Utah, started on their 6,000 mile journey.

Another coast to coast tourist is Austin Burges of Milwaukee. Burges is not making the trip on a wager, nor is he trying for any speed record, but is traveling purely for pleasure, visiting all of the important cities en route. He expects to attend the Panama-Pacific exposition in San Francisco before starting on the return trip.

To circle the globe on a motorcycle is the desire of Miss Della Crewe of Waco, Tex., who has started on a journey which she expects to extend over about three years' time. In the side car of her motorcycle Miss Crewe carries her luggage; also her only traveling companion, her pet dog, Trouble, rides in the side car. From Waco Miss Crewe is riding to New York, from which point she will start across the continent to San Francisco. She expects to sail for the orient early in September and after touring the old country will return to the United States by way of the Panama canal—that is, if she isn't stopped by the war in Europe.

A demonstration of the power stored away in the modern motorcycle was recently made in Lynchburg, Va., when a motorcycle with side car attached negotiated Tenth street hill, which has heretofore been considered "impossible." Lynchburg is very hilly, and few motor vehicles are used there. Even the bicycle is seldom seen on the streets, as it requires too much power to propel one.

FLINT, GREATEST CATCHER.

George Gore, Veteran Outfielder, Says Backstop Was Marvel at Work.

At a recent baseball meeting in New York one of the greatest outfielders who ever scampered for the sizzling line drives was discussing catchers. He was George Gore, in his day one of the fleetest fielders, heaviest hitters and finest ball players. Center fielder on the famous Chicago White Stockings, that under Anson won pennant after pennant, Gore was in a class by himself.

"Frank Flint of our team," said Gore, "was the greatest catcher who ever lived. He knew more than any other man with the mask. He had the greatest head of any man in the business. Nobody before or since could touch Flint.

"Every pitcher he handled he made a star. Look at Fred Goldsmith and Larry Corcoran. Neither of these men ever showed much when they were with other clubs. Once Frank took them in hand and they both developed into stars. He could make cracks out of every pitcher who ever toed the slab. Show me the backstop today who can do what he did."

TETRARCH GREAT RACER.

Top Heavy Favorite For Derby May Come to This Country.

News from the racing centers of England says that Tetrarch, which was a top heavy favorite for the Derby until she was scratched at the last moment, may come to this country when conditions in Europe become normal.

Photos by American Press Association.

TETRARCH AND DANNY MAHER.

This little horse is said to be one of the greatest racers that ever faced the barrier, and if she should visit this country it would certainly prove a great stimulus to the sport.

Another report from the same source says that Danny Maher may ride in this country before he retires from the game for good. It is rumored that he will handle Harry Payne Whitney's entrants if he does come over. Maher up on Pennant or Borrow would make a stiff combination to beat.

NIGHT.

Mysterious night! When our first parents knew
Thee, from report divine, I heard thy name
Did he not tremble for this lovely frame—
This glorious canopy of light and blue?
Yet 'neath a curtain of translucent dew
Bathed in the rays of the great setting flame,
Hesperus, with the host of heaven, came
And lo! creation widened in man's view.

Who could have thought such darkness lay concealed
Within thy beams, oh, sun! or who could find,
While fly and leaf and insect stood revealed
That to such countless orbs thou mad'st us blind!
Why do we then shun death with anxious strife
If light can thus deceive, wherefore not life?

A Mystery Of Jewels

It Remained a Mystery For Many Years

By F. A. MITCHEL

When I first met Lucy Larraway she was living with her mother, and they were having a hard time to make ends meet. We were both very young then and formed a boy and girl attachment. As we grew older and I reached an age at which I realized that I had a career before me and must be considering how to meet it the fact that neither Lucy nor I had any capital seemed to render a marriage between us undesirable.

I don't remember that I stated this to her in so many words. Indeed, there was no need to do so, for she spoke of it herself. She was a practical girl and looked at things as they were rather than as she would have them. "I would only be a drag on you," she said. "You are capable of taking a good stand in the world provided you don't handicap yourself in the start with a wife who must throw the whole burden upon you."

"Would you have me—that is, considering yourself out of the question—marry a girl with a fortune?"

"No," she replied; "I would not."

"What are your reasons?"

"First, it would deprive you of the stimulus of necessity, which is the foundation of all or nearly all success. Second, I do not believe that any poor man of proper pride can ever feel comfortable if his wife possesses a fortune and he has nothing."

"The deduction being that a poor man had best not marry so long as he is poor?"

"Rather that if he marries a woman who supplies comforts and luxuries he is in an unpleasant position, and if he marries one as poor as himself he is very badly handicapped."

In all this I agreed with Lucy, but I neither admitted nor denied its truth. We being practical young persons, there was never a proposal on my part or an acceptance or refusal on hers. We conferred upon the matter of our marrying much as two persons will talk over the practicability of forming a business partnership. Whatever of love there was underneath this common sense deliberation was unexpressed.

This condition lasted about a year, when Lucy's mother died. It seemed to me then that Lucy might best marry me, for she must live alone. But the conditions were otherwise unchanged, and since her mother had been nonproductive pecuniarily Lucy could provide for her wants more easily than before. I was then struggling to get a start in my profession, and it did not seem wise for me to urge her.

Then followed a period in which Lucy and I saw very little of each other. I was away from home a great deal, and I heard of her being away, too, though where she had gone I did not learn. I wrote her a despondent letter, in which I said that at the rate we were progressing—or, rather, not progressing—financially she would soon be an old maid. I advised her, if she found a suitable opportunity, to marry. She replied that if she found the opportunity she would let me know before engaging herself.

Such was the very practical situation when one morning I received a package by express. Not expecting anything in that way, I looked long at the typewritten address before opening it. There seemed to be a box under the wrapper, and had it not been very light I might have feared an infernal machine. Untying the string and taking off the cover, there, true enough, was a box. Its lid was on hinges and was held shut by a spring, which I pressed and raised the lid.

I recall with the freshness of that moment the dazzling splendor of what lay before me. The box was lined with purple satin, on which rested a heap of diamonds. For a moment I was lost in contemplation of their beauty; then I began to wonder how they could have come into my possession. Again I took up the wrapper and scrutinized the address. There were my name, street and number, plain as the stones in the box. Turning again from the printing to the jewels, I made a rough estimate of their value. Several large stones I believed, if genuine, to be worth between $10,000 and $12,000 each. There were many smaller ones, and when I figured up the value of each I concluded the lot was worth not much less and not much more than $50,000.

After many theories as to why this treasure had been sent me I came to the conclusion that it had been stolen, the thief had feared being caught with it in his possession and had shipped it by express to get it into the hands of some one else. But in doing so he must have given up all claim to the property, for he must have expected that the receiver would report the matter to the police. But why had he chosen me for his purpose? My only theory on this point was that he had taken up a directory to find a name and address and his hitting on mine was a mere coincidence.

Being a methodical sort of person, I thought out what I would do before doing it. I made a list of the stones, giving a description of each, then started for a safety deposit company. On the way I submitted the jewels to a diamond expert, who pronounced them genuine, of excellent quality and offered me $60,000 for the lot. At the deposit company I rented a box, locked the stones in it, then reported the matter to the police.

There had been several jewel robberies reported, but none very lately. I looked over the description in each case, but none of them tallied with the case in hand. Mine were all unset, but this made no difference, for they might easily have been removed from the setting. Mine were all diamonds, while in the other cases the stones consisted of various jewels.

By arrangement with the police I had each stone weighed and described by a diamond expert, and they were authorized if any one described any of the jewels correctly to put him in communication with me, that he might prove property. A number of descriptions of stones or lots of stones came to me, but none tallied with those that had been sent to me. It was impossible that I should be imposed upon in a matter of weight alone.

The theory of the police was that the jewels had been stolen, probably in one lot, from a diamond merchant, who had reasons for not reporting his loss. Sometimes those losing goods, suspecting or not suspecting the thief, put a private detective on the case, who advises keeping the whole matter secret. I showed the gems, the box in which they came, the paper in which they had been wrapped, to a detective, who studied them closely, but without getting a clew. Had the box been a new one he might possibly have traced it from the maker to the person who had bought it, but it was evidently very old, nothing of its kind having been manufactured for many years.

I told no one except officials of my find for several months. Then I informed Lucy Larraway of it. She gave me no assistance in ferreting out the sender. That I had not yet heard from him did not argue that I would not hear at any time, though the longer the delay the less likelihood. The fact of their having been sent to me instead of a confederate tended to indicate that when the thief had shipped them his object was to get rid of them without even calling for them.

Lucy suggested that there was some story in high life connected with them, possibly a tragedy. She fancied, for instance, a profligate son of a wealthy father stealing them from him, then becoming terror stricken at exposure and shipping them at random. A case like this would probably never be exposed.

As time went on this theory or something like it seemed to be gaining ground with Lucy, and I fell in with it myself. I stated it to the police, who told me that not a tithe of the skeletons in family closets ever walked out into the open. Possibly an explanation of this case of mine might come in time, but there was little likelihood of my having been put in possession of the jewels temporarily or I would have been called on for them before now.

At last I came to the conclusion to use the property for my advancement. At a time following a financial panic when securities were much depressed I made a loan on the diamonds and bought productive property. A quick rise followed, and I sold out at a considerable profit.

When I told Lucy of what I had done I expected that she would blame me for jeopardizing property that I might at any time be called upon to return. She did not seem to take this view of it, however, reminding me that I had done all I could to discover the owner, whereupon I told her that I now saw no reason why we should not be married, and she consented.

For years the diamonds remained in the safety deposit company's vault. Children grew up about Lucy and me. But I prospered, and there was enough for all. When sons and daughters were going to college and our expenses were considerable my wife suggested that I sell the jewelry and put the money into interest bearing property. But I declined to do so, intending them for my children after my death.

For thirty years I lived a happy life with my dear wife; then she left me. Some time after her death I devoted myself to the melancholy duty of weeding out those numberless effects, consisting of old letters and trinkets, that accumulate during a lifetime. Going over some private papers of hers, I found a list of diamonds, giving their standing as to purity and their accurate weight. I recognized that it comprised the gems which had been sent to me years agone. I could not remember my wife having had a copy of this inventory.

Passing on to other papers in the same receptacle, I came upon a will executed more than thirty years before by one Jane Larraway, bequeathing to her niece, Lucille Larraway, all her property. I opened my eyes at this and pushed on through the bundle of papers among which I had found it and saw at once that they concerned the settling of the estate of Jane Larraway and that Lucy had received an inheritance of $63,000.

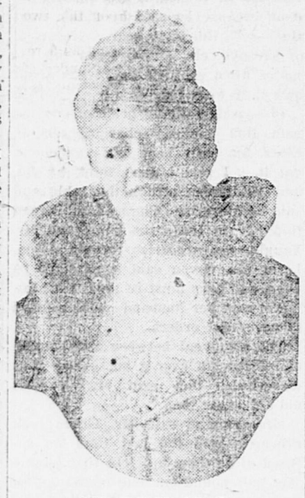

If ever man looked back with emotion on a noble deed of one lost I did on seeing the evidence that my beloved Lucy had converted a fortune into diamonds and given them to me, concealing herself as the donor. Oh, that I could bring her back for one moment in which to take her in my arms and tell her—or try to tell her—what I felt!

Alas, how many of us realize sacrifices that have been made for us only after the beloved one has passed beyond our gratitude!

I told my children what their mother had done for us all and divided the gems among them, to keep in memory of her.

Woman's World

Peace Medal For Famous American Woman Author.

MRS. KATRINA TRASK.

At this time, when the public mind is so occupied by the war question, it is interesting to consider the personality of an American woman who has been recently honored for her services against international war.

This honor is the award of the annual peace medal by the American School Peace league. The organization believes that in her latest book, "In the Vanguard," Mrs. Katrina Trask has done more than any other person in America during the year to advance international peace.

"In the Vanguard" deals with the story of a young man full of military enthusiasm. A suppositious war breaks out between this country and a foreign power, and he enlists, much to the admiration of his friends and sweetheart. The story takes him into his first battle. He enters the battle and fights during part of it, showing the greatest bravery. The sight of men being shot down convinces him that warfare is really murder. He turns away, not because of fear, but because of abhorrence. It is the ordeal which comes for him later, when he has to face the ridicule of his comrades and the indignation of his friends at home that is the main idea of the play. Even his sweetheart turns against him, but he refuses to alter his decision and declines to be a party to what he considers murder.

The author of "In the Vanguard" is the widow of Spencer Trask, the New York banker and philanthropist. She has written many books of high literary merit. Her best known works are "Night and Morning," "King Alfred's Jewels," "Mors et Victoria" and "Little Town of Bethlehem." The exquisite quality of her verse is best appreciated by fellow poets. Her latest work, discriminating critics assert, deserves to be ranked as a classic.

Mrs. Trask's literary work has been carried on at her beautiful home, Yaddo, on the outskirts of Saratoga Springs. The mansion stands on an elevation commanding a wide stretch of picturesque country. Surrounding it are grounds beautifully laid out. Recently Mrs. Trask announced that when she passed away these were to be given over to the townspeople of Saratoga as a park. Both her husband and herself have been identified with much wholesome philanthropic work.

THE HOUSEHOLD GUARDIAN.

How to Feed and Care For the Family Watchdog.

If you want handsome pets that are a credit to you they must be well cared for and treated considerately.

All dogs want a natural outdoor life, with plenty of exercise, and those who have not time to exercise their dogs should not keep them at all.

Feeding a dog should be the special duty of one person. If it is everybody's business the animal is sure to be overfed one day and shockingly neglected another.

Two meals a day and at regular times are sufficient.

For breakfast early in the morning biscuits, with a little meat or bones or gravy, will suffice, but the second meal about 6 o'clock should be more varied and may include boiled rice with broth, cooked meat scraps and vegetables, boiled entrails, scraps from the table but not fat. A bone to gnaw cleanses the teeth and aids digestion.

Sweet cakes and other fancy foods are undesirable, leading to digestive troubles and spoiling the appearance of the coat.

A supply of fresh drinking water should always be within the dog's reach, and the vessel ought to be washed every day.

It is a small matter even for busy people to spend five minutes each day brushing the dog's coat, but this greatly assists in checking insects and keeping the skin and hair in a healthy condition.

Stiffening Curtains.

When doing up curtains at home if flour is used instead of starch the iron will not stick so much and the curtains will have more the appearance of new ones. One good tablespoonful of flour for each curtain is sufficient. Mix the flour to a thick paste with cold water; then put in the tub and pour on as much boiling water as required for rinsing the curtains.

LOOKING FOR FIRE BUG

Midnight Fires Believed to Have Been Incendiary

An effort is being made to identify a dark complexioned, short, thick-set man, with a slight limp, and carrying a cane, seen running from the hall of Div. 4, A. O. H., just before a fire was discovered in the building about midnight Tuesday.

It is thought that he may be able to shed some light on the origin of the fire, and also clear up the mystery surrounding the blaze discovered in the hall of the Willard Associates, a short distance away while the department was engaged in preventing the destruction of Hibernian hall.

The loss in the latter case was small but a heavy damage resulted in the former. The members of the Div. 4 have lost the use of their quarters temporarily and will make use of the Copeland Club rooms in the same building for the time being.

As far as can be learned, the man sought, went down Cross street and doubled his tracks on Miller street. It is probable that he entered the Willard's rooms after the department from the Central station passed.

Several weeks ago, West Quincy, particularly the property of Badger & Sons, seemed to be the prey of a fire fiend who successfully set five fires without either being detected or captured.

RECENT FUNERALS.

The body of Daniel Murphy was taken to the St. John's church Wednesday morning where a prayer service was conducted by Rev. Fr. Walter A. Quinlan. Interment was in St. Mary's cemetery. The bearers were Michael Kelly, Michael Foy, Michael White and Patrick Mackinaw.

The funeral of Hazard Dingwell, a 19 year old Norfolk Downs resident, was held from his home at 51 Holmes street, on Wednesday afternoon. Rev. Joseph A. Walther of the Wollaston Baptist church officiated at the services. Burial was in Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

The funeral of William Herbert Hosmer was held from his late residence on Atlantic street at 2.30 Wednesday afternoon. Rev. Sampson Nicholls officiated. Miss Jordine Davison sang "Abide with Me" and "The Christian's good night." The flowers were many and beautiful. The burial took place at the Mount Wollaston cemetery.

The funeral of Albert Vanner was held Wednesday afternoon from his home, 231 Water street, So. Quincy. Services were held at Christ Episcopal church conducted by Rev. Thompson who spoke very effectively. The pall bearers were James Hartley, Albert Andrews, John Andrews, Harry Dunbar, George Reynolds and George Dickson. A delegation of the Sons of St. George held their services at Mt. Wollaston cemetery. Many beautiful floral tributes were received from: wife and children, mother, father and sisters, brother and sister, Sister Margaret Vanner, the O. S. S. G., Mrs. John Hannan, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Rendle, Mr. and Mrs. Newcombe, Mr. and Mrs. W. Belyea, Duncan McLennan, Mr. and Mrs. J. Green, Mr. and Mrs. J. Herbert, Mrs. B. VAUGHN CASE and food. Under the direction of Counsel McAnarney, in direct examination, she went over, item by item, the Curtis statement read to the court as the closing of the city's case.

She said there was no trouble before the coming of Perry Green as overseer and her husband held office three years under Fred F. Green, and six under James H. Elcock. She said Mr. Curtis never made any complaint while he was an inmate.

Mrs. Vaughn repeated her testimony at the public hearing, that Mrs. Marsh brought down magazines that could not be given inmates because bed bugs were found in them. She denied that an inmate was forbidden calling at Mrs. Marsh's for books.

One of the items in the Curtis statement, said Counsel McAnarney, charges that Peter Gilligan, an 83-year-old inmate was badly treated. Mrs. Vaughn said it was not so. He was once expelled from the Almshouse by the Overseer. On one occasion he appeared before a work girl stark naked.

Q.—Mr. Curtis said Gilligan was starved and abused.

A.—That is not so.

Q.—Mr. Curtis said you threw dirt at Gilligan.

A.—Mrs. Vaughn burst into tears as she answered "No, no, oh, no, I would never have the heart to do anything like that to an old man."

Q.—Fred Green or Mr. Elcock made no complaints to you about your treatment of inmates.

A.—No, never.

With Counsel McAnarney she discussed the temperament of the inmates whose names appear in the Curtis statement. She said Herbert Colby was somewhat deficient. He was always treated good, she declared and she didn't know why he shouldn't be. He used to help with the washing until it was sent to a laundry.

She denied Michael Kapples was fed on bread and water. She said she had no trouble with him, no more than his refusing to do something and then of course there was nothing more to do. He was kind of hard to get along with.

Peter Logan she said was at the home about two months, and was tubercular she thought. He was not ordered to do any work and could not do any. He was kind of a stupid fellow. When asked about the condition of the Logan room, which according to the Curtis statement was unclean, she answered it was always sanitary.

She said the John Harrington in question was with her the first two years, had heart trouble and was furnished a man nurse. She said there was no complaint about the treatment given him.

Q.—Was Charles Blaisdell, who has lost the use of his arm as the result of a shock, asked to work?

A—He was not right in his mind. He used to run away, and the last time he did so his people found him for the Overseer, and he was afterward sent away.

In speaking of Mr. Curtis, she said she never had a word with him. He according to Mrs. Vaughn, was a man who did considerable surmising, and talked with other inmates bout the management but no attention was ever given it. Mr. Curtis got five pieces of tobacco a month and when Mr. Green stopped that practice she said she gave him the money to buy it himself.

"The last time I saw him," said Mrs. Vaughn, as her voice choked with emotion, "he shook my hand and said he hoped God would be good to me. He had never made any complaints and was always good friends with us."

When asked about the choking of an inmate as reported by Mrs. Marsh, she said she heard it for the first time at the trial. Mrs. Ford she testified was out considerable in mind, and Mrs. Marsh said the last time she called she could see her going every day.

She spoke of the first visit of Mrs. Marsh and how she had promised to get lots of things. She wanted an inventory taken, but Mrs. Vaughn said she was too tired at the time to do it. She suggested rockers for the women and was told they had been asked for. Another thing she said she wanted to see was a dozen fleece lined wrappers for them Mrs. Vaughn said she replied she had them and then in front of the inmates, she remarked, 'perhaps you are a woman that has them on the shelves, not on their backs."

In feeling of blankets in use, she said one would not be sufficient for Mr. Marsh. On another visit she was permitted to talk with inmates, and took them one by one into a bed room. A week later she called in absence of Mrs. Vaughn who said she learned afterward she had taken them into a room again.

Q.—Did you notice anything in the behavior of the inmates after Mrs. Marsh talked with them?

A.—Miss Wheeler said Mrs. Marsh look after us, and I answered we have an Overseer.

Q.—You received instructions forbidding Mrs. Marsh to call.

A.—Yes.

Mrs. Vaughn said the rugs had been removed from the floors because they were dirty and full of vermin.

Mrs. Vaughn said the last time Miss Jennie M. Purchase of the Associated Charities called she was with Overseer Green. On her first visit the State inspector was there and she said, in answer to his question, that she found everything all right. He then remarked to her, every time you come you will find a model house. Another day as she entered the house, she told people with her they were going to see a model house.

Q.—While Mr. Elcock and Fred Green were overseers, did they take any complaints about their having received complaints about ill treatment of inmates.

A.—No, sir.

She spoke of the incident in which the city claimed a son of Mrs. Ellen Deady had been sworn at and said the boy came about 7.15 at night, and said his mother told him to take a few articles at a time and he was given what he could take. The next morning at the almshouse Mrs. Deady told Mr. Vaughn everything was all right.

Counsel McAnarney, bringing the case up to the present, asked what was the first manifestation of ill will on the part of Overseer Green so far as it occurred in your presence, and Mrs. Vaughn repeated the Mike Shea incident in which she has charged that Mr. Green asked if she ever saw Mike Shea have beer or rum on the premises, and the answer given by Mr. Green when civil service was mentioned, "we don't care about civil service. We are going to get Mike Shea." She placed the time as being in the latter part of February.

The testimony from then out was practically a verification of that given at the public hearing. She said Mr. Green instructed that the men be slammed and he would stand back of it. In a room, the door of which was closed, he used vile language, and told her to bang them around, cautioning her to use the flat of her hand as the fist would leave a mark.

She said he ordered her to keep Herbie Colby running around because he was one of those gassing around, and it would wear him out. She spoke of Colby being termed a religious cripple.

She told how James McDonald, an inmate, found fault at the table the morning following a conference in the office with Mr. Green, his complaint being that his milk for oatmeal had been watered.

TODAY'S HEARING.

Frank Smith, for five years employed at the City Stables was called. During that time he said he never heard Mr. or Mrs. Vaughn use abusive language or speak harshly to any stablemen.

In cross examination he said last Easter Sunday morning his services were not required.

Mrs. Vaughn then resumed her testimony. She said Overseer Perry Green and an inmate James McDonald had a conference and the morning after he raised a disturbance at the table. He wanted to fight with Mr. Vaughn and said his milk for oatmeal had been watered. Mr. Green and Dr. Bartlett were there that afternoon and the rough house was reported. Mr. Green asked to see McDonald and asked him about eggs.

Mayor Miller the next day told her her house was neat and clean. After speaking of the removal, Mr. Vaughn said, "I suppose we are entitled to a hearing" and Mayor Miller said "what, you are not under civil service here are you?"

Later in the office, I told him how Mr. Green had abused me since he had been in office and Mr. Vaughn told the Mayor what Mr. Green called an inmate and that is what the Mayor turned back on me.

Q.—Did you use those words.

A.—I never did. Those two men wronged me when they said so and ruined my character.

Mr. Green and Dr. Bartlett, at her request examined her bread and said it was good. Mrs. Vaughn, called Timothy Sheahan down stairs (considered her worst inmate) and asked him about eggs. He told Mr. Green inmates got two eggs once a week, every evening and that he got four and often six because he was ill.

Mr. Green then took Mrs. Vaughn to the office and said Mr. Vaughn stuck his mouth up to me and said he knew all about a cow, but he didn't.

Jim McDonald often used abusive language in Mr. Greens presence and was not stopped.

She spoke then of Mr. Green calling and ordering her to keep an inmate scrubbing all day because she was a bad woman. He said another inmate was so and so—and those are the words I was accused of using.

She said Mayor Miller agreed. McDonald's oatmeal had a lot of cream on it and then he left saying he didn't come for a row.

After Mr. Green came in office he recommended a change of food. He told me in the office and closed the door because he said he didn't want the ——— things to hear. He spoke of sausage, etc, and ordered the inmates filled so they would gas about how they were fed.

In speaking of the price of beef he said Bob Johnson charged you 30 cents for stew beef and you never got it. I said I don't think he did, and Mr. Green struck the table and said he knew it. She said Mr. Green told her to trade the eggs, and Mr. Vaughn got groceries for six dozen. Later Mr. Green said it couldn't be done, and eggs must be given inmates.

She said her husband never refused to carry out orders.

The argument between Mr. Vaughn and Flanagan over a horse was then discussed. She said Mr. Vaughn did not swear then.

Mrs. Vaughn said Mr. Green took groceries and the last time we refused to do them up. In that bundle was half pound tea, one pound coffee, two cans of corn, one of salmon, two of peas, one of tomatoes and two half pound boxes of cocoa. She said he took two boxes of cocoa out of a dozen and the next day eight were sent to City Hall. Mr. Vaughn drove him to his home. After that he wouldn't speak.

Mrs. Vaughn said she never used harsh language but was sometimes obliged to speak sharply to them. She said all the inmates shook hands with her before she left.

On cross examination Mrs. Vaughn testified that Overseer Green carried away tea, coffee, cocoa, cans of peas, corn, soap and even butter which he took to his own home. When she refused to tie up any more bundles of groceries for him the trouble began.

Mrs. Vaughn declared that the tesimony given by Mr. Green and Mayor Miller relative to what transpired on their visit to the Home was absolutely false. She also denied ever threatening any of the inmates.

At this point Dr. John H. Ash, for two years city physician, was called and he stated that he visited the home frequently, and that he never heard Mr. or Mrs. Vaughn use abusive language to the inmates and that none of the inmates ever complained to him of having received harsh treatment.

Mrs. Vaughn, again testifying on cross examination, said that there had never been any trouble with Mr. McDonald until after the day Mr. Green talked to him. McDonald said that Mr. Green told him he was going to put us out and that we were all in. The day after Green's talk with him he refused to wash the floors. Mrs. Vaughn also declared that the incident testified to by Mrs. Marsh had never happened, and that the statement was not true. She had never heard any discussion about putting cells in the basement, and had never said it would be a good thing to shut some of them up.

Mr. Green, she said, had told her to slap the inmates and use them rough. He then told use what to put on the table so that the inmates would go out and talk and say that this was the best administration they ever had. After he had gone into one of the rooms and talked with the inmates we could do nothing with them, and they told me to shut my mouth. After that we never had any comfort at the Home.

Mr. Green said that he liked milk and he ordered me to have a glass of milk for him every time he came down to the home. No other Overseer ever ordered me to furnish them with a glass of milk.

One afternoon Mr. Green, Dr. Bartlett and one of the inmates went into a room and remained all the afternoon, laughing and making fun about me, and when they came out Dr. Bartlett said, "Mrs. Vaughn, it is too bad."

Herbert W. Vaughn, a son, testified that he lived at the home while going to school with his parents, and that after he went to work he paid his board there. He had never heard his father swear at the inmates.

In regard to the Wheeler incident, he said that on the day he died he had said to Mr. Wheeler, it is too warm for you to carry water to the cows, and I carried the second pail for him, and told him to go to the house. That was the last time I saw him alive.

He testified as to conversations between Mr. Green and his father and he had heard Mr. Green tell his father, "I do not see how you stand such a racket. If I was here I would knock their blocks off." He also said to father, if the men do not do what they want you to, treat them rough and I will stand behind you. He also said that he had heard Mr. Green holler to the women inmates to shut up.

The cross examination of this witness brought out no new facts and an adjournment was taken until 2 o'clock.

HOW TAXPAYERS DOLLAR IS SPENT

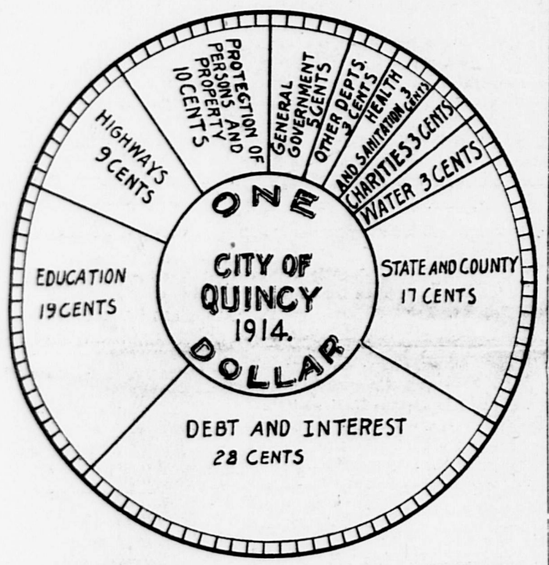

Only About One-Half of Every Dollar Raised Is Available for Department Expenses

Debt and Interest and State Take Large Slice

The tax rate of 1914 has not been announced, but it will be of interest to know just how the money raised by taxes is to be expended or rather has been expended, or both; for the taxes levied are to pay expenses of 1914

Auditor Fairbanks diagram, that "debt and interest" takes the largest slice of every dollar paid by Quincy taxpayers, or 28 cents out of every dollar.

Education takes 19 cents or very nearly one-fifth, and State and county

Hon. Henry O. Fairbanks, the city auditor has just issued the accompanying diagram, which he says, "shows how the revenue of 1914 derived from taxes and ordinary receipts, excluding all money borrowed, will be expended. To further explain: Highways includes streets, street lighting and watering. Health and sanitation includes inspection and care of all things pertaining to health."

It will be seen at the outset, by assessments take 17 cents which is over one-sixth.

These three subdivisions, debt and interest, education and State and county assessments, take 64 cents out of every dollar raised.

When a man says property on his street pays $1,000 or $2,000 in taxes to the city, he should remember that only $90 or $180 of it is available for construction or repairs of streets throughout the city.

The sub division for protection includes the Fire department and Police department and these cost more annually than the Highway department.

General government requires five cents of every dollar, while each of the sub divisions require three cents, viz: three cents for water, three cents for charities, three cents for health and sanitation, and three cents for "other departments."

The diagram affords an interesting study.

WOMEN IN AUTO COLLISION

Both Escaped Without Serious Injury

Mrs. Hilda Carlson, wife of Councilcan Carl E. Carlson of Squantum, jumped from an auto in Boston Thursday afternoon to avoid beng in a collision and was slightly injured.

The auto, a Metz runabout, was owned and operated by Mrs. Grace Doucette of Huckins avenue, Squantum. Mrs. Carlson was a passenger and when she realized the machine would hit a pair of horses hitched to a heavy team she leaped over the side.

Mrs. Doucette remained at the wheel and applied the brakes. They failed to hold and the machine struck one of the horses. She was shaken up but uninjured. The accident occurred on Massachusetts avenue. The auto was not damaged. Mrs. Carlson was given medical treatment and has practically recovered today.

SHEA—CLANCEY.

Thomas Francis Shea of this city and Miss Katherine Elizabeth Clancey of Melrose were married Thursday evening at St. Mary's church Melrose by Rev. Fr. McGlynn. The groom is well known in this city, being one of prominent members of the old St. John's dramatic board, while the bride is popular in Melrose where she is interested in church work.

The bride was attended by Miss Mary Connelly of Malden, and the best man was Patrick Hennigan of Lawrence. The bride was becomingly attired in lavender crepe de chine trimmed with lace and wore a white hat. She carried pink roses. The bridesmaid wore a lavender silk with hat to match.

Immediately after the ceremony a wedding reception was held at the home of the bride, which was prettily decorated with palms and cut flowers. A wedding supper was served.

At a late hour Mr. and Mrs. Shea left on a wedding trip to Maine. On their return they will reside in Melrose. The Quincy people attending were Mrs. James M. Cantfill, Joseph L. Heaney and Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. McGinty.

A FORMER OVERSEER

Gives Testimony Favorable to Supt. Vaughn

The sensational testimony Thursday afternoon at the Vaughn hearing was that given by Supt. Vaughn, who declared that during his early visits to the Home, that Overseer Perry Green always carried home groceries from the store, and that he would drive him to his home at Quincy Point.

Mr. Vaughn also declared that on one occasion Overseer Green took a half tin of tea from a six-pound tin, and that this time a pound and a half of tea from another package was given to Dr. Bartlett. On one occasion Overseer Green made up a large bundle of canned goods, coffee and tea which he carried to his home.

James H. Elcock, former Overseer was the first witness of the afternoon. He said that he was first appointed under a non-partisan administration and then under a Republican administration. He gave Supt. Vaughn a clean bill. He had always found him all right. That he obeyed orders and kept the place clean. He had never heard him swear at or abuse the inmates. He of course had at times received complaints which he had thoroughly investigated, only to find that there was nothing to them.

He explained the method of buying groceries and provisions for the Home at the stores in the city.

He also explained the situation that arose out of the Flannigan incident. He said that his department had granted the Board of Health the use of one of the stables at the Home, and that Flannigan abused the privilege. That he threw straw in the front yard and had carried off a harness and sleigh that belonged to his department. He had ordered Supt. Vaughn not to allow certain things done, and it was the enforcement of these orders that had caused the trouble.

Mr. Elcock denied that he had ordered Curtis to keep track of the eggs and that he did not believe his story. He also explained the transaction of taking empty boxes from the store in City Square to the Home which he had ordered. He had always ordered the superintendent to buy the best of goods as he considered them the cheapest.

On cross examination he said that it was by his orders that talking at meals had been stopped. That men had begun to throw bread about and that one man threw a knife. Then he ordered talking stopped. There were never any printed rules at the Home. In regard to the treatment of Mr. Nurse, he said that he knew that he had the best of treatment.

In regard to the man taken to the tuberculosis camp, he said that this had been ordered by the Board of Health. That this man did not want to go to the camp, and that he had come with tears in his eyes and asked to remain at the Home.

Supt. Vaughn told of his coming to the Home in 1905. That there were never any printed rules as the State board said none were needed. Jack Wren was a good fellow when sober, but he had periodical sprees usually on holidays, and was then troublesome.

In regard to the Thomas Butler incident, he said that Butler was out under the trees. That he had sent for him to come to him, but as he refused he had gone out and placing his arm under him, had lifted him up and jogged him along to the house. He denied shaking him.

He was also asked about the Flannigan incident which he explained in a manner similar to Overseer Elcock.

While Flannigan was about the Home he had to watch him at all times to see that he did not carry off things that did not belong to him. On one occasion he put a horse out close to his wife who sat under a tree, and he refused to move him when I requested him to do so. He denied swearing at Flannigan or using profane language.

The several allegations in the complaint were then taken up by Counsel McAnarney, and Supt. Vaughn was asked about each individual case which he explained telling the circumstances of each. He denied emphatically that he had kept Gilligan

RECEPTION FOR RIVADAVIA

Enthusiasm Runs High at Buenos Aires

The departure of the Argentine transports Chaco and Pampa for the United States with more than a thousand officers and men for the dreadnought Rivadavia gave an inkling of what the reception of the man-of-war will be when the big craft from Quincy, Mass., arrives in Buenos Aires, says a Buenos Aires dispatch to the Christian Science Monitor.

The public farewell to the ships and the men was made a gala occasion, in which more than 50,000 persons took part. It is felt here that Argentina is entering upon a new political era, where ample naval protection is to be considered by friends and by those inclined to criticize the republic's strong position in South America.

Debates in the Argentine Congress that centered around the possibility of the republic disposing of its recently completed dreadnought, finally afforded convincing evidence that no such intentions actuated the present administration. Neither the Rivadavia nor the Moreno, the sister dreadnought, is for sale, according to the navy department of Argentina.

Argentina is satisfied that the Rivadavia has stood every test to the satisfaction of the nation's experts. Results of the trial runs have been cabled here and the people waxed enthusiastic over the Rivadavia's performances.

Word has been received in this city that South Americans in New York are preparing a reception for the men aboard the Chaco and the Pampa, and that when the Rivadavia leaves for its home waters there are to be other festivities in which the Argentine minister, Senor Romula S. Naon, will assume the role of host to many from South America now in the United States, as well as others interested in the construction of the ship.

It is said here that at various times Argentina has been offered a considerable profit over its outlay if it would part with the Rivadavia. Some of the great powers are said to have made these offers, but the proposals have been declined.

While there is nothing in the Argentine navy now at all comparable with what it will have when the Rivadavia arrives in Buenos Aires, the country possesses a number of armored cruisers that measure up to the standard of this type of man-of-war. The General San Martin and Pueyrredon are twin ships of 6773 tons displacement. The Garibaldi and the General Belgrano are somewhat larger.

Other vessels for coast defense purposes are the Independencia, the Libertad, the Espera and the Patria. The Buenos Aires, the Nueve de Julio and the Patagonia are other cruisers of considerable speed. Altogether the navy has 30 ships, all in good condition.

The republic maintains in Buenos Aires a sailors' home, where the men are housed when off duty, and where every provision is made for their comfort. Some of the best families in the country are anxious to have their sons enter the naval academy.

CITY DEPARTMENTS ASKING FOR MORE

Increase in Mayor's Supplementary Budget Expected at Special of Council

Six Items in Call for Meeting Next Week

Mayor Miller came from his camp at Hingham this morning to attend to some city business. After visiting a barber shop, not that of Edward Powers, he came to City Hall, where he was closeted with City Clerk Crane who came from a sick bed to arrange for the special meeting of the Council to be held next Monday evening.

The call for the special meeting which went out today had six matters as follows:

1. To draw jurors.
2. To receive and act on communication from His Honor the Mayor appointing election officers.
3. To call State primaries for September 22, 1914.
4. To receive and act on communication from His Honor the Mayor in regard to the supplementary budget.
5. To receive and act on reports of the Committee on Finance on Orders No. 275 and 278.
6. To receive and act on application for auctioneer's license from Thomas F. Phillips.

It is understood that the Mayors communication in relation to the supplementary budget will recommend an additional sum for Assessors extra clerical as well as an additional sum for the Fire department.

The assessors originally asked for $200 for extra clerical, but after the matter had gone to the City Council the Assessors decided that they wanted more money.

The Chief Engineer also informed the Mayor and Council that he would

WHAT WILL BE TAX RATE?

Before the City Council adds another dollar to the tax levy of 1914, it should be informed by the Mayor what effect an appropriation will have on the tax rate. In other words the City Council should know exactly what the rate will be if $9,500.00 additional is appropriated. The Assessors are now in a position to give this information because they were prepared to announce the tax rate last week.

The supplementary budget will increase the tax rate twenty-five cents, but will it make the total $23.25, $24.25 or $25.25? If the last-named sum all items in the budget should be killed forthwith.

Probably the taxpayers of Quincy feel about the same as the taxpayers of Braintree on a high tax rate. A special town meeting was held in Braintree on Tuesday evening, the article calling for several appropriations. At the outset one of the voters stated, that in the opinion of the appropriation committee all appropriations should be made at the annual March meeting, and that not a dollar should be appropriated at the special meeting. Upon his motion the meeting then adjourned sine die.

There should be no understanding early in the year that Quincy department officials can obtain more money simply by asking for it. On the other hand they should understand that there will be no extra appropriations except in great emergency. No department should undertake work unless it can be accomplished within the appropriation.

One strong reason just now why the supplementary budget should be killed is because it is delaying the collection of taxes, and thereby increasing the interest account. For if money is not collected it must be borrowed, and the interest rate now is high. The tax bills should have been issued early in August.

It is a fact that Quincy collects the smallest percentage of its tax levy in the year it is assessed of any Massachusetts city. This is the reason why temporary loans in anticipation of taxes are always large. On January 1, 1914, there were $375,000 outstanding in temporary loans, making it necessary early this year to issue new loans to replace them. And so it goes from year to year, and the taxpayers are paying more for interest than for the maintenance of several departments. The payments for interest in 1913 were:

On temporary loans	$17,969.94
On city debt	28,692.78
On park debt	880.00
Street improvement debt	2,840.00
On sewer debt	24,839.00
On water debt	29,147.00
On refunding debt	6,000.00
Total	$110,368.72

If the tax bills were out now, many payments would be made which would help the city treasury just at the time when it needs funds.

The merits of the additional appropriations have not been considered, but Mayor Miller told the City Council when the annual appropriations were passed, that they were ample. Why $6,000.00 extra for contagious diseases in a year when there has been no epidemic? Why?

Councilmen should make a study of City Auditor Fairbanks $1 chart in another column of the Daily Ledger.

GERMAN FLEET IS BOTTLED UP

British Report Also Says Kaiser's Commerce Is Paralyzed

ENGLISH COMMERCE IS NORMAL

Lowering of War Risk Rates Indicates Safety of Trade Routes—England Has Lost One War Vessel and Germany Two—Military Situation Is Satisfactory to Foreign Office

Washington, Aug. 21.—The British foreign office cabled the British embassy here the exact naval and military situation between England and Germany. In it it was stated that England, to date, has lost only one light cruiser, while a German submarine and a German mine-layer have been destroyed.

It states that the German fleet outside the Baltic is confined to the harbor, that German sea-borne commerce is paralyzed and that English commerce is practically normal. The statement further says:

"Since the declaration of war the fleet has been responsible for the safety of the expeditionary force, which completed its disembarkation in France on Aug. 18, which was effected in perfect order and without a casualty.

"Work of the navy in the Atlantic and elsewhere in safe-guarding the trade routes is best exemplified by the fact that at Lloyds Aug. 19 the war risk rate fell fell to 40 shillings percent for almost any voyages of British vessels, whereas the rate to insure the freight of corn paid by steamers from the United States to a British port is 30 shillings percent.

"The military position is as follows: The German forces at present extend from the north of the neighborhood of Basle through Liege to a point in Belgium to the east of Antwerp and near the Dutch frontier. The outstanding feature of the operations up to the present has been the delay caused by the contemplated German offensive movement across the Meuse by the defense of Liege, where the forts are still intact.

"This has permitted the orderly mobilization and concentration of the French army and the British expeditionary force. German troops have now crossed the Meuse both above and below Liege and are gaining some ground slowly westward, but their advanced cavalry has been continually checked by the Belgians.

"In the south, where the German armies are apparently on the defensive, the French are advancing on a long line into Alsace and Lorraine, a great extent of which they now occupy after driving back in several engagements the troops opposed to them."

RUNS SHORT OF SUPPLIES

Cunarder Bound For New York Is Forced to Stop at Boston

Boston, Aug. 21.—With her coal supply nearly exhausted and her smokestack painted battleship gray, the Cunard liner Ivernia put into Boston harbor with more than 800 passengers, after a trying voyage from Fiume, Trieste, Naples and Gibraltar.

Throughout the trip from Gibraltar passengers were in a generally nervous state, because of rumors of the presence of German warships in her path, and their discontent was heightened when they learned that the liner was heading for Boston instead of New York, her destination, because of the shortage of coal.

Upon arrival passengers also complained that there had been a shortage of provisions. The list included fifty-nine saloon passengers, mostly Americans, who had started out of Europe before the European conflict became general. The Ivernia sailed from Fiume July 27.

NEW RULING ON FOOD

Spoiled Products Must Hereafter Be "Denatured" Before Shipment

Washington, Aug. 21.—Spoiled food products will have to be denatured before being shipped in interstate commerce in the future under a ruling of the department of agriculture.

This will permit the shipment of spoiled eggs for use in tanning and other spoiled substances for the manufacture of fertilizer or oils or greases used in machinery, but will require them to be treated with denatured substances so that they cannot possibly be used for food.

Each man in Great Britain's expeditionary force carries in his knapsack a tiny pamphlet, signed by Field Marshal Earl Kitchener, secretary of state for war. The text of the pamphlet says:

"You are ordered abroad as a soldier of the king to help our French comrades against the invasion of a common enemy.

"You have to perform a task which will need your courage, your energy and your patience.

"Remember that the honor of the British army depends on your individual conduct.

"It will be your duty not only to set an example of discipline and perfect steadiness under fire, but also to maintain the most friendly relations with those whom you are helping in this struggle.

"Do your duty bravely, fear God and honor the king."

"LONG LIVE CARRANZA"

New Provisional President Welcomed by Mexico City

Mexico City, Aug. 21.—General Venustiano Carranza, the supreme chief of the Mexican revolution and now provisional president of the republic, was given an enthusiastic reception by the crowds in the streets as he entered the capital.

Not the slightest disorder was shown as Carranza and his staff passed through the cheering crowds, which showered him with flowers and confetti and from which came cries of "Long live Carranza! Long live the constitutional government!"

A few moments after he had entered the national palace Carranza appeared on the balcony and addressed the crowds, promising them a new era of real constitutional government. The troops then passed in review before the new executive, a band of 200 pieces massed in the square meanwhile playing martial airs.

ODOR OF PEPPERMINT

Attracts Maine Sheriff to Five Trunks Packed With Whisky

Portland, Me., Aug. 21.—A new ruse for deceiving sheriffs of Maine by men who take the chance of bringing liquor into the state under the present rigid surveillance turned up when the strong odor of peppermint led Deputy Sheriff Stevens to a trunk in the baggage room of Union station.

Upon investigation he found this trunk and four others sent with it contained in the aggregate fifty gallons of whisky.

It is supposed that the peppermint, which was so strong when the trunks were opened as to be almost choking, was intended to disguise the odor which might come from the whisky in case any of the containers in the trunks should leak.

BURIAL TO BE IN ST. PETER'S

Said to Have Been Wish of Pope to Avoid Riots

CONCLAVE TO BEGIN SEPT. 3

Question as to Whether Cardinals Will Meet In Italy or Holland to Choose New Pontiff—Chamberlain to Conduct Traditional Ceremony Officially Pronouncing Pope Dead

Rome, Aug. 21.—With Rome's streets and squares thronged with kneeling people praying for the repose of the soul of Pope Pius X., sorrow was increased last night when the announcement came that Anna, the favorite sister of Pope Pius, had died from the shock caused by his death. The pope's two sisters nursed him all through his illness and when the end came both were almost in a state of collapse.

From every part of the world, members of the college of cardinals, the princes of the Roman Catholic church, are speeding to the Vatican to pay last honors to the dead pope and to choose his successor.

Sept. 3 is mentioned as the day of the conclave when the cardinals will vote for the new pontiff. Arrangements for the funeral have not been completed, but the body wil lie in state in the throne room of the Vatican until it is transported to St. Peter's for the three days' chapel sacrament before burial.

The funeral will be held in the Sistine chapel. Much interest is felt in the place of interment. It is understood that the pope wished to be buried in St. Peter's, for the reason that riots have in the past attended the removal of the bodies of pontiffs outside the Vatican.

The matter of a conclave is being discussed. It is said a majority of the cardinals are in favor of holding it in Rome, as usual, and further because of the neutrality of Italy in the present war. Others, however, suggested that it would be better to meet in Holland, a country which they regarded as even more neutral than Italy.

The body was embalmed yesterday afternoon. The expression on the face is serene, and the lips are slightly parted in the semblance of a smile. The arms are crossed on the chest, the hands holding a small crucifix.

Around the bier are four large lighted candles. Two members of the Noble Guard in uniform stand at the foot of the bed, while others are on duty in the ante chamber.

The arrival of Cardinal Della Volpe, the chamberlain, is anxiously awaited. As chamberlain he will direct the holy see temporarily and will conduct the traditional ceremony in which the pontiff is officially pronounced dead.

In this ceremony the chamberlain lifts the covering from the face of the dead and with a silver hammer touches the forehead three times, saying each time:

"Giuseppi Sarto."

When there is no reply he announces:

"The pope is really dead."

This is done in the presence of the cardinals, a few intimates of the dead and the plenipotentiaries of St Peter's, who will prepare the body for the tomb.

The sacred college will decide on the day upon which it will be transported to St. Peter's for the three days' chapel sacrament before burial.

MURDER IS SUSPECTED

House and Barn Are Set on Fire to Conceal Crime

Epping, N. H., Aug. 21.—The half-charred body of John Norris was found in the ruins of his barn, under circumstances which lead the authorities to believe he was murdered.

The homestead, barn and shed, far enough apart to have rendered unlikely fire spreading from one to another were burned to the ground.

A large sum of money, which Norris had when last seen alive, is missing. Near the corner of the barn Norris' own shotgun was found, with a loaded shell in one barrel and a discharged shell in the other.

IT IS RUMORED ON THE STREET

(SAYS "A. MERCHANT.")

That the bricks on the Hancock street sidewalk, City Square, are so badly worn, that some one will turn his ankle soon and have a fine case of damage against the City.

That walking on this sidewalk today, is like taking a ride in a sea going hack.

That previous to Mayor Stone retiring from office, an appropriation was made to repair this walk.

That the present administration seems to be adopting the watchful waiting policy which doesn't appeal to the abutters.

That it's time something was done, as more than a reasonable time has elapsed for the administration to get busy.

That the merchants along the street are talking of holding a public hearing to learn why the administration doesn't act.

That if the holes in this thoroughfare are not taken care of soon the city will need to close the street to traffic.

That before permanent improvements are made on the main street, all wires should be buried and unsightly poles removed.

That a more frequent application of oil or water is necessary to keep down the street dust on windy days.

That the Assessors are slow in announcing the tax rate.

That many people are on the anxious seat pending this announcement.

That the citizens ought to get together and support the local candidate for congress.

That the influence of Quincy ought to be felt in the Fourteenth district.

That a congressman from Quincy would work for a deeper channel and other waterfront development as well as a ship subsidy, both of which would mean much to Quincy.

That some of our foremost citizens advocate the taking of land for a common or resting place in the centre of the city on which a suitable band stand should be erected.

That it would be nice if we had some public spirited land owner who would contribute such a site to the city.

That the long talked of sanitary station seems to have been forgotten by the "Powers that be"— but not by the people.

That the Board of Trade sent a delegation of its members on an automobile trip throughout the various wards of the city to discover what might be done to make the city more beautiful.

That some people are anxious to have the steam R. R. install four tracks as soon as possible thereby giving the city more frequent train service.

That some other people want to continue the fight for depression.

That the Mayor's health is improving for which all citizens are thankful.

That Quincy is all right if you only think so.

CITY GOVERNMENTS.

City Solicitor Harry W. James of Chelsea, speaking before the recess committee of the legislature, who are holding hearings on city charters said, that the commission form of government looked good at the start, but soon develops into a well oiled political machine. He also said that it was not practicable to run city affairs like a business corporation.

Mayor Hurley of Salem, Finance Commissioner Danforth and others from the same city, said the city did not desire any change in its charter while Assistant Assessor Cushman of Salem spoke against the present form of government in Salem.

RAIN EVERY NIGHT.

It seems to rain very easily every night of late, and Thursday evening was no exception. It was not long after 9 o'clock when the sky was lit up at intervals by flashes of lightning followed soon by the distant roll of thunder. The storm seemed to be growing nearer and nearer until at 10.30 it was raining good and hard. At this time the flashes of lightning were very vivid and there were heavy rolls of thunder. The electrical display soon passed over although it continued to rain during the night and there was an occasional distant roll of thunder and flash of lightning.

BRIEFS

The Quincy built battleship Rhode Island has been ordered from Hampton Roads to Boston.

Have you sent a Daily Ledger of Wednesday or Thursday to out of town friends?

Mr. and Mrs. George H. Kendrick of Beach street are receiving congratulations on the birth of a nine pound daughter at the City Hospital.

Mrs. George W. Rhines of 72 Franklin street has been very sick for three weeks, but her many friends are glad to see her out again.

The recent storms have caused much of the fruit to fall, and as a result the ground is covered with apples and pears.

Judge Avery of the district court leaves Saturday for a few days vacation trip. He will not hear the arguments in the Vaughn case until he returns.

Mrs. J. E. Dozier and Miss Jessie Dozier of Lynn, who have been the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Penniman, return to their home this week.

TAYLOR—OLIVER.

Clifford Taylor of Elm street, Quincy, and Miss Ella H. Oliver of 50 Taylor street, Braintree, were married Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the bride's home. The ceremony witnessed by a small party of relatives and friends, was performed by Rev. Edward A. Norton, pastor emeritus of the Bethany Congregational church of Quincy. Miss Blanche Porter, South Braintree, was the bridesmaid and A. W. Parker of Quincy was the best man. A short reception followed, after which Mr. and Mrs. Taylor left on a honeymoon trip to New York. On their return they will reside at 50 Taylor street, South Braintree.

Mrs. Taylor is a popular and well known young lady of South Braintree and before her marriage held a responsible position with the N. L. Wernet Co. of Boston. Mr. Taylor is a well known and highly esteemed citizen of Quincy and is employed by Harry A. Winslow, a Boston dealer in woolen goods.

GERMAN ARMY ALWAYS READY

Most Powerful of World's Land Fighting Machines.

KAISER IS SUPREME CHIEF.

His Right Hand Man, Field Marshal von Moltke, Chief of Staff, Is Nephew of Famous Strategist Who Planned Successful Franco-Prussian War. Field Force, First Line of Battle, Consists of 1,250,000 Men—Staff Officers All Specialists In Warfare. Some of the Leading Generals.

GREATEST in organization, drill and preparedness for war and probably in the number of men immediately ready for active field service, as well as in leadership, and second only to the Russian army in point of size, the army of the German empire is the world's most powerful land fighting machine.

Military experts assert that even divided, with one-half concentrated against Russia and the other half sent against France, the kaiser's army is able to overwhelm any force that could be brought to oppose its advance. The first report of the declaration by the kaiser of a state of war in Germany brought forth many predictions of a repetition of the war of 1870-1, when Germany's forces almost literally walked over those of France. Then, as now, preparedness for active service was accounted the prime factor in the situation. There is no reason to think that the present Von Moltke, chief of staff of the German army and nephew of the famous field marshal, is inferior to his predecessor and namesake. The old Von Moltke had all his plans for the invasion of France contained in a single drawer of his desk. The present day Von Moltke has been working for many years on methods of invading France and Russia.

Germany has prepared herself against war with France since 1871. In 1875 such a war was averted by the narrowest of margins. Since then Germany has striven with might and main to perfect her military power to a degree unknown until the genius of Moltke made Germany a national unit.

The frontier between Germany and Russia, which both nations have fortified at short intervals, covers 843 miles. The various fortresses are connected with each other by underground telegraph and telephone, while strategic military railroads lead to the principal military centers in the interior.

German a Born Soldier.

The German is a soldier of the highest type—born a soldier, nurtured as one—developed to the highest degree of efficiency.

The German army consists of the first line, landwehr and landsturm, the last a home defense reserve. Two regiments of infantry, six battalions, form a brigade; two brigades a division and two divisions an army corps. In war all corps will be constituted of thirty-six battalions. To each infantry division is attached an artillery brigade (twelve batteries) and a regiment of cavalry (four squadrons); to each army corps four batteries of howitzers, a battalion of rifles and an engineer battalion. The war strength of a complete division of two brigades is about 24,000 and of an army corps of two divisions 30,000. There are altogether twenty-five army corps of two divisions each.

There is only one permanent cavalry division—that of the guard—but in war eight divisions are formed from the line regiments. The normal strength of a cavalry division is three brigades of two regiments each, with three batteries of horse artillery, in all twenty-four squadrons of twelve guns.

Total Field Army of 1,250,000.

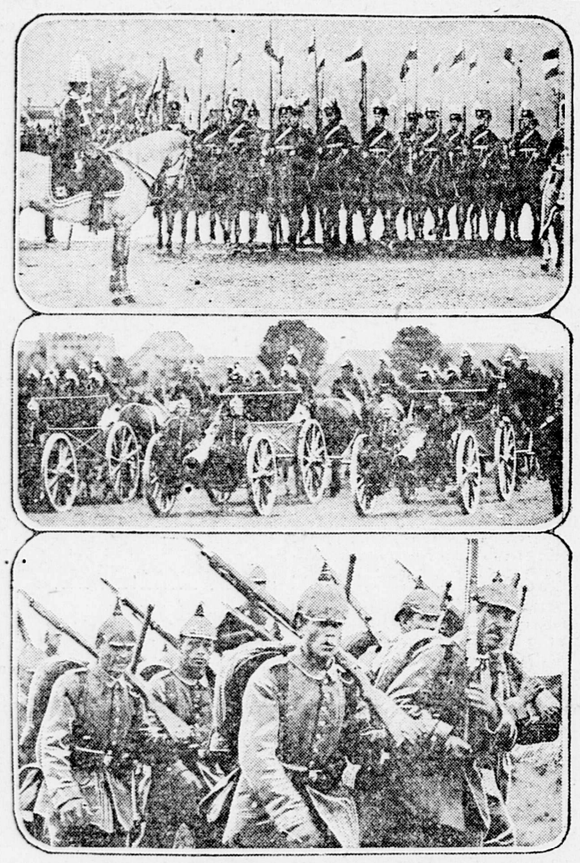

The total of the field army is 1,250,000, to which must be added the mobile landwehr of 600,000. In addition it is estimated that there are at least 1,500,000 trained men to supply waste of war. The landsturm is not included in this number. The peace footing is 36,304 officers and 754,681 men.

The army is armed with Mauser magazine rifles and the cavalry with Mauser carbines. The field and horse artillery have Krupp guns, firing a fifteen pound shell. There are seventeen aeroplane companies, with 173 officers and 4,446 men.

The intended employment of the reserve troops in war has not been divulged by the German general staff, but the plans show that most of the two brigade divisions will be augmented by a reserve brigade in war and that all army corps in the German army can take the field with six brigades, the artillery being increased proportionately by reserve regiments. To each infantry division is attached in war an artillery brigade of twelve batteries.

There are eighteen cyclist companies in the German army. The German field batteries are equipped with six guns each, and the horse batteries have four guns each.

Prussia, with Baden and Hesse, is divided into sixteen military districts, each of which furnishes a complete army corps. There is also a Prussian guard corps drawn from the whole kingdom. Saxony, Wurttemberg and Reichsland furnish five army corps. In the German army are 217 regiments of infantry containing 471,796 men, 110 regiments of cavalry with 82,007 men, 100 regiments of field artillery with 86,000 men and 24 regiments of foot artillery with 33,000 men. The German army uses 157,000 horses, of which over 80,000 are for the cavalry alone.

Take Lessons From Napoleon.

In January, 1914, the German war office ordered a translation to be prepared of "Preceptes et Jugments de Napoleon," collected and classified by Lieutenant Colonel Ernest Picard of the French army. Thus after thirty-four years the Germans seem to have taken the advice of Von Moltke to study the campaigns of Napoleon. But this is not all. As everybody knows, Napoleon's favorite arm was artillery, and in that arm there are to be widespread reforms and reorganization, particularly with the object of obtaining the greatest mobility, if not interrupted by war.

Eleven divisions of artillery have been changed from "riding" batteries to "driven" batteries. That is the official description of the change, which—officially again—was defended on the ground that there would be a large saving in men and horses without any proportionate loss in fighting force, since it was practically useless to have the riding batteries unless they were always working in collaboration with cavalry, and for this purpose there were already enough.

The most important part of the change, however, lies in the fact that the batteries are now only four guns each in place of the regular German six. This means a striking vindication of the French artillery principles, such as were propounded by General Langlois, and no doubt the teachings of the Balkan wars have had something to do with the innovation. Hitherto the German critics have criticized the French four gun battery on the ground that, if more mobile, it was far less forceful.

Now, however, artillery experts here have come around to quite another point of view. One of the most experienced reported the other day that the smaller batteries were both easier and quicker to handle on the march, and far easier to bring into action. Positions useful for a four gun battery were twice as easy to find, and they were generally far better than those for a six gun battery.

The principle is now so generally accepted and approved that the idea of adopting it for the whole army is being seriously discussed. The 144 guns of each army corps would then become thirty-six batteries in place of the present twenty-four. For the time being this plan was vetoed.

The chief reason against the change was the effect it would have on the line of march, as it would lengthen out the march column very considerably. The tactical value of the four gun battery in the field was not disputed.

Another artillery reform which was not by any means clearly indicated in the new military law was the great increase of howitzers. Some of the riding batteries have been quietly changed into howitzer batteries, and now where every army corps had its complement of howitzers every division possesses the same force. The howitzer, indeed, in the opinion of many German critics, is "the weapon of the future."

The Spirit of the Army.

It is a superb sight to see a German regiment on parade drill, perfect in equipment to the uttermost button, and Fritz in the ranks appreciates it and exults in it as well as the field marshal or even the sub-lieutenant. But if Fritz is locked in jail for a week or two because a single button on his coat appeared to the eye of Baron von Martinet to be not absolutely free from tarnish by the acid test why, then, the other Fritzses frown behind their placid masks and welcome the propaganda of democracy. It must be borne in mind that as the social democracy is the most numerous of all the political parties in the empire so the great majority of that party consists of men who have served their time with the colors under the conscription law. That fact gives added force to the popular disapproval of military abuses. It is not the army, per se, to which even radical social democrats object so much as to the tyrannous exaggerations of the spirit of military caste. There is arising a demand that the army shall be considered, and shall consider itself, a part of the citizen body of the nation, amenable in time of peace like all the rest to the common civil law. But in time of war all other considerations are overthrown.

Kaiser the Supreme General.

Emperor William is of course generalissimo of the German armies, both of the kingdom of Prussia, of which he is king, and of the other kingdoms, duchies and principalities making up the German empire. With him are associated as leaders of their armies the kings of Saxony, Wurttemberg, Bavaria, etc., all of whom are trained soldiers. The heads of the other smaller German states are also military men and for the most part capable leaders of the forces of their states.

Next to Emperor William comes the chief of staff, Lieutenant General Count Helmuth von Moltke, nephew of the famous Von Moltke, who was accounted the greatest strategist of the nineteenth century save only Napoleon Bonaparte. Count von Haeseler holds the rank of field marshal general, the highest in the German or any other army. Other officers high in rank are Generals Von Goltz, Von Lindequist, Von Plessen, Von Kessel, Von Horn, Von Buelow, Von Scholl and Von Prittwitz—all these in addition to the numerous royalties, Prussian and non-Prussian, who hold high rank in the German army. In some cases the titles of these last named are purely honorary and they cannot be called upon for active field service, but in others, as has been stated, the royalties are trained soldiers and able to give good accounts of themselves as masters of large bodies of fighting men. War always finds them in the forefront of the German forces.

MISS DOBLE IS RETURNING

Anxiety for Others Who Have Not Been Heard From

A cable has been received from Miss Clarice B. Doble, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Doble of South street, says that she is sailing from Liverpool August 20 on the Adriatic due in New York, August 28.

Mrs. William E. Hingston of Wollaston is considerably worried as to the safety of her sister, Miss Hill of Wollaston. The last heard from her sister leads Mrs. Hingston to believe that she is now in Brussels, right in the heart of the war zone. It is of course possible that she may have succeeded in getting away, but not hearing from her for several weeks leads her to believe that Miss Hill is still in the war zone.

The steamship Creole, built at Quincy sailed from New York on Thursday for Liverpool to bring home Americans.

Miss Emma Keith and Miss Helen Keith of Braintree, have been reported safe in Berlin.

People in Norway and Sweden are also hit by the war, and Quincy people may have to spend the winter there. A Boston paper prints the London dispatch under date of August 20.

I. N. Vaughan of Richmond, Va., and his wife arrived in London today from Stockholm. He came on the steamship Sterling from Stockholm to Newcastle. The Sterling was especially chartered by a party of 50 Americans. Speaking of the situation in Scandinavia, Mr. Vaughan said:

"There are 5000 Americans marooned on the Scandinavian peninsula and only one regular daily sailing for England. This is a steamship with a capacity of 75 passengers. The charges for this passage are exorbitant.

"Americans are scattered through smaller towns in Norway and Sweden, in addition to those at Christiania and Stockholm. They are unable to secure money, and many of them are penniless.

"The Swedes I saw were very friendly to Germany; they were also kind to the Americans over there. The Norwegians are enthusiastic in support of the allies."

Congressman Gardner of the American relief committee said today he believed transports could easily be sent by the United States to Bergen, Norway, for the use of Americans on the peninsula. There would be no danger from mines or other interference, as such vessels could pass to the north of Scotland.

AMUSEMENTS

KINCAIDE THEATRE.

The mid-week change of program on Thursday brought another splendid show to Kincaide Theatre, and as usual a full house was on hand to enjoy it. Wilson & Rich in their seaside sketch made a big hit. Their songs, dances and dialogues were very pleasingly rendered. Jack Birchland brought down the house with his funny frog costume and good singing. The Strand Trio are well named "Those Harmonizing Boys," as the several songs they rendered so delightfully proved. Hurst & Kelcey, colored entertainers presented several choice bits of comedy which were received with great applause. Both reels of the "Million Dollar Mystery" were watched with breathless interest by all, and the comedy pictures and aPthe Weekly were also very entertaining. Last, but not least, the good music by the orchestra under Miss Qualey's leadership rounded out the first class program.

Coming Monday is another great show of all new vaudeville, and the thrilling, throbbing "Perils of Pauline."

COLONIAL THEATRE.

To begin its new season the Colonial Theatre will have as its attraction one of the most notable of the recent successes—no other in fact than Henry W. Savage's production of the most celebrated Hungarian operetta "Sari," the musical triumph which remained more than half a year in every continental capital of Europe. The opening will take place next Monday night The triumph of "Sari" in New York has caused its appearance in Boston to be an eagerly anticipated event and the manifestation of an extraordinary amount of interest in its coming next week indicates a reception by a series of audiences that will be noteworthy because of their sizes as for their social brilliancy. War and weather conditions have little effect upon the theatregoing tendencies when an offering of such proved worth as "Sari" is made. At the Colonial Theatre "Sari" will be sung and enacted by the identical company which has so recently concluded its engagement at the New Amsterdam Theatre, New York. The music by Emmerich Kalman is being played today all over the civilized world. No more popular score ever came from Vienna. The story of the operetta is unusual. It combines dramatic strength with humor and its presentation by the superior cast is a delight. Henry W. Savage's standing as the pre-eminent American producer of operetta is not only maintained, but emphasized by "Sari." In the matter of scenic accessory and costuming, the piece is as novel as it is beautiful. It expresses absolutely the most modern ideas in figure and stage dressing.

MAJESTIC THEATRE.

"The Model Maid" a new musical comedy by Philip Bartholomae with music by Silvio Hein, will be the attraction at the Majestic Theatre, Boston, beginning Tuesday, August 25. Mr. Bartholomae, author of "Over Night," "Little Miss Brown," and Joseph Santley's three-year success, "When Dreams Come True," claims for "The Model Maid" a study in "new thought" musical comedy. In other words, this latest Bartholomae output is said to be something entirely different from the hackneyed, time-worn, preverbial type of musical play. In addition to having all the lyrics of all the songs fit in with the story of the play, Mr. Bartholomae promises another novelty in that all of the leading players from the prima donna to the butler, take part in the chorus ensembles, the dance specialties, and other diversions heretofore left entirely to the girls in the front row. During these periods there will be offered travesties and burlesques on melodrama, musical comedy, tango dancing and even the "Florodora" sextette. Silvio Hein has written the music for no less than twenty special musical numbers among them "Shadow Play," "I Want a Man," "The American Girl," and "The Model Maid."

PLYMOUTH THEATRE.

"Under Cover" is now in its last week at the Plymouth Theatre, Boston. The enthusiasm which has greeted the return of this delightful play is the best evidence that Roi Cooper Megrue's thrilling play has not outworn its welcome. Thirty weeks is a long engagement for a play in any city, but it would appear from the patronage which "Under Cover" is attracting at the Plymouth, that this play still retains its remarkable drawing powers. This will positively be the final week during which the play may be seen in Boston, for prior contracts make an extension of the engagement impossible. The management is to be congratulated upon the excellent company they have assembled for the interpretation of the play. No character has been neglected in casting the piece and the result is that an unsurpassable performance is given. The cast is headed by Rockcliffe Fellowes and Clara Louise. Miss Louise is a newcomer in the ranks of leading ladies and is possessed of unusual charm, personality and magnetism. Her work as Ethel Cartwright is one of the pleasing features of the play. During this engagement the usual Thursday and Saturday matinees will be given. On Monday August 31st the fourth regular season of this theatre will be inaugurated with a limited engagement and first appearance in Boston of Holman Day's delightful comedy of New England life entitled "Along came Ruth." The piece scored one of the big hits of the past theatrical year in New York City, where it ran for a long time at the Gaeity theatre. The production is made by Henry W. Savage and this in itself assures the playgoer of the very best. The cast will be the same that presented the piece in New York. Reports from theatregoers who have seen the comedy have aroused the interest of Bostonians in the play and its career at the Plymouth Theatre promises to be one of notable theatrical events of recent years. The seat sale opens Monday while mail orders are accepted now.

WILBUR THEATRE.

The Majestic Players who have been holding forth at the Majestic Theatre during the summer season will next week be transferred over to the Wilbur Theatre, just across the street from the Majestic There willl be no change in the policy of the management, the high standard of the attraction or in the popular scale of prices which have thus far ruled. As this will be the last week of a most successful season, it was deemed fitting to have a grand reunion of Boston stock favorites in that great New England play "Quincy Adams Sawyer." The remarkable cast will include Wilson Melrose who joined the Majestic Players this week, Rose Morison who has been a member of the company during the whole season, Walter Walker, William DeWolf, Gladys Durell, Joseph Crehan, George Connor, Florence Tewksbury, Helen Kinsell and a host of others who have been identified with Boston stock organization for several years. Billy Leahy who as Abner Stiles introduced to Boston the well known "rube" song, "My Irene" will again put on whiskers and essay his old role of Abner. For this engagement the original scenic production used in the first presentation of the play at the Boston Theater will be secured, as will also the original properties. In the third act there will be shown the most realistic farm yard scene ever offered on a Boston stage, with live cows, sheep, pigs and hens. Amid these surroundings the famous huskin' bee will take place. And the familiar old chaise will not be missing. It will be the same one used in the original production. Until next Monday seats for the engagement will be on sale at the Majestic Theater, after which the sale will be transferred to the Wilbur.

Building Business

Recently, a large store of very honored name became insolvent and passed into the hands of a new owner—an energetic young man.

Little was left to the business but the good name. There were strong stores all around it.

The first thing this merchant did was to emphasize in his advertising that he kept well-known, popular, advertised articles—mentioning those advertised in the local newspapers by the manufacturers.

He did not advertise them at a cut price. He merely let it be known that he carried them and would give good service.

That was a few months ago. Already the business has started to revive to an extent that competitors are sitting up and taking notice.

This man makes it a rule to mention every day in his advertising the name of some well-known, branded article that he carries—a name that stands for character in the mind of the public.

All of Local Interest

The team of Div. 22, A. O. H. plays the Jordan, Marsh Co., representation at the Ward Four playground Saturday afternoon and the fans of the district anticipate a fast game. The local lineup will be strengthened considerably, and will play Stedman, McPherson, "Zip" Duane, Elcock, Leary, Chick Desmond, Hebert, Shea and Quinn.

Fore Rivers travel to Lynn on Saturday to play the General Electric team. A defeat throws them out of the running in the Manufacturers' league. The past week the players have had regular batting practice and hope to pepper the Lynn pitcher. A victory for Fore River ties them for first place. The deciding game will probably be played at Merrymount Park in this event.

CHAMPIONSHIP FOR THE UNION

Braintree Engine First in Play-out of Veterans

Union 1 of East Braintree took the championship of the New England States Veterans Firemen's league at the annual playout at Nantasket Thursday, defeating a field of 19 tubs. The playing conditions were excellent.

In addition to taking the first prize of $200, they received an extra of $25 for being the best Hunneman engine in the trials. They also won the trophy. The distance was 216 ft., 5 in.

When William E. Mayberry, superintendent of the Braintree water works and president of the State Veterans Firemen's Association, took his position on the tub, few familiar faces lined the handles. A delay of several minutes were required before enough volunteers were secured so the tub could compete, and in the group were members of the town government, police and fire department and some who had never before gripped the bars.

Captain Mayberry ordered three streams and his second shot up the paper and outdistanced the distance mark for the event. A loud cheer went up from the hundreds on the side lines as the Union not only won its first prize in a muster but also the title.

Men and boys manned the ropes and pulled the engine through the village streets on its return home in triumph. Open house at headquarters, speeches by prominent men, refreshments, red fire and cheers were only a small part of the celebration.

Supt. Mayberry was given great credit for the victory, which was as big a surprise to the men on the handles, as to the towns-people who learned the news by telegraph a few minutes after the mark was made.

Mr. Mayberry has lived all his life alongside the Union, and it was his boyhood chum. At his own trouble and expense a week ago he overhauled the Union and put it in good condition. He is the most popular man in the association and was earnestly congratulated on being the captain of a tub which humbled the Hancock of Brockton and others.

The first five tubs were:

Company and location	Ft.	In.
Union No. 1, E. Braintree	216	5
Fire King, Pawtuxet, R. I.	213	1
Winnisimet, Chelsea	212	3
Nonatum, Newton	210	11
Hancock, Brockton	210	5

VACATIONS NEARLY OVER

Many Quincy People Expected Back Next Week

The vacation season is fast drawing to an end and the first of September most of the sojourners will be returning to the family hearth, except perhaps those who took their vacation by visiting foreign shores. When some of them will return is problematical. The season as a whole has not been a profitable one, for the beach hotels. While there has been some good beach weather there have been days and days, when if it did not storm, a cold northeast wind with a thick fog, made home a more desirable place than at the beaches.

There are of course many who prefer September as their vacation month and as a rule September is one of the best months of the year for a vacation. Schools however open the first of that month, so that families with children of the school age must get back.

There are many who put forth the claim that it would be better to put off the reopening of schools in the fall until the first of October. If this were done the beach houses would probably like it better as they could keep open longer with some assurance of getting some trade. As it is now Labor Day usually finishes up the beach season and after that shutters are put up and houses closed for the long winter months. But schools are not run for the benefit of beaches.

Quincy schools will open for the fall term on Tuesday, following Labor day, that is Tuesday Sept. 8.

ADVERTISE IN THE LEDGER.

BILLIARD SHOT IN GOLF WILL GO AROUND STYMIE.

Englishman Invents Plan That Has Great Possibilities.

Necessity is the mother of invention in golf as well as other things. Now comes a method of solving the pernicious stymie, long the bane of champions and duffers when the result of a match hangs upon well placed putting on the green.

By this method the ingenuous golfer will carry among his driver, midirons, brassies and other armament an ordinary billiard cue. Coming upon the green to find his opponent's ball between the cup and his own sphere. Mr. Golfer seizes his cue, chalks the end and drops to the ground. A careful aim, a bit of "English" and his own ball whirls in a neat curve around the stymie and, kerplunk, into the hole.

If the golfer should forget his cue he need not abandon the new style of putting. He simply takes his midiron, lies prone or drops to one knee and uses the leather bound grip as a cue tip, and the result is about the same.

An English golfer is given credit for the discovery of the billiard stroke. Recently on the Aldersburgh links at Suffolk a player resorted to that means of solving a stymie. In order to warn the American golfers in time for the national championships it was brought to the attention of American experts.

Jack Taylor, professional at the Garfield park course in Chicago, was skeptical when first told about the latest method of holing out a stymie. Much persuasion induced him to make a trial. Taylor kneeled, placed two balls on a direct line between himself and the cup, the nearest ball about a foot from the hole and the other six inches farther.

The first shot with the wrong end of a midiron clicked the two. Then Jack remembered evenings spent around a billiard table last winter. He deftly applied a little "English" and the near sphere curved out and dropped into the hole. This convinced the "pro." A search brought an old billiard cue, experiments were made, and Taylor found that a very few practice shots enabled him to hole out when stymied four and five yards from the cup.

COBB FEARS SWEENEY.

Detroit Star Has Respect For Yankee Catcher's Arm.

Ty Cobb, the speedy Detroit outfielder who has successively stolen second, third and home in making one circuit of the sacks, has been talking about the catchers he fears most. It will surprise many fans to know that he regards big Ed Sweeney of the Yankees as the man who kills his base stealing attempts more often than any other backstop.

Sweeney is not generally regarded as a star receiver, though he is a hard worker and is a dangerous man when batting. So Cobb's words are surprising, and it is doubtful if other American league players would put Sweeney above Schalk, Schang and Agnew. But Cobb's ideas are entitled to consideration, and his fear of Sweeney's aim is a distinct compliment.

ED SWEENEY.

It is possible that Sweeney has the "Indian sign" on Cobb, just as some mediocre batters are able to make base hits against star pitchers. It is not unusual for a player with little batting ability to be able to go at a .500 clip against such a flinger as Mathewson or Johnson, and it may be that Cobb's fear of Sweeney is one of the causes for the New Yorker's success in turning back the Georgia Peach.

Pacer William Breaks Records.

William, in a pacing race at Grand Rapids, Mich., recently, reduced the world's record for a four-year-old pacer to 2 minutes, and by pacing three heats that averaged 2:01 he reduced the world's record of the fastest race ever contested and made so great a horse as Walter Cochato look cheap. He started in the much talked about 2:01 pace, and the confidence of the public was so great that he was at all times the favorite at 50 to 30 in heavy speculation. All horsemen who saw the race agree that the four-year-old could have paced every one of his heats in 2 minutes, and that, driven out in the first, he would have paced at least in 1:59, the race record.

BRUSSELS IS OCCUPIED BY THE GERMANS

Belgians Retreat to Antwerp Forts Without Fighting

VICTORY THE LOT OF KAISER'S FORCES

Taking of Capital Comes as Death Blow to Inhabitants of Belgium, Although Anticipated by Officials—Invasion of Austria by Russian Hordes Not Yet Begun—Lack of News About Fighting on French Boundary at Luxemburg Causes Anxiety—Dead and Wounded Piled High as Belgians Lose Aerschot After Most Spirited Battle

London, Aug. 21.—The flag of Germany floats over Brussels. Into the capital of the Belgians clattered the German Uhlans, their entry unopposed.

To save the city from bombardment and the destruction of priceless art treasures and venerable buildings that could never be replaced, the Belgians determined to abandon the city to the conquerers.

Splashed with mud, clad in uniforms of dull color, there was little of the old pageantry of war about the German occupation.

The cavalry at once took possession of the official buildings, preparatory to the entry of the infantry, who are reported as marching close behind. No reports of disorders or of fighting in the suburbs of Brussels have reached London.

City Without Defenses

"The Little Paris" has been the descriptive title given for years to Brussels. But in one respect, at least, it bears no resemblance to the French capital. Brussels has no defenses, and those who see an augury of the fall of Paris in the occupation of its Belgian counterpart admit that many weeks must elapse before the German army will be thundering at the gates of Paris.

The fall of the capital had been discounted in advance by the Belgian officials, but to many of the inhabitants, who had hoped against hope to the end, the appearance of German standards in the streets came as a death blow to Belgian hopes.

Except for the recapture of Mulhausen, Thursday was a disastrous one for the armies of the allies. Not only did Brussels succumb to the irresistible sweep of the invaders, but Louvain also, the gathering place of the Belgian army, was evacuated without any serious effort to hold it. In Lorraine the victorious march onward of the French forces was checked so severely that the setback was acknowledged in Paris.

Victories Not Important

Reassuring messages of Russian successes against the Germans and Austrians were received in London, but the encounters were so insignificant that not much hope for the immediate future could be extracted from them. The anxiously awaited invasion in force of the Russian hordes, so often heralded, has apparently not yet begun.

The entry into Brussels was the most spectacular feature of the day, but the real fighting occurred southeast of the capital and in Alsace-Lorraine. It is more than probable, too, that the army of the Moselle has launched its attack upon the hole in the French defenses, but no reports of clashes in this section could be obtained. So far as can be learned, no German forces in great strength are yet in French territory, although the war has now beeen waged on the frontier for eighteen days.

Invaders Overrun Country

All day Thursday the rumble of the German advance was reverberating through northern Belgium. Into the gap left insufficiently defended, infantry and artillery in tremendous strength have been pouring over the country, already desolated by the trail of the cavalry. The Meuse, that has been reddened with blood for days, is now a grimy stream, defiled by the dust and dirt raised by the passage of scores of thousands of men.

The Belgians in the north retreated without fighting until they reached the shelter of the strong forts at Antwerp. The German cavalry have continued their raids into the north of Belgium and are reported as having been seen near Turnhout and Herenthals. The former city is so close to the Dutch boundary that considerable apprehension has been aroused in Holland.

Ominous Silence

The official admission of the French war office that the first great battle of the war is now being waged from Diest to Basle, a distance of 275 miles, and the complete lack of news about the fighting on the French boundary at Luxemburg and in northern Lorraine has caused considerable anxiety in London. This is the region that many have picked as the scene of the most desperate attempt of the invaders to penetrate France.

The statement that fighting is going on there and the complete censorship over details have combined to cause tremendous apprehension over the ability of France to hold this line, so vital to the defense of the nation.

Germans Capture Aerschot

The few meagre messages describing Thursday's fighting in detail indicate the character of the desperate battling that is now going on for the possession of Belgium. At Aerschot, a few miles west of Diest, where the Germans had been driven back on Tuesday, they returned to the fight Thursday and finally wrested the city from its defenders.

The advance was preceded by the flight of two speedy aeroplanes which flew perilously low over the city, spying out the arrangements of the defenses and whirring again and again over the Belgians, despite the hail of bullets directed against them. Hardly had they vanished from sight in the east before the solid columns of German infantry were seen, driving back small detachments of Belgians upon several roads.

Both Sides Lose Heavily

No charges were attempted until the zone of firing had been somewhat cleared by a devastating fire from machine guns. The Belgians held their position stubbornly, and wounded and dead soldiers were piled high in front of both the defenders and the invaders. The battling was still going on with frightful havoc to both sides when the Belgian buglers blew the signal for a retreat. This averted a slaughter, as every road coming from the east was choked with reinforcements coming up to aid the German first line of attack.

The valor of the Belgians was attested by the losses of one detachment of the rear guard. Of 288 men under a major's command, only five came back with the officer to safety. The major's nose had been broken by a bullet, but after a brief stay at a hospital, he rejoined his comrades at Antwerp.

Montenegrins Are Advancing

A dispatch from Rome says the advance of the Montenegrins in Bosnia continues. The dispatch adds that Austrian aeroplanes flew over the mountains and dropped bombs on the Montenegrin forts. The bombs, however, did no damage.

A RUSSIAN VICTORY

Twelve Guns and a Large Number of Prisoners Taken In East Prussia

A body of Russian troops, according to an official announcement given out at St. Petersburg, has occupied Bumbinnen, twenty miles from the Russian frontier of East Prussia, capturing twelve guns and a large number of prisoners.

The Russian war office issued an official statement saying the general offensive movement against Austria is now in progress. It states that the Austrian cavalry guarding the frontier has been crushed by the Cossack advance guard and that the Russian infantry in force is now being pushed forward.

BY WAY OF GERMANY

Loss to Kaiser's Troops Has Been 1500 Killed and 7000 Wounded

The casualty list of the German army, published in the Cologne Gazette, gives in detail the losses of the Germans up to Aug. 18. They total about 1500 dead and 7000 wounded.

According to another German newspaper about 2,000,000 Germans are in the field, but the mobilization continues. The railroads in the west are carrying nothing but soldiers and supplies. Many Austrian troops are on their way to France, according to this newspaper.

WEAK HANDS GUARD BERLIN

All Able-Bodied Citizens of Capital Sent to the Firing Line

The London Times correspondent at Rotterdam telegraphs the following statement which he says was made to him by a party of Chinese medical men who have arrived in Rotterdam from Berlin:

"When we left Berlin Saturday night the city was in the hands of old men and boys. Not an able-bodied man was to be seen. All the bridges were guarded by boys of about 14 years of age, who stood with fixed bayonets. A fortnight ago the Friedrichstrasse bridge was badly damaged by a Russian bomb."

CHINA MAKES INQUIRY

Wants United States to Take Over the Port of Kiau Chau

China has inquired of the United States what its attitude would be toward the cession by Germany to the United States of the territory of Kiau Chau for immediate cession thereafter back to China.

The inquiry of the Chinese government is understood to be based on intimation from Germany that such a course might solve the problem.

The Chinese government is not sure that such a program would meet with the approval of Japan or Great Britain and the opinion is freely expressed that it will not. But China has informed the United States that no matter what action Japan may take as a result of her ultimatum the Chinese republic will preserve an absolutely passive attitude.

WARNED LAST JANUARY

Canadian Premier Expected Germany Would Precipitate War

England's participation in the European conflict was indorsed by the Canadian parliament. In the house of commons and in the senate party lines disappeared and the address indorsing the speech from the throne was adopted in record time.

That Canada was warned in January last that Germany would probably precipitate was was the startling announcement with which Premier Borden opened his speech. As a result of this warning Canada prepared a defense plan and, he said: "I cannot overestimate the great advantage which resulted to the government from having these matters thought out in advance."

...A... KIDNAPING

It Was Not For Ransom, but For a Benefit to the Kidnaped

By MARTHA V. MONROE

Rudolf Kenyon at sixteen graduated from the high school of the town in which he lived. He was a bright boy and would have been glad to go to college, but his mother had done all she could for him, and it was time he began to do for her. Consequently he must go to work.

The graduating exercises were over, the pupils had been handed their diplomas, and Rudolf started for his home to tell his mother all about it. Leaving the main thoroughfare, he entered the quiet street in which he lived, having still half a dozen blocks to go to reach his home, when an automobile that was being driven in the direction he was walking stopped at the curb a few yards ahead of him, a man alighted, took him by the arm and forced him into the car. Rudolf was physically no match for the man and offered little resistance. Once in the car he was powerless to call assistance, for it was a closed vehicle, and his captor at once drew down the curtains.

That he was kidnaped to be held for ransom did not occur to the boy for several reasons. In the first place, the man who had taken him was a mild mannered person, with no resemblance to the class of common kidnapers. In the second place, kidnaping was associated in Rudolf's mind with little children, too young to serve as effective witnesses against their captors. Thirdly, the man told him in a reassuring voice that he would be at no discomfort whatever. As they drove along he asked Rudolf a few questions.

"Do you remember your father?"

"No; he died when I was a little child."

"Has your mother ever spoken to you of him?"

"I don't remember that she has."

"And you have never had the curiosity to ask about him?"

"Indeed, I have, but have not done so because to mention him always gives my mother pain."

The man paused in his questions and seemed to be thinking. Then he asked another:

"Have you ever gathered from your mother or any one else that your father while living acted in a reprehensible manner?"

"No one has ever talked to me about him. The impression that I have received from my mother is that she mourned him as any widow would mourn her husband."

This seemed to produce a decided effect on the man sitting beside Rudolf. Again there was a pause, at the end of which came another question.

"Then you have never heard your mother say that your father was a bad man?"

"Certainly not."

The man seemed to be profoundly moved. He attempted to take the boy's hand in his, but Rudolf drew away, and his captor did not renew the attempt. They were some time in the car, at the end of which they turned into the grounds of a handsome house, and the car drew up under a porte-cochere at the end of the porch. The man got out and beckoned Rudolf to follow him.

"Come into the house with me," he said to the boy. "I have something to tell you. If after you have had plenty of time to consider what I shall say to you you wish to go home you will be sent there."

This not only caused Rudolf to feel easy, but by this time his curiosity was excited to learn something about this man who had asked him questions about his father and had kidnaped him on the very day he had been graduated from the high school. On entering the house a maid appeared, and the man told her to show the boy to a room and he was to come down to luncheon in half an hour. The maid did as required, speaking kindly to her charge and showing him every attention. The time did not seem long before she informed him that luncheon was ready. On going down stairs he found his captor in the library. Rudolf, so far as he had noticed the man's appearance, had done so regarding him as an enemy. Now that this feeling had worn off he was surprised to see a gentleman who gave evidence of refinement. He led the boy into the dining room, luxuriously furnished, and a butler stood ready to serve the luncheon.

"I shall not eat anything," said Rudolf, "till I have had an opportunity to send my mother a message."

"That you may do. Has your mother a telephone?"

"No, but our next door neighbor has one, and we are permitted to use it."

"Show him the telephone booth," said the host to the butler.

Rudolf went to the booth, called for his mother and found her much worried at his failure to return to her after the school exercises. He gave her a brief account of what had happened, finding her an excellent listener, but when he asked her for his views as to who his captor might be and what were his intentions he found her uncommunicative. As soon as he told her he had been promised that after he had listened to what the stranger had to say and had time to consider it he might go home she seemed much relieved and told him not to try to escape, but await further developments.

On leaving the telephone Rudolf found his captor-host waiting for him in the dining room, and the two sat down to such a luncheon as the boy had never tasted before. While they were eating the gentleman talked, but not about what Rudolf wished to hear—an explanation of this strange captivity. He asked Rudolf what he proposed to do now that he had left school, and when Rudolf told him that he was going to hunt for a position in business the other shook his head.

"You will never succeed in business," he said.

"Why do you say that?"

"By the shape of your head and the expression of your face I judge that you were born for an intellectual career. How would you like to go to college?"

"Oh, I should like that above all things. But I can't. Mother has done everything for me up to this time, and now that I am nearly a man I must begin the work of taking care of her."

The host seemed to wince at this and remained quiet for a time. Then he continued:

"If certain arrangements can be made which I shall propose to you, will you go to college?"

This quite took Rudolf's breath away. For one year during which his mother was ill she had been obliged to put him in a store as errand boy. This had given the natural distaste there was in him for business an opportunity to crop out. The bare idea of going to college filled him with delight.

"Where will the money come from?" he asked.

"I will furnish that."

Rudolf, though intent upon knowing more, thrust back the next question that was on his tongue and applied himself to a delicacy which the butler served him.

When the luncheon was finished his host led him to the library, pointed to an easy chair, then, seating himself in another, said:

"Rudolf, your father is not dead; he is very much alive."

The boy started, then sat looking at the speaker, waiting hungrily for more.

"He came to America from England about twenty years ago. He was the son of a nobleman, and in that country they have what they call a law of entail, which settles the family estate on the oldest son. Your father was the second son. He came to America, met your mother, who was then a beautiful girl, fell in love with her and married her. After you were born his father in England sent for him to come back—without his wife—and a proposition would be made to him. He accepted the invitation. His father told him that his older brother had received an injury while hunting from which he would never recover. If your father would remain in England, divorce his American wife and marry among his peers in England he should be put in possession of the title and estates. Your father after much persuasion wrote your mother of this proposition. She consented to it and obtained a divorce on the ground of desertion. Your father married again, and his wife died childless a year ago.

"These are the bare facts. I shall neither try to excuse your father nor to condemn him. That I leave for your mother to do. I will say, however, that he condemns himself bitterly."

"Where is my father now?" asked Rudolf, wondering.

"Here; I am your father."

There was a pause, after which the boy asked why he had been kidnaped.

"I came to America to make amends for what I have done. Your mother can best be made to forgive me through the one she loves best—her son. I desired to tell you the story in my own way and send my supplications for forgiveness to her through you. You are free to go back to her this afternoon and ask her if she will receive a visit from me."

Rudolf sprang to his feet. "I will go now; I am sure she will do as I wish, and I wish that she shall forgive you."

The car was ordered, and the two went hand in hand to the porte-cochere. There Rudolf threw his arms about his father's neck, kissed him and was carried away.

When Rudolf reached home his mother asked him to give her a couple of hours of quiet thought in her room and then she would give him her decision. For awhile she found it hard to conquer rebellious feelings against the husband who had deserted her, but memories of her early happy married life softened her heart.

Rudolf went back with a favorable reply. He remained at the house his father had temporarily taken during his stay in America while his father went for an interview which the boy hoped and prayed might bring a family reunion. During the time that he was left alone he was treated with every attention by the servants, but so great was his impatience to learn what might be the result of the interview between his parents that he found no enjoyment in the luxury by which he was surrounded. On the third day after his father's departure the car pulled up under the porte-cochere. Rudolf ran out eagerly. His father alighted, then—heaven be praised—handed out his mother. Rudolf ran to her, and she caught him in her arms.

What further explanation the boy received was given by his mother. The pair had just been married a second time and were to live together. The husband and father was now Earl of Edgerton, and the son was heir to the title and estates.

NOW LONGER WAISTS.

Wide Girdles Used to Give This Modish Effect to Gowns.

The lowering of the waist line is one of the characteristics of smart fall frocks. Illustrated here is a gown of taffeta in striped effect. The wide girdle outlines the waist with startling distinctness as to lines.

STRIPED TAFFETA GOWN.

Entire skirts are occasionally made of Roman stripes.

Embroidered taffeta dresses are among the novelties.

Figured basques are seen worn with plain black tunic skirts.

Fall skirts are being made with clusters of plaits.

There seems to be a decided return to long, simple lines in dress.

Combinations of broadcloth with satin or moire are seen.

Fur trimmings, it is said, will be in good standing for fall.

Night Light in Glass.

KEEPING FLOWERS FRESH.

To keep flowers before arranging them in the vases arrange loosely in a large bowl brimful of water, allowing the water to come just under the blossoms, and place in a dark place for an hour or so. This plan will stiffen the blossoms and increase the length of time the flowers will keep in a fresh state.

It is interesting to note that cornflowers quickly lose their color if deprived of sunshine. Therefore if used as a table decoration the best plan is to put them in the window between times.

NEWSY BRIEFS

The eclipse was not visible.

Thomas Drever who was formerly engaged in Christian work in South Africa, will preach at both services at the Calvary Baptist church on Sunday.

Cards received from Sydney McLaughlin, of 20 Goddard street, quarter master on the Sea Scout Ship Pioneer reports from several ports of interest on the cruise, along the different coasts.

Mrs. Edward S. Welch and two sons, Edwin and Richard of Upland road, left Thursday for Peaks Island, Maine, from there going to Old Orchard where they have a cottage. Mr. Welch will join them later.

Now is the season of the year when the boy, and in some cases men old enough to know better, begin to make their raids on orchards. If some of the people were brought into court and given a stiff punishment it might have a good effect.

City Clerk Crane was at his office a short time this morning but looks rather tired out. After attending to some pressing business he returned to his home. Miss Marguerite S. Lyons, the assistant clerk, who was on her vacation, was called back to officiate during his absence.

Mr. and Mrs. John MacKay of Liberty street entertained a number of friends Wednesday evening in honor of their guests Miss Alice and Miss Elizabeth Chalmers of New York. The evening was passed in a pleasant manner with music, games and refreshments.

Mr. and Mrs. Carlton McNeil and Miss Peters and Mr. Green are camping two weeks at Bournedale. They write they have had no thunder storms and are having a fine time. They went fishing in the lake and caught 24 perch, 2 pickerel and a black bass.

NEW LOT SELECTED.

The Squantum Woman's club has voted to purchase land on Dorchester street, near the terminal of the street car tracks, for its club house. The lot faces the bay and is an ideal location. In place of the lawn party arranged for Saturday the club will meet at the Squantum Inn on Monday evening where there will be a dinner followed by whist.

run shy, at first setting his figures at $500 but later increasing the amount needed to $2,000.

It was also understood this morning that the City Hospital desired an additional sum in addition to that given them in the annual budget. The Hospital wants at least $1,000 more if not $2,000.

Whether or not the Mayor will include all of these sums in his communication is not known. There is also a possibility that other departments may find they need more funds to carry them through.

Every year it has been the custom for the different departments to come to the City Council in December stating that they find they will have a deficit and the City Council has usually provided more money, usually from transfers from unexpended balances or unappropriated receipts.

Under the new municipal law however this cannot be done and any additional sums must be provided by a supplementary budget, which must also be passed before the tax rate is announced.

It is quite well known that the Assessors were practically ready to announce the rate for 1914 a week ago but on account of the knowledge of the supplementary budget it was held up.

It is still held up as the supplementary budget is pending. The chances are however that the supplemnetary budget may be passed at the special meeting next Monday, in which event the rate will probably be announced some time next week.

The orders 275 and 278 referred to in the call, are the supplementary bud get order, and the order authorizing the City Treasurer to increase the rate of interest on the loans for the Houghs Neck school addition, the Hancock street widening and the building of accepted streets.

The increase in interest from four to four and one-half per cent will make a total increase in the interest account on the loans of $2,400 in round figures.

SAID OF READING.

In science read by preference the newest works; in literature the oldest. The classic literature is always modern.—Bulwer-Lytton.

What a wonderful, what an almost magical boon, a writer of great genius confers upon us when we read him intelligently. As he proceeds from point to point in his argument or narrative we seem to be taken up by him and carried from hilltop to hilltop, where, through an atmosphere of life, we survey a glorious region of thought, looking freely, far and wide, above and below, and gazing in admiration upon all the beauty and grandeur of the scene.—Mann.

Advertisers Ask Only A Fair Trial

By HOLLAND.

ADVERTISERS do not attempt to make you agree to buy their goods for the rest of your life. They only want you to give their wares a trial, to subject them to actual test by actual use, and then be guided by experience

Could anything prove more clearly that the advertiser has supreme confidence in his product, that he is absolutely certain that it will please you, that it will be all he says it is?

It would indeed be foolish to spend money to induce you to buy an article that would prove unsatisfactory and would result in your telling friends and neighbors of your experience. Advertisers spend millions making their trademarks known, and in order to make their trademarks valuable they must stand for a certain standard of worth. Having made their trademarks known, manufacturers exert every effort to keep the goods up to the expected high grade.

A FORMER OVERSEER

without food for ten days, that he had kicked O'Connell, or that Pearson had been ill treated. Herbert Colby had never complained of ill treatment and Kapples had never made a complaint of being ill treated. Peter Logan was in such a condition physically when he came to the Home that City Physician Hallowell had ordered him sent to Tewksbury.

Testifying as to the first visits of Overseer Perry Green to the Home, Supt. Vaughn said Green told him to slam the inmates around and swear at them if they did not do what he wanted them to, saying, "I will stand behind you."

At another time he told me to take John Wren into the cellar and lick him so bad he will not want to fight. He said that if I did not do it he would. He also asked what I knew about Mike Shea, as he wanted to see what he could get on him. Green would take home groceries every time he came down to the Home.

Telling of the first visit of Mayor Miller, Supt. Vaughn said he came down and looked around and said to me, you keep this place looking nice and clean. He complimented me on the appearance of the Home and grounds.

When I asked the Mayor what the trouble was, that I was to be turned out, and that as I was under civil service I was entitled to a hearing, he said, "Is that so, I did not know that before." And a little later on, he said "I did not come here for a row."

As he started to leave the Home he turned around and said, "You call the inmates liars and guttersnips." I then told the Mayor what Mr. Green had called some of the inmates. My wife did not turn and call Mayor Miller names as he said she did.

Supt. Vaughn told of the carrying home of groceries by Overseer Green.

He was under cross examination by City Solicitor Pinkham when an adjournment was taken until Friday morning.

TODAYS HEARING.

Just before the noon adjournment of the Vaughn case, Counsel McAnarney for the defense argued several minutes with the apparent intention of establishing facts for a petition to the Supreme Judicial court in the event of the removal of Vaughn as keeper of the almshouse being upheld.

Judge Avery at that time said he declined to pass on the regularity of the public hearing, or that new witnesses had been introduced by the city, and the same by the defense, or that a request for a bill of specifications had been unanswered.

City Solicitor Pinkham raised many objections to the way Fred Green, former overseer, testified for the defense, and finally Judge Avery said, "hold on Mr. Green, we'll be here all night."

Mr. Vaughn took the stand in his own defense and was cross examined this morning. He stated Perry Green took groceries and a load of boxes.

Q.—What did you mean to imply when you testified to that?

A.—That he took the wood necessary to kindle big wood.

He told Mr. Pinkham he rolled the hay out because it took the place of his sleigh and that he did so to bring it to the attention of Dr. Burke. He said he did not speak to the latter about it for he thought it would do little good.

Q.—Why didn't you speak to Dr. Burke

A.—Because the doctor seemed to have hard feeling against me.

He said he had nothing to do with his son buying or selling Vaughn's spa, but identified a check for $25 payable to him in part payment from Mr. Brooks after much questioning. Later he identified the final check payable to him and his son.

He next was shown a letter of instruction and without even examining it denied receiving it. Counsel Pinkham then showed another which he acknowledged he had received. When told both had been sent together he admitted his denial of the receipt of the first had been hasty.

This letter contained instructions relative to the treatment of inmates and was made a part of the city's case It was received after Perry Green told him to slam and curse inmates he said

In answer to Judge Avery, he said it was received before the visit of the Mayor and shortly after Perry Green told him to treat inmates rotten.

He said he never suggested placing a cell in the almshouse, and that the records did not show what was used in the house. He ordered the groceries.

He carefully explained when Mr. Pinkham presented a grocery bill for examination, that at the public hearing he became confused when confronted with the grocery bills, because he was tired from the grilling and was puzzled. He then told of the variety of meats purchased, but said he could tell nothing by looking at the bill.

He told Mr. Pinkham, Overseer Green generally spent afternoons at the almshouse and took things from the storehouse with him. He said it was tea, coffee, canned goods. He said he never did up the bundles but he and his wife saw Mr. Green do them up, and thought it wasn't right.

Counsel McAnarney in rebuttal brought out that Counsel Pinkham represented Mr. Brooks, the purchaser of Vaughn's spa, in the transaction, and that Vaughn was the guarantor of his son.

Judge Avery then questioned the witness.

Q.—From the beginning of Mr. Green's taking charge you had more or less friction.

A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—It began the time he assumed office?

A.—Yes We tried to please him but couldn't.

Q.—It kept growing worse and worse and the inmates became fractious.

A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—It is a fact then that shortly after the new administration inmates became more or less fractious?

A.—Yes, sir.

During prior administrations you were permitted to manage the almshouse without interference.

A.—Yes everything went nicely.

Counsel McAnarney then asked if former overseer gave him directions, and he said yes.

Q.—And there was no friction in carrying them out?

A.—No, sir.

Counsel McAnarney brought out that the day after Overseer Green and Dr. Bartlett called an inmate told Mr. Vaughn he was going to be fired and a new man put in his place.

Fred Green the next witness said the house was in terrible condition when Vaughn was appointed. He said Mrs. Marsh called at his office and started a fight.

Judge Avery ruled witness should not characterize.

Mr. Green said Mrs. Marsh made no complaints about Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn. She spoke of the barrenness of the place and was informed it was a question of finance. He said Mike Curtis made no complaints.

In speaking of inmates mentioned in the Curtis letter, he said Gilligan made no complaints and spoke of the difficulty of handling John Wrenn.

He said he was the cause of Mike Kapples being put on a diet which did not include meat and bread.

Q.—Did any inmates complain of ill treatment.

A.—No, sir.

Q.—Have you ever heard Mr. or Mrs. Vaughn use profane language?

A.—No, sir

He said so far as he observed inmates were treated kindly.

Q.—Do you know James P. Flanagan?

A—Yes, sir.

Q—Have you heard him make remarks about what he proposed doing?

A—He was talking about Vaughn, as he called him and promised to get him. Mr. Green said he affirmed it in the court room later in the presence of Mr. Noonan and another man.

He said it was he who made the rule preventing conversation at the table.

Counsel McAnarney offered the official reports of the almshouse conditions as they appear in city documents.

Counsel Pinkham's objections were upheld on the ground they were outside the specifications.

In cross examination by Mr. Pinkham, Mr. Green said Mrs. Marsh never was forbidden at almshouse. He said he was a State visitor of almshouses and outside poor and since appointment saw three almshouses. His freedom in answering questions caused those in the court room to smile frequently and brought the admonition from Judge Avery to "hold on."

William Cain of the Water department was introduced as a city witness in rebuttal of Mr. Elcock's testimony, that he received no complaints about treatment of inmates, and on the objection of Counsel McAnarney he was not permitted to testify.

TESTIMONY CLOSED AT VAUGHN HEARING

Some of the Principal Witnesses Recalled in Rebuttal of Evidence Given

Argument Will Not Be Heard For Three Weeks

The taking of testimony in the Vaughn case had a dramatic closing Friday afternoon, the principal witnesses for both sides being put on in rebuttal.

The arguments will be made on Sept. 9 and promise to be the liveliest ever heard in the court room.

The closing session developed but little new matter, the only sensation being the intimation of Counsel McAnarney that politics was behind the removal, and his objection to Judge Avery allowing a witness to answer freely when he claimed his witnesses were held to the line.

In the event of the removal being upheld, a petition will be made for a new hearing before the Supreme Judicial court.

A uniue point has developed over the interpretation of the statute governing the hearing. Counsel McAnarney who used the same witnesses at court as at the public hearing, contends the city was in error, when new ones for their side were introduced, inasmuch as the judge makes a review of the public hearing and new witnesses makes it a new trial.

Perry Green denied ordering that inmates be slammed or cursed and said he had no knowledge of the references of Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn being instructed by him to use the flat of his hand, etc.

Q.—Did you occasion any rough house with Jim McDonald.

A.—No, sir.

He said the incident in which Fred Vaughn testified he had used profane language had to do with a hysterical Italian woman and that no profanity was used by anyone.

Officer James Murray told how he had been sent to the Home of the Chief of Police to act as an interpreter, and explained the difficulty he had in pacifying the woman because she thought an inmate would assault her. He said he was talking the loudest in the group gathered there and heard no one use profanity.

In cross examination by Counsel McAnarney he said that he knew nothing about loud talking or profanity before arrival or after his departure.

Mr. Green took the stand again and said an examination of the men showed they were willing to work if not spoken to too roughly, and that Vaughn said the Deady incident was a lie.

Mr. Green gave his reasons for the sending of the letter of instruction relative to treatment of inmates. The reference to cutting down the electric light bill was explained.

He said Mrs. Vaughn said the electric lighting cost was increased because of a green girl and sickness. He said the wood shed was cluttered up with tin cans and other stuff and he wanted it cleaned out. He said he ordered that no telephoning be done about small matters, because Vaughn would miss something and a few days later find it in his pocket and phone about it.

Mr. Green admitted taking groceries from the store house and said it was for the purpose of sampling and testing. This was necessary he said because the goods were in bulk and were not standard brands.

Q.—You heard the testimony about your taking goods every day.

A.—Not a word of truth in it.

Q.—Was there in your judgment any other way of testing them?

A.—No, sir.

Mr. Green then gave a short resume of how he purchased superior brands for less money.

Q.—Did Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn refuse to do up a package for you?

A.—Something new to me. No, sir.

Q.—Did you incite inmates to make trouble.

A.—No, sir.

Q.—Did you tell Jim McDonald you would get Vaughn?

A.—No, sir.

Q.—Did you make any such remark to inmates?

A.—No.

Q.—What was the condition there in regard to shoes?

A.—An investigation showed them poor. They were attended to the next morning.

Q.—Whether or not at any time you have in any way given Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn to understand you wanted the men to be treated hard?

A.—No, never.

Q.—Or whether you wanted them to slam and bang them around if they didn't do so and so?

A.—No, never.

He then spoke of Mrs. Vaughn wanting to know if I was mad with her and her husband. He said she told him he shouldn't be mad with us as we can protect you the way we protected other overseers, and I told her there and then I wanted no protection.

He said, Jim McDonald made a complaint at the office, and Vaughn accused him of throwing a plate on the floor. McDonald answered "How did I do that without breaking the plate, and Vaughn turned and asked if I was to take the word of a gutter-snipe against his.

He said milk was sent to City Hall from a new cow for the purpose of examination, and that the load of wood was delivered to his house when he asked if there were any boxes that hens could be set on. He said the load consisted of cheese boxes lettuce boxes and other small woods which lay around the yard until the wind had scattered them.

Mr Green said he never took a can of tomatoes or found "cat" salmon in the store room.

In answer to Judge Avery as to whether he made any remarks he said he remarked he would rather have inmates satisfied than not have enough to eat. Vaughn said the men liked blood sausage and John Wrenn's desire was blood pudding.

Mr. Green said the only time he was at the almshouse at supper they had bread, tea, and doughnuts. He said he wanted to improve that and ordered a sauce and thought they should have meat, but Mrs. Vaughn said it was against the rules of institutions.

The friction he said developed over an increase of Mr. Vaughn's duties. The practice of giving orders to outside poor, said Mr. Green, was practically discontinued and goods were sent from the storehouse. Vaughn complained it meant more work and no other overseer did it.

In cross examination by Counsel McAnarney, he said he took part in in the dictation of the letter from Dr. Bartlett. He said he thought the doctor left on a sick call.

After many questions, Mr. Green answered affirmatively to the question, did you talk to McDonald the day before this letter was written and a complaint made.

Q.—There was trouble about food and McDonald spoke to you about it the day before and was at the City Hall?

A.—Yes.

He told Counsel McAnarney he gave small samples to Miss Jennie M. Purchase, Dr. Bartlett and Thomas Musgrave of the Board of Health.

Q.—Did you tell Mrs. Vaughn to give them bologna for supper?

A.—I certainly did and they liked it.

Mr. Green admitted to Counsel McAnarney that occasionally he indulged in profanity.

Mr. McAnarney, addressing his remarks to the court and witness, strongly intimated that the removal of Vaughn was for politics, and in taking up the Curtis letter he asked Mr. Green how he procured it.

Mr. Green said Miss Purchase gave him the original, and after it was read to Mrs. Vaughn it was destroyed because it was dirty. He said Mr. Curtis wrote another and he received it five or six days later.

Dr. Bartlett was cross examined about the tea he received and he saidit was less than a pound, and that he later reported on its quality.

Mrs. Vaughn went back to the stand and said the letters which Mr. Green said were deliverd by John Murray of the Board of Health were sent down by Herbie Colby.

Q.—Did Green ever speak of their contents?

A.—No.

The next day I spoke of them to Dr. Bartlett, and he said he knew nothing about them, that he acted under

ANOTHER ITEM IN THE CALL

Hospital May Not Get Additional Appropriation

One more matter was added to the call for the special meeting of the City Council next Monday evening, shortly before the calls were sent out, making seven items in all in the call. The new item is in relation to a petition of the Citizens' Gas Light Co. for permission to lay mains in several streets. As a public hearing must be held it was desirous of getting the petition acted upon as soon as possible so that work laying the mains can be accomplished this fall.

While it is not known just what the Mayor will recommend for additions to the supplementary budget, it is reported that he has turned down the request of the City Hospital for an additional $1,000.

SILVER WEDDING AND PRESENTATION

Mr. and Mrs. John F. Ericson observed the 25th anniversary of their marriage at their home at 98 Cranch street on Thursday evening and among those who attended were members of the Swedish Congregational church of this city and friends from Fitchburg, Orange and Cambridge. The affair was somewhat of a surprise

Mr. and Mrs. Ericson were presented with a silver service in behalf of the members of the church, and with a chest of silver by the family of seven children.

During the evening there were recitations by Rev. A. G. Sporrong, pastor of the Swedish Congregational church and Mrs. Nils Anderson. Refreshments were served.

CITY CHARTER HEARING

Legislative Committee Invite Quincy People

Quincy people who have long been anxious to tinker with the City Charter will be given an opportunity to air their views before the special recess committee of the legislature, who were appointed to investigate the subject of charters and laws for the government of cities, and providing a standard form of charter for cities both by commission and otherwise.

The hearing will be held next Thursday morning at 10.30 in room 429, State House, and an invitation is extended to all interested in the subject to attend.

It is understood that there is already a bill before the legislature seeking to amend the city charter of Quincy which has been referred to the next legislature. This petition provides, among other things, for a smaller city council, a two year term for the Mayor, etc.

Since this petition was presented, however, some new things have arisen chief of which is to so amend the city charter that in the event of a vacancy in the City Council it may be filled by the remaining members of the council and in case of a vacancy in the office of Mayor that it may be filled in the same manner, for the remainder of the term.

As the charter now stands a vacancy three months previous to December 1, means a special election and the expenditure of a large sum of money. Many cities of the commonwealth now have a provision for filling vacancies similar to that desired for Quincy. It is probable that the hearing will be well attended.

James L. MacDonald, assistant clerk at the district court, is enjoying his vacation. John A. Duggan is officiating in his absence.

FOUR KILLED BY STORM

New England Was Hard Hit by Thunder Storm

Great damage was done throughout New England by the storm of yesterday which was the worst thunder storm that this section of the country has experienced in years. Four New England people were killed and many injured, but fortunately Quincy escaped without personal injury. The rain which fell at spells during the morning hours continued until shortly after 2.30. Then the sky suddenly darkened and for a few minutes it was almost as dark as night. In business offices it was necessary to turn on the lights.

As the sky began to darken, people on the streets made haste to get under cover. People could be seen hurrying along at a rapid gate, and in a few minutes City Square was almost deserted. After a few minutes the sky began to lighten up somewhat and then the rain came down good and hard.

With the rain came the sound of distant thunder and flashes of lightning which came nearer and nearer until the storm seemed to be directly overhead. Then the roll of thunder gave one an idea of what the cannonading in the European war must sound like. Now and then some traveller would be seen hastening along under an umbrella while occasionally one would pass minus this covering. The rain ran in little rivers from his straw hat and he was about as wet as one could be. Evidently realizing that a little more water would not do any harm he did not seem to be hurrying much.

It continued to rain hard all the afternoon from this time, although the thunder and lightning storm seemed to have left for other places. Now and then a roll of thunder and flash of lightning at a distance.

During the early evening the storm seemed to lighten up but the rain continued to fall by spells until late in the evening. Sometime during the night the weather cleared and this morning the sun came out bright.

The wind had shifted with the change in the moon and a cool westerly breeze prevailed. The indications are that Sunday will be pleasant and a little warmer.

SLOW WORK ON NEW BRIDGE

Steel Structure for Granite Avenue Has Just Arrived

Work on the new bridge over the Neponset river on Granite avenue, which has been hung up all summer, has been resumed. The concrete butments were completed some months ago, but owing to the non arrival of the steel structure the work has been held up, and carriages and automobiles using the street have had to use the temporary wooden bridge, which is very narrow and crooked. Some of the steel reached Neponset Thursday night, and work putting it in place was immediately commenced. The arms of the bascule draw in the bridge have not arrived, but are expected on the next shipment. The bridge may be completed in three months. As the term of Mayor Miller, one of the commissioners having charge of the building of the new bridge, expires on January 1, great efforts will be made to have the bridge completed before that time. The only thing that will delay it will be the non arrival of the steel structure which has been ordered many months.

The public is invited to the field day exercises of the supervised playgrounds of the city, to be held next Thursday afternoon at 2.30 at the Merrymount Oval. A special invitation has also been extended to city officials and those who have contributed to the fund.

ONE KILLED TWO INJURED

Eric Konkers Falls Into the Mannex Quarry at West Quincy

Two Quarrymen Hit By Falling Stone

One man was killed and two others seriously injured this morning at the Mannix quarry, West Quincy. The man killed was Eric Konkers, aged 68 years of 25 McDonald street, and the injured men were Otto Johnson, aged 30 years, of 38 Arthur street and Emil Engstrom, aged 26 years of 36 Nelson street.

Konkers the man who was killed was a widower, and the other two men were single.

The three men sat on the side of the quarry about 125 feet from the top when a stone above them becoming loosened fell. All three jumped to get out of the way. The unfortunate man lost his balance and fell a distance of 45 feet to the bottom striking on his head. The other men were injured by flying debris.

Fellow workmen ran to the assistance of the injured men and a call was sent to Dr. Ash, who immediately responded. He found that Konkers was dead and that he was probably instantly killed, having suffered a number of contusions besides a fractured skull.

The injuries to the two other workmen were not as severe. Johnson received a number of lacerations of the scalp and Engstrom a number of lacerations on the head.

Surgical aid was rendered to the injured men by Dr. Ash after which they were taken to their homes.

The police ambulance was sum-

It takes the war correspondent about fourteen columns a day at space rates to tell what they don't know.

If the war hadn't come along the meat men would have found some equally good excuse for advancing prices.

It is certainly tough when the war prevents people from buying necessities of life like Paris gowns.

Never attempt to play bridge at a summer hotel with strangers, unless you are prepared to tell who has every four spot by the time three tricks have been played.

Many newspapers find that last year's cuts of American warships off Coney island make fine illustrations of the English and German battle-fleets.

Anyway while your small boy is laid up with green apple tsomach ache he isn't getting drowned in swimming.

Meat is going higher and higher, but it is hoped the consumer will be able to afford a piece of hamburg steak for Thanksgiving and Christmas.

The people of Europe are doing their best to attract tourists by making a new lot of ruins for them to visit in the future.

PEACE PROTECTION.

The world assures itself quite efficiently against disturbances of its peace and order on a small scale. If a man shouts and yells in front of your window, you can have him locked up for disorderly conduct. He may have done no injury whatever, except possibly to your feelings. But society recognizes that as an interference with the normal work of life, and stops it.

But here the whole world is upset by a quarrel over a few bushy mountains away off in far Servia. Everyone consequently has to pay a higher tax for flour, sugar, pork, beef, and a hundred other articles, while factories are shutting down and workers are idle all over the country.

It is a situation, on a far more ominous scale, somewhat like that of the anthracite coal strike of 1902. At that time the comfort and health of millions of people were attacked, and industry and labor stopped, by a purely private quarrel. There seemed to be no legal way to stop it. Finally public sentiment and the national government found a way to end it.

The European war likewise shows how the machinery of civilization has broken down and proved obsolete. The war will end in due time, but will the world have learned its lesson? No readjustment of boundaries, no payment of indemnities, can compensate for the infinite damage done to the whole world, by the destruction of commerce and the ordinary machinery of toil, industry, and business.

So while arrogant war lords and heroic soldiers are locked in this bestial tiger warfare, let it be hoped that the brains of the world is busy on some plan for preventing a recurrence of such a calamity. No warlike autocracy can long stand against the voice of its people. If the Old World must fight, let it do so, but let it never again interfere with the peaceful traffic of a neutral people, friendly to all the contending parties.

VOLPE CHIEF OF THE VATICAN

Strong Efforts to Keep Coming Conclave From Schism

BODY OF POPE IN ST. PETER'S

Late Pontiff Requested That Tradition Favoring Privileged Classes Be Broken That Poor Might Equally Share In Paying Last Respects—Feet Will Not Be Kissed

Rome, Aug. 22.—Cardinal Merry Del Val, papal secretary of state, delivered into the hands of Cardinal Della Volpe the whole machinery of the Catholic church, giving him at the same time a detailed report of all business. With Del Val retires all the other high officials and heads of departments at the holy see, whom the next pope may reappoint if he so desires.

The greatest efforts are being made by the cardinals here to prevent the coming conclave from presenting a spectacle of schism among the foreign cardinals on account of the war throughout Europe.

Humble in life, Pope Pius X. remains humble in death. His last thoughts were of the poor, and thousands passed before his bier paying final homage to the simple peasant who rose to the fisherman's throne.

The body of the late pontiff was removed from the Vatican throne room to the chapel of the Sacrament in St. Peter's. This is not in accordance with tradition and precedent, but it was the desire of the pope, expressed before his death. He said he did not wish his body to remain in state in the throne room for three days, as tradition required, for the exclusive visit of the privileged classes, nobility, diplomats and cardinals. It was his desire that his body should be exposed immediately in St. Peter's to the rich and poor alike.

The century old tradition that the feet of the late pope should extend outside the rail of the chapel of the Sacrament so that they may be kissed by the thousands paying final homage was also shattered. In conformity with the wishes of the late pontiff, those who will view the body within the next six days will not be permitted to kiss the feet.

With the transfer of the body from the Vatican to St. Peter's the real pomp and magnificence of the funeral ceremonies began. The humble relatives of the late pope paid their farewell visit in the throne room. They were led weeping from the chamber and preparations immediately made for the transfer of the body.

When the body of the pontiff was taken from the throne room to the chapel of the Sacrament it was attired in all the pontifical robes. The body was transferred by the penitenzieri in whose charge it has been since the moment of death, to the clergy of the apostolic chamber. It was then placed on a portable bier.

Preceded by members of the clergy carrying the cross and lighted torches, the funeral cortege was then formed. Following the bier came the papal guards, the prelates and cardinals of the papal court, the principal dignitaries of the church, all in the robes of their office, and finally members of the patriarchian families of Rome.

The procession proceeded from the throne room along the loggia of the Vatican and descended to the first floor, traversing the ducal room, then the royal room, and then descending by the royal stairs to the corridor that opens from the Vatican into the cathedral of St. Peter's.

There the procession moved to the chapel of the Sacrament, where solemn absolution took place and the body was arranged for public view.

Throughout the time during which the body remains in the chapel of the Sacrament solemn masses will be constantly celebrated by the cardinals who have already reached Rome.

Press dispatches from Rome announcing the death of the pope's sister Anna were untrue. The pope's sister is suffering from the shock of her brother's death.

FACTIONS RECONCILED

American Guns and Marines Bring Peace In Dominican Republic

Washington, Aug. 22.—Peace plans, supported by the guns of American warships and a regiment of marines, have been agreed upon by the warring factions in the Dominican republic.

News of the success of the special peace commission sent to the island by President Wilson came to the state department and to the Dominican legation, though no details of the agreement were announced.

"WATCHFUL WAITING WINS"

Bryan Sees Prosperity, Progress and Peace In Mexico

Washington, Aug. 22.—"The situation in Mexico is very favorable and you can quote me as saying, 'Watchful waiting wins,'" said Secretary Bryan. "The peaceful transfer of authority has taken place and we are hoping for an era of peace, progress and prosperity."

Bryan said the question of recognition of the Carranza government and withdrawal of the American forces at Vera Cruz had not yet been considered.

Official reports to the Washington government estimate the number of troops in command of General Villa in northern Mexico at no less than 40,000 men. The Washington government, it is understood, will not relax its efforts to prevent counter-revolution in northern Mexico.

INDICTMENTS LOOKED FOR

Vigorous Prosecution to Be Made Against Food Price Boosters

Washington, Aug. 22.—Indictments against food price boosters will be made within the next few days in the department of justice's probe, according to a statement from a high administration authority. The department's round-up has furnished conclusive evidence showing artificial inflation of prices.

It is intimated that the first food price indictments will probably be brought here, because the federal grand jury inquiry was begun first here and made further progress.

That Attorney General McReynolds will recommend a general grand jury inquisition in all large cities is regarded as certain to be the main feature of his report to the president.

SURVIVES TERRIBLE FALL

Aviator Drops a Thousand Feet Without Breaking a Bone

Mineola, N. Y., Aug. 22.—Albert Fileux, an aviator, fell 1000 feet in his monoplane to the Hempstead aviation field and escaped with his life. He was badly bruised and lacerated, but surgeons said he was suffering chiefly from shock and that they thought he would live.

Fileux fell while looping the loop. He had completed the circle and the nose of his aeroplane was pointed straight for earth preparatory to making a long glide, when his engine went dead. The machine fell like a plummet.

The hangar attendants who rushed out expecting to pick up his mangled body found him conscious and without broken bones.

TEACHERS WHO ARE ABROAD

F. A. Tupper and Others Marooned

Several letters and cables have been received from Miss Clarice B. Doble, who arrived in London, August 3. Her party was in Paris when war was declared, and experienced great difficulties and hardships in reaching England. They were without food; spent all night in the rain on the wharf at Dieppe waiting for a boat to take them across the channel; were charged an exorbitant price for their tickets, which used all their ready gold and silver, and found on arriving in London that their letters of credit were useless.

Fortunately at the St. Irmm's Hotel, where their rooms were engaged for a week later, they were able to find food and shelter.

August 17, a cable from Mr. Doble's London office informed him that they had located his daughter, that she was well, and had been supplied with funds.

Another cable was received on the 19th, stating that the party was sailing probably on the White Star liner Olympic, due in New York on the 28th of August.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Allison Tupper of Allston, formerly of Quincy are among the marooned travellers in England. Mr. Tupper was formerly master of Quincy High school and is now master of the Brighton High.

Florence R. Faxon a teacher in the Lawrence district, Boston, is also in England.

Miss Grace E. Lingham, a former Quincy teacher, is probably in England. She is a teacher at the Dorchester High school and went abroad early in July.

The Quincy list of European travellers includes:

GREAT SALT PRODUCTION.

The marketed production of salt in the United States, including Hawaii and Porto Rico, in 1913 reached the record-breaking total of 34,399,298 barrels of 280 pounds each, or 4,815,902 short tons. The value of the product was $10,123,139. These figures are the greatest yet recorded by the United States Geological Survey for the salt industry in the United States, and they represent an increase of 3 per cent in quantity produced and of nearly 8 per cent in value compared with 1912.

Salt occurs in two distinct ways—as rock salt in beds or associated with bedded or sedimentary rocks, and in solution, as in sea water or in brines or bitterns. A very large part of the salt production is derived by converting the natural rock salt into brine, which is then pumped to the surface and evaporated.

The two main methods of obtaining salt are the mining of rock salt and the evaporation of salt-bearing solutions. Rock salt is produced chiefly by deep shaft mining in the eastern central, and southern parts of the United States. Active mines are located in Livingston County, N. Y.; near Detroit, Mich.; in Ellsworth and Rice counties, Kans., and in Iberia Parish, southern Louisiana. A small production comes from surface deposits in the dry climates of Utah and California. In 1913 the marketed production of rock salt in the United States was 1,062,291 short tons, valued at $1,968,567.

The processes employed at the present time in the manufacture of salt by evaporation are solar evaporation, direct heat evaporation, steam evaporation, and vacuum pan evaporation. Salt is made by one or more of these processes in the great majority of the salt-producing States. California is unique among States in that the great bulk of the salt produced in that State comes from sea water being obtained by solar evaporation on San Francisco Bay, near Long Beach, and near San Diego.

Michigan ranked first among the salt-producing States in 1913 in both quantity and value of production, followed by New York, Ohio, and Kansas in the order named. Details regarding the salt industry in these and the other salt-producing States are given in a pamphlet on the salt and bromine industry in 1913 recently issued by the United States Geological Survey as a part of Mineral Resources of the United States. This report may be obtained free of charge by addressing the Director of the U. S. Geological Survey, Washington, D. C.

DRAINS CLOGGED.

The underground drain that takes care of the surface water at the corner of Hancock and Saville streets became clogged up Friday afternoon and the crossing at Saville street was covered with several inches of water. Commissioner Brown and Foreman Heaney got out a gang of street men who found it necessary to dig down to the drain on the east side of Hancock street where it passes into Faxon avenue. The gang worked until nearly 10 P. M. before the drain was cleared. It was found that a lot of leaves and other matter from the street had completely filled the drain and this had to be cleared before the surface water would drain off.

HAVE YOU HEARD ANY ONE SAY

That Quincy Has a Live Board of Trade

That President Hamilton is a live wire.

That Quincy needs more John L. Hamiltons.

That it will be difficult to fill his place.

That those outings among the local industries should be continued with a change of program each year.

That those who furnished automobiles should be heartily thanked.

That the Daily Ledger did something besides entertain.

That the special edition of the Daily Ledger on Wednesday was worth $1,000 to the city and the Board of Trade.

That the publisher will not be able to collect that sum this week.

That the so-called Merchants branch of the Board of Trade was missing on the day of the outing.

That the merchants should have the most interest in the industries of the city.

That they would have a better argument for home trade if they did not seek to get trade away from the merchants of Weymouth and Braintree.

That all departments of the city should make their purchases in Quincy when possible.

That this should be one of the planks of the Board of Trade.

That the Overseer of the Poor could make just as good trades in Quincy as in Boston, if he bought under similar conditions.

That Quincy markets will sell at wholesale.

That they will stand back of their goods.

That they might be induced to send samples for the Overseer.

That the Street department, the Fire department, the Police department, the Water department and the School department should buy more at home.

That Quincy merchants will not thank the Daily Ledger for saying so.

That local merchants often go out of town for their printing; some of them out of the State.

This this will not build up Quincy.

That many of the members of the Board of Trade do not practise home trade.

That they should buy meats, groceries, furniture, dry goods, etc., in Quincy.

SQUANTUM BY THE SEA.

At the regular meeting of the Squantum Women's club held at the home of Mrs. Helen McGowan, Orchard street it was voted to exchange the land on Huckins avenue which the members purchased a year ago for a clubhouse site for land on the corner of Pratt road and Dorchester street.

The club had found that there were restrictions upon the Huckins avenue land which prevented the building of any structure other than a dwelling house. In view of these conditions it was voted advisable to secure another location for a clubhouse.

Among the social activities of the club at hand is a supper to be given at the Squantum Inn by the ladies on Monday night. The affair is for the ladies of the club and their invited lady friends only. The dinner will be followed by whist. Mrs. James H. Foster is chairman of the committee.

Tickets are selling rapidly for the dinner and "get-to-gether" of the Squantum Improvement association to be held at the Squantum Inn on Tuesday night, August 25. It is sure that at least 100 men will sit down to the luncheon.

Home Made.

"My dear," said Mr. Wombat, "you look as fresh as a budding tree in your new spring dress." "The comparison is good," sneered Mrs. Wombat. "Like a tree, I had to make it myself."

IF you have been buying goods of a mail order house you doubtless think it has been to your advantage to do so. You have believed that you were saving money or were getting better goods. Let us see if this is true.

Have you tried to do business with your local merchant—your neighbor—on the terms that the mail order house exacts? No? Then suppose you try it.

Just go into the store, plank down your cash and tell what you want. You might even tell the merchant that you will wait a few days for the goods. See if your local merchant can't serve you better and as cheaply as the mail order house.

The local merchant usually extends credit for two, four or six months. The mail order house demands cash in advance. It uses your money as working capital. It loses nothing in interest, nothing in bad debts or on slow paying customers. Try this cash in advance plan on the local merchant—the man you know—and see if he can't make it to your advantage to Herbert Newton, a former resident of North Weymouth and now of Hershey, Penn., has been appointed postmaster at that place, at a salary of $2100 per year.

John Easton was in town Sunday, the guest of his father, Douglas Easton, who has recently returned from an extended trip through the West. "Jack" says he is thirty pounds heavier and he looks it.

The machine shop at the Bradley plant is working its men on half time, the men reporting for duty alternating weeks.

The tempest at 2 A. M. Thursday did some damage to the electric light wires at the Mildred cottage, Bicknell road, owned and occupied by John B. Keefe and family. The bolt which caused the trouble lighted every electric lamp in the house.

Chris Bailey reports a small catch of smelts off Bay View one day this week.

W. P. Hersey is assisting C. W. Dyer at his store.

Harry Caldwell, driver of H. R. Cushing's North Weymouth express, is reported ill with pneumonia.

Mrs. Bierly of Bridge street is recovering from her illness.

Theodore, son of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Alexander is very ill with rheumatic fever at their Nantasket cottage.

Maurice Cleary, Jr., has moved into his new home on Quincy avenue.

At the L. O. O. M. field day this afternoon there will be a ball game between the L. O. O. M. and the I. O. O. F.

G. A. R. hall was the scene of a covered dish party Thursday evening there being ten guests. Hot apple pie occupied several numbers on the menu. Another party will be held in September.

Miss Matilda M. Gioiosa, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Gioiosa of Dorchester and Carmine Garofalo, a well known East Weymouth lawyer, were married Thursday morning at the Sacred Heart church, Boston, by Father Gregori. The maid of honor was Theodora Amer of Dorchester, the best man Ernest A. Gioiosa, the bride's brother. A reception was held, more than 300 guests being present. The happy couple will spend their honeymoon at Lake Porlin, Maine, and on their return reside at 10 Shawmut street, the former Methodist parsonage, recently purchased by Mr. Garofalo.

W. R. C. SURPRISE.

Several members of the Reynolds W. R. C Glee Club, and other corps members, tendered Mrs. Mary Stoddard a genuine surprise at her home on Church street, Thursday. The party met at Sladen's store at the Heights about 10.30 and then went to Mrs. Stoddard's home a short distance away. The party carried basket lunches and P. P. Mrs. Mary E. Mahoney who had the affair in charge, had secured settees from the Old North chapel to accommodate the "fresh air" delegation. The day was enlivened by story-telling and musical selections by the Glee Club, also a pleasing demonstration of the tango. Several of the ladies had not seen the new steps danced, and one lady in particular was "perverted."

A slight token of the esteem in which Mrs. Stoddard is held was left as the reminder of a most enjoyable party. Previous to impaired health, Mrs. Stoddard, who is the widow of the late Henry Stoddard, a G. A. R. veteran, was prominent in W. R. C. circles. The guests were: Mrs. Mary E. Mahoney, Mrs. Margaret Culley, Corps president, Mrs. Agnes Baldwin, Mrs. McLaughlin, Mrs. Betsy Briggs, Mrs. Estelle Richards, Mrs. Emeline Vining, Mrs. Mary Cain, Mrs. Ida Keene, Mrs. Jennie Keene, Mrs. Deborah Hayden, Mrs. Ellen Kidder, Mrs. Marian Bailey, Miss Evelyn Bailey, Mrs. Jennie Blanchard.

German Army Reported Within Few Miles of Ostend

LONDON IS TERRIFIED OVER POSSIBILITIES

Belgian Summer Resort Unfortified, Could Be Easily Captured, and Would Give Germans Fine Port Within Striking Distance of British Coast—Invaders' Advance in Belgium Unchecked by Allied Forces—Namur, Key to French Boundary In Most Unprotected Section, Partially Invested and Seriously Threatened—France to Aid Defense

London, Aug. 22.—A telegram received here by the Daily Mail has struck terror into London.

The rumor that the wild riding German cavalry were withing a few miles of Ostend, sixty-three miles across the channel from Dover, spread like wildfire through the London streets.

The story is unconfirmed, but it is thought here that it may be possible. The cavalry may easily have swept westward north of Brussels a day or two ago, leaving the occupation of the capital to a stronger body. They would have met with little resistance, as they could have avoided Ghent, Bruges and other large cities.

Credence is given the story by the statement that the English consul at Ostend has advised all English visitors to leave the famous summer resort and that the majority were herded on board the night boat to Folkstone.

Invaders' Position Unknown

No definite information as to the exact whereabouts of the invaders can be obtained. They may be twenty or even thirty miles east of Ostend, but a few miles will make no differences in their plans, as Ostend is neither fortified nor capable of being fortified on such short notice.

It could be captured by a small force and Germany would possess a fine port within striking distance of the British coast. It will be of no avail to them unless they can possess themselves of the sea as a starting place for dirigible raids.

The most alarming account of the German progress is contained in the dispatches of the Daily Mail. It states that 50,000 Germans are already in Ghent, that Malines may have fallen and that through northern and western Belgium the German cavalry and infantry are swarming like ants on the march.

Apparently all Belgium is in a colossal confusion, with the allies all at sea over the plans of the German advance.

Army Not at Antwerp

Contrary to the stories told in the telegrams received here yesterday afternoon, it is now said that the Belgian army has not yet sought refuge behind the great walls of Antwerp, but that the great majority are either battling beside the French in the forts at Namur, which has now been invested by the Germans, or are in the open fields near Malines, taking the aggressive to strike a savage counter attack upon the westward driving forces of the kaiser.

If the Germans are in reality making this frantic dash in full strength toward the English channel, the success or the failure will be catastrophic.

They are leaving their flanks exposed to the great fortresses of Antwerp and Namur and are hourly getting miles and miles further from their base at Aix-la-Chapelle, with a tremendous extent of hostile country behind them.

Not Aimed at England

The attack is hardly to be presumed as against England, although the movement will naturally, if Ostend is seized, cause many of the British battleships to be detached from the North sea and brought into the channel. This will enable Germany to risk a great naval battle without such tremendous odds against it as now prevail.

But it will probably be against France that the assault will be directed. It will come upon a section of French territory unprovided with great fortifications, for Lille is the most northern of the chain of forts that guard the frontier. Between Lille and Dunkirk, on the French coast, lies a stretch of territory thirty miles in length that is practically unprovided with forts of even second rank.

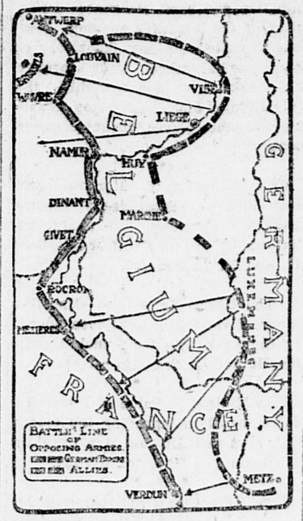

Battle at Namur

The most destructive guns that have ever been used in warfare are now thundering about Namur. The second stronghold of Belgium on the river Meuse has been partially invested. The artillery duel that heralds future hand-to-hand fighting, as desperate and as horrible as that which a few days ago was surging about Liege, has already begun.

But the contest for the possession of Namur, the key to the French boundary in its most unprotected section, will probably mean a greater loss of life than the siege of Liege.

LOCATION OF TROOPS.

Map Showing How Opposing Forces Are Arrayed Outside Brussels.

The broke ground, rising into hills upon which the bomb-proof, steel and concrete forts have been placed, makes Namur a more impregnable stronghold than Liege.

The defenders, too, have had the inestimable advantage of nearly three weeks to prepare for the assault. Miles of barbed wire have been strung about the forts, the ground has been mined in every spot where a charge could threaten and additional great guns have been lifted into position.

Moreover, the Belgians are not alone at Namur, for French soldiers by thousands have been streaming into the quaint town and taking their positions in the nine forts that guard it against the German advance.

Severe and Incessant Fighting

A French military expert believes that 2,500,000 men are engaged in the greatest conflict history has ever known. Although little real news has been received for several days, it now appears that there must have been severe and almost incessant fighting during that time, though probably he main armies were not engaged.

Long lists of wounded, which are posted at Berlin, show that the rigid censorship has concealed effectively news of bloody if not especially important battles.

News leaks are being carefully guarded by all the combatants. It was announced that all war correspondents found in Belgium will be shot.

A war tax of $40,000,000 has been levied on the city of Brussels by the German general.

When the main German army has reached the French border, the only important fortified places to confront it on the way to Paris, assuming that it will move along a direct route from Brussels, are Rheims and Laon.

France Is Unprotected

It will hardly be necessary for the German troops to take both these fortified cities, for they are on different routes from Brussels. In general, France is comparatively unprotected from an assault such as the German army evidently plans to make.

In such a condition, the battle now thought to be under way will be momentous. The Belgian army may now be left out of the calculations so far as the German main advance is concerned, for the Belgians appear to be cornered. They will, however, keep busy a fairly large German force—possibly 100,000 men—to protect the main German army from a flank attack, or an assault on lines of communication.

Antwerp is practically conceded to be impregnable, and the Germans probably will not seek to take it. They cannot even hope to conduct a successful siege, for French and English warships can come up the Scheldt with supplies for the defenders. The country about Antwerp, moreover, can be flooded to a depth of three or four feet, so that infantry advance can be prevented.

RETREAT OF FRENCH

War Office Says Strength of Enemy Made Remaining Imprudent

An official French war office bulletin says:

"As already announced, after reconquering the frontier our troops advanced into Lorraine along a front extending from the Donan mountain to Chateau Salins. They drove the Germans back into the valley of the Seille river and the marshy district, and our advance guards reached Delme, Dieuze and Morehange.

"Thursday several German army corps made a vigorous counter attack and our advance guards fell back. The fight was extremely fierce on both sides, and in view of the greatly superior numbers of the Germans, our troops, who had been fighting continuously for six days, retreated.

"Our left covers the advanced works of Nancy and our right is firmly established in the Donon hills. The great strength of our enemy made our remaining in Lorraine useless and imprudent.

"Details received show that the reoccupation of Mulhausen was a great success. The offensive, first along the line from Thann to Dannemarie and then on to Mulhausen, was carried out with rare dash. By a bold stroke General Pau, once he was master at Thann and Dannemarie, directed the troops west of Mulhausen, giving the enemy an opportunity to engage him between our lines and the Swiss frontier, and then by a second move the Germans were thrown back on Mulhausen."

ROUGH RIDERS FOR FRANCE

Services of Anglo-American Volunteer Company Are Accepted

The French ministry of war has definitely accepted the services of the Anglo-American Rough Rider corps formed in Paris. The men will act as scouts and interpreters, for which latter service they are particularly well qualified, as most of them speak four and some even seven languages, it is announced.

All have seen active service and are expert horsemen. They will provide their own uniforms and mounts, but a fund for their maintenance in the field has been raised publicly. Five automobiles have been given the corps. One of the machines is fully fitted as a hospital and will carry surgeons and nurses.

POSITIONS ARE REVERSED

Paris Editor Fighting Under Command of His Office Boy

The French newspapers were hard hit by the general mobilization orders, which took in all men between the ages of 18 to 48.

Rene Biere, managing editor of Excelsior, one of the biggest of the Paris dailies, was called to the colors. He went as a prvate soldier. The porter on Biere's paper also went, but as adjutant.

They were assigned to the same company. The editor is now fighting under the command of his office boy.

FOUNDATION WALL FALLS

Two Men Killed and Others Fatally Injured While at Work

Boston, Aug. 22.—John Barrett and Antonio Faltoni were killed, four others were probably fatally injured, and several were hurt slightly by the collapse of a stone foundation wall and steel flooring girders of a new block of stores in process of construction on Harvard avenue, Allston.

All of the dead and injured were digging out the cellar just inside the section of the wall that fell. The bodies were mangled and crushed by the rocks and steel.

James F. Pigeon, a foreman for Nathan Hurwitz, contractor, was arrested on a charge of manslaughter in connection with the death of the two men.

Storm Kills Eight Persons

Philadelphia, Aug. 22.—Eight persons were killed and property damage not yet estimated was caused by an electrical and wind storm in eastern Pennsylvania.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES

An involuntary bankruptcy petition has been filed against the Boston Condensed Milk company.

President Benavides of Peru refused to accept the resignation of the cabinet which has been tendered to him.

Rodney Barnaby, a watchman, committed suicide by inhaling illuminating gas at his home at Malden, Mass.

Robert S. Irvine, 32, was killed by a fall from a freight train at Concord, N. H.

An entire block at Abingden, Va., was destroyed by fire, entailing a loss estimated at $150,000 or more.

The Bowes Street House

How It Came by Its Repairs

By LENORE E. CHANEY

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

While Gilder bent eagerly over the quarterly report his agent sat back and watched him uneasily.

He was a big man—this agent—faultlessly dressed and bearing an air of ease and conscious well being very soothing to the senses. Faultless, too, was his manner toward his superiors—suave, deferent, but not too deferent.

Ah, that is a very great thing—to acquire a manner like that. If Gilder smiled, Burson radiated pleasure; if Gilder frowned, Burson breathed a deprecating regret, and yet he never roused the savage desire to kick that a more suppliant and cringing servant might have done.

For Burson respected himself, in a very modest and unobtrusive way, and thus begat respect in his betters. But for all that he often experienced troublesome days, and one glance at Mr. Gilder's lean face had conveyed clearly to Burson that this was going to be one of the most troublesome of them all.

"Ahem!" Gilder shut his spectacle case with a snap and glared at his agent. "I see profits far below normal again, sir. I notice in the Bowes street house alone the bill for plumbing is over $300 for the past year."

"I have been wanting to speak to you about the Bowes street place," began Burson, extracting a letter from the file at his elbow. "You see, Mr. Gilder, the Bowes street plumbing is in pretty bad condition; there's been quite a little agitation recently in some of the papers about an epidemic of typhoid down there, and this morning I got this letter from the head of the social settlement in the district."

"Lot of nonsense," was Gilder's only comment as he tossed the letter down half read.

"But you see they threaten a health board investigation."

"You ought to know as well as anybody, Burson, how little we have to fear from the board of health."

"Yes, I know they have been very kind."

"The point is what are you going to do to bring up this credit balance? At the present rate of decline another year or two may see the balance on the other side altogether," said Gilder.

Burson faced himself for a battle, though his manner was as suave, as gracious as ever.

"I am sorry to say, Mr. Gilder, that I can't see any way of stopping the leak unless you are prepared to spend a lump sum on new plumbing. In the Bowes street place alone a thousand dollars ought to be spent immediately. A great many of the tenements remain empty simply because they are not habitable, even for the sort of people who live in that section. We cannot reduce the rents without establishing a very bad precedent, and of course I could not put in any very extensive repairs without consulting you."

"Extensive repairs," ejaculated Gilder, now thoroughly aroused. "For heaven's sake, Burson, one would imagine you were letting on Fifth avenue instead of slum tenements! You are dealing with a class that has no business to expect luxuries. It's scum—plain scum, demanding new and up to date plumbing in its dens."

"Of course what you say is true," agreed Burson, "but times are changing everywhere, and I can assure you, sir, the people in the tenements now are not the sort we had there ten years ago. It grows increasingly difficult to deal with them, and in this Bowes street house especially we've had no end of trouble.

"One of my men was pitched down the steps only last week by a burly giant who declared he wouldn't pay his rent until the leak from the floor above was stopped. Of course we set him out, but it's had a very bad effect on the others, especially as the typhoid is very bad in the house, and the settlement workers have led them to believe it's entirely due to the pipes."

"More likely it's due to their own dirt and filth!" snapped Gilder, pacing wrathfully up and down. "But I look to you, Burson, to straighten this out. That's what I pay you for, and I expect you to do it."

"I have been doing my best. I intend to go down there myself this afternoon and look the house over. I am having a plumber meet me there to submit estimates."

At the word "estimates" a sudden gleam of suspicion lit in Gilder's eyes. "Estimates—graft! Aha!"

"I think I'll just go down with you, Burson, and we'll look it over together."

Burson's dismay was evident.

"Oh, Mr. Gilder, I'm sure you wouldn't like that! You've no idea how filthy and vile the streets and people are down there. It wouldn't do at all to go in your car, in the present state of things, and I'm sure you wouldn't relish the ride on the street cars."

This served, of course, to fix the idea only the more firmly in Mr. Gilder's mind. He would certainly go; of that Burson might be certain.

Once having made the resolution he forged calmly ahead, but before he had traversed half the distance from the street car to the entrance of the Bowes street house he had begun to realize some of the difficulties of which Burson had spoken. For one thing it was hot—the middle of September—and the smells were almost overpowering.

Hawkers with cans of lukewarm water, in which floated half cooked ears of green corn, others with slices of watermelon cut in the early morning and now covered with filth and flies, were everywhere in the dusty streets.

Added to these were the roar of the not distant elevated, the screaming of innumerable babies and the shrill whistles of gangs of street gamins, making a very inferno of dirt and confusion. Gilder was glad to turn into the comparative quiet of the Bowes street house.

Once inside, Burson took the lead and began at once the tour of inspection. The house had been designed for a far better class of tenant than now found a haven within its walls. It had originally two suits of apartments of five rooms each on either side of the narrow hall which bisected the house. But long ago these five rooms had been divided so that now they formed three suits each—two of two rooms and a single room.

The single rooms, dirty and dark as they were, found ready occupancy, for the rent was but half that of the two roomed suits. But, while nearly all of the single rooms were tenanted, many of the two room suits were empty. Gilder's reduced dividends were explained.

They were making the last rounds on the top floor when they heard a voice far below hailing Mr. Burson. The strength and assurance of it spoke eloquently of a full dinner pail.

"Ah, that must be Manders, the plumber!" exclaimed Burson, hastening toward the dark and rickety stairway. "Pardon me one moment, Mr. Gilder. I'll bring him right up."

Left to himself, Gilder started slowly toward the narrow window at the far end of the hall. Suddenly a door was flung open halfway down the hall, and the anxious face of one of the amateur nurses from the settlement peered out. At sight of Gilder her face cleared and she sprang forward.

"Oh, sir, I am so glad to see you! My patient is very sick—typhoid. I must have help. The doctor is somewhere in the building, probably with Casey's little girl on the first floor. Bring him as quick as you can." Then as she realized the blank look on Gilder's face anxiety again puckered her smooth brow.

"Oh, you don't think you can find him? What shall I do? I must—I know! You stay here—keep very quiet—he's delirous and won't notice the change. Don't excite him whatever you do!" and before Gilder could voice his protest she had pushed him through the door and sped down the hall.

Nauseated and highly indignant, Gilder looked about him.

The work of the volunteers from the settlement was apparent here, for the room was far cleaner than any Gilder had seen in the house. The patient lay on one of the settlement hospital cots, which with a deal table and one chair formed the only furniture in the room.

Gilder was a stranger to sickrooms, and a vagrant curiosity stirred him as his glance rested on the form of the sick man. In the dim light his features were barely distinguishable—his thin frame twitched restlessly under the light sheet.

Gilder half turned to go when suddenly the man sat bolt upright and stretched out his arms in the piteous appeal of childhood.

"Daddy—daddy!" he wailed. "Take me up, daddy; I am tired of my bed."

An onlooker might have seen a curious change in Mr. Gilder during this scene. At the first word from the sick man's lips he had stopped, one foot extended toward the door.

The trembling of his form grew until it was like a palsy, and the muscles of his throat moved convulsively up and down. Little beads of perspiration that were not caused by the heat stood out upon his forehead—a great pounding was in his ears. Then he turned.

"Danny—Danny!" the whisper sounded loud and rasping in the little room. "Danny—it can't be you, Danny, boy—it can't be you! It's been a long time—you've changed, Danny. But your voice—it's just the same—just the same!"

When the nurse and doctor hurried into the room a few moments later a strange sight met their eyes. Mr. Gilder, the great Mr. Gilder, whose wealth and eccentricities furnished so much copy for the Sunday supplements, was on his knees by the side of the tenement typhoid patient, and the face he turned toward them was tear stained and very old.

"Doctor—my son—he is very ill. My son—do you hear? The son of Baldwin Gilder. You must work hard—spare no expense—see how he clings to me—my poor Danny, come back to me like this! You think he will live—oh, I'm so glad—so glad!"

Some time later Burson, with his plumber in tow, appeared at the doorway, properly shocked at sight of his aristocratic patron in the midst of such surroundings, but his surprise gave place to wonder at Mr. Gilder's first words—the voice was so strangely gentle.

"Ah, Burson, I cannot go with you now. I have more important matters here. I have found my son—yes, my son—lost these ten years. I shall not leave him—he needs me. You will have to look after the plumbing yourself. And Burson—we will put new pipes throughout the house—whatever is necessary for comfort and health. Never mind the expense. You see, Burson—my son is a tenant—that is, he was a tenant—in the Bowes street house."

LIGHTWEIGHT WRAP.

Modish Little Coats of Silk Are Suggested For Fall Needs.

TAFFETA WRAP.

A lightweight wrap is useful for fall. The one pictured here is an attractive coat of black pussy willow taffeta for afternoon or evening use. An accordion plaited flounce of the taffeta trims the lower part of the coat. A high flaring collar of velvet with deep silk revers is used. The flare of the cuffs is accomplished by the use of shirring and pipings.

ELECTRICAL NOVELTIES.

Many Conveniences For the Bachelor Man or Maid's Room.

Electrical devices of various sorts are a boon to the bachelor man or woman. A little electric water heater—simply a metal rod that is thrust into water to make it boil—is a convenience for the man that wants shaving water in out of the way places, as well as for the woman who always uses hot water for washing the face.

An electric iron is equally convenient, and one is sold that folds into a compact little case.

The most interesting convenience of all, however, is a combination device which consists of an electric iron that, turned upside down, is a stove.

The case in which the iron is carried becomes a pan in which water can be heated. There is a hole in one end of the iron in which a curling iron can be thrust to heat.

COOKERY SCHOOLS.

Not Such Modern Institutions as Some People Imagine.

Schools of cookery are not modern institutions, as most people appear to think, for they existed in Queen Anne's reign.

Then a clever girl's accomplishments consisted in knowing how to make possets, caudles, surfeit waters, pastry, sweetmeats and sauces. All housewifery gifts were thoroughly appreciated.

Here is a cookery school advertisement which appeared in a periodical published in London in 1713: "To all young ladies at Edw. Kidder's Pastry School in Lincoln's Inn Fields are taught all sorts of pastry and cookery, Dutch hollow work, and Butter works on Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays in the afternoon."

Saddlebag Purse.

A novelty in a purse to carry with light dresses is a style known as the saddlebag. This is very attractive and is made up in many colors.

One is of tan faille ribbon, with the two bags snapped together, having on one side a small mirror and a place for powder and on the other a place for change. The bottom of the bag is trimmed by a silk tassel. A short handle is of the faille ribbon.

SALAD COMBINATIONS.

Here are some good salad combinations:

Lettuce, tomatoes cut in halves, sprinkled with powdered tarragon and parsley or chives.

Lettuce and peppergrass.

Lettuce, shredded pimentos, sliced pecan meats or almonds.

Lettuce, tomatoes stuffed with peas or string beans and chopped chives.

Lettuce, asparagus tips and sliced radishes.

Lettuce, shredded tomatoes and shredded green peppers.

Shredded lettuce, English walnuts and almonds.

Lettuce, Neufchatel cheese in slices and shredded pimentos.

Shredded cabbage and shredded green peppers.

Watercress, diced boiled beets and olives in center.

Beets stuffed with cucumber and dressing or celery.

Tomatoes stuffed with veal or tongue, peas, gherkins and olives.

Inflammatory.

At a dinner of firemen recently the following sentiment was proposed: "The Ladies! Their eyes kindle the only flame which we cannot extinguish, and against which there is no insurance."

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

JAPAN'S CLASH WITH GERMANY

Mikado Prepared to Strike When Ultimatum Expires

DIFFICULT TASK IS REALIZED

Kaiser's Forts In China Strongly Equipped and Will Offer Strenuous Resistance—Japanese Government Expresses Friendship For United States—No Designs on Samoa

Tokio, Aug. 22.—Japan is ready to strike Germany. Only a complete backdown by the kaiser can prevent hostilities at Kiau Chau. The ultimatum expires tomorrow. That Germany will consent to turn her territory over to Japan, or even to China, and to dismantle her warships in the Orient is considered very unlikely.

So certain are the Japanese officials that the decision at Berlin will be for war that a fleet is already waiting near the Shantung peninsula for wireless orders. Troops are also on transports, but the government prohibits any information as to their location or their number.

Japanese officials believe the German warships in the east will attempt to do as much damage as possible to the Japanese fleet at long range while remaining under the protection of the German land forts as much as possible.

There is no disposition on the part of the Japanese officials to minimize the task ahead. The Kiau Chau forts are modern and they are equipped with magnificent artillery, the latest product of the big Krupp factories. Foreseeing the war and the possible Japanese complications, the Germans have laid in a good supply of ammunition and have foodstuffs enough to withstand a protracted siege.

Every effort is being made to impress upon the Japanese people the admiration and respect the government has for the United States. The faction which in the past has bitterly opposed the United States and demanded that Japan assume an aggressive policy on the California anti-alien land laws has been completely squelched.

By direct orders of the foreign office the Japanese newspapers whose policies are dictated by the government give particular prominence to the fact that the United States has been asked to act for Japan in Berlin in the event of hostilities.

Denials from both Premier Okuma and Foreign Minister Kato that Japan has any idea of territorial aggression in Samoa are prominently displayed.

The suggestion cabled from the United States that Japan wanted German Samoa because of its strategic location when the Panama canal was considered has been attacked directly by the premier.

He insisted in an authorized interview that the only reason for Japanese interference in the struggle now occupying Europe's attention was to insure that the commerce of the Orient would not be interfered with. And the premier insisted that Japan had no intention of retaining Germany's leased terrrtory, but planned to restore it to China.

WILL KEEP HANDS OFF

United States Not Likely to Interfere In the Far East

Washington, Aug. 22.—The United States will keep hands off the far eastern situation, according to authoritative information from high administration sources.

While receipt of a note from China, asking the United States to act as trustee of Kiau Chau, was officially disclaimed by the administration, it was apparent that the administration knows of China's desires in this matter and that it intends to remain aloof, unless there is a general request for such action and one which could not possibly be misinterpreted by any of the warring nations.

While it is not believed that President Wilson will authorize a flat rejection of the Chinese proposal, it is understood that he will set conditions which are hardly likely to be met. It is thought that if he consents to consider the proposition at all it will be necessary for Japan, Germany and China to agree in writing to the proposed plan of avoiding hostilities between Japan and Germany in the Far East.

The belief is strong here that Japan would under no circumstances agree to the suggestion even if Germany were disposed to surrender her valuable base without a fight.

Heavy Earthquake In Italy

Rome, Aug. 22.—A strong earthquake shock was felt at Como and caused great alarm. The inmates of the San Donnino prison had a bad scare, as they believed that the ancient building might collapse.

War Risk Measure Passed

Washington, Aug. 22.—The senate passed the emergency war risk insurance bill carrying an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the purpose of insuring American vessels and cargoes against the hazards of war.

A lawn party scheduled for last evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Arnold, 244 Middle street was transferred because of the rain, to the interior of the house and all present had a jolly time.

Mrs. Grace R. Cottrell of 30 Thayer place has let the lower tenement of her house to Mr. and Mrs. Harold Keith and family formerly of Wollaston.

Mrs. A. A. Cook of Mt. Vernon avenue and Mrs. N. E. Hayden of Pond street attended the outing of the Past President's Association, which was held at Nantasket on Wednesday.

Dudley P. Howland of Central street while on a Boston bound train yesterday on his way to work suffered a sudden attack of appendicitis. He was taken home and attended by Dr. C. A. Sullivan.

The members of Antietam Camp, Sons of Veterans, will hold their next meeting in the G. A. R. rooms in the town hall, Tuesday evening, Aug. 25. There will be only one meeting in September which will be held the fourth Tuesday in the month.

At the union service at Baptist church, the pulpit will be supplied on Aug. 23 by Rev. Allen H. Bissell of Hingham and on Aug. 30 by Rev. F. Lewis Brooks of Fall River.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry E. Reynolds of Monatiquot avenue and Mr. and Mrs. Maurice P. Spillane of Elm street, Quincy, left last Saturday for a two weeks' auto trip to Canada.

Rev. Mr. McGee, assistant professor at East Greenwich Academy, Rhode Island, and a former pastor of the East Braintree Methodist Episcopal church was visiting in town this week

Word received from midshipman Emerson states that he expects to disembark the twenty-seventh of this month and hopes to be at his home in East Braintree by the thirtieth.

Warren Clapp of Commercial street, Ellsworth Abercrombie of Braintree and Aaron Hobart of Quincy left Haines Landing on Mooselookmeguntic lake, one of the Rangeleys, the early part of this week with two guides on a tramping and canoeing expedition. The boys will probably be gone two weeks.

At the meeting of Corps 94 W. R. C. Monday evening, Mrs. Litchfield invited the members to hold a picnic at her cottage at Houghs Neck on Wednesday, Aug. 26. They will leave South Braintree square on the 9.15 electric. If stormy the picnic will be held the next fair day.

Last Saturday afternoon the Braintree Athletic Association defeated the Boston Gear Works team by the score of 4 to 3. The same afternoon, the Braintree White Sox applied the whitewash brush to the Porter A. A. team of Weymouth, the score standing 3 to 0. Today the Sox will play the Samecs of Dorchester on French's common at 3.30 o'clock.

An enjoyable lawn party under the auspices of the ways and means committee of Sons of Veterans Auxiliary No. 16 was held on the grounds of Mrs. Catherine Holbrook of Union street Wednesday evening. The grounds were decorated with Chinese lanterns and dancing was enjoyed on a large dance board installed for the occasion. Refreshments of ice cream, tonics, candy, peanuts, etc. were on sale.

The many friends of Ellis F. Dyer of Thayer avenue will be interested to know that he has a splendid position with the Torpedo Lake Company of Bridgeport, Conn. Later his wife and children may join him there. Friends and neighbors will be extremely sorry to lose Mr. Dyer and his family but congratulate him on his progress and hope for his continued success.

Members of Queen Esther Circle of the South M. E. church, Mrs. C. H. Arnold's Sunday school class, were guests of Miss Janice G. Gammons, at the summer home of her parents, Hampton Hill, Nantasket on Thursday last. Those in the party included: Miss Elsie Hathaway; Miss Helen Fox, Miss Agnes Messerii, Miss Mabel Tobey, Miss Edna Rand, and Miss Helen Clark. The party enjoyed observing the parade of veteran firemen, a visit to Paragon Park, and a delightful luncheon on the piazza of the pretty home of the hostess.

orders of Mr. Green. I thought, said Mrs. Vaughn, since he sent them to me it was his place to mention them.

Q.—Did Mr. Green speak about inmates having meat for supper?

A.—No, sir.

Mrs. Vaughn said there could have been no cheese box in the load of wood because three pounds of cheese was the total purchase.

In cross examination Mr. Pinkham produced a bill showing a charge for six and one half pounds of cheese Mrs. Vaughn admitted although previously to the producing of the bill she was positive about the three pounds.

Mr. Vaughn took the stand, and in answer to his counsels questions made monosyllabic replies.

Q.—Did Green ever talk with you about the letter of instruction?

A.—No.

By Mr. Pinkham. Did you ever speak to him about it?

A.—No.

By Judge Avery. Did you ever read it yourself?

A.—Yes.

Q.—About the time it was received?

A.—Yes.

By Mr. Pinkham. The letter you read was the letter this morning you said you never received?

Mr. Vaughn started a long explanation but he was dismissed from the stand and on his way to his seat he stood beside Mr. Pinkham and started explaning again how became confused when asked about the letter at the morning session.

Arguments will be heard Sept. 9.

HOUGHS NECK.

The poor weather the past week interfered with the program at Houghs Neck, and resulted in a decrease in the number of visitors. Several moonlight sails were postponed on account of the storms which were unusually heavy. No lightning damage was reported.

Six girls and a chaperon from Worcester returned this week after a pleasant months stay at a cottage on Turner street. The party included Mrs. Stella Quinn and daughter Claire the Misses Anna and Alice Lee, Grace and Florence McGuinness, Florence Joyce and Agnes Palmer.

Thomas Connors and Timothy Connolly of Brighton who have been staying at the Pasadena cottage on Charles street have returned to their homes. John Wilson of Boston was also a guest at the Pasadena cottage.

Miss Georgis Rouleau of West Quincy is the two weeks guest of Mrs. J. Grundy of Charles street.

Capt. Howley of the Cambridge fire department and family are at the beach for the rest of the season.

John Orenburg of Dorchester and family have taken the Gracious cottage on Charles street.

Miss Gertrude Weeks of Dorchester is summering with Mrs. J. Sullivan of Charles street.

RUNAWAY HORSE.

A horse attached to a wagon of the Electric Express Company created considerable excitement in South Braintree square Thursday afternoon about 12.30 o'clock. A feed pail dropping from the animal's nose started the trouble with its clatter and when the driver attempted to adjust the bridle a strap slipped over the horse's eyes and blinded him for a moment. The horse ran up Washington street and when near the Pond school he swerved dragging the outfit through the fence, of which about ten or fifteen feet was demolished. After careering about the school yard the horse started for Tremont street but the gateway in the fence was too narrow and wrenching himself free from the wagon he ran up Tremont street and was soon captured. Neither horse nor wagon were much the worse for the run and nobody was hurt.

AMERICANS OVER SEA DESPERATE

First Refugees From the War Zones Describe Situation.

FRANTIC TO QUIT EUROPE.

Jewelry Their Only Usable Asset and Forced to Sacrifice That—Wealthy Men Sleep on Decks of Homeward Bound American Liner Beside the Penniless—Class Lines Eliminated.

According to statements of Americans who returned to their own country from abroad on the American Line steamer Philadelphia, Europe is a veritable madhouse of Americans wildly anxious to come home and unable to get in communication with their relatives and friends. Thousands were anxious to embark on board the Philadelphia from Southampton, who of necessity had to be turned away because of lack of room and not because they were out of funds.

In Paris thousands of Americans, the passengers said, were mad with a desire to get out of the country. In Germany, Hungary and other countries on the continent they were literally ordered out of the country for the simple reason that there was no place for them to stay, and there was no market for their checks, express orders or other assets except jewelry, and in not a few cases Americans sold jewelry for mere pittances to be able to get to a point of embarkation.

The Philadelphia was the first passenger steamship to reach these shores after leaving the other side since the outbreak of hostilities on the European continent. She carried 1,000 men, women and children.

An Incongruous Situation.

There were men of millions and persons of most modest means who had slept side by side on the journey over—voyagers with balances of tens of thousands of dollars in banks and not a cent in their pockets, men able and eager to pay any price for the best accommodations to be had, yet satisfied and happy sharing steerage bunks.

There were women who had lost all their baggage and had come alone, their friends and relatives being unable to get accommodations on board the vessel. There were children who had come on board with their mothers, with neither money nor reservations, who were happy because they had received the very best treatment from all the steamship's officers and crew and because they had enjoyed the most comfortable quarters to be had, surrendered by men who were content to sleep in most humble surroundings or if necessary, as happened in a few cases, to sleep on the decks when the weather permitted.

Wealthy, but without funds, many of the passengers offered jewelry to the stewards and other employees of the steamship as the tips which they assumed were expected even in times of stress. Those who took them did so apologetically. Some of them said they were content to take only the thanks of the passengers. One woman of wealth and social position, without money and having lost her check book with her other baggage, gave a pair of valuable bracelets to her steward, with the request that he give them to his wife. She gave a hat—the only one she managed to take with her on her flight from Switzerland—to her stewardess.

Class Lines Forgotten.

Some of the men of wealth who had staterooms and deck rooms, for which they paid large sums, gladly shared them with persons who had been unable to get accommodations.

A great many men, who never before had traveled without having the very best a vessel could provide, turned their rooms over to the women and children and went down to the steerage room to make the best of it.

The situation was unprecedented, at least in recent years. There was no exclusiveness. There was no aloofness. There were no classes.

There were many who had been fairly hurled across the continent. They had been practically thrown out of hotels. They had been shunted from place to place, sometimes by courteous gendarmes, more often by stern soldiers. They had been in many instances told to leave hotels immediately, because the proprietor and employees had "gone to the front."

Scores of those on the Philadelphia had made the voyage without even a change of clothes. Many had borrowed garments, including night clothes, from fellow passengers who had been able to get their trunks on the seaboard. By far the larger number of the passengers, however, had got their valises and suit cases to the vessel. Those who had traveled with trunks were less fortunate.

Building Business

Recently, a large store of very honored name became insolvent and passed into the hands of a new owner—an energetic young man.

Little was left to the business but the good name. There were strong stores all around it.

The first thing this merchant did was to emphasize in his advertising that he kept well-known, popular, advertised articles—mentioning those advertised in the local newspapers by the manufacturers.

He did not advertise them at a cut price. He merely let it be known that he carried them and would give good service.

That was a few months ago. . .Already the business has started to revive to an extent that competitors are sitting up and taking notice.

This man makes it a rule to mention every day in his advertising the name of some well-known, branded article that he carries—a name that stands for character in the mind of the public.

AUTO WITH SEVEN LEAPS OFF BRIDGE

Girl of Eight Years Drowned But All the Others Are Promptly Rescued

Drowned Girl Was Not Found Until the Next Day

Caught in a mooring rope of a yacht in Fresh river, almost two miles from the scene of the accident, the body of eight-year-old Leona Snyder of Dorchester, was found on Sunday by Walter E. Hawkesworth of 1050 Commercial street, and Harry Warner of 1102 Commercial street, East Weymouth.

They secured the body to the rope and telephoned the Weymouth police. When it was brought ashore the parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry S. Snyder were on the shore. Both were overcome with grief.

Two other children who were rescued, Elsie, six years old, and Jeanette, one year old, are at the Quincy City Hospital Elsie may be able to leave within a day or two, but the baby is in serious condition, suffering from shock and exposure.

Miss Ida Livingston of Bay City, Michigan, who was also in the auto is still at the Quincy hospital although in good condition.

The accident happened just before 7 o'clock Saturday evening when the auto of Henry S. Snyder of Dorchester became unmanageable on new Back river bridge between Weymouth and Hingham and plunged into the river with the seven occupants named above All were rescued except the eldest daughter Leona, who was missing all night.

After crashing through about 15 feet of the fence the car flopped off into the water 20 feet below amid the shrieks of the frightened women and children. The party was thrown out into the water as the car turned over and sank bottom up. The tide was ebbing and drew the struggling people under the bridge, where some of them found temporary safety by hanging to the piers.

North River grove, where there are many summer camps and cottages, is nearby. There were many boats on the river, and the occupants, attracted by the crashing of the fence and the cries of the party struggling in the river, rushed to the scene. Others who were on shore ran out to the bridge.

William Brissendon broke open the gate house for the draw of the bridge and threw down a coil of rubber hose Mr. Snyder caught it and was pulled to the bank. When Snyder realized that the rest of his family was in danger he tried to jump back again. It took the combined strength of Jacob Coffey and Michael Ryan to restrain him.

While Mrs. Snyder was being pulled ashore, Bernard Flynn jumped into the water and rescued the baby. He was picked up by Capt. J. A. Dolan of the Boston fire department, who put out in a motor boat with his two sons, Frank and Josph. William Lynch rescued Elsie.

Both Miss Livingston and Harry Brodie are good swimmers, and they allowed themselves to be carried along by the strong tide after recovering from the first shock of the accident. They were picked up and carried ashore to the summer cottage of John Fitzwilliam, where they were treated by Dr. Charles H. Whalen. Miss Livingston was later taken to

CORN ROAST FOR DENVER CLUB

Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Piper Entertain

Em. Commander Walter E. Piper of Quincy commandery, K. T., and Mrs. Piper, entertained the Denver club at their home on Centre street, Saturday evening, it being the first reunion of the sir knights and ladies who made up the Saint Omer Commandery party which attended the triennial conclave at Denver, Col., a year ago. The broad piazza surrounding one side of the house, as well as the spacious grounds about the house were prettily decorated with Japanese lanterns, while over the entrance to the house was festooned a large American flag, a similar flag waving proudly over the walk.

The guests, some thirty in number, who came from Boston Everett and Chelsea, arrived shortly after 6 o'clock, and after greetings an adjournment was made to the lawn where the piece de resistance of the evening, a corn roast, was in order.

To most of the party a corn roast was a novelty and they thoroughly enjoyed roasting the bright yellow ears of corn, attached to long boughs by holding them over a hot charcoal fire that had been built on the rocks. Toasted marshmallows followed, and in addition to these sandwiches and hot coffee were served.

Later the party adjourned to the parlors, where after singing a number of the choruses, which served to while away the time while travelling west in the parlor cars, Sir Knight Irwin called the party to order and a permanent organization was formed. The honor of being the next to entertain the party was conferred on Sir Knight Westover, who in accepting the position expressed his thanks for the great unsolicited honor which had been conferred upon him.

At a little after 10 o'clock with cheers for Em. Sir and Mrs. Piper, the party left for home all promising to be present with their appetites at the next reunion with Sir Knight Westover, the date to be fixed by the executive committee.

TWO RESCUED OFF SQUANTUM

Medford Young Lady Stranded on a Sand Bar

Miss Gladys Smith, 18, of Medford, was taken off a sand bar nearly a mile from the Squantum shore on Sunday afternoon by four young men who put out in a motor boat in response to her cries. They later rescued a man who said his name was James Logan of West Roxbury, from drowning.

Miss Smith was the guest of her sister, Mrs. E. W. Kirby of Squantum, and while rowing pulled her boat onto the bar. She stepped on the sandy stretch and had taken a few steps when the boat slipped off and drifted away.

She immediately cried for help and fully half an hour after John Jepson, Jr., heard her. With Peter, Harry and Robert Curley they put out in the power boat Alco.

Miss Smith after she was brought ashore said the tide was coming in and she was preparing to swim ashore when she saw the motor boat headed toward the bar.

The party had been ashore a few minutes only when Logan cried for help. He was out nearly 200 yards and when rescued said he had been attacked by cramps.

SQUANTUM RACE.

A race was held by the Squantum Yacht club Sunday, the finish being very close. No time however was given out as the man who has the handicap table sheet was away for the day. It is thought that when figured out the yachts will be close.

QUINCY WOMAN HELD AS SPY

Miss Jane Foretier Arrested by the Germans

Latest reports from Miss Jane McClure Foretier of Atlantic, who has been reported in the Daily Ledger list of Quincy people as in Europe, is that she is being held at Nuremberg, Germany, on suspicion of being a French spy.

This information was cabled to New York by someone from whom Miss Foretier, evidently sought aid, was telephoned to her home in Atlantic on Saturday and immediately her mother, two sisters and brother-in-law become frantic with anxiety.

Immediately upon receipt of the telephone message, Peter J. Talbot, her brother-in-law, left for Washington to confer with Secretary of State, Bryan. As a result of this visit the United States ambassador in Germany was advised to investigate the matter at once.

The last letter received from Miss Foretier was dated at Paris, June 29, and stated that she was then leaving for Berlin. Miss Foretier was accompanied by a friend and pupil, Miss Florence Arnold of Boston, who is much younger. That both women have been held is the belief of friends, as no direct word has been received from either of them since the letter of June 29.

Miss Foretier's grandfather, John Henry McClure, was ambassador to France for ten years, and as she is of French descent, it is not unnatural that she should be taken for a spy.

She has taught at the New England Conservatory of Music since 1898. The faculty and her friends are deeply concerned over her plight and her mother and sisters are nearly prostrated, her mother insisting on meeting every boat that docks in Boston, while a member of the family has met all incoming liners in New York.

She has many influential friends in England and France, who of course at this time can be of but little aid to her in Germany. As all cable communication with Germany is now broken off it will undoubtedly be some time before her release is effected.

THREE IN ONE ANNIVERSARY

Wooden Wedding and Two Birthdays Celebrated

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Titus observed the fifth anniversary of their wedding at their home on Kendrick avenue Sunday afternoon and also participated in the celebration of the 61st anniversary of the birth of John Jacobsen, father of Mrs. Titus and the eighth anniversary of Elinor Hill, a relative.

Upwards of 40 relatives and friends were present from all parts of the city and the house was decorated with potted plants and cut flowers for the occasion. In the evening it was brilliantly illuminated.

A reception was held during the afternoon and at sunset refreshments were served, which included chicken and lobster salads, cakes, coffee and ices.

Mr. and Mrs. Titus are well known in this city and were the recipients of many handsome and useful woodenware gifts. Mr. Titus is the proprietor of a Wollaston market.

Mr. Jacobsen, father of Mrs. Titus, has made his home in this city for many years and is held in high esteem by a large circle of friends.

Elinor Hill is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank P. Hill. She is a pupil at the Cranch school and a popular girl.

Both Mr. Jacobsen and Elinor were remembered by the many who attended the triple event. The observance was a quiet one, being held on the Sabbath, but all participated in the program and enjoyed themselves.

COL. KINCAIDE NOT CANDIDATE

But Might Consider a Demand From People

It has been stated that Col. Henry L. Kincaide has informed the Progressive committee that he was willing to again become the party candidate for congressman from the fourteenth district.

When seen this morning Col. Kincaide stated that he had made no direct statement that he would accept the nomination. He however informed the Daily Ledger that if there was a demand from the people that he should become the candidate that he should certainly consider it.

It is quite well known that Col. Kincaide has been wanted as a candidate for some months, but at first he refused to run from business reasons and therefore did not take out or file nomination papers.

Within a few days it is reported that Kincaide clubs have been formed throughout the Fourteenth district and there seems to be a determined effort to have him become a candidate.

Haney C. Reed of Quincy has already filed nomination papers. Should Col. Kincaide decide to become a candidate before the primaries his name will have to be written on the ballot.

WEST QUINCY MAN BURNED.

John L. Cumming of 3 Copeland street is in the Quincy City Hospital with painful burns about the face and hands as a result of carrying a flaming gasoline stove from his bakery to the street Sunday morning. Cumming was testing the stove when the contents exploded and set fire to his clothing. He picked up the flaming stove and ran to the street. He then returned and extinguished several incipient fires which started in the bakery and put out the fire in his clothing.

Passersby summoned Dr. John H. Ash who sent him to the City Hospital. His condition is not serious.

E. P. Powers has sold his City Square barber shop to a Boston man, and after a weeks rest at Wareham will plunge into the Mayoralty campaign.

DEPARTURE OF THE RIVADAVIA

Argentine Battleship Built by Fore River Corporation May Never Return to Quincy

Argentine Officers and Crew at Boston to Man Ship

The dreadnought Rivadavia was transferred from the Fore River shipyard to the Charlestown Navy yard today and on Wednesday it will be formally turned over to representatives of the Argentine government.

The ship was swung from the fitting out dock at 11.45 and fourteen minutes later, it was taken through the draw, probably for the last time. The passage was made in ten minutes, one less than the time required for its other passages. The bow entered the draw at 11.59 and the stern had cleared at 12.09.

No untoward accidents occurred to mar the passage, although or an instant the grating on the port side made it appear that the strong current had washed her against the low pier that runs along the channel.

The bow line was hitched to the tug John Gallagher and lashed to the starboard stern was the tug Pallas of Boston which took the place of the starboard propeller, which will not be in commission until the new turbine engine, to take the place of one wrecked in a recent test, is installed.

The ship went downstream, conveyed by seven tugs, the largest of which was the Mars from Philadelphia In command was Capt. Joseph Kemp of the Boston Tow Boat Co., official pilot of the Fore River Corp. On the bridge with him were the senior members of the Argentine Commission under whose inspection the dreadnought was built, and officials of the company.

The Union Jack floated from the peak and Old Glory from the stern, while the blue and white flag of Argentina flew gaily from the main truck. Just aft was the blue flag of the Fore River Corp.

In order to take the Rivadavia from the fitting out dock it was necessary to tow the U. S. S. Nevada upstream. From the day of the launching on July 11 the Nevada has floated under the protection of the turret batteries of the Rivadavia, and as the monster fighting machine negotiated the right angle turn in the channel at Power point the tugs brought the partially completed Nevada back to the fitting out dock where she will remain until ready for her trials.

The passage of the Rivadavia down the tortuous channel was made with the assistance of the tugs although her fires were banked and smoke belched from the secondary stacks in black clouds. Extreme care was taken while passing Jack Knife ledge, Captain Kemp having discovered three weeks ago that the buoy was 150 feet out of place.

Work in the shipyard was suspended from 11 to 1 o'clock in honor of the departure of the ship and all the men, numbered several thousands, gathered on the dock side of the yard to bid the fruits of their labor adieu.

Some people are worried because they can't loan money to Europe and help the fighters hold up American commerce some months longer.

It will be hard, for the historical painters to make an impressive scene out of the modern commander sitting in an office and telephoning his commands to a 250 mile battle line.

FOOD PRICES AND WAR.

The speculator is abroad in the land, seeking how he may add to his dollars out of the needs of our people. But not all of the many advances recorded in food products are due to him. Our own people aggravate the trouble, by bidding against each other for food. Provision men say that people that ordinarily buy a bag of flour are laying in a barrel, and those who usually take a pound or two of sugar take a large bag. All this puts money in the wholesaler's pocket.

Competition among retail tradesmen is sharp. Almost any merchant would rather have the good will of his community than charge his regular customers a higher price for goods he had in stock. But these are times when tradesmen do not stock up in advance of needs as they used to. Most of them are caught short on staple lines like flour and sugar.

Wholesalers who are making money by selling off stock goods at advanced prices should realize that they defy public sentiment. Public feeling today enforces the distinction between a fair and an unfair price.

A fair price is what will give a seller an equitable return on his money. The man who insists on more in an emergency may gobble a few extra dollars, but he losses the chance to acquire valuable friends.

Many of the advances in food products are artificial. Few captures of merchant ships are reported. In sending cargoes across the water there are few chances of loss, even under present conditions. The sea is likely soon to be cleared of hostile prowlers. Insurance of marine risks is now absurdly high. One manufacturer reports that he had to pay 40 per cent to get goods transported to Japan, a rate far above any chances of seizure. This matter of war insurance will soon be adjusted Soon commerce will be resumed, and people who are bidding up prices may regret their speculative fervor.

ETHICS OF "ROOTING."

To some cultured lovers of the ball field, the yelling of the bleacher crowd, trying to rattle a visiting pitcher, is the decadence of true sport. It is held to be the effort to win a ball game by means other than good ball playing. It seems like an unequal contest, with nine striplings in the arena contending against the united throats of hundreds or thousands of spectators.

Similarly, in connection with the tennis matches for the Davis cup, there has been criticism of lack of courtesy of the spectators to the visiting Australian competitors. After travelling 10,000 miles to compete for a trophy, it seems a hard proposition for one or two men to stand up against the active hostility of some thousands of people.

In games like tennis or golf, with but one or two contestants to a side, it would seem as if the crowd might take it as more of a personal contest, and not view the stranger with such positive dislike. But the large team of contestants in a ball game makes it essentially the battle of one town, college or school, against another. It is a community struggle, each team representing the best effort of the athletic element of that community, and being entitled to the community backing. If there is an element of unfairness, it evens up as the teams play on the different grounds.

Actually the rooting is half the fun. Unsuspected possibilities of wit and retort are developed. The comment of the bleachers is quite as pertinent as the voice of the chorus in the Greek drama. The American temperament would never be satisfied with the role of the silent on-looker.

Star plays by a visiting team ought to be well applauded. The man who truly loves athletic skill will wish to recognize it wherever it is found.

ARMY AND NAVY WILL STRIKE

Japanese Ultimatum on China Is Ignored by Germany

EXPIRATION OF THE TIME LIMIT

Attack on Kiauchau, Which Is Well Fortified, May Have Already Begun —Sphere of Japanese Operations May Be Close to Possessions In Which America Is Interested

Tokio, Aug. 24.—War on Germany was begun by Japan Sunday, when the Japanese army and fleet were ordered to capture Kiauchau, Germany's territory in China, at once.

Vice Admiral Kamimura is in command of the expeditionary navy and army forces sent to bombard Tsingtau, seaport of Kiauchau. It is believed the attack has already been begun.

Count Okuma will make public diplomatic correspondence to show that England had asked Japan's aid and approved of Japan's war against Germany.

With assurances to the world that she seeks no territorial aggrandizement, Japan thus enters the great war of Europe. The British government has said that Japan's action, by agreement, will not extend beyond the China seas except to safeguard her shipping lines, but Germany has other Far Eastern possessions which it seems inevitable will be wrested from her by the British warships with or without Japan's aid.

In these other possessions the United States is deeply interested in which flag will wave over them, coming in such close contact as they do with American possessions and shipping routes in the Pacific.

Japan's demands on Germany were made Aug. 16 and the time set expired Aug. 23. Briefly the Japanese government "advised" Germany to withdraw or disarm all her warships in Japanese and Chinese waters, and, not later than Sept. 15, to deliver Kiauchau to Japan for "eventual restoration" to China.

The kaiser's reply was to order Kiauchau to resist to the last, one of the Berlin papers saying of the Japanese ultimatum, "One more declaration of war is nothing."

Kiauchau, a bay on the peninsula of Chantung, was seized by Germany in November, 1897, ostensibly in reparation for the murder of two German missionaries in Shantung. China was forced to assent to about 200 miles of land on both sides of the bay being leased to Germany for ninety-nine years, while a neutral strip was established beyond that in which no Chinese officials can issue orders without German consent.

Tsin-chau, the city on the bay, is the centre of activity. It has been rebuilt into a typical German city. The country is arid, but holds considerable mineral wealth, especially coal. The total population is about 168,000. The garrison consists of 3125 German marines and native troops led by German officers.

Kiauchau is known to be well fortified, but the strength of its fortifications has never been disclosed. Work on them has been going on for several years, and there is little doubt that the Japanese have a good idea of just what they are.

Further east from Asia are the German possessions in Samoa, where the kaiser holds the islands of Savaii and Upolo, close to the American naval station of Pagopago. Pagopago is the one safe harbor in the Samoan islands.

Other German possessions in the Pacific are the Marshall islands, the Carolines, the Ladrones, a colony in New Guinea, flanked on the west and south by the Dutch and British colonies; the Bismarck group, off New Guinea; Buka and Bougainville, the most northerly of the Solomons, and a few small scattered islands of strategical or economic value.

The total German island possessions in the Pacific have an area of 96,000 square miles. They have a population of 1984 whites and 634,000 natives.

The Ladrones, north of Guam, are so close that Guam is visible from Saipan, the southernmost of the group. The Carolines are south of Guam, and considerable further from the little American possession. They also run close to the coast of Mindanao. Yap is the most important island, and has a wireless station of high power. It is also a German cable station.

Should Japan seize the Marshalls she would have an outpost in the Pacific between Guam and Hawaii. In the Ladrones she would be only a gunshot away from American Guam, and in the Carolines she would project a Japanese wedge between Guam and the Philippines.

All this would give her a power on the Pacific which would seriously menace the United States, but also disturb Australia and New Zealand. The establishment in the Pacific of an Oriental power so close to Australia and New Zealand would arouse such a storm of protest from both that it is believed that Great Britain must have given the strongest assurances that the sphere of Japanes operations is not to be extended to lands in close proximity to American and Australasian territory.

CHARGES BAD FAITH

Washington Hears Villa Is Ready to Break With Carranza

Washington, Aug. 24.—In substance, the report to the state department of Paul Fuller, the New York lawyer sent to Mexico to interview General Villa, is that Villa, who was largely instrumental in bringing about the success of the rebel cause, is not loyal to General Carranza, the new provisional president.

Villa is ready to openly break with Carranza, he says, declaring the latter has not kept faith wtih him and that there are certain obligations which Carranza is under to him.

Only by Carranza meeting Villa half way in bridging the gap, recognizing Villa's power and service to the constitutional cause, can Carranza prevent Villa from openly revolting. Villa's conduct is causing the administration no end of worry.

RAISES SLAVERY ISSUE

Question of Compulsory Road Work Before the Supreme Court

Washington, Aug. 24.—Whether making a man work on the public roads is imposing "involuntary servitude" on him in violation of the federal constitution is the novel issue raised by Jake Butler of Columbia county, Fla., in a case just docketed in the supreme court.

Butler was arrested for failure to comply with the provision of the Florida statute requiring able-bodied citizens to work on the public roads six days or pay $3 into the road funds.

Although similar statutes are in force in many states, this is the first time the constitutionality of one of them has been brought to the supreme court on the point in question.

ACCIDENT OR SUICIDE

County Authorities Do Not Think Norris Was Murdered

Epping, N. H., Aug. 24.—County Solicitor Guptill, who with other county authorities has been investigating the supposedly mysterious death of John Norris, whose charred body was found in the ruins of a burned farmhouse a few days ago, announced their belief that death was due to accident or suicide.

There is no evidence, said Guptill, to concur with the theory that had been advanced by some of the neighbors of Norris that he had been a victim of murder or that the place had been the scene of a robbery before it was set on fire.

A Day of Accidents

Boston, Aug. 24.—Two men drowned, a man and a girl rescued from drowning, and fifteen persons injured in automobile crashes was the toll of accidents throughout New England Sunday. With one exception the pleasure-seekers who came to grief were residents of Greater Boston.

Silver Purchase Bill Passed

Washington, Aug. 24.—The senate passed the Smoot silver purchase bill. This provides for the purchase, at the discretion of the secretary of the treasury, of 15,000,000 ounces of silver at a price not to exceed the average from Jan. 15 to June 15.

Panama Canal Earnings

Panama, Aug. 24.—During the first week of business the Panama canal earned approximately $55,000, not including the amount collected for barge service and payments made in advance for ships on their way to use the canal.

Big Steamer In Collision

London, Aug. 24.—The Leyland line steamer Canadian from Boston for Liverpool, with a heavy cargo of foodstuffs, was in collision off the southwest coast of Ireland. Tugs have left Queenstown to go to her assistance.

Plenty of Him.

"What sort of man is Jinks?"

"The impression you get of Jinks depends on the circumstances under which you meet him. If you're there to collect money you won't like him. But if you're there to pay money he seems a lovely character."

FRIENDSHIPS.

May the law of Sallust always remain engraved on the heart of your king. "Not with the help of armies nor treasures do kingdoms continue to flourish, but with the help of friends, and these cannot be gained by force nor bought with gold; they are won by acts of kindness and by faithfulness." And, moreover, "it is necessary always to live in unity with one's own; by concord the smallest things become great, whilst by discord the greatest are reduced to nought." But him remember the example of M. Agrippa, who thought much of this precept which alone may make of your royal master a good brother, a good comrade, a good friend, a good king. Next to God let nothing be dearer to him than friendships. Let him always implicitly trust the man he once found worthy of his friendship and, according to the advice of Seneca, let him prove his friends in all things, but take care first to prove himself also. * * * Slow in contracting friendships, let him be even more slow in breaking them asunder and, if possible, never let him do so.—Petrarch.

LAID TO REST IN ST. PETER'S

Body of Pope Pius X. Entombed In Basilica Crypt

SCENE IS MOST AFFECTING

Great Crowd Kneels In Homage as Cortege Marches to Late Pontiff's Final Resting Place While Choir Chants the "Miserere"—Thousand Distinguished Persons Attend

Rome, Aug. 24.—The entombment of Pope Pius X. took place at sunset. The great basilica of St. Peter's was in semidarkness.

A flickering light came from the perpetually burning tapers about the Shrine of the Apostles and the candles in the chapel where the catafalque stood.

Those who witnessed the ceremony, numbering about 1000, came by special invitation and included the diplomatic representatives accredited to the holy see, the prelates and many of the Roman aristocracy.

The procession formed in the chapel of the Blessed Sacrament, where for hours the body of Pius X. laid in state. The catafalque was surmounted by the triple crown, and the body of the pope was clad in pontifical robes and surrounded by the emblems of his sacred office. During the course of the day many thousands of persons passed by the bier.

At evening the bier was removed and placed on a low platform on wheels. At the gates of the chapel the archpriest of the basilica, in violet robes and surrounded by the chapter, joined the procession.

First came a jeweled cross, held aloft, then the cardinals and high prelates, each carrying a candle. In the centre of the procession was the bier, the cortege passing amid the kneeling crowd, while through the vast and silent church was heard the Miserere, sung by the Sistine choir.

The solemn cortege marched into the crypt where the body of Pius X. will have its final resting place. Here the roof is very low and the Miserere had a peculiarly weird and melancholy effect.

The tomb of the late pontiff is on the right, at the entrance to the subterranean chapel, close to that of several other popes. At this place several ancient marble tablets were removed to make room for the tomb of Pius, which, while partly within the wall, also projects into the passage.

The body lies in a cyprus wood coffin, on which rests a gold cross. This is inclosed in zinc and finally in an oak casket. On the casket is the inscription:

"Here lies the body of Pius X. Born June 2, 1835. Died Aug. 20, 1914."

The coffin was placed within the tomb while Cardinal Della Volpe recited prayers for the dead, accompanied by all present, kneeling. A monument to Pius X. will be erected in the crypt.

Mgr. Galli, director of the General Vatican museum, took a death mask of Pius X. The cardinals have selected Mgr. Galli to deliver the eulogy of the late pope before the sacred college.

It is announced that the pope left a considerable sum of money to be distributed among the poor of Rome. The sisters of the pope will leave Rome and live hereafter at Riese. They are to receive $60 a month, which was the pope's wish, and this will be sufficient for their needs at Riese.

Building Business

Recently, a large store of very honored name became insolvent and passed into the hands of a new owner—an energetic young man.

Little was left to the business but the good name. There were strong stores all around it.

The first thing this merchant did was to emphasize in his advertising that he kept well-known, popular, advertised articles—mentioning those advertised in the local newspapers by the manufacturers.

He did not advertise them at a cut price. He merely let it be known that he carried them and would give good service.

That was a few months ago. Already the business has started to revive to an extent that competitors are sitting up and taking notice.

This man makes it a rule to mention every day in his advertising the name of some well-known, branded article that he carries—a name that stands for character in the mind of the public.

KAISER'S COURSE IN WAR AS REVEALED IN PROPHETIC BOOK

Military Moves Foretold by Supposed Mouthpiece Two Years Ago.

Land Aggression Only Hope. British Navy Reason For Caution at Sea.

OVER two years ago General Friedrich von Bernhardi of the German army, considered one of the leading authorities on military matters in Europe, wrote a book called "Germany and the Next War," in which he outlined with startling exactness the very course which Germany is now pursuing in the present war.

Foreseeing the refusal of Italy to fight on the side of Germany and Austria and taking fully into account the numerical superiority of the combined Russian and French armies over the Germans and Austrians, as well as the commanding advantage of Great Britain on the sea, he exhorted his fellow countrymen to a war of aggression on land, a war of sudden and deadly blows, if they would avert the downfall of their native land as a world power.

In her war of self preservation, wrote Von Bernhardi, Germany must make everything count. "Neutrality is a paper bulwark," he exclaimed contemptuously—a statement which, says the New York Times, in view of Germany's disregard of treaties concerning Luxemburg, Belgium and Holland, shows him to have been a mouthpiece of those now directing German strategy.

Germany's Naval Tactics.

That Germany must not be an aggressor on the sea against Great Britain was perfectly clear to the German writer. He urged upon his countrymen a naval campaign of extreme caution, in conjunction with vigorous resistance to landings of English troops.

Von Bernhardi also counseled the speedy crippling of the Russian fleet, to keep it from helping Great Britain and France. Here, too, he seemed to speak with a foreknowledge of the future.

Von Bernhardi's book, on account of the high position of its author, was looked upon as practically an official foreshadowing of the policy that would be followed by Germany in case of war.

Particularly interesting are the ideas advanced in the book on how Germany should meet England's great sea power and endeavor to offset its unquestioned superiority to the German naval forces. The author points out that, whereas on land Germany may expect the help of Austria, she will be thrown on her own resources on the water and is not strong enough to take the offensive, even in the form of a sudden attack like that of Japan on Port Arthur. He writes:

Blockade by England.

"We should at first carry on a defensive war and would therefore have to reckon on a blockade of our coasts if we succeed in repelling the probable English attack.

"Such a blockade can be carried out in two ways. England can blockade closely our North sea coast and at the same time bar the Danish strait so as to cut off communications with our Baltic ports, or she can seal up on the one side the channel between England and the continent, on the other side the open sea between the north of Scotland and Norway, on the Peterhead-Ekersund line, and thus cripple our oversea commerce, and also control the Belgo-Dutch, Danish and Swedish shipping.

"A close blockade in the first case would greatly tax the resources of the English fleet. According to the view of English experts, if a blockade is to be maintained permanently the distance between the base and the blockading line must not exceed 200 nautical miles. Since all the English naval ports are considerably farther than this from our coast the difficulties of carrying on the blockade will be enormously increased."

General von Bernhardi figures that England will discard the close blockade and if she chooses to blockade at all will attempt to seal up the English channel and the sea passage between north Scotland and Norway. He points out that only a small force is required to block the channel, as the navigation route there is very narrow, and all the great English naval depots—Dover, Portsmouth, Portland and Plymouth—are on the line of blockade or close behind it. Furthermore, the line is covered on the north by Sheerness and Harwich, so that a retreat of German ships to the coast of Germany might effectually be cut off.

As for the northern line, in the scheme of blockade he outlines, Von Bernhardi declares that it is no less favorable, since the blockaders would have a base in the great naval harbor of Rosyth, and a squadron of cruisers must lie in support off the Orkneys.

Under these conditions he figures that every attacking fleet from the German north coast would be vigorously attacked itself from Rosyth and Sheerness and its retreat cut off.

A Vital Consideration.

In view of all this he thinks that the only wise course for Germany in such an event would be to advance from the Baltic against the northeastern part of the British blockading line since retreat in such an event would be tolerably safe. He writes:

"This accentuates once more the supreme importance to us of keeping open, at all costs, the passage through the sound and the great belt. The command of this strait will not only secure the Baltic basin for us, but also keep open the sally ports for our offensive operations against the English blockading fleet."

But the general does not think that Great Britain will content herself with a mere blockade in any form. In order to bring the war to a quick end he is convinced that the English will try to land troops. Of this eventuality he writes:

"They could not obtain a decisive result unless they attempted to capture our naval bases—Wilhelmshaven, Helgoland, the mouth of the Elbe and Kiel—and to annihilate our fleet in its attempt to protect these places and thus render it impossible for us to continue the war by sea.

"Our whole future history may turn upon the impregnability of the fortifications, which, in combination with the fleet, are intended to guard our coast and naval bases and should inflict such heavy losses on the enemy that the difference of strength between the two fleets would be gradually equalized. Our ships, it must be remembered, can only act effectively so long as our coast fortifications hold out."

French and Russian Navies.

As to probabilities regarding the French and Russian fleets, the German general writes:

"If the French fleet—as we may expect—combines with the English and takes part in the war it will be much more difficult for us to wage war than a war with England alone.

"France's blue water fleet would hold our allies in the Mediterranean in check, and England could bring all her forces to bear upon us. It would be possible that combined fleets of the two powers might appear both in the Mediterranean and in the North sea, since England could hardly leave the protection of her Mediterranean interests to France alone. The prospect of any ultimately successful issue would thus shrink into the background.

"But we must not even then despair. On the contrary, we must fight the French fleet, so to speak, on land—i. e., we must defeat France so decisively that she would be compelled to renounce her alliance with England and withdraw her fleet to save herself from total destruction

"It would be war to the knife with France, one which would, if victorious, annihilate once for all the French position as a great power.

"The participation of Russia in the naval war must also be contemplated. That is the less dangerous, since the Russian Baltic fleet is at present still weak and cannot combine so easily as the English with the French.

"We could operate against it on the inner line—that is, we could use the opportunity of uniting rapidly our vessels in the Baltic by means of the Kaiser Wilhelm canal. We could attack the Russian ships in vastly superior force, and, having struck our blow, we could return to the North sea.

"For these operations it is of the first importance that the Danish strait should not be occupied by the enemy. If it fell into the hands of the English all free operations in the Baltic would be almost impossible, and our Baltic coast would then be abandoned to the passive protection of our coast batteries."

General von Bernhardi fully realizes that Germany's position on land is also full of danger. Hemmed in between France and Russia, she can count only on the help of Austria.

France a Feared Foe.

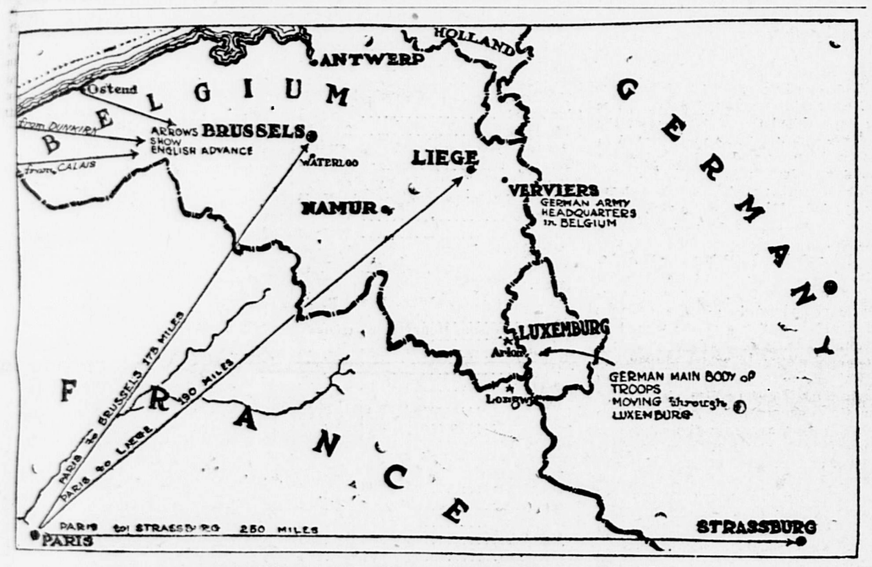

He reviews the probabilities of a European Armageddon thus:

"If we look at France first we are entitled to assume that single handed she is not a match for us, but can only be dangerous to us as a member of a coalition. If France thinks she has all the trumps in her hands she will not shrink from an offensive war and will stake everything in order to strike us a mortal blow. We must expect the most bitter hostility from this antagonist.

"The main issue for England is to annihilate our navy and oversea commerce in order to prevent any further expansion of our power. But it is not her interest to destroy our position as a continental power or to help France to attain the supremacy in Europe. English interests demand a certain equilibrium between the continental states. England will never impose on herself sacrifices which are not absolutely necessary, for the private advantage of her ally.

"Russia, owing to her vast extent, is, in the first place, secure against complete subjugation. In case of defeat her center of gravity is not shifted. A Russian war can hardly ever, therefore, become a struggle for political existence and cause that straining of every nerve which such a struggle entails."

How Von Bernhardi would have Germany guard against an unsuccessful result in her first warlike operations is summed up in a phrase: The best defensive strategy is to take the offensive. To prevent invasions of her widely threatened territory she must carry the war quickly and suddenly into the territory of her antagonists.

CENTER OF THE GREAT EUROPEAN WAR STAGE.

WAR HITS KING'S STOMACH.

Daily Rations of British Ruler Said to Cost Only $1.25 a Day.

A recent issue of the official British Court Circular announced:

"By order of the king, plain living is now the rule at the royal table."

A correspondent reports on the highest authority that plain living at court means the cost of the royal table has been reduced from (the equivalent in American money) $2.30 per head per day to $1.25. In the late reign the cost of living for the royal family was reckoned at $2.88 per day per head.

Dinner at Buckingham palace now consists of four courses—soup, fish, joint and sweets. It used to consist of six courses. Entrees have been abolished. Breakfast consists of fruit and porridge. Fish is served two days a week and eggs and bacon one.

The cost of living in servants' hall has been reduced from $1.44 per day per head to 88 cents.

Monk Would Lead Troops.

A St. Petersburg dispatch says: Application for the restoration of his commission in the Russian army has been made by Father Bulatovitch, a former officer of the guards, who is superior of a monastery on Mount Athos, peninsula of Saloniki. Father Bulatovitch purposes remaining in religious orders and, in imitation of the crusading monks at the time of the Tartar invasion of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, will head his troops in his uniform covered with his cowl.

NEWS OF 1825 RECALLED

A Wonderful New Carriage South American Trade

From the Masonic Mirror and Mechanic's Intelligencer Jan. 15 1825.

Quebec, Dec. 2.

The progress of useful inventions and discoveries is at this moment as rapid as it ever has been. Since the beginning of the century it is impossible to recount the advances. Mr. Gray of Nottingham in England, has lately suggested to the British public the practicability of introducing Steam Carriages on Railways only, and of gradually doing away with the use of horses on the public roads. The plan appears at first extravagant.

It is certain however, that the Steam Carriage invented by Mr. Griffiths has upon experiment been found to answer the purposes of draught, and that the improvements in the propelling engines constructed by Mr. Perkins, and by Mr. Brown, may by reducing the bulk of the engine itself, and increasing the power, actually, introduce these carriages into general use.

NEW ENGINE CARRIAGES.

Mr. Brown's new propelling Vacuum engine, noticed in our last, has already given rise to a speculation among a few gentlemen, to establish a joint stock company, for the purpose of contracting to run the mail coaches and other carriages by means of Mr. Brown's new engine. Two hundred thousand pounds are to be the nominal capitol of the company; but in the first instance, it is intended to raise only 2000 L for the purpose of building one carriage, and that no further sum shall be called for, until a carriage shall have been propelled, at the rate of ten miles an hour, as far as York and back to London.

The ship of the line building at Philadelphia is said to be on an improved plan, having her stern made round and planked in a similar manner to the bow, which adds greatly to the strength of the ship, and gives her a decided advantage in battle over ships with a square stern. She will be rated at 120 guns, but it is supposed will mount 150.

NEWLY INVENTED CARRIAGE.

The carriage which was lately conducted to London from Barnstable by a Frenchman, at the rate of eight miles an hour, and by means of which hills may be ascended with comparatively but little labor, is on the principle of a turning lathe, only worked by the hand and arms, and guided by the feet; a cord passes over two wheels, before the operator, and moves the two hind wheels; with a third before by which it is guided, and to make the cord act, knobs are made in it, which answer for knobs on the surface of the wheel above and the pullies attached to the two hind wheels. The simplicity of the invention is its greatest merit; it is exhibited in London.

A writer in the Oriental Herald, in treating of the various routes proposed for a communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, across the Isthmus, thus treats of the well known inquiry whether the levels of the two oceans be the same. The tides, for instance, rise at Porto Bello scarcely more than a foot, whereas at Panama they reach 14 or 16 feet; consequently the levels of the two seas must vary with the different ports.

LATE KING OF FRANCE.

The funeral of the late King of France is said to have cost the nation about 400,000 dollars. This sum would pay the salary of the President of the United States sixteen years.

TRADE OF SOUTH AMERICA

The Philadelphia Gazette states, that from the first of March 1824, to the first of Jan. 1825, there have sailed from the United States for various ports of South America, south of the line, 275 vessels; namely, 76 ships, 2 barques 163 brigs, 33 schooners, and 1 sloop. Of these 48 cleared at Philadelphia, 62 at New York, 57 at Boston, 22 at Salem, 9 at Norfolk, 8 at Alexandria, and the remainder at other ports.

PERKIN'S STEAM GUNS.

An agent of the Emperor of Russia has been sent to England to obtain a number of Mr. Perkin's steam guns, and to negotiate for a regular supply of them; but the British Government has determined none shall be made for any foreign power. Mr. Perkins, however, being an American, can leave England when he pleases.

THE ENGLISHMAN AND SKUNK

The English traveller, who has published an interesting account of his "Excursion" in the United States, thus describes his rencounter with a skunk which he met with in a western prairie. There "beautiful little animals" are not found in Europe, but are peculiar to the American continent.

"About 40 miles from Carmi, I had a most curious adventure, and one that caused me for sometime afterwards, a great deal of vexation. While crossing a small prairie, I observed coming towards me in the middle of the path, a beautiful little animal, about two feet long, of a dark color, with longitudinal white stripes down its back, a bushy tail, and very short legs. Intending to catch it, I immediately galloped forward to prevent its escape.

"To my astonishment, however, it did not attempt to run away, but stopped in the road, as if it had been tame. I came close up to it, so that my horse's fore feet almost touched it, when it drew up its back, and looked at me, but still did not offer to escape. I at first intended to dismount and catch it; but considering that I could do nothing with it, and that perhaps it might bite me, I determined to leave it alone, and content myself with admiring it.

"It would have been well for me if I had done so, but after having finished looking at it, a spirit of mischief (I can attribute it to nothing else), prompted me to lean forward on my horse, and strike it over the back with a small whip I had in my hand. Scarcely had the whip touched the animals back, when, turning its posterior towards me, and lifting up its hind leg, it discharged a Stygian liquor, the odor of which I shall recollect till my dying day. In an instant, the whole prairie seemed to be filled with a stench, that is beyond all description. It was so powerfully pungent and sickening, that at first it nearly made me faint, and I galloped away from the brute with all possible expedition.

"I had previously supposed, that I had, in the course of my life, smelled very bad odors; but they were all perfumes compared to this. No one who has not experienced it can form any idea of such a horrid stench. Most fortunately from the position in which I was, my horse had received the whole of this infernal water on his breast, and none of it had touched my clothes. It it had I should have been obliged to destroy them; for I was afterwards informed, that no process, or length of time, will remove the smell from woolen cloth.

"This adventure happened early in the morning, and made me so sick I could not eat my breakfast. Indeed I was ashamed to go into any house, well knowing how offensive both I and my horse must be. I rode my horse into the rivers, had him washed with soap and water, but nothing would do. For a week afterwards, I could never get upon him, without perceiving in a most disagreeable degree, the stench of my little enemy. The man of the house, at which I stopped in the evening, immediately observed the offensive odor with which I was infected. When I told him of my adventure, and how I intended to have got off my horse to catch the animal, he laughed most heartily, and informed me that it was call the skunk and was common in that part of the country." STILL ALARMS.

A lamp exploded in a sleeping room at the home of George Holman, 6 Watson terrace, at 6.30 Sunday evening and set fire to the mattress, curtains and pillows. The department was summoned by telephone and prevented the fire from spreading. The loss was not covered by insurance.

A closet fire was discovered in the home of Mrs. Mary Douglass of 131 Liberty street Sunday and did considerable damage. The department answered on a still alarm.

HIT BY AUTO.

A Sunday paper reports that Henry O'Brien, a 12 year old Roxbury boy, was knocked down on Jersey street, Roxbury, Saturday afternoon by an automobile owned and operated by George E. Coffin of 26 West Elm avenue, Wollaston. He was taken to the hospital in the automobile where it was found that he was suffering from contusions and abrasions on both arms an d left knee.

NEWCOMB PLACE FIRE.

A brisk fire was discovered on the roof of the two family house at 15 Newcomb place this morning, and an alarm was sounded from Box 171. The fire was extinguished before much damage was done. The house is owned by J. Damon. The upper floor is occupied by Domenico Pompio and the lower by Tomaso Fibriana.

Damage by Rodents.

Rats are said to do damage estimated at $3,000,000 in Chicago every year.

TWO SUNDAY RAIDS.

Two liquor raids were made by the Quincy police Sunday afternoon. One squad was under Captain Daniel R. McKay and the other under Inspector Alfred W. Goodhue.

At the premises of Cornelio Palma, 1 Willard street, Palma was arrested on a charge of keeping and exposing liquor for sale. The other raid was in a house on Wesson street. A big crowd ran from one of the houses when the police arrived and took refuge in the woods. One man appeared with a leather bag but ran into the woods when he saw the raid in progress.

HIT BY AUTO.

Moses Mouslong, aged 52 years a carpenter living at 159 Sumner street was run down by an automobile on North street this morning, and received a fracture of the ankle. The driver of the automobile gave his name at H. H. Smith of 17 Quincy street, Boston. He made no attempt to get away but stopping his car took the injured man to the City hospital.

RECKLESS DRIVING ALLEGED.

A man who gave his name as Brony Guicher of Brockton was arrested in City Square Sunday night by Officer Olson for reckless driving. The man was in an automobile and is said to have driven his auto through the Square in such a manner as to endanger the lives of many people on the street at the time. As it was he bumped into an electric car. He was arraigned in court this morning and the case continued until next Monday.

FIRST PLACE FOR GRAYLING

Had Big Lead Over the Class D. Fleet

A race for the Cape Cat class and classes A and I of the Quincy Yacht club was held off the club house Saturday afternoon in a light air that almost became a dead calm before the race was finished, so that the yachts barely finished within the time limit.

In class A the Marie L was the only boat to go over the course. Class I brought out but two boats, the Dorchen II of A. W. Finlay and the Acanthus of Edward Morse, the former winning by nearly eight minutes, corrected time.

Class D, the Cape Cat class, brought out the scrapper, and there were eight starters all of which finished. Light air seemed to be what the Grayling needed and she won with a lead of nearly nine minutes corrected time over the Dolly III, while the Dartwell which has been winning everything in sight this year was obliged to accept the sixth position on corrected time. The summary of class D was as follows:

CLASS D

Grayling, E. D. Nickerson	2 15 54
Dolly III, W. W. Arnold	2 24 05
Clara, H. W. Robbins	2 28 52
Iris, F. F. Crane	2 29 32
Mudjekeewis, E. W. Emery	2 31 36
Dartwell, I. M. Whittemore	2 32 08
Wanderer, A. H. Acorn	2 55 30

WEYMOUTH TROT.

The attendance at the matinee meet of the Old Colony Gentlemen's Driving Club at South Weymouth park, Saturday, was the largest of the season. The star performer of the meet was Miss Vassar, as she made the fastest time. The winners in the several events were as follows: Class A, Kaldar; class B, Lawson's Gift; class C, Capt. Murphy; class D, Miss Vassar; class E, Pauline; class F, Higgins; class G, Blix; class H, Boxer; class I, Pansy Blossom; class J, Starling; class K, Annie M; class L, Patriot.

FORE RIVER DEFEATED

Lost Opportunity to Tie for First Place

Manufacturers' league results:

At Norwood—Norwood Press 5, N. E. T. & T. Co. 3.

At Lynn—General Electrics 6, Fore River 3.

Final standing of Clubs:

	Won	Lost	P.C.
Norwood Press	9	5	.642
United Shoe	9	5	.642
Fore River	8	6	.571
Bird & Son	8	6	.571
Gillette Razor	7	7	.500
Gen. Electric	7	7	.500
N. E. T. & T. Co.	5	9	.258
Forbes Lith.	3	11	.214

A post season game between Norwood Press and the United Shoe will be necessary to decide the winners of the Manufacturers' league pennant and the banner offered by the Boston Herald. The game will probably be played on Labor day.

The main feature of the closing of the league was the spurt of the General Electrics of Lynn. Four games in succession jumped them from the middle division to a tie for first place.

Their victory Saturday over the Fore River knocked the Quincy team out of the race. The finish tied for third place with Bird & Son. The position may not be played off.

The Electrics scored three runs in the first inning through the bonehead playing of Wall the Fore River catcher. He dropped a throw and allowed a runner to score in the first and to show his dissatisfaction with his play he made an indifferent throw to second and the ball went to the outfield and two more scored. Fore River then tightened up and got three runs back while the Electrics scored three more.

Nichols was up against it Saturday for the first time. He was touched for eight hits and fanned but five. The Lynn boys filled their reputation as sluggers, only one man on the team failing to connect.

Muller, the Lynn High pitcher, was apparently invincible. He fanned 10 and allowed but two hits. The summary:

HIBERNIANS WIN 9 TO 4

Div. 4, A. O. H., defeated the crack team of the Jordan, Marsh Co., on the Ward Four playground Saturday afternoon 9 to 4. The fest was witnessed by a large gallery.

The stick work of Hebert, Quinn and Duane for the Hibernians was a feature of the game, as well as the base running of Shea and the pitching of McPherson.

Collins and Dowd played a star game for the visitors. Saville at first base handled several poor throws.

The Hibernians were strengthened by the addition of several fast men from other teams in the West Quincy league. The summary:

PLAYGROUAD FESTIVITIES

Program for the Annual Picnic on Tuesday

This is the gala week for the playground kiddies, but they do say the children have been having a good time all summer. The picnic will be held Tuesday, at Merrymount park and on Thursday comes the presentation of prizes and festival at Merrymount Oval.

The program for Tuesday is:

9.30—35 yard dash for boys of Class A
50 yard dash for boys of Class B
100 yard dash for boys of Class C
Followed immediately by girls' races
10.30—Boys' base ball game for championship, Ward 2 vs Ward 3.
12.00—Dinner.
1.00—Girls' base ball game for championship, Ward 2 vs Ward 3.
2.00—One lap on track, for boys.
2.15—Soccer football game, Ward 2 vs Ward 3.
General games for all.

The program for Thursday will be announced later.

The rainy and generally depressive weather of last week had a marked effect on the playground attendance throughout the city. A total of 3086 for the three playgrounds. Ward three leading, having 1466; Ward two was next with 980 and Wollaston had a total of about 650 for the week.

TREMENDOUS BATTLE NOW UNDER WAY

Hundreds of Thousands of Men Are Engaged In Conflict

FIGHTING LINES ARE HUNDRED MILES LONG

Impossible to Know at Present Whether Any Decided Advantage Has Yet Been Gained—Fresh German Troops Brought Up by Thousands as Battle Rages Almost Without Pause For Thirty-Six Hours—Northern Belgium Now Denuded of Invaders, Who Are Rushed to the Front—French Routed In Lorraine and Places Captured Are Retaken by Germans—Bombardment of Namur by Germans Continues

London, Aug. 24.—For nearly two days, in the first great battle of the war, Germany has been hurling corps after corps of soldiers against the hundreds of thousands of French and British who are guarding the Belgian approaches to the French frontier.

Details of the battle are completely lacking, but enough is known to warrant the statement that never before in the history of the world have so many men been engaged in a conflict.

At places along the long line of roaring guns, the Germans seem to have gained advantages and to have pierced the wide-flung entrenchments thrown up by the defenders of France.

Varying Successes

At other and at widely-separated places, the British and French have not only held back the tremendous German charges, but have actually taken the offensive and are threatening the flanks of victorious German columns.

So tremendous are the great battle lines, 100 miles long, here wavering, here advancing, that at present it is impossible to know whether any decided advantage has yet been gained. Although the slaughter has already been frightful, it now seems probable that the battle may continue for several days before either the invaders or defenders can obtain advantage enough to drive the other side back.

French Lose In Lorraine

In Lorraine, the Germans have continued their great successes of the past few days. The invasion which began so roseately for France has ended in disaster.

Saturday they were driven out of Lorraine; Sunday they abandoned the passes over the Vosges which they gained after a half dozen or more bitter encounters. Worse than all else comes the news that the Germans have actually entered Luneville, less than twenty miles from Nancy, presumably an undefended city and the key to the unnfortified gap between the great fort of Toul and Epinal.

World's Greatest Battle

But the greatest battle being fought is that which started in Belgium Saturday and which has been raging almost without pause for thirty-six hours. As the attack developed, fresh German troops by thousands were brought up from the rear and hurled to the left of the armies of the allies.

The French in turn brought up reinforcements and the roar of guns, which Saturday ended on the west of Charleroi, was swiftly extended to Mons, twenty miles further to the west.

On the east the fighting was as desperate. The Germans, who had made their way through the wooded and hilly country of the Ardennes, emerged near the French frontier. Almost simultaneously, the long inactive army of the Moselle swarmed out of its entrenchments in Luxemburg and began its attack in as great strength as that of the army of the Meuse at the north. Now the greatest battle ever fought in history is extending over a front of fully 100 miles.

Real Situation Not Known

Although it is unquestioned that hundreds of thousands of men are engaged in the battle, the situation is so beyond human conjecture at the present moment that no guess at the actual number of men now engaged is worthy of belief. The confusion prevailing is so colossal that it is impossible to obtain any details of the progress of the battle.

Even if correspondents were allowed to accompany the armies, they could not know much more about the battle than a man in the streets of London.

That the German attack is at last serious can hardly be doubted. Northern Belgium has been denuded of its invaders almost as swiftly as it was overrun. The troopers that marched so blithely through Brussels are even now at the front, seeking to turn the extreme left of the allies who are massed near Mons.

Contradictory rumors will pour out of Belgium for hours, but probably another day at least must pass before London knows whether the British and French have been driven back. Even then, the battle may not be concluded; for reinforcements for both sides are being rushed to the front and may be able to turn a seeming rout into victory.

ighting at Namur

Only from Namur do we get the slightest detail of the fighting at any one point. Here the Germans are constantly shelling the forts that guard the Belgian city on the Meuse, but the big guns of the stronghold are replying steadily, apparently undamaged by the great Krupp guns that the Germans have succeeded in putting into position.

No mention is made of heroic but futile charges such as those which proved so disastrous to the Germans at Liege. Namur is likely to be bombarded for many hours longer before any attempt is made to charge upon the steel and concrete forts that extend about the city.

Movements of British Veiled

Remarkable secrecy, indeed, seems to have veiled the movements of the British troops. They were landed in Havre from Aug. 8 to 12, but not a word was known in England of the project until the landing had been completed. Even then the port where the British landed was not made known.

Although the British war office denies that British troops have yet been engaged in any fighting, reports persist that wounded of the famous "Black Watch," one of the most historic regiments of the English army, have been brought to Southampton.

Ostend, according to sources of news favoring the allies, is not yet in German possession, though the kaiser's troops are in the environs. There has been no advance on Antwerp, and probably there will be none.

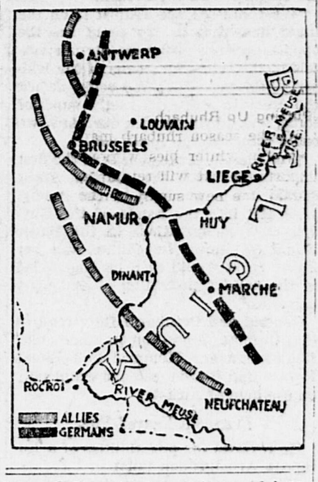

Belgium to Get $100,000,000

A dispatch from Paris says that France and Great Britain have agreed to advance Belgium $100,000,000 to enable her to face the necessities arising from the war.

France and Great Britain will each provide one-half of this sum.

GERMANS LOSE HEAVILY

Said to Have Been Driven Off by Russians In East Prussia

The Russian advance into East Prussia, judging from St. Petersburg dispatches, appears to be prospering, for it is asserted that the battle front covers twenty-six miles, and that the czar's soldiers have occupied Insterburg, a considerable advance from Gumbinnen, which they were formerly said to have taken. A big battle has been going on for three days, it is asserted.

St. Petersburg reports that Russia's inivasion of East Prussia has gained new force. Three army corps arrived west of Gumbinnen to reinforce the czar's columns. In an engagement with Germans who tried to prevent the capture of an important station, the Russians were victorious, driving off the enemy with heavy loss. The Russians captured eight German cannon, twelve shell carriers and many prisoners.

On the Galician front the Austrians have suffered heavy losses. In engagements at Gorodok and Krasnik the Russians captured six officers and 250 men.

ITALY TO MOBILIZE

King Said to Have Been Won Over by Arguments of Ministers

It is known that a general mobilization in Italy has been decided upon and will be proclaimed in three or four days, according to a message which the Rome correspondent of the Paris Eclair succeeded in smuggling through to his paper.

The correspondent asserts that King Victor Emmanuel until recently felt obliged to renounce all idea of Italian intervention in the conflict, but was won over by the arguments of his ministers.

UNCLE SAM NOTIFIED

Will Look Out For the Japanese Interests In Germany

Viscount Chinda, the Japanese ambassador at Washington, formally notified the United States that Japan had declared war on Germany. The American government was immediately asked to care for Japan's interests in Germany.

Assurance recently given by the British government to the United States that Japan's activity would be confined to the China seas and eastern Asia were repeated by Chinda.

The position of the United States as set forth in Secretary Bryan's recent note has met with the approval of Japan. In that communication the United States "noted with satisfaction" that Japan promised to maintain the integrity of China and eventually restore Kiauchau to China; that Japan sought no additional territory, and pledged herself in pursuance of the Anglo-Japanese alliance to the maintenance of the principle of the "open door" in China and equal opportunity for the commercial interests of all powers.

TRADE WAR IS BEGUN

England Takes Concerted Steps to Capture the German Trade

A bitter commercial war against Germany and Austria has been inaugurated in England. It has the loyal support of the press and the public.

The London chamber of commerce committee held a private meeting to discuss this anti-German trade campaign. The commercial intelligence branch of the board of trade has a skilled staff working on lists of German imports, and it calls the attention of manufacturers to several lines which Germans sell heavily in England, mounting high up into the millions.

The board of trade has arranged for the suspension of German and Austrian patents in England, wherever manufacturers want to make use of them in the public interest.

ON THE DIAMOND

National League

Six weeks of stampeding along the pennant trail has borne fruit for the Boston Braves. What would have been termed a miracle not many days back blossomed into a stern reality when the Cincinnati Reds again pounced on the Giants and wiped out the slim half-game margin which separated the Giants from the onrushing Braves.

The Trysting Place

A Story of a Mexican Oil Well

By MAY C. ETHEREDGE

Manuel Perez was a Mexican peon. One day Manuel went to Jose Gonzales, who owned a hacienda on which he grew coffee, and asked for the loan of $50. Gonzales understood this request, for it is the common method in Mexico of taking on the yoke of slavery. He lent the young man the money, and Manuel signed a contract to work for him till it was returned.

Now, there was a special reason for Manuel thus entering Gonzales' service. The hacendado had a pretty daughter, Maria, sixteen years old, whom Manuel had met, and the two being of the mating age had fallen in love with each other. Manuel was an intelligent fellow, and instead of spending the most of what he earned for pulque, as many peons do, he saved it and had $100, which for safety he put in a bank. By working for Gonzales he would have many opportunities of meeting Maria. If his passion for her were discovered by her father, who was a very stingy man, he would not be likely to send Manuel away without his repaying the $30 loaned, and peons are not expected to have the money to return.

Maria was fond of horseback riding and went about over the hacienda on a pony. In her equestrian costume of short jacket bordered with gold lace and skirt covered with glittering ornaments she was very captivating. Many a young man of her own class would have been glad to marry her, but she had fallen in love with Manuel and would listen to none of them.

The lovers contrived to see each other occasionally, though it was difficult for Manuel to escape the notice of the overseer. Manuel, having an appointment with his sweetheart, would disappear and when he returned to work would be punished. But he could endure the punishment since he had received his reward in a meeting with Maria.

These absences were at last reported by the overseer to the hacendado, and he gave orders that the next time

HE SAW THE OIL WAS SLOWLY RISING.

Manuel quit work without leave he be shadowed. One afternoon when Manuel was missing a message was sent to Gonzales apprising him of the fact, and he sent out persons in every direction to look for him.

Manuel had gone to meet his sweetheart at a spot near which a little stream boiled and bubbled down a declivity to a river below. The place of meeting was about a hundred yards from the stream and surrounded by thick tropical foliage. The location, including the stream, was difficult to penetrate for any one who did not know of an opening in the thicket which Manuel had made and concealed.

Manuel, having quit work, darted into some bushes and crawled into a wood, through which he made his way to the trysting place. There he threw himself on the ground to wait for Maria, who was to come from a different direction. But Maria did not come. She had seen the persons sent out to learn where Manuel had gone and prudently remained away.

Manuel, lying flat on the ground, smelled petroleum. It did not seem to him that the oil could have been spilled in such a wild place, and it occurred to him that perhaps he was on oil land. Taking out his knife, he dug a little hole in the ground. The deeper he dug the stronger the smell, and at last at the bottom of the hole there was a thimbleful of oil.

Manuel arose and stood on his feet. He saw in that little hole a lifelong happiness with Maria.

Half an hour after the time that he was to meet Maria having passed without her coming, he set out on his return. On nearing the edge of the thicket he heard voices and shrank back. Returning to the stream, he found an avenue under the trees, and by following its bed he came out some distance from where he had started. He was in agony lest Maria had been watched and captured entering the trysting place. But, seeing her on her pony riding about as though nothing disturbed her, he took courage.

Manuel went back to work and, after being cross examined as to where he had been, took his punishment, and, though it was more severe than usual, he bore it without flinching, sustained, as he was, by his secret.

Fortunately for the lovers, their love was not known, and they could communicate, though, of course, always at a great risk. Manuel contrived to let Maria know that they must not try to meet again for some time. Meanwhile he determined not to go to the trysting place again in the day. But one night when all were asleep, armed with a spade, a lantern and some matches, he stole out of the peon quarters to revisit his find. Had he not gone there often he would not have been able to find the entrance, for he dared not light his lantern until well screened by the thicket.

On reaching the trysting place he struck a match and, having found the hole he had dug with his knife, began to throw out the earth with his spade. He had gone down but a few feet when there stood on the bottom of the hole he had dug several inches of a fluid. Lighting his lantern, he saw that the oil was slowly rising. Dipping a dry twig into it, he held it over the flame in the lantern, and it burned brightly.

This was enough. He refilled the hole and smoothed the ground above it, then went back to his quarters.

The next day Manuel went to Gonzales and offered him the $30 he had borrowed, with interest. The hacendado accepted it, and Manuel went forth a free man. Before leaving the hacienda he made an appointment to meet Maria clandestinely, and when they came together he told her that there was a fortune at their trysting place. The location was wild land outside Gonzales' hacienda. Nevertheless Manuel had but $70, and this was too little to tempt the owner to sell any of his property. Maria was accorded liberal pin money by her father and could produce $100. But she owned a jewel which would bring a hundred more. In all the two raised $300. Then Manuel found the owner of the land, and, representing that he wished to erect a sawmill beside the stream, which could be used for power, he succeeded in buying twenty acres of ground at $10 an acre.

As soon as the deed had passed to him Manuel threw up his hat joyfully. He had $100 left with which to develop his oil well. He dug with his spade a sluiceway by which he turned a part of the stream into a new channel that ran within a few yards of his well. Then he made a millwheel and bought a pump with gearing. Lastly, he dug his oil well to a depth of ten feet, at the bottom of which stood several feet of oil.

When Manuel set his machinery to work to pump out the oil he was anxious as to the flow continuing. He pumped for some time, looking into the well and was delighted to see that the flow continued as fast as he pumped. Then he knelt and thanked his patron saint for the blessing that had been bestowed upon him.

Manuel said nothing to any one about his oil property. He bought a few empty barrels and filled them with oil. With his ax he cleared a way so that a team could haul them away and with the money he got for the oil bought more barrels and very soon had money enough to build a shed over his machinery.

One day Gonzales, who was riding over his hacienda, saw a well dressed man, also mounted, coming toward him. When the stranger neared him Gonzales recognized his former peon, Manuel Perez.

"What are you doing here, and in those clothes?" asked the hacendado.

"I came to ask the hand of your daughter."

"My daughter!"

"Yes, senor. I have good blood in my veins, and I am rich."

"Rich? In what does your fortune consist—assurance?"

"If you will come with me I will show it to you."

Moved by curiosity, Gonzales rode with his former slave to the oil well. When he saw the crude machinery and, Manuel having turned on the power, a barrel of oil filled in a few minutes, he was astonished. He did not give Manuel his daughter, but he prospected for oil not only on his hacienda, but on contiguous property.

No other outlet for the petroleum was found, and the failure greatly enhanced the value of Manuel Perez's property. Americans, Englishmen, everybody, came to see the well, and large sums were offered the owner for his property. He would not sell, and with his profits he developed his means for getting out the oil, and since it continued to flow as fast as he took it out he soon had an enormous income.

When Gonzales had tested all his own and adjacent property without finding oil Manuel went to him again to ask for Maria, and this time the hacendado succumbed. The wedding festivities took place at the bride's home, but when they were over her husband took her to a handsome place of his own. He has never sold a foot of the ground he purchased for a song and has refused every offer for the whole property. Whenever he needs money he sets his machinery going, fills a few hundred barrels with oil and sells them.

This course certain Mexicans who have owned gold mines have pursued, but it has not been common with oil.

Culinary Notes

Putting Up Rhubarb.

The end of the season rhubarb may be preserved for winter pies without being cooked at all. It will retain its freshness until the new supply comes on in the spring.

The rhubarb should be cut into three-quarter inch pieces and put into quart jars. When the jars are full water from the cold water faucet should be run into them until all the air is forced out. After all the air bubbles have come to the top the mouth of the jars should be wiped dry and the covers screwed on with a can tightener. The jars should be kept standing in a cool place and the covers tightened each day. They should then be wrapped in paper and put in a dark closet not too near the heating pipes.

To make pies the water should be drained off and the same amount of sugar used as for fresh fruit. If the cans have been tight the fruit will be hard and solid.

Cantaloupe Pickle.

Firm, hard fruit should be selected for cantaloupe pickle, which is very good and very inexpensive. The fruit should be cut along the ridges and peeled. The softest part of the inside and the seeds should be cut out and the sections put into a quart jar lengthwise. The jars should be steamed in a steamer until they are hot, but before the fruit is cooked they should be taken out and filled with a hot sirup made of two pounds of sugar and one quart of vinegar to each four quarts of fruit. The spices—cloves, stick cinnamon and allspice—should be tied up in a piece of cheesecloth before being put in the jars.

Jars, covers and sirup should all be very hot before they are closed and should be sealed very tight. The pickle may be served with meat.

Delicious Tomato Sandwich.

Sandwiches will, with the opening of school, be in demand for the children's luncheon.

The tomato sandwich is piquant and appetizing.

Select large, smooth, meaty tomatoes, with few seeds. Slice very thin and place on ice while the other ingredients are being prepared. Mix together with a silver spoon till thick and creamy one tablespoonful of olive oil, a quarter teaspoonful of finely minced clove of garlic, two tablespoonfuls of thick sour cream, the yolk of one hard boiled egg, one-half teaspoonful of salt and one-half teaspoonful of black pepper. Cut white bread thin, leaving the crust on; spread with the dressing and place the cold tomatoes between the slices.

A Popular Jelly.

When crab apples can be had for the picking the housekeeper should put up lots of jelly. The proportions are four pounds of fruit to three pounds of sugar. The method is as follows:

Wash the apples and cut away decayed parts. Put into a vessel with water, cover and boil until the fruit is soft. The skin and cores can then be easily removed. Strain the water the apples have been cooked in through a jelly bag and put aside.

Dissolve the right quantity of sugar in the water set aside in the proportions of one pint to three pounds of sugar. Set the preserving pan over the stove and when the contents boil drop in the apples. Boil until clear and then put into jars.

Fried Vegetables.

The flavor of fried vegetables is much more delicate than that of raw. To prepare them heat two tablespoonfuls of butter for one pint of vegetables cut in cubes. Stir together over the fire until hot; then set where they will cook slowly for one-half hour, stirring often. Place on the hot part of the stove and cook for a few minutes longer. Drain butter and add vegetables to the dish they are to flavor. The herbs most frequently used for seasoning are parsley, chervil, chives, thyme, sage, summer savory and bay leaf. Wash well, place on a clean board and mince fine with a knife. Add to soups or sauces just before serving.

Dainty Dessert.

An excellent dessert may be made from a pound of marshmallows, each cube cut in four pieces, and added to a fifteen cent bottle of maraschino cherries, drained and with each cherry cut in half. A teacupful of chopped nuts, a half pint of cream whipped stiff and two tablespoonfuls of sherry complete the dessert.

The ingredients should be stirred together and put in the icebox for three hours to give the marshmallow a chance to dissolve. It should be served with sponge cake or lady fingers.

Summer Fruit Salad.

A delicious hot weather salad is this: Boil three-quarters of a cupful of water with half a cupful of sugar for fifteen minutes. Cool it and add a few drops of lemon juice and a spoonful of vanilla.

Prepare fresh fruit—bananas, grapes, pineapples, pears, peaches or any other seasonable fruits—and place it on lettuce leaves. Pour the cold sirup over the fruit just before serving.

TAX RATES FOR YEAR 1914

Highest Figures in History of Several Cities

Beverly is one of the few cities of the commonwealth reporting a reduction in its tax rate, being $2.20 less than in 1913. The rate for 1914 is $15.50. The valuation of the city shows an increase of nearly $4,000,000 most of which comes from the settlement of the estate of Francis Bartlett of Beverly and Boston, who for many years was the heaviest taxpayer in the city. The total valuation for 1914 is $44,596,630 as against $40,554,755 for 1913.

The tax rates reported to date are as follows,

NEWSY BRIEFS

An unusually large number of local mishaps are reported today.

Special meeting this evening of City Council.

Consult the classified advertisements on page five when you want to rent a house.

City Treasurer John Curtis returned this morning from a weeks gunning trip at the Cape.

Miss Annie Saea of Common street is the guest of her aunt in North Weymouth.

Miss Annie Sweeney of Providence, R. I. is the guest of Mrs. Joseph McTiernan of Common street.

Miss Mary Finn of Wesson avenue has returned from a two weeks visit at Goff's Falls, N. H.

Judge Cook is on the bench at the district court this week during the absence of Judge Avery.

Miss Mary O'Neil of Pine street has accepted a position as temporary clerk in the Assessors office.

Miss Mary Hooper, clerk to City Auditor Fairbanks, is having her vacation.

Several deaths are reported today. Until now Quincys death has been very low this summer.

Housekeepers would appreciate it if the city gave better notice of the dates when ashes will be collected.

Albert Hall and son Arthur have just returned from a ten days trip to their camp at North Eastham.

Mrs. Alva Beede has gone to North Eastham to stay until after Labor day with Mrs. A. Hall of Faxon road.

Miss Margaret Farrell of the Tax Collectors office is at the White Mountain house, in the White Mountains, on her vacation trip.

Mayor Miller is expected up from his camp in Hingham this afternoon and will remain through the evening in order to attend the special meeting of the City Council.

Mrs. Mary A. Fuller, widow of Elisha W. Fuller, died on Sunday at 64 Mascot street, Dorchester in her 79th year.

Once more the Daily Ledger wishes to say that it will not print the announcement of an engagement unless the writer of the item sends his or her name. It is useless to send anonymous news to a newspaper.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Everett Crane and Mr. and Mrs. George Hall returned Sunday from a 500 mile automobile trip which took them through the White Mountains. They have been absent on the trip several days.

Mr. and Mrs. John Lennon of Upton formerly of Quincy are in town this week for a few days' visit with relatives. Mr. Lennon was formerly superintendent of the Gas Light Co. under the old management.

Mrs. Viola B. Huber (nee Jones,) and daughter Florence Pearl, have returned to Portsmouth, N. H., after spending a pleasant month with her parents Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Jones of River street. Mrs. Florence Wilson (nee Jones) will be her guest for two weeks.

John J. Corcoran died Sunday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Margaret Pitts, 62 Bay View street, Quincy Point. The deceased was 64 years old and a resident of Milford. He is survived by a son and one daughter. The body will be sent to Lewiston, Me., for burial on Tuesday.

CURIOUS FOSSIL FORESTS.

Twelve Tower, One Above the Other, In Yellowstone Park.

In the Yellowstone National park twelve successive forests, one on top of another, have been buried by outflows of lava and petrified, according to a government pamphlet entitled, "Fossil Forests of the Yellowstone National Park," by F. H. Knowlton.

The area within which the fossil forests are now found was apparently in the beginning an irregular but relatively flat basin, on the floor of which, after a time, there grew the first forest. Then there came from some of the volcanoes, probably those to the north, an outpouring of ashes, mud flows and other material which entirely buried the forest, but so gradually that the trees were simply submerged by the incoming material, few of them being prostrated. On the raised floor of the basin, after a time, the next forest came into existence, only to be in turn engulfed as the first had been, and so on through the period represented by the 2,000 feet or more of similar beds.

The whole history of the manner in which these forests were fossilized is not fully understood, but it was undoubtedly dependent on or at least greatly facilitated by the presence of volcanic and hydrothermal activity, which was doubtless then, as it is to some extent now, a marked feature of the park region. The fossil forests are surrounded by a matrix that is known as an acidic lava, which contains abundant silica in solution. The first part of the process of silicification may well have been that silica would be deposited in all the cells and vessels of the wood, making an accurate cast of all open spaces. Then, while the slow process of decay went on, as each particle of organic matter was removed its place was taken by the silica, until finally all the wood substance had disappeared and its place, atom by atom, had been taken by silica.

SAVE THE SOIL.

Don't Let the Rains Wash the Valuable Plant Food Away.

If you knew that it takes nature 10,000 years to form a foot of soil maybe you would have a higher opinion of Mother Earth and be more careful how you drain your garden or field.

If you saw a granary full of rat holes you would suspect a careless farmer. But a field left to wash away by the unchecked rush of surface water after a downpour is fully as wasteful. The only difference is that here the waste is of plant food before it gets into the grain.

If your garden or field is on a slope, terrace it; if on a level, plant it not in straight rows, but in circles. And in both cases tile drain it, for the stuff that washes away is precisely the stuff that your crops most need. Once gone it is expensive to replace.

When you stop to think that everything depends on the soil, clearly the soil is worth saving.—Seattle Star.

A Dog Story.

We brought from Scotland a collie about six months old. He was allowed to be with us at the breakfast table, but never to be fed in the dining room. This rule was enforced by my daughter. I was the only member of the family who ever broke over the rule. And often when I offered him a tempting bone he would glance across the table, and if he caught the forbidding eye he would resist the temptation. But one morning she left the table abruptly. Rab followed her into the hall and watched her till she had closed the door of her study. Then he scampered back, nudged my elbow, as if to say, "Now is our time," seized the bone and was soon crunching it with the greatest satisfaction.—London Spectator.

Red Sea Heat.

At certain seasons of the year the Red sea is almost unbearable. The water taken from seventy to eighty feet below the surface at 6 o'clock in the morning will often register a temperature as high as 90 degrees. If, in addition, a sandstorm thinks fit to blow the whole air is full of a mist of innumerable particles of fine, hot sand, which blind and suffocate at the same time.

Striking at the Cause.

Mr. Littlerest—Doctor, what did you tell me was your special treatment for sleeplessness? Medico—We strike at the cause or the origin of the trouble. Mr. Littlerest—You don't say so! Well, you will find the baby in the other room. Only don't strike at him too hard.—New York Globe.

Squaring It.

Mr. Shoddy—Yes, that's the armah used by my ancestah who came ovah with the Conquerah. Young Lady—(after examining the armor carefully)—It says "Made in Germany" on the gauntlet. Mr. Shoddy—Oh, yes; my ancestah—er—started from there, don't yer know.—London Telegraph.

Contemptible.

Grace—If it was a secret why in the world did you tell that girl? Gwendolyn—It won't do her any good, my dear. I'd already telephoned it to all the girls she knew.—Puck.

Human Nature.

Eddie—Pa, what's human nature? Pa—That's the thing that always catches it when a fellow can't blame it on anybody else.—London Mail.

There are more men ennobled by study than by nature.

WEEK-END GUESTS AT SQUANTUM

Postal Clerks at Home--Womens Club Dinner

The Postal clerks gave another of their "at homes" Saturday evening. The cottage on Bayside road which they have used for a club house for the past two seasons was prettily decorated with Japanese lanterns and flags. Dancing was a feature of the evening's entertainment. Refreshments were served. About seventy-five guests were present.

James Loughan, who was taken suddenly ill Sunday while sitting on the beach talking with friends, is reported much better.

Mr. and Mrs. James Grady of Manchester, N. H., spent the week end with Mr. and Mrs. Gustav Wunderlich, Bellevue road.

Mrs. Helen McGowan of Orchard street had as her week end guest Mrs. Mark Redmond, Roxbury.

Paul Lovejoy passed Sunday at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Lovejoy, Hampdem street.

Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Wallace of New York city, who have been visiting at the home of Mrs. Wallace father, Perley Bostwick, are off for a tour of the White Mountains.

The members of the Squantum Women's club are going to have "Ladies night" at the Squantum Inn this evening. There will be a dinner served from 6 to 8 followed by an entertainment. Whist will be played until 10 o'clock. Members and their lady friends are invited.

Millard Thompson of Lynn was the house guest over Sunday of Mr. and Mrs. William Reed, Bellevue road.

KNIVES USED IN SHIPYARD ROW

There was a lively row late Sunday afternoon near the shipyard gates on East Howard street, as a result of which Alex. G. Jagobider is at the City Hospital with the muscles of his left arm severed by slashes with a knife alleged to have been made by Mauro and Michael Rubis of 142 Sumner street. The men had been employed on the Rivadavia in the shipyard and the row is said to have started over an argument as to the fighting qualities of the Italians and Greeks.

Word was sent to the police station and Capt. McKay with a squad of officers went down and arrested the two men. The injured man was also taken to the police station and later to the Quincy Hospital where he was attended by Dr. Burke.

The two Italians were arraigned in court this morning when their counsel stated that there were a number of other men concerned in the row and he wanted all of the parties brought into court and tried at the same time.

Judge Cooke replied that if the one trial should settle all the European difficulties he might consent but as it would not he would hear these cases first. They were continued until next Thursday for a hearing.

DIED OF DIPHTHERIA.

Norman L. McTear, 4 years, died Sunday at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. James McTear, 108 Beach street, after a short sickness little boy was taken to Mt. Wollaston cemetery several hours after for burial.

Norman is the fourth child to die this summer from diphtheria and the residents of the Fifth and Sixth wards are somewhat concerned over the slight epidemic which has raged the past three months. They are inclined to believe that ice cream cones have been transmitting the germs, and will ask that a rigid investigation be made of their manufacture.

BAND CONCERT.

The program of the concert to be given at the Furnace Brook Parkway, West Quincy on Tuesday evening at 7.30 by the Naval Brigade band will be:

March, "Union Forever" Scouton
Overture, "Morning, Noon and Night" Suppe

RESCUED BY MEEMER CREW

Two men, whose names were not learned, were rescued from a watery grave Saturday afternoon off the Narrows by John T. Cananagh. Mr. Cananagh was out sailing in the Meemer with a party and when in the narrows saw two men in the water. They were completely exhausted and were barely able to keep afloat. The Meemer came about and one man was hauled on board the yacht over the stern and the other taken over the bow. When taken aboard they were completely exhausted and it was some time before they were fully revived.

The men said that they had started out to swim from Lovell's island to the Graves and back. Usually in cases of a long swim the swimmers are accompanied by some one in a small boat, but these two men started unattended. They had been in the water about an hour when they found that their strength was about gone.

After being revived Mr. Cavanagh took them ashore at Lovell's island. They were profuse in their thanks and declared but for Mr. Cavanagh's appearance they might have been drowned.

DEPARTURE OF RIVADAVIA

On the Fore River bridge were nearly a thousand people and traffic was regulated by four Quincy and four Weymouth police officers. Hundreds of others were grouped under the protecting shadows of the Patch and the Sheppard coal sheds and several thousand others lined the banks of Fore River on both sides.

There were no cheers, the only din created being the shrieking blasts of the tow boat whistles.

Awaiting the arrival of the Rivadavia at the Navy Yard are 800 officers and men to man the ship. They will go aboard Wednesday after which the formal ceremonies will take place in Boston Harbor.

It will require nearly six weeks to put the boat in shape for the trip to the navy yard at Brooklyn, N. Y., where she will go into drydock to have her bottom scraped and painted.

After this is done she will have her final 24-hour endurance run with the officers and crew of Argentina in charge. She will sail for Buenos Ayres about October 15.

The Rivadavia was launched at Quincy, August 26, 1911, three years ago Wednesday.

CITY EMPLOYEE HURT.

John Gammon, an employee at the City stables is at his home on Parker street suffering from a possible fracture of the skull. The accident happened Saturday afternoon. He was on the garbage tank when he lost his balance and fell a distance of about six feet landing on his head on the concrete walk. His injuries were treated by Dr. Sheehan after which he was taken to his home.

BRIEFS

John Donahue, president and James M. Cantfill of Division 5, A. O. H., and Councilman James O'Dowd, president of Division 22, A. O. H. are at Worcester attending the annual state convention.

Paul Revere Woman's Relief Corps will hold its regular meeting Tuesday evening at Grand Army hall. The corps will attend the funeral of Mrs. Franklin Jacobs Tuesday afternoon at Quincy Point.

Richard Hussey, of Furnace Brook parkway, the well-known soprano, celebrated his 24th birthday Sunday. He received many handsome gifts. Michael Martin, caterer, laid covers for eight, all prominent musicians of Greater Boston.

IN PUMPKIN TIME

Mr Bug (House hunting)—That's about the size cottage I want, but I must say I don't just like the looks of it.

TOPOGRAPHY OF MEUSE WAR ZONE

Sidelights on the Franco-German Frontier.

FORMIDABLE FRENCH FORTS

They Extend a Distance of Fifty Miles, Covering All Possible Crossings of River Famous In Histories of Battles—Sketches of Longwy and Other Cities Figuring In Armies' Moves.

The following description of the territory in the battle zone along the Franco-German frontier has been prepared by the National Geographic society and is of particular interest because of its timeliness:

The Meuse Region.—The Meuse river has been within earshot of probably as many battles as any other river of like length in the world. The river rises at Pouilly, in the department of Haut Marne, France, and flows through Belgium and Holland into the Rhine. It is about 500 miles long, and its traffic, through the navigable portion, is almost as heavy as that of the Rhine itself. Near Bazeilles, just a few miles from Sedan, where the Prussian troops captured the French emperor during the Franco-Prussian war, it disappears underground for about three miles. This is only a few miles from the Belgian frontier. The river is canalized in Belgium, between Liege and Vise.

Strongly Fortified.

The Meuse line of French forts extends from Verdun to Toul, a distance of fifty miles, completely covering all possible crossings of the Meuse by hostile forces moving Paris-ward from Metz. Between Toul and Epinal the frontier districts were left open.

At the latter place there is a series of forts beginning what is known as the Moselle line, which ends at Belfort and commands the approaches across the frontier from Alsace and through the Vosges mountains. The purpose of these two lines is to deflect possible invaders through the open gap between the two lines, called the Touree d'Epinal.

Longuyon.—A place of about 4,000 inhabitants, pleasantly situated at the confluence of the Chiers and the Cusne. It is a noted hardware trade center.

Longwy.—A fortress of the second class is situated here. The place is on the Chiers river, about seventy miles north of northwest of Nancy and some eighteen miles south of east of Luxemburg. It is strengthened by an enceinte or wall built around it, with a few outlying fortifications. The outlying region has numerous iron mines and many blast furnaces. Longwy came into the possession of France in 1678 and was later fortified by Vauban. The Prussians captured it three times—in 1792, 1815 and 1871.

Other Cities in War Zone.

Aix-la-Chapelle.—A city of approximately 150,000 population, with suburbs. It is located in Prussia, just east of the Belgian and Dutch frontiers. The Germans call it Aachen. It has fine railway connections with Cologne, Dusseldorf, Liege, Brussels, Maestricht and Antwerp. By the treaty of Luneville in 1801 it was given to France, but was awarded to Germany under the treaty of Vienna.

St. Trond.—A city of about 15,000 people, on a line drawn between Liege and Antwerp, about eighteen miles from Liege and an important strategic position between the German frontier and Brussels. Its fortification was recommended by General Brialmont. It lies between Tirlemont, a fortified town with a military wall six miles in circumference around its stronghold, and Tongres.

Verdun.—One of the strongest fortresses in northeast France, on the line between Paris and Metz. There are many forts guarding every possible approach from the frontier. The Germans bombarded the fortress three times in the Franco-Prussian war. It surrendered the last time. The chief quarter of the town is dominated by the citadel. The whole town is surrounded by a bastioned enceinte pierced by four gates. In all there are sixteen large forts and twenty smaller works, with a perimeter of about thirty miles. The greatest diameter of the ring of fortifications is nine miles.

BIG CHANCE FOR PRIZE MONEY

Seized Ships May Be Kept For Sale After War Captors Getting Proceeds.

Taken as prizes of war the bluejackets of the contending European fleets will make the biggest hauls of prize money since the privateering days of the Napoleonic wars. Scores upon scores of ships have been seized or captured, and while international law governing the seizure or capture of enemy's vessels on the high seas or in hostile ports seems to be somewhat vague in actual application it is fairly certain that a good many of these prizes will be condemned by the admiralty prize courts especially appointed for such cases. The proceeds will then be divided pro rata among the captors, according to some recognized scale of award to be fixed by each government.

Prize money and bounty are no longer awarded in the United States navy.

AUTO LEAPS OVER BRIDGE

the Quincy hospital suffering from shock.

The two youngest Snyder girls were put into a passing automobile and rushed to the hospital soon after they were rescued. When Mrs. Snyder learned that her oldest daughter had not been accounted for she collapsed.

Medical Examiner John Peterson took them both to the Quincy hospital where Mrs. Synder broke down completely. Both were found to be suffering from severe bruises.

Mr. Snyder told the police who came from Hingham and Weymouth that he was able to extricate himself from his seat at the wheel only with the greatest difficulty when the car went off the bridge.

Darkness came shortly after the six members of the party had been rescued. Search was made with lanterns up and down the river, but no trace could be found of the missing girl.

The machine rested in the river this morning, but today it will be taken ashore. Nearly 15 feet of iron fence which was torn away will be replaced as soon as possible. The accident is thought to have been due to the steering gear jamming, one of the bolts having been found on the bridge after it occurred. Mr. Snyder says a tire burst just as he came to the bridge.

The ten months old son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Cobb of Weymouth, Russell Briesler Cobb, was christened on Sunday just at the close of the morning service at Christ church in the presence of parents, grand parents and a great grandmother, Mrs. Mary Pollock of Bigelow street.

MRS. FRANKLIN JACOBS.

Word has been received of the death at Bradford, N. H., of Mrs. Mary A., widow of Franklin Jacobs formerly of Quincy. The body will be brought to Quincy, where funeral services will be held Tuesday from her late home, 499 Washington street. Mrs. Jacobs will be best remembered as the wife of Franklin Jacobs who for several years was the Superintendent of the Quincy Home.

The family came to Quincy from Norwell in 1887, at which time Mr. Jacobs became superintendent of the Home. He continued in office for a number of years, until failing health obliged him to resign during the term of Mayor Bryant. He was a prominent member of Mt. Wollaston lodge of Odd Fellows, also being affiliated with the Encampment. He filled all of the offices in the lodge and encampment. He was at one time a deputy and later in office of the Grand lodge. During the war he served in the 4th regiment and while in Quincy served for a number of years as chaplain of Paul Revere post, G. A. R.

CENTENNIAL OF FLAG.

The Governors of the original 13 states will be conspicuous at the National Star Spangled Banner Centennial celebration to be held at Baltimore, Sept. 6 to 13. Gov. Walsh of Massachusetts has accepted an invitation to attend and will be accompanied by the First Corps of Cadets who will participate in the big military parade incidental to the celebration.

MAYOR INTRODUCES BUDGET NO. 3

Fire Department Said to Need $1800 Additional, and Assessors More

A Reduction in the Tax Rate Is Promised

"While the law says that the Assessors shall not tell what the tax rate will be, it does not say that the Mayor shall not tell, and I will say that it will not be over $22.70."

Thus spoke Mayor Miller at the special meeting of the City Council Monday night, when Assessor Buckley in reply to a question of Councilman Little, as to what the tax rate would be if the supplementary budget did not pass, said he could not tell.

The only absent member was Councilman Barnicoat.

ELECTION OFFICERS.

A communication was received from the Mayor appointing the following election officers which was read and laid over until the next meeting.

FIRST CLASS HOTEL NEEDED

Late Travellers Are Often Without Shelter

One of the many things that Quincy needs, aside from a lavatory in City Square, is a first class hotel where strangers can find lodging. Such a place is especially needed by people arriving in Quincy late at night who miss their car or railroad connections to their destination.

According to Mrs. Frank Wrigley, there is scarcely a night but what she is called up late by some traveller who has missed connections, asking if she can not accommodate them for the night. Often times it is after midnight when these people call by telephone, which means that her sleep is disturbed, having to get up to answer the call.

As a rule the people who desire accommodations for the night are respectable people who come from South Shore expecting to make connections for Boston, and arrive in Quincy late only to find that they must wait until morning before a car leaves for Boston, or that the last car of the night has departed.

In many cases the parties are ladies of respectable character who are seeking accommodations for the night and it is rather hard to refuse, but as Mrs. Wrigleys accommodations are limited this is the only alternative.

In the case of men it is often possible for them to find a place to sleep, but with ladies it is difficult.

At this season of the year there are many sight seers in the city, not a few of whom would like to remain over night if it were possible, and if Quincy had a first class hotel near City Square, they could be accommodated.

There are probably few cities throughout the country, of the population of Quincy, that do not boast of one or more first class hotels. It is a thing that Quincy lacks.

SWARM OF WASPS ON ELM AVE.

Martial law prevails in the vicinity of 63 Elm avenue, the declaration having been formally announced by a swarm of wasps who have taken possession of a handsome tree. All efforts to dislodge them have been futile, the only answer they made to fumes from burning sulphur being a change of position on the branches.

The wasps arrived the latter part of the week and Sunday and Monday put up a strong defense when attacked by neighbors. Several yet bear the marks of the fray.

Another attempt will be made to force them from the neighborhood. They have extended their picket line several hundred feet outside the colony limits and woe unto them who fail to use extreme care in passing.

THE CLARK SCHOOL.

One of the most essential qualifications in a young man or woman today is the knowledge of shorthand and typewriting. The business world demands it, and in order to reach the top of the ladder of success one must have it. There are schools all over the country that are training in this line of work, but there is no school that has accomplished what the Clark Shorthand Institute has. In June this school graduated the most successful class of its kind. Registration for the fall is now open. The school employs no runners. All business is done direct with the office, 338 Washington street, Boston.

FREDERICK G. WILSON.

Frederick G. Wilson, a well known resident of Braintree, passed away this morning at his home 132 Middle street, aged 47 years. Mr. Wilson has been a resident of Braintree for about fifteen years, his business being in Boston. He leaves a widow, a son, Gardiner, and a daughter Miss Dorothy. He was a member of All Souls church and the Cochato club.

RIVADAVIA AT BOSTON

Program for Transfer to Argentine Navy

The Argentine battleship Rivadavia, which left Fore River shipyard at noon Monday in the presence of upward of 5,000 people, docked at the Charlestown Navy Yard shortly after 5 o'clock.

The delay in making the trip was occasioned by an engine test which took place outside Boston light in which the turbines again demonstrated their unusual efficiency.

The principal feature of the afrival was the presence of the entire crew of 800 Argentine sailors who will man the craft who stood at attention on the dock and sang the national anthem of Argentina and an original song entitled "Rivadavia," as she was warped to her berth, while the Marine band gave a concert.

Between now and Wednesday the vessel will take on supplies and amunition and that morning the officers and crew will go aboard.

She will then drop down the harbor and when well outside the three mile limit the formal transfer and the raising of the blue and white flag of Argentina will take place with appropriate ceremonies.

It will be the first time in the history of the local yard that a foreign ship will be commissioned here and the band will render a concert and the battery of the U. S. S. New York will fire a salute while it is in progress.

The ship, after Wednesday, will be in command of Capt. Jose Moneta, a native of Buenos Ayres, who superintended the construction of the ship at Quincy. He entered the Naval Academy of his native city in 1884 and was graduated five years later. He was then appointed midshipman in the Navy. His first visit to this country was in 1908 when he commanded the training ship Presidente Sarmiento when she made her first trip around the world. He has received the decorations of the Kaiser and the Czar of Russia, and is an officer of the Legion of Honor of France. He is a recognized diplomat and has served his country on various occasions in that capacity.

LADIES NIGHT AT SQUANTUM

An Enjoyable Entertainment Followed the Dinner

The "Ladies' night" held by the Squantum Women's club Monday night proved a huge success. It was 7 o'clock before the guests were all seated to partake of the splendid repast served by mein hosts Messrs. Berghaus and Morse.

Following the dinner a most enjoyable entertainment was given. Mr. Johnson sang a group of songs, "The yeoman's wedding day," "Gypsy John" and "To my first love." These were all well rendered and showed that Mr. Johnson has a strong voice of wide range. Mrs. Mabel Walker sang "I love you truly," "Just a-wearying for you," and later sang a group of songs written by her cousin Grace Mayton. Mrs. Walker's rendition of these songs proved her ability as a soloist. Mrs. Ethel Jones Bostwick was accompanist, playing in her usual finished style. B. Sturgis Wood, who is a very popular reader of Squantum, recited "One of Job's Comforts," "Paradise," and "Scenes in South Station."

After the entertainment the dining room was cleared for whist. Mrs. James Allen received first souvenir for the highest score, Mary Loughan and Mrs. Bertha Dinsmore were tie, so cut for choice, Mrs. Dinsmore won second and Miss Loughan third. The next two scores were also tied, the fourth going to Mrs. M. L. Walker and fifth to Mrs. Ethel Bostwick.

The party broke up at a late hour. Those present were: Mrs. F. A. Morton, Mrs. Helen McGowan, Mrs. A. E. Redmond, Mrs. John Holmes, Mrs. Louise Holt, Mrs. W. D. Donovan, Mrs. J. D. Uppling, Mrs. S. H. Adams, Mrs. J. K. Ackley of New York, Mrs. G. H. Hersey, Mrs. C. A. Reid, Mrs. J. E. Willis, Mrs. A. S. Chislom, Mrs. F. W. Anderson, Mrs. W. O. LITTLE GIRL IS RESCUED

Alice Burns, a Houghs Neck resident, was rescued from drowning Monday afternoon by Earle Rigger of New York, who plunged in clothes and all and brought her ashore. Alice, the eight year old daughter of Andrew Burns, proprietor of the Great Hill House, fell off the public landing. Her predicament was witnessed by Rigger who acted immediately.

She was treated at her home by a physician and is doing well today.

PLAYGROUND KIDDIES PICNIC

Fair Weather Favors Them and They Are Having a Glorious Time at Park

Basket Lunch With Sports Morning and Afternoon

A crowd of several hundred children are having the time of their lives today at the annual picnic of the children of the plubic playgrounds of the city. The picnic is being held on the lower field at Merrymount park, an ideal place for the affair.

Most of the children from the different wards of the city were taken to the park this morning in automobiles and soon after their arrival the sports began under the direction of L. F. LaRose.

The first was a game of base ball between the Ward Two and Ward Three boys. The game was replete with good plays and was won by the South Quincy boys with a score of 3 to 0.

The other races and winners were as follows:

One lap of the track, 35 yards, won by J. Gallagher, Ward Two. J. Ryan of Ward Two was second and H. O'Brien of Ward Three third.

A series of preliminary races were then run off in heats, which will be finished at the exhibition Thursday when the finals will be run. The results tis morning were as follows:

BOYS RACES.

Class A, First heat, 35 yards won by W. Hartery of Ward Three, Alex. McDowd of Ward Two second.

Second heat won by William Nelson of Ward Three, E. Littlewood of Ward Three second.

Class B, 50 yards, won by J. Kelley of Ward Three; R. Debour of Ward Three second.

Second heat, won by C. Hartery of Ward Three; J. Cahill of Ward Three second.

Class C, 100 yards, won by J. Gallagher of Ward Two; L. Curtin of Ward Three second.

Second heat won by J. Ryan of Ward Two; E. Barry of Ward Three second.

GIRLS RACES.

Class A, 25 yards, won by Elizabeth Tucker of Ward Two; Mary Scully of Ward three second.

Second heat, won by Jeanette Barrows of Ward Two; Mabel Deacon of Ward Three second.

Class B, won by Louis Hartery of Ward Three; Ida Zirlstein of Ward Two second.

Second heat won by Evelyn McArthur of Ward Two Cecelia Crimmins of Ward Three second.

Third heat won by Mildred Anderson of Ward Two; Molly Kauffmann of Ward Three second.

Class C, 75 yards, won by Violet Tucker of Ward Two; Elizabeth Crimmins of Ward Three, second.

Second heat, won by Loretta McArthur of Ward Two, Louise Hartery of Ward Three, second.

Third heat, won by Philomena Gallagher of Ward Two, Lillian O'Brien of Ward Three, second.

At 1 o'clock, the children who brought their lunch baskets with them separated into groups and enjoyed their lunch. A little later a load of ice cream arrived on the grounds and there was a grand scramble for a dish of ice cream.

Other sports will be run off this afternoon including a girls' base ball game, soccer football, etc.

In view of the fact that the revenue is falling off, it is believed that Congress will increase the appropriations.

The Davis tennis cup has been lost to Australasia, but there is no reason for despairing of the republic while we are able to play a better game of baseball.

Many people are doing their best to help the speculators make money, by buying provisions away ahead of present needs.

If the foot ball season killed off a tenth as many young men as are drowned in bathing any pleasant summer's day, how the magazines and newspapers would resound with debate over the cruel game!

Modern Europe looks back with contempt on previous centuries, when the means of killing people were so very primitive.

Many people are restlessly waiting for the opening of the stock exchanges so that they can lose money to the speculators.

As the Paris fall styles are said to be thoroughly absurd, it is evident that the dressmakers of that city are right on the job in spite of the war.

THE WAR NEWS.

Never has any war news been held down so closely as in the present conflict. During the Spanish war the story of every skirmish was fed out to the reporters about as soon as it happened. It made no great difference, as the Spaniards were too inefficient to shape their campaign to meet our motions.

The striking power of a modern army must be enormously increased by this blanket of secrecy. There is something majestically ominous in the fact that from five to ten millions of troops can be marched into battle array and position, with their location and destination unknown to the world.

Whenever there is a real battle, though, the force that wins will be quick enough to let the world know that it has scored. The newspapers fill the gaps with columns and columns of dispatches. They are all interesting, though the heart of the story is left out. But news of the real Armageddon can not long be delayed.

THE TAX RATE.

Mayor Miller has given the taxpayers some relief, by his assurance at the meeting of the City Council that there will be no increase in the tax rate this year. Under those conditions it may be all right to pass the supplementary budget, No. 3 of which is now underway. Under a $12 per $1,000 limit, it would not be possible, for that limit was exhausted with the annual appropriation order in March, but there is no limit this year under the new law.

At first Mayor Miller was opposed to supplementary budgets but he was unable to check No. 1 which was proposed and passed by the City Council, and now he has introduced two other budgets of $9,500, and $2,100.

These two will require a tax rate of 25 to 50 cents. But this increase does not worry the administration any, because common rumor has it that the Assessors have made a tremendous increase in valuations, making possible quite a reduction in the tax rate, possibly to $20 or $21.

One report has it that the valuation of 1914 will show an increase of about four million dollars, carrying the total valuation of the city over $40,000,000, but even that would not bring the tax rate down to $20. With one exception, there have been no two consecutive years where the increase in valuation has been four million dollars and $2,561,285 holds the record as the maximum increase since Quincy became a city in 1888.

This year taxpayers will not be happy when the tax rate is announced especially if the Assessors report a big increase in valuation of the city, for they will have to hold their breath until they receive their tax bills. Probably few of the taxpayers will have a smaller bill, although the rate is $1 or $2 lower. A big increase in valuation will mean a much higher State tax and County tax, and other assessments in 1915.

ALLIES MEET WITH GREAT DISASTER

Driven Back All Along the Line by German Troops

RETREAT APPEARS TO BE ALMOST A ROUT

Crushing Movements of Germans In Full Swing and French and British Fall Back Everywhere—Invaders' Successes on French Frontier and In Strategic Towns of Belgium Uniformly Triumphant—Little Hope Held Out For Safety of Namur—British Troops Stand Up Better Under Onslaught Than Do the French—Confusion Reigns Over Long Battle Line—Tremendous Losses Probably Sustained by Both Sides

London, Aug. 25.—The German army has won the first great battle of the great war. All along the 100-mile front of battle the allies have been driven back, not slowly and stubbornly, but so swiftly that the defeat seems so catastrophic that it might be termed a rout.

From Namur and Neufchateau and from the region about Charleroi in Belgium; from Diedenhofen in German Lorraine; from Longwy and Luneville in France—every dispatch received in London indicates a crushing defeat for the allies.

The preliminary work of the campaign is over. The battling is now on French soil.

From Belgium and Luxemburg and Germany the onward rushing movement of the German armies is in full swing. Everywhere the French and the British are falling back, unable to resist the irresistible force of the armies of the Meuse and the Moselle.

Slender Ray of Hope

Were it not for the dawning hope held out by the Russian advance into East Prussia, London would be almost in despair. The German successes on the French frontier and in the strategic towns of Belgium were so uniformly triumphant that England is praying only that the defeat may not turn out to have been a rout.

The cryptic message made public by the French war office only intensifies the general feeling that the British and French armies have been shattered almost beyond redemption by the onslaught of the German armies.

Every bulletin from the front indicates that the Germans were not only superior in numbers and in guns to their adversaries, but also that they had outwitted and outfought the men opposed to them.

Details of the fighting about Mons, where the British troops are believed to be in greatest strength, were distressingly fragmentry, but the admission from the French war office that the allies had withdrawn to their covering positions is taken as an indication that even about Mons the defenders of France had been hurled back.

Where Fighting Was Fiercest

About Charleroi, where the fighting was fiercest, the hostile forces battled in the streets, the tide of war eddying back and forth as reinforcements were quickly thrust into places where signs of wavering were detected. Here only, along the great battle line, the allies were reported as victorious, but it is not believed that they were able to hold their advantage, as they were described as outnumbered by the foe.

Even at Namur, the strongest position held by the allies, the first line of defense fell before the desperate charges of the Germans and little hope is held out for the defenders of the great forts. They are believed to be in as hapless a plight as the forlorn hope left at Liege—isolated by the hundreds of thousands of the enemy who have flowed about the city on the Meuse and advanced beyond toward the French frontier.

Namur In Great Peril

Namur is like an island that is being undermined by the resistless strength of the sea, with the waters on all sides slowly but relentlessly tearing away at the exposed portions of land.

The situation on the Belgian-French frontier is not so bad as that on the boundaries between Luxemburg and Lorraine and France. It is still possible to believe that the British and French who have been struggling to defend the Belgian approaches may have fallen back stubbornly to the fortified towns that centre near Mauberge.

From all accounts that have been received the British troops have stood up better under the withering fire of the enemy than have the French and they have apparently, overborne by superior numbers, retired in good order to the covering positions after inflicting tremendous losses upon the Germans.

Allies' Greatest Danger

The great danger now lies in the German attack of the army of the Moselle, the great battering ram that has been hammering since Saturday on the eastern boundary of France. This army has always been feared much more than the active army of the Meuse, which has been performing in a much more spectacular manner in Belgium, and it is the general opinion that the army of the Moselle has done even more than was expected of it.

At Neufchateau, in Belgian Luxemburg, it has inflicted a disastrous defeat upon the French, and farther south the collapse of the French defense seems complete.

Five French corps were frightfully cut up near Diedenhofen, and a message from Berlin states that everywhere along the eastern French border the French are fleeing westward a panic so precipitate that it seems impossible that they can be reformed for many days. The retreat of the southern French wing on Verdun has been cut off. Nancy has probably fallen. Beyond Longwy and Nancy the German armies are streaming westward, confident that many days cannot pass before they are face to face with the forts of Paris.

Great Danger In Advance

Danger, a greater danger than has been known to a modern army, lies in this advance. The panic-stricken French may disorganize the forces that have fallen back from Belgium and the Germans, sweeping in from Luxemburg and Lorraine, will fall upon the flanks of the British and French, already preoccupied with the assault that is being delivered against them from the front.

The confusion that reigns over the long battle line is so far beyond human conjecture that it is impossible for anyone to know what has happened at any single place. Only by putting together the meagre messages from the front and carefully guarded admissions of the French war office is it possible to realize the extent of the calamity that seems to be hovering over the armies of the allies.

It is possible that too black a meaning is being read into them, but even the most stalwart believer in the invincibility of British arms is faced with the conclusion that the allies are in the shadow of a collossal disaster.

Wilted by Murderous Fire

The British troops, with the exception of one brigade of cavalry, which was driven back, held their own until ordered back. Two French army corps brilliantly but futilely tried to take the offensive against the German onrush, but they were wilted like leaves in autumn by the murderous fire poured upon them. These engagements took place west of the Meuse.

East of the river the story was the same. The French once more took the offensive through the heavily-wooded country, but when they reached the German entrenchments they were shattered by the gray army.

The Germans who swept through northern Belgium found the French defenders unprepared, a fear that had been freely expressed ever since the occupation of Brussels. German Cavalry patrols rode into Roubaix, only six miles distant from the French forts of Lille, and spread terror through th Turcoing district.

They were hardly opposed by the French, who seem to have weakened their defenses in the north by their Alsace-Lorraine operations, lulled into a false security by their certainty that the Germans would not attempt a drive so far to the north.

Claim That Russian Army Has Made Most Rapid Advance

The Russian north army is moving rapidly along the railway from Eydtkuhnen toward Koenigsburg and is reported west of Insterburg, according to a St. Petersburg dispatch.

The Russian front is many miles long and is reported as sweeping the entire territory of eastern Prussia clear of the enemy as it moves forward.

The fighting has been of the most desperate character and the Russian war office claims the fighting effectiveness of the three German army corps which have been bearing the brunt of the defense has been seriously impaired.

The Russian centre is between Insterburg and Norkitten, while the front extends in a half circle from Grunfeide on the north far south into the lake region.

The official report of General Rennenkamp, who is in command of the Russian advance in East Prussia, claims that the greater part of eastern Prussia is now dominated by the Russians.

Austria Admits "Considerable Losses" In Fighting Servia

According to the London Times' Venice correspondent the official telegraph agency in Vienna publishes the following official notice on the Austro-Servian situation:

"On account of the Russian intervention in the Servian war Austria is forced to gather all its forces for the principal struggle in the northeast. Consequently the attack on Servia is henceforth looked upon as a punitive expedition and not as definite war.

"The decision, therefore, has been reached to retire from the offensive and take up a waiting attitude, making a fresh attack when opportunity presents itself.

"The considerable losses sustained by Austria on the banks of the Drina are not surprising in view of the superiority of the numbers of the enemy and the fact that the latter are fighting for their existence."

The spoil is known to have been enormous, fifty guns, complete ambulances, a complete equipment train, ammunition and several thousand prisoners falling into the hands of the Serbs.

GERMAN SUCCESSES

Berlin Reports the Victorious March of Kaiser's Armies

Official announcement was made at Berlin that the German army commanded by Grand Duke Albrecht of Wuertemberg defeated a French army at Neufchateau. It captured many guns, flags and prisoners, including several generals.

German armies under Rupprecht, Crown Prince Frederick Wilhelm and Grand Duke Albrecht are vigorously pursuing the French. The army under Rupprecht captured 150 guns at Luneville, Blamont and Cirey (in the French department of Meuarthe and Moselle). The army commanded by the crown prince pursued the French beyond Longwy.

The Germans are west of the river Meuse and advancing against Maubenuge. They have defeated an English brigade of cavalry.

ITALY IS PREPARING

Army Is Reported to Have Been Raised to 800,000 Men

Italian troops, according to reliable information reaching Geneva, are concentrating on the Austrian frontier.

The French frontier on Switzerland has been virtually stripped of its garrisons, owing to partial mobilization by individual summons and not by public order.

According to reports in Geneva, the Italian army has been raised to 800,000 men.

President Wilson Orders Tuckerton Wireless Station Closed

By direction of President Wilson, Secretary of Commerce Redfield informed the officials of the Tuckerton, N. J., wireless station that they were operating illegally and that their plant was liable to seizure by the government.

The operators at the Tuckerton station also have been warned not to receive or send any more messages of any kind.

Redfield informed the Tuckerton officials that the government had granted them permission to operate for experimental purposes only. In accepting messages for and from the German ambassador, the Tuckerton station has violated this permission.

Bankers Claim Damages of $1,040,467 Against Treasure Ship

Portland, Me., Aug. 25.—Claiming damages of $1,404,467 and interest against the North German Lloyd Steamship company by reason of the failure of the steamship Kronprinzessin Cecilie, now at Bar Harbor, to deliver gold bullion at Plymouth, Eng., according to an agreement between the steamship company and the Guaranty Trust company of New York, shippers of the gold, action was brought by the bankers against the company in the federal court.

Deputy Marshal Harmon left here to seize the ship, which sought refuge in Bar Harbor following the outbreak of the war, after nearly completing her trip to England.

The libel is returnable on Sept. 1. The value of the cheilent's shipment was given as $4,942,936.

Well-to-Do Woman Feared She Would Return to a Sanitarium

Philadelphia, Aug. 25.—Eluding her maid, Miss Martha S. Tash, 45 years old, of Dover, N. H., committed suicide here by jumping from a window of her apartment on the fourteenth floor of a hotel at which she had been a guest.

Miss Tash had been in ill-health and was at one time a patient in a sanitarium. The maid said she had been traveling with Miss Tash, who was wealthy, for the past four years.

The suicide left a rambling note, from which it was gathered that her maid was about to leave her and get married ad that sooner than return to the sanitarium she had determined to end her life.

MRS. HARMAN IS IN ITALY

But Wishes That She Had Gone to Switzerland

Mrs. George N. Harman, daughter of Mrs. Effie Rhines, writes from Italy on July 31: "We are in Venice now. Two days after we left Austria the trains were off passenger duty, so we just escaped from there. I suppose that you are all reading about the war but when you are in the midst of it, it's no fun. The Americans in this hotel have just had a meeting to discuss possibilities. The harbors are closed in several ports and the light houses closed. Tomorrow, the consul will issue us emergency passports. Every auto in Italy becomes property of the government tonight. If many Italian soldiers do go to Austria, the Socialists here are planning a revolution, which will endanger the places we may be in. We've decided to go to Rome, but if wise, we will go at once to Switzerland and stay until things settle down."

A recent letter received by President Whiton of the City Council, from his mother who is now in London, says that she will be a happy woman when she again steps on United States soil, and it will be a long, long time, if ever, when they get her out of the United States. While her letter is evidently written in a guarded tone, so as not to cause any uneasiness at home, it is evident from what she writes that conditions in Europe have not been exaggerated.

That she had a hard time getting out of Paris into London, there is no question, as is evinced by the fact that her party lost all of their baggage, so that all the clothing they have is what is on their backs. When anything additional is needed it is necessary to buy it, and as ready money is scarce, they are not spending much.

It is strenuous times indeed when one does not know where the next meal is coming from, or where one is to get a place to sleep when night comes on. This however was one of the experiences of Mrs. Whiton.

She is in London now, and all right and will sail for home on the Creole, which vessel is now on the way to Europe from New York, and it is expected that she will again be in Quincy inside of two weeks.

She writes that it is barely possible that she may recover her baggage later, but when the Lord only knows, and He will not tell.

A letter dated Aug. 10 has been received from Miss Corine LaBrecque, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Achilles LaBrecque of Adams shore, stating that she has left the European continent, the scene of the world war and is on her way to London. Miss LaBrecque was on the high seas, en route for Paris when war was declared and her letter mentions the last three days run of the ship with an unknown battleship cruising in their wake. When Le Havre was reached shipping was so entangled that it required nearly three days to dock and all was bustle, excitement and activity ashore.

Miss LaBrecque states that so far she has been accorded good treatment and although events have transpired quickly the people are so calm and contained that she is encouraged to continue her trip, the itinerary of which include the foremost cities of Europe.

Her family however feels that she will remain in London for several weeks and there await developments before returning to the continent.

BOARD OF HEALTH BUSY

Causing Houghs Neck People to Take Notice

There has been weeping and wailing during the past few days on the part of some of the summer residents at Houghs Neck, for the Board of Health have been on the war path in this section, in consequence of numerous complaints. Several owners of cottages have been ordered to provide cesspools, or that the houses shall be vacated.

This morning the Chief of Police went to Houghs Neck armed with a notice from the Board of Health ordering certain things done within two days or the places vacated.

Where this hits the hardest are the cases where out of town people have visited the beach and leased cottages for the summer for which they have paid a good price, supposing that the premises were all right. Soon after moving in they are notified by the Board of Health to comply with certain rules or vacate.

Several cases have been brought to the attention of the Board of Health where the owners of these cottages have refused to comply with the order of the Board, and the occupants, although they had paid a seasons rent of the premises, were forced to move out. They have been unable to get any redress from the owners.

In other places the Board has found that parties when ordered to provide a cesspool and flush closets have provided the flush closet, but that the premises are so arranged that the contents of these closets run down to the shore thus making a bad nuisance. Here again the occupants have been ordered to remedy the evil or get out.

In another place the Board of Health in their investigation of complaints of bad odors have found that it has been the custom of some of the cottagers instead of placing their swill in a bucket for the city teams to carry away, that it is much more convenient to take it to the nearby shore and throw it in the bushes.

It can be readily understood therefore how such swill soon becomes rather offensive in such hot weather, as that of the past few weeks and the only wonder is that there has not been an epidemic of some kind at the beach long before this.

It would seem that people would naturally be clean enough to see to it that their swill was not thrown where it would become a nuisance, but in many cases the people are only down for a short time, and they do not seem to care.

In years past much has been heard of the Houghs Neck Associates, incorporated, whose prime object was for the betterment of conditions at the beach, but of late the association seems to have been a little lax in this matter, and has devoted its energies to seeing how much money it can get out of the city for new streets schoolhouses, playgrounds, lights, etc.

If the Association desires to make a name for itself, it cannot do better than to cooperate with the Board of Health in their efforts to abate these nuisances which are a menace to public health.

THROWN FROM CAR.

Shortly after 10 o'clock, Sunday evening, Miss Mary Chiveri, residing with Mrs. Frederick Cheever of 43 Elm avenue, was thrown heavily, as she was getting off the car from Quincy, and sustained a fractured and lacerated jaw. Dr. Johnson was called, who set the bone, and inserted several stitches. She is resting comfortably today.

DISTRICT COURT.

Thomas C. McDonnell and Daniel J. Doran were arraigned for drunkenness. Both men had a suspended sentence hanging over them, that of Doran being one month in the house of correction, and that of McDonnell a $10 fine. The result was that suspension was revoked and both were committed to Dedham jail.

Purity of the Law.

At Bodmin assizes once a barrister while pleading was interrupted by the judge:

"Mr. Carter, you are wasting the time of the court."

"Time of the court!" retorted the truculent veteran, glaring fiercely at the bench. "Your lordship means—your lordship's dinner!"

The judge threw up his hands in despair, and Carter continued his harangue in peace.

The same redoubtable advocate was on another occasion defending a man charged with obtaining money under false pretenses.

"False pretenses!" said he, with fine scorn. "Why, we all make them every day, barristers and solicitors and judges—the whole lot of us! Talk of the purity of the judicial ermine"—here he pointed derisively to the learned judge, who sat cowering on the bench—"why, it's only rabbit skin!"

Shouts of laughter greeted this irreverent statement, which investigation would probably show to be literally true.—London Tit-Bits.

The Mares of Mohammed.

In bygone days there was no more enthusiastic breeder of horses than the Prophet Mohammed. In the course of time he became the owner of a vast number of mares, and the point was how to arrive at a selection of the very best. At last, says Country Life, he hit upon the following scheme: For three days and nights the mares were kept without water; then they were loosed and, as might have been expected, tore madly off to their usual watering place. Just as they were on the very brink of the water the trumpeter blew the war signal or assembly. Maddened with the thirst, the mares forgot their training, all save five, who, forgetting their own urgent need, galloped back at once to seek their masters. These five mares were set apart by Mohammed as representing the pick of his stud, and from them, we are told, descended the best and noblest breed of horses.

The Midnight Sun.

At certain seasons of the year, owing to the position of the earth, there is a territory in the arctic circle where the sun is above the horizon for weeks or months continuously, shining at night as well as during the day. Thus at North cape, Norway, the sun is above the horizon continuously from May 12 to July 29 and at Bodo, not far from the arctic circle, from June 3 to July 7. Even in the extreme south of Norway there is no darkness from the end of April to the middle of August. In the winter, on the other hand, the sun is not visible at the North cape from Nov. 18 to Jan. 23 and at Bodo from Nov. 15 to Dec. 27. There is only a twilight at midday. In the extreme south of Norway the sun is above the horizon for six and one-half hours at midwinter.—Philadelphia Press.

London In 1592.

In Gomme's "London" the author quotes from an account of this "large, excellent and mighty city of business" when Frederick Duke of Wurtemberg visited it in 1592. Here is an illuminating extract:

"Most of the inhabitants are employed in buying and selling merchandise and trading in almost every corner of the world. It is a very populous city, so that one can scarcely pass along the streets on account of the throng. The inhabitants are magnificently appareled and are extremely proud and overbearing, and because the greater part of them seldom go into other countries, but always remain in their houses in the city attending to their business, they care little for foreigners, but scoff at them."

Science and Statistics.

Science was horrified when Statistics discovered that babies to the economic value of $200,000,000 perish each year.

"This must cease!" exclaimed Science excitedly.

"It's up to you," rejoined Statistics without emotion.

But no sooner had Science fallen on and by various devices caused the babies to stop perishing than Statistics discovered that half of these were girls and $200,000,000 wouldn't begin to dress them.

"The laugh is on you," quoth Statistics grimly.—Life.

GOVERNMENT TO TAKE STOCK

In Ocean Steamship Company to Develop Routes

Plans for building up a permanent American merchant marine by the purchase of foreign ships, to be operated by the government, went forward Monday in Congress and at the White House says a Washington dispatch to the Herald.

In the House Representative Alexander introduced the administration bill for the incorporation of a $50,000,000 company to own and operate ocean steamers under supervision of a shipping board composed of the President, the secretary of the treasury, the postmaster-general and the secretary of commerce.

The government would subscribe for not less than 51 per cent. of the stock by an appropriation. Ships would be bought by the sale of $20,000,000 Panama bonds.

President Wilson reiterated his determination to urge the ship purchase plan and said he expected it to be in operation within two or three weeks. Reports that he had considered the advisability of abandoning the project, he said, were without foundation.

The fact that private capital had shown no indication of a desire to act unless the government guaranteed securities, he declared, merely made it necessary for the government to take the initiative. The President believes the government will be able to develop new trade routes and make the project desirable to private capital, and to meet that possibility the bill would provide for sale of the government's stock in the company at any time the shipping board deemed that advisable.

PROBABLY NOT IN GERMANY

Letter from Miss Foretier Friend Received

Information received Monday indicates that Miss Jane McClure Foretier, of the faculty of the New England Conservatory of Music, is not held at Nuremberg, Germany, on suspicion of being a French Spy. Miss Foretier is either on her way home from Naples or in Italy or Switzerland.

Miss Foretier was accompanied abroad this summer by a friend and pupil, Miss Florence C. Arnold of Boston. In Monday's mail was a letter from Miss Arnold from a Swiss village near Berne.

The letter, postmarked July 31, states she and Miss Foretier were near Beern and mentions no change in itinerary. Their plan was to go from Switzerland to Naples, whence they had reservations on a ship sailing Aug. 10. The sailing of that ship was postponed to Aug. 15, but Albert Arnold, father of Miss Arnold, has not determined whether she and Miss Foretier are aboard. He is certain they would not have returned to Germany after mobilization began.

Miss Foretier has a mother and two sisters living in Atlantic, and the former insists on meeting each steamship that docks in hopes of seeing her daughter. An appeal has been made to the State department to learn her whereabouts.

OLSON—MATTSON.

Alfred A. Olson of 28 Ryden street, one of the best known young men in the Cranch hill district, and Miss Therese F. Mattson of 4 Marion street, were married at Boston on Aug. 19.

Even their intimate friends had no knowledge of their intentions. The ceremony was performed by Edward J. Lord, assistant clerk at the Municipal court of Boston.

The news of the marriage became known when the return was received at the office of the City Clerk this morning. Mr. and Mrs. Olson are on a honeymoon trip and will reside in Quincy.

Kitchen Kinks

Keeping Food Fresh.

Salads should be washed (or wiped, if this is found sufficient) and then left in a colander in an airy cool place until wanted. A cloth should be placed over the top of the colander. Cucumbers placed stalk end in a jug of water will keep fresher than if placed on a cool stone or slab.

Fleshy fruit should not be piled up in a dish until the last possible moment, but spread out in a cool place so that one piece scarcely touches another.

Milk should be covered by means of a muslin bag held tight by a rubber band, while butter should be kept in a covered ventilated dish and placed in a pan of salted water.

If any suspicion is entertained regarding the freshness of meat or fish, it is well to cook some at once, as cooked food will keep in better condition than raw. Should the meat not be required the same day it is well to partially cook it over night.

It should be remembered that if mildew attacks a dish such as jelly the whole of it is tainted, although the mildew may be visible only in places, and therefore such food is unfit for consumption.

Use For Small Grapes.

Use up small grapes for making grape jam or grape butter. A delicious jam that is almost a jelly is made as follows:

Measure the fruit and allow one pound of sugar to the same weight of grapes. Put the latter over the fire in a preserving pan with very little water. Cook gently for nearly an hour, then press through a colander to remove seeds and skins. Dissolve the sugar in the strained juice and put over the fire again. Cook gently until it begins to jell. When it drops from the spoon and forms a jelly the preserve is done. Skim during the cooking, if found necessary, and when cooked turn into glasses and seal.

Grape butter is made in very much the same way, except that half a pound of sugar only is allowed to each pound of fruit, and the mixture is cooked down until it is very thick and dark. It should be stirred very frequently and canned while hot.

Uses For Extra Milk.

Surplus milk may be used in many ways.

Skimmed milk answers as well as any milk for soups and doughs when fat is also used. Even if otherwise likely to curdle in heating the addition of a little cooking soda makes it possible to scald milk, and then it may be used for custards, puddings, etc. Sour milk is available for doughs and cheese, and cream may be substituted for butter and milk in simpler cakes and cookies.

Another method of using sour milk is to strain it when it is quite thick into a small muslin bag. Tie a piece of string around the top of the bag and hang it in the air in the shade to drip. At the end of three or more days, according to the quantity of milk used, an uncommonly dainty cheese will have been produced without effort.

Cheap Cuts of Meat.

In the preparation of cheap cuts of meat brown the meat first in a hot spider or kettle for flavor and scar the surface so that the juices may be retained in the meat.

Some scraps of fat may be browned and onion sliced and fried in the fat, an equal mixture of flour added, and when it is mixed smoothly with the fat water is put in to make thin gravy.

The meat is then put in and left covered on the back of the stove, and later vegetables and seasoning are added, or they may be put in with the meat, seasoned, covered and boiled five minutes and put at once into the fireless cooker and left several hours or all day. Long, slow cooking is the only rule for good results.

Testing the Oven.

A useful and simple test to try the heat of an oven is by means of a piece of white paper. If too hot the paper when placed in the oven will blaze up or blacken. When the paper becomes dark brown, the color of meat pie crust, then the oven is suitable for small pastry. When light brown, the color of real nice pastry, then the oven is ready for pies, etc. When the paper turns dark yellow you can bake bread, large meat pies or large pound cakes. If the paper is just tinged the oven is right for sponge cakes and meringues. The temperature of an oven may be easily reduced while cooking by placing a bowl of water in it.

Keeping Grapes Fresh.

Select large, nice bunches of grapes, carefully pick out any that are unsound and wipe dry. Warm a can of sealing wax, take each bunch separately and dip the stem in warm wax, not hot, and lay on the table for the wax to harden. Now get a clean, dry box, place a layer of paper in the bottom, then a layer of grapes, another layer of paper, and so on until the box is filled. Keep cool and dry. They may be kept for a long time.

Toast With Vegetables.

When vegetables have been strained and are ready to be put in the dish, if a piece of dry toast is laid on the bottom of the dish first the remaining water will be absorbed by the time they are served.

AMERICANS GET ITALIAN VESSEL

Cost Refugees $115,000 to Charter the Udine

THEY ARRIVE AT NEW YORK

Great Difficulty Experienced In Arranging Financial Details at Genoa, Although Those Who Managed Enterprise Represented Millions of Dollars—Consider Money Well Spent

New York, Aug. 25.—The first of the specially chartered ships to bring American refugees out of Europe, the Italian liner Principe di Udine, came into New York harbor with 399 passengers.

They had paid in the aggregate $115,000 for their passage, for this was the sum given the Lloyd Sabuado company at Genoa on condition that the vessel be turned over to the refugees and steam direct to New York. Each passenger paid $250 gold as a premium for first cabin accommodations, leaving a deficit of about $40,000, which will be met by the committee that arranged the trip, headed by R. A. C. Smith, dock commissioner of New York.

In a statement issued at New York detailing the acute conditions that Americans confront abroad, the committee says the "money was well spent." An additional statement was issued suggesting that a special committee would like to confer in this city with representatives of the state department, "in order to submit trustworthy information upon the critical financial and sanitary situation of fellow-citizens in southern Europe."

The voyage of the Udine and the circumstances which preceded it are perhaps without parallel. It was a case of buying a ship, as it were, to get out of Europe. The greatest difficulty was experienced in arranging the financial details at Genoa, for, while there were millions represented among the Americans in the enterprise, getting cash was quite another matter. After proposition and counter-proposition had been made, the liner finally got away Aug. 12.

"By the terms of the charter," says a statement issued by the committee, "50,000 francs had to be paid in cash to the Lloyd Sabaudo company before 4:30 p. m. on Aug. 7, and the balance, 450,000 francs, was to be paid on the day before sailing, Aug. 11. To meet these conditions required no small ingenuity, as well as constant and difficult negotiations.

"Inasmuch as no Italian emigrants were taken on the ship, the entire vessel was treated as a ship of but a single class, and all passengers, wherever berthed and paying whatever rate, had the full privileges of the decks and public rooms. The ship was crowded to the utmost capacity of its sleeping and table accommodations. It was necessary to provide in both saloons for two services at luncheon and two at dinner.

"None but Americans were permitted on the ship, with the exception, of course, of the ship's own personnel. Provision was finally made for 399 in all. A number who were absolutely destitute of funds were taken without any payment of passage money whatever."

CAR SERVICE SUSPENDED

Mayor of Northampton Seeks Aid of Massachusetts State Police

Northampton, Mass., Aug. 25.—Mayor Felker requested Governor Walsh to send asquad of state police to this city for duty in connection with the strike of the carmen.

Only a few cars of the Northampton Street Railway company, against which sixty-five employes called a strike a week ago, were operated.

Their progress was followed by disorders, missiles being thrown and obstacles being placed on the tracks, and as a result the service was suspended entirely.

Ex-Governor Jordan Dead

Lancaster, N. H., Aug. 25.—Chester B. Jordan, 75, governor of New Hampshire during the term from 1901 to 1906, died at his summer home here. He was a lawyer and had been president of the senate and speaker of the house. A widow and three children survive him.

WARDROBE CLOSET INTERIOR.

When the door of this closet is opened the light inside is turned on automatically, and when the door is closed the light is turned out. There is a place for all manner of wearing apparel—built-in hat boxes, rod for coat hangers underneath and drawers for shirt waists, skirts and gowns. Such completely designed closets for every chamber are a guarantee of the completeness of the remainder of the interior of this home. Size of the house 26 feet wide and 28 feet deep over main part. Full basement. Finish throughout red gum. Washington fir or red oak. Second story pine to paint. Cost to build, exclusive of heating and plumbing, $3,200.

Upon receipt of $1 the publisher of this paper will furnish a copy of Saxton's new 1914 book of plans, "American Dwellings." It contains 310 designs of residences costing from $1,000 to $6,000; also book of interiors for $1.50.

Building Business

Recently, a large store of very honored name became insolvent and passed into the hands of a new owner—an energetic young man.

Little was left to the business but the good name. There were strong stores all around it.

The first thing this merchant did was to emphasize in his advertising that he kept well-known, popular, advertised articles—mentioning those advertised in the local newspapers by the manufacturers.

He did not advertise them at a cut price. He merely let it be known that he carried them and would give good service.

That was a few months ago. Already the business has started to revive to an extent that competitors are sitting up and taking notice.

This man makes it a rule to mention every day in his advertising the name of some well-known, branded article that he carries—a name that stands for character in the mind of the public.

TIGERS WIN IN WARD TWO

Defeat White Sox for Playground Championship

By defeating the White Sox Monday morning in a fine game, the Tigers won the championship of the Playground League. The score was 3 to 1 and to Capt. Joe Ryan belongs the honor of winning his own game.

He had pitched a fine game and only three hits had been made by the White Sox up to the seventh inning. The White Sox had scored first, making a tally in the third by getting a man on base by an error and then a fine three-bagger by Gallagher bringing him in for the score.

The Tigers tied it up in the fifth inning, and then in the seventh, with two men on the bases, Ryan hit a dandy out to left field, which was good for two bases. He was not able to score as the next two men were easy outs.

The fielding of Wester and Doherty was great, the latter making a great catch in center field which saved the game for the Tigers.

The White Sox had three men on in the sixth when Gallagher came up to bat; two men were out and it was up to "Gall" to make good as he had in the third. He met one of Ryan's straight ones right on the nose, and the ball flew on a line towards center field. It was just going over the brow of the hill when Joe Doherty made a one-handed stab for it and succeeded in holding on to it for the third out.

The battery for the Tigers was Ryan and Early, and for White Sox, Tower and Gallagher.

The Tigers were composed of these boys: Joe Ryan, Capt. E. Barr, C. McBrayne, J. Doherty, J. McKenna, J. Kelly, C. McGilvary, G. Wester and W. Earley.

Larry McLean Is Always Doing Something New on the Diamond

LARRY M'LEAN, who is one of the catchers for the New York Giants, can be depended on to "pull something" in almost every game. Whether it is a fight or a frolic that is to be started or ended, Larry is ready and eager. In a recent game in New York when the ball was batted down the right field foul line Larry bawled "Foul!" so loud that the field umpire was impressed, and he stopped two runners. But the ball was fair by a few feet, the runners were tagged out, and then there was an argument that it took several minutes to settle, the runners finally getting their bases. Larry was told that he must not act as assistant umpire any more, but he declared that he was merely expressing an opinion and that he was not to blame if too much confidence had been placed in his remark.

LITTLE BITS OF SPORTING CHAT

Walter Johnson Says He Is Open to Offers.

BEST TERMS TO GET HIM.

Jack Johnson Once Served In Uncle Sam's Army—Boxing Has Place In Schools In Australia — Mathewson Has Adopted New Style of Pitching and Occasionally "Beans" a Batsman.

While Walter Johnson admits that he will be open to Federal league bids at the end of the present season and that he proposes to sign with the club which offers him the largest salary, there is no occasion for alarm so far as the patrons of the game are concerned. Walter Johnson is not going to jump without giving his club a chance at his services.

"I had a talk with Tinker, but he did not make me any propositions. I told him that I would be open to propositions when my present contract had expired." said Johnson. "I am in baseball for what there is in it."

Manager Griffith was not in the least disturbed when he heard that Johnson had conferred with Tinker.

"Walter is sure to give us a chance when he gets ready to sign for next season," said Griff, "and I am sure that we will not have any trouble coming to terms with him when that time comes. So far as these enormous offers from the Federal league are concerned, it is the first indication that the new league is faltering. They have failed to convince the public that they are of major league caliber, and, realizing that they have to strengthen their forces, they are fourflushing about spending millions for players. Few players will leave the ranks of organized baseball when the present season ends, and Walter Johnson is one of those who will be found at his old stamping grounds in 1915."

It isn't generally known that Jack Johnson has had military experience. He served for a time in the United States army down in Texas. There was no war going on then, and Johnson performed no other warlike feat than that of knocking out a few other privates in the regimental scraps.

Incidentally when Johnson left the army he was porter in a New Haven hotel for a few months. And they say the way he could hustle a trunk was a wonder. While portering around Jack fought a preliminary scrap or two, found that he could make money in the ring more easily than in the porter's job and quit the job to become a regular fighter.

Down in Australia boxing is being adopted in all of the schools as a part of the education of every boy. It has its place on the curriculum in the state schools of Victoria now. Sir Alexander Peacock, minister for education, brought this about after consultations with J. Murray and R. L. Baker, the boxing promoter and all around athlete.

In the Melbourne High school twenty boys have been selected to receive instruction in boxing. After completing their course they will act as instructors for the others.

The first lessons will be given by Mr. Baker, who is a remarkably skillful boxer himself, winner of many amateur championships. When Mr. Baker is through the boys will be under the care of Angelo Marre, manager of the Melbourne stadium, a famous fighting club on the Baker circuit. Mr. Marre was a famous all around athlete and boxed in many amateur tournaments in this country as well as in Australia.

Some close observers profess to see a change in Mathewson's pitching style this year. They point out that he scored a man on a wild pitch in a recent game and that he has hit several batsmen this season, and argue from this that "Big Six" is working hard to acquire bad control. It is certain that some batsmen found it easier to hit Matty because they had every confidence when they stepped to the plate that he would not hit them. It may be that Mathewson would just as soon lessen this confidence, but he is showing the same ability as ever to put the ball across when he needs to do so.

"The Federal league is the strongest baseball organization financially in the game," says John M. Ward, business manager of the Brookfeds. "If the present fight with organized baseball goes to a finish we will win. Our clubs are doing better in point of receipts each day, and we are greatly encouraged. The fight for recognition by the public has only just begun, and we are prepared to stick it out until our success is assured.

"We are outdrawing Ebbets field at last for the reason that our team is playing the kind of ball that Brooklyn fans demand. Popular prices will appeal to all classes of people, and that means improved attendance figures at Washington park. I believe that the American league as a whole is doing quite well from a business point of view, but it will not surprise me to learn that with the exception of the Giants, all the National league clubs will lose money."

JAPAN FIRES ON TSINGTAU

Fleet Extends European War to the Far East

THE SITUATION IN KIAUCHAU

Effort Will Be Made to Have German Governor Peacefully Surrender —Descent of Doves on Japanese Imperial Shrine Accepted by Subjects as Good Omen

Tokio, Aug. 25.—The Yamato, in an extra edition, says that the bombardment of Tsingtau by the Japanese fleet has commenced. This message was passed by the censor of the navy department.

News of the progress of the Kiauchau expedition is withheld. Whether an attack has already been launched is known only to the government, which promises an official statement "when there is news to communicate." But it is considered certain the reduction of the fortifications has already been begun.

It is reported, however, that Japan will not begin offensive operations against Kiauchau until a note has been sent to the German governor of the province urging him to surrender. This announcement was made at Tokio and the action was decided upon to avoid bloodshed. It was learned the American consul at Kiauchau remains at his post.

Vice Admiral Tomosaburo Kato has been appointed commander-in-chief of the first battle squadron now at the front; Vice Admiral Sadaki Chi Kato, commander of the second, and Rear Admiral Tsuchiya of the third. The first and second squadrons will operate against Kiauchau, while the third will be used to patrol the Chinese coast and to watch for any German cruisers that may elude the others.

Communication between Japan and China has been severed. Except for very meagre news that has reached Tokio from New York, the entire country is kept in the dark regarding the progress of the war in Europe.

It is believed the cable between Shanghai and Nagasaki has been cut. The officers of the army and navy are absolutely sphinxlike regarding the progress of the events in the China sea.

Unanimous approval of the war, which is calmly and dispassionately discussed, summarizes public opinion. The newspapers express regret over the necessity of hostilities with Germany and urge the public to refrain from exhibiting resentment against the Germans in Japan. They print messages of cheer to the army and navy.

An imperial messenger went to the shrine of Ise to inform the spirits of the imperial ancestors of Japan's declaration of war. It is announced that a flock of white doves descended on the roof of the imperial sanctuary at the moment of the expiration of the ultimatum to Germany and this is accepted as an omen of speedy victory.

The Ladies' Patriotic association, which has a membership of 100,000, is sending to the volunteer nurses comfort packages for the soldiers and will provide for the families of those who have been called to the service. The Red Cross society is equipping a hospital ship.

NO WASTING OF WORDS

Formal Break Between Japan and Germany Was Very Simple

The rupture of relations between Japan and Germany was effected in a simple manner. A representative of the German ministry of foreign affairs proceeded to the Japanese embassy at Berlin and handed the Japanese charge d'affaires his passports, with the verbal remark that Germany had no response to make to Japan's ultimatum concerning the surrender of Kiauchau.

The Japanese representative turned his embassy and its archives over to the protection of the American Ambassador, James W. Gerard.

TO DISMANTLE CRUISER

Austria Will Thus Avert Going to War With Japan.

Danger of war between Japan and Austria was removed through the agreement of Austria to dismantle her cruiser, the Kaiserin Elizabeth, which was at Tsingtau.

The Austrian ambassador had been preparing to leave Tokio when the Japanese government indicated its approval of a suggestion for dismantling the cruiser. Austria accepted the proposal and instructed the officers to interne it at Shanghai.

The Austrian ambassador then let it be known that he saw no occasion to leave Japan.

CHINA ACCUSES GERMANY

Says Warlike Naval Operations Violated Principles of Agreement

Germany has protested to China that the republic has been aiding Japan in the Far Eastern trouble and violated the rules of neutrality.

China replied to this that the warlike naval operations of the Germans had been calculated to violate the principles of the agreement whereby the Pekin government leased Kiauchau to the kaiser.

FORE RIVER BOWLING LEAGUE

Arrangements for the re-organization of the Fore River bowling league are under way and it is expected that the opening matches will be rolled on Sept. 14. There will be ten or more teams in the league, and the directors hope that its success will surpass that of last season which closed with high records and amid much enthusiasm.

Substantial prize awards will be made to individuals and teams and the league officials are in receipt of a contribution from President Joseph W. Powell of the corporation. Prizes in addition to the many offered last season will be given.

It has not been decided whether or not the matches will be rolled on the new Wardwell or the Coliseum alleys. Negotiations on that point have not yet been closed.

The reorganization is taking place under the direction of Joseph M. Larkin, supervisor of the apprentices, and he is assisted by fans who took a prominent part in the league last season.

TAX RATES FOR YEAR 1914

Highest Figures in History of Several Cities

The tax rate of Wakefield for 1914 is the largest in the history of the town, the rate for this year being $23.40, an increase of $1.90 over that of 1913. The increase, the Assessors say is due to increase in town appropriations and increases in state, county and metropolitan assessments. The Assessors also state that as long as the town continues to make large appropriations at town meetings the tax payers must expect similar increases in the tax rate. In two years the appropriations for town expenses have increased $75,000.

The tax rates reported to date are as follows,

Not Triplets.

My little grandson was told by his mother to run across the street and inquire of a lady who was going by with three little babes in a cart if they were triplets. He soon came back, looking much disappointed, and said: "No, they are not triplets. They were corn the same day, but two of them are girls and the other one is a boy." —Exchange

Trelawney's Sacrifice

In Which I Is Shown That There Is No Friendship Like That Which Costs Another's Honor

By CHARLES EDWARD RICH

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

One night more than a year ago I was called at a late hour by the surgeon to set down in legal form the last words and wishes of a dying man.

I immediately responded to the call and was met at the door by a beautiful woman. Weeping bitterly, she told me that I was too late; that my services could not avail, as her husband was dead. Of course there was nothing to do but go away. I thought no more of the case until, two days afterward, I learned that the dead man was Arthur Trelawney and that he had shot himself.

Arthur Trelawney had been a dear friend of mine. We were students together at Heidelberg.

I at once hastened to the house to tender my services to his stricken widow. Again I was too late. The body had been removed to an undertaker's, and the woman had gone without leaving any address.

You can now understand my amazement when about a month ago my office boy one morning handed me a card bearing the name "Arthur Trelawney." Dumfounded, I gazed at the card as if it were a message from the dead. Then I noticed some small letters in the lower corner. They read, "Formerly Captain Paul Thornton, Her Majesty's Ninth Volunteers."

"LET ME INTRODUCE MYSELF."

The door swung open, and a big, bronzed, heavily bearded man strode into the room. I gasped with astonishment as he advanced toward me, smiling, his hands outstretched in warm greeting. Despite the changes made by time and beard, I knew him for Trelawney. Before he could utter the words that were on his tongue I cried out:

"Trelawney—Trelawney, alive?"

"Yes, very much alive," he answered as he wrung my hands.

And then, after he had insisted on hearing a brief account of my doings from the time we lost touch with each other, he told me his strange story, and here it is:

After I left Heidelberg Trelawney became much attached to a fellow student, also an Englishman, named Paul Thornton.

Thornton was poor and boarded with Professor Max Braun, who had a daughter, Gretchen. Her father exacted a promise from her that she would not marry while he lived. She remained heart free till she met Paul Thornton; then it was a case of love at sight with both. They became engaged, but kept the engagement secret.

Trelawney, who was wealthy, in order to be near his friend went to board with Professor Braun. He, too, fell in love with Gretchen and proposed to her. For a time she concealed the avowal, then told Paul. Paul, pained and shocked, kept the matter to himself till Trelawney told him of his love for Gretchen, then announced to his friend that he was engaged himself to Gretchen and that she had told him Trelawney had proposed to her too.

"It would have been far better, Paul, if you had told me before," said Trelawney.

Thornton silently acquiesced, and Trelawney knocked the ashes out of his pipe, rose to his feet and held out his hand to Thornton.

"Paul," he said, "let this make no difference in our friendship, but I must go away. I can get over it better alone."

The next day Trelawney left Heidelberg and the young couple announced their engagement to the professor. He, to their surprise, consented to a speedy marriage, and all lived happily together till the professor's death some years later.

This break in their quiet life aroused a spark of slumbering ambition in Thornton, and as soon as practicable he took his wife to London.

From the start ill fortune attended him. He was unable to find employment for which he was fitted, and his small income went only a short way in London. Matters grew worse and worse until they were compelled to take one room in a cheap lodging house.

One night Thornton went home staggering under a blow harder than any he had been called upon to bear. The little clerkship that they had depended on, even for their meager living, was to be taken from him in a month because of a reduction in the office force, and simultaneously he had been called upon to bear arms in South Africa.

His face was pale and haggard as he entered the little room, which was almost in darkness. As he hesitated on the threshold a hearty voice from the gloom cut him to the heart.

"Hello, Paul, old man! I've tracked you at last. Thought you could shake me, didn't you?"

It was Trelawney, and before Thornton realized it he was sobbing like a child on his friend's shoulder.

"Arthur, God bless you! I hoped you would never know how far down hill I have been sliding."

"That fool pride of yours, I know. Well, I meant to find you, and I have. Now, the only thing for a man to do who is sliding down hill is to dig his toes in deep and begin to climb back again."

"But I slipped pretty close to the bottom—today," replied Thornton, and then he told Trelawney and his wife of the untoward events of the day. Gretchen gave a sharp cry and buried her face in her hands. Trelawney turned to her quickly, his lips setting into a hard line. He sat silent while the woman wept softly, and then, shaking himself as if aroused from a dream, he said:

"Come, I see a way clearly out of this. We will lay it all over until tomorrow."

The next night Trelawney was in high spirits when he entered Thornton's room.

"Congratulate me, Paul and Gretchen!" he cried. "I am going to South Africa."

Husband and wife stared at Trelawney in amazement, and finally Paul said:

"Going to South Africa! Why, you said nothing about this last night. You surely had no such intention yesterday. What is the meaning of this sudden impulse, for such it seems to be?"

"Well, yes, it is a sudden impulse, and as to its meaning you will learn that later on."

"No. Be frank, Trelawney; tell me its meaning now."

"Well, Paul, it simply means that you can remain with your wife."

"Trelawney, do you mean that you have enlisted as my substitute and without my consent?" said Paul.

"Substitute? No, Paul, it will never be said that Paul Thornton sent another to the front for him, for I know you would not have it so."

"What is this enigma?" asked Paul.

"Let me introduce myself—Paul Thornton of Her Majesty's Ninth volunteers. Now, listen to me, Paul. I am making no sacrifice. it all fits in perfectly with my plans for the future."

"But I shall stop you. I shall go to the war office and"—

"That will be useless. The war office will not be open until tomorrow, and by midnight I shall be out of London. Paul, nothing can be more to my liking. Pray do not try to block a plan which will give me more pleasure than perhaps I shall ever enjoy again in my life. I have no ties, no responsibilities.

"Take now your own case: What would Gretchen do in a strange country without friends or means of support while you were away? Instead of that, it pleases me—and you must not try to rob me of this gratification—that Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Trelawney sail within the week for America—in fact, their passage is already booked on the Lucania. The agent sent them the tickets by me."

Trelawney took an envelope from his pocket and placed it on the table, continuing before Thornton could interrupt him:

"And Trelawney's solicitor has been instructed to send to him in America only a portion of his income, and he has obtained a letter of credit and the necessary credentials."

Trelawney placed another envelope on the table.

"Arthur, I say you shall not do this!" broke out Thornton.

"Paul," he said slowly, "surely you will not deny me the great happiness I shall take in doing this thing for—for Gretchen?"

They both looked into his eyes and saw the pleading, and they both knew that it was for the woman he loved that he wished to make the sacrifice.

They came to America, where the new Trelawney sank under the influence of drink and morphine.

Gretchen watched the change in him with fear. At first her influence held him somewhat in check, but at last even his love for her was deadened by his excesses. He constantly feared exposure, as if he were guilty of some great crime.

After the close of the war Trelawney remained in South Africa and only recently returned to London, where he startled his solicitor as much as he startled me. It was only then that he learned of Thornton's death under his name. He started at once for America.

His first purpose was to find the widow. In time he discovered that she was working as a saleswoman in a dry goods store and had managed to support herself comfortably. As may be expected, Trelawney married her.

For the Children

A Cute Little Dog With a Funny Name.

Copyright by American Press Association.

Hedley Tango is the name of the smart looking little dog herewith pictured. Rather an odd name for a dog or any other thing for that matter. This little animal is a Scalyham terrier and was exhibited at a recent dog show in England. The Scalyham is a rather new kind of dog and is related to the Irish and Dandy Dinmonts. He is very bright and alert, as his picture shows, and is much liked in England and this country where known. Terriers from time immemorial have been trained to kill rats, rabbits and other small rodents. As household pets they have lost much of their desire to kill, but the sight of a rabbit sets them jumping. They are very clever and handsome dogs, and whoever owns one is sure to prize him highly.

The Torch Fish.

There is a kind of fish that swims in the deep sea which is very rare and a great curiosity, says the American Boy. Its common name is the torch fish. Its jaws are filled with long, slender teeth. It has a cartridge shaped tongue and a body very much like a wornout old shoe that has become so limp that it cannot hold itself up in shape any more.

The most remarkable thing about this strange fish is that on the tip of its long, pipestem nose there is an egg shaped object that the fish can light up like the bullseye lantern whenever he wants to and put it out again when he so pleases. This lantern does not serve as a guide to him in his wanderings, but is used as a trap to entice unwary and innocent little food fishes. When this deep sea lucifer is hungry he just lights his lamp, which is a peculiar kind of lip with phosphorus on it, opens his mouth and waves before it a slender, cordlike appendage that grows from beneath its lower jaw. The small fishes mistake the light for a certain kind of toothsome firefly that is down in the sea, and in their scramble for this dainty they sail right into the lucifer's mouth, which is gaping wide open to receive them. When he has had all the dinner he wants he turns off the light and goes away about other business.

Man's First Wings.

The first effort to equip man with wings that he might fly through the air seems to have been made by Watson E. Quinby, a Delaware inventor, who patented a flying machine over forty years ago, says the American Boy. The inventor used the bat as his model in designing the wings. Previous flying machines had been constructed on the balloon principle, but Quinby's apparatus consisted of wings twelve feet in diameter and semicircular in form. The wings were attached to the limbs of the persons flying, and the motions used were very similar to those used in swimming. The wings refused to work, however, and no one ever succeeded in flying with their aid.

Making Rice Paper.

The so called rice paper is not made from rice, as one who knows its name would think, but from the pure white pith of a little tree belonging to the aralia family. It flourishes in Formosa and, so far as naturalists have been able to find out, nowhere else.

The stems are laden on boats and sent to China, where the rice paper is made. It is used, aside from ordinary purposes, by the native Chinese for water color drawings, and sometimes it is dyed in various colors and made into wonderfully natural looking artificial flowers.

Saturday Night Fun.

Saturday night and tub time done!
This is the end of a week of fun.
But while we sit in our great big chair,
Cozy and warm by the firelight's glare,
Let's talk of the games we had each day,
As the long week rolled itself away.
Do you remember blind man's buff?
We seemed unable to laugh enough.
And puss in the corner—that was fine;
I liked it best when the turn was mine
To stand in the middle as puss, you see,
And catch whoever was passing me.
Then hide and seek! Did you like that more
When you opened the cupboard behind the door
And hid yourself so well that none
Could find you at all till the game was done?
Yes, yes! I think that hide and seek
Was the best, best game in all the week.
But hark to the clock! It is time for bed;
"Come, eat your suppers, and go!" it said.
So now, goodby to the fire so bright,
Goodby to the week on Saturday night.
We go quite happy, as all should do,
Who'd wake up happy on Sunday too.

GREAT BATTERS FAVORITE CLUBS

Every One Has Special Type He Likes to Use.

SAM THOMPSON'S SPOKE.

Famous Slugger Pried His Way Into Baseball With Piece of Wagon Wheel—Difference In Weight Used by Old Timers and Present Day Stars—Meyers an Exception.

Very few of the star batsmen in major league company today use the same model of bat, so it is the men behind the big sticks who must be given the credit for smashing fences and poling the pellet out of the lots rather than the various types of bludgeons used by them. An A1 batter learns from experience the kind of stick he can wield most effectively, and once he is satisfied with a certain style of weapon he is likely to stick to it to the end of his baseball career. Cap A. C. Anson, one of the greatest sluggers of all time and the man who led the stickers in the old National league in 1879, 1881, 1887 and 1888, ran second three other seasons and ranked third once, was more particular about his bats probably than any player that ever lived. It is said that he seldom had less than fifty clubs of the particular weight and shape that suited him best, and during the winter he would work on them with as much care as would be necessary to train a pack of hounds. Not only would he scrape and oil them, but he would hang them up to season in a room where the temperature was kept at the exact point which he believed would put them in perfect shape for the following year.

CHIEF MEYERS.

A veteran baseball story teller says that Sam Thompson, who could drive a baseball as great a distance as any man who ever played the game, was given his opportunity to join fast company in 1884, when Dan O'Leary, then manager of the Indianapolis club, saw him "wallop the ball a mile" by using an old wagon spoke, after the only other bat available had been split. Sam made his home in a small Indiana town, and after that sensational clout O'Leary arranged for him to bring his club of farmer boys to Indianapolis to play against the Hoosiers. When Sam and his friends arrived he still carried the wagon spoke, and after the visitors had gotten over their fright at facing a crowd of city rooters, he was permitted to use it against Larry McKeon, the celebrated pitcher. Sam connected with the first ball pitched and sent it over the fence, thereby satisfying the professionals that he had the stuff in him of which baseball stars were made.

The great hitters of the old days used heavier bats than the great batsmen of today. Anson and George F. Gore used clubs that resembled small telegraph poles, with unusually thick handles, but they batted in an entirely different manner. Anson timing the ball nicely and just meeting it, while Gore took a long wallop. Dan Brouthers and Roger Connor, left handed batters, also used heavy bats, taking toe holds and swinging viciously. Connor once put a ball over the right field fence at the old New York park, and for the feat was presented with a $500 gold watch by the members of the Stock Exchange.

Most of the leading club swingers today, excepting Chief Meyers, use fairly light bats. Heinie Zimmerman's clubs have regular pipe stem handles. Ty Cobb uses a medium sized bat with a small handle and Joe Jackson's sticks are much like those used by Zimmerman. And yet how these fellows can sting the ball, as well as, and perhaps better than, if they tried [illegible] heavy clubs!

PONTIFICIAL REQUIEM MASS

Catholic Churches of the City in Mourning

A solemn service, in the form of a pontifical requiem mass, was celebrated at St. Mary's church this morning in memory of Pope Pius X and many attended.

Rev. Fr. Thomas R. McCoy, pastor, was the celebrant, and the plain Gregorian chant was rendered by the regular choir.

On Wednesday morning a similar service will be held in the Church of the Sacred Heart at 9 o'clock, and toward the latter part of the week in St. Johns church.

The churches of the city will be draped with mourning emblems before Sunday, and all altars now are solid draperies of black broadcloth.

The only church exterior which is draped so far is that of Sacred Heart in Atlantic. There the emblems are arranged in simple straight lines of black, mingling with which are yellow and white, papal colors.

ALL ARE IMPROVING.

Elsie Snyder, six years old, one of the party rescued from drowning in the Back river Saturday night when the auto of her father went through the fence, has been discharged from the Quincy City Hospital in good condition. Her baby sister, Jeanette, one year old, remains as a patient and is rapidly improving.

Channel Islands' Customs.

The Channel Islands—where there is still in every day use a patois almost identical with the Norman French spoken by William the Conqueror—are the home of other quaint antiquarian relics. A local politician whose election as jurat had been annulled by the royal court of the island on the ground of his having been sentenced to a term of imprisonment some years ago knelt bareheaded at the entrance to the courthouse and exclaimed, "Haro, Haro, Haro, a l'aide, mon prince, on me fait tort." The effect of this appeal, technically called the "clameur de Haro," is to stay proceedings until the petitioner's case has been heard. In modern times the cry has most frequently been raised to interrupt building operations on land to which the title is disputed—much to the annoyance of unsuspecting strangers who have settled in the islands without being aware of this curious tradition. Popular etymology explains "Haro" as an abbreviation of "Ha, Rollo!" thus making the cry a direct appeal to the first Duke of Normandy.

Collective.

At a regular mass meeting of the Scandinavians in South Minneapolis a few nights since, the pastor having heard that one John Johnson wanted to join the church, said, "Will John Johnson, if present, please stand up?" Nearly all the men present stood up. The bewildered preacher looked around awhile, and then said: "You may sit down, Mr. Johnson, I will call a meeting of you some time next week."

Advertisers Ask Only A Fair Trial

By HOLLAND.

ADVERTISERS do not attempt to make you agree to buy their goods for the rest of your life. They only want you to give their wares a trial, to subject them to actual test by actual use, and then be guided by experience

Could anything prove more clearly that the advertiser has supreme confidence in his product, that he is absolutely certain that it will please you, that it will be all he says it is?

It would indeed be foolish to spend money to induce you to buy an article that would prove unsatisfactory and would result in your telling friends and neighbors of your experience. Advertisers spend millions making their trademarks known, and in order to make their trademarks valuable they must stand for a certain standard of worth. Having made their trademarks known, manufacturers exert every effort to keep the goods up to the expected high grade.

YOU CAN'T GO WRONG IN FOLLOWING ADVERTISEMENTS.

Notes of an Author.

I remember that Frank kept a black notebook in his inside coat pocket, in which he set down a heterogeneous collection of notes of his own observations—a well turned sentence, a good name, the possible title of a book. One of these entries, I remember, read, "The hands of the village clock closed like a pair of shears and cut the night in twain."

This book was his greatest treasure. Years afterward he told me that keeping it taught him the difference between seeing life subjectively and objectively. No one, he believed, could become a writer until he could regard life and people and the world in general from the objective point of view, until he could remain detached, outside, maintain the unswerving attitude of the observer. I read part of his notebook once and got soundly kicked for my impertinence, but years afterward I came upon many of these same notes in his work, amplified and adapted.—From a Sketch of Frank Norris by His Brother, Charles Norris.

Signs of Ancient Paris.

George Cain, curator of the Carnavalet museum, in Paris, treasure house of Parisian antiquities, has arranged an exhibition of old signs rescued from under the pick of the demolisher.

Some are examples of exquisite iron work. Others are delightfully quaint, such as the sign of the old Latin quarter barber, which announces that he "works quickly and silently." Following the name of a herbalist in the same old world district is the request that he be not mistaken "for the other impostor living across the street."

A Belleville store proclaimed itself "a raw and cooked pork butcher." Among signs intentionally facetious is that of a little cafe which stood opposite the gate of a Parisian cemetery announcing to passers that they would be "more comfortable here than across the street."—Chicago Tribune.

Nightingales as Pets.

Although in nature the song of the nightingale does not extend later than the middle of June, yet in captivity the bird will sing up to the time of the autumn molt and will begin again at Christmas. The one detraction from the merits of the nightingale as a pet bird is its individuality. Some birds will sing only when no one is in the room with them, some will sing under any condition, and some will be silent for ever if they change ownership. At the earnest solicitation of a friend I once parted with a nightingale which was the finest singer I had ever heard, and in its new ownership, although it was kept in the same cage and was fed in exactly the same manner as that to which it had been accustomed, it never uttered a note during the remaining seven years of its life.—London Graphic.

New Year Calls In China.

New Year calls are the custom in China, and you have to pay them in festive attire of silk or satin.

These fine clothes (says Archdeacon Moule in "The Chinese People") can be hired, the price being gradually lowered as the hours of the first six days pass by. We complained once of the very late arrival of a caller, who should have been among the first to salute us. He replied that money was scarce and he was obliged to wait for the cheapest day to secure a fine robe already donned and doffed by a dozen of others. During these ceremonial days the whole community seems to give itself over to indiscriminate gambling, a practice illegal and condemned both by Chinese law and standards of morality, but winked at during this season.

The First Airship.

If we can believe certain ancient historians Xerxes was the owner of the first airship. The chroniclers say it was received as a gift from his courtiers and consisted of a winged throne, to which were harnessed four tame eagles. Food held above the hungry birds was the incentive of the motive power, and, it is said, their struggles to appease their appetites resulted in raising the throne from the ground.

Justified.

"Superstitious after all these years! Don't you remember on the evening we first met how a black cat ran across our path and you swore some misfortune would happen to you?"

"And it wasn't a year until we were married! What greater proof do you want?"—Houston Post.

Not a Joking Matter.

"My dear," said Mrs. Henpeck, "I'm positive that our boy is thinking seriously of matrimony."

"Well, I only hope so," returned Henpeck with unusual spirit. "I wouldn't want any boy of mine to be so unfortunate as to regard it as a joke."

That's Different.

His Wife—You would not have half the nervousness you do if you would give up smoking. Himself—Oh, I couldn't live without my pipe. His Wife—Yes, you could. You told Millie Perry you could not live without her before you met me.

Inhuman Monster.

Madge—He broke her heart, the wretch! Marie—Did he jilt her? Madge—No; he insisted on her keeping her engagement when she had a better offer.—Boston Transcript.

Alcohol For Poison Ivy.

An eminent New York surgeon says that the best treatment for the inflammation caused by poison ivy is to wash the place and then bathe it in 95 per cent alcohol.

CITY COUNCIL

STATE PRIMARIES.

Councilman Craig offered an order calling the state primaries for Sept. 22. Adopted.

A THIRD BUDGET.

The Mayor sent a communication requesting the passage of a supplementary budget to provide for the following appropriations:

By the Assessors
Extra clerical	$100
Miscellaneous	200
By the Fire department
Horse shoeing and keeping	1,000
Repairs and fixtures	500
Fuel and lighting	200
Miscellaneous	100

Councilman Bailey offered an order for the above amounts which was read and referred to the Finance Committee.

The Finance Committee reported ought to pass on Order No. 275, the supplementary budget No. 2.

It was at this point that Councilman Little asked relative to the tax rate.

Councilman Little also asked the Mayor if it would be possible to continue the street lighting unless the additional $3,000 was passed, and the Mayor replied no.

Councilman Little then asked if it would be possible to have the street lights run until 1 o'clock for the balance of the year without this appropriation and the Mayor replied that he thought it would.

Councilman Little said that street lighting was a luxury and that it would be well to cut down on luxuries, and asked that the question be divided.

He also asked to be excused from voting on the light proposition, but Councilman Ross objected and he was not excused. That portion of the supplementary budget calling for $3,000 for street lighting was then passed, Councilman Little alone voting no.

The remainder of the budget order was then passed unanimously.

HIGHER INTEREST RATE.

The Finance Committee reported ought to pass on the order increasing the rate of interest on the Houghs Neck school order, the order widening Hancock street, and the order for new streets.

The order then passed to be ordained.

PETITIONS.

An application was received from Thomas F. Phillips for an auctioneer's license. Councilman Beeman offered an order granting the license which was adopted. The bond was approved.

A petition was received from the Citizens Gas Light Co., for a location for gas mains on Grove street, Bates avenue and Adams street.

Councilman Gilliatt offered an order for a public hearing Sept. 21, which was adopted.

Adjourned at 8.14.

After adjournment President Whiton called attention to the hearing to be given by the special recess committee of the Legislature, Thursday morning, relative to city charter, and said that he hoped all who were interested in the question, whether members of the city Council or not, would attend.

DORCHESTER DREDGING.

The port directors have awarded the contract for dredging at Commercial Point, Dorchester Bay, to Charles M. Cole, who was the lowest of six bidders. His bid was 23 cents per cubic yard, a total of $52,555 for 228,500 cubic yards to be dredged. The port directors have given instructions to have the work started at once.

RECENT FUNERALS.

The funeral of Eric Konkers, who met death in a 40 foot fall at the Mannex quarry Saturday morning, was held from the Hall undertaking rooms Monday afternoon. After services were conducted by a Finnish clergyman from another city, burial took place in Mt. Wollaston cemetery. The deceased was known among his people as Eric Moilonen.

The funeral of Miss Augusta French, an 88 year old Braintree resident, who died in Westboro, took place this afternoon at the undertaking rooms of John Hall. Services were conducted by Rev. J. A. Thompson, acting rector of Christ church, and burial was in the Pond street cemetery, Braintree.

Edgar Johnson, an 96 year old inmate at the Sailors Snug Harbor died Monday and this afternoon, preceding burial in the cemetery at the home, services were held by Rev. J. A. Thompson. The deceased has been at the home for several years. The only available information concerning him is the log of his life which states he was a deep sea fisherman. He is thought to have been a native of Brooklyn, N. Y.

KILLED BY AUTOMOBILE

Child of Six With Others Playing in Street

Ethel Kaplan, a 6 year old girl, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Meyer Kaplan of Auburn street, Chelsea, who was visiting friends in Quincy was instantly killed Tuesday evening by being run down by an automobile on Sumner street, owned and driven by Nathan Sternberg of South Quincy.

According to Mr. Sternberg a number of children were playing in the street and in trying to avoid hitting them he says that he turned his machine sharply to the left, running it into a fence. The little Kaplan girl was standing on the sidewalk at the time, and according to Mr. Sternberg he did not see the girl until after his car had come to a stop, as the only children that he saw were those playing in the street. His car was not running fast at the time, for knowing the thoroughfare is usually filled with children playing in the street, he says that he was proceeding with caution to avoid an accident. When he came suddenly upon several children in the middle of the street he says that he turned sharply to the left and went across the sidewalk, and failed to notice the Kaplan girl.

Immediately after the accident he was placed under arrest on the charge of manslaughter and was later bailed in the sum of $3,000. The case will probably be continued until after an inquest is held.

HELD UP ON ADAMS STREET

Man Orders Automobile Party to Stop and Deliver

William Whittemore of 30 Sawyer avenue, Dorchester, stopped his automobile at Adams and Whitwell streets Tuesday afternoon when an unknown man jumped from the sidewalk to the street and ordered him to do so.

The man demanded that Mr. Whittemore exhibit the license of his machine and when the request was complied with, asked for his operator's license. Mr. Whittemore was about to show the latter when he realized his questioner was one of the "Knights of the Road," instead of a police officer in citizens clothes and he opened his engine and brushed by.

He reached City Square before finding an officer and reported his experience to Patrolman James Murray who accompanied him to the scene of the holdup. They instituted a search of the surrounding territory but were unsuccessful.

Mr. Whittemore reported that the holdup took place in true western style, the man rushing from the sidewalk to the path of his machine. His untidy appearance aroused suspicion and when Mr. Whittemore's party of three got the impression a demand for money was about to be made they were anxious to leave the spot. There were no weapons displayed.

Standing a short distance away, partially concealed by bushes, was another man, who is thought to have been a pal of the self appointed officer.

The description furnished was that of a middle aged man, with dark hair, wearing a high crown straw hat, grey coat and brown trousers.

LOOKING FOR RESCUERS.

Private Earle U. Raubenson of the Coast Artillery Corps at Fort Strong, writing to a Boston paper, says that he desires to learn the name of the man, whom he says saved his life while swimming off the fort Saturday afternoon. He says that he was pulled out of the water by someone in a private yacht. Monday's Daily Ledger gave an account of the rescue of two men from drowning Saturday afternoon in the narrows by John T. Cavanagh of the yacht Meemer. It is probable that private Raubenson is one of the men saved by Mr. Cavanagh

THE ATLANTIC TO SAIL FRIDAY

Quincy Built Steamship to Go Through Canal

The Directors of the Port of Boston made an inspection Tuesday of the steamship Atlantic, built at Quincy for the Panama canal service and which will sail from Boston on Friday for the Pacific coast, via Panama canal. It will be the first sailing from Boston by this route. The steamship was to have sailed Aug. 15, but delays incidental to the first sailing caused a postponement.

The inauguration of this new service will be a big factor in the development of New England and ports on the Pacific coast, as it will bring Boston in closer touch with these ports, and by offering such attractive rates should develolp a large business A second steamer for this same service, the Pacific, is now receiving her finishing touches at the Fore River yards, and the chances are that other steamers for the same line will be built in the near future.

Some idea of the capacity of the Atlantic may be had when it is known that it will require more than 700 freight car loads to load her fully.

The trip from Boston through the Panama canal to San Francisco, it is estimated, will consume twenty days. Ships of this line will also call at Los Angeles, Portland, and Seattle.

STREET LIGHTING.

Councilman Stephen B. Little of West Quincy takes exception to the report of the Council meeting of Monday evening which quotes him as saying that street lighting was a luxury. It was not the intention of the Ledger to make his statement quite as broad as he has interpreted it. At the time he was discussing the proposition of 1 o'clock street lighting and the statement was in relation to street lighting after that hour. He said he believed street lighting after that hour a luxury, and that we ought to be willing to sacrifice the luxuries when the necessities are costing so much.

CITY COUNCIL REGULAR

Important Communication Expected from School Board

President Whiton of the City Council has sent out a call today for a meeting of the City Council for next Monday evening. When the Council adjourned at the meeting of July 6, it was subject to the call of the President. If a meeting were not called by the President for next Monday evening it would be necessary for the Mayor to call another special meeting to act on the supplementary budget.

There are some other matters, however, that will probably come up next week, and in order that any business may be transacted President Whiton decided to call a regular meeting of the Council. In addition to the supplementary budget which will probably be reported by the Finance Committee, the list of election officers will come up for confirmation, and an important communication is expected from the School Committee.

HOME RULE FOR CITIES

Taunton and Brockton Mayors Before Committee

Taunton, New Bedford, Brockton and Fall River were heard Tuesday by the recess committee of the legislature on the subject of city charters. Mayor Fish of Taunton said he believed thoroughly that municipalities should be permitted to work out their own salvation, and Mayor Howard of Brockton agreed with him.

Robert A. Dean of Fall River was strong for home rule for cities. The New Bedford delegation was split on the subject of ward representation.

Tomorrow will be Quincy's day before the committee and the attendance of a number of citizens is expected.

BIGELOW PARK SCHOOL LOT SELECTED

School Committee Votes Approval of the So-called Swithin Lot for Schoolhouse

Three Quincy Teachers Wanted at Normal Schools

That teachers in the Quincy schools stand high among educational men is evident by the fact that three of the teachers in the public schools have resigned to accept positions in three different Normal schools of the state.

The resignations of these teachers were received at the meeting of the School Committee Tuesday evening.

Arthur Ray of the High school resigned to accept a position in the mechanical drawing department of the Massachusetts Normal Art school.

Miss S. Elizabeth Pope of the Coddington school resigned to accept a position as masters assistant at the Bridgewater Normal school.

Miss Ruth C. Gurdy of the Lincoln school resigned to accept a position at the North Adams Normal school.

Miss Gladys Brock who was elected to the High school, declined the election.

NEW TEACHERS.

New teachers elected are as follows:

Miss Elsie Derville to the Coddington school.

Miss Beula Faxon to the Coddington school.

William D. Pierce to the High school.

Esther F. Anderson to the High school.

Bernice Moore to the John Hancock school.

Alice L. Goodspeed to the Massachusetts Fields school.

Olive F. Moody to the Massachusetts Fields school.

BIGELOW PARK LOTS.

A representative of Burke & Co. was present and showed plans of proposed school lots in the Bigelow Park district.

GRIDLEY BRYANT DISTRICT.

A delegation was present from the Gridley Bryant district asking for a return to the five year school age, and that a two-session day be given the first grade pupils. The request was taken under consideration.

WEEKLY LECTURES.

The North American Civic League for Immigrants was granted the free use of the Adams school hall for its weekly educational lectures.

SCHOOL CENSUS.

A letter was received from the State Board of Education calling attention to the new law relative to school census and the new method of recording the same. The new method greatly increases the work of the census taker.

NO POLITICS WANTED.

The Socialists Party club was refused the use of the school yards for public meetings, on the ground that it was a political organization.

SWITHIN LOT.

The Committee voted to notify the City Council of its approval of the so-called Swithin lot in the Bigelow Park district for a school lot.

TEACHER 50 YEARS.

Notice was received from the Massachusetts Teachers Retiring board that Miss Eliza C. Sheahan of the Adams school had been retired on a pension of $300.

Miss Sheahan has been a teacher in the public schools of Quincy for many years, having first been elected in 1865. During all of these years she has taught at the Adams school, which means that she has been teaching practically fifty years.

So far none of the kids have asked the school authorities to be sure and provide substitutes for the teachers who are stranded in Europe.

The Jews may get civil and political rights from the Czar, but they would better not try to sit on the front porch of our summer hotels.

THE SUMMER HOTELS.

Things were slow at the summer resorts, even before the war broke out. Landlords complained that there had been more cool weather and rain than usual, and the rooms did not sell. When the war news came over the cables, thousands of business men were summoned home to take up new and startling problems.

The hardest blow to the summer resort business of recent years has been the automobile tour habit. The desire to "see the country" is universal. Railroad travel spread before the traveller a great deal of scenic beauty. But it is hot and dusty, and in passing through any town, it spreads before the traveller a dingy sight of decaying out-houses and coal sheds. Motor travel has enabled people to see the beauty of the life of other states and cities, and without aching bones and tired heads.

The hotels that have suffered most from this cause are the handsome resting places of the wealthy. One would think that normal people, while on their outings, would like a simple living comparable to the plainness of the country scenes about them. Instead of that, the more costly hotels have done their best to reproduce, amid the wildness of nature, all the factitious atmosphere of the metropolitan hotel. Moreover, if you find yourself among a set of stiff and starched people, you must continually be prinking or feel that you look mussy. This is the age of the negligee shirt rather than of the dinner coat.

There are still plenty of hotels that give a simple and well cooked menu, and a good, clean room, for about $15.00 a week. They will never lack business, provided the location is attractive. More and more, also, the public is demanding hotel keepers take care with their water supplies and sanitation. Every fall there is a crop of typhoid cases due to contagion encountered at summer hotels.

WHY POPE PIUS WAS LOVED.

It is very frequently the case, when a man climbs from a lowly origin to some position of high authority and dignity, that he forgets the steps by which he rose. He loses sympathy for the poor and struggling. He assumes that because he was able to rise, others are at fault if they do not also succeed, forgetting that most people have not the endowments of power and force which permitted him to climb.

The sorrow manifested at the death of Pope Pius X is not limited to those of his own religious faith. Anyone who will scan the history of his life can see here the record of a singularly fine character. Born in a family of eight children, who were raised on a wage of $1.75 a week, he knew all the grind of poverty. His life in the splendor of the Vatican was made simple and informal, so far as he could escape from the machinery of a great position, as it had been in the hills of Treviso.

His example of humility and simplicity is particularly valuable from the tendencies within the church toward aristocracy and formality. Anyone familiar with Anthony Trollope's novels will recall the pictures of Anglican church life, which contrast singularly with the manners of Pope Pius.

The English type developed some wonderfully fine personalities. But there was too much ecclesiastical politics in it, too much display and wealth and luxury. The splendor accorded but ill with the rigors of the life of the Master, who knew not where to lay his head.

Any great church acquires its magnificence. Perhaps it needs it, for the assertion of its dignity and importance. But too often these exterior trappings tend to remove the ministers of the gospel from the simple people of every day life. It was the distinction of Pius, that up to the limit of his ability, and so long as he could, he answered personally all letters and appeals for help, and made it a point to see whoever wished to see him.

DESPERATE LAST STAND BEING MADE

New Battle Now Raging May Decide Fate of France

RENEWED SETBACKS TO ALLIES ARE LOOKED FOR

Ominous Silence Concerning Cities Menaced by Great German Army Sweeping Southward From Brussels—French Evacuate Mulhausen and Abandon Campaign Into Alsace and Lorraine—Paris May Soon Be Scene of Terrible Siege—No Rout of British Troops In Battling Thus Far—News from Namur Not Regarded as Reassuring—Four Forts Hold Out

London, Aug. 26.—A second great battle for the mastery of the French frontier is raging over a battle line 150 miles in length, from Maubeuge to Donon in the Vosges.

Stunned over the disastrous defeats of Monday, London appears to be resigned to the worst. Few will be surprised if dispatches bring messages of renewed setbacks to the allies and a German advance to Rheims, the strategic centre of the last defenses of France until the far-flung forts of Paris itself are encountered.

The brunt of the latest fighting seems to be centred about Givet, the French town in the valley of the Meuse which stands in a projection of the French territory into Belgium. Here the British are believed to be concentrated, with thousands of French, striving to hold back the invaders, who are aiming at the great unprotected gap between Maubeuge and Verdun.

This is in advance of the line supposed to have been held by the allies Monday and was gained by an offensive movement that seems to have tremendous elements of danger. It is north of the aggressive armies which were triumphant Monday at Neufchateau and Longwy and exposed to an attack from the flank, while the front is being assailed by the Germans who have been released from the north by the fall of Namur.

Nation's Fate In the Balance

It is so exposed a position that alarm has been occasioned in London by the admission of the French war office that on the result of the battle hangs the fate of France.

An ominous silence upon the situation in the north, where the flanking German cavalry has already seized Roubaix and threatened Lille, is maintained by the official utterances from Paris. No mention is made of places northwest of Maubeuge, although it was known that both Lille and Valenciennes were menaced by the great German army that swept southward from Brussels.

East of the Meuse, if the Paris dispatches may be relied upon, the French defeat has not been a rout as was feared. The path of the enemy that shattered the French at Nufchateau is opposed by a strong French force that has rallied after its repulse and has seized the roads leading from the great forest of the Ardennes.

On the Lorraine boundary the French have surprisingly taken the offensive, a measure that proved disastrous Monday and one that does not seem to have much hope for success in view of the demoralization that must have been spread through the French troops because of their reverses and the elation that must stimulate the victorious Germans.

France In Desperate Plight

The desperation of France is shown in the voluntary evacuation of Mulhausen. The much vaunted campaign into Lorraine and Alsace has been completely abandoned. The removal of the mourning from the statue of Strassburg in the Place de la Concorde was decidedly premature.

The terrible effectiveness of the German guns levelled against Namur has caused the deepest pessimism in London about the possibility of a long-sustained defense of Paris.

If the Germans can succeed in breaking through the defenses at which their attack is levelled it is not thought they will be held long before the forts of Rheims, Laon and La Fere. Then the triumphant army will be within the last of the French defenses that guard the approach to the capital, and Paris itself may soon be the scene of another siege, more terrible by far than the terrible siege of the Franco-Prussian war.

London is finding little consolation in the news that the British troops have behaved admirably under fire. It was what was expected of them, but it was not expected that they could be forced back so signally in the first great battle of the war.

Nearing Gates of Paris

The exultant German prophesies that the gray army will, not many days hence, be outside the gates of Paris are daily finding more believers. The enormous crushing power of the German war machine, quite without experience in battle, has been a revelation as unexpected as it has been painful.

Paris is plunged in gloom, certain that a siege of the city impends. It is believed the disastrous lesson of Monday has caused the troops withdrawn from Alsace to be placed about Rheims. No longer is there any belief in the French capital that the great forts of the frontier will be able to hold back the German tide of conquest.

No details of the battling of Tuesday have as yet been received. From the French official messages an optimistic view might be gleaned were it not for the disasters of Monday. It is, however, apparent that the French officers have done wonders in rallying their men, especially in the southeast, where every indication pointed to a precipitate flight.

Plenty of Fresh Troops

The resumption of hostilities showed the enormous number of men engaged. A delay of a day or two, with a few engagements at widely-separated points, would have been expected were it not for the fact that both the allies and the Germans seem able to pour fresh troops into places where the soldiers have been most exhausted.

It is certain there has been no rout of British troops in the battling that has thus far occurred. Near Mons they bore the brunt of the German attack and, although opposed by a force greatly their superior in numbers, they did not fall back until ofdered to retreat to defensive positions that had already been entrenched for just such a movement. That the British casualties were not much over 2000, in view of the prominent part that they took in the defense, is regarded as surprising.

A message from Sir John French made it seem possible that the British might succeed in holding back the invaders. He telegraphed that the retreat, always the most difficult maneuver to execute under fire, was brought off admirably, the soldiers, although pressed hard, retiring slowly and inflicting great losses on the enemy.

The Situation at Namur

The message that four of the forts at Namur still held out is not regarded as reassuring. With the city itself and five of the forts held by the Germans, it is not thought they will be worried by the presence of an enemy at Namur, especially as it seems probable that the great German guns can at any time batter the surviving strongholds into ruins.

The fighting now seems to be heaviest about Givet, just as Monday the most stubborn battling was about Namur, Mons and Charleroi and in the towns between. This does not indicate such a disastrous retreat as was at first prophesied, although it is not probable that the allies can long defend this exposed line.

It is expected that the line of battle will fall back to the gap between Maubeuge and Verdun. There, despite the fact that the forts are not adequate to withstand a tremendous pressure, the position of the allies would appear to be stronger than it was in Belgium.

The ground, broken and defended by rivers, has been capably surveyed and prepared for just such an attack as is being delivered, and while it is probably the weakest spot on the French frontier it is full of pitfalls for an army taking the offensive. If this line, now assailed, cannot be held, it is doubtful whether the Germans will be halted for any length of time before they reach the gates of Paris.

French In Swift Retreat

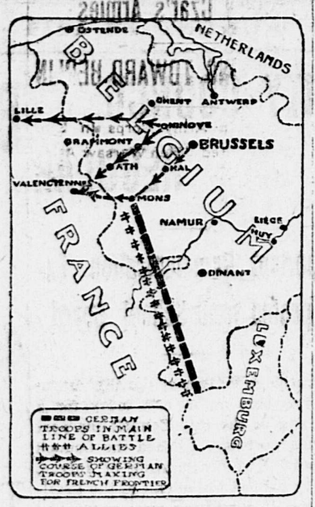

All along the line the French are withdrawing or are in swift retreat, pursued by the victorious Germans. At such points as the allies have been able successfully to defend, the German army has resumed the offensive, and is prosecuting vigorous attacks.

Namur has, in all probability, fallen, despite French assertions to the contrary, and practically all Belgium, save Antwerp, now appears to be in German hands. Berlin dispatches lay stress on the fact that the kaiser's men are "chasing" the French back to the frontier.

Dissension, probably not of a serious nature, however, was reported among the allies, for the reason that the Belgians consider that they have been forced to bear the brunt of the fighting. Such a circumstance, apparently, could hardly have been avoided.

LOCATION OF TROOPS.

Battle Line of French and British Against the Germans From Mons to Luxemburg.

Namur's loss, after a resistance of only two days, has plunged London in gloom. It was confidently expected that the forts there would be harder to take than those at Liege, and that the German advance on Paris would be delayed a long time.

Now, apparently, the allied armies have retired to the line of defenses inside of the French frontier, which has already been crossd at several points.

Austrians Driven Out of Servia

Servia has been cleared of Austrian invaders, according to an official dispatch received in London from Nish, Servia.

The message said that Servian troops occupied Shabats at 4 p. m., Aug. 24, driving the Austrians back to the river Save.

HARD FIGHT IS CERTAIN

German Governor of Kiauchau Will Resist Japanese Attack

A Pekin dispatch says that despite the attempt of the Japanese to get the garrison of Kiauchau to surrender without resistance, it is now certain the German fortifications will be taken only after a hard fight.

The governor, under direct orders from the kaiser to resist to the utmost, has issued a second proclamation to the people couched in even more defiant language than was his first. Every German is called to the aid of the troops.

It is stated at Pekin that rapid-fire guns have been mounted on temporary fortifications, erected to withstand a land attack from the rear, and that a complete chain of earthworks, protected by entanglements, has been constructed.

A pamphlet printed in Chinese bitterly attacking the English is now being generally circulated throughout China. It declares Germany is China's sincere friend and that Japan and England plot her ruin.

SCOPE OF JAPAN'S ACTION

May Be Carried Outside the Orient, According to a Diplomat

Japan may be drawn outside of the Far East into a more distant theatre of war, an official of the Japanese embassy at Washington declared.

Despite Japan's assurances to the United States that she intended to confine her war activities to the Orient, the Japanese diplomat, who for obvious reasons refused to be quoted, said the scope of Japan's action depends largely upon her ally, Great Britain.

If war exigencies of England should require assistance by Japan outside of the Far East, this Japanese official stated, Nippon would by her treaty obligations be forced seriously to consider giving assistance outside of Asia.

KIND TO AMERICANS

Germany Making Great Efforts to Maintain Our Friendship

The London Times, discussing at length the German treatment of Americans who were stranded in Germany at the opening of the war, says:

"There are many indications that Germany still hopes to find friends among neutral nations. The most strenuous efforts in this direction were reserved for the United States as represented by Americans stranded within Germany's borders.

"So soon as the panic that followed the outbreak of the war subsided elaborate orders were issued that every courtesy be shown Americans. All this week special trains have been running for their benefit from many centres to Rotterdam and Flushing.

"At certain stations along the routes these parties were met by Germans bringing hot coffee and other refreshments and by others waving the Stars and Stripes."

OFF TO FIGHTING LINE

American Volunteers March In Paris Under Stars and Stripes

The Stars and Stripes were seen on the streets of Paris alongside the French tri-color, when the corps of American volunteers, 200 strong, marched through the city to take a train for Rouen, where they will be drilled under French officers.

Among the American volunteers are many young men who have been studying in Paris. American girls waved their handkerchiefs and clapped their hands as the slender column of volunteers entered the station, and a crowd which filled the square outside cheered.

Thre troop trains will take the Americans, together with some other foreign volunteers, to the north.

HUNTING MISSING BAGGAGE

Twenty Thousand Pieces Belonging to Americans Astray In Germany

With the object of locating and recovering some 20,000 missing trunks, valises, suitcases and other baggage, Edward Baston of the London American citizens' distress committee has started on a tour throughout Germany.

More than 5000 fleeing Americans reported to the committee that they lost their baggage in that country during the early days of hostilities. At Cologne alone there is a wall of trunks fifteen feet high all around the cathedral.

CHARGED WITH ASSAULT.

Resenting the attention paid a young lady, according to the police report, John Haino 20 years, of 66 Copeland street, stabbed Pekka Pastikainen of 41 Smith street, during an argument that developed on Copeland street Tuesday evening.

The combatants were separated and the wounded man was taken to the office of Dr. Ahlstrom at Brewers corner. He found a deep wound on the left arm, near the shoulder. The cut is thought to have been made with a pocket knife.

Haino was later arrested by Patrolman Duane and booked on a charge of assault with dangerous weapon. The condition of the victim is not considered serious.

CHICKENS NOW SAFE.

The muskrat which has been successfully raiding the chicken coops along the banks of Town brook, in the rear of the police headquarters, met its fate about 10 o'clock Tuesday night when it popped his head through an opening in a wire fence and received a full shotgun charge between the eyes.

The first disappearance of chickens was noted several weeks ago, and despite the vigilance of the owners there was no let up. Sunday night the muskrat was detected in the act but he escaped before he could be rounded up. Monday night his visit to the coops was warily completed. Overconfidence and good marksmanship cost its life Tuesday night.

W. B. HOLDEN RETURNING

Mrs. Harmon Also Sails From Liverpool

Walter B. Holden, formerly of this city, who has been in business in Paris, France, for a number of years is on his way to Quincy. A recent letter received from his states that business in Paris is paralyzed. All of the large stores of the city have been turned into hospitals, and that business is at a standstill. Conditions in Paris at this time beggar description. Mrs. Holden has been in Quincy several months.

Miss Mabel B. Phillips, the Woodward school pupil, and Mrs. Van Ryswood of West Quincy, returned this week on the S. S. Pretorian which docked at Boston. They left Quincy June 16 and have been travelling in Scotland and Ireland. They attempted to reach London but were unable to get there as trains are held up to carry troops. They saw the British troops mobilizing and the warships patroling the North sea, and excitement everywhere. They sailed from Liverpool Aug. 14 and for a few nights the port holes of the steamship were covered. No wireless news was given out. First class passengers occupied the second and third class sections of the ship which was crowded.

George N. Harmon received this morning a cable from his wife, (Helen Rhines) dated Liverpool, which says: "Arabic, Sept. 3" which means that she is sailing for home. When first reported since the war she was in Austria and then in Italy, and now her friends are happy.

The first authentic information from Miss Helen Cashman since the commencement of hostilities was received Tuesday in a letter dated June 30. The letter was written at Venice. Miss Cashman is thought to be aboard a ship now in passage. She is a sister-in-law of Dr. Daniel B. Reardon.

Mrs. Edward A. Burkhardt of Billings street, Atlantic, has received word that her cousin Windward Prescott and wife, are returning from London on the Franconia due in Boston on Sunday.

The Most Accurate Machine.

The world's most precise piece of machinery is doubtless the Rowland dividing engine, owned and operated by Johns Hopkins university, Baltimore. This machine, the invention of Professor Henry A. Rowland, long the head of the physics department in that institution, was devised by him to rule diffraction gratings on glass or metal for use in the most delicate kind of spectroscopic work in the place of the glass prisms that are commonly used to form the spectrum by splitting up white light into its component colors. These gratings consist of five parallel lines so close together that they can be separated only by a microscope of the highest power. Accuracy is measured nowadays by the limit of error. The Rowland gratings are not perfect because perfection is impossible, but their limit of error is one-millionth of an inch, which makes the engine that is able to draw them the record holder for accuracy.—Literary Digest.

Astrological Constellations.

The sun does not belong to any constellation. There are no constellations, merely imaginary figures of men, beasts, serpents, etc., among the stars, all made by ancient astrologers ages before even one law of nature had been discovered. Thus go out to space a hundred trillion miles or so, turn around, look back at our sun, and it would appear as a very small star in some one of these imagined figures, let us say Orion. Now move during a few hundred millions years at a mile per minute; then our little star, the sun, would appear as a point in some other figure, depending entirely in what part of the celestial vault you might then happen to be located. Astronomers catalogue positions of stars by right ascensions and declinations, east of the prime meridian and north or south of the celestial equator, and have no manner of use for astrological constellations.—New York American.

OUTING AT NANTASKET

Mrs. Richards Entertains Her Tag Day Collectors

One of the finest outings this summer was given Tuesday by Mrs. John R. Richards to the children who so nobly helped her on the "Tag Day" collection for the Salem Fund. There were eleven automobiles in the party kindly loaned by friends of Mrs. Richards. At this time Mrs. Richards wishes to thank her kind friends who so willingly loaned their automobiles

Mrs. Richards was ably assisted by Mrs. William Spargo, Mrs. Lawrence Moran, Miss Jessie Burke, Miss Katharine Connors, Mrs. William Richards Mrs. Irving Doble, John R. Richards and Miss Frances E. Burke.

The party left the Richards homestead at 8 A. M. and arrived at Nantasket about 9. Bathing was enjoyed by many and then all the pleasures at Paragon were taken in.

About 5 P. M. the happy but tired kiddies left for home. This outing will be long remembered by all and after three hearty cheers for Mrs. Richards the happy children dispersed for their homes.

James Mattie, Mrs. William Spargo, Edgar Spargo, Gertrude Chisolm, Anna Chisolm, Florence Sanderson, Muriel Cain and Gertrude Campbell.

Miss Catharine Yule,—Helen Pierce Mabel McLeod, and Katharine Campbell, J. R. Richards.

FAREWELL PARTY.

A very pleasant time was enjoyed Tuesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Mitchell of Nash avenue. The affair was given in honor of Mrs. Frank Wade of 3 Read park who leaves for Lawrence where she will reside.

The home was brilliantly illuminated and was artistically decorated with potted plants and ferns. A collation of ice cream and cake was served. About twenty were present. A splended musical program was arranged by the hostess, which consisted of graphophone and vocal selections. Mrs. Mitchell's little daughter Annie presented Mrs. Wade with a handsome cut glass fern dish, a token of esteem from her friends and neighbors, who will miss her very much.

Ended the Boa Constrictor.

"All my reading life," says Dr. Frank Baldwin, the Philippines explorer, "I have regarded the boa constrictor with horror and aversion. When I got into the jungle my great desire was to meet a large boa in order that I might do him some very real harm. When I did find one my sentiments were those of pity for the snake. He was stretched across the path, and when the natives saw him they pounced upon him with yells of delight. On the other hand, he seemed dazed.

"With a native for every yard of him holding him firmly he journeyed on legs through the jungle and down to the beach. He wriggled feebly and hissed in a hopeless manner. There they cut his head off with no more ceremony than they would have used if he had been a chicken, folded as much as they could get of him into a kind of clam shell about three feet in diameter and built a fire. In an hour he was cooked, and in another hour this great snake which had been painfully accumulating feet and inches for years had disappeared. I must say that I felt a little indignant."—Youth's Companion.

A Persistent Scotch Beggar.

On opening the door in response to a very peremptory ringing of the bell a lady found a seedy looking individual whose outstanding characteristics immediately proclaimed themselves to be an antipathy toward soap and water and an open mind on the temperance question. She was about to shut the door hurriedly when he thrust a foot over the thresbold. At the same time he pushed forward a long, grubby envelope containing a hair comb, which he offered for sale. When he learned that there was "nothing doing" the bibulous one suggested, "You'd mebbe like to gie me the price o' a scone," and to be rid of him the somewhat scared lady handed over a copper. "An' ye'll no' buy the comb?" he asked as he turned away. "Oh, weel, nae doot ye ken yer ain business best." Then, as an afterthought, he added: "An' it's no' much o' a comb onywey. A've tried it masel'."—Glasgow News.

Taking Medicine in the Dark.

Never take medicine in the dark. This is the advice in an interesting little booklet I found in a drug store. It is timely and wholesome and has a wide application. The people of this country are too fond of taking medicine in the dark. They are so credulous and so eager to make money that they are constantly the victims of their own folly. A man has made a large fortune during the past fifteen years by writing letters from Spain to persons in this country telling the latter about fortunes left them by strangers on certain conditions. These conditions always involve the payment of money before the fortune can be secured. It is amazing how many persons who ought to know better have given up from $500 to $10,000 to an absolute stranger in the belief that with this amount the latter stood ready to turn over $20,000 to $100,000 to his victims.—Leslie's.

A Haughty Personage.

Professors in Germany are important personages and know it, but few probably ever reach the pinnacle of haughtiness attained by the one of whom this anecdote is narrated.

He was one of the greatest men in the faculty at Heidelberg. One day the authorities of that city ordered that the street in front of the professor's house should be paved.

"If you don't stop that noise," remarked the professor to the pavers, "I shall give up my position as a member of the Heidelberg faculty."

The pavers stopped work at once. The municipal authorities sent around to inquire respectfully of the professor when they might pave the street.

"When I take my vacation," he replied.

Then and only then was the street paved.

The Python's Gorge.

A specimen of python reticulata about twenty-five feet in length swallowed a swan weighing eighteen pounds and two days later a roebuck of sixty-seven pounds. Another swallowed within two days two roebucks of twenty-eight and thirty-nine pounds and soon thereafter a chamois of seventy-one pounds. In two and a half hours only the hind quarters of the limbs of the prey were visible. When a flashlight photograph was suddenly taken the python disgorged its booty in the space of half a minute.—Journal of the Royal Microscopical Society.

"Try mine for a change," suggested the impecunious young man.

RUSSIA MAKES GOOD HEADWAY

Soldau and Neidenburg Occupied by Czar's Armies

NOW LOOKING TOWARD BERLIN

Three German Army Corps in East Prussia Routed When Warsaw Army Turn on Their Flank and Attacks In Rear—Austrians Probably Cut Off on Frontier

St. Petersburg, Aug. 26.—The occupation of Soldau and Neidenburg, two important cities of East Prussia, by Russian troops, was announced by the general staff. It was stated they had been taken after five days' fighting.

The movement culminating in the fall of Soldau and Neidenburg indicates that the Russian left wing in Prussia in attempting an attack on Allenstein from the southwest. With Allenstein in their hands or safely invested, the Russians would be able to press on toward Berlin.

The Russian forces invading East Prussia are in two main divisions, known as the Warsaw army and the Vilna army. The latter first took the initiative against the Germans and attacked them along their entire front. The result was indecisive until the Warsaw army swept around the Germans' right flank and attacked them in the rear.

The defeat of three German army corps was converted into a rout by the timely arrival of the army from Warsaw, in the rear of the enemy's position. The Warsaw army, which was very powerful, completely turned the German position at the Mazur lakes, and while extending its operations over a wide front westward headed toward Allenstein. The German Twentieth army corps thus became a nut between stout crackers.

This sudden blow, the general staff states, threw the Germans into confusion and forced them to abandon their positions at Mazur lakes and fall back upon Allenstein.

In Galicia Russian strategy will be on a level with the victorious plan adopted farther north. The Austrians in Lemberg probably will be taken in a similar vice. This may be inferred from the fact that one army has reached Rava, to the north of Lemburg. Another army is advancing from the southwest, as is shown by the fact that nine Russian cavalry squadrons have routed the entire Austrian cavalry division at Plukhow.

The Austrian force retreating from Vladimir Volhynskiy, Russia, seventeen miles from the frontier, toward Sokal, in Galicia, Austria, probably has been cut off.

VILLA OPPOSES CARRANZA

Has Candidate of His Own For Presidency of Mexico

Washington, Aug. 26.—While President Wilson and administration officials are confident that differences between Carranza and Villa will be settled without recourse to arms, details of the position assumed by General Villa, as reaching here in official reports, show that the fighting general plans to insist on the elimination of General Carranza from permanent power in the new Mexican administration.

Carranza has sent General Obregon to Sonora, not only to smooth out the local troubles in that state, but to confer with Villa in an endeavor to bring Villa into complete harmony with the Carranza government.

It is suggested in many quarters that Villa intends to propose as a candidate for the presidency Emilio Madero, a brother of the late president.

CAR STRIKE SETTLED

Employes Given Increase and Demand For Back Pay Is Waived

Northampton, Mass., Aug. 26.—The strike of the employes of the Northampton Street Railway company was settled last night and the men returned to work this morning. A new wage scale and new working conditions were agreed upon.

The company will pay the men 2 cents an hour more than the rate recommended by the state board of arbitration, and the men will withdraw their demand for back pay amounting to $3650.

Car cleaners, barn men and trackmen will receive an increase of 2½ cents. Conductors and motormen will receive 25 cents an hour as a minimum and a maximum of 30 cents an hour at the end of six years of service.

The finals of all the track races will be run off on Thursday, the final day and points made on the final day will count toward the championship pennant. The standing at present is Ward Two, 9 points and Ward Three, 3 points. This includes the boys' base ball game, girls' base ball game, boys' soccer ball game and the one lap race on the track for boys.

The base ball champions are the Tigers of Ward Two, including: Joe Ryan, C. McBrayne, Joe Doherty, J. McKenna, E. Barr, J. Kelly, H. McGilvray G. Wester, W. Earley.

Remember everybody is invited to the final day on Thursday at Merrymount park.

Advertisers Ask Only A Fair Trial

By HOLLAND.

ADVERTISERS do not attempt to make you agree to buy their goods for the rest of your life. They only want you to give their wares a trial, to subject them to actual test by actual use, and then be guided by experience.

Could anything prove more clearly that the advertiser has supreme confidence in his product, that he is absolutely certain that it will please you, that it will be all he says it is?

It would indeed be foolish to spend money to induce you to buy an article that would prove unsatisfactory and would result in your telling friends and neighbors of your experience. Advertisers spend millions making their trademarks known, and in order to make their trademarks valuable they must stand for a certain standard of worth. Having made their trademarks known, manufacturers exert every effort to keep the goods up to the expected high grade.

YOU CAN'T GO WRONG IN FOLLOWING ADVERTISEMENTS.

BONEHEAD PLAYS ON THE DIAMOND

John Anderson Stole Second With Bases Full.

MERKLE'S COSTLY ERROR.

His Carelessness Back In 1908 Lost to New York Club About $60,000 and Each of His Teammates From $2,000 to $3,000 In World Series Money.

Some men achieve fame, but others—Fred Merkle and John Anderson, for instance—simply blunder into it and get their names enrolled indelibly on the pages of history.

Anderson, who once played ball for Washington, passed from major league view many years ago, but his memory still lives and will live as long as baseball lasts. Anderson isn't remembered because of the fact that he was once a brilliant fielder and a real slugger. His creditable accomplishments have been forgotten. Anderson lives in memory because he was the first man in major league history to steal second base with the sacks full.

Nowadays when some player duplicates Anderson's accomplishment the scribbling persons don't describe it by saying that "Hinky Dink stole second with the bases full." They simply state that "Hinky Dink pulled a 'John Anderson.'" And every man familiar with baseball knows just what Hinky Dink did.

Fred Merkle is another who never will be forgotten. He committed a "bone" back in 1908 that cost the New York club about $60,000 and each of his teammates from $2,000 to $3,000 in world series money. That one foozle will make Merkle's fame—or infamy—undying. And it has added a new verb to the dictionary, for in these days when a man performs some bonehead action it is not termed that way. The recounters of the incident simply state that "Smith merkled," which is description enough.

Merkle, as many will remember, is the gentleman who failed to touch second base in one of the final games of the 1908 season in which the National league championship and a divvy of the world's series money were at stake. One of his New York teammates slammed out a hit in the ninth, sending a man across the plate with the winning run. Merkle was on first when the hit was made. He started for second, but when he saw that the runner had crossed the plate in safety he gave second base a go by and hustled to the clubhouse.

John Evers of the Cubs, who were the Giants' rivals that day, noticed that Merkle failed to touch second. He rushed to second, shrieked to have the ball thrown to him and finally managed to get hold of it, although the crowd then was swarming into the field. Evers touched second base for a force out on Merkle, who by that time was under the shower bath in the clubhouse. Evers grabbed one of the umpires, called his attention to the fact that Merkle hadn't touched second, and the arbiter backed him up. The game had to be played over, and the Giants lost it and their chance to get into the world series.

Harry Niles long ago passed from view on the major league horizon, but the memory of his two famous "bones" still remains. Niles, who was an outfielder and a speedy man on the sacks, smashed out a terrific drive to center. Danzig, a slow runner, was on first when Niles connected, and he started lumbering down to second. Niles turned first, crossed second and pulled up at third after a whirlwind slide. It was not until then that he discovered that he had run past Danzig, who had stopped at second. Oh, yes, Niles was declared out for passing a runner, and the chances for victory by his team—the Boston Red Sox—were lost right there.

A short time afterward the Sox were playing one of the eastern teams. It was in the ninth, Boston leading by two runs, the other side having three on bases and only one out. The batter sent a long fly which Niles easily captured. Just as soon as he snared the ball Niles shoved it into his back pocket and started for the clubhouse. His amazed teammates yelled at him, but their yells were in vain. Niles was under full head of steam for the cooling shower, and the yells, which he took to be cheers as a reward for his catch, halted him not at all.

Of course, one of his teammates finally chased Niles to the clubhouse and relieved him of the ball—and himself of some cuss words—but the damage had been done. The three runners had crossed the plate and the Red Sox had lost. Niles thought that his catch made it three out.

M'LOUGHLIN AND BROOKES AS EQUAL TENNIS STARS.

Wilding Declares They Are World's Best Players Today.

Norman E. Brookes, captain of the Australasian tennis team that came to this country to play for the Davis cup, is a native of Victoria. He has been prominent in tennis since 1896 and has been the recognized champion of the world since 1907. He plays as nearly a perfect game as any player in the history of the sport, and if he has a real weakness it is yet to be discovered. The Australasian captain is remarkably heady and can adapt himself to any kind of play. He first appeared in Davis cup matches in 1905 and is thirty-six years of age.

NORMAN E. BROOKES.

Anthony F. Wilding, another member of the invading team and rated by experts as the peer of Brookes, does not place his own ability so high. He says that he cannot say whether Brookes or Maurice E. McLoughlin of San Francisco is the greater player, but he places the two as the best players of today.

Brookes is regarded as an individualist in that his strokes resemble none made by other players. His grips vary with almost every stroke, and he takes the ball in all sorts of positions.

Wilding declares that McLoughlin's service is the best he has ever played against. "His second ball," says Wilding, "is just as difficult to handle as his first. He follows it up to the net in remarkable fashion and then takes up the attack without giving his opponent any kind of option. The only method to adopt in meeting his service is the risky one of standing close in to it and attempting to drive as the ball rises, trying in so doing to drop the ball at McLoughlin's feet and force him to volley up.

"Win or lose, McLoughlin is perfectly happy, and he is without doubt one of the finest sportsmen in the world."

ATTEMPTS TO WRECK PALACE

Zeppelin Brought Down at Antwerp by Special Guns

HAD WROUGHT SERIOUS HARM

Seven Persons Killed and Two Public Buildings Wrecked by Bombs Dropped From Airship—City In Panic Until Monster and Her Large Crew Are Taken Into Custody

Antwerp, Aug. 26.—Germany sacrificed one of her latest type of Zeppelin dirigibles in a vain attempt to destroy the royal palace with high explosives.

Although the entire city was terror-stricken over the appearance of the monster of the air, the quick work of the forts at Hemizen, six miles away, in practically demolishing it, driving it to earth with the capture of the entire crew of twenty-five men, including the officers in command, quickly restored confidence.

Officials, in reassuring the inhabitants, declared it was unlikely there would be any further visitations at Antwerp, as the force of Zeppelins available for war work has been materially reduced.

The Zeppelin first made is appearance over the outskirts of the city. Although flying high, notice of its coming was quickly given by the snapping of the motor exhausts. As it swept toward the city like a huge bird of prey, the outlying forts began firing on it from the especially designed guns. It was impossible for the gunners to get the aim at the start and the dirigible swept directly across the city.

The noise of the canonnading gave the alarm in the city. Hundreds of people rushed into the streets panic stricken. The whirr of the motor was easily discernable to those in the streets and many women fainted.

The Zeppelin headed for the palace grounds and as soon as it was directly overhead the dropping of bombs began. The dirigible was compelled to remain at so high an altitude that it was impossible for the crew to get the range of the palace, although three of eight bombs dropped exploded near the building. Two buildings were completely wrecked and a number of others, including a hospital, were badly damaged. Seven persons were killed and six wounded.

The Zeppelin then headed higher in the air and started back toward the German lines. Passing over the forts it was subjected to direct fire, but not until the guns in the towers of Hemizen got into action that a hit was scored. A shell from the fort penetrated the envelope of the dirigible and it fluttered to earth.

Belgian soldiers were in waiting, and as the crew of the airship tumbled out they were quickly captured.

HAS A LONG RECORD

Morrison Sentenced For Forgery Despite His Earnest Plea

Boston, Aug. 26.—Archie M. Morrison, 58 years old, was sentenced in court here to serve three months in the house of correction for forgery. He pleaded guilty to using the name of Cashman Bros. on a check for $25 which he gave in payment of a debt of $8, receiving $17 back.

In a stirring plea for leniency, Morrison, who has a wife and three children, told Judge Sullivan he had led an honest, upright life for the past nine years, until he committed the forgery for which he was in court. He blamed that crime to a hypnotic spell which, he said, a man who is now in Salem jail exercises over him.

Morrison has a long record, which was read in court before he was sentenced. He has served time in the state prison, in the Plymouth county jail and in other institutions outside of the state.

ADMITS KILLING WOMAN

Photographer Claims Self-Defense In Slaying an Artist

Salinas, Cal., Aug. 26.—George Kodani, a Japanese photographer, under arrest here, confessed to Sheriff Nesbit that he had murdered Helena W. Smith, a New York artist, who had been living in the colony of writers and painters at Carmel-by-the-Sea.

He told conflicting stories of the murder, one version being that he killed Miss Smith in self-defense.

Alleged Murderer Arrested

Framingham, Mass., Aug. 26.—Francesco Luizza, 19 years old, wanted for the murder of Pietro Titone in this town, was arrested in Brooklyn. Luizza is said to have killed Titone as the result of a dispute over money.

Montreal Waiters Declare "War"

Montreal, Aug. 26.—"Discharge the German and Austrian waiters at once or we'll strike," was the ultimatum issued by a committee representing the French, English and Italian waiters in the big hotels here.

Autoist Sent to Jail

Worcester, Mass., Aug. 26.—Walter S. Batchelder, 26, of Chelsea, was sentenced to four months in jail for intoxication and for operating an automobile while under the influence of liquor.

CALLED BACK TO WORK

Salaries of Absent Members of Congress Will Be "Docked"

Washington, Aug. 26.—Majority Leader Underwood offered a resolution in the house to call back to Washington the 200 or more absent members of the house and to dock the salaries of those who fail to return.

The resolution also revokes leaves of absence granted by the house. The resolution was adopted.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES

Phillip Leff, a well-to-do resident of Chelsea, Mass., committed suicide by inhaling gas in a dance hall owned by him.

Fireman John Quinn was killed by a fall from a ladder while fighting a dwelling house fire at Methuen, Mass.

While playing in the street in front of the home of her parents at Chelsea, Mass., Fannie Goldband, 2, ran under the wheels of a wagon and was killed.

Mrs. Sarah A. Smith, probably the oldest postmistress in New England, died at her home in South Sandisfield, Mass., aged 82.

Eggs Long Used as Food.

Just how long people have been eating eggs is not known, certainly long before breakfasts were "invented" or made a custom. There is no doubt mankind in a barbaric state had learned of the use of certain eggs as a food.

A Romance of Flowers

But There Was Much In It That Was Practical

By EUNICE BLAKE

Mary Blackmore had the misfortune to lose her parents when she was sixteen years old and was left with no support. A Mrs. Ashurst, an old friend of her mother, was the only person upon whom Mary could rely for advice. This lady had her own peculiar notions. She regretted the necessity for women to earn their own living, assigning as a cause the gradual segregation of the sexes. Reaching down below this, she found a prime cause in the increased expense of providing for a family which threw men into clubs, where they spent their incomes instead of on homes. This in turn gave rise to women's clubs, and the separation was complete. Among the poorer classes the result was dependent directly on the high cost of living.

Such was the basis of Mrs. Ashurst's views. Though acknowledging that if men would not support wives women must support themselves, she deprecated the situation. When Mary asked her to help her to get work the good lady let out a storm of reproach upon men for spending their lives frittering away their incomes instead of choosing various good girls who would be helpmeets to them and enabling them to concentrate the flow of loose change constantly dripping from bachelors' pockets into family savings banks. "But," she added, "I admit that there is a risk in any man's doing so. There's not a family of my acquaintance that is not spending every dollar of its income, if not more, in trying to keep a position among people who care nothing for them."

Having thus delivered herself, Mrs. Ashurst concentrated her words on the individual case of the applicant. "I've known you since you were a child, Mary," she said, "and I'm sure you would make a good wife for some young fellow who is beginning life as you are. At the end of ten years he and you would be better off than either of you would be separate. I won't try to get you a position, for I don't approve of that plan for you. But I'll try to find you a husband. Come and make me a visit for an indefinite time, and we will see what can be done."

Mary would have declined this proposition, but she had not a cent in the world, not a roof over her head nor a mouthful of food to put into her stomach. She therefore agreed to the first part of the proposition, trusting that something might turn up for her. She made herself as helpful as possible to her benefactor, but there was not much that she could do.

Mary had been with Mrs. Ashurst two months when the lady came to her one morning and gave her a letter to read. It was from a young man twenty-two years old, who had rented a house with some grounds about it near the city of San Francisco with a view to the cultivation of flowers in a small way for the market. He had been well brought up among associates of the better class. Among strangers he found himself looked upon as a sort of huckster and formed no acquaintances among persons such as he had known at home. He needed an assistant—a woman who would relieve him of much of the care of his plants—and it had occurred to him that a wife, if she were the right sort of person, would be more serviceable to him than any one else. Did not Mrs. Ashurst know of some young woman who had been well brought up, but whose necessities compelled her to begin on the lowest rung of the ladder, that would consider an offer?

"Now, that's what I call a practical way to begin life," said Mrs. Ashurst. "I've always been devoted to flowers," said Mary, her eyes brightening rather at the work than at the husband.

"Just the thing for you. I have written the young man that I have exactly what he wants. But I'm afraid you'll have to take a leap in the dark. He can't afford to come across the continent to court a girl and go back again, possibly, without her."

"Oh, dear!" exclaimed Mary, catching her breath.

"I would rather select a husband for my daughter than have her select one for herself. I mean by that that the average girl would have a better chance for happiness in her parents' selection than in her own—that is, if the intrinsic worth of the man is made the chief consideration."

"Do you really think so?"

"I do."

"The only romance I see in this matter," said the poor girl thoughtfully, "is the flowers."

Mrs. Ashurst, who could not repress a smile at this rueful remark, gave Mary a kiss.

"I have known this young man from boyhood and have always had great faith in him. I can heartily recommend you to him."

"If I go out to him of course I must marry him. But suppose he doesn't like me?"

"Oh, you can't tell about that till after you have been married for some time. If you find out after awhile that you don't like each other you can easily get a divorce. Divorces are as common as marriages nowadays, and since the chief consideration in life is keeping up a show of respectability it is a wonder there are not more of them."

The lady spoke this contemptuously.

"Can't I see a photograph of him?"

"No, my dear. There is a reason why you cannot, which will appear later. Besides, it would do no good. If you find his appearance repulsive to you—which you will not—and conclude not to marry him you'll be no worse off than you are now. Indeed, you'll be better off. In a country where your antecedents are not known you will not be ashamed to do anything for a living that is necessary. You can be a chambermaid in a hotel, a waitress in a restaurant, a shopgirl, a nurse"—

"I'll be none of these; I'll marry your friend if he is an ogre."

"Spoken like a brave girl. Then, too," with a smile, "think of the flowers."

"I shall have the flowers. That will be delicious, anyway."

"Yes; you will have the flowers. And remember that while a romance will fade forever the flowers continue in endless succession."

And the good lady kissed her again.

* * * * * * *

It was the last day of Mary Blackmore's journey to San Francisco. During the morning a young man sitting near her offered her a book to read, and later the two fell into conversation. Mary's meager account of the reasons for her having come to California apparently excited the young man's curiosity so far that he took pains to get the story. Indeed, she longed for some one to tell it to in order that she might get sympathy.

"Singular," he remarked; "my mother has the same views concerning me that this lady has for you."

"And are you willing?" asked Mary.

"I am tempted in the matter on account of my situation. I am a stranger in a strange land. I lived in the east, graduated at an eastern college and came to California to seek my fortune. I live by myself without the city, have no means of making social acquaintances such as I have been accustomed to mingle with and am lonely."

"Would you, if your mother should find a mate for you, marry her without a courtship?"

"I think I would prefer at least to meet her before marriage, but those more experienced than I tell me that a courtship is a continued effort on the part of two persons each to make the other believe he or she is perfection, with the advantage on the side of the woman, who is more adept than the man in appearing at her best."

Mary remained thoughtful after this. She felt that if her proposed mate was not repulsive to her at their first meeting she would suffer herself to be guided by Mrs. Ashurst's views, marry him and hope for the best.

"We have," said the young man when the train was but a few miles from the terminal, "but a short time for an explanation that I have to make to you. Read that."

He handed her a letter addressed to her in the well known writing of Mrs. Ashurst. It read:

This will be handed you by my son, Henry, whom you are going to meet. What is for your good is also for his. May you be happy together.

Mary looked up from the letter to the face of Harry Ashurst, which beamed with satisfaction. Neither spoke for a few moments. Harry bent down and kissed his betrothed. The first words were spoken by Mary:

"Such a dear, good mother must have a dear, good son."

Henry Ashurst, graduate of the —— Agricultural college, aided by the knowledge gained there of cultivating plants and his wife's love for flowers, did not remain long in the business of a general flower supply. With capital acquired in that way he established a rose house and every year adds a new glass conservatory to those he already has. His roses go in large quantities to the city, where they are sold at a good profit.

But young Mrs. Ashurst instead of taking up society has taken up a specialty. She interests herself in procuring homes for young girls. When they ask her if there was no romance in her marriage she says thoughtfully:

"Well, there were the flowers; we have the romance now."

Woman's World

QUEEN ELIZABETH OF BELGIUM.

Women of rank and wealth have volunteered to aid the wounded in hospitals or on the battlefield during the war in Europe, but that a queen should step down from her throne and join the ranks of ministering angels is scarcely to be expected. Elizabeth, queen of the Belgians, is, however, no ordinary queen. She is a regularly graduated physician. When it was announced she would head the Red Cross work in Belgium those who know her best hinted that it was work more to her liking than the keeping of royal state in the palace at Brussels.

She is a daughter of the famous royal oculist, the late Duke Charles Theodore of Bavaria, and a niece therefore of the murdered Empress Elizabeth of Austria. She is also a niece of the ex-queen of Naples.

In the present trouble the queen has thus to take sides against her royal relatives, the king of Bavaria and the emperor of Austria-Hungary.

In addition to being a duly qualified physician and trained sick nurse, Queen Elizabeth is a fine musician, excels as a violinist and, like the late empress of Austria, possesses a strong influence over horses and, in fact, over most animals.

She is the mother of three children, two handsome boys and a very pretty little girl.

Her labors as a sick nurse in the Belgian capital have endeared her to rich and poor alike. One of her many good works before King Albert's accession was the founding of the Albert-Elizabeth dispensary for the consumptives of Brussels. She was often in daily attendance at her dispensary, giving personal attention to the patients. Indeed, her goodness of heart and philanthropic disposition have earned for her the title of "the people's queen."

BASQUED FIGURES.

Fall Fashion Designers Find In Them Much That Is Attractive.

The basque is individual, distinctive, though borrowed from the past. And in its loose, semifitting lines fall will find her most popular expression. It is not designed for the slender woman alone. Surprising lack of figure line is achieved in its quaint though strictly up to date simplicity. But those who have accepted it in its summer adaptation have already resorted to the close fitting brassiere (preferably of strong net), in accordance with its demands.

Now the corsetieres are providing corsets which measure a height of at least five inches above normal waist line—quite a change from the one or two inches or perhaps no inch at all of the past season.

These new corsets not only differ in this respect, but for the stout woman there is quite an ample spring over the hips. No longer is she doomed to the impossible straight lines so alien to her figure, and by allowing the latter a natural freedom she obtains most commendable results in comfort and appearance.

While high and at first uncomfortable, the best corsets will still retain the elastic top, so that a snug fit may be insured with sufficient comfort.

Some of the newest models are slightly fitted in at the waist line, though this is as yet rather a threat than a likelihood.

The Red Haired Girl.

Ruddy locks are a delight to the eye, a feast of artistic color, full of lights and shades, but they are often a sore problem to their possessor. She feels at a loss for guidance in the wearing of color, especially in the matter of jewelry.

These few simple hints may prove useful, for they have been tested time and again:

An auburn locked girl with brown eyes should wear gold, pale coral, amethysts, topazes, pearls and garnets.

Red hair, accompanied by gray or even greenish eyes, should choose pale amber, amethysts, pearls and topazes.

If the eyes are really blue, then amber, amethysts, topazes, green chalcedony or chrysoprase and emeralds are allowable.

The somewhat sandy haired type, with light eyelashes and eyes, will find becoming pearls, amber, gold, onyx and jet.

Good Form

At the Family Hotel.

The wide diversity of nursery methods in this country is nowhere more noticeable than at the family hotel. Here one sees children, who, if they were not born with the idea that courteous attention should be accorded their elders, have had this truth instilled into them so early that it seems a part of them.

In a certain family hotel one table exhibits two girls, in the rosy flush of their teens, accompanied by a mother to whom they pay delightful little attentions. They remain standing until she is seated, or if her entrance to the dining room has been delayed, they always rise as she draws near.

Equally pleasant to watch is the devotion of a very fat, chubby, ten-year-old son to his mother. The glorious appetite of youth drives him to the table the minute the meal is served, but the entrance of his mother is the signal for her son's graceful drawing out of her chair, a service performed with the manner of a Chesterfield.

It is also refreshing to watch a third table, at which a father and son—the latter probably in his thirties, though he looks like a younger brother—take their meals. The younger man always stands until his father is seated and never fails to rise should the father be the last to enter the room.

When the meal is over he may be observed to step aside to allow the older man to precede him. He has done this from a mere child, and it has now become a part of his being.

Too Much Solicitude.

It is not easy to be a good hostess, especially a good tea party hostess. There are many little things to remember.

The hostess wishes guests to enjoy the good things, but solicitude can be overdone.

The writer once went to a tea where the hostess overdid it badly. She must have thought that her guests had had nothing to eat for days by the way she pressed sandwiches and buns, tea, and more cups of tea, on them.

"No, thank you," and "Really, thanks, I have had a huge tea," and the like assurances were useless. The kind hostess continued offering more.

There's a vast difference between "Won't you have a little more?" and "Do try one of these hot buns!" to Mrs. De Fussy's continued badgering to consume more and more.

After all, they were all sensible men and women, with average intelligence and brains—not a party of children at a school treat.

Guest Room Supplies.

Nothing is more disconcerting to guests than a guest room that is not well furnished. Of course every one is supposed to carry his own toilet articles with him, excepting the chance or unexpected visitor who comes unprepared.

But, equally, of course, the hostess should not take individual toilet articles for granted, and she should if possible furnish her pretty guest room dressing table with an adequate supply. Bone, celluloid or ivory, in white, is the best material for these articles, for any of these substances can be readily cleaned.

A simple light for the guest room is an electric bulb supported by a glass candlestick, fourteen inches high and shaded by a fringe trimmed, cretonne shade.

Indian Lawn Party.

Should the hostess who is giving a garden party wish to emulate the noble red man the lawn may be temporarily transformed into a miniature Indian encampment. A near Indian tepee, looking enough like the real thing to deceive any ordinary being, can be purchased ready to set up, and in this—or from it—the refreshments may be served.

Navajo blankets, Indian baskets and pottery, papoose slings, tomahawks of papier mache, pieces of wampum and a pipe of peace are among the characteristic decorations for an Indian lawn party, while souvenirs of birch bark will prove acceptable to the guests.

National Entertainments.

The fashionable hostess in her endless search for a novel way in which to entertain her guests has paused a moment to enjoy what she chooses to call "national" functions.

These include the Russian tea, the Japanese and Chinese breakfasts, Italian, French, German and Hungarian dinners, Holland and Spanish luncheons and last, but not least, the Bohemian late suppers.

Cool Looking Decoration.

A clear glass bowl such as is used for goldfish, filled with carbonated water, will, if nasturtiums and leaves are placed in it, soon become a mass of frostlike moisture. The escaping gas in the water creeps over each leaf and flower, making the whole seem covered with dew. For luncheon on a hot day it is the most refreshing bit of coolness imaginable.

New Place Cards.

Original and new are place cards having tiny flat baskets or bouquets of paper flowers at one corner. The flowers are in their natural colors, and the bouquets have lace edging around them.

The engagement is announced of Miss Jennie O. Pearce of Hancock street and Elmer Novelli, both of this city.

The U. S. S. Des Moines built at Quincy, has sailed from Galveston for Vera Cruz, and the U. S. S. New Jersey from Guantanamo for Puerto Plata.

The battleship Rhode Island built at Quincy, and the torpedo boat Rogers will assist South Boston at its three days carnival beginning Thursday.

Arthur Rosen ,one of the brave sailors who has just returned from the war zone in Mexico, comes to claim his fiancee, Miss Evelyn Galvin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Galvin of 30 Chestnut street. Miss Galvin who is one of Quincy's prettiest young ladies, is one of the stenographers of the Fore River Corporation.

The funeral of Mrs. Mary Jacobs, widow of Franklin Jacobs, who died at Bradford, N. H., was held Tuesday afternoon at her home, 499 Washington street, and was attended by members of Paul Revere Womans Relief Corps with which she was affiliated. Rev. Edward Norton, pastor emeritus of the Bethany Congregational church, conducted the services. Burial was in Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

FOUND LYING ON TRACKS

William Burdick Injured and Now at Hospital

William Burdick of 128 Arnold street ,this city, was found lying on the tracks at the Quincy station Tuesday night in a semi-conscious condition. Near him was a suit case and a collar box. The man was found by baggageman William McMahon who summoned Patrolman Charles Olsen.

The man was sent to the Quincy City Hospital, where it was found he was suffering from a badly strained back and minor bruises. It is thought that while attempting to board the last car of the 10.07 train he lost his footing and the guard rail struck him, causing him to lose his grip on the handle bar of the coach.

A crowd of many people gathered, among them a young man who made a quick examination of Burdick, while Patrolman Olson was getting the suit case and collar box during the wait for the ambulance. When he returned he saw the young man conducting the examination. When asked who he was, he answered quickly "never mind." He was pushed one side. After the ambulance had taken the injured man to the Quincy City Hospital Patrolman Olson searched for the man but did not locate him.

It developed later that he went to police headquarters, complained of the treatment he received and asked that the officer be reprimanded. He said he was Ensign Walter Bumpus, U. S. N., son of Judge Bumpus of this city.

When asked later about the incident, Patrolman Olson said the man was a stranger to him and because he declined to make himself known he ordered him aside.

SCHOOL CENSUS IN SEPTEMBER

Some Changes Required by the State Board

Work will be started next week, Sept. 1, by Charles H. Johnson, taking the annual school census. Mr. Johnson will have assistance in the field work as additional duties are required by the State Board of Education.

In past years the census has included children over five years and under 14, but this year because of the child labor law the names will be taken of all children over five years and under 16.

Quincy was one of the first cities in the State to introduce the card index system for the school census, and this year the system will be used all over the State, both for field work and office reference.

Mr. Johnson will also take the census of all illiterates between the ages of 16 and 21 years, those who cannot read and write English.

Quincy has a large and ever increasing school army and it will appear even larger this year when children for eleven years are included. Mr. Johnson has always done the work very satisfactorily. Four weeks are allowed for the work.

He Didn't Mind.

"I suppose, Jerry," said the eminent statesman, looking through his pocketbook for a new dollar bill, "like a lot of other people nowadays, you would rather have clean money?" "Oh, that's all right, Senator," said the cabman. "I don't care how you made your money."

FASHIONABLE ECONOMIES.

All the places where advanced styles in ready made garments are sold are busy just now, the bulk of the sales being in Junior get-ups for early Fall, the demand for children's clothes being an especially insistent and early one.

JET EMBROIDERIES.

Jet embroideries done on the fabric are to be a notable feature of Fall trimmings. Not only the black beads, but colored ones to match the tone of the satin which is back again bidding for the smart lead, and liable to secure it, unless velvet quite puts it in the shade later which seems not improbable. Beaded nets and laces with the pattern brought out by judicious beading are favored materials, which can be cleverly imitated at home, at little cost.

McCall Design

RUFFLES AND TUCKS.

Paris has capitulated to ruffled skirts, almost abandoning the long tunics that are leaders here. The under petticoat is narrow and close fitting, and the ruffles of lace are put on, straight around, without curve or dip. When made of lace flouncing these ruffles need no adornment. When tulle or net are used they are finished with hems of satin or silk. The "Jersey" silk waist worn matches the hems, and the long sleeves are usually of net like the skirt.

The dress introduced by Beer, with cross tuckings on both waist and skirt was not enthusiastically received either in Paris or here at first, but it is now gaining favor and we will see considerable cross tucking the coming season.

SKELETON WAISTS AND WRAPS.

The liking for "Skeleton" waists and wraps shown during the Spring and Summer, is another style wrinkle that will persist, and and a boon to the woman who wants to keep her wardrobe fresh and up-to-date. This type of overwaist is easy to construct and brings a worn or out of style waist in line with modish requirements. The liking for sleeves of odd materials, but matching the waist in tone, is another continued fad that is pretty, comfortable and that conserves economy, since sleeves are usually the first part of a waist to show wear, and these can now be easily replaced with net or chiffon. If lace is used a complete contrast in color is permissible, transparent sleeves having proved popular with exclusive dressers. The woman who has learned how to spend to best advantage watches all such style points and plans for Fall this month while resting in her hammock perhaps.

MODELS FOR SCHOOL.

Now that wash frocks are recognized as the proper caper for school wear the year round the problem of keeping the children well dressed is greatly simplified. One can use one or two models for the entire outfit ranging colors and trimming touches so that there is no monotony of effect. Long warm coats that completely cover and protect the pretty frocks make them just right indoors or out. Rather plain styles designed on smart up-to-date lines should be selected and for material nothing is quite so nice looking and satisfactory for wear as Renfrew Devonshire Cloth. This is warranted sun proof and tub proof and the colors are especially clear and handsome, woven in, not printed on the fabric as in Galatea which it outclasses both in wear and appearance.

VELVET HATS AND CAPES.

The velvet hat and velveteen cape that have been so smartly worn lately are bound to last well into the Autumn, hence both are an excellent investment for people who must count cost, and that means nearly everyone these days.

Very simple small shapes have been the rule so far but we are promised a return of the "Merry Widow" type of wide brimmed velvet hat, since Georgette has already made that a favorite in Paris.

G. B. BATES A CANDIDATE

Will Make Fight for the Mayoralty

Gustavus B. Bates, who for a short period occupied the office of chairman of the Board of Assessors, is to be a candidate for Mayor this fall. Some weeks ago Mr. Bates gave it out that if he heard the call he would be a candidate. The call has evidently been heard for in a statement given out this noon he says:

GUS. B. BATES,

"After the Assessors of Quincy have publicly declared the tax rate for 1914 I shall publicly announce my candidacy for Mayor in the coming Mayoralty election, and inform the people why their tax bill is larger this year than ever before. The cause of this big debt of over $2,000,000 and the reason we have what is known as the double burden tax rate of $23.70. Why it costs more for our public to live in Quincy than in any other municipality in the state of Massachusetts and why I have consented to become a candidate for Mayor."

Mr. Bates also said that he had been enrolled as a good Republican for many years but he had not as yet decided whether he would run as a Republican, Independent or as a Citizens candidate.

WATER SPORTS AT HOUGHS NECK

Events for Girls As Well As For Boys

The merchants of Houghs Neck conducted a series of aquatic sports at the beach Tuesday afternoon under the supervision of Goerge V. Toomey.

The feature event, a 100-yard swim resulted in a tie between Frank Timilty and George Peters. The judges decided to have the winner of a toss-up awarded the cup, and Peters called the throw. Cups and medals were given the winners.

The summary of other events:

Young mens diving—won by John Harris.

Juvenile diving—won by Daniel Good.

100 yd. swim—won by George Peters Frank Timilty second.

25 yd. swim for girls, 13 to 14 years—won by Miss E. Rhinehart.

25 yd. swim for girls, 8 years,—won by Mazie Toomey.

25 yd. swim for boys, 8 to 10 years, won by John Barrett.

RUSHING WORK ON NEVADA

New Contracts in Sight at the Shipyard

The U. S. S. Nevada is being rushed to completion at the Fore River shipyard and progress has been so rapid since its launching on July 11 the general indications are that a new record in ship construction will be established.

The workmen engaged in getting the Argentine ship Rivadavia ready for delivery have been transferred to the Nevada which is now tied up at the fitting out dock, within easy reach of the massive cranes and yard railroad. Metal used in construction is being rushed to the dock by every available system of transportation and although no promises are made the question of a delay in the trial date is hardly considered by the company officials who feel encouraged by the steady progress.

It is the wish of the government that the ship be made ready for sea as soon as possible, and the Fore River corp. hopes to have her in commission ahead of the contract date.

With the departure of the Rivadavia several of the departments in the yard quieted down, but it is expected that within a week or so normal conditions will be resumed.

A present eight submarines are under construction for this government and the contracts for four additional underwater boats and four torpedo boats may be awarded to Fore River Corporation.

Submarine K-6 was delivered at the Charlestown Navy yard last week, having complied with specifications in better than standard expectations. K-5 should be delivered the latter part of next week.

The company is in the field for several large orders and it is not a remote possibility that the contracts for the three battleships to be built by the United States will come to Quincy.

Several changes in the routine of the yard are scheduled to go into effect immediately, the principal one being the Safety First campaign. The officials intended to inaugurate it Aug. 1, but postponed it until after the departure of the Rivadavia.

BRIEFS

Mrs. Ella C. Phillips of Independence avenue has returned from an enjoyable vacation in the West.

Miss Celia Halloran of East Squantum street, is stopping in Collinsville, at the home of Henry Cunningham, for merly of Atlantic.

Mr. and Mrs. George McLaughlin of Copeland street have as their guests, Mrs. Martin Keeliher and Miss Alice Smith of Brooklyn, New York.

The diving raft at Wollaston beach is all right in its way, but a new one would be very acceptable to many. One with a spring board and diving tower, so that high and fancy diving can be accomplished is desired by many. On the present raft, the diving is confined to the rail, a little over three feet high.

HER HUSBAND'S BROTHER.

Miss Kitty MacLain and company presenting "Her Husband's Brother" will be one of the leading attractions of the vaudeville program to be seen at the Kincaide Theatre, beginning Thursday Miss MacLain is one of the best known of Scotland's actresses and has a supporting company that is said to be very capable. The playlet is constructed along original lines and is made the more interesting by special properties.

Star Sight.

By all the rules of the game of nature we should not be able to see a star at all, for it appears from the earth as a geometrical point, a thing without dimensions, and cannot be measured even in the most powerful telescope. A star appears in a telescope just as it does to the naked eye. Now the question naturally comes up as to why we can perceive a star, a thing with no dimensions. We certainly cannot see so small a thing under the microscope. The whole answer is a peculiarity of the human eye and, in fact, of all optical instruments, called diffraction. A lens does not focus parallel rays of light to a geometrical point, even though they come from a point, and so a small disk is printed on the retina by a star, and the star is perceived. Remember, though, that only the star's effect is perceived with the eye. A planet of course is different, as it is comparatively close to us, and its actual disk may be seen and measured in the telescope, just as that of the moon can be seen with the naked eye.—Chicago Herald.

Born of an Odor.

Professor Alexander Graham Bell once gave an account, which is here condensed, of an invention founded on a smell.

First, a chemist detected in sulphuric acid waste an odor which on analysis was found to come from a hitherto unknown substance. This was called silenium.

Second, silenium crystallized was found to be a conductor of electricity of phenomenally high resistance.

Third, the new resistant, having been put to use in place of whole coils of wire to balance the Atlantic cable during the period of laying, was found to have at night twice its resisting power of the daytime.

Fourth, Professor Bell playing upon silenium's sensitiveness to light produced the photophone, by means of which one may talk over a beam of light.

The Cynics.

Cynics was the name applied to a school of philosophers founded by Antisthenes, a pupil of Socrates. The main tenet of the extreme cynics was that civilization is a curse, and true happiness can be obtained only by gratifying the most primary physical appetites which man has in common with brutes. The general attitude of the cynics as distinguished from that of the stoics, who regarded everything in the external world with indifference, was one of contempt. They were not an important philosophical school numerically, but attracted attention largely by their eccentricities and insolence. On account of their contempt for refinement their name came subsequently to be applied to any one who takes a mean view of human life.

Papal Names.

Every one knows that as soon as a cardinal becomes a pope he is no longer known by his own name, but takes a new one. This custom originated out of reverence for St. Peter.

This custom, now a law of the church, had its origin in 884, when Peter di Porca became pope of Rome. He held that it would be presumptuous to style himself Peter II., so he adopted the name of Sergius II. Before that time many popes had changed their names, but it was not obligatory for them to do so. Sergius II. not only established a precedent in this direction, but he set an example which all pontiffs have followed in that none of them has ever retained or assumed the name of Peter.

Our Sixteen Striped Flag.

How many stripes in the American flag? Thirteen, of course, yet there's an American flag flown legally today which has sixteen stripes. It is the flag of the revenue cutter service, and the stripes are vertical, not horizontal, as in the ordinary ensign. The stripe nearest the staff is red; then come white and red alternately, so that the outermost stripe is white. The reason for the sixteen stripes is found in the fact that when the revenue flag was authorized, in 1799, there were sixteen states in the Union, three having joined the original thirteen. — New York Tribune.

Discretion.

A lion that had been ill asked a sheep if his breath was bad. The sheep said "Yes," and the lion bit off her head for a fool. A wolf, asked the same question, said "No." Him the lion killed for a liar. A fox in answer to the question said he had a cold in his head and could not smell.

She Made Him Happy.

"Shan't we go now, Emma? I feel cold here, and I've got a cough."

"You sit still, Henry, and keep your mouth shut. I've got to finish this book on 'The Secret of Making One's Husband Happy.'" —Meggendorfer Blatter.

Trouble For Pa.

"Where do they wind you up, Miss Skreeker?"

"Wind me up?"

"Yes. Pa said you sang mechanically."—Houston Post.

Tonsorial Sarcasm.

Barber—Very sorry, sir, but I'm afraid I've made a small cut on your chin. Subject—Ah, it must have been a sharp spot on the razor.—London Punch.

Just because it is so difficult for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven the poor man should not think he has an absolute cinch.—Little Rock Gazette.

GET TOGETHER AT SQUANTUM

Guy Ham Tells of Political Experiences

The "Get to Gether" of the Squantum Improvement association at the Squantum Inn Tuesday night was a big success. Ninety-two members of the association and their friends sat down to the spread which was specially prepared by Herman Berghaus one of the best chefs in this part of the country. It was a "Dutch spread" and Mr. Berghaus finished hand in the culinary line was noted by those who participated.

The affair began shortly after 7 o'clock, when the guests entered the big dining hall of the inn and sat down to the spread. For an hour they were kept busy with courses of fish, cold ham, breitwurst, frankfurts sauerkraut, vegetable salad, crackers and cheese, and demi tasse.

Councilman John R. Nelson, president of the association, welcomed the guests and told of the good work of the association. He asked all the members to keep up their interest in the efforts of the association to promote the best good of Squantum.

John Jepson, Jr., who is well remembered for his fine work in the association's minstrel show, sang "He's a devil," to piano accompaniment of I. T. Bickley.

The big hit of the evening was made by Guy Ham of Boston. He spoke on the subject of this political experiences as a campaigner. He told of many humorous incidents of himself and his fellow campaigners in various parts of the country.

Mr. Ham was warmly greeted and it was unanimously voted that he is one of the best public speakers it has been the pleasure of the Squantum citizens to hear.

Joseph Uppling sang several selections and whistled "The mocking bird."

Former Representative Peter Fallon spoke of his acquaintance with Squantum and said that Squantum was soon to be more directly connected with Boston by a new boulevard over the Neponset river

Representative Edward Sandberg spoke in a humorous vein and T. F. Callahan told a few good stories. B. Sturgis Wood gave a few recitations and C. F. Westlake gave an amusing Hebrew impersonation. David Olson sang, "All Aboard for Dixie."

The great success of the affair reflected much credit on the committee in charge, composed of W. N. Kenyon, chairman, John Holmes, T. F. Callahan, James H. Foster, John R. Nelson Herbert A. Smith and Charles Bostwick.

QUINCY MEN HEARD ON CITY CHARTER

Special Recess Committee of Legislature Give Hearing at the State House

No Concerted Action for Change in Quincy Charter

Several from Quincy were at the State House hearing today relative to a uniform city charter for cities of Massachusetts. There were no concerted views each one presenting his individual ideas.

President Whiton of the City Council said it was impossible to be elected a Mayor for one year and keep the office out of politics, and knew of no men who did it. He favored a term of two, four or five years so ideas could be properly carried out. He also favored a recall provision through a petition of on-third of the voters.

In case of a vacancy in the office of Mayor he favored the succession of the president of the Council, and the vacancies in that body he thought should be filled by the members.

President Whiton considered a salary of $2500 too small, and favored a salary of $5,000. He declared it to be little enough to give any man who devoted his entire time to the office. Men he said are wanted who can deliver the goods, and they cannot be obtained for a small salary.

He said the mayor had many things to look after, and things have gone to sixes and sevens on that account, because the executives have not had the time to look after them.

Civil service is a piece of monstrosity in Quincy announced Mr. Whiton.

He favored a council of nine members, three to be nominated from each ward and elected at large and three at large, they to be elected for periods of one, two or three years. He also favored the elimination of party designations and believed citizens at large generally favored it.

He was not in favor of giving the Mayor absolute power but said the responsibility of appointments should be his. He disapproved of the Boston method of appointment.

City Solicitor Pinkham favored a two-year term for Mayor, and one for council. He said the city has not had a single mayor who has acted honestly and conscientiously. One year is too short a time to carry out ideas successfully. He favored a smaller council. As the charter read now the addition of another ward means four more councilmen. He favored the elimination of party designations since a man elected with them is tied hand and foot.

John L. Hamilton of the Board of Trade said a two year term would be ideal, without party designations in evidence. A small council would be a benefit but he did not favor a recall.

Levi S. Turner said the charter was far from being ideal. He approved of one body, a council and one year for mayor. He thought it better to stop despotism of political organizations in one than in two years. He objected to so large a council and said 12 members two from each ward, would be sufficient.

Mr. Turner thought the salary of $2500 was large enough and that councilmen should receive some compensation.

He favored a clause in every charter in the state to the effect "that cities shall have the power to establish alter and make alterations of its charter by a majority of the citizens on petition signed by 12 per cent. of the voters.

Ex-Councilman Frank E. Badger thought there was too much legislation on charters and that they should be eliminated from politics as much as possible.

Ex-Mayor John O. Hall said the charter as proposed by this the com-

LAWN PARTY WEST QUINCY

The August Evening However Was too Chilly

The annual lawn party of the Hall Place M. E. Sunday School was held on the church grounds, Wednesday afternoon and evening. During the afternoon and early evening a very enjoyable time was spent out of doors, but as the evening waned it seemed expedient to adjourn to the vestry where it was warmer.

The grounds were prettily decorated each committee caring for their part of the grounds.

The committees were as follows:

Ice Cream,—Mr. Pearce's class.

Entertainment,—Rev. P. S. Weldon's class of young men.

AUTO HIT BY ELECTRIC

Politicians En Route to the Marshfield Fair

A trolley car struck an auto at North Weymouth this morning and George Gale, 60 years, of Brookline, was thrown out and is now in serious condition at the Quincy City Hospital.

The machine owned by Herman J. Fanning of 873 Dorchester avenue, was operated by a chauffeur. It is said the tire of a rear wheel caught in the tracks and prevented it from reaching the street in time to avoid the car.

In the party was Hon. Samuel McCall, candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor. All were on their way to the Marshfield fair.

Gale was taken to the Quincy hospital in the Quincy police ambulance He sustained several fractured ribs, a broken arm and probably internal injuries.

NEW YORK'S NEW MARKET.

Mayor Mitchel of New York City has just approved an ordinance establishing a free farmers' market in the Borough of the Bronx. This is in pursuance of a general plan to improve the distribution of produce to city consumers and so lower prices. The new market in the Bronx will occupy an entire block and is expected to open October 1st.

PUBLIC LIBRARY NOTES.

Beginning Tuesday, September 1, the main hall of the Thomas Crane Public Library will be open from 9 A. M. until 9 P. M.. The hours in the children's room will also change and the room will be open from 12 M to 1.15 P. M., and from 3.30 to 6 P. M. The branch reading rooms at West Quincy and Atlantic are open from 3 to 5.30 and 6.30 to 8.30 P. M. Closed Friday at 6 P. M.

In the childrens room, the increase in circulation has been marked. Probably this increase is due in part at least, to the interest which the young folks have taken in the "Vacation reading." A number of the boys and girls who entered this contest have already read more than the required number. The illustrated books, stereoscopic views and pictures upon bulletin boards have also added to the attractiveness of the room.

MORE MONEY FOR SCHOOLS

Will Probably Petition for Another Appropriation

At the time of the passing of the annual appropriation order last spring when the word "economy" was the slogan at City Hall, it will be remembered that the sum of $2,000 was chopped off the amount which the School Committee estimated that it would need to carry on its department this year.

It was said at that time by the School department that they would be unable to get along, and it is now reported that this has proved true, and that the balance of the appropriation will not be enough to pay the teachers' salaries.

In addition to this, the City Council by a supplementary budget passed later in the spring charged the department the sum of $834 for water.

It is more than probable therefore that before the next meeting of the City Council the School Committee will come forward with a request for more money. This means that if they can convince the Mayor of the necessity of the request that another supplementary budget may go to the City Council next Monday evening. This may mean still another week before the tax rate can be announced.

Then again the chances are that if this is forwarded to the Council still other departments may come forward for more funds with the result that it will be some time yet before the property owners will learn how much the Assessors think they are worth.

HOUSE PARTIES AT ATLANTIC

James E. Wall of Houghs Neck, who has announced himself as a citizens' candidate for Mayor at the city election, who has been holding house parties in the several wards of the city, was at Atlantic Wednesday evening. The meeting in this ward was held at the residence of Patrick H. Gallagher at 18 Appleton street.

The gathering was entirely informal Mr. Wall being introduced by Temple A. Winsloe, his campaign manager. Brief remarks were made by Mr. Winsloe, Mr. Wall, Messrs. Barnard, Gallagher, Blakie, Phillips, Griffin, Ahern McClue, Hullard and Samuel T. Drew. Light refreshments were served.

The best report of the final field day of the supervised playgrounds today will be found in the Daily Ledger of Friday.

NOW FLIES THE ARGENTINA FLAG

Transfer of Battleship Rivadavia Took Place at Boston This Morning

Reports of Another Accident Without Foundation

The formal delivery of the battleship Rivadavia to the officials of the Argentine government took place at the Charlestown Navy Yard at 8 o'clock this morning despite the many rumors to the effect that several weeks would elapse before the ship would be placed in commission.

The exercises, simple but impressive, consisted of the hoisting of the Argentine flag to the peak of the ship while 1150 sailors who came here in transports to mann her stood at attention. They then took their places on the Rivadavia.

After a month's stay in Boston Harbor the ship will be taken to the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

The quarters of the Argentine commission at the Fore River shipyard is practically deserted, this morning, its members, all being in their respective stations on the ship.

MERRY SCENE AT MERRYMOUNT

Playground Children Having Final Day

Just before the Daily Ledger went to press this afternoon, special electrics from South Quincy and Quincy Point passed through City Square with merry loads of playground children on their way to Merrymount Oval for the final field day. Many parents and friends of the supervised playgrounds are also wending their way to the park.

The program is an interesting one and will not be concluded until 5.30. Acting Mayor Emery L. Crane will present the season's prizes.

CITY SQUARE TRAFFIC.

The Mayor or City Council should seek to improve the traffic conditions in City Square before serious accidents result. Because of the large number of street cars and automobiles especially on Saturday afternoons and evenings, and on Sundays, there is a serious congestion about the fountain.

The city now has one or two traffic officers in this vicinity, but the street railway should co-operate. The company in the first place should discourage the use of Hancock street north of Saville street, as a transfer point, especially to Nantasket cars. Much of the danger and congestion would be removed if on these two busy days at least, a switchman was employed here so that cars from Neponset would not come to a stop before reaching Saville street, and cars from Houghs Neck would not stop on Washington street, except on the turnout. No cars should be allowed to stand near Saville street, either on Hancock or Washington streets.

Then Neponset bound cars on Temple street usually stand over the crosswalk on Washington street, instead of midway on Temple street, thereby obstructing foot traffic as well as automobiles. Perhaps Temple street should be double tracked.

On Sundays the street railway should make its Houghs Neck terminal on Coddington street, as on that day connections are not made with trains. One car on each trip might be run to Saville street, but certainly there is no necessity of filling up Saville street and usually Washington street. Coddington street near Washington street might be double tracked and the tracks placed near the "island."

A relocation of the drinking fountain to a point on Washington street nearer the church grounds would also be an improvement. Now automobiles from Milton hardly know which side of the fountain to go, but they are often forced to the church side because of the congestion, thereby encountering autos from the south.

The season for automobile travel will continue through September and October and regulations should be adopted promptly. Safety first.

NEW SCHOOL DISTRICT.

The proposition to purchase a lot of land in the Bigelow Park district for a site for a school lot evidently means that the plan to build a four-room addition with assembly hall to the Washington school building will be placed to the archives.

With the School Committee divided on the question of building the addition, and the known opposition of Mayor Miller to the scheme, as well as the fact that the cost of the proposed changes were estimated to cost over $40,000, were the things that served to cast the plan one side.

While the matter was under discussion it was argued that at best the proposed addition would only serve for five years, at the end of which time a new building would have to be erected in the Bigelow Park district, made it seem like false economy to the members of the City Council to expend so large a sum as $40,000 when it would only serve for a few years.

All the Congressmen favor meeting the war deficit by reducing the appropriations for some one else's district.

In old times they used to use brown sugar when the white article was too high priced, but now it would interfere with the color symphony of breakfast.

When the Nobel peace prize is handed out this year it will probably go by default to the ahkoond of Swat. But maybe he is the man who started the "swat the fly" campaign.

Lincoln Beachey now asserts that he can fly straight up and if he persists in it he may need to.

So long as there is no heavy firing among American employers of labor this country can bear up.

Senator Fall seems to be neglecting his self appointed task of urging this country to go to war with Mexico.

Europe at present is engaged in supplying a very interesting sequel to Admiral Mahan's "The influence of sea power upon history."

AVALANCHE OF GERMAN FIGHTERS

Forcing Back Wings of Allied Armies on Frontier

LONDON FEARS GERMAN STRATEGY HAS TRIUMPHED

Almost Incredible Slaughter During Last Few Days, Almost a Fourth of Belgian Army Being Wiped Out—Persistent Charges and Wilting Fire of Invaders Cause Havoc—Allies Believed to Be Firmly Entrenched In Centre—England and Scotland Disturbed by Aerial Raid at Antwerp, Placing Germany In Class With Barbarians—Russians' Swift Movement Raises Hopes In London

London, Aug. 27.—In the terrific battle that is being waged to decide the fate of France, the Germans appear to be forcing back the wings of the allied armies.

This depressing news, following a day of stubborn and effective checking of the advance of the invaders, has intensified in London the fear that German strategy has triumphed once more and that the first line of defense upon French territory is in acute danger.

In the centre of the long line of battle, the allies are obstinately holding their positions, but on both the extreme right and left, with the exception of a stretch of country between Nancy and the Vosges, the defenders are being slowly forced back.

The baptism of fire which the allies underwent in the first great battle of the war apparently has done much to steady the French troops while under fire. Nowhere have there been such disastrous retreats as were seen on Saturday and Sunday.

Thousands Are Slain

But the drive of the German machine could not be resisted. Slowly, with frightful losses to both sides, the line at the left was pushed back by the persistent charges and the wilting artillery fire of the invaders.

Such details as have come of the fighting of the last few days indicate almost an incredible slaughter. Belgian casualties are now said to number 16,000 dead and 55,000 wounded. This means that one-fourth of the Belgian army is wiped out.

British losses are believed to be much in excess of the 2000 first reported, for the troops of Sir John French bore the brunt of the fighting and did not refire until the French had withdrawn from both sides of their position.

French losses are not given, nor can any figures of the German losses be obtained. It is stated in the dispatches, however, that the German troops have probably suffered much more heavily than those of the allies, and stories of streets choked with German corpses are coming from various sources.

New Battle Near Rheims

No details are given in the French official dispatches about the present positions held by the allied forces on the left. Presumably they have not yet been forced back of the Maubeuge line on the boundary, but it is evident that the situation there is serious and that the next decisive battle is likely to take place near Rheims and the other forts that constitute the inner ring of the French defenses.

On the right the German attack levelled at Nancy, which at first seemed irresistible, has been so well held that the French have taken the offensive between Nancy and the Vosges.

London sentiment, however, deplores further offensive operations on the part of the allies until the flanking movement can be handled with more security. The unhappy advance into Alsace and Lorraine is still too fresh in memory to make another offensive movement at this time seem anything short of foolishness.

At St. Die, in the Vosges region, the French lines have been driven back, a retreat that may spell disaster to the advance that the French have made near Nancy.

Only meagre bulletins have been issued upon the position in the centre where the British and French were most successful in the first battle. Here, as before, the resistance appears to have been more effective than on the wings and, in the absence of detailed accounts, it is presumed that the allies are still firmly entrenched about Givet and that they will be able to maintain their positions if they are not flanked.

Air Raid Stirs England

Nothing in the whole war has caused so much bitterness against Germany as the Zeppelin attack upon Antwerp. It has naturally spread alarm through London and the cities on the eastern coasts of England and Scotland, but it has especially fired Englishmen with an intense hatred against Germany. Not even the killing of British soldiers by the German troops has so roused the nation. They, at least, died fighting, slaying their enemies in a fair fight and giving their own lives with their faces toward the foe.

But the Zeppelin raid at night upon a city crowded with non-combatants, with death raining out of the sky upon helpless men, women and children with no chance to defend themselves—this has placed Germany, in the minds of Londoners, in the class with the savagest barbarians.

The feeling is strong in London that this is no time for Germany to maintain longer that it is fighting for civilization against the Slav peril. Not in the blackest pages of Russian history is anything found more horrible than the showering of deadly bombs upon a hospital, upon women in their homes, upon children in the streets.

It cannot be denied that the Antwerp outrage has also spread terror throughout England. It is regarded as an act of desperation, following the sudden check that the Germans have met in their advance. The sudden activity about Ostend and the apparent desire of the Germans to seize the sea coast city so near to the English coast is thought to be the prelude to an attack upon London by dirigibles.

The Russian Advance

The Russian advance is moving onward toward Berlin faster than the most hopeful prophets had forecasted. Striking confirmation of the St. Petersburg dispatches is found in Berlin newspapers, according to a special message received in London from Copenhagen, which states that one paper in the German capital admits that the province of East Prussia is now practically abandoned by the inhabitants.

No longer is it possible for the Germans to minimize the Russian peril. The security afforded the defenders by the Vistula river has been shattered by the threat of a Russian army sweeping out of Poland against Posen, one of the largest of the cities of eastern Germany.

It is rumored that already the Russians in East Prussia have seized the city of Marienburg, only twenty-seven miles from Danzig. If Marienburg has fallen, Konigsberg is no longer of much value to the Germans, and it is probably already invested by the soldiers of the czar. Marienburg, too, is in West Prussia, more than 100 miles west of any town yet reported occupied by the Russians.

If Marienburg has in reality fallen and if Posen is in danger, the Russians are moving at a tremendous rate. Berlin has ceased to announce great victories over the advancing horde and is content with the statement that the situation in East Prussia is not alarming, a vague generalization evidently intended for home consumption.

Everything points to the probability of the crushing effectiveness of this Russian march of conquest. The German troops that advanced into Russian Poland are falling back in the north and an apparently authoritative utterance from Berlin says that the Germans are prepared to abandon the three great provinces of East and West Prussia and Pomerania.

IN HANDS OF ALLIES

German Colonial Possession of Togoland Surrenders

It is announced officially that German Togoland has surrendered unconditionally. The allies will enter Kamina at once.

The German colonial possession of Togoland is on the western coast of Africa, between French Dahomey on the east and the Gold Coast, a British colony and protectorate, on the west. Its area is estimated at 33,000 square miles. The population in 1913 was estimated at 900,000, of which 168 were whites.

The colony was administered by an imperial governor, who is given by current books of reference as Adolphus Frederick, Duke of Mecklenburg.

ATTACK IS REPULSED

German Defenders Victorious In First Clash With Japanese

Failure of the Japanese attack on Tsingtao, the fortified port of Kiauchau, is announced in an official dispatch received from the German legation at Pekin by Count Von Bernsdorff, the German ambassador to the United States. The dispatch follows:

"The attack of the Japanese on Kiauchau has failed and in consequence they must start regular siege operations."

The count said the message indicated that the Japanese had attempted to take Tsingtao by a bombardment or by storm. He said the German defenders of the stronghold would fight to the death.

NO ULTERIOR MOTIVE

Premier of Japan Asserts He Desires to Maintain Peace

The New York Independent will publish in its forthcoming issue a cable message to the American people from Count Okuma, premier of Japan, which says in part:

"It is my desire to convince your people of the sincerity of my government and of my people in all their utterances and assurances connected with the present regrettable situation in Europe and the Far East.

"This Far Eastern situation is not of our seeking.

"It was ever my desire to maintain peace, as will be amply proved; as president of the Peace Society of Japan I have consistently so endeavored.

"I have read with admiration the lofty message of President Wilson to his people on the subject of neutrality. We of Japan are appreciative of the spirit and motives that prompted the head of your great nation, and we feel confident that his message will meet with a national response.

"As premier of Japan, I have stated, and I now again state to the people of America and of the world, that Japan has no ulterior motive, no desire to secure more territory, no thought of depriving China or any other peoples of anything which they now possess."

FRENCH CABINET QUITS

Another Immediately Formed With Viviani as Premier

The French ministry, headed by Premier Viviani, resigned and another cabinet was immediately formed.

Viviani notified President Poincare that the members of the cabinet had decided to resign collectively. He said he and his colleagues had come to the conclusion that in the circumstances through which the country was passing the ministry should have a wider scope and comprise all the best men in all the republican groups.

Poincare charged Viviani with the task of organizing a new cabinet, which the premier accepted. Among the members of the new cabinet are several ex-premiers and many members of former cabinets.

WORLD NEWS SCARCE

Germany In Ignorance of What Is Going on Outside

That the Germans are in almost utter ignorance of any news from the outside world or even of important domestic happenings is emphasized by a copy of the Berlin Tageblatt, dated Aug. 22, which arrived in London by way of Holland.

The Tageblatt contains a "rumor" of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson's death, but the paper declares it is unable to confirm it.

The escape of the German cruisers Goeben and Breslau from Messina is announced, but the people of the German capital still believe the ships are ready for action in the Mediterranean. Not a whisper has been heard of the real fate of the warships.

The Germans also still are ignorant of the destruction of any Zeppelin dirigible balloons.

"THE SOUL OF LONDON"

Newspaper Man Finds It In a Crypt of St. Paul's Cathedral

The following pen picture, headed "London's Soul In Time of War," is taken from a London paper:

"I found the soul of London near Nelson's tomb in the crypt of St. Paul's. An old woman rose slowly to her feet after a silent prayer for her son, who is on a British warship in the North sea. 'I ain't goin' to cry,' she muttered. 'I aint' goin' to cry; I'm goin' to 'old myself in, like 'e begged me to.'

"She hobbled away to the door of the great cathedral and looked out on marching soldiers and heard the newsiads shrieking out a tale of a naval disaster. But she 'held herself in.' She stood for London."

R. L. RAYMOND INTRODUCED

Ex-Mayor Russell A. Sears entertained a number of Republicans of the city at his home on Glendale road, Wednesday evening, to introduce Robert L. Raymond of Milton, one of the candidates seeking the Republican nomination for congressman from the Fourteenth district at the coming State primaries. The meeting was of an informal nature and there was no speech making of any kind, the idea being to give Mr. Raymond an opportunity to meet some of the voters of the city, as well as to give these men an opportunity to meet Mr. Raymond.

The evening was spent in an informal social manner. Of course the conversation savored somewhat of politics. The general opinion expressed was that there was no good reason why the Republican candidate nominated at the coming primaries should not be elected and those present signified their intention of doing all possible to further the candidacy of the gentleman who should receive the nomination.

As usual our genial ex-Mayor proved himself among the best of hosts and time did not drag. During the evening light refreshments were served.

Great Climax.

HAVE YOU HEARD ANYONE SAY

That the Quincy Tax Rate Will Be Less

That this may cause rejoicing among the poll taxpayers.

That they are valued at so much per head.

That it is different with property holders.

That economies may have been practised in some City departments.

That it would be difficult to tell which one.

That the current city expenses were increased in the annual appropriation order in March.

That two supplementary budgets have been passed since then

That No. 3 has been forwarded by the Mayor.

That there may be still another.

That a $200 increase in valuation of a house might offset a $1.50 reduction in tax rate.

That $22.20 would be a good estimate on the 1914 rate.

That the Quincy rate was never higher but once.

That one reason for the reduction of the rate is because street watering has stopped.

That the streets are not in as good condition as a year ago.

That the School Committee were late in asking for an additional appropriation.

That the Gridley Bryant school may be moved to Bigelow Park.

That it was a mistake to build such a large Willard schoolhouse.

That Boston uses portable schoolhouses which may be transferred to different districts as needed.

A QUINCY REPORT

Fully Corroborated and Easily Investigated.

Do you need a good kidney medicine? Then read the reports in these very columns of Quincy persons cured or benefited with Doan's' Kidney Pills. You won't have to go far to find out if they are true. This Quincy case is an example. Others will follow.

Mrs. R. A. Neil, 40 Edison Park, Quincy, says: "My hands and ankles swelled. I was worse at night after I had done a hard day's work. I used several remedies, but they did me little or no good. My husband brought home a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and I began taking them. I could see an improvement right away. Doan's Kidney Pills got my kidneys acting right and the swelling went down. I wasn't so nervous and felt better in every way. I now keep Doan's Kidney Pills in the house and consider them a fine family medicine."

NEW FOUNTAIN AT WEYMOUTH

The Kings Daughters granite drinking fountain, Jackson square, East Weymouth, was dedicated Tuesday afternoon in the presence of more than 2000 persons. Mrs. R. F. Hoffman, president of the King's Daughters' Union, presented the fountain, which was accepted by Selectman Henry E. Hanley. The Rev. W. M. Newton, pastor of the First M. E. Church, delivered the address.

Rector William Hyde of Weymouth had charge of the morning and evening services at St. Paul's church Brockton on Sunday.

Invitations have been sent out for the wedding of Miss Mabel Baker and Harry I. Bicknell of North Weymouth on Wednesday evening, September 2, at the home of the bride.

The engagement is announced of Miss Catherine O'Connor, daughter of Mrs. Elizabeth O'Connor of Weymouth and William Cherry of Braintree.

COURT NEWS

The theft of a baby carriage from City Square, and a long story regarding an investigation which eventually led to its discovery in the cellar of the house at 34 Union street, was told in the District court this morning in connection with the hearing of a charge of concealing stolen property preferred against Stephano Murachino

The carriage, the property of Robert Souden was taken from the sidewalk at the entrance to the Adams building on Monday evening. Mrs. Souden made the discovery and her husband instituted an immediate investigation.

Children furnished the first clue when they said a little girl pushed an empty carriage down Washington street that evening, and further inquiries led to 34 Union street.

Judge Pratt issued a search warrant to Mr. Souden, and with Patrolman Murray they made a thorough examination of the premises without any results. Special Officer William Taylor who lives nearby later prevailed on Nancy, the nine year old daughter of the defendant to tell her story, and she said it was hidden behind a fence on Brackett street.

She accompanied them to the spot but nothing was found. Other children in the neighborhood said they had seen no carriage, and Nancy on the promise of "Ice Cream" said it was in the cellar.

They returned to the house, and hidden behind a pile of fruit boxes in a dark corner Officer Taylor found the property. The small quilt was surrendered by the mother.

A complaint was preferred against the girls father and Associate Justice Cook imposed a fine of $15.

BOARD OF TRADE MEET NEXT WEEK

The Board of Trade whose meetings have been suspended during the summer months will resume its monthly meetings next Wednesday evening. At the last meeting before vacation the board voted to invite John Swithin to give the board a talk on his scheme for establishing a system of docks along the water front on the Quincy side of the Neponset river and connecting the same with the quarries by railroad. It is expected that he will explain his plan at this meeting.

It is also among the possibilities that some action may be taken toward raising a capital of $50,000 in order that the new industry connected with the manufacture of the pumping engine of Mr. Houghton may be located in Quincy. It is understood that if sufficient capital can be pledged the industry will be located in Quincy.

QUINCY DELEGATES.

Jeremiah Dinneen of Div. 4, President James O'Dowd of Div. 22, President John Donahue and James M. Cantfill of Div. 5, Miss Alice O'Brien and Mrs. James McGrath of Auxiliary 5, Mrs. Catherine Cotter and Miss Mary Costello of Auxiliary 10 and Mrs. John Goodhue and Miss Mary Sullivan of Div. 12, were the delegates from this city to the Hibernian state convention which closed Wednesday at Worcester.

NEW AGREEMENT FOR CAR MEN

Will Ask for Substanial Increase in Pay

The Brockton Enterprise says the members of Local 235, Street Car Men's Union, comprising employees of the Torrey street, Campello, Lakeville Milton and North Abington car barns, conducted an all night meeting, ending at 5 o'clock Tuesday morning, in Foresters' Hall.

Fred F. Fay of Boston, Frank J. Crowley of Lowell and Patrick F. Sheehan of Brockton, general executive board members, presented the new agreement to the men. This agreement will be submitted to the Bay State Street Railway Co., to supersede the present agreement between the union and the company, which expires Oct. 1.

The three board members addressed the men. Different sections of the new agreement were taken up separately and voted on.

Suggestions were offered in several instances, but the import of the agreement was unanimously accepted. The terms of the agreement are not to be given out until the remainder of the divisions have passed on it. The general executive committee will then meet and go over the terms carefully, and then it will be forwarded to the company.

It is a known fact that a substantial increase is asked for. The new agreement includes every branch on the road, taking in the track men, power house employes, express car operatives and repair and barn employes.

The general committee have yet to visit the Fall River, Newport Hyde Park, Taunton, Quincy and Nashua, N. H. barns. They will conduct the next meeting at Hyde Park.

QUINCY MEN HEARD

mittee would open wide the doors of each city and would be dangerous. Cities he said should not have the right to charge the charter at will. He believed the city charter of Quincy was all right and that the fault was not with the charter but its administration. He said it would be impossible to fit all cities since people do not now live up to them.

Any mayor who lives up to the provisions of the charter and conducts city affairs on a businesslike basis would thereafter be respected he said. He declared it untrue that a man going into office must begin to pull wires for re-election. He said he could put his finger on a man who had done so, and still commanded the respect of the community and is looked to now for advice.

He was asked if he ever yielded to political pressure while Mayor and he said he had, but did not mean to. He thought $2500 ample salary, that a term should be two years and he favored the compensation of City Council men. He thought a smaller board would be too narrow in its ideas.

Representatives Michael T. Sullivan and Edward J. Sandberg spoke along the lines of President Whiton. They favored a term of two years for mayor, the elimination of party designations and also that the Mayor should have no strings on his appointments.

Eternal Feminine.

Margaret, aged seven years, was playing housekeeper. As she pretended to wipe the perspiration from her face she turned from the toy washboard upon which was rinsing out a handkerchief, and, addressing her brother, a year younger, said: "There you are sitting at your ease and me breaking my bones doing your washing."

NEW BRAID HAT.

Handsome Hat Which Is Designed to Give Good Service.

SMART FALL CHAPEAU.

Here is a fall turban designed on novel lines. The crown is covered with latticed white hercules braid, through which short quills are thrust. A band of black braid encircles the velvet brim.

BUSINESS WOMEN'S CLOTHES

They Should Be Plain and Comfortable, Yet Withal Becoming.

Everybody seems to disagree about the question of what a girl in an office or other place of business should look like.

Some think that she is better plain which seems a little hard upon those whom nature has made distinctly pretty.

Others think that, though perhaps a girl is none the worse for being pretty, she had better dress plainly.

And a third set of people affirm that a girl cannot be too pretty in appearance nor too dainty in dress.

So what is the ideal for the business girl, after all?

A little of all three, judiciously combined, of course. If she is pretty, then by all means let her keep her charm. The only thing is that breeding and common sense suggest she should wear becoming but businesslike clothes. Her beauty need not be hidden by dowdiness, but it should be restrained by simplicity.

There is the consolation that youth triumphs over even sober raiment. Indeed, the demure garments of the Quaker maid show off girlish good looks as few more elaborate frocks and hats could do.

CHAIR FOR SUN PARLOR.

In the autumn and winter the sun parlor takes the place of the summer porch. Any veranda fitted with glass covered sashes may be converted into a sun parlor. Portable oil, gas or electric stoves may be used to take the chill off the air in very cold weather.

CANE AND RATTAN CHAIR.

Rugs and lightweight furniture are required for furnishing. The cane and rattan chair illustrated here is one of a set admirable for this purpose. It is finished in dark blue and white and would be charming with a washable blue and white rug and blue and white cretonne hangings and cushions. For the sun parlor furnishings may be on the line of the summer porch, but a trifle more elaborate.

Homemade Soap.

An excellent hard soap may thus be made: Take six pounds of clean grease, six pounds of salsoda, three pounds of lime. Slack the lime and put in four gallons of soft water; add the salsoda and when dissolved let it settle. Pour off the water in an iron kettle and boil. If the soap does not thicken after boiling a few minutes add more soft water till it is of the consistency of honey. Wet a tub and pour the hot soap into it. When cold cut in pieces and set away to dry. Always make soap in an iron kettle.

For Bedroom Floors.

Nothing is more satisfactory as a floor covering for bedrooms than washable cotton rugs. They can be bought in the small size—a yard long by twenty-four inches wide. They are made either in plain colors, with white stripes for a border across the ends, or in mottled patterns. They are edged with cotton fringe. Cushions for the porch floor are also covered with this cotton homespun.

DAILY LEDGER
SPORTS
All of Local Interest

The team of Div. 22, A. O. H., and the Redmen, will have their annual game at the Ward Four playground Saturday. The former team has been strengthened and is capable of putting up a fast game. Victories have been coming in regular order. The Redmen lineup will include players of the Orient team.

The All Stars of the Wardwell alleys and the strong Weymouth combination roll their second match Friday evening. The first contest was a victory for the locals by four pins.

The Lynn Item says. A team that is sure to be heard, from in the Boston league is the St. Georges of Quincy, a very strong aggregation. A former Lynn man will captain this aggregation in the person of Fred Spooney. If the committee on reinstatement act favorably on Fred Shaw's application, this team will have one of the best center forwards in the country. Last season he went to St. Louis and played outlaw football, but under circumstances that could not be questioned. Followers of the sport in Lynn hope to see Shaw reinstated and when he arrives in this city will be given a great reception. George Emmen, who starred with the All-England team in its championship game with Scotland a few years ago, will play inside right for this team.

QUINCY CUP WINNER SELECTED

The yacht Ellen, owned by C. P. Curtis of the Boston yacht club which has successfully challenged and defended the Quincy Yacht Club Challenge Cup during the past few years, has been selected as one of the yachts for the American team of sonder boats to race at Kiel next year. Should the present war continue through next season the races will doubtless be called off, but in the absence at the present time of any indication that the races will not be held as scheduled the American team is being selected.

LEADERS SHOW POORLY IN OPENING GAMES.

Season's Opening Disastrous For Pennant Winners, According to Dope.

Baseball dope is a very peculiar thing. Looking over the major league openings for the last ten years, one finds that the Pirates, who in this time have won only one flag, have landed eight of their opening controversies, and so have the Braves, who generally have finished way down in the ruck. The Naps, also nonpennant winners, have done splendidly at the kickoff, capturing seven contests.

The Athletics, with a record of four pennants in ten years, have broken away in front just six times, and the Giants, who have annexed five gonfalons, have had only an even split in their pryoff combats. The McGrawites, moreover, have been blanked on opening day on four occasions. Six times have the Cardinals had to be content with one tally in their first championship contests.

Star pitchers do not always fare well when real hostilities commence. Cy Young was the twirler for the Boston Red Sox in four of their openers, and he was bracketed only once. Joe Wood's record on get away day shows one victory, two defeats and one tie. Nap Rucker has gone down to defeat three times when the championship lid was lifted and only once has led the Superbas to a triumph in an opening game. It was when G. Napoleon was operating on the mound in 1912 that the Giants set a modern record for runs on the first day of the season by accumulating eighteen.

A luckless individual at the start of campaigns has been Arthur Fromme of the Giants. He worked in three openers for the Reds and one for the Cardinals, and defeat was his portion on each occasion.

Irving Melrose Young (Cy 2d) was delegated three times while with the Braves to pitch the opening game, and on all three occasions he came through with wins. Once he let his opponents down with a safety. That trick also has been turned on opening day by Walter Johnson, Frank Paderewski Smith and George Mullin.

Johnson has won two of the three games he has pitched on opening day. So have Jack Coombs, Eddie Plank, Howard Camnitz, Addie Joss and Jeff Overall. Christy Mathewson copped both of the pryoff contests in which he toiled, as did "Babe" Adams.

BODIE IN A SLUMP.

Pacific Coast Fence Buster a Disappointment With White Sox.

Since Ping Bodie sold his famous parrot the California fence buster has not been playing his usual brand of ball. Callahan has been disappointed in his outfielders this year, as Larry Chappelle is in the hospital with blood poisoning and Bodie is in a slump. Ray

Demmitt has been an agreeable surprise, however, and has hit and fielded in great form all season.

It is rumored that Cal may attempt to trade Ping for another outfielder who can be relied on in a pinch. This has been Bodie's greatest fault, as most of his hits have had little to do with the results.

GREEK TO TRY FOOTBALL.

Dorizas to Play at Pennsylvania This Fall.

Mike Dorizas, the University of Pennsylvania strong man and wrestler, has gone to South America, but will return next fall for football practice. The Greek athlete is anxious to play football, so that when he returns to Greece as a teacher he can coach the undergraduates in football.

He thinks the American style of athletics and the sports used by the colleges in this country will meet with great favor in his native land.

RUSSIAN FRONT OF SIXTY MILES

Steadily Driving Back German Forces In Prussia

THE FIGHTING IS CONSTANT

Kaiser's Troops Inflicting as Much Damage as Possible as They Retreat—Russian Staff Announces Fresh and Important Victories Against Germany and Austria

London, Aug. 27.—According to a dispatch from St. Petersburg German troops retreating in the direction of Osterode, Prussia, left behind them about 100 pieces of artillery.

The Russian embassy in London is in receipt of telegrams from the general staff at St. Petersburg which announce fresh Russian victories against both Germany and Austria. The messages declare Russian troops now occupy the whole of the eastern and southern half of eastern Prussia.

Russian armies having their bases at Gumbinnen in the north and Biala in the south are co-operating in an effort to drive the Germans from the lake regions of eastern Prussia.

The attacking front spreads over sixty miles of country and is passing through very difficult country, filled with forests, marshes and lakes. These are commanded by German redoubts heavily manned with light artillery and rapid-fire guns and the fighting is constant.

The Germans are reported to be inflicting as much damage as possible and then retiring, blowing up their positions before abandoning them. They are falling back on their main lines of fortifications, which have already been located by the Russian army air scouts.

Because of the difficulty of the positions and the strength of the parallel lines of forts forming the first real line of the German defense, it is believed there will be no frontal attack in force, but that an attempt will be made to envelope the German position and overwhelm it by a flank attack.

The Russian general staff announces that the Austrians who gathered in force along the river Sereth near Tarnopol have been attacked by Cossacks and completely routed. In this attack the Russians took five guns and much general equipment and 300 prisoners. They also shot an Austrian aeroplane to pieces, bringing it down a wrecked mass. Two officers in it were crushed to death and the aviator, a sergeant, was injured and taken prisoner.

The German army of East Prussia is declared to be demoralized. Part of it has taken refuge in the Koenigsburg fortress and many of the soldiers in their flight are reported to have abandoned their knapsacks and rifles. This force is said to be a part of the Twentieth Prussian army corps. Reviewing the fighting between Insterburg and Angherburg, the official statement says:

"On Aug. 23 and 24 in the region north of Kadenburg we fought a successful engagement with the Twentieth German army corps. The latter occupied the fortified positions of Orlau and Frankenau. On Sunday and Monday our troops charged entanglements and, using hand grenades and bayonets, managed to penetrate the German defense line. The Germans were forced to retreat so precipitously that they abandoned on the field several cannon, nine rapid-fire guns and much equipment. We took 1100 prisoners.

"The Germans are now concentrating again and another general battle is expected."

TO CONSERVE PROPERTY

Court Places Associated Trust In Hands of Receiver

Boston, Aug. 27.—Judge Dodge in the United States district court appointed John Noble receiver for the Associated Trust, which controls the Hotel Lenox property among other real estate holdings in this city.

In making the appointment the court stated that the receiver was authorized merely to conserve the property pending the outcome of the bankruptcy proceedings recently instituted against the trust by creditors.

The company has an equity of $200,000 in its real estate holdings.

HUNTING FOR SPIES IN CITY

Believed to Have Signalled to Zeppelin at Antwerp

RENEWED ATTACK IS FEARED

Extraordinary Preparations to Repel Another Visitation, Church Spires and Tall Buildings Being Utilized For the Purpose—Bodies of Bomb Victims Terribly Mangled

Antwerp, Aug. 27.—Antwerp is terror-stricken. The appalling work of the German Zeppelin which passed over the city, leaving a trail of death and destruction in its wake, has horrified everyone.

The question everyone asks is: When will another come? That this one was destroyed means little. It fell before the guns of the Hemixem defenses simply because the crew lost their sense of location and believed they were far enough away from Antwerp to attempt a descent. They had dropped far enough to get a good view of the land and the gunners located them and reached the mark.

In order that another visitation may be met, the government is mounting special guns in the spires of the churches and on the roofs of the tall buildings. Great holes have been cut in the church spires and platforms erected on which the aerial guns have been mounted and manned by the most expert gunners in the Belgian army.

Because of the danger of a renewal of the attack, it is announced that the officers of the general staff have been removed to a locality not revealed and that the members of the royal family have left the palace and taken refuge elsewhere.

It is now considered certain the pilots of the Zeppelin made their raid in accordance with a prearranged plan. It would have been impossible for them accurately to get the range of the royal palace, so high did the dirigible sail, if signals had not been displayed from within the city. The government is endeavoring to trace these accomplices, who will, when caught, be summarily executed as spies.

Opinions of the experts as to the explosive used vary. Some insist it was a special sort of shrapnel bomb filled with a new explosive which added greatly to its destructive power. These experts declare the bombs were discharged from a special gun made for the purpose. The advocates of this belief declare it was plain from the course taken by the shells that they were aimed with the greatest care at public buildings. That they hit private houses and St. Elizabeth's hospital, they say, was due to the inability of the gunner to get an accurate range from the moving dirigible.

The bodies of the victims were terribly mangled. Four girls and their young mother were blown to pieces in their beds when their home was destroyed by a bomb which fell squarely upon it. A man and wife were killed as they stood clinging to each other, terror-stricken, in the doorway of their home. Doctors who attended the wounded declare they never before saw such horrible wounds on human beings.

It is announced that the Belgian government is sending formal protests to the neutral powers demanding that they protest to Germany against an unwarranted killing of unprotected non-combatants.

Women and children fear to leave their homes, and they cower in the cellars. Even the Belgian soldiers are troubled. By order of the general staff a dozen picked Belgian aviators, with the best aeroplanes available, have been stationed at the outlying forts with orders to watch for any further visitations. They have all vowed they will attack any dirigible coming here even though it is necessary to ram it at the cost of their own lives.

BY WAY OF PANAMA

Pleiades Completes Voyage From San Francisco to New York

New York, Aug. 27.—The first all-water voyage from San Francisco to New York, by way of the Panama canal, was completed here upon the arrival of the steamer Pleiades.

The Pleiades, which flies an American flag, sailed from San Francisco July 24 and passed through the canal Aug. 16. She is one of a fleet of ten steamships the Luckenbach Steamship company will operate between New York and San Francisco.

A Salem Witch

She Was a Bonnie Lass From Scotland.

By SARAH BAXTER

One night a coach was driven upon a dock in the Firth of Forth in Scotland. A man alighted and called upon a girl to follow him.

"What are you going to do with me?" she asked.

"Come!" was his only reply.

The girl reluctantly got out of the coach. The man forcibly drew her arm through his and took her on board a ship lying beside the dock. She had been taught by rough usage that it would be useless to resist, and she accompanied the man passively across the deck and down the companionway to the cabin. There he left her and, going on deck, approached the captain, who was giving orders for preparations to sail.

"Here is £20," he said, counting out the money, "for her passage. Take her to the Massachusetts colony and leave her there."

"Is she to be turned over to any one?"

"Leave her there."

With this the speaker produced a bag, opened it sufficiently to show that it was filled with gold pieces and handed it to the captain. The latter took it, thrust it in his pocket, and he who had given it left the ship and was driven away.

Early the next morning the crew cast off from the dock and sailed out into the ocean.

"Who is the wench?" was asked on the arrival of the ship at Salem.

"A Scotch lassie," replied a woman, "who was on the ship with us—she who feared not the storm when it came, but stood out on the foredeck and talked to it."

"And to whom does she belong?"

"To no one. Some one sent her away to get rid of her."

"The lassie must go back in the ship. It is not meant that one so young should be among us without a guardian," said the people.

But the lassie did not go back in the ship because the captain would not take her. One of the women when the immigrants had been settled in their new homes gave Kitty MacAllister—such was her name—a temporary lodging until the chief citizens should decide what to do with her, for the older persons felt it necessary to get rid of her. She was an odd creature. On the voyage she had acquired the name of Stormy Petrel, so happy was she when the wind put whitecaps on the water and shrieked in the rigging. Before the voyage was ended several of the women who had grown sons whispered among themselves that she might be a witch.

KATHERINE AND COVERLEIGH COMPARED NOTES.

If this meant that she had bewitched the young men it was the truth, for they were as anxious that she should remain with them as the older ones were that she should go elsewhere. But when the young fellows began to quarrel over her it was decided that something must be done. Then the mother of one of those who had been bewitched went to the magistrate and made the following affidavit:

"During the voyage to America Katherine MacAllister when a storm raged went out on to the forecastle and, hanging on to the jib halyards, told the storm to wreck the ship. As soon as the said Katherine MacAllister had spoken the words a great blast threw the vessel on her beam ends, and she was only righted by the prayers of pious persons in the cabin.

"And this deponent further states that since the landing she (the deponent) went one moonlight night to the shore and saw the said Katherine MacAllister sailing on the water in a sieve."

Upon this affidavit Katherine was arrested while chasing butterflies and lodged in jail, or, rather, since there was no jail in the settlement, she was placed in the keeping of Deacon Padelford, he being chosen for her jailer since he had no sons for her to bewitch. Then a court was convened to try her.

There were a judge, a jury, lawyers, witnesses—indeed, all the officials and others pertaining to a court just as courts are organized today. And before this court Katherine MacAllister was tried on the accusation in accordance with the specifications laid down in the affidavit mentioned and was convicted of being a witch. Before sentence was passed upon her the judge asked her if she had anything to say in her defense.

"My home, your worship, is in Bonnie Scotland, where all maids are merry and all young men are brave. My father was a laird, and my mother was the daughter of a chief. My father was killed in battle, and my mother died of a broken heart. The good God who brought such trials on them and me gave me a cheerful heart to bear it all, since I must live. After my father and mother were taken away from me my Uncle Roderick shut me up in a room in the castle and one night put me in a coach and brought me to a ship, where he left me. What he did all this unkindness for I dinna ken. But since the good God intended that I should live through all the troubles in Bonnie Scotland I dinna think he'll let you burn me for a witch."

This speech excited the sympathy of all, and had it not been that Katherine had been duly convicted the judge might have had mercy on her. But he did what he conceived to be his duty, sentencing her to be burned at the stake the next day.

Richard Coverleigh, one of the young men whom Katherine had bewitched, heard her speech and, since the Puritans were prone to consider that they were appointed to special purposes by Providence, believed in his heart that he was commissioned to save the lassie he loved in his heart. He was a younger son of a British earl and had been sent to America that he might not disgrace his family by poverty, all the estate being entailed to his older brother. But he was more fitted for deeds of knight errantry than the commonplace duties of the peaceful settlers of a new country, though he had done some service in fighting hostile Indians.

Katherine was confined in one of the two rooms of Deacon Padelford's cabin, which served for dining room and kitchen. The fireplace was one of the olden type, very broad, and the chimney very large. Behind the cabin was a grove, and one of the trees grew so near it that its branches overhung the abode. Near midnight, when Katherine was sleeping serenely, undisturbed by the terrible ordeal in store for her on the morrow, she was suddenly awakened by a hand being clapped over her mouth.

"Be still," whispered a man's voice in her ear. "I have come to save you."

She could not have cried out if she would. The hand was soon removed, and the voice continued:

"Arise and put on your clothes. You will find under the chimney a rope with a loop. Put the loop under your arms, and when I feel by the rope that you are on it I will pull you up into a tree that overhangs the cabin."

"Who are you?" whispered Katherine.

"Ric Coverleigh."

Katherine felt for his hand and pressed it; then he left her, climbed the rope hand over hand and waited, standing on the chimney top. When Katherine had dressed, making no noise in doing so, she put the loop over her shoulders, and Coverleigh, feeling that it was caught, pulled her up to him, and, she catching to a limb of the tree above, he helped her up on it. In a few minutes both had descended the tree and stood upon the ground.

Richard Coverleigh, being fond of the water, had built himself a small boat with a single sail, and any contribution he made to the wealth of the settlement was by fishing. He had in this way gathered some £40, which he would doubtless have spent had there been anything to spend it for. With this money in his doublet he took Katherine to his boat and with muffled oars pulled out to where he caught a breeze; then, raising his sail, he entered upon the broad ocean.

Fortunately the weather was pleasant and the wind favorable for a sail to Boston, not far distant. Ric did not know what he would do when he reached Boston. He relied on the Lord to guide him. He was about entering the harbor in the morning when a ship bound for England approached. He hailed her and asked to be taken aboard, offering the captain all the money he had to carry him and his shipmate with him. The offer was accepted. Ric ran alongside the ship, and the two climbed aboard. Then the boat was turned adrift, and at the hour Katherine was to have been burned at the stake she had begun her voyage homeward.

On the ocean Katherine and Coverleigh compared notes and found that their circumstances were similar. Katherine's uncle had dispossessed her of her estate, he being next of kin and consequently heir at her death. He had given out that she had died, buried a coffin weighted with stones and shipped her to America. Coverleigh on his arrival in England found that his father had died in his bed and his brother had been killed while hunting. He took possession of the title and estate, married Katherine, then went to Scotland with her and dispossessed her uncle.

Various stories were told in Salem of Katherine's disappearance. The one that was accepted by most citizens was that she had flown up the chimney, and a farmer's boy who was out with the dawn averred that he had seen her high up above the cabin in which she had been confined riding on a broomstick.

DAINTY EVENING WRAP.

Satin Garment to Wear Over the Popular Lightweight Costume.

WRAP OF WHITE SATIN.

This charming evening wrap is of white charmeuse, with frills of lace at the neck and sleeves. Lightweight wraps of this kind are useful to wear over the fluffy evening costumes which are now so popular. The net, lace or mousseline blouses of many of these gowns are so frail that the heavy velvets or brocades of other seasons would seriously injure them.

THE NEW SILHOUETTE.

It Is Made Up of a Combination of Straight Lines.

The first point of importance is the new costume silhouette, which makes or mars the entire creation.

The quickest way to get an idea of what this is is to draw a figure outline entirely in straight lines. First the collar, generally flaring in straight angles; then the coat or wrap, also flaring and falling in straight lines which terminate anywhere between knee and ankle; then the skirt, as straight and scant as trousers legs in effect. Elaborate dress varies this with looped drapery and long, sweeping folds, but even in these the new edict is apparent, and the keynote of the straight line marks the new from the old rounded "pegtop."

The next feature of importance is the great coming vogue of tailored styles. The smart woman will have many strictly tailored suits this fall, with a favor for blue serge in plain styles and for mixed fabrics of wool and silk for dress. Plain and striped fabrics will continue their present vogue, and plaids will hold a prominent place, especially large figures in dull colors.

An item of extreme importance is the coming use of braid in tailored models. All widths are used, from 1½ inches for binding to six or eight for bands, and there is a trend toward the use of plain mohair or silk. Narrower widths in parallel rows are well spoken of, but this is not as yet authenticated. Plain buttons are to form the finish of this style of trimming.

The two newest items of established favor are the wide and daring use of yellow, both as trimming and as fabric, and the use of sleeves of different fabric and color. There is a strong tendency toward the tight "glove" sleeve.

Dark colors will be favored for tailored costumes, with the almost equal favor of daring colors in the same class. And orange, mustard, pumpkin and tarnished gold will be seen in corduroy, broadcloth, the rough faced and pile fabrics. Black velvet is to be the first favorite as a finishing touch, but in black and dark colored costumes any brilliant color will be good. Almost invariably the neck is finished with white in some tailored collar effect.

GOOD DRESSING.

Neatness Is an Important Factor In Its Accomplishment.

Proper care of one's clothing plays an important part in good dressing, for a really well dressed woman is, first of all, neat. Not only are her clothes spotless, but every article is adjusted with infinite care as well, and the clothes in reserve are as well looked after as those in use.

No one may be considered well dressed who has a button off, a seam ripped or a spot in evidence. To deserve the title of well dressed there must be no gaping division of belt and skirt or shoes run over at the heels.

A systematic overhauling at stated periods of all clothing in use is absolutely necessary, and all clothing in reserve should be cleaned thoroughly before being put away.

After Blacking the Range.

Kerosene will clean your hands better than anything else after blacking a range or stove. Pour a little in the water, wash your hands in it, then wash them in tepid water and finally with plenty of soap and a stiff nailbrush in hot water. Finish up by rubbing the hands with lemon juice, rosewater or glycerin.

No Pie Crust Premises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

PETITION FROM WEST QUINCY

Want Five Year Old to Attend Gridley Bryant

There is probably a little story behind the request made to the School Committee on Tuesday evening by the delegation from the Gridley Bryant school. This delegation asked that the school age be changed back from 6 to 5 years, and that all day sessions be held for the first grade pupils.

It is common talk that the school attendance at both the Willard and Gridley Bryant schools has fallen off considerably on account of a decrease in the population in these districts, and that both buildings now have more room than they need, and that some of the rooms will have to be closed in September for lack of pupils.

What the residents in the Gridley Bryant district are said to fear is, that if the school attendance is not more than is expected at both the Willard and Gridley Bryant schools that the School Committee in the interest of economy may decide to close the Gridley Bryant school and send the pupils to the Willard school.

The Gridley Bryant building was originally erected because the attendance at the Willard school was so great that the building was not large enough. It will be remembered that the few years previous to the opening of the Gridley Bryant school, rooms had to be provided in the attic of the Willard.

The changing of the school age to 6 years, together with the half school day for first grade pupils coupled with the removal from both districts of many families, has brought about the results noted.

LOCAL EAGLES RECEIVE REPORT

Past President John J. Feely, delegate to the National convention, made so encouraging a report to the members of John Adams aerie, Fraternal Order of Eagles, at their meeting in Protection hall Wednesday evening, that he was given three rousing cheers. Worthy President Frank J. Duffy presided.

Mr. Feeley's report was a detailed one and had to do with several changes in the constitution enacted at that session. He spoke of the disappointment of other Massachusetts aeries because the degree staff of the local team which held the State championship for several years was not present to compete for the National trophy.

Resolutions were passed on the death of Martin Frederickson, a machinist at the Fore River shipyard, whose death at the Quincy City Hospital followed a short illness of pneumonia. The funeral will take place today from the undertaking rooms of Edward D. Barrett and a delegation was chosen to represent the aerie at the Eagle services.

The committee in charge of the Labor Day clam bake to be held at the Squantum aviation field reported the sale of more than 200 tickets to members. A program which will include athletic events is arranged, the feature of which will be the base ball game between the team of the Quincy Point Social Club and the aerie.

The names of Adam Slater and William Allan were taken off the sick list. The committee reported the following sick list—Joseph J. Brady of Wilmington, Del.; Martin Flaherty of Brooklyn N. Y.; John W. Curtis of East Braintree and George Woodman, Lorenzo Paranti, Samuel Davis, George Morrison, Fred Beer, Thomas Callahan and John Raleigh, all of Quincy.

PROPOSAL.

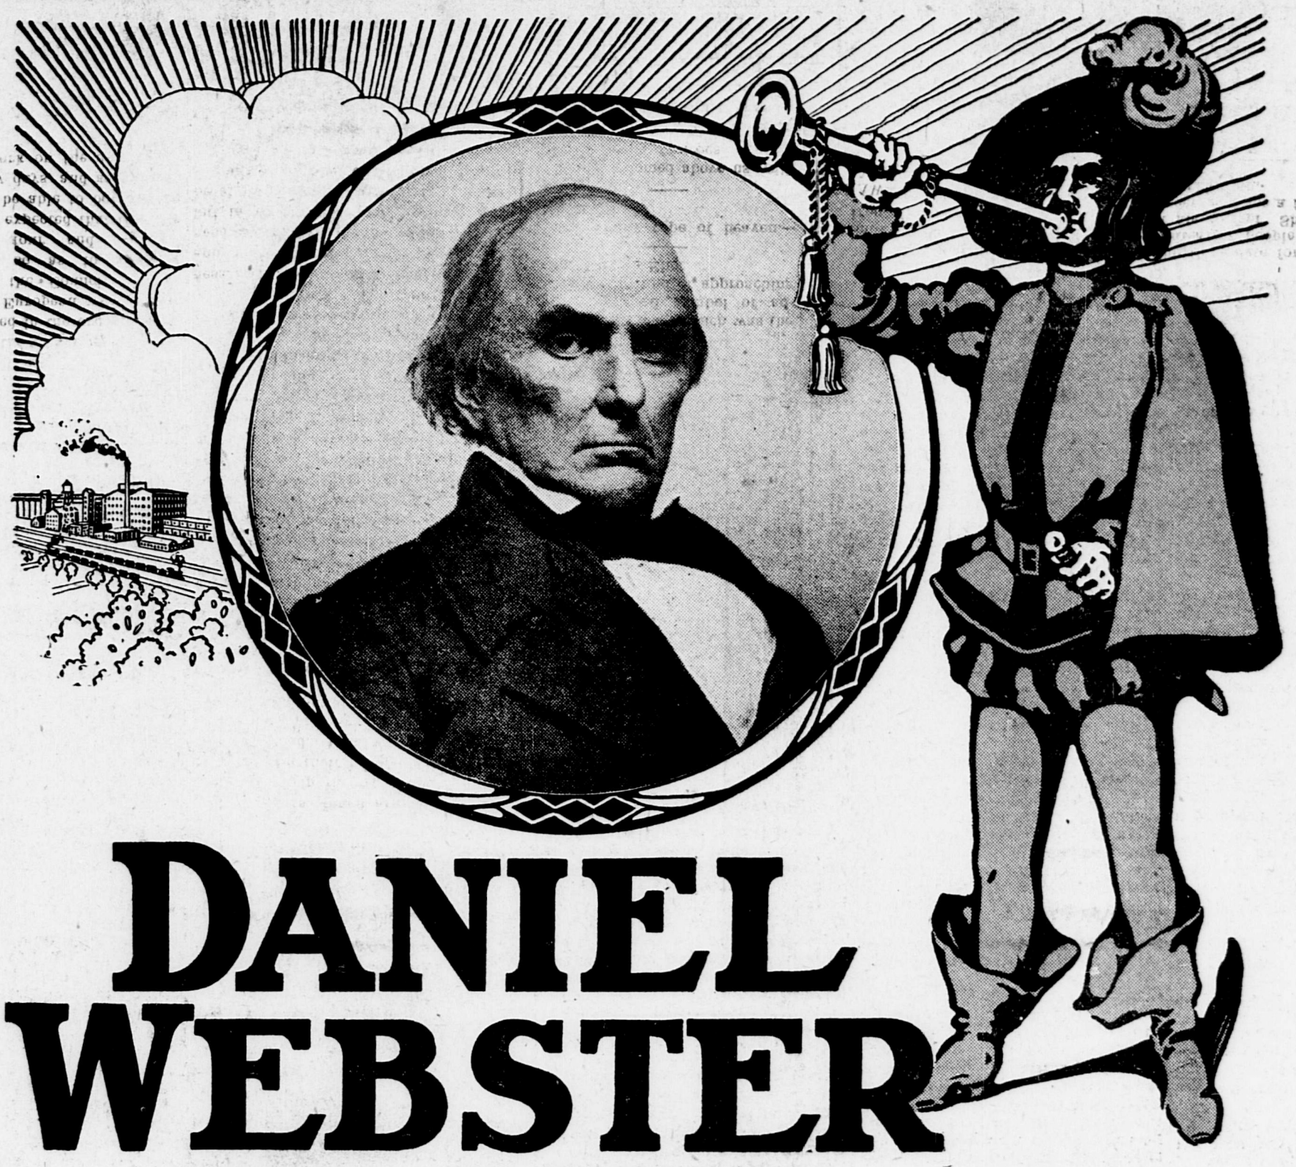

Quincy, Mass., August 27, 1914.

Sealed proposals for furnishing and delivering approximately Sixty Thousand (60,000) granite Gutter Paving, to be not less than 6 inch in length, 6 inch in depth and 3 1-2 inch in width will be received at the office of the Commissioner of Public Works, City Hall, Quincy, until 10 o'clock A. M Tuesday, September 1st, 1914, at which time they will be publicly opened and read.

Proposals must be accompanied by a properly certified check of Two Hundred Dollars ($200.) payable to the City of Quincy, which check is to be the property of the City of Quincy if the bidder fails to execute the contract within six days after the contract may have been awarded to him.

The right is reserved to reject any or all bids or to accept the bid deemed best for the city.

HANCOCK ST. SIDEWALK

Merchants Anxious That Work Shall Commence

Some of the merchants along Hancock street, between Granite and School streets, are putting up a kick because the appropriation made last year by the City Council to rebuild the brick sidewalk along the west side of the street had not been expended. That the sidewalk along the west side of Hancock street is in a bad condition is a fact generally known, but the reason that it has not been rebuilt before is a good one in part.

When the street is widened and paved under the order passed by the City Council a few months ago, it will be necessary to change the street lines on the west side somewhat and until this has been done it would be almost useless to try and build the walk.

It was intended that work on the street should have been commenced some weeks ago, but it will be remembered that the City Treasurer was unable to borrow the money appropriated for the street at the rate of interest named in the order, on account of the European war. Last Monday night the Council amended the order so as to increase the rate to four and one-half percent. It is expected that the City Treasurer will be able to borrow the money in a few days, and as soon as this is done work on the street will be commenced.

It will also be necessary to change the location of the street car tracks in this part of the street, which location has already been asked and a hearing ordered.

As to the sidewalk between Granite street and Saville street on the west side this was provided for in this years sidewalk order. This walk will be granolithic. The contractor putting in the new sidewalks is still at work and he is liable to begin work on this walk most any day now.

JONES—DURAN.

Miss Helen Irene Duran, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bartholomew Duran of 118 Phipps street, and Snowden C. Jones, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Jones of 58 River street, were married Wednesday evening.

The ceremony was performed at the St. Johns parish house by Rev. Fr. Walter A. Quinlan. Miss Margaret Duran, a sister of the bride, and George Fallon, a close friend of the contracting parties, were the attendants.

A wedding supper was served in a Boston hotel after the ceremony, which was attended only by the bridal party.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones are now on a honeymoon trip through New Hampshire, and on their return will reside on Richie road. Both are well known in this city and are popular among a large circle of acquaintances.

SAFETY FIRST.

New England is falling back again. The record for Sunday was of a half-dozen drowned and of auto and motorcycle accidents too many to easily keep in mind. This ought not to be. There were a few Sundays when there was almost a cessation of this sort of thing. People were obeying the "Safety first" admonition, and the Monday papers were no longer crowded with tales of tragedies. But a lot of people are getting careless again—are allowing themselves to play foolish tricks in the boats, and to try to swim under adverse conditions, and to endeavor to speed unduly along the roads, sometimes in almost utter darkness. The results are more deaths and more maimings, practically all needless. There are but a few weeks left in which outdoor enjoyment will be at its height. Why not try to live through them and not to die now, or to maim yourself, perhaps for life?

SKY PRAISES.

Not golden sky, which was the doubly blessed symbol of advancing day and of approaching rest.—George Eliot.

The starry cope of heaven.—Milton.

Sometimes gentle, sometimes capricious, sometimes awful; never the same for two moments together; almost human in its passions, almost spiritual in its tenderness, almost divine in its infinity, its appeal to what is immortal in us is as distinct as its ministry of chastisement or of blessing to what is mortal is essential.—Ruskin.

CIVIC CONFERENCE.

A four-days session of a social and civic service conference opened in Stetson hall of Randolph Wednesday evening. Joseph Belcher, master of the Belcher school presided. There were addresses by Superintendent of Schools Ralph P. Wiggin of Braintree and Prof. W. A. Kingsley of the state board of education. Organ selections were played by Frank Kilburn, organist of All Saint's Episcopal Church of Ashmont and songs by pupils of the Stetson High school under the direction of Miss Rose G. Hand.

AGAINST THREE DECKERS.

To consider better fire protection and the elimination of three-deckers in the Metropolitan area five men have been named as a special committee by a gathering in Boston City Hall, Wednesday of administrative officials and representatives of civic organizations called by Mayor Curley. They are Francis R. Bangs, William J. Hennessey, Franklin H. Wentworth, C. H. J. Kimball and Patrick O'Hearn, building commissioner. They have been empowered to call meetings at intervals and subsequently to prepare and report a bill to the Legislature.

Lamb and fish are the leaders this week at the new Quincy Public Market.

NEW MERCHANT MARINE.

Under the new law of granting American Registry to foreign built ships owned by citizens and corporations will fly the Stars and Stripes ships will fly the Stars and Stripes as representatives of a new American merchant marine. The United Fruit Company, the Standard Oil and the United States Steel Corporation will place their fleets under the American flag. This will give the new American merchant marine a tonnage of 400,000. With such a start, other ship owners will be induced, to add their vessels to the number and in a few years the American flag will be recognized wherever the ships of the world carry the produce of their countries to market. It is a wonderful change that has come to American commerce, as sudden and unexpected as the outbreak of the great war. The victory has been a peaceful one, and all the more gratifying, because while other nations are engaged in the most horrible war the world has ever known, we are at peace with all and in the enjoyment of its fruits.

WARD TWO WINS THE CHAMPIONSHIP

Very Interesting Program at Final Day of the Quincy Supervised Playgrounds

Prizes Presented by Acting Mayor Emery L. Crane

The season of supervised playgrounds in this city was brought to a close Thursday afternoon with exercises and athletic events on the Merrymount Oval. The final honors were carried off by Ward Two with 43 1-2 points against Ward three, second place winners, with 34 1-2 points.

It was the first time the Quincy Point contingent ever took the championship since supervised playgrounds have been conducted in the city, and it was the first time the South Quincy children ever lost that place.

The day was an ideal one and several thousand children and friends gathered at the oval to enjoy the program which opened with a grand review before Acting Mayor Emery L. Crane and the Board of Park Commissioners—Ira M. Whittemore, Walter M. Deacon and Charles Chapman. Grouped about the reviewing stand were members of the city government and former city officials, members of the Womens Club, and extending on either side were two long rows of chairs, every one occupied.

The children made their entry to the field from the north end to the accompaniment of applause from all sections of the grand stand. Banners were waving in the moderate breeze that swept the oval and American flags were held aloft by all the children, who also wore paper hats. They marched around the track and disbanded with a chorus of cheers.

With the close of the review came the first of the athletic events on the program the finals of the boys 35 yard, 50 yard and 100 yard dashes, after which the boys flag relay race. 12 boys from each ward, was run off. Everything was started on schedule time and amid much enthusiasm, at five minutes past three the girls of Ward Two gave a series of folk dances which included the shoemakers dance, Irish jig, and the Danish dance of greeting.

Then more sports, a relay race around the track in which six boys from each ward upheld their respective sections, the South Quincy representatives being the winners, and at 3.25 the girls of each ward played group games, many of them attractive and were liberally applauded.

The chariot relay race by boys, nine from each ward was the next event announced and the children lined the track to see this most spectacular of races after which the South Quincy girls took their positions on the oval and danced four old fashioned ar-

ARGENTINE NAVAL OFFICERS

Entertained at Dinner at the Copley Plaza

A dinner in honor of the officers of the Argentine Navy, who came to Boston to witness the transfer of the Rivadavia to their government, was given by President Powell of the Fore River Ship Building Corporation at the Copley Plaza on Thursday evening. Among those present was Capt. DeWitt Coffman, the Charlestown Navy Yard's commandant; Mr. Snyder, of the Bethlehem Steel Co.; and Messrs. Smith, Sedgwick and Brown of the Quincy Corporation.

The guests of honor were Admiral Onofre Betheder, Capt. Jose Moneta who will command the Rivadavia and Capts. Paige and Tweba of the Argentine navy.

CHARGES AGAINST CAPTAIN McKAY

Mayor Miller has received the charges filed against Capt. Daniel R. McKay of the police department by Harry P. Levowich, a local attorney, is the announcement made Thursday through his official newspaper.

He is quoted as "having prefixed his remarks with the astounding statement that "there is too much profanity being used by members of the police force."

It is said he refrained from making any comments upon the charges but promised to give the matter careful attention and if the results warranted Captain McKay would be summoned to answer the charges at a hearing.

The charges were filed early in the week as the result of a conversation which took place between Mr. Levowich and Captain McKay.

AUTO ACCIDENT WAS FATAL

John A. Gale Dies at Quincy Hospital

John A. Gale, the Boston banker, who was injured in an auto accident at North Weymouth while riding with former Congressman Samuel McCall, died at the Quincy City Hospital Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

This morning at the undertaking rooms of John Hall Medical Examiner Fred E. Jones, assisted by Associate Examiner George V. Liggins of Randolph, performed an autopsy on the body. It is understood they found death was the result of an accidental crushed chest. The body was taken to 226 Babcock street, the Brookline home of the deceased where the funeral will be held Saturday.

No explanation of just how Mr. Gale, who was sitting on the rear seat between Mr. McCall and Mr. McMulkin, was thrown out could be given by the rest of the party. Mr. McCall said that he had dropped to the bottom of the car when the crash came and thus escaped injuries.

Fanning in throwing his machine across the path of the car avoided a more serious accident, it was declared A rear tire was burst and the paint scraped on one side. Motorman Thomas Ferguson and Conductor John Rooney were in charge of the electric car.

Mr. McCall has cancelled all his campaign engagements for the rest of the week as the result of the death of his friend. Although he received no injuries beyond a shaking-up the accident was a great shock to him.

Mr. McCall's principal engagement this week was to speak at the outing of the Worcester County Republican Club at Sterling tomorrow. He was also scheduled to take part in the Maine campaign next week. It is uncertain now whether he will be able to keep that engagement.

John A. Gale was about 65 years of age. He had been in failing health for the last few years but went to business every day in the Old South building, where he conducted a banking business with his son-in-law, George B. Barnum.

He came to Boston from Haverhill about 30 years ago. He had been in the shoe business there and had once been a candidate for mayor on a fusion ticket. He was one of the founders of the Amesbury Trust Company.

Mr. Gale founded the Beacon Trust Company of Boston and took an active interest in its affairs until about 10 years ago. He was a heavy backer of the Somerville National Bank and the Somerville Trust Company when they were founded 22 years ago. He was a vice-president in both institutions and was their Boston banking agent as well. He leaves a widow at his home on Babcock street, Brookline, and a daughter, Mrs. George M. Barnum.

Frank K. Damon has returned from a two weeks vacation pleasantly spent at his bungalow at Marshfield Hills.

THE DEFICIT FOR SCHOOLS

Salaries Increased Without Consulting City Council

It was not because the City Council charged the School department for water that caused the deficit which will occur in the appropriation for instruction, for the reason that at the same time the department was charged for water used, a supplementary budget was passed appropriating that amount for the department.

The reason for the shortage, or deficit is because the sum of $2,000 was chopped off the department estimates by the Mayor before he sent the annual budget to the City Council. The School department claimed that it knew just how much would be needed, and sent in its estimate, but the Mayor cut the amount $2,000. The increase was necessary on account of increases in salaries of teachers voted earlier in the year. But should the School Committee have voted increases in salaries before the appropriations were made? Suppose it had been some other department which increased in February the salaries of its clerks, without knowing where its money was coming from?

EAGLES ATTEND FUNERAL.

Martin Frederickson, who died at the Quincy City Hospital after a short illness, was given an Eagles funeral on Thursday by John Adams aerie with which he was affiliated. The funeral was from the undertaking rooms of Edward D. Barrett and was largely attended. Burial was in Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

CITY SOLICITOR WAS MISQUOTED

Did Say Quincy Had Not Had a Single Mayor But Had Been Honest

Some Comments on Charter Hearing at State House

The unsatisfactory method of receiving news by telephone was shown in Thursday's Ledger, when City Solicitor Pinkham was made to say exactly the opposite from what he actually did say, at the hearing before the recess committee of the Legislature, who are considering the subject of city charters.

Immediately after the hearing the subject matter was sent to the Daily Ledger by telephone. City Solicitor Pinkham was made to say that the city had not had a single Mayor who had acted honestly and conscientiously. All who know City Solicitor Pinkham would not for a minute credit such a statement. What Mr. Pinkham actually did say was that the city had not had a single Mayor, but what had been honest and conscientious. The Daily Ledger regrets the incident and hastens to correct it.

In view of the much moted question of revision of our City Charter, it was somewhat surprising that the hearing Thursday was not more largely attended.

At the outset the committee stated that it was not considering the financial status of cities in any sense of the word, but was getting ideas from different cities of what changes each municipality thought should be made in its charter.

The committee intimated during the hearing that it did not propose to report a uniform charter which would do for every city, but that it would probably report several charters, and from these each city by referendum vote could select that which it thought best suited to its needs.

Representative Sullivan believed that in Quincy the question should be submitted to the voters so that they might signify whether they desired to retain the present charter or adopt a new one.

The general sentiment of those present was that as a whole the City Charter of Quincy was all right. It was also generally agreed that party designation should be eliminated at municipal elections, and that the number of the City Council should be reduced. As to the length of the term of office there was some disagreement, although most of those who spoke favored a longer term than one year for the Mayor.

President Whiton said that it was impossible for any man to be elected and keep out of politics, and that even before he was inaugurated he would begin to lay the wires for a re-election. He had failed to see any Mayor who had not played politics. What we needed in Quincy was a man who could deliver the goods.

Particular stress was made by several of the speakers on filling vacan-

With frankfurters at famine prices in Europe the dogs of war seem to be getting the worst of it.

An Altruistic essay by Winifred Black is entitled "The Devil is dead!" It may be reasonably assumed, however, that Winnie wrote it prior to August 10.

THE SOMERSAULTS OF STYLE.

One of the queer reversals of popular fancy is seen in the public attitude in the matter of white stockings. Some years ago the wearing of white stockings was considered a sign of rusticity.

Thrifty rural people favored white. It was supposed that colored stockings were weakened and rotted by dyes. White stockings retained the strength and toughness of the original fiber, so that it was considered economical to wear them. The young people, however, often felt ashamed of them as a sign of homespun and unfashionable manners.

Now how it is changed. White shoes and stockings abound, and are one of the badges of swelldom. They adorn the feet of both men and women in the choicest outing resorts. Uncle Reuben is once more in style. Which goes to show that almost any kind of garment comes in style if you only hold on to it long enough.

MODERN WAR.

The popular conception of war sees a battle as a line of men with colors flying and cheering officers, led forward in dress parade against a similarly arranged foe. Over on some hill is the general watching the battle with field glasses, and sending dispatches by mounted aides on frothing horses.

Modern war has made such methods as obsolete as the Roman gallery. Battle flags are a means of attracting the enemy's fire. The general sits in some quiet office or field station miles from the front, and talks with his officers by telephone or wireless.

War has become a business and industrial proposition. The slightest failure in detail may wreck a campaign. Sore feet due to imperfectly stitched shoes may cost a battle, quite as much as defective rifles.

In the Balkan war the Montenegrins illustrated the failure of old style warefare. The picturesue mountaineers were called the best fighters in Europe. They disdained to carry intrenching tools. So it cost them three times as many men and four times as much time to capture Scutari as would have been taken by scientific fighters with the spade.

There is no place in modern warfare for the individual hero. He would interfere with discipline. Everybody ought to be a hero. That involves in efficient commissariat. Good fighting is never done by hungry men.

Still, the human element can never be systematized out of war. By incessant target practice the marksman learns to shoot straight, which was the reason why the United States beat Spain in 1898 so readily. The other human element of enthusiasm is partly a matter of national temperament, partly a sense of the justice of the cause. Such are the great factors in this war of the gods on the frontier of France.

ALLIES ARE STILL BEING DRIVEN BACK

Unable to Resist Smashing Attack by Germans

KAISER'S TROOPS IN LARGE FRENCH CITIES

Great Industrial Centres Believed to Have Capitulated—Longwy, Defended by Forts Long Out of Date, Resists For Twenty-Four Days With Garrison of but One Battalion, While Lille, With Modern Equipment, Succumbs After Short Battle—Paris In Great Danger and Foreigners Are Given Hints to Depart—London Fears Peril of a German Zeppelin Dropping Bombs

London, Aug. 28.—Another day of disasters has emphasized the inability of the allies to hold back the smashing German attack.

Lille, Roubaix, Valenciennes and Longwy have fallen, piercing the outer line of the French defenses. The British press bureau admits that the allies have again been compelled to fall back owing to the desire of the French military authorities to try to maintain a defense over too great an extent of territory.

This is somewhat blunter than the diplomatic phrasing of the British press bureau's dispatch, but no other meaning can be read into the statement that a certain change in position had been forced upon the British troops owing to the French operations extending over 250 miles of frontier. This is clearly an admission that for the third time since the allies joined in battle with the Germans, they have been driven back.

Industrial Centres Fall

The news that Longwy had at last succumbed to the German advance has been confirmed by the French ministry of war. No official admission of the fate of Lille, Valenciennes and Roubaix has been forthcoming, but it is generally believed in London that the great industrial centres have capitulated. In the case of Roubaix, the surrender is not surprising. German cavalry were reported in the city several days ago, and as Roubaix is an undefended city the entry of a hostile force could not well be resisted.

But with Lille and Valenciennes, the mystery of the sudden capitulation of those vital keys to the frontier defenses of Paris is even more surprising than the quick silencing of the guns of Namur. Valenciennes had capable defenses; Lille was surrounded with bristling forts and ramparts presumably superior in power to anything in France outside of Paris itself and Toul.

Worrying Aspect of Campaign

Longwy was defended by forts supposedly out of date a generation ago, yet it resisted the German advance for twenty-four days with a garrison of but one battalion. Lille, thoroughly modern in its fortifications, seems to have succumbed after a battle that can hardly have lasted for over two days. Its twenty forts and batteries, covering a sweep of twenty miles about the city, can hardly have been battered into submission in so short a time.

The only possible conjecture that can be made in London is that the Germans have executed such a formidable turning movement to the north that it compelled the garrison to evacuate the forts and fall back to the second line of defense on the boundary. Even this explanation seems untenable and the fate of Lille is the most discussed and the most worrying aspect of the campaign.

No details of the new position taken by the allies has been given out in Paris or London. It is supposed that the defenders of Lille and Valenciennes have retired to the Cambrai-Le Cateau line, about ten miles behind Valenciennes. The defenses here are greatly inferior to those at Lille and Valenciennes.

Longwy's Brave Defense

The defense of Longwy afforded a shining contrast to the abrupt capitulation of Lille and the ease with which Namur was isolated. When the suspense of the war has been lifted, the resistance offered by this little antiquated fortress to an overwhelming force will stand out as one of the heroic features of the war. The bombardment of the little fort on the plateau overlooking the Cheirs river began on Aug. 3 and has been continuous ever since.

Several days ago the great German army, commanded in person by the crown prince, enveloped the town on both sides, but the single battalion, fighting against scores of thousands, has battled valiantly more than three weeks. Over half the garrison have been killed or wounded. Practically no improvements have been made in the forts since the Franco-Prussian war, although the fortress commands the great road from France into Luxemburg. It is not to be wondered at that Lieutenant Colonel Darche, the commander of the fort, has been nominated an officer of the Legion of Honor for "heroic conduct in the defense of Longwy."

It is possible that the situation of the allies in France is not so desperate as it appears. But from all information that can be obtained, the German attack is each day battering ahead, slowly in some places, swiftly in others.

A Disquieting Report

The statement of the French war office that the French forces have continued uninterruptedly on the offensive for five days in the region between Nancy and Vosges is one of the most disquieting reports that London has received. If the French advance much beyond the Nancy line they will find themselves cut off in the rear by a tremendous hostile army with only the alternatives of a disastrous surrender or almost complete extinction.

Both the advance upon the right near Lille and the drive inward past Longwy are rapidly menacing the defenders of Paris. Both are in such strength that the combined British and French, although fighting heroically and desperately, seem unable to stem the tide. Paris is unmistakably in greater danger now than at any moment during the campaign. Berlin may be uneasy over the threat of the Russians, but Paris may well be nearly in despair.

Hints are already being given Americans and other foreigners in Paris that their continued presence there may prove unpleasant. If the German advance can be kept up for a day or two longer at the pace that it has been driving since Sunday, hints will give way to stern commands to all non-combatants to get out of the French capital while the roads to the west and south are still open.

British Marines at Ostend

The landing of British marines at Ostend indicates that the peril to London of a Zeppelin raid may be regarded more seriously by the war office than they have led people to believe. Or it may be merely a precautionary measure to control a convenient harbor for landing reinforcements, especially needed now that Dunkirk and Calais are threatened by the German smashing attack upon Lille. Possibly, too, the occupation of Ostend may be a step toward an attempt to break the German line of communication through Germany, in conjunction with a Belgian attack from Antwerp.

BLOCKADE DECLARED

Japanese Ships Bottle Up German Leased Territory In China

Vice Admiral Sadakichi Kato, from his flagship, the battleship Suwo, sent a message to Governor Waldeck declaring a blockade of the leased territory of Kiauchau.

The German governor notified Willis R. Peck, American consul at Kiauchau, that he had twenty-four hours to leave if he so desired. Peck, however, elected to remain.

It is believed the heavy roads of Qiauchau after the summer rains will defer any Japanese attack for many days. All native shipping in Kiauchau bay has been suspended.

MAINTAINS NEUTRALITY

Spanish King Refuses to Be Drawn Into War on Germany

Efforts of a certain portion of Spanish political leaders to stir up sentiment that will force Spain to cast her lot with the allies against Germany are being sternly frowned on by King Alfonso.

The position of the government to date is that by maintaining the strictest neutrality at this time Spain will be in the better position to aid all concerned when mediation can be offered successfully.

AUSTRIANS DRIVEN BACK

Servia Reported to Be Making Most Vigorous Campaign

Official announcement was made at Nish, Servia, that following the four-day battle along the fifty-mile front at the Drina, in which the Austrian army of invasion was defeated by the Servians, the victorious Servians are now driving the enemy toward Loznitza. Every effort is being made by the Servian commander to cut off the Austrian retreat and to annihilate the invading army.

Since last reports 2000 additional prisoners have been taken. In addition, the Servians have taken fifty cannon and large quantities of stores. It is admitted the Servian losses have been enormous because of the necessity of carrying the Austrian positions by storm.

AUSTRO-JAPANESE BREACH

Bryan Notified That Diplomatic Relations Have Been Severed

The Austrian ambassador notified Secretary of State Bryan by wire from Manchester, Mass., that diplomatic relations between Austria-Hungary and Japan have been severed.

The United States embassy is acting diplomatically for Japan in Vienna, and Ambassador Guthrie at Tokio has been instructed by the state department to be prepared to act for Austria-Hungary.

EMBARRASSING PROTESTS

United States Government Placed In a Delicate Situation

As the lone great world power strictly neutral in the present war, the United States faces a peculiar situation and delicate duty as the recipient of protests from the various warring nations regarding alleged cruelties, barbarities, atrocities and violations of The Hague conventions and international law.

President Wilson and Secretary of State Bryan, according to authoritative information, feel this responsibility keenly. They are loath to act, however, until formal protests are in such shape that a general appeal to all countries involved to adhere strictly to recognized war practices can be made. Reluctance seemingly to "take sides" by apparently chiding any particular power for alleged infractions of martial etiquet is another factor.

Charges and counter charges of Germans, Belgians, French and British form a conflicting maze to be carefully considered by the United States. A general appeal—in general terms without citing specific acts—to all the warring nations will be issued by the United States government, it is believed.

EXPORT EMBARGO FAVORED

Gotham Police Force Is Increased to Prevent Food Frauds

New York, Aug. 28.—A rapidly growing sentiment all over the city in favor of an export embargo to keep American foodstuffs at home and thereby force down the war prices now prevalent was reported by the mayor's committee.

The committee announced that so many reports had been made to it, alleging that grocers and meat dealers who advertised low prices had skimped on the packages, that it had been decided to add 550 patrolmen and 100 plain clothes men from the police department to its force of inspectors.

GATES LEFT $7,500,000

Nearly All His Big Estate Goes to Mother and Widow

New York, Aug. 28.—Charles G. Gates left $7,500,000, according to the appraisal of his estate filed in the surrogate's office, and as this is reduced by debts only to $6,000,000 it is about twice as much as the son of John W. Gates was supposed to have left.

Only about $400,000 is used in specific bequests, and the remainder, about $2,750,000 each, is left to his mother and his widow.

South Windsor, Conn., Aug. 28.—Three persons were killed when an automobile plunged down a ten-foot embankment on the main highway. The dead are: Alice Sisson, Baltimore; Harold Cook, Glens Falls, N. Y., and James D. Orne, New York.

It is said the driver of the automobile, H. W. Mills of Hartford, was blinded by the headlight of a passing trolley car. Mills was unhurt.

SUNK OFF WEST COAST OF AFRICA

British Cruiser Sends Kaiser Wilhelm to Bottom

A BIG GERMAN AUXILIARY

Palatial Steamer Which For Several Years Was Holder of Transatlantic Records Had Been Interfering With Commerce Between England and Cape Colony— But Six Casualties

London, Aug. 28.—The Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse has been sunk off the west coast of Africa by the British cruiser Highflyer.

Winston Churchill, first lord of the admiralty, announced the sinking of the Kaiser Wilhelm in the British house of commons. He said:

"The admiralty has just received intelligence that the German merchant cruiser Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse of 14,000 tons has been sunk by H. M. S. Highflyer off the west coast of Africa."

This is the vessel which has been interfering with traffic between England and the Cape and is one of the very few German armed auxiliary cruisers that succeeded in getting to sea. The survivors were landed before the vessel sank. The Highflyer had one killed and five wounded.

The Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse was one of the palatial steamers of the North German Lloyd line, which was requisitioned for use as an auxiliary cruiser under the contract with the line. She was built in 1897, was 625 feet long, 66 feet beam and a gross tonnage of 14,350 tons. She had a speed of 23 knots and, according to the Naval Annal, her armament, which was stored for her use, consisted of eight 5.9-inch guns, four 4.7-inch and 14 machine guns. In addition she was to carry two 20-feet torpedo boats and 16 torpedoes.

The Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse was one of the last of the big ships to leave New York just before European hostilities began. She cost between $3,500,000 and $4,000,000. At the North German Lloyd offices it was said the loss would be borne by the German government.

The Kaiser Wilhelm was for several years the holder of transatlantic records. It was on this vessel that the late Mayor Gaynor of New York was shot as he was about to sail for Europe.

GERMANS LOSE CRUISER

Seventeen Are Killed, Twenty-Five Wounded and Eighty-Five Missing

The German admiralty issued the following:

"The light cruiser Magdeburg ran ashore in a fog on the island of Odensburg in the gulf of Finland. Owing to thick weather other German warships in the vicinity were unable to render assistance, and all efforts to float the vessel having failed, the captain decided to sacrifice his ship, as a superior Russian naval force was preparing to attack.

"Under a heavy fire from the Russian fleet a majority of the cruiser's crew were saved by the German torpedo boat V26. Seventeen men were killed, 25 wounded and 85, including the captain, are missing. The Magdeburg was blown up."

Twelve Lives Lost When Steamer and Trawler Go Down In North Sea

The Norwegian steamer Gottfried was blown up in the North sea by coming in contact with a floating mine. Eight members of her crew lost their lives.

Thirteen survivors of a Danish trawler which was sunk by striking a floating mine in the North sea have been landed at Shields. Four of the crew of the trawler lost their lives.

CORONATION OF NEW POPE

Cardinals Decide to Defer It Until European War Is Over

Rome, Aug. 28.—The coronation of the newly elected pope will not take place until after the European war is over. This was decided at a congregation of fifty cardinals in the Vatican.

The congregation also accepted the resignation of Prince Chihi as marshal of the conclave, and appointed Prince Campagnand, son of the hereditary marshal, as his successor. It is his duty to look to the safety of the visiting cardinals while in Rome.

RHODE ISLAND WOMAN TELLS OF HEALTH MIRACLE THAT SAVED HER

Mrs. Clare Shaw of Norwood Used Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy

Mrs. Clare Shaw of 21 Majestic Avenue, Norwood, R. I., was a sufferer from stomach and liver troubles for many years. She was treated both in the United States and abroad. She underwent an operation. Still she suffered.

Then she took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy and found swift relief. In a letter telling of her case she said:

"I received your sample treatment the day before Christmas and it saved my life, for I was almost gone. I had an inflammation that got right up in my throat and seemed to choke me. My neighbors say it is a miracle, as they know how I suffered. I am better now than I have been for 20 years."

This remarkable health story is like those told in thousands of other letters from users of this wonderful remedy in all parts of the country. The first dose convinces—no long treatment.

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of mucoid accretions and poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from ailments of the stomach, liver and bowels. Many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations and many are sure it has saved their lives.

Because of the remarkable success of this remedy there are many imitators, so be cautious. Be sure it's MAYR'S. Go to Clyde T. Cox drug store and ask about the wonderful results it has been accomplishing in cases they know about—or send to George H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, 154 156 Whiting St., Chicago, Ill., for free book on stomach ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you its wonderful results.

Building Business

Recently, a large store of very honored name became insolvent and passed into the hands of a new owner—an energetic young man.

Little was left to the business but the good name. There were strong stores all around it.

The first thing this merchant did was to emphasize in his advertising that he kept well-known, popular, ad vertised articles—mentioning those advertised in the local newspapers by the manufacturers.

He did not advertise them at a cut price. He merely let it be known that he carried them and would give good service.

That was a few months ago. Already the business has started to revive to an extent that competitors are sitting up and taking notice.

This man makes it a rule to mention every day in his advertising the name of some well-known, branded article that he carries—a name that stands for character in the mind of the public.

CAME BACK IN STEERAGE

Experiences of Dr. Granger on St. Louis

Dr Frank B. Granger of Randolph and Boston, and well known in Quincy who has just returned from England, gave an amusing account Thursday to the Globe of his experiences in the steerage of the liner St. Louis en route to New York. At the outbreak of war he was in Aberdeen, Scotland, where he had been attending the meeting of the British Medical Association. He was one of the fortunate ones who managed to get some gold for their express checks.

It was only after much exertion and trouble that Dr. Granger secured passage in the steerage. "We were assured" he said, "that we should have full run of the boat and that good food, bedding, etc, were to be provided; all of which later proved untrue."

Of conditions in England when he sailed he said:

"In London itself there were grim, determined crowds. There was no wild outburst of enthusiasm, but a feeling as if the life of the Nation were at stake, and that it was up to everybody to see the thing through. Everywhere recruits were being drilled, and a fine lot of young manhood they were. The only humorous side was the constant parade of young ragamuffins, tattered and dirty, with battered tin pans for drums, some holding aloft boards on which were scribbled in chalk many mottoes more or less appropriate.

"The Boy Scouts were in their element, acting as messenger, as guides and as sentries over bridges, railroad crossings and switches. Some of the London dailies, with the paper shortage confronting them, began to cut down the size of their sheets.

"Everywhere along the line to Liverpool were soldiers. All the important bridges, switches and stations were closely guarded. In some places intrenchments had been thrown up as if to guard against possible invasion."

In the steerage, Dr. Granger found much that an American would criticise. The food served the passengers he described as follows:

"Into a dirty, foul-smelling dining-room we tramped. Bread, fairly good, hard-tack, ancient bologna and tea were served. We were to have three meals a day; they consisted of breakfast at 6.30, lumpy, unsaulted porridge, pale, bluish condensed milk, coffee, which was undrinkable and a libel on its fair name, musty eggs or rather loud smelling meat. Dinner at 12, soup, greasy and resembling dishwater; generally the meat which we could not eat at breakfast; potatoes and vegetables cooked so as to be uneatable and uncooked rice with prunes or apple cores. Tea at 5, good tea, bread, bologna, jam, cheese and crackers; and at 8 p. m. there was alleged to be served more cheese and crackers.

"If the room was dirty the stewards were worse. The soup was brought in great tin receptacles for each table. After a passenger had finished, his dishes were wiped by a towel, which had been reposing on the floor, and they were ready for the next passenger or next meal. If you attempted to wipe your knife or spoon a great black smooch was left on the tablecloth.

"No wonder then that this, combined with the rest of the dirt and the smells, caused one man to post in the lost column on the bulletin board the following: 'Lost, one healthy appetite.'"

Oranges sold for a shilling apiece for the first three days, he said, and later the fruit was thrown away. Among the passengers were the French and German Ambassadors, travelling under assumed names. Germans on board told him that was a "holy war," and that it was Germany's mission to rule the world and stamp German civilization. German speech and even German religion upon it, and that because of this divine intent no obstacles such as treaties or plighted faith should be allowed to stand in its way.

Mrs. W. H. Doble of South street, left for New York on Thursday expecting the arrival of her daughter, Miss Clarice B. Doble, from England today. They will go directly to their summer residence at Harwich.

CARNIVAL OF THE T. R. Y. C.

The Town River Yacht Club Marine Carnival promises to be one of the events of the season. Arrangements are well in hand. The Midway will have some especially attractive features.

There will be dancing every evening and an opportunity to enjoy a moonlight sail each night.

Wednesday they will give one of their famous suppers from 5 to 8 P. M. Tickets can be had from members of the club. Buy your tickets early as the capacity of the clubhouse is limited, and there is sure to be a rush.

Great Climax.

"How was the play you saw last night?" "Pretty melodramatic. In the second act when the skulking villain descends upon Hickory farm and forecloses the mortgage on old Uncle Zeke's automobile there was hardly a dry eye in the house."

AMUSEMENTS

WILBUR THEATRE.

After six years of unexampled popularity in "The Man From Home," which piece ran originally for twenty-seven weeks in Boston alone, William Hodge is to make his bow before his host of New England admirers in a new stage character. This event will take place at the beautiful new Wilbur Theatre, Boston, on the evening of Labor Day, when this wonderfully successful young actor will be seen for the first time here as Jim Whitman in "The Road to Happiness." It is always a difficult problem to follow up an immense success with an equally appealing hit, but Mr. Hodge would seem to have in this new play one that bids fair to duplicate in every respect the famous triumph of the Booth Tarkington drama.

TREMONT TEMPLE.

At the Tremont Temple, Boston, beginning next Monday, August 31, there will be exhibited for the first time in this country the wonderful Biophone or singing motion pictures. This latest achievement is said to be the most wonderful invention ever conceived by the human mind. It was originally planned and perfected in Germany, where it scored a tremendous success. Those who have seen them agree that they will attain an even greater success in this country. The pictures show a number of European opera stars rendering selections from the best known operatic works. It is said that the voices uttered from the screen are the exact reproduction as when the singers appeared in the original photography and construction of this amazing mechanism. The exhibition is limited to a fortnight only and there will be two performances each day at a popular scale of prices.

SHUBERT THEATRE

With the opening of the regular season at the Shubert Theatre, Boston, on August 31st, comes "High Jinks," Arthur Hammerstein's musical jollity which remained for more than a year at the Casino Theatre, New York. The piece is the work of Otto Hauerbach and Rudolph Friml, and is presented by the Metropolitan cast, headed by Stella Mayhew, who is assisted by Eugene O'Rourke, Philip Riley, Emma Francis, Adele Ardsloy, Paul Porcasi, Dorothy Vernon, Ada Meade, Bernard Gorcoy, Elizabeth Wood, Dorothy Wolfo, Augustus Schultz and Alberta Devere. "High Jinks" takes its title from a celebrated perfume, the aroma of which is supposedly a cure for all ills. No matter how defective one's state "High Jinks" proves it balm and surcease, turning darkness into daylight and bringing happiness wherever its scent permeates.

The regular Wednesday and Saturday matinees will be given at the Shubert Theatre in addition to a special Labor Day matinee. The engagement of "High Jinks" in Boston is a limited one.

CASTLE SQUARE PLAYERS

Castle Square Theatre begins its ninth season on the afternoon of the 31st of August, and in "Over Night," Philip Bartholomae's rollicking honeymoon farce, manager John Craig has made a particularly happy choice for the opening attraction. There is trouble in "Over Night" but it all comes from a baggage fiend's maddening mistake and the consequent mixing up of two honeymoon teams. The combined resources of the Craig Players have to be employed in unraveling the tangle, so the happy ending is never very far out of sight. It is good news to Castle Square patrons that John Craig and Mary Young are to be very constant players this season. Both are in the cast of the 31st. Miss Young is particularly well suited as the spoony and trustful little wife of big "Percy Darling" taken by William P. Carleton. Mr. Craig himself is to play "Al Rivers" and in "Richard Kettle" part taken last season by Donald Meek is to appear a very gratifying result of managerial enterprise during the summer in the person of Dudley Hawley, the versatile and handsome young actor, who is known far and wide as the creator of "The Country Boy." Other favorites new and old, who are in the bill, include Al Roberts, Morrill Morrison, Robert Capron, George Ernst, Mabel Colcord, Ellen Cicrum and Jean Fuller.

MAJESTIC THEATRE

Before one of the largest audiences ever assembled in the Majestic Theatre, Philip Bartholomae's three-act musical comedy was given its Boston Premier last Tuesday night and scored an emphatic success, the players being called before the curtain repeatedly in response to the enthusiastic applause.

"The Model Maid" offers several distinct departures from anything in the musical comedy line ever produced in Boston. Not only is it the first production of its kind to be offered without the time-worn, over-worked front row of chorus girls, but in the actual staging of the play, Mr. Bartholomae has introduced many unusual novelties. He brings his players to the stage by way of a spiral staircase from the orchestra pit, the effect being at once startling and picturesque. When the various scenes are over, the players leave by the same route, disappearing under the stage. Another novelty occurs in the last act when several handsome statues that adorn the walls of the grand ball room come to life and engage in the dance of the Pierrots and Pierrettes in a magnificent ensemble.

During the engagement of "The Model Maid" there will be matinees Wednesdays and Saturdays.

PLYMOUTH THEATRE.

Boston is to begin its theatrical season with "Along Came Ruth," a comedy that seems to have been built to make New England laugh. It made Broadway shake with laughter all last winter during its run at the Gaiety Theatre, New York. Now it comes to the Plymouth Theatre, Boston for a run opening there Monday, August 31.

The scenes of the comedy are laid in Oldport, Maine, a little shipping city, that lost its grip when the big ports along the coast grabbed the trans-Atlantic trade. Then "Along Came Ruth" and the town took on a new lease of life. Ruth is an inspiring girl who inoculates the town with her own spirit of enterprise.

The play begins in Israel Putnam Hubbard's "furniture emporium" which is really an old curiosity shop. Ruth has her way to make in the world. She has spent her small fortune in getting a practical education in the Normal School, and now she walks into Israel's "emporium" looking for a job. Israel knows business can't be made any worse, so he takes her on. From that moment his fortunes rise.

In Ruth's encounters with the characters of the town, Holman Day, the author of "Along Came Ruth," has shown types familiar to New Englanders in many amusing situations. Israel himself is one of the most original and diverting stage creations that has been discovered in years. He is played by James H. Bradbury with all the inimitable drollness which always marks Mr. Bradbury's work. Cap'n Nathan Hedge, played by F. J. McCarthy, remembered for his contributions to the fun of "The Merry Widow," and other successes, is a central figure. And Edgar Nelson, once the fat soda dispenser in "The Fortune Hunter," now has the character of Oscar, the bewildered clerk who is hopelessly entangled in Ruth's meshes.

One of the most fascinating sides to "Along Came Ruth" is the fun of watching the town grow from act to act, and seeing the characters blossom out as prosperity hits them. For a study of human nature in its funniest and happiest aspects, "Along Came Ruth" is in a class by itself. Reports from theatre-goers who have seen the comedy in New York have roused the interest of Bostonians in the play and its career at the Plymouth Theatre promises to be one of the notable theatrical events of recent years.

BOSTON THEATRE.

The sensational star stock season of the Majestic Players will be continued at the Boston Theatre which will be the permanent home of this now famous organization. For the grand opening Monday Mr. Leahy announces a most notable dramatic offering the best beloved of all American stars, Dustin Farnum in the play which first brought him into prominence, "The Virginian." There will be matinees every day beginning Monday and the engagement will be for one week only. Mr. Farnum has never before been presented at popular prices either in Boston or in any other city, so great pressure was brought to bear on him to induce him to accept the engagement with a salary the size of which has never been paid to any dramatic star otuside of Sarah Bernhardt, Richard Mansfield, Maude Adams and George M. Cohan. It even approaches some of the salaries paid to such phenomenal drawing cards as Harry Lauder and the famous grand opera song birds.

The scenic equipment for the staging of "The Virginian" will be in keeping with the magnitude of the star and the piece. It will be built especially for this engagement, and patterned exactly after the original production. The same may be said of the properties. Mr. Farnum will be supported by the full strength of the Majestic Players, universally considered the finest resident stock company Boston has known since the old Boston Museum days. The subscription lists are open.

COURT NEWS

The complaint against Walter Desmond of Miller street was dismissed in the District court this morning on payment of $7 costs. Desmond was charged with assaulting Nicholas Carter of Braintree in a South Braintree factory several weeks ago during an argument over a box of cigarettes. The police alleged at the time they made the complaint that Desmond hit Carter on the jaw with such force the inside of his mouth was cut by a broken tooth. When blood poisoning developed he was placed under arrest and after arraignment in court he was admitted to bail. Carter has since recovered and has acknowledged satisfaction.

PUBLIC CONFIDENCE

As Seen by the General

Public confidence is the greatest asset that any house of business can possess. It is more to be desired than the ability to make money.

There are degrees of public confidence. It may be zero, a minus quantity, or a plus quantity. At zero no confidence exists—nobody is for or against such a house. But this condition can exist only where the house or its goods are unknown, and as soon as the public has given the house a trial it will pass judgment, and public confidence will then be expressed by a plus or minus sign, according to the approval or disapproval of the public as to the goods and policies of the house. If the goods are not as represented, or if the policies are not in accordance with the ethics of good business, public confidence will drop to a minus quantity and the people will transact business with its competitors whose business ideals are on a higher and more satisfactory plane. If the goods are satisfactory, and if the policies of the house are right, the people will continue to do business with that house and will help to build it up.

The plus sign of public confidence is always attached to the name of a house of business that considers service to its customers, absolute integrity with reference to its goods, and high ideals in its business policies, as being of greater consequence than the mere earning of dividends. A well satisfied community of customers is the key to the success of any house of business, and, having established this, dividends will be sure to follow.

MR. McCALL'S ESCAPE.

The Herald says editorially:

Mr. Samuel W. McCall, the Republican candidate for Governor, must be impressed with the uncertainties of life by his experiences on Thursday at Weymouth. The man who was sitting beside him in an automobile was fatally injured, and died a few hours afterward. Mr. McCall escaped with slight bruises. Probably had their positions on the seat been reversed the results would have been reversed. In some respects the accident recalls that at Pittsfield a few years ago when a secret service man attending President Roosevelt was killed, while he escaped with slight injuries. Mr. Gale whose life was lost yesterday, was one of the community's sterling citizens, and can ill be spared.

We are not yet clear as to the responsibility of the chauffeur who was operating this car. But we have frequently observed the recklessness with which the man at the wheel splurges around when carrying political candidates; he seems to think this gives him a license to run over everybody else in the community. During the municipal campaign there were several such accidents, one of them proving pretty serious.

Julius Caesar's remark to the timid shipmaster: "Why fear, you are carrying Caesar?" should have no counterpart in the relations of a candidate for office to the youth at the wheel. And we are very sure that Mr. McCall is the last man in the community who wants to be driven at breakneck speed, or to imperil in the slightest degree the safety of anyone on the highway.

BRAINTREE W. R. C. OUTING.

Mrs. Florence Litchfield was the hostess at the outing held by the Woman's Relief Corps on Wednesday last. Bright sunny skies and a cool refreshing breeze left nothing to be desired to make the day favorable for an outing.

Twenty-six members, with several invited guests left on the 9.15 electric arriving at the Litchfield's cottage at Houghs Neck about 10.30. Arrangements had been made the previous day and everything was in readiness for a good time.

At 12.30 an excellent dinner of clam chowder with all the fixings, pies, cake, coffee and a variety of fruits was served. The pleasant ride and the cool sea breeze had given to everyone a good appetite and all enjoyed the bountiful supply of good things set before them.

At the close of the dinner, Mrs. Litchfield was given a hearty vote of thanks for her hospitality, she having entertained the Corps on previous occasions. The ladies, wishing to express their thanks in a more substantial manner than by words, presented her with some money with which to purchase for her cottage whatever she saw fit.

A brief entertainment was then enjoyed, after which some took pleasant strolls along the waters edge, while others engaged in playing games or sitting out to get the benefit of the bright sun and the bracing air.

Supper was served at six o'clock after which some returned to their homes, while others spent the evening there. The affair was certainly an unqualified success in every way and much credit is due Mrs. Litchfield for her untiring efforts to make the occasion enjoyable and one long to be remembered.

The events of the afternoon were under the personal direction of Louis F. LaRose of the Y. M. C. A., who has been in charge of the playgrounds of the city the past season. Assisting him was Miss Ruth Bass and Alexander Robertson who had charge of the Ward Two playground, and Miss Florence Arnold, Miss Ethel Virginia Cleaves and Frank A. Tirrell, Jr., of the Ward Three grounds.

Interest was drawn from the events about 4 o'clock, when a well known young Jewish resident of South Quincy, while leaving the field, was attacked by a group of other South Quincy boys, most of them younger than 11 years. The older boy was forced to defend himself from the sudden assault, and was acquitting himself creditably when several policemen ran into the centre of the ring and dispersed the combatants. The crowd then moved toward Hancock street where hostilities would have been resumed if the officers had not followed along.

Otherwise nothing occurred to mar the sensibilities of the parents, although several had more or less difficulty dodging the floss of cat nine tails which was released in handfuls over the heads of the spectators by the boys who raided a nearby swamp.

The summary of the events:

FLEE BEFORE RUSSIAN ARMY

Germans Continue to Retreat In East Prussia

GARRISONS BOTTLED UP

Their Reduction Assured Whenever Ordered by Russian General Staff, According to St. Petersburg Report —Plans to Attack German Capital Within Three Weeks

London, Aug. 28.—It is officially announced at St. Petersburg that the Russian advance is proceeding in Prussia with irresistible force. The Germans have retreated to Osterode, a town of East Prussia, 100 miles west of Gumbinnen.

That the plans of the Russian army contemplate an attack on Berlin within three weeks is officially admitted. At the same time it is stated that not only has the Russian mobilization been completed, but that there are now 8,000,000 men under arms.

The troops have been divided into four armies of 2,000,000 men each. These armies are being placed in the field from the inland mobilization centres to operate one behind the other, the rearward one filling the gaps in the ranks of the one in front after each general engagement.

The war office also declares that its commissariat is excellent. The arrangements for the feeding of the army are so complete, it is stated, that there will be no necessity of "living off the country."

Because of the enormous armies that will be in the field it is reported to be the general plan of the Russian offensive not to try to take the German chain of main forts by storm. Instead they will attempt to isolate each of them, leaving a large enough force at every point to keep the garrisons bottled up and also to prevent any attacks on their flanks or their lines of communication.

The main Russian advance, it is expected, will approach Posen from the south, crossing the south bend of the Warta river, some miles from the Russian frontier, and then move against Posen northwest between the Oder and Warta rivers.

That the German defense of its territory does not contemplate a pitched battle except on ground selected by the German staff itself is now considered certain. Reports from the front indicate the Germans are making no definite stand. They are slowly retreating before the Russian advance, inflicting all of the damage possible as they move back on their main line of fortifications.

The Russian left and centre armies, operating in force and along lines previously laid down, have bottled up the German garrisons of the eastern Prussian forts, and their reduction is assured whenever the general staff orders it.

Stories of supplies being poisoned by the Germans and left behind to be eaten by the Russian troops are current in St. Petersburg. Many Russians are reported to have died as the result of eating the commissary supplies taken at Gumbinnen, Insterburg and Eydtkuhnen, and orders have been issued that hereafter all such supplies taken shall immediately be burned.

That the Germans will make a definite stand long before the defenses of the Oder are reached is believed certain. The general staff has reports of heavy Austrian reinforcements being detached from the Servian border and hurried north into Prussian territory. It is believed also that the Germans have been strongly reinforced by the reserve army just mobilized.

Discussing the Russian movements to date, high Russian officers say the Germans were completely surprised. They had refused to believe the Russian mobilization plans had been perfected or that the army staff had learned anything of the reverses in Manchuria. The Russians took great advantage of this. The cavalry and mounted infantry were utilized in the initial movements, which were executed so expeditiously that the Germans were unable to concentrate, and their forces, scattered over wide stretches of territory, were overwhelmed.

After the capture of Gumbinnen and Insterburg, the line which was strongest, the Angerburg line, was taken without fighting.

The swift Russian movement, together with the crossing of the river Angerapp and the successful battle northward toward Neidenburg, seals the fate of the central fortifications. Fort Boyen is now surrounded on all sides and passage through East Prussia is consequently quite open.

Eternal Feminine.

Margaret, aged seven years, was playing housekeeper. As she pretended to wipe the perspiration from her face she turned from the toy washboard upon which was rinsing out a handkerchief, and, addressing her brother, a year younger, said: "There you are sitting at your ease and me breaking my bones doing your washing."

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

The train had stopped again, and Wickham, rubbing the moisture off the window with the dingy curtain, looked out into the night.

Wickham shuddered and drew back into the shabby comfort of his second class carriage.

"Karlsruhe, probably," he thought as the noise of banging doors announced a speedy departure.

It was too dark to read. Wrapping his rug well about his legs, he leaned back again and closed his eyes. Then just as the train started the door of his compartment was opened, the light from a lantern flashed across him, and a woman, vigorously helped forward, stumbled into the place opposite him, and a worn bag was dumped by a porter directly on his foot. As if that were not enough, the owner paid no attention to his discomfort, but sat immovable in her place.

Wickham was annoyed. He disliked being the only other person in a compartment with a woman, and this one, judging from the shabbiness of her wet brown skirt and the cotton gloves on her limply folded hands, was utterly lacking in even the small charm necessary to reconcile a cross man to the bore of opening and closing windows and arranging another's hand luggage.

Ignoring the small bag at his feet, he watched the blurred lights of the city until they were swallowed up in the darkness. Then, closing his eyes again, he tried to find his way back to the comfortable half sleep that had soothed him since he left Mannheim.

But he could not sleep. The presence of his neighbor, still as she sat, made him nervous.

Lifting the bag, he put it on the seat beside her, but still she did not move. And then as the train rushed round a sharp curve she fell helplessly sideways. Her hat, crushed into the angle of the head rest, fell back and revealed her face in the feeble light.

"Good heavens!" said Wickham. The girl—for she was not more than four or five and twenty—lay silent and still.

II.

Wickham stared at her for a few seconds. Then, digging his flask out of his bag, he sat down by her, balanced her limp body as well as he could in the wanton jerkiness of the train and poured a few drops of the fluid into her mouth.

It seemed hours before a little color came back into the pale face and the sunken eyes opened.

"Danke schoen," she said presently, drawing away from him. "Forgive me."

"Good heavens, I have nothing to forgive," he answered with a vehemence that he vaguely recognized as quite uncalled for. "If I hadn't been a brute I'd have seen at once that you were ill."

"Oh, I wasn't ill! I wonder whether, as you have been so kind, you would let me have a little more. Most of what you gave me went—outside."

"Why, you are English!" Wickham exclaimed, handing her the flask. "How strange! You'd better drink out of the flask, the train shakes so."

"Thanks. Yes, I am English," she said, while he watched a wave of brilliant color sweep up her thin cheeks. Then, to his disappointment, she closed her eyes, and he dared not speak again.

Her hands, bare now of the disfiguring gloves, lay loosely as before, and he saw that, though painfully thin, they were white and slim.

Then she opened her eyes.

"Don't be frightened," she said, trying to smile, "but I am dreadfully afraid I am going to—to do it again."

"Oh, for heaven's sake, my dear young lady, don't! Take some more brandy."

She waved the flask away. "No, no! I"— Then suddenly she added, speaking very fast: "The truth is I am not ill; I am only hungry. If you happen to have"—

III.

Catching the look in her face as she tasted the meat in the sandwich he thrust into her hands, he fled to the far end of the compartment and stood with his face to the wet window, positively sick with pity.

When she called he found her folding the paper about the remaining sandwiches. "I ate two," she said, with a little shamed laugh, "and—shan't try to thank you. I suppose you never were hungry?"

"No, I was never hungry," he returned, feeling himself an unmitigated brute. "I was never hungry in my life."

"Your people are dead?" he went on. The train was drawing into the Stuttgart station, and he saw in the electric light the half defiant expression of her face as she answered.

"My father is alive," she said.

"Then I'd like to punch your father's head."

"Yes? My father is the Duke of Tarbolton."

"The Duke!"—

"The Duke of Tarbolton. Have you ever heard of the Tarbolton vein. Well, there it is."

She held out her left hand and by some slow twist of the muscles moved a big vein on the back of it nearly an inch out of its place and back again.

Wickham had heard of the family peculiarity and nodded. "Extraordinary!" he said perfunctorily. "But"—

"Oh, my mother wasn't a duchess. Don't be overwhelmed. She was a farmer's daughter, and she believed in him."

"Scoundrel!"

The duke's daughter shook her head impartially.

"He wasn't so bad. He was very young, and—he cared for her. He had me educated, and mother lived in a house of his till she died. I'm not complaining at all."

"And what are you doing over here?"

"Governessing—nursery, you know. A very nice family, but I couldn't stand the governess of the elder children. She was too arbitrary, possibly, to suit my ducal blood."

The bitterness that suddenly came to her voice stung Wickham unreasonably.

"So you left?" he went on at length, with an effort.

"Yes. I got a place at Frankfort. They were very kind to me, but one of the sons began making love to me"—

"And then"—

"And then I went to Darmstadt to answer an advertisement. They wouldn't take me, so I spent the last of my money on a ticket to Munich. The Ferrises are there—my first family—and perhaps they'll take me back."

"If they don't, what will you do?"

"Oh, I don't know. I will have to plan to find another position."

"Why not allow me to lend you some money till you find one?"

The look that flashed over her face and her emphatic but courteous refusal showed him how useless it would be to pursue the subject.

IV.

At Ulm Wickham got out and secured some bread and sausage sandwiches and coffee.

When he went back to the compartment, balancing her cup carefully, he found her awake, her eyes heavy, one cheek wrinkled with sleep.

"Oh, how good of you!"

As she took the cup from him her hand touched his, and they both started.

"How soon do we reach Munich?" she asked hastily.

"Not until 7 something. Are you so impatient to get rid of me?"

"I didn't mean that. You have been so good."

He shook his head. "No, not good. But you are so lonely, and I too"—

"Are you lonely?"

"I have been lonely all my life, but—I have never been so lonely as I shall be when you have gone."

She looked at him thoughtfully. "Isn't it strange? We have known each other only a few hours"—

Wickham's heart gave a leap at what she did not add. "That makes no difference, does it?" he asked.

"I suppose not."

"My name is Robert Wickham. What is yours?"

"Mine is Percy Lane."

"Ah!"

"Yes; she named me for him."

"It is a sweet name—Percy. I draw for some of the illustrated papers, not fancy pictures, but scenes and things they need to illustrate articles."

"'Our Special Artist!'"

"Yes. I am no genius, but I work carefully and am tolerably well paid. I was ill in the summer and have been having a holiday. I am thirty-two years old."

The girl watched him dreamily. "And I am five and twenty."

"If—the Ferrises take you back you will stay in Munich?"

She shook her head. "No. They are going to Italy for the winter. I am sorry."

Wickham had forgotten his determination to be wise and, leaning over, laid his hand in hers. "Would you like to see me again?"

"Yes. Oh, yes! You have been so kind."

"Do you like me a little?"

"Yes."

"Look at me," he went on a trifle breathlessly. "I like you, Percy, much more than a little. Do you think you could ever like me as I do you?"

"Oh," she said, "please don't!"

Then she drew the shabby curtain before her face and pretended to look out into the breaking day. Wickham cursed his own idiocy, and an hour passed before either of them spoke again.

Then he said rather roughly: "Miss Lane, we are almost there, and you will need all your strength. Eat the other sandwich."

She obeyed in silence.

"Do you know where the Ferrises are stopping?"

She shook her head. "No; I only saw their arrival announced in a paper."

She tugged at the window as she spoke, and it slammed down, letting in a rush of cold morning air.

Wickham looked at the glint of the early sun on her straight, thick hair for a moment and then, pouncing on her suddenly, held her close for a moment and kissed her.

"What nonsense!" he cried jubilantly. "I need you, and you need me. I love you, and you are going to love me. The sun's coming up, and tomorrow we'll be wed in London, you and I, dear!"

She tried to protest, but she couldn't. The truth and the joy in his voice overpowered her. He kissed her again as the train rumbled into the dark Central Bahnhof, and then, very tenderly, he helped her out into the cold, dingy day. And neither of them saw that it was cold and dingy.

For the Children

Lined up, ready for a trial of speed, in East River park, New York city, are these three little barebacked boys. Their lack of clothes is not so much because they have no shirts as because they had just emerged from a swim when the idea of a foot race was proposed. So they determined to make the trial without the impediment of useless apparel. That was when the camera man caught them. Beside them stood a policeman, who cannot be seen in the picture, and he gave the word "Go." It was a short race and quickly over, and doubtless the speediest lad won. But of that the photographer has no record. They all were far ahead of him at the finish line.

Story of the Colors.

Nearly every one thinks that red is a lucky color. It means love, courage and victory. The red stripes in our flag mean bravery.

The god Thor chose it for his color and sent red streaks of lightning through black clouds to show that he was more powerful than the darkness.

Green is the color of the early spring. Some people call it a magic color because they think it is the color of the fairies, who do not like people to wear it. Green is the national color of the Irish, who admire it very much, but the Scotch do not like to wear it because they think it brings bad luck.

Yellow is the sign of the sun because it is bright and pure. The Chinese hold it sacred and use it for charms against disease. In Egypt it is the color of mourning and death because the leaves get yellow before they fall from the trees.

Blue is the color of the clear sky, the water and the ocean. With the druids it was a holy color. It is the sign of affection and truth. The blue in our flag stands for truth.

Black is absence of color, and some say white is a combination of all colors.

Riddles.

Why is a man just imprisoned like a boat full of water? Because he requires bailing out.

Why is a bald head like heaven? Because it is a bright and shining spot and there's no parting there.

What constitutes a genuine frontier costume? The outskirts of civilization.

Why are quinine and gentian like Germans? Because they are two tonics (Teutonics).

Why is my cup of tea stronger than yours? Because it is all my tea (almighty).

What is that which is invisible yet never out of sight? The letter S.

Why is a comprehensive action an affectionate one? Because it embraces everything.

If a man saw his sister fall into a well, why could he not rescue her? Because he could not be a brother and assist her too.

Which are the two most disagreeable letters if you get too much of them? K N (cayenne).

Birds In the Bible.

There are more than forty species of birds spoken of in the Bible. We recall the frequent references to doves, several kinds of them being mentioned. David was hunted as "a partridge in the mountains;" he was "like a pelican in the wilderness;" so forlorn did he feel. Again, "I am as a sparrow alone on a housetop;" "As for the stork, the fir tree is her home." Who will not recall the words "wings of the morning," "wings of a dove," "wings of the wind," "wings of the Almighty?"

The Old Woman.

There was an old woman who lived in a hat.
She had a bulldog and a fat tabby cat;
She gave them some broth and a piece of rye bread
And patted them both and sent them to bed.

NEWSY BRIEFS

Frank Pollock has sold his farm at East Weymouth and is now located at 111 Phillips streets, Wollaston Park.

Miss Eba Luddengard of Deldorf street is spending two weeks with her sister in Swampscott.

Much sympathy is being expressed for Mrs. McTear of Beach street in the loss of her little boy and the serious sickness of an older girl, Barbara.

The Quincy police auto and the Quincy City Hospital are much in use by the neighboring towns of Weymouth, Braintree and Milton.

The Atlantic Improvement Association will hold a Field Day at Squantum, on Saturday afternoon of this week at Carlson's field, which is reached by trolley from Atlantic station. This event will be of considerable local interest.

Mrs. Daniel Miller of Rawson road held a very successful sewing meeting of the Woman's Guild of St. Chrysostom's church on Wednesday, twenty-four being present. The next all-day meeting will be held with Mrs. Parlee on Wednesday, September 2 at her new home in Montclair.

Mrs J. L. Mock of Randlett street, Wollaston Park, will give a demonstration on Saturday at the market of Johnson Bros. of her new product known as "Le Romo Gingered Fruit." The European war has seriously crippled her husband's business so that she has turned to profit the making of this article which so many of her friends have praised.

MAD DOGS IN WEYMOUTH.

It is reported by Dr. Abele that there have been two cases of rabies or mad doys in Weymouth. One case resulted from the bite of the other. Last week there was a case in Braintree. Owing to the nearness of these cases, he advises that Quincy dog owners keep their dogs from roaming the streets and out of reach of stray dogs.

Merciful Wife.

A Cincinnati man who attempted to dictate what his wife should wear is now defendant in a divorce suit. It is a wonder he isn't the central attraction in a jam-up funeral.—Houston Post.

CITY LABORER IS KILLED

His First Day at Work at Gravel Pit

One man instantly killed and the lives of ten others were endangered by six tons of gravel which slid off the top of the pit at Bellevue Park this morning. All were employed by the city.

The men were at work at the bottom of an 18 foot embankment, when without warning the top loosened and at terrific speed slid off the edge.

Ralphaello Santoyoputo, 62 years of age, of 138 Canal street, was buried beneath the heavy dirt before he could escape. Thomas Cahill, the foreman was knocked to the ground when he attempted to pull Santoyoputo from his perilous position. All the others escaped without injury.

The suddenness of the slide dazed the men for an instant, and they then commenced to dig out the buried workman. For 15 minutes they worked with all possible speed. When they uncovered the body of the workman he was laying face downward, with his arms over his head, under nearly four feet of heavy gravel.

Dr. Johnson and Dr. Bartlett who responded to an emergency call made an immediate examination. They found life extinct. The forehead of Santoyoputo was badly bruised and it is thought that his body is badly crushed.

He was removed to the undertaking rooms of John Hall where an autopsy will be performed today.

Santoyoputo was formerly employed by the Citizens Gas Light Co. and several weeks ago was laid off. Thursday he applied for a job at the gravel pit and was told to come to work in the morning. He met with his accident before the timekeeper had visited the pit and secured his name, and for several hours he lay in the morgue unidentified.

Inquiries at the office of the Gas company resulted in William B. Nichols, general manager sending one of his Italian foremen to the morgue. He recognized the man, but failed to recall his last name. He located his son Leonardo later and the identification was completed shortly before noon.

Santoyoputo was not reputed to have been a wealthy man, but an examination of his clothing revealed $930 in a small wallet attached to the right leg.

Medical Examiner Jones said this afternoon that while he found the deceased had a lacerated forehead wound death was probably due to asphyxiation.

cies in the case of death or otherwise. As the charter now is, a special election is necessary, causing an expense of $400 for a ward councilman and an expense of $3,000 for a Mayor or Councilman-at-large.

President Whiton said that he had been requested by citizens of all wards to be a candidate for Mayor, but the reason he had declined was because he could not afford to neglect his business for a one year office at a salary of $2,500.

Levi L. Turner in furthering his argument in favor of party elimination in municipal affairs, said that to put a party designation on a candidate for municipal office was to put a premium on ignorance.

Ex-Mayor John O. Hall's statement that the trouble is not with our charter, but with its administration, will doubtless find many supporters throughout the city. He claimed that the charter was all right, and that if it was lived up to strictly there would be no cause for complaint.

His statement however, that it was absolutely untrue that a man must begin to lay his wires for re-election before he is inaugurated, will not be generally accepted, or that it was not necessary to play politics, or that a man can be in politics and not be a politician.

CANDIDATE WALL AT WOLLASTON

A party of 200 gathered at Brasee's hall, Wollaston, Thursday evening at a meeting held in the interest of James E. Wall, by the "Taxpayers' association." Edward J. Fegan was elected as chairman and speeches were made by James E. Wall, the candidate for Mayor, Councilman Carlson, Temple A. Winsloe and others. Music during the evening was furnished by Bloom's orchestra, and there was singing by Sheriff William McDevitt of Boston. Refreshments were served.

ARRESTED FOR SPITE

Had Volunteered to Help Woman in Trouble

An automobile was stopped in City Square Thursday evening by Patrolman Charles Olson, acting on the advice of the Cohasset police and John J. Butler, the chauffeur, was arrested on a charge of operating the car without a license. Mrs. Margaret Kelly of 821 Beacon street, who was in the machine later bailed him out.

Mrs. Kelly said she went to Nantasket in the morning, and when she started to return to Boston discovered her chauffeur was drunk. When reprimanded he refused to drive the car. Butler, who was nearby overheard the conversation and offered to drive her to Boston.

The other chauffeur, apparently piqued, then notified the Cohasset police that the man was operating without a license. He furnished the registry number of the machine, but it passed through Cohasset before it could be stopped.

Word was sent to Quincy police headquarters and five minutes after, Patrolman Olson had been given the information he stopped the machine and made the arrest.

Butler gave his address as 8 Atherton street, Brockton, and when arraigned in court this morning, Associate Justice Louis A. Cook, after hearing the evidence, said it was a technical violation and placed the case on file on payment of $3 costs.

Why Flowers Flash.

The strange phenomenon exhibited by some red flowers of seeming to flash in the twilight, but only when the flower comes sideways into the range of vision, is explained by Professor F. A. W. Thomas. He says twilight makes red seems brighter and green duller than in full daylight. As the image of the red flower moves from the peripheral part of the retina, where the rods are red blind, to the fovea the red is perceived more vividly than before, and this image coincides with the purkinje after image of the surroundings, giving the impression of a flash.

Dogs and Moslems.

Dogs in Mohammedan countries have even more freedom than with us, not because Mohammedans love them more, but because it is impious to kill or molest an animal, however mean, that Allah lets live. But there is no bitterer insult than to call a Moslem a dog. "The Swiss Family Robinson" is not admitted at the Turkish custom house because it tells about a dog named Turk.

ALL NIGHT MEETING

Street Railway Men Act on New Agreement

The local conductors and motormen of the Quincy division of the Bay State Street Ry. Co., held an all night meeting in Electa hall last evening.

The new agreement was presented by Fred F. Fay, State organizer; Frank Crowley, president of the State Board and Lowell division, and Patrick J. Sheehan of Brockton, of the general executive board.

The agreement governing present working conditions expires on Oct. 1. It is understood the new one asks for a substantial increase and extends its provisions to every branch of the road instead of the actual operation of cars.

The first meeting adjourned about 11 o'clock, and the second was called to order at 12.30 A. M.

TO BOWL IN LOWELL.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Poehler of Rock Island have been invited to give an exhibition of small ball rolling at the grand opening of the new Kittredge alleys in Lowell next week. Mrs. Poehler returned this week from Yarmouth N. S. and is now in the pink of condition. If she accepts she will be pitted against one of the strongest women bowlers in the state and a woman who coverts the three string record now held by Mrs. Poehler. Her husband, who is the worlds champion, may have Martell as his opponent. Martell is the premier bowler in the Lowell section of the state.

GOVERNMENT STEAMSHIPS

Representative Moss Favors a Naval Auxiliary

Hearings were begun in Washington Friday, by the House merchant marine committee on the administration bill for a government controlled line of steamships. Secretary McAdoo and Representative Underwood were unable to appear as scheduled and the committee will hear them today.

Representative Moss of West Virginia urged the committee to report his bill proposing an appropriation of $40,000,000 for the purchase of naval auxiliaries, to be operated by the navy department and manned as commercial vessels. He insisted it would be preferable to have government ownership outright instead of authorizing the government to take the majority stock in a private corporation, as proposed by the administration bill.

LADIES TENNIS TOURNAMENT.

The annual ladies handicap tennis tournament under the auspices of the Quincy Tennis club will open at 10 o'clock Monday morning. It is expected that there will be good list of entries for the tournament, but as members have until the time of the starting of the tournament to enter, and many defer until the last minute, no list of entries is possible at the present time.

CITY COUNCIL TO HOLD REGULAR

Supplementary Budget and Election Officers

The first regular meeting of the City Council since July 6, has been called for Monday evening, the main reason is because of the supplementary budget now pending, and to receive a communication from the School Committee relative to the purchase of a site for a school building in the Bigelow Park district.

The appointment of election officers which was forwarded to the special meeting of the council last Monday evening, will also come up for confirmation.

As this is a regular meeting, any business may come up, although aside from the items mentioned above there is nothing pressing.

The chances are that a communication may be received from the School Committee via the Mayor asking for an additional appropriation of $2,000 for instruction. Should the Mayor recommend a supplementary budget for this sum it will mean that the announcement of the tax rate will be further delayed.

According to general belief, however the putting off of the tax rate can not be delayed much longer. The city is sadly in need of the revenue that might be received from taxes.

UNDER AMERICAN FLAG.

The first ship to be registered under the American flag under the provision of the recently enacted registry law is the Moldegaard, built in Norway in 1906, and owned by the Ocean Freight line of New York. The papers of registry were signed Friday in the New York custom house by the officers of the line and the port officials. The Moldegaard is 320 feet long, of 2852 tons burden, and is officered by Americans, as is required by the new law.

Candidate McCall However Will Be Out Monday

Samuel W. McCall, Republican candidate for Governor, remained at his home in Winchester Friday, suffering from the shock received in Thursday's auto crash at Weymouth, which caused the death of his friend, John A. Gale of Brookline. Mr. McCall was in the auto with Gale at the time of the accident.

The Republican candidate is under the care of a physician. His campaign manager, former Representative Barnes of Mansfield, said today, however, that McCall had sustained no serious shock, either physically or mentally, and will be at his Boston office Monday to resume campaign activities. Mr. McCall will further carry out his intention to assist the Maine Republicans in their campaign, and will leave for Maine on Thursday to campaign in that state for several days.

POLITICIANS AT BARN DANCE

The folks from South Boston and down Dorchester way met at the annual barn Dance at Houghs Neck Friday night. Several clubs made the trip in trim looking machines, all slicked up for the occasion.

The gathering as always, was a political affair, and among those present were Thomas E. Fahey, candidate for the Democratic nomination to congress from the 11th district, and John J. Lydon of South Boston who wants to return to the House of Representatives. "Jimmy" Galvin, congressman of many of the boys, couldn't be there to lead the grand march so they didn't have any. "Jim" had to go to Washington to attend to duties or be arrested and taken down.

Fred Harris took charge of the floor and Frank Grant helped most of the evening. The others who also aided were William O'Brien, Frank Hauston, Jack Connor and Webb McDonald.

John Sullivan of the Jamaica Plain club sang several songs and quartette selections were rendered by the "Rawbones."

Edward J. Powers, who is a candidate for Mayor on an Independent ticket, in a short speech promised to make a clean sweep of City Hall in the event of his election. He spoke of the possibility of manufacturing growing here under the proper guidance, and of its ultimate benefit to the residents through an increase in population and valuation. It was the first speech the candidate has delivered since entering the race last spring. He was given respectful attention, most of those present being voters of places other than Quincy.

It is rumored that on occasions like this candidates for office are requested to pay $5 or $10 for the privilege of speaking.

MR. M'CALL'S ESCAPE.

The narrow escape of ex-Congressman McCall from serious injury, if not from death, startled his friends, yesterday, when the news of the accident was made public in a message from Weymouth. The loss of Mr. Gale will be generally regretted, as he had a host of friends. The escape of Mr. McCall seems to have been almost miraculous. The catastrophe will revive the agitations for stringent rules, governing the use of motor vehicles on the highways. That the motor vehicle has proven itself one of the necessities of modern civilization; is practically a self evident condition. It is impossible to banish motor propelled carriages from our roads and streets. But it is not impossible to make accidents less frequent and less dangerous, if the use of such vehicles is properly regulated. The problem is serious, but public sentiment demands that some solution be reached. —Boston Advertiser.

BEWARE OF PREMIUMS

The City Has Been Overrun With Solicitors

A man, giving his name as S. H. Harris, has it is alleged, been swindling people in Quincy the past week by selling vacuum cleaners and promising to give the Boston Post for two weeks as a premium. Money is collected at the time of the sale but no mention is made as to the date the cleaners would be delivered.

Mrs. J. A. Matthews, who lives on Berkeley terrace, near the car barn is among those who accepted his proposition. A receipt is the only souvenir she retains. Mrs. Charles Pitts who lives near by on Hancock street escaped becoming a victim only by changing her mind at the last minute.

The man has rather a dark complexion, dark hair, about five feet eight inches in height, wears a dark gray suit, and has told several persons he is a Jew. He has been operating here for several days.

The Post through its columns has warned all persons that he has no authority to give that paper as a premium with vacuum cleaners or anything else, and they will take up the matter today with the local police.

This summer the city has been overrun with solicitors of all kinds, few of whom represented legitimate propositions. Within three days the men purporting to be connected with the American Federation of Labor, and bearing letter heads and apparently proper credentials, have made the rounds and succeeded in enlisting the support of many people in what is probably a fake.

LEG BROKEN.

Mrs. Alice Johnson of 67 Penn street was painfully injured at the Quincy Adams station Friday evening when her foot caught in the freight track, causing her to fall heavily. She was taken to her home where physicians found her right leg had been broken. She was taken to the City Hospital in the police ambulance.

SCHOOLS WILL OPEN SEPT. 8

Addition at Houghs Neck Only Important Change

Next week the Quincy people, who have been away for the summer, will be turning their faces homeward, for children must be prepared to return to school the Tuesday following labor day, Sept. 8.

During the long summer vacation some general and needed repairs have been made at all of the school buildings, although at none of the buildings have any extensive repairs been necessary. A little paint here and there, the blackboards fixed up and refinished, a little shelving, the overhauling of the furnaces and heating apparatus, and the buildings have been made ready.

The corps of janitors however have been busy putting on the final finishing touches for the opening day so that all of the buildings are now practically in readiness.

The grading of the school lot at the new Adams building is well along toward completion and will doubtless be ready when school opens.

Head Master Collins has been at the High school all of the past week getting things in readiness for the school opening, and it might also be added that the masters of the grammar grade schools have not been idle, and that they have also been busy on plans for the coming term.

While some of the school buildings will be in a crowded condition, notably the Massachusetts Fields, Quincy and Washington schools, there are other buildings which will have room to spare, notably the Willard and Gridley Bryant.

The Atherton Hough school at Houghs Neck will be a little crowded and inconvenienced while the four room addition is underway.

THAYER ACADEMY

Examinations for admission to the Junior Class and for the removal of conditions will be held Saturday, Sept. 12, at 8.45 A. M. The Head Master will be in his office Friday, Sept. 11, from 9 to 5 for consultation.

School commences Monday, Sept. 14 at 9 A. M.

Are the Boston Nationals on the toboggan now?

Baseball has played in hard luck his year, having had to compete for public attention with two wars.

It sounds paradoxical, but the manager of a health resort is seldom there for his health.

Hotels on the Maine coast now include all the comforts of war in the regular service.

The reason some families are not interested in the war is that they're so used to 'em.

Now that Carranza is a real ruler he will learn to look with much disfavor an recalcitrant persons who kick up revolutions.

Going through Panama canal is a kind of healthful recreation that should greatly invigorate American foreign commerce.

More of the Safety First campaign is needed about Quincy, as three automobile fatalities have been reported within a week; also two other fatal accidents.

QUINCY DAY BY DAY.

Over 200 editions of the Daily Ledger have been printed since Jan. 1, making about 8,000 since the paper was established. Considerably over 200,000 columns of news and advertising have been printed in this time, recording Quincy day-by-day. Several people have read practically every copy, and say they could not keep house without the Daily Ledger.

PLAYGROUND PAGEANT.

There should have been a large attendance of adults at the final day of the Quincy playgrounds, which deserves the title of pageant. It was a grand spectacle, and a great pleasure to see the children, boys and girls, enjoying themselves. Their games and dances were new to many, and the children were proud of their achievements. While teaching the children to play we keep them out of mischief, and cultivate better habits.

If Quincy did not have supervised playgrounds it would be behind the times. One issue of a Boston daily on Friday reported not only the Quincy field day, but a Waltham playground day, a Concord field day for children, and a carnival at Lexington. Other wards of the city hope soon to have supervised playgrounds the same as Wards Two, Three and Five. Probably Atlantic will have one next year.

CHRISTMAS TOY TRADE.

The cutting off by the war of the customary supply of toys bought yearly in Germany promises to make the Christmas trees look skimpy this year. American toy makers will turn out very attractive substitutes, but considering the rates of wages in this country, many kinds of cheap toys cannot be produced here at the prices our people expect to pay.

They say that German families will sell little lambkins at 12 cents a dozen. These toys are largely made in the homes. A great many of the workers are farmers and their families who are satisfied with very low wages if they can be kept busy through the winter. A family of five is said to average only about $3.00 to $3.50 a week.

The popularity of the German toys is not wholly due to the low price. There is an element of romance and imagination in the German temperament. They add little touches that charm both young and old. The leaders in the toy industry prefer to have them made in the homes. They feel that thereby the workers have more originality. The toys do not look so machine made as those from the factories.

The big fault in the German toys has been their fragile quality. They seem to built to make the children's eyes sparkle on Christmas eve, and then to dump in the ash barrel soon after. Or perhaps the German youngsters do not share the love for smashing things that is so characteristic of the American child. The latter is not satisfied merely with looking at a plaything. He wants to operate all the various parts, but alas the toy was built for the eyes rather than the hand.

The skill of these ill-paid German workmen is something marvellous. The little gnomes that tourists bring home are wonderfully life-like representations of human traits. They sell for 50 cents each or thereabouts, but it would not seem possible to carve one of them in less than a day.

FINANCIAL OUTLOOK.

(Special.)

Persistent and confident efforts are being made to adjust business to war conditions both at home and abroad. Here much progress has been attained and more will follow. Abroad the situation is different. Germany's enormous commerce and industry is of course practically paralyzed. Beyond taking care of her own immediate internal necessities, industrial Germany is unavoidably at a standstill. Upon that country the stress of war is falling with intense severity; and, whether sympathizing with the German cause or not, one cannot but deeply regret the gigantic disaster which has fallen upon that progressive and enlightened nation. Upon little Belgium and upon France also, two of the most advanced countries in the world, the blast of war has come with crushing force. These two nations will suffer relatively even more than Germany; for their fairest and most prosperous sections are being devastated by immense armies and wholesale destruction.

Upon Russia, Austria, Japan and other nations, the blow will be much less severe because they are out of the field of conflict. Upon Great Britain the effects of the war cannot yet be told. In short, the loss will not be so great as in the case of Germany; and would soon be at least partially compensated for in various directions, such as new avenues of commerce, new colonies, new markets, new industries and the hope of a decline in militarism. But her military leaders are not indulging in false hopes.

Germany's ability and endurance as a fighting nation are not to be underrated; and if overcome it will only be through overwhelming numbers and superior resources. At the moment the best that can be hoped for concerning this colossal conflict is that before long a decisive battle will be fought, which will check the mad carnage and induce all parties to refer their claims to some form of diplomatic conference. A great battle might easily be the occasion for proposing an armistice, and it goes without saying that from no country in the world could such a suggestion come with more grace and more force than from the United States. Let us hope that in some such way this stupendous struggle may be quickly brought to an end, and not prolonged by passion on either side. When sanity regains its sway in Europe there will be reasonable hope of such a consummation.

The financial situation in New York though still much confused shows some improvement. There is a calmness regarding the seriousness of the situation which at least is reassuring. Our banks are co-operating to meet a grave situation in the most energetic and cordial manner. The Government also has done much to relieve the situation and prevent harmful stringency. If any suggestion could be offered toward further aid in the situation, it would be in the direction of a more generous use of Clearing House certificates. A little more judicious liberality on part of the banks would certainly be helpful, and the great danger is, that unless this is granted, the way may be paved for dangerous inflationary schemes in Congress. This is the time for men to hold their heads, avoiding impulsive action and adhering strictly to business methods which experience has proved sound and true. The banking situation in this country is fortunately sound. The country has an abundant supply of gold, the amount available for banking purposes being estimated at over $1,500,000,000.

There is much interest displayed in South American trade. Germany had developed an enormous commerce with South America, which is entirely suspended. There is no other nation at present able to fill this vacancy better than the United States. This fact is fully appreciated by our manufacturers and exporters. Ample American banking facilities have recently been established with South America, and it so happens that there is no lack of ships. The West apparently feels the business depression less keenly than the East, and reports from the agricultural sections are generally encouraging. For the time being extreme caution must be the only policy to follow in all business affairs. This country will weather the storm better than any other, and when the strain is passed we should be able to lead in real prosperity.—Henry Clews, Banker, New York.

BIG NAVAL BATTLE IN NORTH SEA

Germans Lose Three Cruisers and Two Other Vessels

SURPRISE ATTACK IS REPULSED BY BRITISH

None of Their Warships Lost and Not Believed to Have Even Been Severely Damaged—Considerable Loss of Life Reported on German Side—Result of Effort of Kaiser's Fleet to Frighten Off Transports Carrying Soldiers Into Belgium—Germans Claim Sweeping Victories All Along the Line In Land Battles, While French Maintain Allies Are Holding Positions They Occupied Thursday—Losses are Extremely Heavy

London, Aug. 29.—Off Heligoland, Germany's Gibraltar of the North sea, the British fleet has maintained its mastery of the seas.

From the shelter of the grim island that was once a British possession, a German fleet slipped out for the first time sime the submarine attack was beaten off by the British cruisers. When the shattered remnants of the kaiser's navy slipped back behind the guns of Heligoland, three fleet cruisers and two torpedo boat destroyers had been erased from the roster of the German navy.

Few details of the most important battle yet fought by the two great hostile navies have been received in London. It is supposed that the torpedo boat destroyers, under convoy of the cruisers, attempted a surprise attack upon a portion of the British fleet, seeking to sink two or three dreadnoughts at the expense of a loss of a couple of torpedo boat destroyers.

Some Loss of Life

The attack failed, just as the attack of the submarines failed. The British warships, which have been prowling outside the German harbors for so many days, shattered the onrushing attack before the Germans were able to get within effective range for discharging their torpedoes. Not one of the deadly weapons found its mark, although the larger guns of the German cruisers were able to damage some of the ships and to cause some loss of life.

None of the British warships was lost and it is not believed that even severe damage was done them.

It was a different story with the Germans. Two cruisers and two of the low-lying torpedo boat destroyers were sunk with a considerable loss of men. Another cruiser, set on fire by the sizzling shells of the British guns, was slowly sinking as the British ships withdrew.

Effort to Head Off Transports

It is believed in London that the German raid was ordered because of the action of the British in landing troops at Ostend. It is surmised that the marines who have taken possession of the Belgian watering place have been reinforced by a strong body of British troops, and that this threat against the German line of communication in Belgium caused a determined effort of the German fleet to frighten off the channel the transports which are carrying soldiers into Belgium.

German columns have already, it is thought, cut behind the French harbors of Dunkirk and Calais and have broken the most direct line of communication with the expeditionary forces now in France.

If the connection with Ostend can be maintained, it may yet prove the most decided menace to the march upon Paris. If British troops can be poured into Belgium in force the great flanking movement about the north around Lille will be in danger of being caught so effectively between two fires that, even if the allied army in front and the British in the rear can be shattered, the Germans will have lost so heavily that it will tremendously reduce their chances of a speedy entrance into Paris.

German Fleet Bottled Up

And the way to Ostend is still clear, for the German fleet, more outnumbered now than ever, is still bottled up behind its defenses at Heligoland, Wilhelmshafen and the Kiel canal.

If Friday was not auspicious for the allies upon land, it was the most important day upon the seas that the British have seen in many years. While the German raid in the North sea was being frustrated, a minor but cheering naval engagement was being fought in the Far East. Off the Chinese port of Chefoo, the British torpedo boat destroyer Welland attacked a German ship of similar design, the S90, and, after a bitter conflict, the Welland's raking fire reached a vital part in the S90 and the German destroyer sank.

Land Battle Continues

The great land battle for the possession of France continues, but, although the German successes continued, all reports from the front indicate that the hostile armies have been so exhausted by the fatigue and tension of the daily conflicts that a slight lull was more in evidence yesterday than at any time since the Germans began that terrible southward swing from conquering Brussels.

Sweeping victories all along the line were claimed by the Germans; the French maintaining that the allies had been able to hold their positions that they had occupied Thursday.

It is now admitted upon all sides, although no confirmation has been received, that Valenciennes is now in possession of the Germans.

The fate of Lille remains in doubt, although it seems probable that the invaders have probably captured the great industrial city. The forts may still be held by the French, although rumors persist that they have been evacuated by the garrisons.

British Lose Heavily

London is more concerned with the fate of Maubeuge, where the British troops have sustained frightful losses in their attempt to stop the German advance. The last message received from Berlin stated that the Germans had surrounded Maubeuge.

Five German army corps, nearly 200,000 men, were hurled against the British, who are not believed to number much more than 100,000. As the latest reports of fighting indicated that the engagement was heaviest upon the Cambrai-Le Cateau line, it is presumed that Maubeuge, in advance of these towns, may have been abandoned by the British after they had held off the German attack as long as possible.

The British troops, although it is officially admitted that the losses were extremely heavy, bore themselves as heroically as they have in all the fighting along the boundary and inflicted terrible casualties upon the foe.

The battling about Maubeuge must have been more terrific than in any of the previous engagements of the war. The army led by Grand Duke Albrecht of Wurtemburg opened the attack upon the fortified city on the Sambre.

From the northeast poured in another army that drove back steadily the French and Belgians who had occupied the district between the Sambre and Meuse rivers in Belgium.

MARINES CONTROL OSTEND

Local Authorities Responsible For British Delay In Landing

The British marines in force are now in control of Ostend, says a dispatch from that place. They continued landing all day Thursday, and several quick-firers were brought ashore Friday.

The British officers declare they did not land sooner because of objections by the local authorities. Several prominent local officials objected to the British landing on the ground that it would frighten the hotel visitors. The fighting at Snaeskerke changed the minds of these objectors, and the city fathers forthwith asked and the British government sent marines.

GERMANS DESTROY LOUVAIN

Intellectual Metropolis of Low Countries Is Reduced to Ashes

The Belgian foreign minister reports that the Belgian city of Louvain has been burned by the Germans.

The war information bureau announces that the inhabitants were ordered to leave their dwellings and some were made prisoners. The women and children were placed on trains, the destinations of which are not known, and soldiers furnished with bombs set fire to all parts of the city. The splendid church of St. Peter, the university buildings, the library and scientific establishments we erdelivered to the flames.

Several notable citizens were shot. The city, which had a population of 45,000 and was the intellectual metropolis of the low countries, is now nothing more than a heap of ashes.

TO FIGHT FOR BRITISH

Native Troops From India Are Now on Their Way to France

Native troops from India are now on their way to increase the British forces in France. This was made known through announcements in the house of lords by the Marquis of Crewe, secretary of state for India, and Lord Kitchener, secretary of state for war.

Lord Kitchener said that in addition to reinforcements that would be received from England the government had decided that the British army in France should be increased. The Indian troops were chosen to increase the forces. Kitchener added that all the gaps in the army in France were being filled up.

The Marquis of Crewe said the Indian people desired that the native soldiers should fight beside their comrades in the British army and that it would have been a disappointment to India if they had been debarred from taking part in the war in Europe.

MERELY A "RUPTURE"

Austro-Japanese Situation Is Thus Described at Tokio

The situation between Japan and Austria is described at Tokio as "a rupture of diplomatic relations, not war." Austrian troops in China number only eighty. Whether these, with the crew of 367 men of the disarmed Austrian cruiser Kaiserin Elizabeth, will concentrate at Tsingtau and aid the Germans is not known.

The reports from Pekin that a Japanese naval attack upon Tsingtau had been repelled by the German garrison of the naval station is denied at Tokio. It is stated positively that no such attack has occurred or is in contemplation for the present. The Japanese campaign contemplates, it is pointed out, the establishment of a rigid blockade of Tsingtau.

"INVISIBLE UNIFORM"

German Grasp of Detail Which Will Figure Greatly In War

Among the many wonderful features of the German army is the new German service uniform, which is of a steel gray color so cunningly dyed that the wearer blends against foliage, sky, grass or earth and becomes as part of it.

They call it the "invisible uniform," from the way it makes the soldier almost beyond perception in road or woods.

It is the highest development of a general effort among the powers to get an indistinguishable uniform—all the powers except France.

While this war will not be won or lost through uniforms, still the German "invisible gray" is a part of Teutonic thoroughness and grasp of detail.

BANKS MUST EXPLAIN

Treasury Department Is Looking Into Alleged Discrimination

New York, Aug. 29.—Heads of national banks in this city confirmed the report that they have received a confidential communication from Washington directing their attention to complaints registered at Washington by borrowers of money on stock exchange securities in this market.

According to the letter of the treasury officials it is charged that the banks had thrown out many loans made on collateral of the most approved character and that they have in other ways worked hardship to holders of securities at this crucial period.

Acting upon these complaints, the treasury department has directed the national banks of this city promptly to furnish it with detailed information regarding its holdings of securities in loans.

Both Sulzer and Hinman Are Dropped In Empire State

Utica, N. Y., Aug. 29.—Sulzer repudiated, Hinman cast off and an all-Progressive ticket nominated by "suggesting" candidates, the Progressives closed a furious session of their convention here. Frederick M. Davenport of Utica is their choice for governor.

An attempt to stampede the conference into naming Theodore Roosevelt for governor failed. There were only six Sulzer votes in the state committee of 175 men and women, and four of them were cast by proxies.

ANXIETY OVER FINANCES

Vatican May Experience Difficulty In Raising Needed Funds

Rome, Aug. 29.—At a congregation of cardinals the session was given over to a discussion of the financial affairs of the Roman Catholic church. The sudden death of Pope Pius X. and the conditions brought about by the European war has resulted in a financial situation which is causing some anxiety at the Vatican.

It is estimated that the conclave which will elect a successor to Pope Pius X. will cost about $400,000, a big sum to raise in time of war.

City Markets For Chicago

Chicago, Aug. 29.—The city markets commission is completing plans for the establishment of two muncipal markets to combat the increased cost of living. Eventually five other markets will be opened.

Shoe Factories to Reopen

St. Louis, Aug. 29.—Seven St. Louis shoe factories of the International Shoe company that have been closed for two weeks will reopen next Monday. This will give employment to 5000.

Seamen's Bill Approved

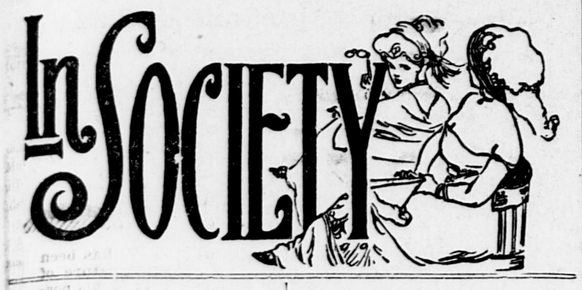

Washington, Aug. 29.—Bearing the approval of the house, the seamen's relief bill to increase the safety of passengers at sea and improve the conditions of sailors went to the senate.

OUR WOMEN.

"The fact remains that women who really constitute the backbone of any country are not the few brilliant women in public life, or the many working women in business life, although girls in the business world are making headway, and women in professional fields are successful. The women who are doing the greatest work of the country are those who have always done it. They are those women who, through their pure character and sweet influences, make their homes a center of happiness, who rear wholesome children, who make their fathers and brothers and husbands and children happier and better because of their presence. Not what she does, but what she is, makes the successful woman. The most fortunate women are those who are doing not the spectacular things, but just these simple duties that are sometimes spoken of with weariness, or even with half contempt but which should always be spoken of with reverence—womans work." — Catholic Sentinel.

Great Climax.

"How was the play you saw last night?" "Pretty melodramatic. In the second act when the skulking villain descends upon Hickory farm and forecloses the mortgage on old Uncle Zeke's automobile there was hardly a dry eye in the house."

Give Your Neighbor an Equal Chance

By HOLLAND.

IF you have been buying goods of a mail order house you doubtless think it has been to your advantage to do so. You have believed that you were saving money or were getting better goods. Let us see if this is true.

Have you tried to do business with your local merchant—your neighbor—on the terms that the mail order house exacts? No? Then suppose you try it.

Just go into the store, plank down your cash and tell what you want. You might even tell the merchant that you will wait a few days for the goods. See if your local merchant can't serve you better and as cheaply as the mail order house.

The local merchant usually extends credit for two, four or six months. The mail order house demands cash in advance. It uses your money as working capital. It loses nothing in interest, nothing in bad debts or on slow paying customers. Try this cash in advance plan on the local merchant—the man you know—and see if he can't make it to your advantage to

SPEND YOUR MONEY WHERE YOU MAKE IT.

HANCOCK STREET WORK.

Work on Hancock street, which was stopped some weeks ago for the reason that the City Treasurer was unable to place the loans, will be commenced again next week when Tree Warden Stewart will begin operations removing trees. Commissioner Brown says that the job will be done by contract and that bids will be asked in a few days.

NOT A CANDIDATE.

John D. Mackay this morning denies that he is a candidate for Mayor, as rumored the past two days. He states he will not enter the race but will give Charles H. Johnson, candidate for the Republican nomination, his support.

FINED FOR LARCENY OF HEN

Owner of Hen Gave Chase After Midnight

It cost Roger Connolly, who claims his home is in Weymouth, $15 for the larceny of a white leghorn hen valued at $1, the property of Isaac Spector of North street. Roger said that he came out from Boston on the late train and was walking to his home in Weymouth by North street, believing in the old adage that the longest way around is the shortest way home.

Spector said that he was aroused from his sleep some time after midnight and looking out the window saw a man disappear with a squawking hen under his arm. He hastily dressed and gave chase, being joined by his wife and brother-in-law. The man was overtaken some distance away and the hen with him, but during the scuffle that ensued the hen's life was sacrificed.

Roger denied in court that he had stolen the hen, but said that it had been given him by two other men, and that he was taking it to his home for a Sunday dinner.

The court said he was guilty, however, and imposed a penalty of $15.

Roger wanted time and said that he knew Chief Fitzgerald and many others in Weymouth which prompted Judge Cook to say that if he had so many friends some of them would pay his fine.

NORTH WEYMOUTH

The Sons of Veterans Auxiliary will hold an all day outing at the cottage of Charles Pratt.

The postponed boat race of the K. C. B. C. will take place next Saturday over the usual course.

A musical comedy, "A bunch of roses," will be given at the Pilgrim Church next Tuesday by Squad Nine.

The store of J. W. Bartlett & Co., closed yesterday afternoon as a mark of respect to the late Ozro Estes. Funeral services were conducted at that time, by Rev. Rufus H. Dix. The committal service of the Old Fellows was performed.

Mr. and Mrs. John B. Keefe entertained a house party at the "Mildred" for the opening of the N. W. Y. C. this week. Their guests were Miss Margaret Keefe of Dorchester, Miss Molly Connolly of Roxbury, Eugene LaBrecque of Hough's Neck, William O'Hare of South Boston, and their son John Keefe, a member of the Boston fire dept.

NEW CLUBHOUSE.

The opening of the new clubhouse of the North Weymouth Yacht club attracted the majority of the residents of that section Wednesday evening. A fine musical program was rendered preceded by a welcome by Vice Commodore Nelson Gay. The numbers were orchestra selections, vocal solos by Mr. Bonn, accompanied Miss Madden, piano solos by Miss Adrienne Keefe, guitar and mandolin duet by Messrs. Ames and Casano, solos by Mr. Bishop assisted by Miss Lang, character dance by Miss Grace Gay, solo dancing by Miss Miriam Clark, and an exhibition of tango by Miss Clark and E. R. Walsh, Jr.

Special mention should be made of the excellent performance at the piano of Miss Adrienne Keefe whose rendition of "Il Trovatore" captured her audience. Miss Keefe responded with encores. The singing of Mr. Bonn received hearty applause and great praise.

Guests were present from Roxbury, Chelsea, South Hadley, Kingston, Plymouth, New Hampshire and Porto Rico.

Dancing followed, Maxims five piece orchestra furnishing the music. The officers of the new yacht club are: Commodore, E. R. Walsh; vice commodore, Nelson Gay; Rear Commodore Elmer Thayer; secretary J. S. Wichert; treasurer, D. S. Ferguson.

NEW FUNCTION OF AIRCRAFT

Will Cause Civilization to Enter Upon New Era

WORLD TO BE ONE NATION

Elimination of All Physical Boundaries and Mixing of People and Interests Certain to Result From Perfection of Aerial Navigation, According to Prediction of Woodhouse

New York, Aug. 29.—Declaring that no matter who wins in the present European war, civilization will enter upon a new era in which such a conflict cannot again take place, Henry Woodhouse, aeronautical authority, declared aerial navigation would be one of the most important factors in the making of a world-nation.

Woodhouse, who is a member of important committees of the Aero Club of America, addressed the alumni of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology here. Letters from John A. Stewart, chairman of the executive committee of the American centenary committee; Hamilton Holt, United States delegate to the first Hague conference; Alton B. Parker and Andrew Carnegie were read, agreeing with Woodhouse that aeronautics would become a powerful agent of peace.

Stewart wrote that aeronautics and agriculture are the two basic factors which will regenerate the world.

"By this he means," said Woodhouse, "that as fast transportation and intercommunication have brought people into closer relation and turned groups of tribes and clans into mighty nations, so still faster transportation and intercommunication, with the elimination of all physical boundaries by aircraft, promises to mix people and interests and make a world-nation."

Woodhouse discussed the rapid development of the aeroplane within the past six years and said:

"When the war cloud rose the nations pushed their plans, and it is quite possible that they spent the best part of $200,000,000 in the past six months to perfect the 'third arm' of their fighting forces. Mars never made a worse investment than this. The $200,000,000 spent developed and perfected aircraft to the point where they can be used for transportation. As soon as they are applied there will be a general elimination of frontiers which will make it possible to hope for the attainment of a world-nation."

OKLAHOMA CREEKS ABLAZE

Lightning Causes Nearly Million Barrels of Oil to Take Fire

Oklahoma City, Okla., Aug. 29.—Nine hundred thousand barrels of oil are reported burning in the Healdton and Cushing oil fields of Oklahoma. The burning oil is flowing into several creeks and little headway is being made by those battling with the flames.

Lightning started both fires. In the Cushing district a bolt struck a pipe line and, following the main line and radiating pipes, ignited sixteen tanks and a lake of oil containing 500,000 barrels. Embankments are being constructed to check the flow of burning oil.

In the Healdton field thirteen fires were started almost simultaneously. The fire zone in this district is three miles in width and eight miles in length.

TRAIN CRASHES INTO AUTO

Two Men and Their Wives Killed on Dangerous Grade Crossing

Hempstead, N. Y., Aug. 29.—The Long Island railroad's heavy Amagansett express crashed into an automobile containing four persons, near here, killing all of them and carrying three of the bodies on the front of the locomotive for a half-mile.

The victims of the accident were John R. Suydam and his wife and William C. Wilson and his wife, all of Brooklyn. Suydam conducted a livery business and Wilson was a salesman.

The accident happened at what is described as one of the railroad's most dangerous grade crossings.

American Soldiers In Canada

Ogdensburg, N. Y., Aug. 29.—American and Canadian soldiers marched side by side at the peace centenary celebration at Prescott, Ont. Special permission was given by the Ottawa government for a company of the national guard of New York from Ogdensburg to enter Canadian territory.

THE WAR PRAYER.

O Lord, help us to tear the soldiers of the foe to bloody shreds with our shells, help us to cover their smiling fields with the pale forms of their patriot dead; help us to lay waste their humble homes with a hurricane of fire; help us to wring the hearts of their offending widows with unavailing grief. Blast their hopes, blight their lives, water their way with their tears. —Mark Twain.

RUSSIA CLOSE UPON LEMBERG

Prepared to Attack Capital of Austrian Galicia

TWO GENERAL BATTLES ON

German Forces Massing For First Real Stand—Russians Establish Postal Service In East Prussia and Use Russian Stamps—Kaiser Orders His Troops to Check Invasioin

London, Aug. 29.—A dispatch from St. Petersburg says the Russian army has driven in the outlying Austrian defenses and is now in position to attack Lemberg, capital of Austrian Galicia. The Russians are within twenty miles of the city in heavy force. Three Austran army corps which have been opposing the Russian advance have been split and forced back on the fortifications of Lemburg with heavy losses.

The first real test of the strength of the German and Austrian defense is being made. Two general battles, one in eastern Prussia and the other in Austrian Galicia, have begun.

The Austrian battle has for its objective Lemburg. General Wanaff, with a Russian army of more than 200,000 men, heavily supported by artillery, has attacked the fortified Austrian positions along the Sereth river and in the Dniester river valley. Russian aeroplanes have already flown over Lemberg and report that heavy Austrian re-enforcements are being sent to the scene.

Another strong Russian force is moving to General Wanaff's assistance. This column is moving from the northeast, and is said to comprise three army corps. It is the intention of the Russians either to capture or isolate Lemberg before any further advance is made.

In eastern Prussia the Russians are now pressing Koenigsburg, the Prussian outposts having been driven from the positions along the Alle river. The Twentieth German army corps, which suffered severely in the earlier fighting, is now isolated in the forts at Allenstein. The German forces are now massing on new positions and are believed preparing for their first real stand.

The Rusisan embassy has received telegrams confirming the Russian occupation of Tilsit, a town in east Prussia sixty miles northeast of Koenigsberg. It is added that the Russians made great captures and that the garrison and population fled. The Russians have established postal service in east Prussia and Russian stamps are used.

According to the embassy's dispatches, it was the Russian cruisers Bogatyr and Pallada which destroyed the German cruiser Magdeburg, the commander of which is said to have escaped.

That the Russians are making a most favorable advance into Prussia is indicated by a St. Petersburg dispatch, saying that the government stated that everything unprejudicial to the welfare of the army and navy would be made public hereafter. This decision was reached on the advice of the highest naval, military and political authorities.

THE KAISER'S ORDERS

Re-Enforcements Rushed to Prussia to Check Russians

Emperor William has telegraphed to the German cabinet at Berlin from the front directing that immediate steps be taken for the relief of the Prussian refugees who have been driven from their homes by the Russian invasion. The kaiser directs that they be cared for inside the German lines of defense "until the Russian invasion is checked and it is possible for them to return to their homes."

It is stated that energetic steps are being taken to meet the Russian invasion. Additional re-enforcements from the reserve divisions are being rushed to the front. It is expected the Germans will engage the Russians in a general battle as soon as the czar's armies come into contact with the first line of forts.

BLEASE IS SWAMPED

Beaten by Over Sixteen Thousand Votes In Senatorial Contest

Columbia, S. C., Aug. 29.—Returns compiled from the general Democratic primary indicate that John G. Richards and Richard I. Manning, candidates for the nomination for governor, will qualify for the second primary, Sept. 8.

Senator Smith's majority for renomination was 12,312. His plurality over Governor Blease, his chief opponent, was 16,344.

Providence Boy Held For Fatally Shooting His Mother

Providence, Aug. 29.—James Pisani, 18, was held in $5000 for the grand jury for shooting his mother through the head with a repeating rifle.

"Hands up!" the boy shouted at his mother. The rifle was discharged, the bullet entering the woman's brain. His defense in court was that he was fooling, and did not realize the rifle was loaded.

WEARS TACK BELT IN BED

Salem Man's Armor Does Not Meet With Approval of Court

Salem, Mass., Aug. 29.—In order that his wife shall not bump against him during her sleep, thereby disturbing his slumbers, Herbert Bye, 35-year-old Englishman, wears a belt filled with tacks when he goes to bed. It is a home-made affair and he wears it over his "nightie." The points protrude through the leather and his wife admits she has been cut by them several times.

The story of this unusual sleep-protecting armor became public during the trial of Bye in the district court on a charge of non-support.

When the whole story was unfolded, Judge Sears said the Byes had better patch up their differences. Then he ordered the tack-belt wearer to provide for his wife and also to give her $2 a week for spending money.

MAYOR SAYS FIRE WAS SET

Big Apartment House In Boston Burns In Forty-Five Minutes

Boston, Aug. 29.—Within three-quarters of an hour of the time a boy first discovered the fire, a new five-story brick and wood apartment house at Huntington avenue and Museum road was reduced to a shell, with nothing but the four walls standing. Every vestige of an interior had been removed. The loss will be about $50,000.

Mayor Curley expressed the opinion that the fire was deliberately set. "Things like that don't happen from natural causes," he said. "They require an artificial stimulant."

MAINE VESSEL LOST

Captain of Craft Laden With War Munitions Is Drowned

Brownsville, Tex., Aug. 29.—Nine members of the crew of the schooner Emily P. Wright, picked up on the mainland by Brazos island life-savers, told of the foundering of the vessel off the Mexican coast, 100 miles south of the mouth of the Rio Grande. Captain Peterson, they said, was drowned.

The schooner was owned in Portland, Me., and was bound from Galveston for Tampico with a cargo of war munitions.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

A Good Match

But Not One Usually to Be Expected

By F. A. MITCHEL

One of the many peculiarities of human nature is to place little value on what we do easily. A man will have unlimited ability, for instance, as a trader. He considers money making something that any fool should be able to accomplish. He is ambitious to play the piano, and it worries him that he can't tell one note from another. There is a worse phase of such freakishness than this. A man with a single gift, not recognizing its value, will imagine he has another gift that he doesn't possess at all. "I fell into a business life by mistake," says Jones, who easily captured half a million dollars. "What I was made for is farming." He puts his accumulations in a farm, and in a few years there is nothing left of them. Yet no one can convince Jones that he is not a natural farmer. He explains his failure on the ground that there were happenings in his case which would not occur once in a hundred years.

Norman Alsop at school was a perfect scholar. When his report cards came to his parents there was a string of A's against every study, the whole looking like a company of soldiers all of equal height, without a single little fellow in the lot. All he had to do was to read his lessons over once, and then he could go out and play. It pleased him that he could do this, for a reason. He was ambitious to be a fine tennis player, a twirler, an oarsman—indeed, anything and everything that was athletic. But while he was revered by his schoolmates he was looked down upon by them on the fields of sport. Tommy Green, who stood at the other end of the class from Norman, would make a ball do the stunts of a boomerang. Norman would stand looking at Tom wrapt in admiration and wish he could exchange some of the A's on his report cards for Tom's curves.

When Norman was at college it was the same. He took all the prizes away from the other students and was graduated at the head of his class, a disappointed man. Why? Because he had failed to get on any of the athletic teams. He was not big enough or strong enough for football, but he tried for all the rest without a ghost of a show in any of them.

One would suppose that these failures would have cured him of his ambition to be an athlete. On the contrary, after graduating he went off to a summer resort affording every facility for sports, with the determination to "make something of himself," as he expressed it. As for his college course, in his heart he regarded it a failure. At the Pennant, a hotel built on a site expressly fitted for water and land sports, he found just the place that suited him. There were golf, tennis and boating, to say nothing of mountain climbing.

At the Pennant Norman fell in with Julia Damon. She had no business to be at such a hotel, for it was expensive, and she hadn't a cent in the world. The truth is an aunt of hers sent her there to give her a chance to catch a husband. There was no hope that she would snare an intellectual man, for she was inordinately stupid, but her aunt thought it possible she might mate with some rich man's son whose only ambition was to attend horse races and other spectacles, where he would have nothing to do but look on.

Norman was introduced to Julia at the tennis courts. He asked her to play, and she beat him a love set. But Norman was a nice young man and seemed so cut up by his failure that in subsequent games she "played off," permitting him to beat her most of the games of the last set. This made him not only well pleased with himself, but with Julia.

The same afternoon Norman concluded to take a row on the river. He hired a boat and was pulling out into the stream when the current took him in among some tall grass. His oars became clogged, and in his spasmodic efforts to disentangle himself he upset the boat. He was in no danger, though he could not swim, for the water where he was dumped was only three feet deep. But he presented a lugubrious spectacle. Pulling himself up on his feet, he stood looking about him as if for an inspiration as to what to do next, when he saw Julia standing on the landing.

She had the good sense not to laugh at him.

"If I were you," she said, "I would walk back here with the boat, where you can tip it on its side and let the water run out."

"This is the worst place for starting a boat," he said apologetically, "I ever saw. I wonder they put the landing here."

"It's the current and the grass to blame," she replied soothingly.

He managed to get the boat, which was full of water, near enough to the landing for her to get a boathook on it, and she did the rest. Norman went to his room, changed his clothes and spent the evening with her. He could not get over the stupidity of the man who had built a landing just where the current would take a boat right into the very place to swamp it. Miss Damon agreed with him, but the next morning he saw her shoot out from that very landing in a boat without the slightest difficulty.

As the summer were on Alsop learned something about handling a pair of oars from Miss Damon, who while coaching him contrived to make him believe that he was coaching her. If he had stuck to a common rowboat he might have got on without any serious mishap. But his ambition to make a boatman of himself was inversely in proportion to his inability to do so. He must paddle a canoe. Miss Damon suggested that he would better first learn to swim, but he said he had tried that and had not got on very well. He had heard of little children being taught to swim by being thrown into the water and forced to clamber out by themselves. Quite likely if he were dumped from his canoe he might "get the hang of it" and in time become a fine swimmer.

It was not long before Mr. Alsop found an opportunity to learn to swim by this heroic process. He was paddling along one day in a canoe, got up in a beautiful bathing suit, when an oarsman came pulling toward him. The man's back being to Norman, he did not see him.

There's a singular tendency in vehicles directed by novices to run into those things that they are expected to avoid. At any rate Norman used his paddle to take the boat in the direction opposite to the one he intended. The noses of the two boats sheered against each other, and the canoe went over.

Mr. Alsop sank out of sight. He said afterward that he thought of a good many things in the few moments he was beneath the surface. He thought of Miss Damon and wished he could exchange all the prizes he had taken at school and college for the ability to go quietly down, then rise quickly and with a few languid strokes reach a point of safety. But in spite of a good deal of kicking, or, rather, writhing, he continued to sink.

The oarsman, feeling a jar, turned his head aside and saw a man in bathing rig coming to the surface, a canoe upside down and a paddle some distance from both. Not thinking that a man in such an aquatic outfit would need assistance, he pulled away.

For a month Alsop had been teaching Miss Damon a peculiar stroke in the water invented by himself. That is, he thought he was teaching her, while she was trying to get him beyond that initial point where a beginner feels he can keep himself for a few seconds from going under. She had succeeded so far that, his life being the stake, he was able to swim the five feet that separated him from the canoe. By a herculean effort he reached it and clung to it, folding his arms about it lovingly.

All this happened within a quarter of a mile from the shore, where Miss Damon was sitting with a book on her lap, trying to make up one of several conditions that stood in the way of her graduation, for if she failed to get a husband it was expected that she would have to teach. There was nothing easy in the book, but to step into the water, "accoutered as she was," swim out to Norman Alsop and push the canoe, with him clinging to it, ashore was just too simple for anything. He spoke not a word till he was on terra firma; then, shaking his fist at the man who had upset him, now too far to hear him, he said:

"You confounded fool, if I didn't know more about handling a boat than you do, I'd stick to dry land!"

Miss Damon sympathized with her friend, who went to the hotel to dress for dinner, while she, after putting on dry clothes, recommenced endeavoring to get into her stupid head a problem in geometry.

It must not be supposed that during this period when Norman Alsop was trying to learn athletics and Miss Damon was trying to make up a multitude of conditions he showed nothing of the intellectual gifts there were in him. If Miss Damon helped him out of the water he helped her with the subjects she was trying to make up. This he did by rendering them so interesting to her that she not only understood them, but could not forget them. Though Alsop did not recognize the value of his instruction nor Miss Damon that she had done something remarkable in pushing him ashore, each admired the other's acquirements. Miss Damon could not understand why her friend could not do a little thing like swimming, something a fish had no trouble in doing, and Alsop could not understand why his explanation to her of the moon's phases was a failure, but neither attached any importance to the other's defect.

When Julia Damon went home in September and informed her aunt that she had captured a man who had swept his university clean of prizes the good lady was dumfounded.

"How about your school conditions?" she asked after her astonishment had worn off.

"Oh, what's the use of my making up conditions when I'm going to marry a valedictorian?"

"Just so," replied the aunt.

Norman Alsop is now a professor in —— university. He has written some philosophical works that have given him high rank as an author. When encomiums are heaped upon him he shrugs his shoulders and says:

"I'm a dead failure. I've never even been able to learn to swim. If you want capability go to my wife. There are lots of real things she can do well, as for me, I can't do anything real. I can only float on an ideal ocean."

And yet when persons mate their friends say, "What a misalliance between a learned man and a fool!" or, "That's a fine match; they have the same tastes."

Alsop reveres his wife for her gifts, and she looks up to him as a superior intellectual being.

Milady's Mirror

Drink Plenty of Water.

You can't gain or retain good looks until you realize the value of plain, everyday water. Do you drink a glass of water every morning, a half hour before breakfast? No! Well, that glass of water will keep your skin clearer than anything else you can use.

Drink it hot—don't waste your time by temporizing with lukewarmness. Have the water steaming and sip it while you are dressing. If you find it hard to take, add a little lemon juice or a pinch of salt to take away the flatness.

Between that first glass and bedtime you should drink at least a quart of water. That isn't as much as it sounds. It is only four or five glassfuls in all—the one in the morning, another at bedtime and two or three in between. Only the first glass need be hot; the rest can be any temperature you prefer.

A quart of water a day will aid in keeping your digestion in perfect condition. It will flush off the impurities that otherwise would come out in pimples and eruptions, and that means a clear, healthy skin.

Sugar a Rejuvenator.

The belief is gaining ground in many quarters that if you wish to stave off old age and to have the feeling of perennial youth and vigor, no matter what your actual years may be, you cannot do better than eat plenty of sugar.

One of the pioneers of this theory is Professor Metchnikoff, who has made exhaustive experiments to prove his statements.

There are some who even assert that not only does the frequent eating of sugar keep one from growing old, but that if a man or woman will begin the sugar treatment, even after senility has set in, the effect will be so great as to amount to a complete change in his or her character.

Oatmeal as a Cosmetic.

If the skin is rough and irritated by heat try the oatmeal bath. Make a number of cheesecloth bags, four inches square and fill them loosely with the following mixture:

Five pounds of oatmeal, one pound of powdered Florentine orris root, one pound of almond meal and a half pound castile soap, scraped fine as powder.

This makes a large quantity, but is cheapest when made in these proportions.

One of these bags throwp into the warm plunge bath is most comforting and makes the skin soft and white.

Warm Water For the Face.

Bathe your face with warm water. Use a soft cloth and plenty of good soap—the kind that is best suited to your own particular skin. Some skins are irritated by the purest castile; others are benefited by it. Find the soap that you can use and stick to it.

Rinse the soap off with clear, hot water and then rinse again with cold water.

The warm water and soap will open and cleanse the pores, the hot water will stimulate the circulation, and the cold water will strengthen the skin.

Summer Baths.

In summer a warm, not hot, bath at night is most cooling, and the bath in the morning should be only a quick sponge with cool, not cold water. The woman who dresses in the middle of the afternoon or just before dinner and bathes then should not bathe just before retiring also. The quick morning sponge and the moderate afternoon or evening bath are quite sufficient for each twenty-four hours.

Milk For Sleeplessness.

A glass of hot milk should be taken last thing at night before retiring by people who suffer from insomnia.

To be really effective it must be quite hot and should be sipped very slowly. To drink milk quickly is almost sure to bring on an attack of indigestion.

Sound sleep is one of the best complexion beautifiers there is.

Keeping the Hands Nice.

If you are doing housework try to soil your hands as little as possible. While dusting and sweeping or doing any dry, dirty work wear a loose pair of old kid gloves. Rubber gloves are no longer very expensive. Provide yourself with a pair of these and use them while washing dishes or any work that demands the use of strong soap and water.

Darkening the Brows.

The continued use of grease will darken the brows and lashes and will not injure as a dye does. Make a mixture of a dram of red petroleum jelly and one grain of sulphate of quinine. This is put on night and morning, leaving some of the grease in the skin. Always rub the brows in the direction in which they should grow.

Tender Gums.

If you suffer from tender gums rinse the mouth three times a day with a tumblerful of tepid water to which have been added a teaspoonful of tincture of myrrh and a teaspoonful of powdered borax.

The myrrh is an astringent and hardens the gums, and the borax acts as an antiseptic.

TO ONE IN PARADISE.

Thou wast that all to me, love,
For which my soul did pine—
A green isle in the sea, love,
A fountain and a shrine
All wreathed with fairy fruits and flowers,
And all the flowers were mine.

Ah, dream too bright to last!
Ah, starry hope, that didst arise
But to be overcast!
A voice from out the future cries,
"On, on!" But o'er the past
(Dim gulf!) My spirit hovering lies
Mute, motionless, aghast!

For, alas, alas, with me
The light of life is o'er!
No more, no more, no more—
(Such language holds the solemn sea
To the sands upon the shore)
Shall bloom the thunder blasted tree
Or the stricken eagle soar!

And all my days are trances
And all my nightly dreams
Are where thy gray eye glances
And where thy footstep gleams.
In what ethereal dances.
By what eternal streams.

—Edgar Allan Poe.

BRIEFS

Fred D. Williams is in North Berwick, Me., for two weeks.

The weekly hop at the Squantum Inn was well attended Friday evening.

William Moody of School street returned this week from Hampton beach where he spent his vacation.

Rev. Sidney T. Cooke will preach on Sunday at both services at Bethany Congregational church.

There is to be a dance at Lee's Inn this evening with exhibition dancing by Charles Cullen of Squantum.

The annual meeting of the Squantum Women's club will be held Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. F. Morton, Bayside road.

Inspector of Buildings Merrill has been taking a little vacation this week having been at his office in City Hall but a few minutes each day. He is building himself a house on his estate in Hingham.

But a few more days remain before straw hats, by a long observed unwritten law, will be regailed to the ash heap, or laid carefully away for the written law, will be regailed to the ash again next spring.

Plans are being made for the annual reunion of the Washington M. French Hose Association. The exact date of the reunion has not been announced, but it will be in the near future.

The bright sky seen Friday evening in the direction of Boston was probably the illumination from the spectacular fire on Huntington avenue, Boston, which destroyed the partly built apartment house.

When readers of the Daily Ledger hear from Quincy friends in Europe they are requested to telephone to the Daily Ledger,—Quincy 425, as their friends are anxious to hear from them.

Four young ladies will be graduated in the Class of 1914 at the City Hospital of Quincy next Wednesday afternoon,—Miss Florence Ethel Hanscom, Miss Anna Victoria Ljungquist, Miss Alice McGlen and Miss Hansnora Neilson.

Members of the Squantum Women's club are planning to hold a fair on the grounds which they recently took over for a club house site. Mrs. Sturgis Wood and Mrs. William Donovan are in charge and Mrs. Charles Westlake committee on entertainment.

BRAINTREE

Otis Randall, who has been confined to his home on Sumner street by illness, is reported to be improving.

Patrolman John P. Shay of Central street includes Great Pond in his tour of inspection on Sundays.

Corps 94 W. R. C. will hold but one meeting in September which will be held the third Monday in the month.

Carl Waldecker of Sampson avenue who has been at his old home in Germany is now is Switzerland.

William Orr, who is critically ill is under the care of a trained nurse at his home on Commercial street.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Smith of Hayward street are receiving congratulations on the birth of a daughter Tuesday of this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Willie J. Loring have sold their property on Randall avenue and moved Wednesday into one of the apartments owned by George W. Little on Washington street.

William S. Tracy has concluded the hotel business and is making the Hotel Brunswick into a six apartment house. Work towards that end is being rapidly handled by the contractor in charge.

A new curbing is being put in at the corner of Elm and Railroad streets, an improvement in the untidy surroundings of the Braintree depot. The Village Improvement Association is requested to have the paper and other litter on Railroad street removed.

Mrs. Mary Buker has been spending a week with her son George Buker of Ashmont. Mrs. Buker is an unusually active and interesting person for one of 80 years. She had a very enjoyable visit and on the day of her return motored from Ashmont to Worcester and then to Braintree.

While John Rinaldi of 25 Newport avenue was riding up Franklin street on his motorcycle shortly before three o'clock last Thursday afternoon he was dismayed to find that the gasoline tank of the machine was on fire and blazing fiercely. Just at that moment he happened to be passing the Franklin street engine house and Chief Fred A. Tenney who was on duty at the time rushed out and quickly quenched the flames with a hand extinguisher. The damage was slight but Mr. Rinaldi was greatly frightened. It is probable that a small leak in the tank started the trouble.

THRILLING EXPERIENCE.

While touring in their automobile in New Hampshire recently Mr. and Mrs. G. Dallas Willis, Jr. of Braintree, had a narrow escape from serious injuries. On their way up through the Crawford Notch, the brakes refused to work properly and Mr. Willis was obliged to allow the car to back onto some rocks. No damage resulted but on the return trip the brakes went wrong again and it became necessary to steer the machine into an obstruction to stop it and prevent it from plunging over a bank. The automobile was damaged to such an extent that it could not be used an dthe party came home by train, arriving last Thursday. It is said that the brakes were not properly adjusted for mountain work so that they would not lock hard enough to hold the car on the steep inclines of that region. The members of the party were badly frightened by their experience but nobody was injured.

SAFETY FIRST.

Have you noticed that today the trend of the times is towards "safety first" instead of speed first?

After the noise comes the desire for quiet. After the pursuit of false gods we come back to the old.

The railroads were the first to take up an active campaign for "safety first" but a similar campaign is being carried on in Boston and other cities among truck drivers, chauffeurs, and the public at large in an endeavor to stop the enormous losses that are caused by carelessness.

The same spirit has been carried into mercantile life and the home. The housewife has learned that safety first comes before variety in foodstuffs. That safety first means that she must shun those food preparations in which are incorporated dangerous chemical or drugs.

That safety first means purchasing reliable, well known, thoroughly dependable goods from a reliable, well informed, up-to-date and well advertised merchant. That safety first is insured when she buys in Quincy as neighbors and friends stand back of the goods. Therefore, for the people of Greater Quincy safety first means Quincy first.

Tires at Before-War Prices

Goodyear Prices
It is Folly Today to Pay More

30 x 3	Plain	Tread	$11.70
30 x 3½	"	"	15.75
34 x 4	"	"	24.35
36 x 4½	"	"	35.00
37 x 5	"	"	41.95

There exists now a new, compelling reason for buying Goodyear tires. It results from War conditions.

These leading tires—built of extra-fine rubber, in the same way as always—are selling today at June prices.

You will find today a very wide difference between most tire prices and Goodyears.

Due to Quick Action

Early in August—when war began—the world's rubber markets seemed closed to us. Rubber prices doubled almost over night.

Men could see no way to pay for rubber abroad, and no way to bring it in. We, like others—in that panic—were forced to higher prices. But we have since gone back to prices we charged before the war, and this is how we did it:

We had men in London and Singapore when the war broke out. The larger part of the world's rubber supply comes through there. We cabled them to buy up the pick of the rubber. They bought—before the advance—1,500,000 pounds of the finest rubber there.

Nearly all this is now on the way to us. And it means practically all of the extra-grade rubber obtainable abroad.

Today we have our own men in Colombo, Singapore and Para. Those are the world's chief sources of rubber. So we are pretty well assured of a constant supply, and our pick of the best that's produced.

We were first on the ground. We were quickest in action. As a result, we shall soon have in storage an almost record supply of this extra grade of rubber.

And we paid about June prices.

Now Inferior Grades Cost Double

About the only crude rubber available now for many makers is inferior. In ordinary times, the best tire makers refuse it. Much of it had been rejected. But that "off rubber" now sells for much more than we paid for the best.

The results are these:

Tire prices in general are far in advance of Goodyears. And many tire makers, short of supplies, will be forced to use second-grade rubber.

Be Careful Now

In Goodyears we pledge you the same grade tire as always. And that grade won for Goodyears the top place in Tiredom—the largest sale in the world.

And, for the time being, our prices are the same as before the war. We shall try to keep them there.

We accept no excessive orders, but dealers will be kept supplied. And we charge them, until further notice, only ante-bellum prices.

That means that Goodyears—the best tires built—are selling way below other tires.

GOODYEAR TIRES.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. announce "No war prices on Goodyear Tires." F. A. Sieberling, president of the company, thus explains their unique position. "We advanced Goodyear prices, as others did theirs, when the rubber panic came. Almost in a day crude rubber rose in New York from 55 cents per pound to much over a dollar. And, as most of the world's rubber comes via London or Antwerp we saw no way out for a time. But we have an almost world-wide organization, and we brought it at once into play. We are the world's largest buyers of high-grade rubber, so we have our own experts in London, Colombo, Singapore and Para.

"We cabled our London people to buy up the pick of the rubber there. By acting quickly and paying cash they obtained 1,500,000 pounds of the finest rubber there. The result is that Goodyear tire prices are now the same as in June. We are using the same raised prices. We are using the same grade of rubber and the same amount of it as we always have used in these tires.

"We are running our factory with three shifts of men, twenty-four hours a day. So long as we remain in this fortunate position on rubber, we shall supply tire users at before-war prices to the limit of our capacity."

THE THING FOR THE GOVERNMENT TO DO

"It has been determined that Atlantic coast American shipyards could build sixty-two ships of 300 feet length in a year. The thing is to get these yards all working to their top-notch capacity," says the Christian Science Monitor editorially in issue of Aug. 29.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP OF SHIPS

Broad Reasons Advanced for the Buying of Ships for Foreign Trade

Has the Approval of President Wilson

In its weeks review of American events the Monitor says:

The proposals that the government embark upon the ownership of merchant ships, which has the President's approval, takes into account the immediate need not only of commerce but of the government. The President is stated to see in it a way of avoiding a war tax. His logic is that the provison of ships for trade abroad would immediately restore importations to a large extent and with them would revive the customs receipts.

His plan, which has taken form in the Alexander bill in the House of Representatives, calls for the formation of a company to own and operate ships for foreign trade only, the business to be carried on by a board consisting of the President and other government officials, the government to hold at least 51 per cent of the capital and to take as much more as shall not be subscribed for.

That there would be opposition to the government embarking on ship owning and operating was to have been expected. It comes from the concerns that already show their willingness to take advantage of American registry. The government's competition naturally is unwelcome. Then there is the resistance to all forms of public ownership. It would seem to many, perhaps, that there was no more of an excuse for the measure than an extraordinary situation and that an important provision is needed to the effect that as other means of commerce are provided the government will withdraw from the business.

CHARTER MEMBER OF DIVISION 5

John J. Deady, who was one of the four remaining charter members of Div. 5, A. O. H., died at his home on Cranch street, Sunday, after a short illness. He has made his home here for many years and at his death was employed by the city.

Mr. Deady, after the organization of the Hibernian division, was elected its treasurer. He held that position for a long period and was never bonded.

Tonight the members of the division will meet at the hall on Franklin street and march to the home of the deceased in a body. They will also attend the funeral services.

Mr. Deady is survived by his family.

PRESENTED CHAFING DISH

Surprise Party to Mr. and Mrs. James Birnie

Mr. and Mrs. James Birnie of Whitwell street were very pleasantly surprised Friday evening, Aug. 28, when a number of their friends dropped in. The occasion being the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage.

In behalf of those present Mr. Forsythe presented Mr. and Mrs. Birnie with a beautiful chafing dish and a large wedding cake, which was later cut and each guest received a part of it. Mr. and Mrs. Birnie were were greatly overcome, as it was a complete surprise but responded in a few words and thanked their friends for the kindness and thoughtfulness they had shown.

During the evening songs were sung by Mr. Kemp, Mr. Drummond and Mr. Walker. Miss Louise Moyle favored them with readings, and Miss Annie Birnie rendered several selections on the piano. Refreshments were served and at a late hour the guests departed.

Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Howie, Mr. and Mrs. Cummings and Annie; Mrs. Laing, Bella and Minnie; Mrs. McQuarrie, Mr. and Mrs. Cowe, Mr. and Mrs. Forsythe, Mr. and Mrs. R. Mavers, Mr. and Mrs. G. Mavers, Mr. and Mrs. Nichol, Mr. and Mrs. D. Drummond, Mr. and Mrs. A. Kemp, Mr. and Mrs. Walker, George Forsythe, Miss Louise Moyle and Calvin, Mr. and Mrs. Knowles and Jackie, and Mr. and Mrs. Clarke.

The Atlantic Improvement Society's field day, scheduled for last Saturday, was postponed to Labor Day. The affair will be held on the grounds of Councilman Carlson at Squantum who has offered them for the occasion.

WHY SCHOOL DEFICIT IN VIEW OF INCREASE

School Department of 1914 Had $9,640 Increase,--- $2,860 for Instruction

Comparison of School Budgets of 1913 and 1914

Chairman Mackay of the School Committee denies that increases in teachers' salaries cause the school deficit this year, but does not tell us exactly what did cause the deficit.

In the report of the School Committee meeting last week, which the secretary furnished the Daily Ledger, no reference is made to school appropriations, and there was no financial report as usual. Since that date the School department has however sent a letter to President Whiton of the City Council asking an additional appropriation.

President Whiton returned the communication because it was not in due form, but the City Council may hear from it tonight.

It is generally admitted that the Mayor and City Council did not in March allow the School department all it asked, but that is true of nearly all the other departments of the city. A department seldom gets all it asks.

The appropriations for the School department in 1913 in the budget were:

Administration	$5,500
Instruction	139,225
For increase in salaries	3,500
Text books	4,000
Operation	21,300
Maintenance of plant	250
Miscellaneous	1,600
Evening schools	2,000
Industrial day schools	3,600
Industrial evening	2,000
Supplies	5,250
Total	$188,225

The appropriations for the School department this year in the annual budget were:

Administration	$5,900

The football coaches will soon begin work at the colleges, and incidentally the professors will be allowed to hold a few classes.

Not having anything else with which to occupy her valuable time, and believing that idleness is harmful, Japan has decided to declare war.

Your wife will probably be glad to finish the work in the garden so you can go down town and discuss the war situation.

One hundred and eighty Congressmen have been ordered to come back to the capitol, as the Washington ball team is suffering from the lack of their rooting.

Many young people have been working nobly through vacation to equip themselves with candy and ice cream for the fall campaign.

One puzzle is how those mild-eyed creatures, the Belgian hares ever got that name.

Once in a great while you can hear a man say, "It's a shame to take the money," but he always takes it just the same.

ECONOMY IN TIME OF WAR.

Over in Europe a widespread campaign is reported for economical living, so that as much as possible of war costs may be paid out of current taxes. A single course meal combining maximum nutriment is being widely adopted. Our home people here are up against no such exigency. Yet war is going to cost this country heavily in many ways. Millions of families will have to exercise great thrift, or dip into their savings.

There are a hundred frugal ways in which people of moderate means can save in a time of world-wide strain. Many people would be surprised to learn how much expense can be avoided by the policy of mending clothes when the first signs of wear appear. The frequently cleaned and carefully mended old suit often looks better than the carelessly used new garment.

The skillful cook has a list of appetizing stews and soups that satisfy the meat craving, and at a cost far below that for roasts and steaks. The bargain sales of all kinds of goods advertised in the newspapers offer many opportunities for saving. It is all a matter of self control and careful planning in advance.

CITY AND COUNTRY.

A correspondent writes to ask if there ought not to be a closer co-operation between the city and the country. He speaks particularly of the constant tendency among people living in cities and towns, to ridicule the dwellers in the rural outskirts as "Reubens."

One of the surest ways to raise a laugh at a theater is to work off a joke on some outlying village. This is symptomatic of a contempt of country life felt by many people living in the larger towns.

The townsman pays his price for this sentiment. He is having today to pay high prices for his meat and his eggs and his corn, simply because there are not enough people engaged in farming. One reason why so few people are farming is that the calling has been discredited. Country people have been held up as a laughing stock in every comic newspaper. The farmers' boys and girls dislike to follow an occupation that is commonly treated as rustic and absurd. Hence many vacant acres, where there should be growing grain and gardens to feed the people.

There ought to be the closest co-operation between every large town and the outlying country. The centers of population should contribute willingly for good schools and good roads for the country. People will not live on farms willingly unless they have these and other essentials of modern civilization.

On the other hand, the farm people make a mistake to be jealous of or hostile toward their urban neighbors. The nearby town is the sure and profitable market for their products. When they send money away to distant mail order houses, they strike a blow at the town that buys their own products. The distant mail order house never uses any of their bacon or grain or vegetables.

CAPITAL IS THREATENED BY GERMANS

Within Eighty Miles of Paris at Several Points

FRENCH RETREAT MAY DEVELOP INTO ROUT

German Armies Will Be Within Sight of Outer Forts of Paris Within Few Days If Smashing Assault Can Be Kept Up—Bombs Dropped by German Airshop Arouse Populace of French Capital to Closer Realization of Terrible Situation—Allies Fighting to Preserve Some Semblance of Order—Invaders Pushing Forward at Rate of About Seven Miles a Day at Various Places

London, Aug. 31.—The allied armies appear to be hopelessly defeated. Unless a miracle that cannot be foreseen intervenes, Paris will be a glittering target for the terrific German artillery before the week has passed.

Lord Kitchener, in an official account of the big four-day battle in France, says the total loss of the British may reach 6000, while the German casualties must be much higher. He declares the British army has retired to a satisfactory position and has not been engaged in fighting since last Wednesday.

The onward rush of the Germans seems to have been temporarily checked on the right and centre of the allies' lines, but from the north the army of the Meuse is driving ahead in such fury that the British and French are falling back in a retreat that bids fair to develop into a rout.

If the allies can reform and be reenforced to the west of La Fere, another great battle may be forced before Paris is threatened.

If they continue today to be assailed as vigorously as they have been for a week, the German drive will sweep to the west of La Fere and will not halt untill the other forts of the capital itself are in front of them.

Germans Close to Paris

At several points the Germans are now within eighty miles of Paris. The order that houses and buildings in the zone covered by the forts must be destroyed was enough to prove the desperate view of the situation that Paris holds.

But dsperation seems almost to have given way to despair. The class of 1914, giving 200,000 additional troops to aid in the defense of Paris, the active reserves and the eldest classes of the territorial reserves were all summoned to the colors. The menace is so imminent that practically the whole manhood of France is being drained to meet the greatest crisis in the nation's history.

Some days of delay may be gained if an effective resistance can be maintained at Rheims, Laon and La Fere, where the German attack is presumably heaviest. From this vital area, little news is forthcoming, but the attack on this line, the inner defense of France, has already begun.

Where Allies Are Demoralized

In the north the allies appear to be more demoralized than elsewhere, although they are not opposed, unless there has been a sudden shift in the German attack, by a force anything like the strength of that which is being driven against La Fere.

The main attack against Paris can hardly be begun this week, but if the smashing assault from the north about Amiens can be kept up, this division of the German armies should be able to be within sight of Paris in a few days. They will pass to the west of La Fere and will encounter no permanent fortifications until they come against the Paris forts.

Bombs Dropped In Paris

The nearness of the Germans to Paris was manifested in a dramatic manner when a German aeronaut rode high over the French capital and dropped five or six bombs.

They did little or no damage, but they served to herald the fast approaching siege and to remind the populace that the sterniest days of 1870 and 1871 were to be as child's play contrasted with the grim days that are relentlessly approaching.

Every dispatch received in London for the past week indicates that the Germans are advancing at the rate of about seven miles a day. From the north the forward sweep has been even more rapid, although the forces engaged are of less strength. Day after day the British and French have been driven back, oftentimes attacked so viciously that it has been impossible even for them to retreat at the hour planned.

Small Hope of Success

They have had to bear the brunt of that never-failing assault for hours after their positions seemed no longer possible to hold. If they had tried to retreat, they would have been practicaly annihilated.

So they have stood their ground, and fought heroically, but without hope of success until a slight temporary advantage gave them an opportunity to draw back their shattered lines.

ALEXANDER MILLERAND.

New French Minister of War Is Preparing Paris For a Possible Siege.

The retreat has been precipitate. Out of Belgium, out of Lille, back from the Chambrai-le Cateau line and now back of the Somme river, the falling back movement has continued. It is presumed the allies are now fighting to preserve some semblance of order between the Somme and the Oise. As they are west of La Fere, they cannot find shelter behind a permanent entrenchment until they reach the outlying forts of Paris.

From the Rheims line to the vicinity of Rethel, where the strongest German attack is believed to be concentrated, practically nothing has been heard of the conflict.

Germans In Strong Force

It is along this vital line that the Germans are supposed to outnumber most decisively the defenders of Paris, and it will probably be only a few days before the shattered French forces will be massed behind the strong forts of Rheims and Laon and behind the lesser fortifications at La Fere.

As the country to the west of this line will have been cleared of hostile forces by the northern army by the time that the battle lines clash here, it is presumed that a considerable proportion of the German army will be flung in this direction, and that they will follow their comrades over the unguarded roads that lead to Paris from the north.

Into the gap in the French defenses north of Verdun has poured the German army, led by the crown prince, which has also failed to be heard of in the news of the last few days. If the French had been able to beat them back or even to hold them, the story of their efforts would have been given out for publication. It is fair to presume that they too are pushing ahead at about the average rate of seven miles a day which has characterized the strongest columns of the invaders.

SUBURBS ORDERED RAZED

Military Authorities of Paris Are Clearing Ground For Action

All the beautiful suburbs of Paris have been ordered destroyed by General Gallieni, military governor of the city. All residents of the zone within the line of defending forts have been instructed to leave their homes and destroy them within four days.

The purpose of the order is to prevent anything interfering with the operations of the guns defending the city and to leave no buildings that might serve as shelter to invading troops.

APIA SURRENDERS

Germany's Pacific Capital Is Now In the Hands of British

The official information bureau at London announces that Apia (a seaport of Upolu, Samoan islands, and capital of the German part of the group surrendered to a British force from New Zealand.

Germany's Samoan possessions have been considered as her most strategic possession in the Pacific. Following the dissolution of the agreement of 1889, by which the United States, Germany and Great Britain joined in guaranteeing the neutrality and independence of the Samoan group, a treaty was signed in Washington in 1899. By this treaty all three powers continued to enjoy equality of commerce, but Great Britain's territorial claims were extinguished and the islands were divided between the United States and Germany. The two largest islands, Upolu and Savaii, with some smaller members of the group, passed to Germany and Tutuila and others came under American control.

Tutuila is considered the strategic key to the group. At Pago Pago, a splendid land-locked harbor, the United States has a naval and coaling station. Apia, seized by the British, is on Upolu island and is the commercial metropolis of the group, contains numerous fine churches, schools and residences, and is the seat of the training college of the London Missionary society.

When Japan entered the European conflict by her declaration of war on Germany, and before her explicit declaration that her operations would be confined to the China sea, the apprehension that she might seize German Samoa and thus gain a foothold between Hawaii and her own coast, gave rise to much speculation respecting Washington's attitude in such an eventuality.

CLOSE TO ENGLAND

German Occupation of Boulogne of Great Strategic Value

Boulogne, the latest French city to fall in the pathway of aggression of the German army, is one of the most important seaports on the coast of France and is of tremendous strategic advantage to the kaiser's troops because of its situation on the English channel.

Located only twenty-eight miles southeast of Folkstone, Eng., its occupation by the Germans places the latter within striking distance of the English coast. It is 157 miles north-northwest of Paris.

It is a fortified seaport, situated at the mouth of the river Liane and has a population of more than 50,000. In the extent and value of its fisheries it is exceeded by no seaport in France.

STRAUS' PREDICTION

Will Be No Monarchies After the Present War

Four boat trains left Euston station, London, carrying many passengers for the Mauretania. Among them was Oscar S. Straus, who intimated that he had been in close touch with British diplomatic circles, and gave his opinion that if the Germans entered Paris it would be only the beginning of the war. He added;

"We ar living in a painfully interesting period of history. None can tell the final outcome. The English intend seeing this thing through, and I believe Russian promises will be kept, but I don't believe after war there will be a single monarchy left in Europe. For this isn't a war of the people, but of the governments.

"America must remain neutral, and she will, as we are the only power left which can use our good offices for mediation."

DEFEAT MEANS RUIN

Roberts Says Army Must Be Maintained at Full Strength

Field Marshal Lord Roberts, addressing a meeting at London for the purpose of obtaining recruits for the army, declared that the country was in great danger. There was no use in mincing words, he said; defeat would mean ruin, shame and slavery.

"Our soldiers are fighting bravely," said Roberts, "but they are lamentably few, and it is the duty of every able-bodied man to see that the army is maintained at its full strength. The women must not stand in the light of their sons' and husbands' duty."

POLES IN RUSSIAN ARMY

More Than Four Hundred Thousand Said to Have Enlisted

Antoine de Zwan, the Polish author, has sent the following telegram to the London Spectator:

"The mobilization was carried on in Warsaw with indescribable enthusiasm. For the first time since the partition of Poland our peasants took an active part in a national movement. There are more than 400,000 Poles in the Russian army."

WITH $5,000,000 FUND

War Insurance Bill Passed by House by Vote of 230 to 58

Washington, Aug. 31.—The administration bill to create a federal bureau of war risk marine insurance, with a $5,000,000 fund to meet possible losses to American shipping, was passed in the house by a vote of 230 to 58.

This establishes for the first time in American history a federal marine insurance, though it is restricted to risk of war and especially applicable to the European emergency.

It insures American vessels, their freight and passenger moneys and cargoes whenever it shall appear to the secretary of the treasury that American vessels, shippers or importers in American vessels are unable in any trade to secure adequate war risk insurance on reasonable terms.

GARBED IN MOURNING

Nearly 2500 Women March In New York Peace Parade

New York, Aug. 31.—Woman made her protest against the war in Europe by marching through fashionable Fifth avenue to the beat of muffled drums. The marchers were clad in black, or, if dressed in white, wore mourning bands on their sleeves.

Silently they trod through this canyon of hotel, club, residence and office structures, while thousands of persons stood as quietly on the sidewalks, viewing the slowly-moving procession as they might look upon a passing funeral cortege.

Nearly 2500 women took part in this demonstration, which had the approval of President Wilson. Boy Scouts with drums led each division.

Prisoner Leaps to Death

Lincoln, Mass., Aug. 31.—While being brought back from Boston by Deputy Chief Connors to answer to a charge of larceny, John Milues, 19, jumped from a window of an express train and was almost instantly killed.

Business Man a Suicide

Concord, Mass., Aug. 31.—Constant worry over his business, it is believed, caused Benjamin W. Brown, grain merchant, one of the wealthiest residents of Concord, to take his own life by drowning.

SHOULD AIRSHIPS RAID ENGLAND

Startling Picture of Destruction of London by Night.

ZEPPELINS A REAL MENACE.

Awful Havoc Could Be Wrought With Ton of High Explosives Dropped From the Sky—Might Destroy All British Dreadnoughts, Says an American Military Aviator.

The official suggestion from Berlin by way of Sayville, N. Y., of an intended Zeppelin raid on England is a subject of more than passing interest in Washington among army and navy experts in aviation. That such an invasion was not only possible, but practicable, was generally admitted, says a dispatch to the New York Times. Military students of aviation are satisfied that Germany has carried the mastery of the air far beyond any mark set by other nations.

France has clung to the idea of using aeroplanes in war and has a fleet of 208 machines, with 145 qualified pilots. But the aeroplane at the best carries too little weight to possess offensive value and is mainly effective for scouting purposes.

Germany has allotted in the past four years $2,000,000 to the Zeppelin and Parseval factories, and at the beginning of the war she had a fleet of twenty-four monster airships. These dirigibles have the largest displacement yet attained in airship construction, and some of them have a lifting capacity of twenty tons, making it possible to carry a fighting load of men and explosives of four or five tons. Thus it is possible for them to take a contingent of seventy men, all trained specially in the diverse duties needed on a fighting airship.

These airships make from forty to forty-seven miles an hour and can carry enough bombs to sink several battleships.

A Sky Raid on London.

"It is not at all a stretch of the imagination," said one veteran aviator, "to picture Germany's fleet of dirigibles sweeping across the English channel with gas enough and hydrolite enough in reserve to make a flight of 500 miles and carrying upward of a ton of high explosives and raiding London, which could be practically demolished by such an attack—at least the heart of the city, with its banks, great hotels, parliament house and other big buildings.

"Or it is not out of the thinking to imagine the German air fleet in a gigantic platoon flying out over the North sea after aeroplanes have scouted and spied out the location of the British fleet and, with nicely trained precision of movement, crossing and recrossing the line of Dreadnoughts until, one after another, the whole twenty that England boasts have been smashed by a dropping bomb and sunk in midsea. That is what Germany is most likely to attempt to do rather than try to raid London. It is to smite England's navy and sweep it from the sea. If the twenty Dreadnoughts or a large proportion of them could be sunk by the air fleet its creation would have been well justified and Germany's battleships would have little to fear from the rest of the British navy.

"If a raid is made on London it probably will come in the night, and the big fleet of airships will stop their engines as they approach the object of attack, commands will be given by telephone, and the result will be a volley of high explosives with their fearful execution—provided they hit their target.

"On the other hand, you must remember one thing. All accounts show that the success of ordnance designed to hit aeroplanes and dirigibles has thus far in this war been remarkable—indeed, it has been far beyond anything any military experts have ever thought possible. Now all British fortifications along the coast have these guns. Every British Dreadnought and cruiser has them—in fact, many of them. With these rapid fire guns and range finders, specially designed for use on an upward trajectory and reasonably accurate, it is easily conceivable that the 'raid' might come to grief long before London was reached.

No Dream of the Imagination.

"The whole idea is conceivable and possible. The German dirigibles have a practical radius that would enable them to reach London. They can carry men enough and ammunition enough to make the attack. They can attempt it at night, when it would be difficult to get the range on them from the rapid firing guns.

"It is to be remembered also that the dirigible has great advantage in the high air. The lights of the city below could be seen when with the engines they all use, shut down, the dirigibles might neither be seen nor heard and might be able to get on their prey before their presence was suspected. All these contingencies are to be thought of, and the hazards are many times multiplied over any other form of attack.

"The ability of the commander of these dirigibles to keep in touch with each other is wonderful. They use wireless telephones at night when they cannot see each other and also make use of visual signals, wigwag by day and light by night."

GOOD NEWS FOR GEO. H. FIELD

Received Letter From Daughter in Switzerland

George H. Field is a happy man, having received a long letter from his daughter, Mrs. Edward H. Dewson of New York, who is at Weggis, Switzerland. She writes that her party was at dinner at a hotel when the news of the war came, and where there were 150 to 200 people in the dining room then, the next day there were less than a dozen.

The American consul at Berne, Switzerland, was exceedingly kind to her and advised remajning in Switzerland until the panic and rush for home was over. Her landlady also asked her to stay all winter if she desired, and told her if her money gave out she would gladly trust her until after the war or her return to America. The good will and hospitality of the Swiss is such as to be appreciated when stories of hardships in other places is heard from returning tourist. It is hoped the little republic will come safely through the war waging all about it.

Manuel Perry, who has been the personal representative of the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation in Italy, is thought to be on his way home, although definite assurance to that effect has not been received in this city.

Mr. Perry went to Italy two years ago to superintend the installation of Fore River turbines in ships of the Italian navy. The engines easily met their requirements, but because of the peculiar design of the ships an unusual vibration developed which presented an intricate engineering problem. Through the direction of Mr. Perry this was overcome several months ago. His failure to return immediately gave rise to the rumor that he has been offered a post in the Italian navy. This however has never been confirmed.

Mr. Perry is a Provincetown boy and was one of the first apprentices of the shipyard. He early showed remarkable mechanical ability, and was one of the few sent to Japan to assemble turbine engines built at the shipyard for the Japanese navy. On his return he was sent to Italy.

Cable advices received Sunday are to the effect that Miss Corinne LaBrecque of this city is a passenger on the liner Rochambeau which is due at New York on Tuesday. Miss LaBrecque is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Achilles LaBrecque of Adams shore and was at sea when war was declared. Several weeks elapsed without her location being determined, the information finally coming in a letter which described the preparations for war in Europe. For a time Miss LaBrecque intended to complete a tour of France but German encroachment was evidently a factor in a change of plans.

Italian Society Attend Funeral of Santoyoputo

The funeral of Ralph Santoyoputo, who was killed in the Holbrook gravel pit Friday morning, was held from the undertaking rooms of John Hall on Sunday afternoon and was largely attended.

Escorting the procession to Mt. Wollaston cemetery, where burial took place, was the Italian band of South Quincy and the entire membership of an Italian society with which the deceased was affiliated. Directly in front of the hearse, two members carried aloft a magnificent floral remembrance, and on each side were the furled, draped flags of the United States and Italy.

The route of the funeral was Hancock to Elm, to Washington, to Canal street, where it passed the residence of the deceased, to the cemetery. Services of the society were held at the grave.

BIRTHDAY OF THREE YEAR OLD

The rainy weather of Saturday did not mar the pleasure of fifty or more little West Quincy children, who gathered at the home of Louis James Walters, Jr., to celebrate the third anniversary of his birth. The garage was turned into a garden, cut flowers and bunting decorations being used, and a bountiful supply of good things were served to the little ones. Master Louis received many pretty birthday remembrances. A large birthday cake with three candles ornamented the centre of the table, and before departing for home each child was supplied with a piece of the cake, cut by the little fellow himself. Elliott Loud and Hazel Amet entertained with songs, and a hurdy-gurdy supplied music. Everybody had a fine time and departed for home at five o'clock wishing that Louis would have a birthday often.

CHURCH AND CHOIR

WOLLASTON CONGREGATIONAL.

The pastor, Rev. Dr. Sneath, has returned from his vacation spent in New Hampshire, Maine and Pennsylvania.

The midweek service will be held on Thursday evening. The topic of the meeting will be "Jesus Christ the solver of human problems."

Next Sunday there will be morning worship with sermon by the pastor at 10:45 and the Y. P. S. C. E. meeting at 6 P. M. The Sunday School and Junior Endeavor Society will not reopen until the Sunday after Labor day. The communion of the Lord's Supper will be observed on the second Sunday, Sept. 13.

HUMAN INTEREST SIDE LIGHTS ON GREAT EUROPEAN WAR

Best Stories From Scene of Action Run Gamut of the Emotions.

Stirring Deeds of Valor and Remarkable Incidents, Odd and Tragic.

GRAPHIC stories of battle, death scenes and deeds of heroism are coming slowly over censored wires from the European war zone. Some of the most intensely interesting of these narratives are here given:

War incidents which show how the French present a smiling front in the face of the war are related from Paris.

At the Gare de L'Est, the eastern railway station where troops by the thousand were leaving for the German frontier, wives, mothers, sisters and sweethearts met and wept in multitudes. But a French soldier turned the tragedy into comedy. On a large cardboard he imitated the signs announcing the destinations of trains in time of peace and hung it on the military special. It read:

"Holiday excursion to Berlin."

Whereupon the women dried their tears and laughed.

A woman, her face very white, came out of one of the municipal offices at which official information is given of the death or injury of French soldiers. Four sons had left her a few days ago to join the colors. Another woman came up to her and said:

"Have you good news of your sons? My Jean is safe."

"Yes," the first mother replied, "they are all safe. They are safe in the arms of the Father. I am proud to give all to the cause."

Cows as Barricade.

The story of a skirmish between French and German cavalrymen is told in a letter received in Paris from a young officer at the front.

"Leaving our station to patrol some woods in front of our line," the officer wrote, "we saw in a clearing a dismounted section of German cavalry at the gate of a large farm. The lieutenant in charge of our party ordered half the troop to make a detour and approach the farm from the opposite side while the rest of us attacked from the front. The Germans, hearing the noise of horses' hoofs, ran out of the farm and tried to remount, but we were on them too quickly. Our lieutenant fell with a bullet in his hip, but shouted, 'Never mind me; into the farm, quick, and cut them up!'

"We rushed in. The Germans took refuge in byres and, hiding behind the cattle, fired revolvers at us. We soon finished them off. A German sergeant who had shot our lieutenant remained. He was hiding behind a cow. I fired two shots, and the animal fell dead. When I was about to shoot the sergeant the lieutenant, who had been carried in, shouted that I should spare him, and he was made a prisoner. Within five minutes another German patrol, attracted by the firing, galloped up. We received them with a hot fire, and the assault lasted twenty minutes. Re-enforcements relieved us shortly, and we trotted back to camp. I took the German sergeant's revolver as a prize."

Bullets Like Bumblebees.

The first actual witness to describe the fighting on the French frontier was a reservist named Jacquin. This is Jacquin's story, told on his hospital bed at Chambery:

"All night long we listened to the roar of gunfire. As the dawn appeared we could hear the first Prussian bullets pass our ears. It was a curious sensation. One could say at first that a swarm of bumblebees was passing him. Then we all take our breath, and instinctively one opens his cartridge pouch.

"A brief order rings out. We lie down, and a fusillade begins again. What a noise! We make a few leaps forward and lie down and begin firing again. We carry out this maneuver right to the frontier posts.

"A hundred yards farther are the German positions. The charge bayonets order comes, and we leap forward, and the Germans decamp.

"At last we tread on Alsatian ground. Formidable shouts resound in our chests. I run fifty yards and fall senseless from sunstroke. I recovered twenty-four hours later, but the surgeon would not let me remain on the firing line."

Divide Human Targets.

A Belgian sculptor who answered the call to the colors tells how he and several companions narrowly escaped death in a barn during recent fighting about Liege. He said the Belgian troops in the trenches were in the best of spirits throughout the fighting and would pick out their enemies as the Germans approached and divide them among themselves.

The sculptor said that after hours of fighting one of his companions, an artist, was wounded in the shoulder. "I helped him to a barn near by," the sculptor declared. "Some tired soldiers and a farmer were there, and my companion was resting on the stair when the Germans forced their way to the barn. Bullets whizzed about, and the barn was set on fire by the enemy. We knew that to leave the barn meant death in a hail of lead and to remain meant being burned alive. One of the men shouted that he would surrender. Another said he would blow his brains out rather than become a prisoner. The farmer was the only one who kept a cool head. He saw a narrow chink in the wall and began widening it. We helped him, and all managed to squeeze through. The Germans were not on this side of the barn, and we crept toward a wood near by, where we were safe."

"Awaiting Orders to Kill."

"Sometimes the trenches are only just ditches cut like deep furrows among potatoes or along the edge of a field of corn. Others are banked on the attacking side and branches are placed over them to screen the men from the eyes of air men.

"Along the quiet banks of the Meuse between Namur and Dinant are three score of these (trenches). There I saw men lying in readiness with rifles by their sides. Some were asleep on the earth, with a little straw under them, but ready at a word to seize their weapons. Others were gossiping.

"'What do you think of to talk about in the trenches?' I asked a man who was off duty for a moment. His answer was:

"'Oh, anything—the heat, the flies, our experiences. When one is in a situation such as that one catches at anything interesting. We do not talk philosophy, but some of us practice it. Most are only waiting for orders to kill, perhaps, as one waits for a tram and lets one's interest be taken by anything.'"

France Muzzles Husbands.

The Paris Matin gives an amusing instance of the severity of the censorships in France. A young Parisian woman received at her house a letter, on the envelope of which she recognized the handwriting of her husband, now serving at the front. She eagerly tore open the envelope, only to find that it was empty, but in the corner of the envelope in a hand quite unfamiliar to her was written the laconic message:

"Madame, your husband is quite well, but he is too communicative."

The young wife understood that her husband's letter must have been intercepted by the military authorities.

Describe Charleroi Charge.

A glimpse of the fighting to the south of Charleroi was obtained by two travelers who were endeavoring to get from Namur to Givet.

"Suddenly above our heads," they relate, "the guns began to speak. A battery opened fire upon a wood on the other side of the valley. From the fringe of this wood German infantry immediately appeared, some fleeing in disorder, others marching out in good formation. From the right and left our shells dropped upon the first of the Germans who fled from the woods, striking them down as they ran under this fire. The panic stricken infantry fled again to cover under the trees. As they turned a rain of shells destroyed before our eyes the column of troops which was advancing. It was a tragic spectacle."

Captor Returns Sword.

A dispatch to London from Amsterdam tells of the capture of General Leman, commanding the Liege forts, by the Germans.

Battering down one of the outer forts, the Germans found the aged general beneath the wreckage nearly suffocated. He was taken before General von Emmich.

The Belgian handed his sword to the German, but the German returned it "in recognition of General Leman's splendid defense."

Out of Tunnel to Doom.

Thrilling incidents of the fighting about Liege are being told by wounded men who were in the garrison of the besieged city. One said that a half dozen Belgian carabineers came upon seventy Germans who were escaping through a tunnel. As they emerged the Belgians shot them down one by one. When four had been killed the remaining Germans surrendered, believing they faced a large force.

Many stories are told of the daring of German spies. One spy, in the uniform of a Belgian soldier, slept in a hayloft by the side of two Belgian policemen without having his identity discovered.

Grit In Face of Death.

Maastricht, Holland, the gateway to the Belgian theater of the war, presents scenes of suffering and misery seldom seen. Across the neutral frontier have come hundreds of refugees with only the clothes they stand in.

Refugee camps have been established by the Dutch Red Cross and several hospitals have been improvised for the sick and wounded.

The little cathedral has been transformed into a temporary hospital. Stories of the heroism of the wounded German soldiers are told. One instance was typical:

A German soldier, hardly more than a boy, was brought in fearfully wounded. For two days he lay unconscious. Then, just before he died, a glimmer of consciousness returned. He tried to raise himself, failed, then raised his hand weakly in salute and whispered to his nurse:

"Herr Lieutenant, I report myself."

A young officer lingered for days with a shrapnel hole in his side the size of a baseball. His own condition did not seem to trouble him, but he constantly importuned the doctor to help his comrades who were suffering in cots near by.

Women Spies.

Says the London Daily Mail's Ostend correspondent:

"The spying system of the Germans is said to be remarkably complete. One spy was captured in a fort at Liege, where he had been enrolled as a German reserve officer. Women spies are frequently found disguised as nuns or Red Cross helpers. These latter are known to have stolen across battlefields frequently and notified the enemy of the movements of the Belgian troops while pretending to be succoring the wounded.

"Scores of these spies have been caught and executed. Belgian officers tell me that most of the men spies die calmly and fearlessly. The execution of the women spies, however, is generally made a terrible scene. The women who have been sentenced to death on the recent battlefields usually have struggled and scratched as they have been dragged to the post for execution."

Kitchener's War Bed.

When Earl Kitchener entered the British war office to take up his new duties his first remark was addressed to a porter.

"Is there a bed here?" Kitchener asked.

"No, my lord," was the reply.

"Get one," snapped Kitchener.

Air Pilot a Girl.

Writing in the Petit Parisien, a correspondent from Dijon tells of the alarm caused recently by a mysterious aeroplane apparently pursuing a group of six other aeroplanes on the way to Dijon from the southern center. Soon after their arrival at Dijon the stranger landed near the military aerodrome. The mysterious pilot, on being interrogated, proved not to be a spy, but a young English girl, who had donned a uniform in the hope that she might aid France. She was detained pending the arrival of her parents.

Boombs From the Sky.

For the first time in history a great civilized community has been bombarded from the sky. A Zeppelin, heralded only by the buzzing of her motors, circled over Antwerp at 1 o'clock in the morning. Persons who had not yet slept heard the thrumming and darted to their windows as a streak of light shot out from an elongated shadow in the sky. An instant later there was a great crash as a projectile, heavily laden with explosives, tore apart a building 200 yards from the headquarters of the Belgian general staff in the Hotel St. Antoine, which apparently had been the target at which the projectile was aimed.

In all there were ten of these streaks of light from the shadow 1,000 feet above the sleeping city and ten deafening crashes below. They came perhaps half a minute apart.

Hardly had the sound of the first explosion died away before rifles and machine guns, constructed for defense in just such an emergency, were trained on the great shadow overhead and firing was begun on the Zeppelin from all directions below. The fire had no effect and after the tenth projectile was hurled upon the city the Zeppelin rose and disappeared.

Dr. Charles Sarloea of the New York Times-London Daily Chronicle war service says:

"I was awakened at 1 o'clock by a frightful cannonade. A Zeppelin had been sighted about 700 feet above the town. I at once went out into the streets and for eleven hours scarcely left the scene of the catastrophe.

"In a single house I found four dead. One room was a chamber of horrors, the remains of the mangled bodies being scattered in every direction. In the house opposite a husband and wife whose only son had just died in battle, were killed—a whole family wiped out.

"The Place du Poids Public, where the tragedy happened, surpasses in horror anything I ever saw."

Officers Shield Guns.

A letter from an artillery officer at the front, received by a French friend, throws an interesting sidelight upon the spirit animating French artillerymen. The only danger is that they may be overzealous and fire before the proper moment has arrived. In order to make it certain that no shot shall be discharged prematurely, their officers hit upon the plan of standing immediately in front of the muzzles of the loaded guns until the word to fire was given.

New and Terrible War Weapon.

A French scientist is said to have devised a gas bomb which kills every living thing within 300 yards. The bomb was tried on thirty sheep. It burst 200 feet away, but all the animals succumbed to the deadly gas.

War Halts Alps Climbers.

Climbing the central Alps is forbidden by the military law under which Switzerland now lives. The mountain guides were among the first called to the colors.

BROCKTON RATE HIGHER

$22.70 a Record Breaker for Shoe City

A tax rate of $22.70 per $1000, the largest in the history of Brockton, and an increase of $1.70 over the rate of $21 for 1913, was declared Saturday by the board of assessors, says the Enterprise.

The total valuation of Brockton this year is $52,722,038.90, an increase of $2,213,201 over the valuation in 1913. There is an increase in the value of real estate of $1,457,400, and an increase in the value of personal estate of $755,800. In 1913 there was a decrease in the value of personal estate of $140,034.64 as compared with the figures of the preceding year.

The lowest tax rate in the history of Brockton was $13.80 in 1885 and the highest, $22.70, in 1914. The rate for 1913 was the highest since 1903 and, with that exception, was said to be the highest since the years of the Civil war, when $29 was reached.

In 1913 the State tax showed a gain of $22,300, which was thought at that time exceedingly large. This year the city is required to pay $8,887.50 over that amount. The county tax, however, is decreased to the amount of $3,531 85 over what was required in 1913.

The seizure of land by the city for improvements, particularly the property on West Elm street for the proposed girls' High school, where the city lost taxable property to the amount of $59,350 is one reason for not having a greater valuation. Over $100,000 was lost in taxable property when the C. S. Pierce Co., and Brockton Last Co., became incorporated.

This year the amount to be raised on city appropriation is $1,035,228.64, which is $263,782.26 more than last year when the city appropriations totalled $771,444.38. The expenditures of the city, it is shown, were much more than a year ago. The amount to be raised on the State tax additional is also greatly increased to the extent of $2,113, due because of the fact that the cost of the installation of the Gettemy system at City Hall must be paid for this year.

There is an increase of poll tax payers in Brockton from 18,407 in 1913 to 18,927 in 1914, a gain of 520.

The assessors' figures in detail are as follows:

SOCCER LEAGUE.

The Boston and District soccer league directors met Sunday and made final arrangements for the opening of their season next Saturday. Referees have been alloted but none of the Quincy candidates were appointed. The entries for competition for the State Soccer cup will close on Sept. 30. Whether or not the old Fore River team will be reorganized for the season's competition is not known.

Talking Shop.

Enthusiastic interest in one's occupation is always an advantage, but, on the other hand, it is not well for a woman in business to talk of her work at all times and places. Naturally, the thing that we do constantly is our most absorbing interest, but we must remember that other people have other things to talk about.

It will be observed that the aggregate for the School department this year is $9,640 larger than in 1913, and that the appropriation for instruction or pay of masters and teachers is $2,860 larger than last year after including the $3,500 extra for salaries in 1913.

Now, if there is or will be a deficit, in the item of $145,585 for instruction, can it be honestly said that increases in salaries have not caused it?

At the April meeting of the School Committee in 1913 the committees on finance and on teachers made the following recommendations which were adopted by the committee:

"To increase the maximum salaries of all grade teachers to $700, dating from April 1, and the maximum salaries of masters' assistants to $800 on the same date; also to rate the men assistants at the High school who are not department heads, or submasters, as assistant masters, and to fix the maximum salary to that position at $1100.

In the report of the School Committee meeting of Jan. 27, 1914, the Daily Ledger said:

"The special committee appointed to consider the request of the Masters Association for an increase in salary recommended that the maximum be raised from $1,600 to $1,800, and that the raise in the present salaries be in accordance with the usual plan. That is a raise of $100 each year until the maximum is reached. The report was accepted and adopted."

The Daily Ledger wishes that all departments of the city might have larger appropriations. Some of them urgently need more, but unless Quincy can provide them within the $12 limit they should be postponed.

Progress.

"Thirty years ago," said a woman of middle age, "it was the custom of demure girls to sit in public conveyances with their silk-gloved wrists crossed. It is now the custom of demure girls to sit in public conveyances with their silk-stockinged ankles crossed."—New York Sun.

Sick-Room Light.

If there are electric lights in the sick room they will generally be found too brilliant, hurting the eyes of the patient, and not every sick room has the electric lights that can be turned up or down. Make a little green silk bag and fasten it over the incandescent bulb and it will give a good but subdued and harmless light.

DARTWELL FIRST AT WINTHROP

A fleet of 60 yachts took part Saturday in the annual open race under the auspices of the Cottage Park yacht club off Winthrop. There was a steady northwest breeze during the race and some good time was made in going over the course. The winners in the several classes were as follows: In class A the Virginia won, while the three Quincy boats Eleanor, Areyto and Marie L, finished at the bottom of the list.

In class D the Dartwell repeated her usual performance this season of finishing in the first position with the Clara second. The order of finish of the other boats in this class was Iris, Dolly III, Mudjekeewis and Grayling.

In class H the Little Haste won with the Wanderer second.

In class I the Dorchen II of A. W. Findlay finished first and in class S the Maritiza.

SPORT NEWS

Commodore Crane of the Quincy Yacht Club has the original letters of the old catboat Wildfire, built in 1874 by H. A. Keith, the ex-Commodore. The letters will be mounted and given a conspicuous place in the clubhouse to commemorate a yacht that dates back to the year the club was founded and achieved a splendid record. The Wildfire was a V bottom of 16 feet waterline contemporaneous with the Red Lion and Rocket. Until recently she was used for afternoon sailing at Marblehead.

BARRY DAY AT TAUNTON

Stove City is Wild Over George Barry

The city of Taunton will observe "Barry Day" on Labor Day in recognition of the fine service rendered by Catcher George Barry of the Taunton team of the Colonial league. The management made an announcement to this effect Friday.

Catcher Barry is the son of Michael Barry of the Quincy Fire department, and started his base ball career in this city. For several seasons he played with the champion teams of the Provinces and this spring signed up with Jimmy Gray of the Lowell New England league. Seeing no regular work in sight he joined the Taunton club and since then has been invincible in his position.

During June he returned to Lowell after a controversy over salary but he rejoined the Taunton boys when the Board of Trade and other organizations passed resolutions asking him to do so.

Barry is considered one of the most popular players in the Colonial league and has the hearty support of the Taunton fans. This week the pastor of the Catholic church paid the admission of 30 "kiddies" for the express purpose of rooting for him.

President Johnson of the common council personally congratulated Catcher Barry Thursday as he took his position behind the bat. He spoke of the satisfaction of the fans in having a man in the catchers berth who worked hard at all times to hold Taunton in a respectable position in the league, and expressed his pleasure because of it. The fans heartily applauded the episode.

All of the exercises coincident to the celebration will take place in the morning. The members of the city government have been assigned to reserved seats and a band has been engaged to furnish music during the game. Preparations are being made to handle the record crowd of the season.

Many Quincy fans are planning on going to Taunton that morning to take an active part in the recognition to be accorded their townsman.

Catcher Barry has established an enviable mark so far this season. He has been worked regularly but with the closing of the schedule is commencing to feel the strain. He is enjoying perfect health however and expects to remain in Taunton through out the winter.

PLAYGROUND AT WOLLASTON

Question Cleared Up

Quincy Readers Can No Longer Doubt the Evidence.

Again and again we have read of strangers in distant towns who have been cured by this or that medicine. But Quincy's pertinent question has always been "Has anyone here in Quincy been cured?" The word of a stranger living a hundred miles away may be true, but it cannot have the same weight with us as the word of our own citizens, whom we know and respect, and whose evidence we can so easily prove.

Mrs. George Atkinson, 80 Main street, Quincy, says: "One of my family had trouble from weak kidneys caused by his work. He also suffered from backache. He used six boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills and they cured him. He don't complain at all now. We give all the credit for this cure to Doan's Kidney Pills. We keep a supply in the house all the time."

St. Petersburg Reports That Several Batteries of Field Guns Have Also Been Lost by Germans In East Prussia—Claim Czar's Troops Are on the Road to Decisive Victory

London, Aug. 31.—A dispatch to The Observer from St. Petersburg says the German railways in East Prussia have been relaid on the Russian gauge and there is through communication between St. Petersburg and Insterburg, in East Prussia, a short distance northwest of Gumbinnen.

Twenty-nine killed and thirty-eight wounded was the price in men paid by the British for the naval action against the Germans in Heligoland bight.

An official statement says that of 1200 men composing the crews of the German warships sunk off Heligoland only 330 were saved.

The Russians, it is added, need need waste no lives in their attempt to capture Koenigsberg, as it is easily isolated, and Russia, who finds that she has mobilized more men than are immediately required, can continue her advance.

A thousand Austrian prisoners have reached Kiev, and about 800 Germans have been brought to Moscow.

Several captured batteries of field guns have been brought to Vilna, Kiev and Moscow, while others, especially Maxims, have been turned over to regiments at the front for use against their former owners.

Desperate fighting continues along the Austrian frontier, says an official statement issued at St. Petersburg.

"In East Prussia," says the Russian war office, "the garrisons and fortresses of Thorn and Graudenz (east of the Vistula) are being attacked with a large number of siege guns. We have taken 3000 prisoners in the operations east of Lemburg (capital of Galicia).

"Near Podgorz (just south of the Vistula) the enemy lost 3000 men and we captured four guns, a number of caissons of ammunition and nine guns abandoned by the Austrians when they crossed the Zolokia. North of Tomacheff we took 1000 prisoners and surrounded and defeated the Hungarian Fifteenth division east of Tomacheff, entire regiments surrendering.

Scattered encounters in eastern Galicia have developed into a general battle extending 100 miles from the southern districts of Lublin, in Russian Poland, to a point beyond Lemberg in Galicia, says a St. Petersburg dispatch. It adds:

"In East Prussia the Germans have been driven further back. Their losses were particularly heavy at Muhlen, twenty-two miles southwest of Allenstein, and it is only a question of a few days when the Germans will be driven beyond the Vistula.

"Panic now reigns at Danzig, the population of which is fleeing to Berlin. The result of the general battle now being fought is expected to influence largely the whole campaign against Austria. The scant reports thus far received indicate that Russia is on the road to a decisive victory."

BATTERED TO PIECES

Vessel Wrecked Off Plum Island and Two of Crew Lost

Newburyport, Mass., Aug. 31.—In fog-thick blackess just before daybreak the lumber schooner Pearl Nelson, which had been battered about Massachusetts bay by a northeast gale for ten hours of the night, waterlogged and on her beam ends, with her captain and crew lashed to the main shrouds, crashed onto the breakers off Plum island and shivered into a hopeless wreck.

One of the crew, Gus Erickson, was battered to death by a timber while he was struggling through the water to land, and Joseph Crossman, the cook, a former sea captain, 71 years old, sank to his death in the waves.

Captain Kilton, aged 60, and two of his crew who were rescued are all badly cut and bruised, but are expected to recover.

CITY MARKET FOR BOSTON

Direct Sale of Foodstuffs to Consumers Planned by Mayor

Boston, Aug. 31.—Mayor Curley is out to drive war prices for food down to a living level by establishing one or more huge rent-free open-air markets.

Tentative plans already have been adopted by the mayor for the first of these free markets on a large plot of city-owned land on Canal street.

So certain is Curley that the plan under consideration will be successful that he has refused an offer of $60,000 for a thirty-year lease of the land for other purposes.

Ambiguous.

Mrs. Exe—How does your cook take it when you go into the kitchen and tell her how to do things? Mrs. Wye—Oh, she doesn't mind.—Boston Transcript.

MOB WRECKS STORES

Providence Riot of Italians In Protest Against Higher Prices

Providence, Aug. 31.—Stores were wrecked, people injured and a large quantity of foodstuffs was destroyed during a riot which followed meetings of protest against the increased price of food, held in the Italian colony.

Hospitals cared for sixteen injured rioters, four of whom are suffering from serious bullet wounds One patrolman was stabbed, and two others lacerated by bottles thrown at them.

Every store front on Atwells avenue, for a distance of about one block, was wrecked by the disturbers. The store of Frank P. Ventrone was invaded by the crowd after the front had beeen broken in and large quantities of foodstuffs were thrown into the street.

Big Crops In Maine

Houlton, Me., Aug. 31.—Farmers in Arcostook county are going to profit handsomely this year through harvests. The potato crop is said to cover the record acreage. The outlook for an enormous hay crop is as good.

ENCOUNTER IN THE NORTH SEA

Much More Serious Than Was at First Reported

FIGHT RAGED FOR EIGHT HOURS

Eleven German Warships Sunk While British Have Two Damaged—Kaiser's Vessels Drawn Out of Shelter by Light Cruiser Which Fights Single-Handed For a While

London, Aug. 31.—Instead of only two German cruisers having been sunk and another having been disabled, together with two torpedo boat destroyers having been sent to the bottom, it is learned from survivors that eleven vessels of the kaiser's navy were practically destroyed in the encounter off Heligoland between the British fleet and a German fleet.

Many of the British as well as German wounded were brought into the port of Chatham on board the British light cruiser Amethyst, the leader of the flotilla, and the destroyer Laertes, which were the only two British vessels damaged in the conflict.

Many German officers are said to have been killed in battle. Ninety German prisoners from the Mainz have been landed at Leith, while the others have been taken ashore at other landing places. Sixteen of the prisoners in Leith are suffering from wounds received in the battle.

Close inspection showed the Amethyst to have suffered little in her upper works. But here and there were telltale sheets of canvas which had been stretched over what were presumably shot holes.

The Laertes showed unmistakable signs of battle and her sternmost funnel was shot clean away. It was apparent, however, that the four-inch gun amidships was still in order, although swung around to an inboard position.

The British light cruiser Fearless took a prominent part in the battle. She approached within ten miles of the German coast and drew out the German cruisers, which attempted to surround her. At one moment she was engaged single handed against four of them. One German ship had come within 7000 yards when she was struck and burst into flames.

After they had found the range the German marksmanship was good and the wireless of the Fearless was shot away. She was hit nineteen times.

Afterward the Fearless stood by the disabled German ship, although she herself was in great danger of being sunk. The arrival of the other British cruisers speedily decided the engagement.

Toward the end of the battle some British pinnances engaged in picking up Germans who were struggling in the water were followed by the German squadron and had to beat a hasty retreat, leaving the men to their fate.

British cruisers and destroyers, some of them showing signs of the battle in which they were engaged off Heligoland, have arrived at Harwich, Chatham and Sheerness. They had British and German wounded aboard. The Germans were picked up at sea after their ships went to the bottom. Some men died before the warships rached port and were buried at sea; others died on the way to the hospital and their bodies were taken to the naval mortuary.

British sailors who went on board the German criser Mainz after she was put out of action say the effect of the British gunfire was terrible. The masts were shot away and turrets were battered in. The decks were a mass of wreckage and dead and dying sailors were lying all over the ship.

The engagement lasted about eight hours, during which the fighting was sharp and terrible, according to a dispatch from Harwich.

M'REYNOLDS CONFIRMED

Advanced to Supreme Bench by Senate Vote of 44 to 6

Washington, Aug. 31.—The senate confirmed the nomination of Attorney General McReynolds to be an associate justice of the supreme court. The vote was 44 to 6. The principle speech in opposition to him was made by Senator Norris of Nebraska.

The senate also confirmed, without a rollcall, the nomination of Thomas W. Gregory to be attorney general.

No Pie Crust Promises

Wise advertisers never make "pie-crust" promises.

They know that to break faith with the public would be fatal—worse than throwing their money away.

That is one reason why advertised goods are more in demand.

People know that there is quality behind them.

They look on them as standards. Any dealer knows that there are more calls for advertised goods than for goods not advertised.

This is especially true if they happen to have been advertised in the newspapers which directly reach the people.

The standard of advertising is more exacting today than ever before. Advertisers are more careful of their promises and more interesting in their text and illustrations.

The world grows better.

What Uncle Intended

He Had an Odd Way of Bringing It About

By SARAH BAXTER

An old man lay on a sickbed, pale and emaciated. At a table close by, with writing materials before him, sat a man with that expression on his face which is best described as a business thoughtfulness and is usually to be found on the face of a lawyer.

"Read to me these bequests, Mr. Cutler," said the sick man.

Mr. Cutler read over two or three items, none of them amounting to over $100.

"Now," continued the testator, "I wish you to put the following in legal language: 'My nephew, Edward Hendry, son of my brother of the same name, and my niece, Lillian Clegg, the daughter of my sister, Elizabeth Clegg, are to be notified after my death at the same hour and minute that whichever is first married shall inherit the residue of my estate.'"

The lawyer laid down his pen and looked fixedly at his client.

"I fear, Mr. Hendry," he said, "that by such a course you will so entangle your estate that it will go to neither your nephew nor your niece, but be absorbed in the chancery court."

"I'll risk that," replied the other. "I have certain intentions, and if they can't be carried out I don't care where my fortune goes after my death. Put it down as I say in proper form."

The attorney spent nearly half an hour over the item, then read it to the sick man, who appeared to be satisfied with it, and said:

"Now write, 'I direct that my will remain in the keeping of my attorney, Ebenezer Cutler, who is directed to keep secret this provision and to announce it to my nephew and my niece at the same moment, giving no advantage whatsoever to either, and that said attorney is to receive the sum of $10,000 for faithfully carrying it out.'"

"Who, may I ask," said Mr. Cutler, "is to decide whether I carry out your intention faithfully?"

"The courts, if the matter is questioned."

The attorney immediately went to work to express the provision in legal parlance and when it was finished read it to the testator, who, after making a few minor corrections, seemed satisfied with it. Then the lawyer copied all that he had written, called in witnesses, who signed the will, gathered up his papers and, after an encouraging remark to the sick man, withdrew.

Two days later Edward Hendry received a letter bearing the official stamp of Cutler, Morrison & Hyde, attorneys, notifying him of the death of his uncle, David Hendry, and saying he was interested in the estate. He was requested to call at the office of the firm on the 16th day of September at 10 o'clock a. m., when he would be informed as to the nature of his interest. Miss Lillian Clegg also received a notification to the same effect.

On the morning of the 15th of September Miss Clegg drove up to the office of Cutler, Morrison & Hyde and was shown into a private room. She had not been there ten minutes when the door was opened and in walked her cousin, Edward Hendry. Each started on seeing the other, and each appeared greatly embarrassed. Mr. Hendry bowed stiffly, and Miss Clegg returned the bow with hauteur.

"It is some time since we met," remarked the gentleman, in order to break an embarrassing silence.

"Yes, it is."

"Uncle David was a very good man."

"An excellent man."

"Rather singular, though."

"Very singular."

"His intentions were good, but he was not always wise in carrying them out."

There was no reply to this. Miss Clegg knew very well what was meant. Her uncle had endeavored to make a match between her and her cousin Edward Hendry when he was twenty and she was barely eighteen. Ned had at the time become temporarily infatuated with the daughter of a butcher and had shown plainly that even a million of dollars, which his uncle had agreed to settle on him in case he married his cousin, was not sufficient to cause him to give up the lady of his love.

"I've often thought," he continued, "that if Uncle David had chosen a different time and had not made it a matter of money"—

"There's no use going backward. It's too late now. Uncle is dead, and I'm engaged."

The young man looked very much disappointed.

"I'm engaged to a splendid fellow. He's considered to be one of the finest young men in America."

Hendry when he had been absent for some time from the butcher's daughter and returned to see her as she was—commonplace and homely—had sought to undo what he had done with his cousin. She had declined even to speak to him when she met him on the street. She was now inflicting upon him further punishment. However, he was not minded to take his drubbing easily. He told an untruth, pretending to be engaged.

"My fiancee is very lovely, too," he said, looking at his cousin to observe the effect upon her. But if she had any interest in his heart she refrained from showing it. She made no comment on his engagement whatever.

"I suppose Uncle David has left us something," he added, turning the subject, "but I fear we shall have to be content with a mere pittance compared with what we might have had."

"I don't see why you say 'we might have had.' I was not aware that I consented to his plans."

"True, you did not. But possibly"—

"No such thing. I had made up my mind before you made up yours."

"I have no doubt of it."

"All the wealth of the Indies would not have tempted me"—

At this point a clerk entered and told these two young persons that Mr. Cutler would like to see them in his private room. The lady sailed out first, with her head held high, and was followed by the gentleman, who looked as if he would like to have some man give him an excuse to strike him. When they entered Mr. Cutler's office they found him sitting at a long table, and he motioned them to seats on the opposite side. Then, taking up a document that lay before him, he said in a professional tone:

"This is the last will and testament of David Hendry. After making a few minor bequests he leaves the residue of his estate, which I think will foot up something over a million dollars, to whichever of you two shall first be married."

The announcement was received with a profound silence, but stirred a volcano of emotion in the breasts of the cousins. The first word spoken was by the young man.

"In that event," he said, "the estate will undoubtedly go to my cousin, since she is engaged to be married and can comply with the provisions very quickly, while I should be obliged to find a girl who would be willing to marry me and whom I would be willing to marry. This would take up considerable time. Besides, I would not choose a wife simply for the purpose of securing a fortune."

"I thought," said Miss Clegg, "you said you were engaged?"

"Did I?"

"Yes; to a lovely girl."

A sickly smile came upon Hendry's features and passed immediately.

"Pardon me," said the attorney. "The testator appointed me to notify you of this singular provision of his will. Further than that I have nothing to do with the matter except to say that if either of you marries and claims the estate I shall expect undoubted evidence not only of the marriage, but of the hour, minute and even second on which you are pronounced married by the person who performed the ceremony. This must be sworn to and certified by a notary."

"It is not necessary for my cousin to take all this trouble so far as I am concerned," said Hendry. "I would not be so ungallant as to keep her from a fortune if I could, and I'm not minded to marry at present. I see no reason why she should not marry her lover and enter upon the possession of the property."

"I wonder why uncle didn't divide it between us," said the girl after a pause.

Hendry rose from his chair and, addressing his cousin, said:

"You may take your time in making your wedding preparations without fear that I shall deprive you of your inheritance, though as to this you must act your own pleasure."

"One moment," said Lillian. "Mr. Cutler, can't we divide the property?"

"Not until after one or the other has been married and satisfied the terms of the will."

Miss Clegg thought hard for a few moments. "Ned," she said at last, "suppose you get married and after the wedding give me a part of the property."

"Suppose you do that."

"Whom would I marry?"

"Marry? Why, that very fine fellow to whom you are engaged."

"Oh, dear, I forgot! I'm not engaged. I said that only to make you feel bad for the way you treated me when Uncle"—

"Not engaged?"

"No."

"Excuse me for a moment," said the lawyer. "I have a client waiting for me. I will return presently."

When he had closed the door behind him Lillian said:

"Dear uncle! He was very fond of us both."

"Yes, and he wished us to inherit this property together. If I had not made a fool of myself over that red headed, freckled"—

"Don't speak disrespectfully of one you have loved."

"Love be hanged!"

"I have no doubt that uncle made his will as he did to bring us together."

"That intention was"—

"Thwarted by you. I could no nothing since you preferred another."

"I didn't—I mean I don't."

"If you say a word against the girl you loved I shall not respect you. Suppose it had been I that you loved and she were now charging you with having preferred me to her."

"You can forgive me."

She was sidling up to him and he was putting his arms about her when there was a faint rap at the door, and Mr. Cutler returned with the same businesslike air he had worn when he went out, though his knocking before entering belied it.

"Mr. Cutler," said Lillian, "you needn't trouble yourself further about this matter. We have compromised."

"Indeed."

"Yes; Ned has apologized for his brutal treatment of me when Uncle Dave tried to bring us together some time ago, and we are going to do just as the dear old man wished we should."

FLOATING FOES OF BATTLESHIPS

Contact Mines Sure to Play Big Part in the War.

TWO TYPES, ONE HARMLESS

But Evidently the Powers Are Not Planting the Latter, Which Are Set Off by Electricity From Shore Stations—Germans Employed This Coast Defense In 1870.

The submarine mine is going to play a big part in the present terrible struggle in Europe before peace is re-established, says a writer in the New York Sun. Probably it will cause more havoc than it did during the Russo-Japanese war, when ship after ship was struck below the water line and sent to the bottom of the sea.

The Germans were busy mining a part of the open sea off their coast when the Koenigen Luise was caught redhanded by a British flotilla of destroyers and shot to pieces. However, the kaiser's mine layer had already sown the seed of disaster.

The flagship of the flotilla, the scout cruiser Amphion, went confidently on and in time turned and headed back toward the English coast. Suddenly the little cruiser plunged like a stricken horse and shook violently as she hit one of the German electro contact mines. Instantly there was an awful explosion, and the expanding gases from the mine literally tore the craft in two as they rushed upward.

Great Britain has now determined to plant contact mines in offshore navigable waters, and it is credibly reported that Austria, Russia and France have done likewise.

To the peace lover this menace to peaceful shipping is woefully shocking, and yet it is substantially in keeping with an international agreement entered into at The Hague after the last conflict in the far east.

Germany Profits by Experience.

The Germans are not new at this form of coast defense and in their present campaign are profiting by earlier experiences. The moral effect of submarine mines was amply demonstrated during the Franco-Prussian war of 1870-1. Then the Teutons defended their principal harbors and estuaries in the Baltic and in the North sea by means of mechanical and electromechanical mines. The former contained from 80 to 100 pounds of gunpowder and the latter about 200 pounds of an explosive called dualine.

During that war no opportunities occurred to test the efficiency of these mines, as the mere fact of their presence prevented the French fleet from undertaking naval operations on any scale. But on raising their mine field the Germans lost a large number of lives because of unexpected explosions.

There are two types of contact mines. The first are planted in approaches to harbors and channels and of necessity must be rendered harmless except when the foe is approaching. These mines are controlled from a shore station, inasmuch as they are inoperative unless current is fed to them from an electrical power station ashore. No matter how they may be ordinarily bumped into by passing craft—within some reasonable limits—they are substantially inert until the current from the shore station is switched on. Plainly this is not the sort of electro contact mine which the powers are now planting in the open sea and far from any base of control. Once planted and after a definite interval they become "alive" and will explode the moment a craft tilts them over a prescribed number of degrees.

Most of the submarine mines operate on the same principle, the difference lying in the day that each power chooses to make the mine active when struck.

Wet Guncotton Formerly Used.

Until recently all of them were charged with wet guncotton, which was hammered or detonated by the blow caused by a small charge of dry guncotton and this in turn set off by a little capsule filled with fulminate of mercury, a chemical capable of exploding with extreme violence. Fulminate of mercury can be ignited by electricity. Other explosives also are now used. Japan employs melinite, Russia has used pyroxylin, and latterly other countries have taken up trinitrotoluol, which has a greater bursting violence than guncotton and possesses qualities of stability in a chemical sense.

The contact mine, unlike the larger observation mine which is deliberately fired from the shore, does its damage when actually against the ship to be hurt, and therefore it is not necessary to use the same quantity of explosive as when the injury is to be inflicted from some distance. Now, if contact mines are too heavily charged and too close together the explosion of one may detonate the other and thus in turn needlessly set off a whole mine field. Again, the wider the space between mines the greater is the chance of the enemy slipping through. Therefore to make a whole field effective against an approaching fleet and to prevent a single vessel from exploding the entire group—a sacrifice that any determined enemy would willfully make—it is needful to limit the charge of the contact mine so that its reverberations when detonated will not affect its neighbors.

PEACE

The alarms of war let us forget.
Here from this pine spired hill
Look on the yellowing fields of maize,
Past where the languid cattle graze,
On where the autumn's sunshot haze
Silvers the serpent rill.

The alarms of war let us forget
A moment if no more.
Look on the blue-gray smoke that curls
Up from the homes of rustic churls,
Far from the acrid, eddying whirls
And the hate charged cannon's roar.

The alarms of war let us forget
As the sun goes down the slope,
As the crickets shrill in the dusk so still,
As the waters dream by the silent mill,
And a whisper comes from the moonlit hill—
This is a whole world's hope!

READY TO HONOR THE FLAG AT GREAT CELEBRATION.

Plans Perfected For Centennial of "The Star Spangled Banner."

In commemoration of the events that surrounded the birth of "The Star Spangled Banner," the national anthem, a great patriotic celebration is to take place at Baltimore Sept. 6 to 13, inclusive.

Baltimore will entertain thousands of visitors during the centennial week. President Wilson and former Presidents Taft and Roosevelt head the list of distinguished guests. All the governors and the mayors of every city of 5,000 or more inhabitants have been invited by Mayor Preston, president of the national star spangled banner centennial commission.

Sept. 7, industrial day, the Constellation, oldest of the vessels now in the United States navy, will sail into the harbor, accompanied by American warships.

Sept. 8, Francis Scott Key day, will be marked by a floral automobile parade, the Maryland tournament, a great street carnival and other attractions. On Sept. 9 there will be a parade 60,000 strong of members of fraternal orders. Sept. 10 will be municipal day, for which Baltimore has planned many local features. On Sept. 11, army and navy day, thousands of regulars, sailors and militia, with veteran organizations, will parade.

On Sept. 12 the original star spangled banner, which is now in the National museum, Washington, will be borne through the streets of Baltimore to Fort McHenry, the escort consisting of the president, many governors and mayors and a picked guard of 100 men from each of the states in the Union in 1814. Fort McHenry will be dedicated as a public park, with an address by President Wilson, and 6,000 children will sing the national anthem.

The celebration will end Sept. 13. Peace day, when peace will be the theme in all pulpits of Baltimore.

PERFECT SHOES FOR ARMY.

New Footgear Evolved After Year of Experiments.

A nation wide shoemaking contest has just been brought to a close by the awarding of two army contracts to the winners.

"Next to the quality of the gun he carries," said one of these army experts, "more depends upon the condition of the shoe he wears than upon any other factor that goes toward the makeup of an effective soldier."

It took more than a year of experiment to obtain satisfactory results. Countless X ray photographs were made, the position of the bones of the feet were noted and the anatomy before, during and after marches were studied and compared. All this time different models were tried and theories were worked out. Finally the type of shoe was evolved with its straight line on the big toe side, its snug instep and a chance for the toes to lie as freely and naturally as in a moccasin.

A USE FOR VICE PRESIDENTS.

Even After One Goes Out of Office His Name May Work Wonders.

L. O. Hartman of Chicago, an agent for the Foreign Missions society of the Methodist Episcopal church, who returned to America on the liner Principe di Udine, brought back an amusing story illustrating how well known our vice presidents are in foreign countries.

"We had an awful time getting from Semlin, Hungary, to Vienna. At one place I was held under suspicion of being a spy. I had an old letter of introduction written by Mr. Fairbanks of Indiana when he was vice president. A young officer of the Austrian army read the letter and became voluble.

"'Ah,' he said, 'this is your vice president—a great man. I have heard of him.'

"He gave me a pass, which got me through the country."

'DON'TS" FOR WAR REFUGEES.

American Publication In London Warns Against Worry.

The American Bulletin, a London paper published for American refugees, contains this list of "don'ts:"

"Don't worry. To do so is to annoy yourself and, what is more important, others.

"Don't grab a stateroom for four when there are but two in your party.

"Don't forget that riches and a sense of comfort depend on what you know how to do without.

QUINCY AUTO KILLS A BOY

Assessor Bergfors Was Riding in Abington

The automobile of Eric Bergfors of the Quincy Board of Assessors struck Paul Balcom, a seven year old Dorchester boy, on Bedford street, Abington, Sunday afternoon. The child died later as a result of the injuries received.

Several versions of the affair were reported in the morning papers, most of them to the effect that Mr. Bergfors ran away and was followed by the boy's father in a high powered machine.

Mr. Bergfors this morning denies this charge. His story of the accident is, that while proceeding down Bedford street at fair speed he saw a machine on the roadside some distance away, and that as he came nearer two high powered machines came toward him. He says he ran his machine as close to the right side of the road as possible, and as they passed turned toward the centre when the boy jumped into the path of his machine, from behind the last auto.

The left mudguard struck the boy and threw him to the street. Mr. Bergfors says he stopped his machine and went back. A doctor was summoned and the boy was taken to the Brockton City Hospital in a high powered machine, the driver of which offered his services. Mr. Bergfors further says he was given the name of a Brockton man who saw the accident and can bear out his story of the affair.

After waiting fifteen or more minutes, Mr. Bergfors says he started for Quincy, via Weymouth and when near Weymouth Landing met the machine in which the boy's father was riding on his way to Dorchester. Mr. Bergfors said he then told Mr. Balcom he was going to the Quincy police station to make a report of the affair and Mr. Balcom rode along also.

According to a morning paper, "Mr. Bergfors was not arrested because the police failed to locate Herbert Pratt, clerk of the court and swear out a warrant and Chief of Police Hollis of Abington says that he will be arrested this morning."

Mr. Bergfors this morning made a personal report of the accident at the office of the Massachusetts Highway Commission and in accordance with their regulations will make a written report also.

LATER.

A warrant wass issued this morning for the arrest of Mr. Bergfors and he went to the Hingham court house where it was served. He was arraigned and bail was set at $1000. The court accepted William L. Buckley, chairman of the board of assessors of Quincy as surety. Gustave B. Bates went to the court house to act in that capacity in case two sureties were needed and arrived as Mr. Bergfors left the court room.

LIQUOR CASES IN COURT

Two West Quincy Men Fined $50 and $100

Two Quincy liquor cases were disposed of in the district court this morning. The first was that of Emilo Palma of Willard street, whose place was raided a week ago. Palma pleaded not guilty at first, but when he understood that 21 West Quincy men would be summoned as witnesses he withdrew his plea of not guilty and pleaded guilty and was fined $75.

Inspector Goodhue testifying said that his record showed that during the past three months 5000 bottles of beer and ale, in addition to whiskey, had been delivered at the place and between Aug. 1 and 23, there were 2000 bottles of beer and ale in addition to some whiskey delivered at Palmas premises. He also testified that when the place was raided there were eight or ten West Quincy fellows seated on the lawn some of whom were drinking beer from bottles.

The second case was that of Victor Merzie of West Quincy whose case was tried before Judge Pratt. There were a number of witnesses and their testimony was very contradictory and after the case was over Judge Pratt remarked that the case had developed some of the worst cases of perjury he had ever heard.

The police then got busy and it is reported that as a result some cases of perjury may be brought to court. The police also stated that they intended to proceed against the owner of the premises. Merzie was fined $100.

ARRESTED IN NEW YORK.

A New York dispatch of Saturday to the Globe says: In dread of spies, who, he said, seemed to be all about him, Andrew Schaine, an Austrian laborer of Quincy, Mass, tried to creep along West 42d st. early today, and was caught in a doorway at 13 by policeman Winitsky of the East 51st-st Station, who could not imagine what the man was doing.

Schaine had an automatic pistol in one pocket and a 10-inch dirk in another and he was arraigned in Yorkville Court today for violation of the Sullivan law.

He told the police that he had come to New York to offer his services to the Austrian consul as a soldier, but that the presence of spies about the Grand Central Terminal, where he arrived from Quincy yesterday morning, caused him to keep to the station all day and it was not until dawn that he dared to venture forth.

Andrew Schaine is not known in Quincy . People in the small Austrian section here say that they do not know any man by that name.

STOLEN AUTO RECOVERED.

The automobile of William Suter of 51 Sea avenue, which was stolen Saturday morning from the yard of Arthur H. Dunham, 1290 Sea street, Houghs Neck, was recovered in Brookline on Sunday. Four boys were in the machine when it was discovered, and they abandoned it when they saw the minions of the law approaching. The machine is thought to have been taken for the purpose of making a quick trip to Brookline. The police of that town will, it is expected, make arrests within a few days.

BUSINESS MEN'S CANDIDATE

F. F. Crane's Claims For Congress

All three of the Republican candidates for Congressman from the Fourteenth district, Messrs Crane of Quincy, Raymond of Milton, and Howard of Brockton, were present at the meeting of the Republican town committee at South Weymouth Saturday afternoon. The principal speaker was Guy Adams Ham, Republican candidate for Councillor. Each of the three candidates for Congressmen were allowed ten minutes each in which to set forth their claim for the suffrage of the voters.

Ex-Commodore Crane, Quincy's candidate for congress, said that he came before them as a business men's candidate and that he believed that whatever made better business for the district must be a benefit to every man, woman and child in the district. For twenty years he had given his best thought and study to the development of the waterfront by deepening the channels and locating new industries along the channel. One of the large industries he had been successful in locating in this district was the Fore River Shipbuilding Corporation, while another was the Baker Yacht Basin which have expended over $106,000,000 since they located, and they have a pay roll of over $60,000 a week in both industries, a very large percent of which was expended for labor and thus benefits all branches of business

WATER SUPPLY SHUT OFF AWHILE

Connection With New Metropolitan Main Quickly Made

For a time Saturday night Quincy was without its usual water pressure for the reason that Saturday night was the time selected for connecting up of the new duplicate 20 inch Metropolitan water main that has been laid through Milton. While the connection was being made, the supply was cut off and the city was dependent upon the standpipes in the several parts of the city for its supply and pressure.

The fact that the main supply was to be cut out was not generally known as it was not desired to create any undue alarm. Chief Billings however was notified, and every fire station in the city was notified that in case of an alarm to make good time in responding, and the steamer was ordered to respond to all alarms.

Italy seems to have assumed that "splendid isolation" that so long was England's pride.

Give Your Neighbor an Equal Chance

By HOLLAND.

If you have been buying goods of a mail order house you doubtless think it has been to your advantage to do so. You have believed that you were saving money or were getting better goods. Let us see if this is true.

Have you tried to do business with your local merchant—your neighbor—on the terms that the mail order house exacts? No? Then suppose you try it.

Just go into the store, plank down your cash and tell what you want. You might even tell the merchant that you will wait a few days for the goods. See if your local merchant can't serve you better and as cheaply as the mail order house.

The local merchant usually extends credit for two, four or six months. The mail order house demands cash in advance. It uses your money as working capital. It loses nothing in interest, nothing in bad debts or on slow paying customers. Try this cash in advance plan on the local merchant—the man you know—and see if he can't make it to your advantage to

SPEND YOUR MONEY WHERE YOU MAKE IT.

REPUBLICANS AT SQUANTUM

Personals of Interest and Dance at Inn

Dancing was enjoyed by Squantumites at Lee's Inn on Saturday evening. Because of the inclemency of the weather a smaller crowd than usual attended. From eight to nine there was exhibition dancing by Charles Cullen and Ella Perkins.

Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Wallace returned Saturday evening from a tour of the White Mountains.

Rev. T. W. Davison preached Sunday at the 4 o'clock church service Mr. Davison has been absent a month enjoying a vacation.

The annual outing of the Republican League of Ward 10, Boston was held Saturday afternoon at the Squantum Inn. Most of the members met at Postoffice square and came out in two large electric cars. After dinner the speakers were introduced by Hon. Charles H. Innes. Those that spoke were: Hon. Malcolm E. Nichols, senator from the 5th Suffolk District, Representative Channing H. Cox of Somerville, Senator George Holden Tinkham; John J. Higgins, formerly district attorney of Middlesex County; Representative Samuel Davis of Ward 10, Representative Herbert A. Wilson of Ward 25, Hon. Herbert B. Wasgatt of Everett, and Frank L. Brian.

GRADUATION AT HOSPITAL

Exercises Will Be Held on Lawn Wednesday

On Wednesday afternoon, at 3 o'clock there will be held at the City Hospital the graduating exercises of the first class of nurses to complete the three years' course. The class will be addressed by Dr. Edward H. Nichols, assistant professor of surgery in the Harvard medical school, visiting surgeon to Boston City Hospital, and consulting surgeon to the Quincy Hospital.

If the weather permits, the exercises will be held on the lawn. An opportunity will be given to visit the Nurses' home. All friends of the graduating class and of the hospital are cordially invited to be present.

ASSAULT OVER 35 CENTS

Necato Sakaluk was arrested Sunday night by Officer Shea for assaulting Thomas Vanaski with a knife. The trouble is said to have grown out of an argument over 35 cents. The row took place at a Russian boarding house at 200 Main street. Vanaski told the police that Sakaluk tried to stab him with a bread knife. The latter however received some cuts and his shirt was torn to shreds in the row which followed.

Officer Shea heard the row and rushing to the scene tried to separate the men, but it was some minutes before he was able to get the twisters in the prisoner, whom he held at bay from the large crowd that had gathered until the patrol wagon which had been summoned arrived.

Sakaluk was arraigned in court for assault and through counsel pleaded not guilty. The case was then continued until Thursday for hearing.

DISTRICT COURT.

Oscar W. Nieminan was fined $30 for reckless driving of an automobile at Holbrook.

Martin Pellerin was fined $10, John I. Herleigh $5, Matti Koinrila $5, for drunkenness at Quincy, and Thomas Purcell $10 for drunkenness at Randolph.

Allen B. Voter was fined $3.30 costs for drunkenness at Weymouth.

WANTED Rags!

Millions of dollars' worth of Rags collected annually

The General says:

My output of Certain-teed Roofing has grown to such enormous proportions that I am having difficulty in getting enough rags of good grade to supply this demand.

I also need a lot of rags of lower grade for making my standard quality roofing, and also a still lower grade for making my Competition quality roofing.

I will pay the best market price for roofing rags anywhere in any quantity. If they can be shipped in carload quantities and in assorted grades, we can have them shipped direct to any of our big mills, but if in smaller quantities or unassorted, we will arrange with one of our packers or assorters near you, to buy your rags and prepare them for our use in the different grades.

Churches, Societies, Charitable Institutions and others are making good revenue by collecting all kinds of old rags. We consume scores and scores of tons of these rags every day—in fact the total rag sales of the country amount to several million dollars a year. It's an easy way to make money. The rags are generally given to the collectors or at least sold for very little. Every kind of rag can be used for something. Use this plan to pay off your church debt or raise the minister's salary. The results are surprising.

Certain-teed
Quality Cert-ified ROOFING Durability Guaran-teed

is the highest quality possible to make. It is guaranteed in writing to last 5 years for 1-ply, 10 years for 2-ply, and 15 years for 3-ply, and this guarantee is backed by the world's largest roofing mills.

There is a dealer in your locality who handles Certain-teed Roofing and our other wide line of goods. If you consult him he will be glad to give you full information about our goods and will quote you reasonable prices on all of them. Be sure the goods are made and guaranteed by us.
